
- (i) CME has failed to establish that it has an asset invested in the Czech Republic;
- (ii) CME's claim is not an investment dispute under the Treaty; and
- (iii) CME may not concurrently pursue the same remedies in different fora.

1. CME has Failed to Establish that It has an Asset Invested in the Czech Republic

291. The Claimant's assertion of a claim under the Treaty is unclear and unparticularized. CME is not entitled to bring a claim under the Treaty.
292. CME fails to identify the "investment" which it alleges gives rise to rights under the Treaty. CME failed to identify, whether CME's "investment" is its alleged shareholding in ČNTS or some contractual right allegedly enjoyed by ČNTS or some right conferred on CEDC.
293. Further, CME fails to establish that it has assumed the rights and obligations of CEDC.

2. CME's Claim is Not an Investment Dispute under the Treaty

294. CME'S claim demonstrates a fundamental misunderstanding of the purpose and ambit of the Treaty (and, indeed, BITs in general). The Czech Republic considers that the attempt to use the dispute settlement provisions of the Treaty in order to settle private disputes in the manner sought by CME distorts the Treaty and if successful would represent a grave threat to the stability of the entire network of BITs.
295. This is a private commercial dispute and not an investor-host State dispute.
296. CME seeks to utilise the Treaty regime as an alternative or additional means for the resolution of a dispute arising from a falling out between two business partners, CME/ ČNTS and Dr. Železný/CET 21. The contractual rights and legal rights referred to are exclusively those made between ČNTS or CME and CET 21 or Dr. Železný. The Czech Republic is a party to none of them.
297. It is the contractual arrangements between CET 21 and ČNTS, and not the Licence, upon which the claimed exclusivity that CME seeks to secure in these proceedings is based. The Council did not impose the claimed exclusivity arrangement, and had no power to do so. The grant of the Licence signified no more than that the Council considered, on the basis of the information then available to it, that CET 21 was a proper reipient of the Licence. The Council attached conditions to the Licence that required CET 21 to advise the Council of the business arrangements it entered into with CEDC and the Czech Savings Bank but the Council did not have the power, nor did it, approve or endorse those arrangements.

298. The dispute between Mr. Lauder (and his companies including CME) and Dr. Železný (and his companies) has already been, and is still being, pursued through various courts and arbitral tribunals. The Czech Republic is not a party to that dispute, and it takes no position on the merits of the arguments advanced on either side in the continuing litigation (save as articulated in judgments of the Czech courts). But it is clear from CME's own Statement of Claim that Mr. Lauder's claim against the Czech Republic relates to the withdrawal by Dr. Železný and his companies from various contractual arrangements to which the State was not a party. The Prague Commercial Court has upheld ČNTS's claim that Dr. Železný/CET 21 wrongly withdrew from those arrangements. It is therefore Dr. Železný / CET 21 that has allegedly injured CME's interests within the Czech Republic. The Czech Republic is not responsible for the actions of private parties.
299. In the relief originally sought, CME asked the Tribunal to restore the exclusivity of the relationship between ČNTS and CET 21. CME dropped this request during the proceedings. The relationship of exclusivity is a contractual one for which the parties must bargain and agree, within the limits of the law, and which they must enforce using the procedures of the law. The courts may uphold and enforce such contractual relationships (and it is to the courts which ČNTS has turned to obtain such relief). But contractual relationships between a licence-holder and service provider(s) cannot be imposed or enforced via the licensing procedures of the Czech Republic.
300. This is not a dispute concerning the treatment by the Czech Republic of an investment: it is a dispute concerning an alleged breach of a commercial contract made by private parties. That dispute should be settled either according to procedures agreed by the parties (such as arbitration), or through courts in the Czech Republic or some other State within the jurisdiction of whose courts the dispute falls. Treaty procedures were not intended to be used in these circumstances. If they were allowed to be so used, every commercial dispute involving a foreign investor could be elevated to the level of a dispute within the Treaty procedures. That is plainly not the intention of the Treaty.

301. CME's claim must be dismissed on grounds that CME's claim is not an investment dispute within the scope of the Treaty.

3. CME May Not Concurrently Pursue the Same Remedies in Different Fora

302. It is an abuse of the Bilateral Investment Treaty regime for Mr. Lauder, who purportedly controls CME, and, subsequently, CME to bring virtually identical claims under two separate treaties. The Czech Republic does not consider it appropriate that claims brought by different claimants under separate Treaties should be consolidated and the Czech Republic asserts the right that each action be determined independently and promptly.

As recognized by CME in its Statement of Claim, the action commenced by Mr. Lauder "may not provide the full relief to which CME is entitled because it is brought on behalf of only a single controlling ultimate shareholder of CME . . . Only this Tribunal can declare that the Czech Republic has breached its Treaty obligations to [CME] and can provide full relief to [CME] for those breaches". In these circumstances, it is an abuse for Mr. Lauder to pursue his claim under the US Treaty and the Czech Republic is fully entitled to insist that CME make good its claim under the Dutch Treaty in separate proceedings.

303. The dispute between CME/ČNTS and Dr. Železný/CET 21 has been conducted as a private dispute. Several actions, in courts and arbitral tribunals, have according to CME itself, already been instituted, including one ICC arbitration and ten law suits at the Regional Commercial Court in Prague.
304. In particular, ČNTS has sought a ruling from the Czech Court upholding its claim to exclusivity under the Services Agreement made with CET 21. That is essentially the same remedy as is sought in the present proceedings. Thus, CME/ČNTS has already taken the present dispute before a competent court. The Regional Commercial Court has ruled in CME/ČNTS's favour and upheld the claim to exclusivity in relations between ČNTS and CET 21, precisely in terms that "restore the initial eco- conomic and legal underpinnings of [CME's] investment", as those underpinnings were set out in the Services Agreement. The Prague Court of Appeal meanwhile reversed the judgment. The lawsuit is pending at the Czech Supreme Court. That Services Agreement was said by ČNTS itself to be "the expression of a clear will of both contractual parties to determine the mutual relationship on an exclusive basis" between them. CME/ČNTS is seeking at the Prague Civil Courts the remedy that it seeks from this Tribunal. Seeking the same remedy again is a plain abuse of process; and it conflicts with the spirit, if not with the letter, of the res judicata principle.

305. The Regional Commercial Court found that CET 21 had acted in breach of the contract, and whatever losses might have been suffered by ČNTS clearly derive from ČNTS's departure from the exclusivity arrangement. There is no suggestion, in the present claim or elsewhere, that there is any compensable loss that is not attributable to the breakdown of the exclusivity arrangement.
306. If a Claimant chooses to pursue a contractual remedy in the local courts or private arbitral tribunals, he should not be allowed concurrently to pursue a remedy under the Treaty.
307. The claims by investors under a BIT depend upon assertions that the State has treated the investment in a manner incompatible with the treaty. "The State" includes also the State's courts. If an investor takes the complaint of mistreatment before the State's court, it cannot be determined how "the State" has treated the investment until the State's courts have finally disposed of the case initiated by the investor. There can be no complaint that "the State" has mistreated the investment until the litigation has run its course.
308. An investor should not be allowed to switch to a treaty procedure which has the result of depriving the other party to the proceedings in the local court of the opportunity of arguing its case before the treaty tribunal.
309. The Tribunal is faced with the danger of incompatible and ostensibly "final" decisions being made not only in the various Czech court proceedings but also by another tribunal set up under the US Treaty and by the ICC arbitral tribunal ruling between CME and Dr. Železný. This is precisely the prospect of disorder that the principle of lis alibi pendens is designed to avert.

310. Therefore, the Tribunal lacks jurisdiction, or in the alternative, CME's claim is inadmissible.

IV. CME Czech Republic B.V. has no claim in substance

311. CME invested in ČNTS only after the broadcasting of TV NOVA commenced in February 1994. CME must have considered the commercial risk of investing in ČNTS as well as the legal framework in which this investment would be made, when it decided to acquire CEDC's rights and obligations in the Memorandum of Association to CME. This assignment was not notified by the Council as required by Condition 17.

V. The Czech Republic's Obligations under the Treaty

312. CME's claim should be dismissed on grounds that its Statement of Claim does not disclose a prima facie case that the Czech Republic has breached the Treaty having regard in particular to Czech law.
313. Essentially, CME claims that a Czech public body having granted a licence and had filed with it a contractual scheme which on its face did not infringe the law, may not take action when implementation of the Licence clearly does infringe the law. That proposition is patently incorrect, and must be clearly rejected if the entire balance of international instruments for the protection of foreign investment is to be maintained. The Czech Republic owes duties to investors, foreign and domestic, other than CME and Dr. Železný, and to the Czech people. The Czech Republic, like other States, must have the power to enact laws and regulate industries, such as broadcasting, pursuant to those laws, for the good order of the State and its economy. The Treaty was not intended to remove that power and does not remove that power.
314. The very core of the argument advanced by CME is fundamentally misconceived, because it denies the right of States to regulate their own economies, and to enact and to modify the laws, and to secure the proper application of the law. It is no exaggeration to say that CME's argument involves a repudiation of the Rule of Law.

315. The facts show that the Council consistently applied the Media Law (in particular Article 10 (2) which proscribes the transfer of a Licence) and took action when the implementation of the Licence by CET 21 and ČNTS infringed the law. It took similar action against Premiéra TV and Rádio Alfa. Its position remains the same today: The transfer of a broadcasting Licence to a service provider is contrary to the Media Law. The Czech Republic has done no more than regulate its economy in a normal and entirely proper way. The impact of that regulation upon private contractual relations between investors is solely a matter for such investors.
316. The Czech Republic accepts its obligations under the Treaty.

1. The Obligation Not to Deprive Investors of Their Investments

317. The Treaty provides at Article 5 that "[n]either Contracting Party shall take any measures depriving, directly or indirectly, investors of the other Contracting Party of their investments unless the following conditions are complied with:
- (a) The measures are taken in the public interest and under due process of law;
  - (b) The measures are not discriminatory;
  - (c) The measures are accompanied by provision for the payment of just compensation. "
318. In accordance with customary international law, the Treaty does not provide that the deprivation (or expropriation as it is often referred to) of investments is unlawful per se. Such deprivation is unlawful only if certain conditions are not met. It is acknowledged that the Treaty includes both "direct" and "indirect" forms of deprivation: however, no deprivation in either form has taken place in this case. There has been no taking attributable to the State.

319. Deprivation or expropriation clearly involves a “compulsory transfer of property rights”. It is said to occur if a State interferes with property rights “to such an extent that these rights are rendered so useless that they must be deemed to have been expropriated”.
320. In the legal literature, it is said that, the essence of the matter is the deprivation by State organs of a right of property either as such, or by permanent transfer of the power of management and control. State measures, prima facie a lawful exercise of powers of government, may affect foreign interests considerably without amounting to expropriation. Bona fide regulation must also be distinguished from expropriation or deprivations of property.
321. The meaning of deprivation may be drawn from the Convention Establishing the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency. Article 11 (a) (ii) defines that expropriation is not given by
- “non-discriminatory measures of general application which governments normally take for the purpose of regulating economic activity in their territories. ”*
322. The Council’s actions do not fall within the definition of deprivation or expropriation of investments.
323. The Czech Republic’s involvement in this dispute was as follows: (i) the Council issued a Licence to CET 21 in light of the information provided to it; (ii) it reviewed compliance with the Media Law; (iii) the Council commenced administrative proceedings against ČNTS on the basis of unlawful broadcasting in breach of the Media Law; (iv) it withdrew the administrative proceedings in light of the amended arrangement between ČNTS and CET 21; (v) the jurisdiction of Czech courts have been invoked in respect of disputes arising out of the arrangements between ČNTS and CET 21.
324. In addition, a deprivation requires that there has been governmental interference with a property right of CME. It is not enough for CME to say that it is less well off than it thinks that it should be because ČNTS changed its arrangements with CET 21 at the insistence of the Council.

The Respondent refers to the Permanent Court of International Justice stated in the Oscar Chinn Case:

"The Court, though not failing to recognize the change that had come over Mr. Chinn's financial position, a change which is said to have led him to wind up his transport and ship-building businesses, is unable to see in his original position - which was characterised by the possession of customers and the possibility of making a profit - anything in the nature of a genuine vested right. Favourable business conditions and good-will are transient circumstances, subject to inevitable changes. "

325. CME's complaint is this. CME had an initial arrangement with CET 21 which, it says, gave ČNTS the arrangements of an exclusive supplier to CET 21. That arrangement was amended at the behest of the Council. The amended arrangement, CME fears, does not give ČNTS the rights of an exclusive supplier. But what CME says it has lost is not property, nor even rights under the initial or amended contracts. What CME says it has lost is the measure by which the business advantage to it of the initial agreement exceeds that of the amended agreement. That is not a property right. The law recognises and upholds rights created by contract, but there is no legal concept of a separate property right to the maintenance of a particular balance of commercial power.
326. The Council's actions have been the lawful exercise of the power of Government, carried out as part of the regulation of economic activity in the Czech Republic.
327. The Czech Republic has taken no property of CME, of ČNTS, or of any company owned or controlled by Mr. Lauder. The only property right granted by the Czech Republic, the Licence issued to CET 21, remains in the hands of CET 21 as it has done at all material times.
328. The Czech Republic did not agree, and could not agree, to CET 21 transferring the Licence to ČNTS. The Czech Republic did not create or confirm any rights for ČNTS. ČNTS's rights, and CME's alleged interests, arose solely under contracts made with CET 21. The rights asserted by CME in this case were created and defined by those contracts and were necessarily constrained by Czech law: those rights could not amount to a transfer of the Licence to ČNTS. ČNTS is correct to look to CET 21, rather than the State, as the source of any remedy for unlawful injury to its rights.

329. The authorities cited by CME do not support the case it has advanced. The Czech Republic denies that it had any intention of injuring CME or its investment.
330. There is no a priori limit on the kind of State measure or action that may amount to deprivation or expropriation. CME has, however, entirely failed to explain why it considers that the actions of the Czech Republic do so.
331. Although in some circumstances a coerced capitulation may constitute an expropriation, a review of the authorities indicates that there is no solid or wide consensus on coercion outside of the cases dealing with physical force.
332. Far from maintaining that ČNTS was coerced into the making of a new agreement with CET 21 in 1997, in the proceedings in the Prague Commercial Court, ČNTS stated, "that the Services Agreement as well as the agreements previously concluded between [ČNTS] and [CET 21] on 6/2/1994, 5/23/1996 and 10/4/1996 determining the rights and obligations relating to operating the television broadcasting facilities, have always been the expression of a clear will of both contractual parties to determine the mutual relationship on an exclusive basis. "
333. ČNTS makes no suggestion that the Services Agreement, described in CME's Statement of Claim as "part of the package of contractual changes coerced by the Media Council," was coerced or was invalid. On the contrary, it was used as the basis of ČNTS's claim; and the Regional Commercial Court upheld its validity (meanwhile reversed by the Court of Appeal).

CME has failed to establish a prima facie case of deprivation or expropriation.

334. The Respondent's position is that expropriation has not occurred due to the fact that
- (1) the Claimant invested in ČNTS after the 1996 changes had been made; therefore, it cannot have lost the 1993 safety net by expropriation;
  - (2) it is a matter of pure speculation, whether the 1996 safety net was materially better or more effective than the 1993 safety net;
  - (3) that, in any event, the 1996 changes were voluntarily, if reluctantly, made by ČNTS; and
  - (4) that the institution of the 1996 administrative proceedings could not, in the absence of proof of abuse of power or mala fides, or some such defect, amount to coercion. In essence, it is not established that anything was taken from the Claimant or that the Respondent forced the Claimant to give anything up.

2. The Obligation of Fair and Equitable Treatment

335. The Treaty provides that investments shall be accorded fair and equitable treatment (Art. 3 (1)). The support given for this principle in its Preamble provides:

"Recognising that agreement upon the treatment to be accorded to such investments will stimulate the flow of capital and technology and economic development of the Contracting Parties and that fair and equitable treatment is desirable".

336. There is no precise definition of the requirement contained in Article 3 (1) of the Treaty to provide investments with "fair and equitable treatment". What is fair and equitable is an issue to be interpreted on the facts in each individual case.
337. CME does not point to the facts relied upon in order to support the allegation that this obligation has been breached. No case is made out to which the Czech Republic can respond.

338. It is denied that the Czech Republic treated CME's alleged interests less than fairly and equitably. The Media Law has been applied according to its terms. Unlawful broadcasting by ČNTS has been treated in the same way as that by other service providers, in particular Premiéra TV and Rádio Alfa. Due process has been respected.
339. CME has failed to establish a prima facie case that the Czech Republic breached its obligation of fair and equitable treatment.
340. In particular in respect to the March 15, 1999 letter addressed by the Media Council to Dr. Železný, the Czech republic is of the opinion that there is no unfair or non-equitable treatment. The Council could not ignore Dr. Železný's request for giving guidance and had to consider CET 21's right to be heard. Further, the letter was addressed to TV NOVA, being also represented by Dr. Železný at that time. The letter itself had no legal effect. No proceedings were connected to it. The Media Council explained its general policy.
341. Also, the 1996 administrative proceedings did not breach the obligation on fair and equitable treatment as other broadcasters were treated in the same way. Until 1996, both, CET 21 and ČNTS were joined in a continuing duty to comply with the terms of the Media Law, and that included a duty not to effect a de facto transfer of the Licence. ČNTS appeared to be breaking that obligation. The Media Council simply tried to bring it back into line with the law.

3. The Obligation Not to Engage in Unreasonable and Discriminatory Treatment

342. The Treaty provides that a State party shall not "impair, by unreasonable or discriminatory measures, the operation, management, maintenance, use, enjoyment or disposal" of investments (Art. 3 (1)).
343. The term "unreasonable" is not defined in the Treaty. It is insufficient to show discrimination; unreasonable conduct must also be demonstrated. In any event, the actions of the Czech Republic have been neither unreasonable nor discriminatory.
344. CME's claim fails at two levels.

345. First, CME does not explain why it considers that the Czech Republic behaved unlawfully. In the view of the Czech Republic, the Council acted at all times in conformity with Czech law. The Czech Republic notes that CME did not seek to raise in the Czech courts at the time of the administrative proceedings, or subsequently, arguments that the Council had violated Czech law. Second, CME does not explain what unreasonableness it finds in the allegedly unlawful conduct of the Council.
346. The term “discriminatory” is not of itself defined in the Treaty.
347. The complete failure to indicate what facts are alleged to amount to discrimination prevents a reasoned response by the Czech Republic. The Czech Republic notes, that it cannot be seriously suggested that administrative proceedings to stop unlicensed broadcasting lacked any legal basis in Czech law or bona fide governmental purpose. It should also be noted that ČNTS and CET 21 were treated in accordance with the Media Law, and in the same manner as Premiéra TV and Rádio Alfa were treated in similar proceedings at the same time.
346. CME’s assertion that the requirement that the licence-holder had to be Czech is a violation of the Treaty’s prohibition against discrimination, is wrong. It is routine in international practice that foreign investors invest in the State through the medium of a locally incorporated company, which is a regulation stipulating how foreign investment is to be organized.
349. CME’s Statement of Claim refrains from any explaining as to why the Council’s reconsideration of the initial arrangement and agreement with ČNTS and CET 21 of the amended arrangement might be thought unreasonable and discriminatory.
350. CME has failed to establish a prima facie case that the Czech Republic breached its obligation not to engage in unreasonable and discriminatory treatment.

4. The Obligation of Full Security and Protection

351. The Treaty provides that “each Contracting Party shall accord to such investments full security and protection” (Art. 3 (2)).
352. The phrase “full security and protection” has received attention in both arbitral and judicial bodies. The cases indicate that CME must demonstrate both that the standard contained in the phrase “full security and protection” has been breached; and that the breach is the result of the actions of the Czech Republic.
353. The requirement to provide constant or full security and protection cannot be construed as the giving of a warranty that property shall never in any circumstances be occupied or disturbed. Similarly an obligation to provide the nationals of the other Contracting State to a BIT with “full protection and security” is not an absolute obligation in the sense that any violation thereof creates automatically a ‘strict liability’ on behalf of the host State. A government is only obliged to provide protection which is reasonable in the circumstances.
354. CME asserts a failure to provide full security and protection for its investment. CME is arguing that it was the responsibility of the Czech authorities to maintain and enforce the contractual arrangements into which ČNTS entered with CET 21. That is absurd. The obligation of “full security and protection” is an obligation of due diligence relating to the activities of the State. No Czech authority was a party to the contracts between ČNTS and CET 21. It was for ČNTS to enforce its rights under those contracts, as it is doing through the Czech courts.
355. Also, CME’s argument that the alleged change of position of the Council in 1996 deprived ČNTS of benefits that it had enjoyed by virtue of the alleged previous position of the Council in 1993, is untenable. The Council did not change its position between 1993 and 1996. At all times the Council has taken the view that the Media Law forbids the transfer of licences, and has sought to apply that law. What changed was the nature of the relationship between CET 21 and ČNTS. On the basis of facts discovered in 1994 - 1996, the Council reacted so as to ensure that CET 21 and ČNTS complied with Czech law.

356. CME contradicts the position that ČNTS has taken in its successful litigation in the Czech courts. It cannot be argued that investors have any right to suppose that positions taken by State authorities and provisions of State law are forever unalterable. Nor can it be argued that every regulatory change made by a State in accordance with its laws must be accompanied by compensatory payments to anyone whose profits are adversely altered by the change. There can be no legitimate expectation that provisions and laws become frozen the minute that they touch the interests of a foreign investor.
357. CME fails to identify any factual circumstances that could support its allegation that the Czech Republic failed to provide full security and protection for its investment, or that the Czech Republic breached the obligations of full security and protection.
358. Further, it should be noted that the Media Council simply had no competence to act outside administrative proceedings. Condition No. 17 of the Licence was to be lifted under the new Media Law as of January 1, 1996; the Media Council had no influence any more on the relationship between CET 21 and ČNTS. There was and is full protection and security for ČNTS's legal rights available under the Czech legal system provided by Czech courts.

5. The Obligation of Treatment in Accordance with Standards of International Law

359. The Treaty provides that if "obligations under international law . . . entitling investments by investors . . . to a treatment more favourable than is provided for by the present Agreement, such rules shall to the extent that they are more favourable prevail over the present Agreement," (Art. 3 (5)).

360. CME has quoted from the decision in the International Court of Justice in the Barcelona Traction Case to affirm that "[w]hen a State admits into its territory foreign investments, . . . it is bound to extend to them the protection of the law and assumes obligations concerning the treatment to be afforded them." The judgment in the Barcelona Traction Case continues with the sentence, "These obligations, however, are neither absolute or unqualified." The Court's comment was made in the quite different context of a State's right to provide diplomatic protection to shareholders of entities incorporated in a third State. The Court did not set up absolute standards for treatment of foreign investment.
361. No argument is presented to indicate why it is thought that the Czech Republic has violated its obligations to treat CME in accordance with general international law. CME mentions this obligation, but it is not possible to discern what, if any, argument CME seeks to make in relation to it. This obligation has not been breached.

VI. The Czech Republic has not Violated its Treaty Obligations

1. The Czech Republic is Responsible for the Media Council's Conduct

362. The Czech Republic accepts responsibility for the actions of the Council for the purposes of this case. The Czech Republic does not accept the characterisation of the Council activities made by CME, and denies any breach of the Treaty by reason of the Council's actions.

2. The Council's Conduct did not Violate the Czech Republic's Treaty Obligations

363. CME must demonstrate that the State has acted in breach of its Treaty obligations, i.e. unlawfully, so as to harm its "investment". Here, nothing that the State has done, through the Council or the Institute or the courts, can be described as unlawful or otherwise a breach of the Treaty. On the contrary, the Council has sought to uphold the law by ensuring that the implementation of the Licence was in accordance with the Media Law; and that it was the licensee, CET 21, not the unlicensed ČNTS which controlled broadcasting by TV NOVA.

364. The administration of the law or insistence upon compliance with the law cannot be described as “unreasonable” or “discriminatory” conduct by the Council. Neither can they be characterised as actions “tantamount to deprivation” by the Czech Republic.
365. CME knew the Media Law from the start of its involvement in the Czech Republic. CME cannot complain about the consequences of its acting unlawfully. CME’s own case and the facts known to the Council suggest that CME was fully aware of the legal conditions under which television broadcasting was licensed; and sought by various means to ensure its control over the Licence despite the provisions of the Media Law and of the Licence itself.
366. CME abandoned its attempts to circumvent the Media Law in 1997, when ČNTS voluntarily agreed new contractual terms with CET 21. Subsequent events have shown that CME’s loss of control of the Licence and TV NOVA may have harmed its investment in ČNTS. But this cannot be attributed to the Czech Republic.
367. CME now claims that the actions of the Council in addressing the ways in which CET 21 and ČNTS were implementing the Licence, and in bringing administrative proceedings against ČNTS for unlawful broadcasting in 1996, constitutes an unlawful deprivation and otherwise breaches the obligations of the Czech Republic under the Treaty. This ignores the fact that the response of CET 21 and ČNTS was voluntarily to agree between themselves to change their relationship so as to comply with the law. The Media Law, in common with the laws and procedures of many other nations, licences scarce broadcast spectrum on the basis of prudential and public interest considerations; and does not permit unlicensed broadcasting. Under no circumstances can it be held that the conduct of the Council gave rise to any breach by the Czech Republic of the Treaty.
368. The Council in its letter of 15 March 1999 was not supporting Dr. Železný’s effort to eliminate the exclusive economic relationship between ČNTS and CET 21; it did not put forward Dr. Železný’s views as its own. The Council was stating the policy which it had publicly declared in the meetings of the Media Panel and in submissions on the proposed new Media Law, as well as to individual licence-holders.

369. CME does not indicate what specific obligations it considers the Council and Parliament to have in respect of ČNTS's requests. The Czech Republic notes that three of the four requests were made in the fortnight preceding the filing of Mr. Lauder's Notice of Arbitration in mid-August 1999, and the fourth some six weeks before that. Under no circumstances is it reasonable to expect a Parliamentary Committee to take action within two weeks on the basis of "a detailed factual summary with supporting documentation". The requests were intended to establish a record for the purpose of the dispute which had by then broken out between CME and Dr. Železný.
370. The Council did not fail to fulfil its obligations under the Treaty and the Council did not cause ČNTS's business operations to be discontinued. The Council only ever took action to ensure that broadcasting was conducted in accordance with the Media Law.
371. The Council's course of dealings did not enable Dr. Železný to take actions that may have affected CME's investment. The Council was merely fulfilling its obligations under Czech law by requiring that the Licence not be transferred and by commencing the administrative proceedings against unauthorised broadcasting. The Council's actions did not force ČNTS to weaken the contractual arrangements under which CME's investment was made. The Council did not adopt a policy disfavouring the exclusive economic relationship between CET 21 and ČNTS. The Council did not fail to act to protect ČNTS's interests.

VII. CME Failed to Plead Any Loss

372. The Czech Republic has an obligation under international law to remedy any violations under the Treaty for which it is responsible. However, CME failed to plead any loss. CME must demonstrate that it has in fact suffered damage. No plea has been made addressing questions of the nature of the loss, causation, the identity of the specific companies or individuals that are alleged to have suffered loss, the ownership and control of the companies at the material times and of the heads of damages.
373. The remedies which the companies owned or controlled by Mr. Lauder, allegedly including CME which may be obtained in the various fora in which his dispute with Dr. Železný/CET 21 is being fought out, may compensate for any losses which such entities may be found to have suffered. It may be found that no damage has been suffered by any of the entities involved in this affair, including CME. Thus the failure to plead that CME has suffered damage not only strikes at the heart of the claim, but is an inevitable consequence of the realities of the dispute. If CME has suffered no damage, this claim fails in limine. CME must show that it has suffered damage for the claim to be admissible under the Treaty.

VIII. Respondent's Conclusion

374. The Czech Republic requests that CME's claim be dismissed on grounds of lack of jurisdiction; alternatively on grounds of lack of admissibility; alternatively on grounds that CME has failed to establish any breach of the Treaty; alternatively on grounds that CME has failed to plead any loss.

H.

The Analysis of the Tribunal

I. Jurisdiction

(1) The Claimant's Investment

375. The Tribunal has jurisdiction to decide this dispute under Article 8 of the Treaty. According to Article 8.2 of the Treaty, each Contracting Party consents to submit an investment dispute as defined in Article 8.1 to arbitration. Investment disputes covered by this arbitration clause are disputes between one Contracting Party and an investor of the other Contracting Party concerning an investment of the latter. The Claimant is an investor in accordance with Article 1 (b) of the Treaty, as the Claimant is a legal person constituted under the law of one of the Contracting Parties, the Kingdom of the Netherlands. The dispute concerns an investment of the Claimant within the terms of Article 1 (a) of the Treaty. Article 1 (a) provides that the term investment shall comprise every kind of asset invested either directly or through an investor of a third State. The investment can be (inter alia) shares, other kinds of interests in companies and joint ventures, as well as rights deriving therefrom, title to money and other assets and to any performance having an economic value.

376. The Claimant is the 99 % shareholder of ČNTS. These shares as well as all rights deriving therefrom qualify as an investment of the Claimant under Article 8.1 and Article 1 (a) (ii) of the Treaty.
377. CME, the Claimant, acquired its 99 % ownership interest in ČNTS in two steps. CME acquired 93.2 % in May 1997 from its parent company, the Czech Media Enterprises B.V. The Claimant further acquired 5.8 % shares in 1997 by purchasing the Czech holding company NOVA Consulting, which held a 5.8 % shareholding in ČNTS.

(2) The Claimant's 1997 Share Acquisition

378. The Respondent, for the first time at the Stockholm hearing, expressed its view that the investment of the Claimant in the Czech Republic within the meaning of the Treaty was (only) made when it purchased in 1997 the ČNTS shares held by CME Media Enterprises B.V. The Respondent, in respect to this investment of the Claimant in the Czech Republic, expressly did not raise the defence of lack of jurisdiction. The Respondent is, however, of the opinion that Claimant's investment in 1997 limits timewise the Claimant's claim in substance which, therefore, will be dealt with hereafter, when dealing with the merits of the Claim.
379. Any possible defence in respect to lack of jurisdiction related to the Claimant's acquisition of the ČNTS shares in 1997, therefore, must be deemed as waived. That also would be consistent with Rule 21.3 of the UNCITRAL Rules, according to which objections in respect to jurisdiction must have been made in the Statement of Defence.
380. The Arbitral Tribunal considered whether (by disregarding the Respondent's waiver of a defence of lack of jurisdiction in respect to the 1997 share acquisition), the Tribunal is obligated ex officio to decide on this subject. The majority of the Tribunal is of the opinion that, disregarding possible Czech national law requirements, the clear provision of the UNCITRAL Rules must supersede national law, if deviating. According to the UNCITRAL Rules, a defence of jurisdiction is deemed to be waived, if not raised in time. This concept derives from the assumption that defences on jurisdiction can be waived by the Parties, with the consequence that a Tribunal is not able to set aside or disregard a Party's waiver in respect to the defence of lack of jurisdiction.

381. Therefore, the Respondent's argument that the investment of the Claimant in the Czech Republic was not made until May 21, 1997 must be dealt with by the Tribunal in accordance with the Respondent's express pleadings as a substantive defence, not as a defence to jurisdiction.

(3) The Claimant's Predecessor's 1994 Share Acquisition

382. The Respondent in its Statement of Defence dated November 9, 2000 raised the defence of lack of jurisdiction in respect to the Claimant's predecessor's share acquisition. The Respondent claimed inter alia that CME has failed to establish that it has an asset invested in the Czech Republic as defined under the Treaty. The Respondent's position is that the Claimant did not sufficiently identify its investment by leaving open whether CME's investment "is its alleged shareholding in ČNTS or some contractual right allegedly enjoyed by ČNTS or some right conferred on CEDC". According to the Respondent, CME fails to establish that it has assumed the rights and obligations of CEDC as a matter of law. This defence of lack of jurisdiction, even if accepted as sufficiently specified, is not justified. The Claimant's investment is vested in its shareholding in ČNTS which is an investment covered by Article 1 (a) (ii) of the Treaty.
383. As recounted in Section A. 5 of this Award, CME acquired its 99 % ownership interest in ČNTS in 1997, an acquisition which, in respect to jurisdiction is not in dispute between the Parties (as described above). CME's predecessor, its parent company, Czech Media Enterprises B.V., had acquired in 1994 66 % of ČNTS from CEDC, a German company under the same ultimate control as CME of an American corporation, in turn controlled by Mr. Ronald S. Lauder. The transfer document done in Prague on July 28, 1994 between CEDC and CME Media Enterprises B.V. gives sufficient proof that CME Media Enterprises B.V. acquired CEDC's 66 % shareholding in ČNTS. Under this Assignment Agreement and Declaration on Accession to Memorandum of Association of ČNTS, the Claimant's predecessor CME Media Enterprises B.V. acquired CEDC's shares in ČNTS, comprising all rights and obligations thereto.

384. The acquired shares, including all rights and legal entitlements, are protected under the Treaty. Upon the acquisition, the Claimant's predecessor became owner of the investment in the Czech Republic. The Treaty does not distinguish as to whether the investor made the investment itself or whether the investor acquired a predecessor's investment. In this respect, Article 8 of the Treaty defines an investment dispute as existing, if a dispute concerns an investment of the investor. Article 1 of the Treaty clearly spells out that an investment comprises every kind of asset invested either directly or through an investor of a third State, which makes it clear that the investor need not make the investment himself to be protected under the Treaty.

(4) The 1994 Share Assignment not notified

385. The Respondent did not expressly argue in these arbitration proceedings that the assignment of the 66 % ČNTS shares from CEDC to CME Media Enterprises B.V. was void. The Respondent stated, however, that the assignment was not notified to the Media Council which, in the view of the Respondent, was necessary under Condition 17 of the Licence.
386. The non-notification of the assignment did not remove the Claimant's protection under the Treaty. Under Section 12.1 of the MOA, the assignment of shares to an affiliated company was permitted without requesting the Media Council's approval. Under Condition 17 of the Licence as amended as of May 12, 1993, the Media Council stipulated that the partnership agreement (the MOA) is an integral part of the Licence terms. Further, the Media Council prescribed that the partners of the MOA are the licence-holder (CET 21), CEDC and the Czech Savings Bank in the scope and under the conditions stipulated by the MOA.
387. CET 21 was obligated to submit to the Council for approval any changes of the legal person which has been the licence-holder, or of the capital structure of the investor which results in a change of control over the activities and of the provisions of the partnership agreement between the licence-holder and investors (the MOA). The change-of-control clause of the MOA (Section 12.1) linked the shareholding in ČNTS to the Licence. Article 12. 1 of the MOA stated that, in accordance with the terms and conditions of the Licence, CEDC, CET 21 and the Czech Savings Bank cannot and shall not assign their shares to any third Party without obtaining in advance the express consent of all partners and the Council, which would be given after a full disclosure of the intended transaction.

388. However, this provision does not apply to any “direct family member or associated persons”. An associated company was defined as an entity controlled by the same last partner of the shareholders. Therefore, the MOA, being an integral part of the Licence, did allow a change of control without having obtained in advance the express consent of the Council.
389. The Council requested by its resolution of April 9, 1993, the submission of the final draft of the MOA for approval and by its resolution of April 9, 1993, requested final changes. At the Council Meeting on April 20, 1993, the Council approved the final wording of the MOA which was implemented accordingly. On May 12, 1993, the Council approved Licence Condition 17 which referred to the amended MOA as approved by the Council. This sequence of events is not in dispute between the Parties, although the Parties interpret these facts differently.
390. In respect to jurisdiction, it is clear that CEDC’s investment in ČNTS could be assigned to CME Media Enterprises B.V. without requesting prior approval from the Council. On the contrary, it is clear that CEDC’s investment in ČNTS included the right to freely transfer this investment to an affiliated company. The assignment by CEDC of its shares in ČNTS to CME Media Enterprises B.V. was made with express reference to the MOA. It is therefore clear that CME Media Enterprises B.V. (as a permitted successor under the MOA, which was approved by the Council), when acquiring CEDC’s investment in the Czech Republic, acquired full protection for this investment under the laws of the Czech Republic which include the bilateral investment treaties the Czech Republic had entered into, including the Treaty.

(5) The Claimant's Predecessor's 1996 Share Acquisitions

391. The acquisition of 22 % of the shares in ČNTS by CME Media Enterprises B.V. in 1996 from the Czech Savings Bank also qualifies as an investment under the Treaty. The same applies to the acquisition of 5.2 % shares in ČNTS from CET 21, also in 1996. These further acquisitions were not the subject of any judicial dispute by the Parties in these arbitration proceedings. These shares were part of the same initial investment made by the founding shareholders, CEDC (with a share of 66 %), CET21 (with a share of 21 %) and the Czech Savings Bank (with a share of 22 %) as co-founders who formed the joint venture company ČNTS in 1993.
392. In respect to jurisdiction, CEDC's and CME Media Enterprises B.V.'s acquisition of shares qualify as an investment within the meaning of Article 8 of the Treaty in conjunction with Article 1 (a) (ii) of the Treaty. When initiating these arbitration proceedings, the Claimant was and still is owner of 99 % of these shares in ČNTS. It is true that the shares themselves were not directly affected by the Respondent's alleged breach of the Treaty. The dispute to be defined as an investment dispute under Article 8 of the Treaty does not necessarily relate to the shares themselves, but to the value of the shares, which, the Claimant alleges, have been eviscerated by the Respondent. It is the Claimant's case that the Respondent, in breach of the Treaty, expropriated (inter alia) ČNTS' legal and commercial assets and rights. Such an expropriation of assets and, in particular, legal rights and entitlements of ČNTS, a joint venture of the Claimant with Czech nationals (the Czech Savings Bank and CET 21), could and allegedly did affect the value of CME's shares in the joint venture, such shares clearly being an "investment" in accordance with Article 1 of the Treaty. Therefore, the Arbitral Tribunal will have to examine whether the Czech Republic expropriated the joint venture company ČNTS as alleged by the Claimant (see Tradex Hellas S.A., Greece vs/ Republic of Albania, ICSID Arbitration Award, April 29, 1999).

(6) CME's Predecessor's Original 1993/1994 Contributions qualify as Investment under the Treaty

393. The original contributions by CEDC, the Czech Savings Bank and CET 21 were made on the basis of the Memorandum of Association and Investment Agreement (the MOA) notarized in front of a Czech notary on/or about May 4, 1993 and submitted for registration on/or about July 8, 1993. The registered capital of ČNTS was 148 million Czech Crowns. CET 21's non-monetary contribution, evaluated at 48 million Czech Crowns, was to contribute to ČNTS "unconditionally, unequivocally and on an exclusive basis the right to use, exploit and maintain the Licence held by CET 21." The Czech Savings Bank contributed 25 million Czech Crowns and CEDC contributed 75 million Czech Crowns. The ownership interests were allocated as follows: CEDC 66 %, Czech Savings Bank 22 %, CET 21, 12 %.
394. According to Sec. 2 of the MOA, CEDC and the Czech Savings Bank agreed to provide additional financing to ČNTS as additional contributions to the registered capital of up to 400 million Czech Crowns. Thereafter, the shareholders agreed to provide additional financing up to 900 million Czech Crowns as needed through bank loans. This obligation to provide additional financing either by share capital or by bank loans was secured under Section 2.5 of the MOA by 20 % interest on the debt sum in respect to which a shareholder was in default. CEDC, therefore, and the Czech Savings Bank obligated themselves to make substantial contributions for the future of ČNTS, dedicated for "the development and management of the Television Station".
395. The Claimant's predecessor's investments, by acquiring in 1994 and thereafter ČNTS' founders' shares and by consummating their obligations under the MOA, qualify as an investment under the Treaty.
396. The Respondent, in this context, raised the defence that the Claimant exercised some kind of (unacceptable) forum shopping. The Respondent characterized the initiation of parallel treaty proceedings by Mr. Lauder and by the Claimant as an abuse. In respect to jurisdiction, this defence is not persuasive. CEDC, when making the investment in ČNTS in 1993/1994, was under the protection of the German-Czech Republic Investment Treaty which, in essence, provides a similar protection as the Treaty. The assignment of the investment in ČNTS from a German corporation to a corporation having its legal seat in the Netherlands does not have, on the face of it, the stigma of an abuse. The Respondent characterized the initiation of parallel treaty proceedings by Mr. Lauder and by the Claimant as an abuse.

397. The Arbitral Tribunal's view is that the contribution made by CEDC and the assignment thereof in compliance with the investment structure approved by the Media Council to CME Media Enterprises B.V., qualifies as an investment under Article 8 of the Treaty. The Respondent's argument in respect to an alleged forum (or treaty) shopping is not sustainable.
398. In this context, the Tribunal refers to the FEDAX Award on jurisdiction dated July 11, 1997, an ICSID arbitration (37 I.L.M. 1378/1998). In that case, the FEDAX tribunal accepted ICSID jurisdiction for a claim under promissory notes which had been transferred and endorsed to subsequent holders and to the claimant outside of the host country of the original investment. The FEDAX tribunal rejected the argument that the foreign owner of the promissory notes did not qualify as an investor, because it has not made an investment in the territory of the host country and accepted that, although the identity of the investor will change with every endorsement, the investment itself will remain constant, while the issuer of the notes will enjoy a continuous credit benefit until the time the notes become due.
399. In the Claimant's case, the situation is even clearer. CEDC made the investment by making its shareholder's contribution at the formation of ČNTS in 1993. ČNTS enjoyed the benefit of the investment during its corporate life-time. TV NOVA started broadcasting in February 1994 by using CEDC's invested funds (together with the funds invested by the Czech Savings Bank). By mid-1994, when the Claimant's predecessor acquired the investment, the investment was at full risk and it was not until one year later that the investment turned out to be a success for the investors.
400. Further, CEDC's investment in ČNTS must be seen in its legal entirety as approved by the Media Council. A company affiliated to the investor, being an acknowledged (permitted) successor under the investment structure approved by the Media Council, is protected by the investment protection laws of the host country. Article 8 of the Treaty does not set specific requirements related to the circumstances under which an investment can be regarded as belonging to the investor protected by the Treaty. This is in accord with the great majority of modern bilateral investment treaties (see Antonio R. Parra in "Economic development, foreign investment and the law", published by Kluwer 1996, page 35). In respect to jurisdiction, therefore, the Claimant enjoys the full protection of the Treaty, having acquired through its predecessor CEDC's investment 66 % shareholding in ČNTS in 1994. The same applies to the further shareholding in ČNTS acquired thereafter by the Claimant and the Claimant's predecessor.

(7) The Investment Dispute under the Treaty

401. The dispute between the parties as alleged by the Claimant derives from the destruction of the joint venture's assets and the devaluation of its factual and legal position connected with the use of the broadcasting Licence, contributed by CET 21 to ČNTS as a founding shareholder of ČNTS. This dispute qualifies as an investment dispute within the meaning of Article 8 of the Treaty. In particular, it is not disqualified as an investment dispute because it is not, as alleged by the Respondent, a private commercial dispute but an investor-host State dispute.
402. ČNTS' disputes and legal proceedings with CET 21 and Dr. Železný also do not transform the dispute between the Claimant and the Czech Republic into a commercial dispute unrelated to the Treaty. Commercial disputes and proceedings between private parties, though one party be the investor and/or his joint venture company, do not per se exclude the existence of an investment dispute under the Treaty.
403. The investment dispute under the Treaty and the commercial dispute between the investors' joint venture company in the Czech Republic and its shareholders and/or business partners must be distinguished. The Claimant's position is that the Czech Republic, represented by the Media Council, violated its duties under the Treaty in various ways. The Arbitral Tribunal has jurisdiction over such an investment dispute, whereas jurisdiction over private commercial disputes between ČNTS and CET 21 / Dr. Železný is vested in the Czech Republic's courts or in arbitration as the case may be.

404. The private commercial disputes in question are different in respect to the parties, certain basic facts and underlying legal rights and obligations. This Tribunal has jurisdiction in respect to the dispute concerning the alleged violation of the Treaty by the Czech Republic. The Tribunal has no jurisdiction related to commercial disputes, regardless of whether the respective civil court proceedings, in particular as initiated by ČNTS vs. CET 21, may provide a remedy to ČNTS (depending on the final judgment of the Czech Supreme Court). These civil court proceedings may effect the quantum of the damage as claimed by CME in these arbitration proceedings. The civil court proceedings, however, have no effect on the jurisdiction of this arbitral Tribunal under the Treaty.
405. Although the contractual arrangements between CET 21 and ČNTS could be decisive for the Claimant's claim under these arbitration proceedings, this does not take away jurisdiction from this Tribunal. The Claimant's claim is based on the Czech Republic's interference and non-protection of the Claimant's and its predecessor's investment which is clearly an investment dispute and not a private commercial dispute. The fact that a contractual arrangement between CET 21 and ČNTS is also the basis for civil law proceedings between these contractual parties does not deprive the Claimant of its claims under the Treaty deriving from the alleged breach of the Treaty committed by the Czech Republic acting through the Media Council.
406. The Czech Republic's position that the grant of the Licence signified no more than the Council considered, on the basis of the information then available to it, that CET 21 was a proper recipient of the Licence, is irrelevant for the qualification of these arbitration proceedings as investment treaty proceedings.
407. Whether the Media Council, as the Czech Republic stated, did not have the power to approve or endorse the business arrangement between CEDC, the Czech Savings Bank and CET 21 is a question of the substance of the claim and not a question of jurisdiction.

408. Furthermore, the Respondents position, according to which the prejudice to the Claimants and its predecessor's investment was caused not by the Media Council but by Dr. Železný, is a matter of substance and not of jurisdiction. Decisive for the matter of jurisdiction is only the issue of whether the Czech Republic by the Media Council's action breached the Treaty and caused injury to the Claimant's and/or its predecessor's investment. The Arbitral Tribunal is aware that it may well be that a variety of circumstances may have caused the debasement of the Claimant's investment. That will not take away jurisdiction from this Tribunal, which is obliged to investigate and adjudicate the case restricted to the investment treaty dispute, whereas civil law claims might be sorted out between the respective parties in other proceedings.

(8) Parallel Proceedings

409. The Czech Republic's view that Treaty procedures were not intended to be used in these circumstances is not sustainable. Treaty proceedings are barred by civil law proceedings only if the respective investment treaty contains such a provision. Modern bilateral investment treaties usually do not contain judicial limitations like that. Modern investment treaties tend to allow a broad and extended access in the same way as modern treaties avoid any kind of restrictions which may provide uncertainties for the identification of the protected investment (Giorgio Sacerdoti "Bilateral Treaties and Multilateral Instruments on Investment Protection" in Recueil des Cours 1997).
410. The Respondent's contention that the Claimant exploited a dispute under a commercial contract to pursue Treaty proceedings must be rejected. The Claimant based its claim on the alleged breach of the Treaty. In parallel the Claimant's subsidiary in the Czech Republic has pursued its civil law claims in front of the Czech Civil Courts. The fact that the object of the two proceedings, compensation for injury to the Claimant's investment, is the same, does not deprive the parties in the Treaty proceedings nor in the civil court proceedings of jurisdiction. An affirmative award and/or judgment may have impact on the quantum of the damages adjudicated in the proceedings or give the right to the respective defendant to raise legal defences in the respective enforcement proceedings with the argument that the adjudicated damage claim has been already remedied under the award and/or judgment of the respective other proceeding. However, jurisdiction is not affected by this incidence of parallel proceedings.

411. The Respondent's defence that the Claimant may not concurrently pursue the same remedies in different fora is, therefore, rejected. Further, it is understood and agreed between the Parties that the Claimant is not obligated under the Treaty to exhaust local remedies in the Czech Republic.

(9) No abuse of Treaty Proceedings

412. There is also no abuse of the Treaty regime by Mr. Lauder in bringing virtually identical claims under two separate Treaties. The Czech Republic views it as inappropriate that claims are brought by different claimants under separate Treaties. The Czech Republic did not agree to consolidate the Treaty proceedings, a request raised by the Claimant (again) during these arbitration proceedings. The Czech Republic asserted the right to have each action determined independently and promptly. This has the consequence that there will be two awards on the same subject which may be consistent with each other or may differ. Should two different Treaties grant remedies to the respective claimants deriving from the same facts and circumstances, this does not deprive one of the claimants of jurisdiction, if jurisdiction is granted under the respective Treaty. A possible abuse by Mr. Lauder in pursuing his claim under the US Treaty as alleged by the Respondent does not affect jurisdiction in these arbitration proceedings.

(10) Outcome of Civil Court Proceedings have no Effect on Jurisdiction

413. Moreover, the Respondent's further contention that the outcome of the civil court proceedings between ČNTS and CET 21 will finally determine whether the Claimants shareholding in ČNTS was prejudiced, is not conclusive. The final judgment by the Czech Supreme Court may reinstate the Czech Regional Commercial Court judgment which ruled that CET 21 did not validly terminate the Service Agreement and that CET 21 is obligated to exclusively have broadcasting services supplied by ČNTS. The outcome of the civil court proceedings was open at the closing of the hearing of these proceedings. The civil law suit was still pending at the Czech Supreme Court. However, even if the Czech Supreme Court were to reinstate the Regional Commercial Court judgment, this would not remedy the harm to the Claimant's investment.

414. On the contrary, the dependence of the Claimants investment on the contradictory Civil Court judgments clearly shows how fragile the Claimant's investment is (the alleged consequence of the Czech Republic's breaches of the Treaty). Even if the regional Commercial Court's judgment is reinstated by the Czech Supreme Court, this will not remedy the Claimant's investment situation. CET 21 may well, at any time, terminate again the Service Agreement for good cause, whether given or not, thereby recurrently jeopardizing the Claimant's investment.
415. The Claimant was, therefore, not obligated to wait for the Czech Supreme Court's decision before instigating Treaty proceedings. The outcome of the civil court proceedings is irrelevant to the decision on the alleged breach of the Treaty by the Media Council acting in concert with the Respondent. It may affect the quantum of a damage claim which, pursuant to agreement between the parties, is not a subject of this Partial Award.

(11) Respondent's Defence that no Loss Occurred

416. The Respondents' argument that under the Claimant's pleadings there is no suggestion that there is any compensable loss that is attributable to the breakdown of the exclusivity arrangement should be dealt with on the merits of the claim, not in respect to jurisdiction. The Respondents' position that an investor's complaint of a mistreatment in investment proceedings cannot be determined before the State has treated the investment finally including through judicial process, is a position which is not sustainable. It is generally accepted that claims under investment treaties can be and shall be dealt with separately from the judicial process in local courts, unless otherwise specifically provided for in the respective Treaty. Such a requirement to exhaust local remedies is not found under this Treaty and the initiating of a judicial process in the Czech Republic does not bear upon proceedings under the Treaty. This is the understanding also of the Respondent, as specifically stated by Prof. Lowe, the Respondent's representative at the Stockholm hearing, when he said that there was plainly no requirement under the Treaty for the Claimant to exhaust local remedies.

417. The Respondent's position was, as submitted by Prof. Lowe, a slightly different one. The Respondents' view is that the Claimant cannot prove any loss as long as the Claimant did not exhaust the legal remedies under the Czech Civil Court system. This contention is not acceptable. A purpose of an international investment treaty is to grant arbitral recourse outside the host country's domestic legal system. The clear purpose is to grant independent judicial remedies on the basis of an international, accepted legal standard in order to protect foreign investments. An investment treaty therefore may even grant indemnification in case of expropriation where the domestic law does not (see Sacerdoti as cited above at page 289 referring to a decision of the Italian Supreme Court on this subject). As the Treaty is silent on the obligation of exhaustion of local remedies, the Claimant is entitled and in the position to substantiate its loss without being obligated to have its subsidiary ČNTS obtain a final civil law court decision by the Czech Supreme Court.

(12) Claimant itself made no Investment

418. The Respondent's further argument that the Claimant itself never made an investment in the Czech Republic is rejected for the reasons already mentioned above. The Treaty does not require that the assets or funds be imported from abroad or specifically from the Netherlands or have been contributed by the investor itself. (As Sacerdoti as cited above observes, this requirement is rarely found in recent bilateral investment treaties. This is in compliance with the above-cited FEDAX Award which held that the acquisition of promissory notes by the Dutch claimant was a foreign investment despite the fact that FEDAX itself never transferred funds to Venezuela. FEDAX N.V. vs. Republic of Venezuela ICSID Case no. ARB 96/3, the award on jurisdiction dated July 11, 1997 published in ILM 37 (1998), 1378/1390 and the award in substance of March 9, 1998 published in ILM 37 (1998), 1391/1398.)

II. The Substance of the Claimant's Case

1. Admissibility / Timewise Limitation

(1) Parallel Treaty Proceedings

419. The same reasons for the Tribunal to acknowledge jurisdiction apply to the admissibility of the Claimant's case. The Respondent's argument that the Claimant's case is not admissible, submitted by the Respondent as an alternative to the defence of non-jurisdiction, is rejected. The inadmissibility argument is predominantly based on the fact that Mr. Lauder in parallel to the Claimant initiated other Treaty proceedings. However, the Claimant is free to initiate the Treaty proceedings, if there is an investment dispute in the meaning of Article 8 of the Treaty. The argument of abusive Treaty shopping is not convincing. A party may seek its legal protection under any scheme provided by the laws of the host country. The Treaty as well as the US Treaty are part of the laws of the Czech Republic and neither of the treaties supersedes the other. Any overlapping of the results of parallel processes must be dealt with on the level of loss and quantum but not on the level of breach of treaty. The Claimants' case is admissible.

(2) No restriction of the Claimant's case timewise

420. There is no time bar to the Claimant's case. The Respondent's position is that the investment of the Claimant in the Czech Republic was not made until May 21, 1997, when it purchased the shares held by CME Media Enterprises B.V. in ČNTS. This, as the Respondent clarified, is the Respondent's defence on the merits. However, this defence, whether in substance or in respect to admissibility, cannot succeed.

421. The Claimant acquired the shares held by CME Media Enterprises B.V. under the Agreement on Transfer of Participation Interest. The Claimant, under the MOA, was an authorized transferee and the transfer did not need the consent of the Media Council under Condition 17 of the Licence which referred to the MOA of ČNTS, because the transferor and transferee of the assignment had the same ultimate shareholder, Mr. Ronald S. Lauder. The Claimant acquired the participation interest as it was at the day of transfer. The purchase price was US $52,723,613 and the acquired participation interest reflected a contribution of 344 million Czech Crowns. The Agreement on Transfer expressly stipulated that the Claimant, being the transferee, declared its consent with the MOA without any reservation. The Claimant, therefore, acquired its parent company's shares in ČNTS without any reservation or limitation. The participation interest transferred the legal status as it was, including all rights and liabilities connected thereto.

422. The Respondent's view that the Claimant, by declaring its consent to the MOA, may only advance claims in respect of violations of the Treaty that occurred after May 21, 1997, is not sustainable. The consent to the MOA which is required by Czech law has effect only between the shareholders. The consent is not a waiver of claims which derive from the Respondent's violations of the Treaty already incurred at the transfer date and the consent did not waive the Claimant's protection under the Treaty, should such protection derive from acts and circumstances that occurred before the transfer of shares took place.
423. The Respondent's view that the transfer of shares deprived the Claimant of the protection under the Treaty, because the investment changed hands from one (Dutch) shareholder to the other is not convincing. The Memorandum of Association was approved by the Media Council in 1993 and thereafter again, when the new MOA was implemented on November 14, 1996 without providing for any change of the change-of-control clause. Therefore, any claims deriving from the Claimant's predecessor's investment (also covered by the Treaty) follow the assigned shares.
424. Article 8 of the Treaty, therefore, does not debar the Claimant's claims on the ground advanced by the Respondent. In accordance with Article 8 of the Treaty, an investment dispute under the Treaty is covered, if the dispute derives from an investment of the investor. As already shown above under the issue of jurisdiction and now, and in respect to the admissibility of the claims, it is the Tribunal's view that the investment need not have been made by the investor himself. This conclusion is supported by Article 1 of the Treaty which defines an investment as "any kind of asset invested either directly or through an investor of a third State". This indicates a broad interpretation of the investment which also allows the (Dutch) parent company's investment to be identified as an investment under the Treaty. If the Treaty allows - as it does - the protection of indirect investments, the more the Treaty must continuously protect the parent company's investment assigned to its daughter company under the same Treaty regime.

(3) Admissibility of the Claimant's case in respect to the 1994 Share Acquisition

425. The Parties did not specifically address under the aspect of admissibility of the Claimant's claim or elsewhere the Claimant's predecessor's acquisition of shares from CEDC in 1994. The reason for not addressing this subject might be that the alleged violations of the Treaty took place thereafter. Therefore, this 1994 transfer need not specifically be dealt with under the aspect of admissibility of the Claimant's case. However, it is obvious that the Claimant's predecessor, when acquiring the ČNTS shares from CEDC (as admitted transferee under the MOA's Change of Control clause), acquired CEDC's full investment, including all ancillary rights and obligations.
426. In respect to this share transaction, the Respondent raised the view that the Claimant's predecessor CME Media Enterprises B.V., when acquiring the shares in 1994, "must have considered the commercial risk of investing in ČNTS as well as the legal frame work, in which this investment would be made, when it decided to acquire CEDC's rights and obligations in the MOA". It is undisputed between the Parties to these arbitration proceedings that CME Media Enterprises B.V. understood the legal framework of CEDC's investment when acquiring the ČNTS shares. This knowledge, however, has no influence on the investment's protection under the Treaty. It is not the case that the Claimant and its predecessors entered willingly into the risk that their investments in ČNTS will be eviscerated by acts of the Media Council. On the contrary, it became clear from the documents and other written communications submitted by the Parties to these proceedings that the Claimant and its predecessors relied on the protection of their investments by the Czech legal system, including the Czech Republic's obligations under the Treaty. Therefore, the Claimants case is admissible and there is no time bar to CME's claim related to the Claimants and its predecessor's investment in the Czech Republic.

2. The Merits of the Claimant's Case under the Treaty

427. The Claimant's case is justified in substance. The Czech Republic violated the Treaty by actions and inactions of the Media Council which led to the complete collapse of the Claimants and the Claimants predecessor's investment in the Czech Republic.

(1) CME's and CME's predecessor's investments in the Czech Republic

428. The 66 % shareholding in ČNTS which was acquired by CME's predecessor from its affiliated company CEDC in 1994 qualifies, as explained above, as an investment under the Treaty. The same applies to the further 33 % shareholding in ČNTS acquired by the Claimant and the Claimant's predecessor. CEDC made a capital contribution under the MOA for the initial share capital in the amount of 75 million Czech Crowns. A further investment obligation obligated CEDC and the Czech Savings Bank to invest further 1.3 billion Czech Crowns. The purpose of the investments was to develop and manage the television station TV NOVA, for which the broadcasting Licence was granted to CET 21 by the Media Council, acting as the statutory regulator of the Czech Republic. CEDC's investment was made under an investment scheme which was developed in close liaison with and under approval of the Media Council. It was also CEDC which had to provide the know-how for developing the new TV station, as neither the Czech Savings Bank as co-founder of ČNTS, nor CET 21 and its shareholders had relevant experience. The five Czech nationals who were the shareholders of CET 21 which initiated the joint project never worked in the broadcasting industry. The investment structure was developed by CEDC, jointly with its Czech Republic joint venture partner CET 21 in close conjunction with the Media Council. While the broadcasting Licence was granted to CET 21 (having no foreign shareholder), the operation of the TV station was in its totality vested in the joint venture company ČNTS.

429. The documents submitted by the Parties in these proceedings, in particular, the Media Council's own statements to the Czech Parliament leave no doubt that the investment, made by CEDC for the exclusive use of the broadcasting Licence granted to CET 21, was monitored, directed and approved by the Media Council. The basis for the investment structure with the participation of CEDC is the broadcasting Licence as awarded by decision of the Media Council of February 9, 1993 to CET 21. Its reasoning clearly spells out that the substantial involvement of foreign capital and broadcasting know-how was necessary to begin and operate television station activities. The legal tool to safeguard the public interest was to require that the leading positions in the television station were taken by Czech nationals, that the programming was not influenced by the foreign investor and that journalistic independence was safeguarded. These were the Licence conditions designed to ensure the national character of the programming of the new television station.
430. The Media Council further, in its justification for the Licence, stated that the Media Council created sufficient mechanisms through which it could monitor the observance of the schedule for implementation of the new TV station. Through the formulation of Licence conditions and through the inspection of their observance, the Media Council ensured that the aims of the Media Council were realized.
431. The basis for the Media Council's decision to grant the Licence to CET 21 was the "all-over structure" of a new Czech commercial television entity dated February 5, 1993 which was submitted jointly by CET 21 and CEDC to the Media Council. This "all-over structure" clearly described the separation of the broadcasting operation vested in a new legal entity ("the Commercial Company") to be formed by CEDC, the Czech Savings Bank and CET 21, whereas the broadcasting Licence was granted to CET 21 as the holder of the Licence for nation-wide television broadcasting under the legal Act No. 468/1991 Col. The "all-over structure” clearly spelled out that CET 21 and CEDC (CEDC as “direct participant” in the contract under the conditions of that Licence) agreed on the structure of the new entity which was formed with the purpose to finance and run the commercial, technical, management and other activities of the station. It was further clearly spelled out that the new company would be authorized to carry out these activities as long as CET 21 held the television Licence.

432. Further, it was stated that CET 21 acknowledged that it does not have the authority to perform broadcasting “without the direct participation of CEDC”. The “all-over structure” provided that a Board of Directors shall govern the basic decisions in respect to the economic management of the corporation. The day-to-day management and administration as well as the programming of the station was to be performed by the operating management. All operating personnel must be employees of the joint venture company. 90 % of the employees and the management of the station must be citizens of the Czech Republic. This management was to be complemented by the best foreign experts talented in engineering and technology, marketing and other areas to assist and train the local personnel.
433. The “all-over structure” of February 5, 1993 was made an integral part of the Licence granted by the Media Council to CET 21 by reference in the Licence conditions to an appendix to it. In Licence conditions Nos. 17 and 18, CET 21 as licence-holder agreed

17/ that is will submit to the Council for its prior consent any changes in the legal entity that is the licence-holder, capital structure of investors and provisions of the business agreement [i.e. the Memorandum of Association] between the licence-holder and investors. Parties to the business agreement are the licence-holder, CEDC and Česká Spořitelna a.s., in the scope and under the conditions set by the business agreement which will be submitted to the Media Council within 90 days after the decision to issue the Licence takes legal effect; the business agreement will observe the provisions of the “agreement on the business agreement” between the licence-holder and CEDC which is an appendix to the licence conditions;

18/ that CEDC, as a party to the business agreement specified in the Licence conditions, and other investors specified by the business agreement, will not in any way interfere in the programming of the television station , and, in particular will not interfere with the editorial independence of newscasting employees;”

434. The reference to the “agreement on the business agreement” was a reference to the “all-over structure” of February 5, 1993, as was confirmed by witnesses at the Stockholm hearing. This is consistent with the minutes of the meeting of the Media Council on February 4 and February 5, 1994, where CET 21 submitted “only one of the requested materials, the agreement on the structure of broadcasting between CET 21 and CEDC”. The witness Mr. Josefík, who was in 1993 member of the Council and later its chairman, confirmed that on February 5, 1993 the Council received “a new organizational structure of the future commercial broadcasting”. The witness confirmed that the appendix to the Licence condition was the February 5 agreement. It is, therefore, clear that the “all-over-structure” of CEDC’s investment was made part of the Licence. Mr. Josefík further confirmed that the Council discussed the future arrangement between CET21 and CEDC. The Council expressed its opinion on proposals made by CET 21 in respect to the structure and, based on the Council’s comments, CET 21 submitted the amended structure dated February 5, 1993 which was made part by reference of Licence condition No. 17.
435. The various witness statements clarified that the “over-all structure” dated February 5, 1993 was a carefully designed scheme to allow the foreign investor CEDC take part in the operation of the TV station without becoming a shareholder of licence-holder CET 21. The scheme was developed in close inter-action between the Media Council and CET 21. It was developed from the an initial proposal submitted by CET 21 to the Council dated February 3, 1993 which was prepared by CEDC’s representative, Mr. Fertig, and submitted to the Council by Dr. Železný. Both papers follow the same idea, having the holder of the broadcasting Licence separated from the operator.
436. The separation of the licence-holder CET 21 and the operator became necessary after the Council’s decision to grant the Licence to CET 21 was published on January 31, 1993. This decision created an uproar in the Czech Parliament and the Czech public. Members of the Parliament in particular criticised the grant of the Licence to CET 21. The Council developed the view that, accordingly, it would not be feasible to transfer a share in CET 21 as originally contemplated to the foreign investor CEDC.

437. This sequence of events is supported by the underlying documents related to the application for the broadcasting Licence by CET 21, including personal presentations by CEDC's representatives in front of the Media Council before the Council decided to grant the Licence to CET 21.
438. The justifications of the decision to award the Licence of February 9, 1993 expressly stated that the Council's decision is based on the application by CET 21 for the broadcasting Licence, the written documents submitted to the Council and also the facts presented in the public hearing by CET 21 and CEDC. The documents submitted as part of the CET 21 application for the broadcasting Licence comprised inter alia the "project of an independent television station CET 21" which spelled out that CEDC is "a direct participant in CET 21's application for the Licence" and, in the enclosed Letter of Intent, it was made clear that CEDC was going to acquire a 49 % shareholding in CET 21 in exchange for its commitment to fund the broadcast station and provide the seed capital.
439. The agreement between CET 21 and "its foreign partners and experts" was communicated by CET 21 on December 21, 1992 to the Council. At the Council hearing on December 21, 1992, Mr. Palmer and Mr. Fertig represented CEDC and submitted the proposal to the Council according to which an "extensive share [was] reserved for foreign capital" and it was clearly indicated that this would be "a direct capital share, not credit". The financing to be provided by CEDC was an amount of US $10 million which was confirmed in the Letter of Intent issued by CEDC to CET 21 as an attachment to the application documents.
440. After the grant of the Licence to CET 21 was released to the public in a press conference, followed by the uproar in the Czech Parliament, as described by the witness Mr. Fertig, the Council communicated to CET 21 that direct shareholding of CEDC was "politically impossible". Mr. Fertig stated that the Council requested the replacement of the direct shareholding by a structure which would give an equivalent level of participation from an economic standpoint and an equivalent level of influence from a business standpoint. In accordance with this request,

Mr. Fertig worked out the “over-all structure” dated February 3, 1993 which he typed on his personal computer. A Czech translation was submitted to the Council. Mr. Fertig stated that the “all-over structure” dated February 5, 1993 was developed by incorporating the changes requested by the Council.

441. The purpose of the changes was to have a separation of the Licence on the one hand and the operations on the other hand. As Mr. Fertig stated, the official “Decision to Award a Licence” at the Council meeting on February 9, 1993 was not made before the amended “all-over structure” dated February 5, 1993 was signed by CET 21 and CEDC.
442. This sequence of events as stated by the witness is confirmed by the minutes of the Council meeting dated February 4, 1993 and the “Decision to Award a Licence” dated February 9, 1993 which, in its reasoning, referred to the necessity of the substantial involvement of foreign capital for beginning television station activities and referred to the legal structure set out in the Licence conditions, “which shall fully guarantee the leading positions of domestic persons in the television station and their programming and journalistic independence” and further, by the official Licence document, including the Licence conditions and in particular the Licence conditions Nos. 17 and 18, all dated February 9, 1993.
443. The split structure of the licence-holder CET 21 and the operator ČNTS was developed on the basis of the Media Law of October 30, 1991. The Media Law of 1991 defined broadcasting as “dissemination of programme services or picture and sound information by transmitters, cable systems, satellites and other means intended to be received by the public”. A broadcaster under the Media Law 1991 is (inter alia) anyone, who obtained authorization to broadcast on the basis of an Act of the Federal Assembly, an Act of the Czech National Council, etc. or by being granted a Licence under this Act (a licence-holder). The Media Law 1991 did not describe the commercial or technical requirements to be performed by a licence-holder. However, according to Section 12.3 of the Media Law 1991, the Council was entitled to impose conditions on the licence-holder as part of the Licence.

444. Therefore, the Media Council, the regulator of the Czech Republic under the Media Law, decided to monitor the operation of the Licence under the split structure (CET 21 as licence-holder and ČNTS as operator) on the basis of inter alia the Licence conditions Nos. 17 and 18. This scheme was carefully designed legally and, on the face of it, in compliance with the Media Law, as the Media Law did not contain any restrictions or requirements in respect to the operation of the broadcasting system by the licence-holder or another operator. The Council, under condition No. 17, imposed as a part of the broadcasting Licence, the condition on CET 21 to submit the MOA between CET 21 and CEDC within 90 days after the decision to issue the Licence was to take legal effect. The MOA must reflect the provisions of the “agreement on the business agreement” which was the “all-over structure” dated February 5, 1993.
445. At the Council meeting dated April 8, 1993, the Council reviewed the draft MOA as submitted by CET 21. The Council declined to approve the MOA. With reference to the conditions of the Licence, the Council required that CET 21 shall provide the final version of the MOA between CET 21, CEDC and the Czech Savings Bank to the Council for approval by April 19, 1993 with the amendments required by the Council. This request for a change of the MOA was communicated by the Council to CET 21 on April 9, 1993 with reference to the terms of the Licence. Further, the Council approved Dr. Železný becoming a shareholder of CET 21. CEDC did not agree with the proposed amendments and its president and chief executive officer Mark Palmer sent a responsive letter to the Chairman of the Council on April 13, 1992. At the Council meeting on April 20, 1993, the final wording of the MOA was approved in accordance with Article 17 of the Licence conditions which was communicated to CET 21 on the next day.
446. The MOA, with the full title “Memorandum of Association and Investment Agreement”, thereby became the basic document for the Claimant’s predecessor’s investment in the Czech Republic. The clear wording established that the television station shall be managed by the new company and that the object of the new company’s business activity was “the development and operation of the new, independent, private, national television broadcasting station in compliance with the Licence and the terms and conditions attached to it.” The purpose of the new company was to operate an independent television station and to achieve profits and ensure a high rate of return of equity for the partners, while providing a popular television channel for the Czech public.

447. The business decisions of the new company were vested in the Committee of Representatives which committee in particular had the power for decision-making on the programming principles, the programme structures and the programme plan of the TV station “in consultation with the chairman of the Programming Council”. The Programming Council had certain veto rights in respect to the programming and CET 21, despite its minority shareholding in ČNTS, was entitled to appoint three members to a Programming Council, two of its members to be appointed by the Czech Savings Bank and only one member to be appointed by CEDC, the seventh member being the programming director. The shareholders expressly agreed to be bound by and to respect the terms and conditions of the Licence granted by the Council.
448. Under Article 1.4.1 of the MOA, CET 21 was obligated to contribute to the company “the right to use, benefit from and maintain the Licence of the company on an unconditional, irrevocable and exclusive basis“. The value of the non-monetary contribution was denominated by 48 million Czech Crowns.
449. Further, the partners expressly agreed that they shall not undertake any action that would present a well-founded concern that it will make it more difficult to obtain a prolongation or renewal of the Licence in favour of the company.
450. “In consideration of the efforts and the contributions to the Company, CET, CEDC and CS herewith commit themselves not to undertake any actions, either by assuming a contractual obligation or by negligence, that would jeopardize the granting of the Licence in general, and especially in accordance with the Act on Television Broadcasting in the Czech Republic (No. 468/1991 Sb.), to assign any right, in part or in full, relating to the aforementioned Licence to any third Party that is not a Party to this Agreement, with the exception of any successor appointed by the Company with the approval of the Council”.

451. It is the view of the Arbitral Tribunal that this structure, as it appears from the MOA in conjunction with the Licence and its conditions Nos. 17 and 18, is a well-defined legal basis for the Claimant's predecessor's investment in the Czech Republic, granted after intensive consultations with and following requests and advice by the Media Council.
452. It is obvious that the structure of the split of the licence-holder and the operator, as specifically described and set out in this scheme, was the legal basis for the Claimant's predecessor's investment. The purpose of this scheme was to secure the Claimant's predecessor's investment in the Czech Republic in compliance with the Media Law of 1991. The scheme was recognized and developed in conjunction with the Media Council. In scrutinizing this scheme, it is apparent that the Claimant's predecessor's position was substantially more than a financial investor as suggested by the witness Mr. Josefík, who, in the eyes of the Tribunal, showed a rather selective and unpersuasive memory of the facts as the documents show them to be.
453. The Parties to these arbitration proceedings described CET 21's contribution, the right to use the Licence, as a lawful contribution. The Media Council itself in its report of October 1996 to the Czech Parliament reiterated that, "at the time when the arrangement was made, there were no doubts about its legitimacy; in regard to many related steps that were taken, the Council, as it was then constituted and based on its experience at the time, took a position of consent". The Council in its report to the Czech Parliament described the structure which was used by TV NOVA, Premiéra TV and Rádio Alfa as having the following analogous features:
- "Their operation and programming are provided by other companies than the companies that were awarded the Licence, namely, on the basis of a special legal construction which captures, on the basis of a contract, their collaboration and mutual rights and duties. Therefore, there are two companies [related] to one Licence, the one that was awarded the Licence and the one that was established in order to implement it"*.
454. The witnesses confirmed that the CET 21 / ČNTS structure was used for other broadcasting stations. It was in particular used also for Pre-miéra TV (a minor enterprise) and for Rádio Alfa (also controlled by CME).

455. Also, the report (called "opinion") of the Council to a Parliament Committee of May 1994 qualified the structure as "standard business procedure which was duly discussed and approved by the licensing body, i.e. by the Council, and does not violate any effective legal regulations, [The Council] consulted with a number of leading legal experts, Czech and foreign ".

456. Further, the Council stated in its legal opinion to the Parliament that

"the operation of a television station, it is of a television organization (e.g., for the production of programmes), should be in no case confused with the operation of television broadcasting, i.e. the dissemination of programmes (Article 2 para. 1, letter (a) of Act No. 468/1991 Coll.). The Memorandum of Association and the Licence terms specified the relationship between ČNTS and CET 21 and contain a number of mechanisms that prevent the potential non-permissible involvement of ČNTS in the rights and obligations of the licence-holder. CET 21 is responsible to the Council to the full extent for the operation of television broadcasting. For the reasons stated above, the Council does not share the opinion of the Committee for Science [Parliament Committee]. The Council is convinced about the correctness of the procedure and does not admit any doubts of its legitimacy. "

457. Therefore, the Council itself viewed the CET 21/ČNTS structure when created and at least until May 1994 as a structure in compliance with the Czech Media Law. The Tribunal accordingly concludes that the Claimant's predecessor's investment was based on a carefully designed legal structure which was developed in conjunction with the Media Council and implemented with its approval. The Tribunal concludes that such structure must be regarded as a legally well-founded basis for the Claimant's predecessor's investment. It was also the legal basis for CME Media when acquiring CEDC's 60 % shareholding in ČNTS in 1994. At that point of time, the investment in TV NOVA was still at a high risk after having started the TV station in spring 1994 with a substantial investment commitment under the MOA as requested and approved by the Council. Any change of the CET 21/ ČNTS investment structure by law or by Council's interference, therefore, must be considered in the light of whether such changes adversely affected CME's investment in the Czech Republic and whether it could be seen as a breach of the Treaty.

458. It is undisputed between the Parties that TV NOVA within one year after having started broadcasting in February 1994 became the most successful and profitable private television station in the Czech Republic with revenues which increased by 1996 to more than US $ 100 million per year with a profit of roughly US $30 million per year (or US $51 million pre-tax profit). This success is to be attributed to CEDC's operational support which enabled broadcasting to start within a timetable set by the Licence, one year, which was seen as rather ambitious.
459. The witness Mr. Klinkhammer stated that CEDC and CME invested US $ 140 million in TV NOVA which included the share acquisitions made between 1994 and 1999. In the first purchase of 5,2 % ČNTS shares from the CET 21 shareholders, CME Czech Media Enterprises B.V. had paid US $5 million. In 1997, in the share transaction with Dr. Železný, CME paid US $ 27,5 million for 5,8 %, evaluating ČNTS at that time at roughly US $500 million. Also, the acquisition of 22 % interest in ČNTS held by the Czech Savings Bank for roughly US $ 30 million on July 17, 1996 indicated that the investment in ČNTS was regarded as sound and prosperous, a success must be, to a large extent, attributed to the foreign investor CEDC and CME because the Czech nationals who initiated the joint venture as shareholders of CET 21, including Dr. Železný, never had practical experience in starting and running a TV station.

(2) The Media Council in 1996 coerced CME to abandon the legal security for its investment in the Czech Republic

460. In 1996, the Media Council reversed its position related to the split broadcasting structure between the licence-holder and the operator. The reason for the reversed position is clearly spelled out in the Council's report of October 1996 to the Czech Parliament. In this report, the Council made it clear that the split structure was in compliance with the Media Law as long as it could be controlled by the Council via the Licence conditions. "... in 1995 there existed a sufficient tie, in the form of Licence terms [Licence conditions] between the licence-holder and the other company, to make it possible for the Council to intervene in the event the existing split became truly problematic. "

461. "At the beginning of 1996, however, the amended law on broadcasting that came into effect included the mandatory abolishing Licence terms, and the operators of broadcasting reacted to it by requesting some changes in the Licence. That meant a weakening and/or nullification of the above-mentioned tie as a certain guarantee of the legality of the existing situation".
462. Indeed, as the Council stated in its report to the Parliament, all three broadcasting companies TV NOVA, Premiéra TV and Rádio Alfa requested that the relevant condition be abolished, which would have had the effect that the Council would have lost control of the operator of the Licence under the split Licence/operator scheme. The Council, in its report to Parliament, identified the problem as follows: "The focus of the problem is a subtle legal question of who is the operator of broadcasting, which activities [it] may provide itself and which ones it may delegate to other entities without actually transferring the Licence to them. The Law on Broadcasting [Media Law], which stipulates inter alia the basic rules for this very specific business activity, suffers from deficient shortcomings in this respect;"
463. The Arbitral Tribunal's clear view and understanding is that the Council, in order to avoid loss of control of the operator of the split licence-holder/operator scheme in 1996, decided to put pressure on the participants of the split scheme in order to change it. This transpires from the facts, in particular the Council's own statements in this respect, the documents and the witness statements.
464. As one step of its strategy, the Council did not comply with CET 21 request to delete condition No. 17 of the Licence which is "the tie" in the words of the Council to the Parliament, to safeguard the split structure of licence-holder and operator.
465. On February 12, 1996, the Council instructed Dr. Jan Barta of the State and Law Institute of the Academy of Science of the Czech Republic to render a legal opinion on the split structure. Dr. Barta rendered a legal opinion submitted under the letterhead of the institute of the State and the Law within one week, on February 19, 1996, which concluded that CET 21 does not operate broadcasting and never did, whereas ČNTS was broadcasting without authority. Dr. Barta stated that the approval of the MOA by the Council has no significance as the Council has not issued any resolution on this subject. In Dr. Barta's view, the MOA expressly stated that the law would be violated (the Licence-holder pledges not to broadcast, and the company that is being established carries on unauthorized broadcasting). This was a violation of the law and the Council was not in the position to permit that which is not permitted by the law. Dr. Barta suggested initiating administrative proceedings for unauthorized broadcasting against ČNTS and he suggested as an alternative to withdraw the Licence from CET 21. He further stated "the given group of investors can be excluded from broadcasting in accordance with the law by these methods". Further, as an alternative, Dr. Barta suggested to compel CET 21 through penalties to initiate broadcasting at its own expense and to modify contractual relations with the group of investors accordingly. As a further alternative, Dr. Barta suggested to issue a new Licence for ČNTS. "Until such Licence is legally effective, however, the broadcasting is still unauthorized and the fine has to be levied in such a case as well".

466. The circumstances of the rendering of Dr. Barta's legal opinion are dubious. It is quite obvious that this legal opinion was rendered in response to the Council's instruction letter of February 12, 1996 with the purpose of laying the ground for the Media Council's reversal of position which was opposite to the Media Council's view that the CET 21/ČNTS split structure was in compliance with the Media Law, when implemented. Dr. Barta's legal opinion had serious deficiencies. Contrary to Dr. Barta's statement under Section 4 of his opinion, the Media Council by resolution of May 11, 1993 topic 2 by unanimous vote approved Licence condition No. 17, which decision was certified under the date of May 12, 1993 in full form. Further, the legal opinion did not deal with the question whether an official State body, when reversing its decision by declaring a legal structure for the use of a broadcasting licence illegal, must pay compensation to the foreign investor who, in reliance on the validity of the split structure, made large investments in the television station. Dr. Barta was of the opinion that the Council at that time (1993) from a formal point of view, acted incorrectly as administrative body. Dr. Barta's legal conclusion was that the Council is obligated to disregard the MOA and that a decision of the Council shall "simply (be) based on the determined facts described above."

467. This suggestion for the application of administrative law shall not be dissected by the Arbitral Tribunal. Dr. Barta's opinion, however, is unacceptable under the requirements of the Treaty which does not allow reversal and elimination of the legal basis of a foreign investor's investment by just taking the view that an administrative body's formal resolution, the corner-stone for the security of the investment, was simply wrong. The Tribunal is not to decide on the Czech Administrative Law aspect of this question. However, Dr. Barta's legal opinion is not in compliance with the Respondent's obligations under the Treaty.
468. On the face of it, Dr. Barta's opinion was requested by the Media Council simply as a tool to cover up the reversal of the Council's legal position towards CET 21 and the foreign investor CEDC/CME. This view of the Arbitral Tribunal is supported by the sequence of events, ending with CME being forced to change the MOA and to give up the "safety net" (as it was described by the Respondent's representative Prof. Lowe at the Stockholm hearing) by replacing in the MOA the "use of the Licence" as CET 21's contribution in ČNTS by the "use of the know-how of the licence".
469. It is clear that the replacement of the "use of the Licence" (which ČNTS enjoyed under the split structure) by the "use of the know-how of the licence" vitiated the Claimant's protection for its investment in the Czech Republic. The Tribunal need not decide whether the contribution of the "use of the Licence" in 1993 was legally valid under Czech law. The parties to these proceedings are in agreement that (in contrast to Dr. Barta) the contribution of the use of the Licence was legally not questionable. This view of the Respondent is supported by the Media Council's legal opinions and reports to Parliament cited above.
470. However, the Respondent at the Stockholm hearing took the position that the 1993 "safety net" (use of the Licence) was not better than the amended structure (use of know-how of the licence and conclusion of a Service Agreement). The Respondent's position on this subject is unsustainable. The use of "know-how" of a broadcasting Licence is meaningless and worthless. The obvious purpose for replacing the wording of "use of the licence" by "use of the know-how of the licence" was to buttress a wording in the MOA which could sustain the interpretation that CET 21 did not receive a pay-back of its share capital made by a contribution in kind.

471. The Respondent's position that the waiver of the "use of the Licence" was counterbalanced by the new Section 10.8 of the new 1996 MOA is unsustainable. The wording of Section 10.8 speaks against it:

"[CET 21] hereby undertakes not to entrust the subject matter of its contribution, or any other right connected with the Licence, or the Licence itself, to the ownership or use of another legal entity or natural person, or to enter into any legal relationship with any legal entity or natural person other than the Company, by which it would give that, or another, person or entity any right to the subject matter of its contribution to the Company or to CET 21 as such which would result in the creation of rights similar to those which the Company has, and undertakes not to even begin any negotiations with another legal entity or natural person about the creation of such a legal relationship."

472. The "subject matter of its contribution" which, under Section 10.8 is restricted in respect to transfer or even negotiations, is nothing else than the "use of the know-how of the Licence" which, as indicated above, was a rather meaningless and worthless right. Further, CET 21's undertaking not to assign the Licence itself was useless as the assignment of the Licence is not permitted under the Media Law anyway. The only important issue was, whether CET 21 as licence-holder was obligated to contribute the use of the Licence to ČNTS which contribution alone was the "safety net" for ČNTS, ensuring that CET 21 would exclusively use the operational services of ČNTS.

473. Moreover, the Respondent's argument that the waiver of the "use of the Licence" under the 1993 split structure was fully compensated by the Service Agreement entered into between CET 21 and ČNTS 1996/1997, is unsustainable. The contribution of the use of the Licence under the MOA is legally substantially stronger than the Service Agreement, as was demonstrated by the further sequence of events. A Service Agreement could be terminated much more easily for good cause at any time by CET 21 compared with a change or amendment of CET 21's contribution in kind as shareholder of ČNTS under the MOA. Such contribution cannot be recalled by an unilateral act of the shareholder who made the contribution. This may not always apply, e.g. if ČNTS as user of the Licence by its conduct would have jeopardized the Licence, which was never seriously suggested, either by CET 21 or by the Media Council.

474. In 1999, the legal weakness of the 1996 arrangements materialized. On August 5, 1999, CET 21 terminated the Service Agreement for good cause with the effect that the alleged non-delivery of the daily work log for one (!) day (August 4, 1999) gave sufficient reason to terminate the Service Agreement. Thereby, the legal basis for the co-operation between CET 21 and ČNTS was vitiated with the consequence that the Claimant's investments of purportedly US $ 140 million, evaluated at US $ 500 million, was put at the risk of civil court decisions which ended up with the first instance Regional Commercial Court decision which decided that the termination was void, which decision was reversed by the Appellate Court with the consequence that the dispute was still pending at the Czech Supreme Court without a final decision having been obtained at the time of the closing of the hearing of these arbitration proceedings, the Claimant's investment meanwhile having been totally destroyed.
475. The Arbitral Tribunal cannot accept the argument that the 1996 "safety net" was a real safety net in comparison with the 1993 safety net. Even if the Czech Supreme Court were to reverse the Appellate Court's decision and re-instate the first instance court decision, this would not change the Tribunal's assessment. Even if ČNTS would be in the position to restore the status of the TV station as it was on August 5, 1999, CET 21 could easily jeopardize the arrangement by repeating the same procedure, terminating the Service Agreement for purported good cause and again dragging ČNTS into Civil Court proceedings.
476. It is not the Tribunal's role to pass a decision upon the legal protection granted to the foreign investor for its investment under the Czech Civil Law and civil court system.

477. Nevertheless, the Tribunal, after having studied the first instance judgment and the Court of Appeal judgment, cannot conceal its opinion that the Court of Appeal inadequately dealt with the facts and circumstances. It permitted a US $ 500 million value investment to be destroyed by the purported non-delivery of a one-day day-log under a Service Agreement imposed on the investor by the Media Council, which circumstances and facts were set out in detail by the first instance Court judge.
478. The Arbitral Tribunal is charged with assessing whether the amendment of the legal structure of the Claimant's investment in 1996 prejudiced the protection of the Claimant's investment in the Czech Republic and whether this was a breach of the Treaty.
479. The facts in respect to the change of the so called "safety net" themselves are to a large extent undisputed, whereas the Parties' legal and factual interpretation of these facts is controversial. The Respondent's view that the change of the "safety net" in 1996 did not change or prejudice the protection of the Claimant's investment is, as explained, unsustainable.
480. The events in 1996 as documented by the exhibits to the parties' submissions are decisive in sustaining the conclusion that the Media Council in 1996 forced ČNTS and CME to agree to undermine the legal protection of CME's investment. Considering the interpretation of the documents and the witness statements, the Tribunal is of the view that the Council, in order to re-establish its control over the broadcasting operations of CET 21/ČNTS (which operations were disconnected from the licence-holder by the 1993 split structure), "made a very intensive effort" (Mr. Josefík's oral report to the Standing Committee of Parliament on September 30, 1999) to force CET 21 / ČNTS and its shareholders to surrender the 1993 split structure.
481. At the March 13, 1996 Council Meeting, the representatives for CET 21 were confronted in the presence of Dr. Barta with the request to enter into a different contractual relation; Dr. Barta acting in a rather inquisitorial function. He requested that measures be taken so that the physical operator will be CET 21. After the cancellation of Licence condition No. 17, a trade contract between CET 21 and ČNTS was necessary as, in Dr. Barta's view, "CET 21 does not operate broadcasting". The conclusion to this part of the meeting was:

"Lawyers of the Council and CET 21 will prepare the first version of a contract on provision of performances and services between CET 21 and ČNTS, so that the first version of this contract will be prepared by CET 21 within 10 days and submitted to the Council for discussion. "

482. Keeping Dr. Barta in the process, Dr. Barta rendered a further legal opinion dated May 2, 1996 which would have turned the existing 1993 split structure, CET 21 being the licence-holder and ČNTS the operator, upside-down. This legal opinion stipulated, in particular, that all payments for advertising are the income of CET 21 which would deprive ČNTS of its original source of income. The Council asked for a consequent change of the MOA which was discussed at the Council Meeting of May 7, 1996. On May 15, 1996, CME's legal counsel, Laura DeBruce, circulated a letter to the lawyers of CET 21 and ČNTS, expressing CME's concern about the Council's recent proposal that the MOA be amended so that the CET 21 contribution of the "exclusive use" of the Licence would be deleted from the MOA and replaced by a Service Agreement. Laura DeBruce made clear that ČNTS as a consequence of the change requested by the Council would be in rather weak legal position, should CET 21 simply claim that ČNTS was in breach of the Service Agreement and terminate it.
483. The Council at that time involved itself in the draft of the Service Agreement, sending comments to the parties to the agreement with the request to incorporate the comments in the agreement or to comment on them within five business days of receiving the Council's request which dated June 4, 1996.
484. The Council put the issue of CET 21's legal structure on the agenda of the Council Meeting on June 28 and June 29, 1996 and decided at that meeting in respect of ČNTS that a warning of illegality of broadcasting shall be sent to ČNTS, which shall include a time-period for remedy, ending on August 27, 1996. Further, the Council decided to postpone a decision on a cancellation of Condition No. 17 of the Licence, "because of the preliminary question of proceedings before a court and proceedings at the State Prosecutor's Office".

485. On July 23, 1996, the Council initiated administrative proceedings to impose a fine for operating television broadcasting without authorization against ČNTS. In the letter addressed to ČNTS which reached ČNTS in September 1999, the Council set out three reasons.

- The first reason was that the Commercial Register for ČNTS showed it to be operating television broadcasting on the basis of the Licence as its business activity.
- The second reason was that the agreement with the Authors' Protection Union was concluded by ČNTS and not by CET 21.
- The third reason was described as follows:

"Another basis are the agreements between ČNTS and the company CET 21 spol. s. r. o. which indicate, among other things, that ČNTS is arranging the broadcasting on its own account. There is no control by the broadcasting operator over the disseminated programming; the broadcasting operator's liability is rendered unclear by the Agreement. "

486. In support, the Council, in its letter to ČNTS, referred to Dr. Barta's legal opinion rendered in the name of the Institute of State and Law of the Academy of Sciences of the Czech Republic.

487. Mr. Josefík, who was Member of the Council and later Chairman of the Council, stated at the Stockholm hearing that "the agreements between ČNTS and the company CET 21", referred to in the Council's letter to ČNTS, were the MOA. This interpretation of Mr. Josefík confirms the wording of the Council's letter, taking into account that no other agreements between CET 21 and ČNTS related to the use of the Licence were in existence at that point of time.

488. The letter of July 23, 1996 and Mr. Josefík's interpretation are in clear contrast to the Respondent's view and position that not the contractual basis of the 1993 split structure but its implementation violated the Media Law. Indeed, Dr. Barta's opinion also did not suggest that the implementation of the 1993 split structure was a violation of the Media Law. Dr. Barta maintained that the 1993 split structure itself was illegal.

489. Therefore, the Media Council reversed its legal position in 1996, taking the view that the 1993 split structure was illegal. The Respondents interpretation of the events as an unlawful implementation of a lawful structure is, in the light of the facts, unsustainable.
490. The purpose of initiating administrative proceedings against ČNTS was solely to put pressure on CET 21 and ČNTS, with the aim of elimination of the 1993 split structure. This assessment, although contested by the Respondent and some of the Respondent's witnesses in these proceedings, is confirmed by the Media Council's own written documents, reports and legal opinions. The legal opinion of the Media Council's legal department dated November 6, 1996 stated in its review of the draft Service Agreement::

"It may be stated that the said Agreement undoubtedly reacts to the commencement of administrative proceedings against ČNTS for illegal broadcasting with the aim of making it seem that ČNTS has not been committing such illegal acts."

491. In the report to Parliament of January 31, 1998, the Council repeated its position, stating that the Council halted the proceedings with ČNTS in September 1997 because, in its opinion, once the scenario of actions agreed with ČNTS and CET 21 was fulfilled, the reasons for which the proceedings about unauthorized broadcasting were conducted ceased to exist.
492. In this report, the Council also confirmed the legality of the original 1993 split structure, which the Council considered to be "legal and which raised legal doubts only later".
493. "The reasons why this model came into existence were the Council's fears of a majority share of foreign capital in the licence-holder's company. The licensing conditions were an insurance of this configuration that the Council considered to be a sufficient tool for regulating the broadcast, even after the softening of them".
494. In a sequence of events, the Council initiated administrative proceedings after CET 21 and ČNTS presented a proposal for an amicable solution in individual legal steps (which did not please the Council). In this respect, the Council reported to the Parliament that, in December 1996, “after a partial success regarding the legal documents of CET 21 as well as ČNTS, the Council abolished the licensing conditions according to the application. The proceedings concerning unjustified broadcast against ČNTS, however, continue”. In the period from January till July, 1997, according to the Council’s report to Parliament, CET 21 and ČNTS gradually documented the implementation of the promised steps. On June 3, the Council concluded that the premises for stopping the proceedings were thus fulfilled.

495. On September 15, 1997 (as the Council further stated to the Parliament), having examined the remaining legal issue, the Council stopped the proceedings against ČNTS.

496. The Council, in its report to Parliament of January 31, 1998 reiterates that the original 1993 construction “from the legal view-point did not and does not contradict any law, but it created a basis for problems ...”.

“When it came into existence, such a construction was just right and had its logic, on top of that, an integral part of this configuration were the licensing conditions set by the Council by means of which inadmissible influences on the broadcasting, emanating from the procurement organization ČNTS, were ruled out.”

497. The Council (in the response to Parliament’s request) fully disclosed the motivation for the 1993 split structure:

“When granting the Licence to the company CET 21, for fear that a majority share of foreign capital in the licence-holder’s company might impact the independence of full-format broadcasts, the Council assumed a configuration that separates the investor from the licence-holder himself That is how an agreement came into existence (upon a series of remarks from the Council) by which the company ČNTS was established the majority owner of which is CEDC/CME. Thus, next to the licence-holder’s company, directly linked to it, a new company was established which was to co-participate in implementing the broadcast.

498. This is clear. The alleged unlawful implementation was not referred to. The Respondent’s view that the structure itself was legal, whereas the implementation was illegal, is not supported by the Council's own report to Parliament on January 31, 1998.

499. From the witness statements at the Stockholm hearing, it became apparent that CME had to take Council's threat against ČNTS seriously. As an ultimate possibility which was already mentioned in Dr. Barta's legal opinion, the Council could have imposed substantial fines on ČNTS in order to stop ČNTS operating TV NOVA and, furthermore, the Council could have withdrawn CET 21's broadcasting Licence.
500. Dr. Železný, who, at this point of time was in full accord with CME and ČNTS, informed the Representative Committee of ČNTS that the broadcasting Licence will be seriously endangered as a consequence of administrative proceedings and there was a substantial risk for the Licence, should CET 21/ ČNTS not comply with the Media Council's request for change of the legal structure. From the minutes of this meeting, confirmed by the witness statements at the Stockholm hearing, it becomes clear that, at that point of time, Dr. Železný was not acting in conflict with ČNTS and/or CME. On the contrary, he fully supported the joint position of ČNTS and CME towards the Council.
501. By a joint letter of ČNTS and CET 21 dated October 4, 1996, both companies gave in to the pressure of the Council and submitted a proposal to amicably resolve the prolonged differences, "which arose in addressing the legal situation concerning the arrangement of legal relationship between ČNTS and CET 21, as well as around the cancellation of Licence conditions in connection with Act No. 301/1995 Col."
502. The proposal was:
- "First, to enter into a Service Agreement between CET21 and ČNTS related to television broadcasting services to be provided by ČNTS to CET 21;
  - second, to amend ČNTS's entry in the Commercial Register;
  - third, to delete radio broadcasting from CET 21's registration and
  - fourth, to obligate ČNTS "to submit to the Council a draft amendment to Article 1.4. 1 of the Memorandum of Association of ČNTS which will be submitted to the ČNTS General Assembly for approval.”

503. By letter dated October 4, 1996, Dr. Železný, acting as “General Manager and Agent” on behalf of TV NOVA, summarized the legal view and situation on behalf of ČNTS. This letter fully explained ČNTS’ position in respect to the legality of the ČNTS/CET 21 structure, supported by a legal opinion of the Institute of State and Law of the Academy of Science which confirmed that the licence-holder, in compliance with the Media Law, may broadcast through other persons.
504. In reference to the proposal submitted by ČNTS by its joint letter with CET 21 of October 4, 1996, in which they proposed steps for a conciliatory settlement to the administrative body, ČNTS requested termination of the administrative proceedings.
505. The shareholders of ČNTS did not give in on a voluntary basis. The amendment of the MOA on November 14, 1996, and the implementation of the Service Agreement was the result of the Council’s threat to discontinue ČNTS’ broadcasting operations. CME decided to disregard its own counsel’s legal advice according to which the replacement of the CET 21 contribution “use of the Licence” by the “right to use, benefit and maintain the know-how concerning the Licence” will be detrimental for ČNTS’ position as exclusive supplier of broadcasting services to CET 21, the basis of ČNTS’ business. CME carefully considered this advice, however it was clear that without the amendment requested by the Council the broadcasting Licence would be endangered. The change lifting CME’s legal “safety net” for its investment was made because of coercion exerted by the Council.
506. This clearly transpires from the submitted documents, in particular the Council’s own report to the Parliament, and this position was supported by Mr. Fertig. The witness, who communicated through Dr. Železný with the Media Council, confirmed that the danger of losing the licence as final consequence of the Media Council’s action was to be taken seriously, if an amicable solution were not reached. The Council demonstrated the seriousness of the threat by initiating administrative proceedings against ČNTS, when ČNTS tried to negotiate and delay the amendment of the MOA.

507. The witness stated that only because of the exercise of coercion was the legal basis for the investment changed. Only the amendment of the MOA to be redrafted along the lines that would satisfy the Media Council could have solved the situation which otherwise would have been destructive for CME's investment.
508. Also, the witness Ms. Landová, who, in the years 1993 to 1997 worked as a senior member of the staff of the office of the Council, supported this position. She clearly stated that the Council initiated administrative proceedings for unauthorized broadcasting against ČNTS in order to put pressure on ČNTS to change the MOA and to make the other changes requested by the Council.
509. The witness Mr. Radvan, a Czech lawyer who represented CEDC, also testified that the Council insisted on deletion of the use of the Licence from the MOA. Dr. Železný's efforts to change the wording without changing the substance had no success. According to Mr. Radvan's witness statement, it was clear that, in respect to the legal protection of ČNTS, it made a huge difference between the use of a licence and the contractual relationship which was introduced in 1996 instead of it, and that it was abundantly clear for everybody involved that the use of the Licence was different from the use of the know-how. By changing the MOA, CET 21's contribution to ČNTS in the eyes of this witness was almost eliminated and the witness stated that the new Article 10.8 did not adequately protect ČNTS.
510. The witness Mr. Musil who was at the relevant time a member of the Media Council, also confirmed to a large extent the sequence of events. His interpretation of the events was that the Media Law of 1991 was unclear in respect to the definition of the "broadcasting operator". He was of the opinion that the administrative proceedings against ČNTS achieved a better status for the Council which was a stricter distinction between the broadcasting operator and the service company. Also, his witness statement made clear that the Council had the clear target of changing the legal structure which was the basis for the Claimant's investment.

511. According to the statement of Mr. Josefík, who later became the Chairman of the Media Council, the administrative proceedings must have been seen in the eyes of ČNTS as a real threat. The witness stated that, on the same basis as the Council initiated administrative proceedings against ČNTS, the Council, in accordance with the legal opinion of Dr. Barta, could initiate proceedings to withdraw the Licence from CET 21.
512. This threat was not a theoretical threat, as the Council in its notification of the initiation of administrative proceedings to ČNTS, referred explicitly to the legal opinion of Dr. Barta which opinion was made known to all respective parties involved and which clearly spelled out the possibility for the Council to initiate proceedings to withdraw the Licence from CET 21.
513. This threat was fundamental because a withdrawal of the Licence in the same way as interference with ČNTS' broadcasting operations would have destroyed the Claimant's investment in the Czech Republic.
514. CME, at this point of time, could not take the risk of entering into long-lasting legal battles, civil law and/or administrative law proceedings, as such proceedings would carry the danger that, if the lawsuits were to be lost, CME's investment would have been irreversibly destroyed.
515. The Claimant decided to give in, which is a normal commercial consequence in any situation of unlawful pressure, when the affected victim of such pressure has to make a careful assessment.
516. Such a decision for a compromise, however, does not make the Council's unlawful acts legal and cannot be deemed as a waiver of CME's rights under the Treaty. This is the considered conclusion of the Arbitral Tribunal.
517. This view is supported by prominent legal authors such as Professor Detlev F. Vagts "Coercion and Foreign Investment Re-Arrangements" 1978, published in the American Journal of International Law. Professor Vagts pointed out that, for example:

"The threat of cancellation of the right to do business might well be considered coercion . . . Such coercion might be found, even where a "clean" waiver of rights is signed".

518. The Respondent's contention that CME voluntarily and of its own free will amended the basis for its investment is unsustainable. The (unlawful) situation of coercion is documented by the Media Council's above-cited reports and opinions to Parliament and, furthermore, in the Media Council's letter dated March 15, 1999 to Dr. Železný in his capacity as CEO of TV NOVA and as Executive Director of CET 21. In this letter, which was described by the Respondent as a letter containing the Council's general policy in respect to the relationship between a broadcasting operator and a service organization, the Chairman of the Media Council stated:

"I confirm the fulfilment of the Council's requirements that were a pre-condition for the termination of the proceedings on unauthorized broadcasting by the ČNTS company. "

"The Council terminated the administrative proceedings on unauthorized broadcasting, because most of the above-mentioned material characteristics of the operator were respected and documented, by CET 21. According to the report and documents submitted by CET 21, this cause was also confirmed by changes in the Memorandum of Association and its business contracts. "

519. The Media Council, also by this letter, gave an authentic interpretation of the reasons for initiating administrative proceedings against ČNTS. The purpose of the proceedings was to force ČNTS to release CET 21 from its contribution, the exclusive use of the broadcasting Licence. The Council's aim was to bring back the right of the use of the Licence to CET 21 which as the licence-holder, was, under the new Media Law in force since 1996, the only legal entity which the Council could control, whereas ČNTS, enjoying the exclusive use of the Licence under the 1993 split structure, could not be monitored and controlled any more by the Council, since Condition No. 17 of the 1993 Licence was to be cancelled under the new Media Law.
520. The Media Council violated the Treaty when dismantling the legal basis of the foreign investor's investments by forcing the foreign investor's joint venture company ČNTS to give up substantial accrued legal rights. The clear alternative available for the Media Council in this situation was to abstain from any pressure on CME/ČNTS and allow the foreign investor to maintain its investment on the basis of the legal structure which was developed jointly with the Media Council and which was the basis for the foreign investor's investment decision. Any consequences deriving from such coercion against the foreign investor and/or its investment company ČNTS must be remedied. The Respondent's contention that the change of the legal basis of the Claimant's investment was made voluntarily or was the result of a commercial dispute between CME and/or ČNTS and Dr. Železný is unsustainable and must be rejected.

521. It is speculation whether the Media Council would finally have exercised its powers to the full, or whether CME could have gained support through the Czech Republic's administrative and/or civil courts. A threat does not become legal upon the victim's surrender to the threat and the surrender cannot be deemed as a waiver of its legal rights. The possibility that the threatening State Authority would not exercise its powers or that law courts would grant sufficient relief do not qualify the victim's surrender as voluntary.
522. A reasonable investor, having invested financial funds deriving from public placements, such as the CME group, the parent group of which was listed on the New York Stock Exchange, cannot jeopardize the funds raised in the public financial markets by taking unforeseeable risks. The Respondent's suggestion that CME could have sorted out the problem with the Media Council, if any, in the law courts is therefore unacceptable.
523. The Respondent's further contention that the coercion in reality did not take place as the communication between CME and the Media Council was, to a large extent, channelled through Dr. Železný who followed his own target which was, to regain the usage of the licence for CET 21, of which he was majority shareholder, is unsustainable. Not a single document or witness statement proves that in 1996, Dr. Železný exploited the situation of being communicator between CET 21/ČNTS and the Media Council. On the contrary, more than one witness stated that, at that period of time, Dr. Železný acted as an honest representative of both corporations, pursuing the business interest solely of these corporations.
524. The Arbitral Tribunal is aware that coercion claims suffer significant practical difficulties as they may raise the suspicion that the Claimant has been playing a too clever game, first taking what he could get from the deal with the foreign government and then, coming for a second bite under the Treaty proceedings (see Professor Vagts as cited with similar concern on page 34). The Arbitral Tribunal is of the view that such danger does not exist in these arbitration proceedings.

525. Should the Claimant's joint venture company ČNTS receive a remedy through Czech Republic civil or administrative court proceedings, this may have an impact on the quantum of the damage claim. This issue however, must clearly be distinguished from the question whether the 1996 treatment of ČNTS and CME by the Media Council was a breach of the Treaty. The Arbitral Tribunal's response to this question is affirmative. The danger that the coercion claim under the Treaty in these arbitration proceedings will grant compensation in addition to ČNTS Civil Court claim (if granted), is not present, as the Parties instructed this Tribunal not to deal with the quantum at this stage of the arbitration proceedings.
526. Professor Vagts made the following suggestion for the elements of a code of unfair bargaining practices during investor-government negotiations (page 34 of Professor Vagts' publication as cited above) which, inter alia, prohibits a government from the following acts:

“Cancellation of the franchise, permit, or authorization to do business in which the investor relies, except in accordance with its terms; and Regulatory Action without bona fide governmental purpose (or without bona fide timing) designed to make the investor's business unprofitable.”

This seems to be a reasonable threshold which is passed by the Council's actions in this case.

527. The Respondents argument that a breach of the Treaty by coercion did not take place, because ČNTS' business under the amended 1996 MOA and the Service Agreement was even more profitable than before is unsustainable. The effect of the coercion was that CME lost its legal protection for the investment. It is not necessary that the economic disadvantage, as a consequence of the loss of legal protection, occurred immediately after the Media Council's intervention into the contractual relationship between CET 21 and ČNTS took place. Causation arises if the damage or disadvantage deriving from the deprivation of the legal safety of the investment is foreseeable and occurs in a normal sequence of events. The protection of rights in corporate life does not materialize before a commercial conflict arises. This may occur years later. The mere lapse of time does not diminish the Claimant's rights as a consequence of the Media Council's unlawful interference in ČNTS' basic legal right to operate TV NOVA on the basis of the exclusive use of the Licence. The negative effects of the loss of the legal security of the investment materialized and surfaced in 1999 which is roughly 30 months later. This is not a long time neither in corporate life nor in respect to a long-term investment in a TV station.

528. The Respondent's further contention is that the 1996 change of CME's investment protection is not a breach of the Treaty, as the 1993 investment protection, if construed in any legal action in accordance with Czech law, would not have been enforced by a court as the Media Law prohibited the transfer of the Licence under Article 10.2 of the Media Law. The Respondent's actions therefore, as Professor Lowe at the Stockholm hearing argued, did not violate any legal disposition.
529. This contention is unsustainable. The Media Council jointly with CEDC developed the investment scheme by creating the 1993 split structure which was thereafter also used by other broadcasters. CME and its predecessor as foreign investor could reasonably rely on this structure which was developed in close conjunction with and approved by the Media Council.
530. Whether a Czech National Court would support and defend this structure is not dispositive. The Media Council was obligated to defend and secure this structure, after having attracted foreign investment on the basis of it. This placed the obligation on the Media Council not to interfere with the legal foundation of the Claimant's predecessor's investment.
531. The Respondent's position, also submitted by Professor Lowe at the Stockholm hearing, that CET 21, by law, was always in the position to use and exploit the Licence itself, is in clear contradiction to the MOA, under which CET 21 contributed the exclusive use of the Licence to ČNTS. The legality or non-legality of the 1993 split structure is not at stake. At stake is the protection of the structure and the Council's obligation not to undermine this structure by pressing the investor to give up basic rights which secured his investment.

532. The Respondent's further contention submitted by Professor Lowe that the efficiency of the 1996 arrangement has never been tested is not convincing. The lack of efficiency of the 1996 arrangement was seriously displayed in civil law court proceedings. The Regional Commercial Court protected the validity of the Service Agreement after it was terminated by CET 21 on questionable grounds. The first instance judgment was however overturned by the Appellate Court by a highly unconvincing judgment, leaving the final decision to the Czech Supreme Court. This unacceptable legal and commercial risk of prolonged legal battles was exactly what CEDC as foreign investor tried to avoid, when making its investment decisions in 1996. Such risk for the investor's investment is unacceptable and demonstrates the inadequacy of the 1996 arrangements (in contrast to Professor Lowe's submissions).
533. The Czech Republic and/or the Media Council are as a matter of principle not debarred from amending or altering the basis for CME's investment, subject to acquired rights and treaty obligations. This is a question of the Czech Republic's national sovereignty. However, any such action should have been done under due process of law, providing just compensation to the deprived investor (Art. 5 of the Treaty). The silent and coerced vitiation of CME's basis for its investment does not fulfil such a requirement and is, therefore, under the standards of the Treaty, and the rules of international law, a breach of treaty obligations.
534. The Respondent's further contention that ČNTS could have avoided the pressure from administrative proceedings: it only had "to stop breaking the law", is unsustainable. The Arbitral Tribunal cannot identify a breach of law by ČNTS, having scrutinized the documents submitted in these proceedings and the witness statements made, as well as the testimony of witnesses.
535. The Respondent's contention that CET 21 / ČNTS improperly implemented the 1993 legal arrangements is not supported either by documents or by witness statements. On the contrary, as shown in detail above and also later in this Award, administrative proceedings were initiated not to enforce the proper implementation of the 1993 legal arrangements but to undo these arrangements. Otherwise, the Media Council could have requested a change of the implementation without requesting the change of the MOA and without requesting the implementation of the new Service Agreement. This was not the case. The Media Council requested a complete change of the basic legal protection of CME's investment by substituting for "the use of the licence" contributed by CET 21 to ČNTS the (useless) use of know-how of the licence.

536. Therefore, the final argument of the Respondent at the Stockholm hearing, in particular alleging the "hand-over of the reins from CET 21 to ČNTS", is not convincing. The reins were not handed over by CET 21 to ČNTS in the years 1993 to 1996. The legal basis for the investment was not changed before 1996. The implementation of the 1993 legal arrangements conformed to the legal documents of its formation.
537. The legal arrangements between CET 21 and ČNTS were implemented in accordance with the wording and the intentions of the Parties, including the Media Council, which co-designed and approved the structure in 1993.
538. The Media Council, acting on behalf of the Czech Republic, in 1996 breached the Treaty by coercing CME and ČNTS into giving up legal security for CME's investment in the Czech Republic.

(3) The Media Council supports the destruction of CME's investment

539. In 1999, the Media Council actively supported the destruction of CME's investment in ČNTS. This conclusion is based predominantly on the documents submitted to the Arbitral Tribunal and by the statements of the witnesses. According to the minutes of the Council Meeting of March 2, 1999, Dr. Železný, at that time CEO of TV NOVA (ČNTS) and Executive Director of CET 21, visited the Media Council on the so-called "Visitation Day". According to the minutes, the reasons for the visit were "the current relationships with the foreign investor, current internal situation of the investor". Dr. Železný informed the Council about purported financial difficulties of ČNTS' 99 % shareholder CME (1 % shareholding by CET 21). Dr. Železný informed the Council about the conflict between CET 21 (Dr. Železný having a majority of 60 % shareholding in this company at that time) and ČNTS and that CET 21 had set a deadline for CME for changing the MOA. Otherwise, CET 21 would sell its 1 % share in ČNTS and withdraw the broadcasting Licence from ČNTS, unless ČNTS were prepared to enter in a new set of agreements "on the sale of advertisements, technology operations and technology support". If CME would not accept this solution by March 20, CET 21 will enforce this "clean alternative". Dr. Železný, in his capacity as Executive Director and shareholder of CET 21, requested the support of the Council against ČNTS, in spite of being the CEO of this company as well:

"CET 21 would like to ask the Council to repeat some statements of the Council (exclusivity, withdrawal of the Licence) in relation to all steps within the logic of the development of the relationships between CET 21 and the Council. If and when harming the interests of ČNTS, Železný will need to be supported by a formal or informal letter. They are interested in a long-term stability, also in connection with a re-granting of the Licence. They ask the Council, whether it would be willing to remind of the principles which it had discussed with NOVA during various administrative proceedings and other negotiations".

540. Dr. Železný further gave details for the contemplated new legal structure which he was going to impose on ČNTS.

"It is a shift from a general [Service] Agreement to 5 specific agreements. The only exception - exclusivity in case of re-granting of the Licence. Železný asks for a letter redefining the general principles on the basis of which a package of sufficiently specific agreements could be proposed to the partners. If the Council decides that such letter is not suitable, because it would pre-conceive some formulations of the act, Železný will solve the situation. He would need as one of the documents a relevant document with a new date, the partners consider it more convenient not to reflect to it and not to risk a criminal recourse for not having reported correctly on changes (amendment) . . . "

541. In the further discussions, the Council suggested to Dr. Železný to put concrete questions to the Council. Further, the minutes say:

"We have a common interest. It is not a problem for Železný to formulate the questions. The current version of the agreement will be attached. They are willing to hand-over the agreements which have been prepared in order to make the matter more transparent. "

542. On the next day, on March 3, 1999, Dr. Železný, under the letterhead of CET 21, sent the questionnaire to the Council. The letter spelled out that the communication between the Council and Dr. Železný should not be disclosed:

"It is extremely important for us to receive the formulated principles in the form of an independent report of the Council as a reply to our request. We would like to use this opinion for discussions with our contractual partners, without disclosing other internal matters of our company . . . "

"We consider this type of co-operation with the regulatory body, in the form of a preliminary inquiry and professional consultation, to be very suitable, and we would like to apply it in the future as well . . . "

543. Further, Dr. Železný offered (as promised) to supply to the Council the new set of contracts to be implemented for the future co-operation with ČNTS. Further, Dr. Železný asked for the confirmation of his principles:

"These are formulations of general principles, on which we want to base our activities. We ask you to confirm their validity in the form of the Council's opinion:

"CET 21 will act, function and proceed as an operator, and, therefore, it has to carry out relevant managerial, administrative, and accounting tasks, and must build up its own company structure to include functions that cannot be transferred to service organizations. Employees responsible for programming and programme composition must be persons appointed or authorized directly by the CET 21 company.

Relations between the operator of broadcasting and its service must be established on a non-exclusive basis, because exclusive relations between the licence-holder and the service organization may encourage the transfer of some functions and rights that are dependent on the Licence and that are not transferable by law. In our opinion, CET 21, the operator, should order services from service organizations at regular prices so as to respect rules of equal competition. The selection of services should be decided by the licensed company independently, so that services are in ac- cordance with the profile of the television station stipulated in the Licence and the quality of the services meet the requirements of the licensed company, For the level of provided services to agree with the terms of the Licence and Czech regulatory requirements, the licensed subject must have the ability to select relevant services anytime and anywhere at will which consideration ensues from the responsibility to operate television broadcasting.

Because the broadcasting time reserved for advertisements is by law a direct function of the Licence, and broadcasting business activity is registered by the operator only, revenues from advertisements that result from the sale of broadcasting time must be revenues of CET 21, from which proportional profit is reported and properly taxed in accordance with the Commercial Code. The accounting methodology for the company should be adapted to this fact. Of course, the right of the CET 21 company to pay fees for services ordered by CET 21 is not affected by this fact.

CET 21 will unequivocally decide on the composition of broadcasting, on programming and allotted time slots and genre, on the ratio of domestically produced and foreign programmes, and on questions of journalistic independence, objectivity, and balance in news reporting. The right to use programme Licences and copyrights in the form of broadcasting is exclusively within the scope of the operator who, for this purpose, must acquire Licences and rights from servicing organizations or directly from the owners of such rights and Licences. "

544. The Council responded to this letter on March 15, 1999 by a letter signed by the Chairman of the Council, Josef Josefik, on the Council's official letterhead. The Council confirmed the "general principles" by six bullet points which, in essence, repeat (to some extent word by word) the proposal of Dr. Železný, the main difference being that the Council generalized the principles by replacing "CET 21" by "operator" or "licence-holder". In essence, the contents of the bullet points and the "general principles" as proposed by Dr. Železný are identical:

"In regard to the preparation of the Annual Activity Report of the Council for Radio and Television Broadcasting, the Council also dealt with the current status of private television broadcasting.

I refer to your personal visit to the Council during which you informed us about the current situation in broadcasting and I confirm the fulfilment of the Council's requirements that were a precondition for termination of the proceedings on unauthorized broadcasting by the ČNTS company.

Because the Council was also asked by the Parliamentary Media Committee to issue an opinion on whether commercial television broadcasting complies with the Act on Broadcasting and valid Li- cences, we would like to summarize requirements that, in our opinion, express the contents of television broadcasting:

An operator operates, functions and acts as an operator, i.e. carries out relevant administrative, and accounting tasks. Employees responsible for programming and composition of programmes are persons employed and appointed (authorized) directly by the licence-holder;

Business relations between the operator of broadcasting and service organizations are built on a non-exclusive basis. Exclusive relations between the operator and the service organization may result in de facto transfer of some functions and rights pertaining to the operator of broadcasting and, in effect, a transfer of the licence;

The operator is fully responsible for the structure and composition of programme and carries full editorial responsibility. The operator broadcasts programme in its own and on its own account and responsibility. The operator, therefore, must unequivocally decide on the content of broadcasting, its time and genre composition, and the ratio between domestic and foreign programmes;

- The operator concludes contracts in its own name with protection organizations for authors and performing artists.

The redemption of programme rights and copyright in the form of broadcasting shall be from the exclusively by the operator. For that purpose, the operator is obliged to obtain Licences and rights from commission organizations or directly from their owners;

- The operator concludes contracts in its own name with organizations providing technical transmission of television signals;

Revenue from advertising is the result of the sale of advertising time which is directly connected to the Licence; therefore, it must be reported and taxed by the entity performing the actual fulfilment [Translator's Note: broadcasting the commercials], i.e., the operator. (Of course, it is permitted with respect to this area of business that the operator concludes a contract with an agency which will purchase the advertisement for the operator).

The Council terminated the administrative proceedings on unauthorized broadcasting because most of the above-mentioned material characteristics of the operator were respected and documented, by CET 21 s.r.o. According to the report and documents submitted by CET 21, this course was also confirmed by changes in the Memorandum of Association and its business contracts,

We ask you to inform us about the current status of the implementation of the above-mentioned procedures and to document the manner of the actual implementation of the above-mentioned points in the current wording of the Memorandum of Association and related business contracts concluded by the operator of broadcasting, CET 21, s.r.o.

The Council inspects the current status of private television broadcasting and monitors whether the broadcasting of commercial television stations complies with the Act on Broadcasting and whether these stations broadcast on basis of valid Licences.

Therefore, we ask you to submit the current programme composition and broadcasting schedule, in accordance with the Licence terms.

*[illegible signature]
Josef Josefík*

545. The Parties' interpretation of the March 15, 1999 letter differs. While the Claimant is of the opinion that the letter is a Treaty violation, the Respondent's view is that the letter expressed the Council's general policy, not binding in the specific situation of ČNTS. The witness Josef Josefík, at that time Chairman of the Council, interpreted the letter as a recommendation and the witness Musil said that the letter reflected the Council's model, the Council's policy and that this letter was used as a model by the Council.
546. The Arbitral Tribunal's assessment is that the letter cannot be interpreted without taking the circumstances into consideration. The letter was addressed and sent to Dr. Železný in both of his capacities: as CEO of TV NOVA and as Executive Director of CET 21. The letter stated general principles of the current status of private television broadcasting and, in this letter, the Council summarized "requirements that, in our opinion, express the contents of television broadcasting." The principles summarized under six bullet points are, therefore, not recommendations. The Council summarizes "requirements". Specifically addressed to CET 21 and TV NOVA, the Council requested TV NOVA and CET 21 "to inform the Council about the current status of the implementation of the above-mentioned procedures and to document the manner of the actual implementation of the above-mentioned points in the current wording of the Memorandum of Association and related business contracts concluded by the operator of broadcasting, CET 21."
547. This letter, therefore, as its clear wording demonstrates, is not just the expression of the Council's general policy. It is directly addressed to ČNTS and CET 21 and deals with their specific contractual situation.

Moreover, the Council stated that “it terminated the administrative proceedings on unauthorized broadcasting because most of the above-mentioned material characteristics of the operator were respected and documented by CET 21. According to the report and documents submitted by CET 21, this course was also confirmed by changes in the Memorandum of Association and its business contracts”.

548. A neutral reader of this letter must interpret this letter as a clear request by the Council to CET 21 and ČNTS to comply with all of the “requirements” because the 1996/1997 contractual changes had fulfilled most but not all of the “characteristics”. The reference to administrative proceedings was a clear warning by the regulator about possible consequences, should CET 21 and ČNTS not comply with the “characteristics” or “requirements”.
549. The “characteristics” or “requirements” in the six bullet points substantially deviate from the 1993 legal concept (the above so-called 1993 split structure) and further, they also substantially deviate from the 1996/1997 required amendment of the legal structure between CET 21 and ČNTS. The first bullet point stipulates that the licence-holder has to carry out relevant administrative and accounting tasks. The second bullet point stipulates that the business relations between the operator of broadcasting and service organizations are built on a non-exclusive basis (which was in clear contrast to the exclusive Service Agreement between CET 21 and ČNTS) and, the sixth bullet point stipulates that revenues from advertising must be reported and taxed by the entity performing the actual fulfilment, i.e. the operator (in the meaning of the licence-holder).
550. This letter of the broadcasting regulator was a further blow to the already fragile 1996/1997 contractual basis of CME’s investment (the exclusive use of the know-how of the Licence as stipulated in the MOA and the exclusive Service Agreement). It was a clear interference by the Council with the 1996/1997 structure as implemented under the pressure of the Council by ČNTS being forced to enter into the Service Agreement and agree on the amendment of the MOA. It was a serious interference, as it contained the Regulator’s threat to enforce the requested changes, referring to the administrative proceedings for unlawful broadcasting by ČNTS. The waiver of exclusivity would clearly destroy the legal basis for CME's investment in the Czech Republic.

551. This interference by the Media Council in the economic and legal basis of CME's investment carries the stigma of a Treaty violation. The Media Council was obviously working hand-in-hand with Dr. Železný when supporting Dr. Železný in his attack upon CME's already fragile basis for CME's investment in ČNTS. The March 15, 1999 letter refers to the personal visit of Dr. Železný to the Media Council. It, however, conceals Dr. Železný's letter dated March 3, 1999 which provided the wording for the bullet points. As the witness Mr. Klinkhammer stated, the letter of March 3 was found in Dr. Železný's papers by the company's auditors after Dr. Železný was dismissed later in the year. The March 3, 1999 letter was not seen by Mr. Klinkhammer, CME's representative in the Czech Republic, when it was communicated. The Respondent's witnesses (including Mr. Josefík and Mr. Musil) could offer no explanation for the failure of the Council's letter of March 15 to refer to Dr. Železný's letter of March 3, despite the former letter in fact being a reply to the latter.
552. Dr. Železný, at the meeting with the Media Council on March 2, 1999 openly disclosed to the Council that the purpose of the requested intervention by the Council was "to harm ČNTS". Dr. Železný further openly discussed with the Council his conflict of interest ("Dr. Železný - I am sitting on two chairs which move off one from the other"). The Media Council, the Czech Republic's broadcasting regulator, at the Council Meeting on March 2, 1999, when dealing with the topic "the current relationship with the foreign investor", did not abstain from actively supporting Dr. Železný who clearly and openly violated his duties as CEO of ČNTS, the joint venture company, the beneficiary of the foreign investor's investment. This unconcealed violation by Dr. Železný of his duties under corporate and civil law cannot be seen as a harmless commercial difference between the majority shareholder and Executive Director of CET 21 on one side and the service company ČNTS on the other side. It is a massive, clear and intentional breach by Dr. Železný of his director's duties, a breach of law that must be assessed as a serious criminal offence in any functioning judicial system.

553. The minutes of the March 2, 1999 Council Meeting which disclosed the foregoing facts are from the Media Council's files, remitted to the Arbitral Tribunal by its Order at the request of the Claimant. The parties are in agreement on the translation submitted to the Arbitral Tribunal. The parties disagree on the interpretation, but they do not dispute the wording of the minutes. This wording is consistent with the witness statements, according to which written minutes were in conformity with the facts or speeches of what was heard at the Council Meeting.
554. The Arbitral Tribunal's conclusion is that the sole purpose of the March 15, 1999 letter was to support Dr. Železný in putting pressure on the foreign investor CME in order to achieve a re-arrangement of the contractual relations between CET 21 and ČNTS as desired by Dr. Železný, an arrangement that would destroy the legal basis (the safety net) of the foreign investor's investment. There was no other purpose. In particular, there was no serious follow-up to this letter. In response to the specific question by the Tribunal at the Stockholm hearing, Mr. Josefík stated that he could not recall off the top of his head that the Council had received a response to the part of the letter that asked CET 21 to inform the Council about the current status of the implementation of the requirements. On the face of it and quite obviously, the Media Council did not pursue any regulatory purpose with the letter. The only object was to put the letter with the agreed wording into Dr. Železný's hands, the purpose of which was clearly described by Dr. Železný to the Media Council at the Council meeting on March 2, 1999, which was "harming the interest of ČNTS".
555. The March 15, 1999 letter was not a private matter of the Council's Chairman. According to Mr. Josefík, the letter was drafted in a standard procedure, cleared through individual departments and then presented to the Council. The letter referred to Dr. Železný's visit at the Council Meeting on March 2, 1999, but did not reveal that the bullet points were prepared by Dr. Železný in his letter of March 3, 1999. The March 15, 1999 letter, a regulatory letter of the broadcasting regulator, was fabricated in collusion between Dr. Železný and the Media Council behind the back of ČNTS (TV NOVA) to give CET 21 a tool to undermine the legal foundation of CME's investment.

556. The Respondent's view, supported by Mr. Josefík, according to which the Council did not intend to support Dr. Železný in his dispute with CME, is not convincing. The clear facts and circumstances speak against it. In this context, the Arbitral Tribunal is constrained to observe again that Mr. Josefík showed a selective memory. Specifically questioned on his personal contacts with Dr. Železný in 1999, he responded on page 48 of the Stockholm hearing outprint of day 7: "However, I do not recall that I had any other talk than a courtesy talk". When further interrogated as whether he talked to Dr. Železný over the telephone in 1999, he admitted that telephone conversations took place about the relationship between CET 21 and ČNTS, Dr. Železný carrying on a monologue on the subject. "However, I do not recall any specific topic." The witness Mr. Josefík was vague in recollecting these communications, whereas in respect to other details of the March 15, 1999 letter, his recollection was precise and clear.
557. The Arbitral Tribunal's impression was that Mr. Josefík's witness statements were coloured voluntarily or involuntarily by his desire not to qualify the Media Council's actions as a breach of the Treaty, taking into account that Mr. Josefík prepared his written witness statements at a time when he was still holding the position of the Chairman of the Council.
558. The Tribunal, therefore, is of the opinion that the Respondent's witness' statements and the Respondent's suggestions for the interpretation of the minutes of March 2, and the March 3 and the March 15, 1999 letters do not overturn the plain wording of these documents which speak for themselves. The Czech Republic, acting through its broadcasting regulator, the Media Council, massively supported Dr. Železný in his efforts to destroy CME's investment in the Czech Republic by eliminating ČNTS as the exclusive service provider for CET 21.

(4) ČNTS' dismantling as exclusive service provider supported by Council's actions and inactions

559. With the Media Council' letter of March 15, 1999 in his hands, Dr. Železný fulfilled the threats of his ultimatum which he had given to CME at the meeting of the Board of Representatives of ČNTS on February 24, 1999. At this meeting, Dr. Železný had requested a change of the Service Agreement by eliminating exclusivity. Otherwise, he threatened, he would change the contractual relation between CET 21 and ČNTS unilaterally. In that case, Dr. Železný announced, CET 21 will hire another advertising agency for the sale of the advertisement time and procure broadcasting services from other providers on the basis that the Service Agreement between CET 21 and ČNTS was not exclusive. This was, de facto, the withdrawal of the use of the Licence, what Dr. Železný later at his visit at the Media Council, according to the minutes of this meeting, described as “the clean alternative”.

560. Dr. Železný, at the Board Meeting, further announced that "the Council wants to change its original decision and to write a letter with the statement that the present relationship between CET 21 and ČNTS is not correct". In particular, due to the announcement of this yet-to-be-written letter of the Media Council, it is obvious that, in contrast to the Council's chairman Mr. Josefík's rather vague and evasive oral witness statement at the Stockholm hearing, Dr. Železný had prepared his ultimatum and the implementation of his threats in communications with the Council, which communications were confirmed by Mr. Josefík (who denied any talk of substance) and which communications are also confirmed by Mr. Klinkhammer's witness statement, according to which Dr. Železný in this critical period, as revealed by company telephone charges, made numbers of telephone calls on the ČNTS mobile phone to the Council.
561. The witness Mr. Klinkhammer, who took over as a Chief Executive of CME on March 23, 1999, stated that CME made substantial efforts to prevent the dismantling of ČNTS by Dr. Železný by making various commercial approaches to bring to him such as merging CET21 and ČNTS in order to retain the use of the licence for the joint venture company. The witness stated that, as part of these efforts, CME and/or its ultimate shareholder Mr. Lauder, offered to pay to Dr. Železný up to US $ 200 million in order to find a suitable arrangement securing the continued exclusive use of the Licence which was the basis for the investment of CME in the Czech Republic. These efforts failed and it appears obvious that Dr. Železný had gained the Media Council's legal support for CET 21's view that the Service Agreement was not exclusive. This legal position of the Regulator provided the basis for Dr. Železný to dismantle the Service Agreement relationship and take over TV NOVA without compensating the foreign investor CME.

562. According to Mr. Klinkhammer's witness statement, ČNTS' majority shareholder CME at the shareholder's meeting on April 19, 1999 dismissed Dr. Železný as CEO of ČNTS after having confronted Dr. Železný with documents proving that CET 21 through Dr. Železný's actions already had breached the exclusive Service Agreement with ČNTS, inter alia submitting a letter which Dr. Železný had written announcing that ČNTS had been withdrawn from the business of programme acquisition and that this would now be handled by a company AQS, a clear breach of the Service Agreement.
563. Dr. Železný's breach of contract was strongly supported by the Council's letter dated March 15, 1999. This view is supported by the further sequence of events as derived from the documents and confirmed inter alia by the witness Mr. Klinkhammer. Mr. Klinkhammer, as representative of CME, appeared in front of the Council in April 1999 and gave a two-hour presentation on CME's/ČNTS' factual and legal position as basis for CME's investment. Mr. Klinkhammer explained the events that led to Dr. Železný's dismissal. This presentation, according to Mr. Klinkhammer, made the situation abundantly clear for the Media Council. CME made the clear statements about CME's/ČNTS's conviction and intent to continue to operate within the broadcasting and all other laws of the Czech Republic and all regulations imposed on ČNTS, the MOA and the Service Agreement of 1997. CME, also according to Mr. Klinkhammer, put the Council on notice that CME thought that the Council's action of March 15, 1999 "had confiscated at least a portion of our investment in the Czech Republic".
564. At the latest at this point of time the Media Council, the broadcasting regulator in the Czech Republic, must have clearly understood the consequences of its interference in the legal relations between ČNTS as service provider and CET 21 as licence-holder. The Council, at the latest at this point of time, could have clarified the legal situation and remedied its interference by recalling its letter of March 15, 1999.

565. The Council did not respond to CME's two-hour-presentation which, according to Mr. Klinkhammer, was accompanied by a written communication which was handed over, after the presentation was finished.
566. By letter dated June 24, 1999, signed by both its new executive and general director and its lawyer, ČNTS repeated its position to the Media Council with copies to the Vice-Chairman of the Permanent Media Committee of the House of Representatives of the Parliament of the Czech Republic, to the Vice-Chairwoman of the same Committee and with copies to three Vice-Chairpersons of the Media Council. ČNTS, again, described the legal basis for CME's investment in the Czech Republic in 1993 which was amended in 1996 as approved and adopted by the Council in 1997. ČNTS referred to the exclusivity of the legal arrangement and described Dr. Železný's breaches of CET 21's obligations under the various agreements, in particular under the MOA and the Service Agreement. ČNTS requested the Media Council to explain its legal position in respect of the legal structure of the inter-relation between CET 21 and ČNTS and CME or "to take measures which would resolve the current dispute between CET 21, ČNTS and CME in connection with the legal structure of these relationships and prevent their violation on the part of CET 21 and Dr. Vladimír Železný".
567. The Media Council disregarded CME's and ČNTS' request for clarification of the legal situation and abstained from any action or intervention, thus tolerating CET 21's breach of contract, supported by and based on the Council's March 15, 1999 letter.
568. By letter of July 13, 1999 ČNTS, again, requested the Council's evaluation of the exclusivity of the relationship between CET 21 and ČNTS. ČNTS, in full detail, referred to the history of the contractual relation, the Council's involvement and the inter-relation between the exclusive Service Agreement and the foregoing agreements between the contractual parties, as the basis for the Claimant's investment in the Czech Republic.
569. ČNTS concluded its request as follows:

"We hope the above specified facts ... will help to evaluate the legal relationship between ČNTS and CET 21 impartially, and thus to conclude that the relationship between ČNTS and CET 21 is an exclusive relationship which was as such established, construed, and, up until the creation of the dispute with Dr. Železný, as such respected by all participated physical and legal entities and by concrete legal acts was being fulfilled”.

570. The Media Council did not reverse its unlawful interference. On the contrary, the Tribunal increased its pressure on ČNTS. In a response letter dated July 26, 1999, the Council referred to a legal opinion which the Council had prepared at request of the Permanent Commission for Media of the Parliament on the dispute between ČNTS and CET 21 with special regard to disputed matters regarding the exclusivity of agreements between ČNTS and CET 21, and which the Council provided to the Parliament on the same day. The Council attached an excerpt of this opinion to the letter to ČNTS requesting ČNTS “to stop immediate/y your media campaigns in connection with a trade dispute and to inform the Czech Media Council by August 15, 1999 on new steps that shall minimize the risks mentioned and shall lead to a final settlement of the dispute in compliance with the applicable laws”.
571. The legal opinion submitted to the Parliament referred to the “risk of a breach of the Media Law taking the position that as long as the dispute did not deviate from its commercial nature, the Council had no legal reason or right to interfere in it.” The Media Council neither addressed the issue of the non-exclusivity of the Service Agreement nor did it revoke its letter of March 15, 1999.
572. This non-response and inaction by the Media Council aggravated the deterioration of CME’s legal basis for its investment in the Czech Republic by reiterating and further supporting the elimination of the contractual exclusivity of the Service Agreement, the (already fragile) basis for the protection of CME’s investment in the Czech Republic. In August 1999 and thereafter, the Media Council, although recurrently informed by ČNTS and CET 21 of Dr. Železný’s further acts to dismantle ČNTS’ legal and factual position as exclusive service provider to CET 21 (including the termination of the Service Agreement on August 5, 1999), disregarded ČNTS’ request to protect the legal arrangement which was the basis for CME’s investment in the Czech Republic.

573. The Media Council, after having coerced the 1996/1997 change in the legal basis for CME's investment and after having further jeopardized in conjunction with Dr. Železný the (already) fragile legal arrangements between ČNTS and CET 21 by the Council's letter dated March 15, 1999, was obligated to re-establish and secure the legal protection for CME's investment. As a minimum measure to clarify the legal uncertainty for the Claimant's investment (caused by Council's acts), the Council should have recalled its collusive March 15, 1999 letter by confirming the exclusive service relation between CET 21 and ČNTS. The Council, in its capacity as broadcasting regulator, was bound to have abstained from supporting the dismantling of CME's investment by Dr. Železný.
574. After the Council by its acts had jeopardized the legal basis of CME's investment, it was not sufficient for it to keep silent and abstain from any regulatory clarification of the legal situation when, beginning in July 1999 and thereafter, Dr. Železný and CET 21 exploited the vitiation of the legal protection of CME's investment by eliminating ČNTS as exclusive service provider, which was the basis of CME's investment in the Czech Republic.

(5) Causation of damage by Council's actions and omissions

575. The collapse of CME's investment was caused by the Media Council's coercion against CME, in requiring in 1996 the amendment of the legal structure as the basis of its investment and by aggravating the Media Council's interference with the legal relationship between CET 21 and ČNTS by issuing an official regulator's letter which eliminated the exclusivity of the Service Agreement, an exclusivity that was the cornerstone of CME's legal protection for its investment. The destruction of CME's investment after the termination of the Service Agreement on August 5, 1999 was the consequence of the Media Council's actions and inactions. The legal disputes, proceedings and actions between CET 21, ČNTS and CME thereafter do not affect the qualification of these actions and omissions as breach of the Treaty.
576. The key question of these arbitration proceedings, whether the Council by coercion forced CME to give up its legal "safety net" in 1996, is to a large extent answered by the Council's own interpretation of the sequence of events. In contrast to the Respondent's submission in these arbitration proceedings (according to which CME 1996 voluntarily agreed on the change of ČNTS' Memorandum of Association and on the implementation of the Service Agreement), the Media Council's own description of the events is probative. In the Report of the Council for the Czech Parliament of September 1999, the Council made it abundantly clear that the Council was successfully requiring CME to change the MOA by threatening it with administrative proceedings. In respect to the exclusivity of the use of the Licence, which was a cornerstone for the protection of the Claimant's investment in the Czech Republic, the Council reported to the Parliament as follows:

"Each party has its own version of the heart of the issue based on a different interpretation of concluded agreements. CME insists on exclusivity and claims that CET 21 is obliged to broadcast exclusivity through ČNTS whereas CET 21 denies exclusivity and claims its right to conclude service agreements with any companies it pleases. As in the past, the Council's position in this matter is close to the opinion that an exclusive relationship between the licence-holder and a service company is not desirable as it gives an opportunity to manipulate with the licence. However, in this dispute the Council will not provide interpretation of relevant provisions of agreements concluded between the two parties of the dispute as it is not its authority from the nature of matters. The Council can only state that results of past administrative proceedings, when the Council made the licence-holder to remedy certain legal faults in the Memorandum of Association and to adhere to laws, are currently showing in this matter".

577. This is a very modest description of the Regulator's pressure put on CME/ČNTS in order to change the legal basis for the co-operation between CET 21 and ČNTS, now describing this as "the remedy of certain legal fault" in the MOA which, in 1993, the Council (at that time composed of other Council members) had jointly developed and implemented in order to attract the investment and support of the foreign investor CEDC.
578. Also, the oral report of the Chairman of the Council, Mr. Josefík, at the meeting of the Standing Committee for Mass Media of the Parliament of September 30, 1999, as reported by the minutes of the meeting, explained the background for the Council's reversal of its legal position in respect to the 1993 split structure, taking the ex-post-view that the 1993 structure was the illegal transfer of the licence to ČNTS:

“The arrangement between the service organization and the operator was quite unclear from the very beginning, and the Council was criticized for insufficient control of whether, for example, the licence was being transferred from the licensed entity to the ČNTS company. In May 1994 the Council was recalled precisely because, in the opinion of the House of Representatives, it had accepted a situation in which the provisions of the Act on Broadcasting were constantly violated in the case of the operation of nation-wide broadcasting by a subject that was not authorized to perform such activity. Therefore it tolerated the illegal transfer of the licence to ČNTS.

Then came a period in which the Council, in its new composition, made a very intensive effort to achieve clear relationships between the service organization and the operating company which would be in compliance with the Act on Broadcasting. After an unsuccessful attempt to delete an activity entered in the Commercial Register for the ČNTS company, the Council initiated an administrative proceeding concerning violation of the Act on Broadcasting by this company’s unauthorized broadcasting. . . . [in the following Mr. Josefík dealt with the new Media Law of 1996.] ...however, it then proceeded with administrative proceedings concerning unauthorized broadcasting and terminated them only when the operator, CET 21, proved that the broadcasts were in compliance with the law. These changes were also reflected in the Memorandum of Association and the modification of relationships between CET and ČNTS”.

579. The Respondent’s position in these arbitration proceedings, according to which the original 1993 split structure did not violate the Media Law, that (only) its implementation was unlawful and (further) that, in 1996, CME/ČNTS voluntarily agreed to change the MOA is unsustainable, in the light of the Media Council’s and its Chairman’s own reports to the parliament. The Media Council required CME to give up its legal protection for its investment and aggravated its so doing by interfering in conjunction with Dr. Železný into the contractual relationship between CET 21 and ČNTS in 1999. These acts caused the complete destruction of CME’s investment in the Czech Republic, ČNTS holding now idle assets without a business operation after Dr. Železný and his company CET 21 established new service providers for TV NOVA.

580. The Respondent further argued that no harm would have come to CME's investment without the actions of Dr. Železný; hence, the Media Council and the Czech State are absolved of responsibility for the fate of CME's investment. This argument fails under the accepted standards of international law. As the United Nations International Law Commission in its Commentary on State responsibility recognizes, a State may be held responsible for injury to an alien investor where it is not the sole cause of the injury; the State is not absolved because of the participation of other tortfeasors in the infliction of the injury (Articles on the Responsibility of States for Internationally Wrongful Acts, adopted on second reading by the United Nations International Law Commission, 9 August 2001, Article 31, "Reparation", Commentary, paragraphs 9-10, 12-13).

581. This approach is consistent with the way in which the liability of joint tortfeasors is generally dealt with in international law and State practice:

"It is the very general rule that if a tortfeasor's behaviour is held to be a cause of the victim's harm, the tortfeasor is liable to pay for all of the harm so caused, notwithstanding that there was a concurrent cause of that harm and that another is responsible for that cause ... . In other words, the liability of a tortfeasor is not affected vis-à-vis the victim by the consideration that another is concurrently liable" (J.A. Weir, "Complex Liabilities", in A. Tunc (ed.), International Encyclopedia of Comparative Law. (Tubingen, Mohr, 1983), vol. XI., p. 41).

582. The Media Council's actions in 1996 interfered with CME's investment by depriving ČNTS's broadcasting operations of their exclusive use of the broadcasting licence, which was contributed by CET 21 to ČNTS as a corporate contribution. This interference with ČNTS' business and the Media Council's actions and omissions in 1999 must be characterized similar to actions in tort. The Tribunal therefore is of the view that the above described principles apply in this case. CME as aggrieved Claimant may sue the Respondent in this arbitration and it may sue Dr. Železný in separate proceedings, if judicial protection is available under Czech or other national laws. In this arbitration the Claimant's claim is not reduced by the Claimant's and/or ČNTS's possible claims to be pursued against Dr. Železný in other courts or arbitration proceedings, although the Claimant may collect from the Respondent and any other potential tortfeasor only the full amount of its damage. This question is not dealt with in this Partial Award, It could be decided when deciding on the quantum of the Claimant's claim or by national courts when dealing with the enforcement of an award or judgment, which adjudicates the recovery for the same damage.

583. The U.N. International Law Commission observed that sometimes several factors combine to cause damage. The Commission in its Commentary referred to various cases, in which the injury was effectively caused by a combination of factors, only one of which was to be ascribed to the responsible State. International practice and the decisions of international tribunals do not support the reduction or attenuation of reparation of concurrent causes, except in cases of contributory fault. The U.N. International Law Commission referred in particular to the Corfu Channel case, according to which the United Kingdom recovered the full amount of its claim against Albania based on the latter's wrongful failure to warn of mines at the Albanian Coast, even though Albania had not itself laid the mines (see Corfu Channel, Assessment of the Amount of Compensation, I.C.J. Reports 1949, p. 244 at p. 350). "Such a result should follow a fortiori in cases, where the concurrent cause is not the act of another State (which might be held separately responsible) but of private individuals", (UN International Law Commission as cited). The U.N. International Law Commission further stated:

"It is true that cases can occur where an identifiable element of injury can properly be allocated to one of several concurrently operating causes alone. But unless some part of the injury can be shown to be severable in causal terms from that attributed to the responsible State, the latter is held responsible for all the consequences, not being too remote, of its wrongful conduct."

584. Various terms are used for such allocation of injury under international law.

"The allocation of injury or loss to a wrongful act is, in principle, a legal and not only a historical or causal process. Various terms are used to describe the link which must exist between the wrongful act and the injury in order for the obligation of reparation to arise. For example, reference may be made to losses "attributable [to the wrongful act] as a proximate cause", or to damage which is "too indirect, remote, and uncertain to be appraised."

"In some cases, the criterion of "directness" may be used, in others "foreseeability" or "proximity". But other factors may also be relevant: for example, whether State organs deliberately caused the harm in question or whether the harm caused was within the ambit of the rule which was breached, having regard to the purpose of that rule (see U.N. international Law Commission with further extensive citations).

585. Pursuant to these standards, the allocation of injury or loss suffered by CME to the Media Council's acts and omissions is appropriate. The Media Council, when coercing ČNTS in 1996 to amend its MOA and to implement the Service Agreement must have understood the foreseeable consequences of its actions, depriving CME of the legal "safety net" for its investment in the Czech Republic. Also in 1999 the Media Council must have foreseen the consequences of supporting Dr. Železný, in dismantling the exclusiveness of ČNTS' services for CET 21 by the Council's regulatory letter of May 15, 1999, which supported Dr. Železný's actions "to harm ČNTS."

(6) The Respondent breached the Treaty

By the Media Council's actions and failures to act, the Respondent has violated its obligations towards the Claimant and its predecessors under the Treaty.

586. The Respondent's violation of the Treaty relates only to the Media Council's actions and omissions, although the Czech Parliament had substantial influence on the Media Council. For example "In May 1994, the Council was recalled precisely because, in the opinion of the House of Representatives, it had accepted a situation, in which the provisions of the Act on Broadcasting were constantly violated in the case of the operation of nation-wide broadcasting by a subject that was not authorized to perform such activity" (minutes of the 6th meeting of the Standing Committee for Mass Media of September 30, 1999, page 9 of the translation). Thereafter, the Council "in its new composition" reviewed the situation and took certain steps to reverse the relationship between the service company and the operating company.

587. Further, the Council was obligated to render regular reports to the Permanent Commission for the Media of the Lower House of the Parliament and further, was obligated to give special reports on certain issues such as “the situation of the television station NOVA” as requested by the Permanent Commission in its resolution of September 30, 1999.
588. Moreover, the Czech Parliament, by implementing the new Media Law in force as of January 1, 1996, strongly affected broadcasting licences already granted by the Media Council, in particular by allowing the licence-holder to request the waiver of licence conditions. This amendment of the Media Law had substantial influence on the 1993 split structure as developed by the Media Council for CET 21/ČNTS and other broadcasters to secure the proper co-operation of the licence-holder and the service provider. By this amendment of the Media Law, the Media Council lost its tool to monitor and supervise this co-operation. It remained a broadcasting regulator responsible for the fulfilment of the legal requirements and duties under the Media Law, whereas the service provider, providing the broadcasting operation, as a consequence of the new Media Law, escaped the Council’s survey and control.
589. It transpires from the documents submitted to the Arbitral Tribunal in these proceedings that the Media Council clearly understood and deplored this development. However it is also clear that the Czech Parliament has the authority to organize national broadcasting in any way it feels suitable, subject to any relevant international obligations of the Czech State. The acts of the Czech Government, the Czech Parliament or its Commissions are not under scrutiny by the Arbitral Tribunal in these proceedings.
590. The Czech State acted towards the Claimant and its predecessors as investors under the Treaty solely by acts of the regulator, the Media Council. It is not the task of the Arbitral Tribunal to judge whether these acts were in compliance with Czech law and regulations. The only task for this Tribunal is to judge whether the actions and omissions of the Media Council were in compliance with the Treaty. The Tribunal’s considered conclusion is that the actions and failures to act of the Media Council as described above, affecting CME and ČNTS, were in breach of the Treaty.

(i) The obligation not to deprive the Claimant of its investment (Treaty Article 5)

591. The Claimant's expropriation claim under Article 5 of the Treaty is justified. The Respondent, represented by the Media Council, breached its obligation not to deprive the Claimant of its investment. The Media Council's actions and omissions, as described above, caused the destruction of ČNTS' operations, leaving ČNTS as a company with assets, but without business. The Respondent's view that the Media Council's actions did not deprive the Claimant of its worth, as there has been no physical taking of the property by the State or because the original Licence granted to CET 21 always has been held by the original Licensee and kept untouched, is irrelevant. What was touched and indeed destroyed was the Claimant's and its predecessor's investment as protected by the Treaty. What was destroyed was the commercial value of the investment in ČNTS by reason of coercion exerted by the Media Council against ČNTS in 1996 and its collusion with Dr. Železný in 1999.
592. The reversal of the Media Council's position in respect to CME's investment (after Council members were replaced by the Czech Parliament in response to criticism of the Licence granted to CET 21 in conjunction with the foreign investment in ČNTS) might have been motivated by the new Media Law as of January 1, 1996. However, this does not justify the Council's new interpretation of the legal situation or other regulatory necessities seen by the Council in 1996 and there is no justification for the Council's actions in 1996, enforcing the amendment of 1993 arrangements.
593. The Respondent's defence that this interference in 1996 did not do any harm, as "the Czech Court determined that, as a matter of law as well as a matter of fact, ČNTS had the exclusive right to provide certain television services to CET 21 before ČNTS took the step that terminated the 1997 Service Agreement and that step, of course, was the withholding of the daily programme log on the 4th August 1999", is not convincing. In particular, the Defendant's view: "That step plainly had nothing whatever to do with the Czech Authorities", is unsustainable. The amendment of the MOA by replacing the licence-holder's contribution of the Licence by the worthless “use of the know-how of the Licence” is nothing else than the destruction of the legal basis (“the safety net”) of the Claimant’s investment. This destruction was clearly caused by the Czech State, acting through the Media Council.

594. The Respondent’s claim that the Media Council has never reversed its attitude to exclusivity, as it accepted exclusivity in 1993, but also accepted exclusivity in the amended provisions in 1996, is not supported by the clear wording of the documents. The contrary is the case, as already explained above. The Respondent’s contention that the Media Council consistently tried to make clear that it was not concerned by the question of exclusivity but by the question of the danger that an exclusive arrangement may lead to an unlawful transfer of the Licence, is not convincing. The clear facts speak against it. The Council, according to its own interpretations in its reports to the Czech Parliament, reversed its assessment of the legal situation in respect to the validity of the 1993 split ‘structure and took the necessary steps to implement this view by coercing the change in the 1993 legal arrangements.
595. The Respondent’s further argument that the Council, in its internal deliberations, never discussed the matter of exclusivity until recently, might well be the case. Indeed, the Council’s interference in 1996, enforcing the amendment of the MOA, was much more far reaching. The Council forced the shareholders of ČNTS to replace CET 21’s contribution of “use of the Licence” by a worthless substitute, carrying a similar name. The amendment was extracted from ČNTS by the institution of administrative proceedings which sprung from the Media Council’s own assessment of the events. As already dealt with above, the Respondent’s argument that the 1993 arrangement was not better than the 1996 amended arrangement is not convincing.
596. The Respondent’s further argument, also already rebutted above, that the 1993 legal arrangements did not prevent CET 21 from obtaining broadcasting services from other providers, goes against the exclusivity of the 1993 arrangement in the MOA.
597. The Respondent’s further argument, according to which the efficacy of the 1993 arrangement has never been tested, is also not convincing.

The Czech Civil Courts tested the arrangements. The Czech Appeal Court's view that ČNTS' refusal to deliver the 4th August daily log gave good cause for CET 21 to terminate the Service Agreement is a clear proof of the fragile character of the (coerced) 1996 amendment. Since 1996, the legal safety net for the investment was based on the fragile structure of a Service Agreement which could be terminated by CET 21 under any given or invented reason, creating by this an intolerable uncertainty for a long-term investment.

598. In this respect, it would be superfluous to say that the contribution of "the use of a Licence" (approved by the regulator) provided substantially more legal safety for ČNTS than the bilateral Service Agreement whose legal uncertainty is demonstrated by the sequence of the following events and the differing court decisions on this subject by the Regional Commercial Court of Prague, the Appellate Court of Prague and the Czech Appeal Court's decision pending when the hearing of these arbitration proceedings were closed.
599. The Respondent's argument that no loss occurred in 1996 and 1997 as a direct consequence of the legal changes in 1996 and that CME was in the position to equally enjoy its investment after the implementation of the 1996 arrangements, is not convincing. Legal protection (and safety nets, as the Respondents representatives said) prove their strength not at the day of implementation but at the day of breach. The enforced or coerced waiver of legal protection was per se a substantial devaluation of the Claimant's investment. The persons involved, including the representatives of the Media Council, CET 21 and ČNTS and also ČNTS' shareholders, clearly understood the character and the impact of the enforced changes on the protection of ČNTS' operations as exclusive service provider for CET 21. The Media Council deprived the Claimant of its investment's security by requiring CME in 1996 to enter into a new MOA and thereby giving up the exclusive right to use the Licence and further, in 1999, by actively supporting the licence-holder CET 21, when it breached the exclusive Service Agreement with ČNTS.
600. The Council, after having issued on March 15, 1999 a regulatory letter to ČNTS and CET 21 requesting the implementation of the non-exclusive service arrangement in support of Dr. Železný's openly disclosed intention to harm the foreign investor, was obligated to rectify the situation. In the least, the Council should have withdrawn the March 15, 1999 letter and made clear that the 1996 contractual relations were not in breach of the Media Law. However the Media Council, although frequently notified by ČNTS and CME of the consequences of its actions and failures to act, remained silent or disclaimed jurisdiction and so supported the vitiation of the Claimant's investment.

601. The basic breach by the Council of the Respondent's obligation not to deprive the Claimant of its investment was the coerced amendment of the MOA in 1996. The Council's actions and omissions in 1999 compounded and completed the Council's part in the destruction of CME's investment.
602. The Media Council, by its actions and omissions in 1996 and 1999, caused the damage suffered by the Claimant. Causation arises because the Media Council intentionally required ČNTS to give up the right of the exclusive use of the Licence under the MOA. The Media Council's possible motivation for such action -- to obtain regulatory control again over the broadcasting operation of CET 21 after the new Media Law came into force in 1996 -- is irrelevant. A change of the legal environment does not authorize a host State to deprive a foreign investor of its investment, unless proper compensation is granted. This was and is not the case. Furthermore, it must be noted that the change of the 1993 legal arrangement in 1996 as required by the Media Council, for whatever reasons, does not justify the Council's collaboration in the assault on CME's investment by supporting CET 21's breach of the Service Agreement in 1999. The Respondent, therefore, is obligated to remedy the damages which occurred as a consequence of the destruction of Claimant's investment.
603. Of course, deprivation of property and/or rights must be distinguished from ordinary measures of the State and its agencies in proper execution of the law. Regulatory measures are common in all types of legal and economic systems in order to avoid use of private property contrary to the general welfare of the (host) State. The Council's actions and inactions, however, cannot be characterized as normal broadcasting regulator's regulations in compliance with and in execution of the law, in particular the Media Law. Neither the Council's actions in 1996 nor the Council's interference in 1999 were part of proper administrative proceedings. They must be characterized as actions designed to force the foreign investor to contractually agree to the elimination of basic rights for the protection of its investment (in 1996) and as actions (in 1999) supporting the foreign investor's contractual partner in destroying the legal basis for the foreign investor's business in the Czech Republic. The actions and inactions affected the value of CME's shares in ČNTS, such shares being clearly a "foreign investment" in accordance with the Treaty, as already dealt with above (see also the TRADEX case as cited above).

604. The expropriation claim is sustained despite the fact that the Media Council did not expropriate CME by express measures of expropriation. De facto expropriations or indirect expropriations, i.e. measures that do not involve an overt taking but that effectively neutralize the benefit of the property of the foreign owner, are subject to expropriation claims. This is undisputed under international law (G. Sacerdoti page 382 as cited above, referring to numerous precedents such as the German Interests In Polish Upper Silesia case, 1926, PCIJ, Series A, No. 7, reprinted in M. Hudson, ed., I World Court Reports 475 (1934); see also Southern Pacific Properties (Middle East) Ltd. v. Egypt, ICSID Case No. ARB/84/3 (1992), 32 I.L.M. 993, 1993, dealing also with the expropriation of contractual rights of the operating company).
605. Furthermore, it makes no difference whether the deprivation was caused by actions or by inactions. [See Biloune, et al. v. Ghana Investment Centre, et al. 95 I.L.R. 183, 207-10 (1993); also published in the Yearbook Commercial Arbitration XIX (1994, page 11) and see also the International Technical Products Corp. v. Iran Award No. 196-302-2 (1985), 9 Iran-US CTR Rep. 273, page 239].
606. In the Metalclad Corporation v. United Mexican States case (ICSID Case No. ARB (AF)/97/1 (2000) in respect to NAFTA Article 1110 (expropriation), the ICSID Tribunal stated that an expropriation under this provision included not only open, deliberate and acknowledged takings of property, such as outright seizure or formal or obligatory transfer of title in favour of the host State, but also covert or incidental interference with use of property which has the effect of depriving the owner, in whole or in significant part, of the use or reasonably to be expected economic benefit of property even if not necessarily to the obvious benefit of the host State. Thus, by permitting or tolerating the conduct of the municipality, which the tribunal had held amounted to an unfair and inequitable treatment that breached Article 1105, and by participating or acquiescing in the denial to the investor of the right to operate, notwithstanding the fact that the project had been fully approved and endorsed by the federal Government, the State Party must in the tribunal's opinion have taken a measure tantamount to expropriation in violation of Article 1110 (1). This view of the ICSID Tribunal is supported by the Biloune award as cited above.

607. Expropriation of CME's investment is found as a consequence of the Media Council's actions and inactions as there is no immediate prospect at hand that ČNTS will be reinstated in a position to enjoy an exclusive use of the licence as had been granted under the 1993 split structure (even if the Czech Supreme Court would re-instate the Regional Commercial Court decision). There is no immediate prospect at hand that ČNTS can resume its broadcasting operations, as they were in 1996 before the legal protection of the use of the licence was eliminated.
608. In this respect, the Iran-United States Claims Tribunal stated:

“A deprivation or taking of property may occur under international law through interference by a State in the use of that property or with the enjoyment of its benefits, even where legal title to the property is not affected. [Citations omitted.] While assumption of control over property by a government does not automatically and immediately justify a conclusion that the property has been taken by the government, thus requiring compensation under international law, such a conclusion is warranted whenever events demonstrate that the owner was deprived of fundamental rights of ownership and it appears that this deprivation is not merely ephemeral. The intent of the government is less important than the effects of the measures on the owner, and the form of the measures of control or interference is less important than the reality of their impact.”

(see Tippetts, Abbett, McCarthy, Stratton v. TAMS/Affa Consulting Engineers of Iran et al. of 29.06.1984; 6 Iran-United States CTR, 219 et seq. page 225 as confirmed by Phelps Dodge Corp. et al v. 2. Iran, Award

No. 217-99-2 (1986), reprinted in 10 Iran - U.S. Cl. Trib. Rep. 121 (1987); see also Sea-Land Service, Inc. v. Iran, 6 Iran-United States C.T.R. 149 at 166):

"A finding of expropriation would require, at the very least, that the Tribunal be satisfied that there was deliberate governmental interference with the conduct of Sea-Land's operation, the effect of which was to deprive Sea-Land of the use and benefit of its investment."

609. In the case before this Tribunal, the situation is even clearer. The object of the Media Council in 1996 was to amend the 1993 split structure by removing the exclusive use of the licence from ČNTS to CET 21, the only company which under the new Media Law in force as of January 1, 1996 was under control of the Council. This deprivation of ČNTS' "exclusive use of the Licence" was compounded by the Media Council's actions and inactions of 1999. This qualifies the Media Council's actions in 1996 and actions and inactions in 1999 as expropriation under the Treaty.

(ii) The remaining claims

610. The remaining claims are based on the same facts as the expropriation claim.

a) The obligation of fair and equitable treatment (Article 3 (1) of the Treaty)

611. The Media Council's intentional undermining of the Claimant's investment in ČNTS equally is a breach of the obligation of fair and equitable treatment. The Respondent's position that the Media Council also required other broadcasters in the same way to revise the structure of the 1993 split legal arrangements between licence-holder and service provider is irrelevant. The facts and circumstances of the legal arrangements of the other broadcasters were not a subject of these arbitration proceedings. Should the Media Council have interfered with the contractual relations of other broadcasters in the same way as it did between CET 21 and ČNTS, these other actions might also be qualified as a breach of law as the case may be. These other cases, however, to the extent that they are realistic, do not legitimate the Media Council's actions and inactions versus CME/ČNTS as being fair and equitable. The standard for actions being assessed as fair and equitable are not to be determined by the acting authority in accordance with the standard used for its own nationals. Standards acceptable under international law apply, e.g. the threshold test of Professor Vagts as cited above. The Media Council breached its obligation of fair and equitable treatment by evisceration of the arrangements in reliance upon with the foreign investor was induced to invest.

b) The obligation not to impair investments by unreasonable or discriminatory measures (Article 3 (1) of the Treaty)

612. The same considerations set out under the expropriation claim govern the claim for unfair and inequitable treatment as well. On the face of it, the Media Council's actions and inactions in 1996 and 1999 were unreasonable as the clear intention of the 1996 actions was to deprive the foreign investor of the exclusive use of the Licence under the MOA and the clear intention of the 1999 actions and inactions was collude with the foreign investor's Czech business partner to deprive the foreign investor of its investment. The behaviour of the Media Council also smacks of discrimination against the foreign investor.

c) The obligation of full security and protection (Article 3 (2) of the Treaty)

613. The Media Council's actions in 1996 and its actions and inactions in 1999 were targeted to remove the security and legal protection of the Claimant's investment in the Czech Republic. The Media Council's (possible) motivation to regain control of the operation of the broadcasting after the Media Law had been amended as of January 1, 1996 is irrelevant. The host State is obligated to ensure that neither by amendment of its laws nor by actions of its administrative bodies is the agreed and approved security and protection of the foreign investor's investment withdrawn or devalued. This is not the case. The Respondent therefore is in breach of this obligation.

d) The obligation to treat investments in conformity with principles of international law (Articles 3(5) and 8 of the Treaty)

614. The Media Council's actions as described above are not compatible with the principles of international law, which the Arbitral Tribunal is charged with applying. On the contrary, the intentional undermining of the Claimant's investment's protection, the expropriation of the value of that investment, its unfair and inequitable treatment, the Media Council's unreasonable actions, the destruction of the Claimant's investment security and protection, are together a violation of the principles of international law assuring the alien and his investment treatment that does not fall below the standards of customary international law.

(7) The Reparation Claim

615. The Respondent, as a consequence of the breach of the Treaty, is under an obligation to make full reparation for the injury caused by the Media Council's wrongful acts and omissions as described above. A causal link between the Media Council's wrongful acts and omissions and the injury the Claimant suffered as a result thereof, is established, as already stated above. The Respondent's obligation to remedy the injury the Claimant suffered as a result of Respondent's violations of the Treaty derives from Article 5 of the Treaty and from the rules of international law. According to Article 5 subpara. c of the Treaty, any measures depriving directly or indirectly an investor of its investments must be accompanied "by a provision for the payment of just compensation. Such compensation shall represent the genuine value of the investments effected." A fortiori unlawful measures of deprivation must be remedied by just compensation.

616. In respect to the Claimant's remaining claims, this principle derives also from the generally accepted rules of international law. The obligation to make full reparation is the general obligation of the responsible State consequent upon the commission of an internationally wrongful act (see the Commentary to the Articles on the Responsibility of States for Internationally Wrongful Acts adopted by the U.N. International Law Commission as cited above). The general principle of the consequences of the commission of an internationally wrongful act was stated by the Permanent Court in the Factory at Chorzów case:

“It is a principle of international law that the breach of an engagement involves an obligation to make reparation in an adequate form. Reparation therefore is the indispensable complement of a failure to apply a convention itself. Differences relating to reparations, which may be due by reason of failure to apply a convention, are consequently differences relating to its application.” (Factory at Chorzów, Jurisdiction, 1927, P.C.I.J., Series A, No. 9, para. 21).”

617. In a subsequent decision the Permanent Court in the Factory at Chorzów case went on to specify in more detail the content of the obligation of reparation. It said:

“The essential principle contained in the actual notion of an illegal act - a principle which seems to be established by international practice and in particular by the decisions of arbitral tribunals - is that reparation must, so far as possible, wipe out all the consequences of the illegal act and re-establish the situation which would, in all probability, have existed if that act had not been committed. Restitution in kind, or, if this is not possible, payment of a sum corresponding to the value which a restitution in kind would bear; the award, if need be, of damages for loss sustained which would not be covered by restitution in kind or payment in place of it - such are the principles which should serve to determine the amount of compensation due for an act contrary to international law.” (Factory at Chorzów, Merits, 1928, P.C.I.J., Series A, No. 17, para. 47).

618. This view has been accepted and applied by numerous arbitral awards (Commentary of the Articles on the Responsibility of States for Internationally Wrongful Acts with further citations). The Respondent is obligated to “wipe out all the consequences” of the Media Council’s unlawful acts and omissions, which caused the destruction of the Claimant’s investment. Restitution in kind is not requested by the Claimant (as restitution in kind is obviously not possible, ČNTS’ broadcasting operations having been shut down for two years). Therefore, the Respondent is obligated to compensate the Claimant by payment of a sum corresponding to the value which a restitution in kind would bear. This is the fair market value of Claimant's investment as it was before consummation of the Respondent's breach of the Treaty in August 1999. In accordance with the parties joint request, the quantum of the Claimant's claim shall not be determined by this Award. Therefore, on request of the Claimant, the amount of the Claimant's claim is to be determined in a second phase of this arbitration.

III. Costs of the proceedings

619. The parties instructed the Arbitral Tribunal to render an Award, if affirmative in respect to the Claimant's claims, that does not decide on the quantum of the claims. The parties further requested the Arbitral Tribunal to adopt a decision in respect to the costs of the proceedings incurred by the rendering this Partial Award. The Arbitral Tribunal, however, cannot, at this stage, judge to what extent the Claimant will be successful in respect of the quantum of its damage claims although the decision on the quantum would provide a better basis for the allocation of costs. In respect to costs, the Tribunal, therefore, makes an assessment on the basis of the present status of the proceedings without by this assessment pre-judging the quantum of damages, and on the basis as well of Article 40, paragraph 1 of the UNCITRAL Rules, which says that "the arbitral tribunal may apportion each of such costs between the parties, if it determines that apportionment is reasonable, taking into account the circumstances of the case."
620. In assessing what costs of the Claimant to be refunded by the Respondent are acceptable and reasonably incurred, the Tribunal further considered inter alia that the Claimant initiated these arbitration proceedings after having initiated and partly carried through the Lauder vs/ The Czech Republic UNCITRAL Arbitration Proceedings which, in essence, deal with the same dispute. The parties used, as the Tribunal was informed, the work product of their advisors and the witness statements of these parallel UNCITRAL Arbitration Proceedings. The Respondent expressly stated in its Statement of Costs that the Respondent was able to use to a large extent the pleadings and witness statements originally drafted for the use by the Respondent in the Lauder vs. Czech Republic UNCITRAL Arbitration.

621. The Arbitral Tribunal took account of this situation and also the fact that the Claimant and its ultimate shareholder, by initiating two parallel UNCITRAL Treaty Proceedings had, as the Claimant expressed it, "two bites of the apple", and thereby enlarged costs and risks. It is, therefore, reasonable to decide that the Respondent, although this Partial Award is wholly unfavourable to it, shall be required to refund to Claimant only a portion of the Claimant's legal fees and disbursements, which portion is determined by the Arbitral Tribunal being US $ 750,000.
622. For the Tribunal's costs and disbursements the Tribunal charged the parties in the total amount of US $ 1,096,498.86 for the Tribunal's services and as compensation for the Tribunal's expenses for the period until the rendering of this Partial Award. The Claimant made an advance of costs in the amount of US $623,249.43 and the Respondent an advance of US $400,000, all together US $ 1,023,249.43. By letter dated August 28, 2001, the Respondent informed the Tribunal that the payment of the final advance of costs in the amount of US $ 73,249.43 to the Tribunal as requested by the Tribunal on August 15, 2001, will be made. The Tribunal, therefore, by letter dated August 30, 2001, withdraw its instruction to the Claimant dated August 30, 2001 to pay this amount. The Tribunal dealt with the respective payment in this Partial Award as if it has been made. The Tribunal may render a further partial award on costs, should such payment fail.
623. In respect to the allocation of these costs to the parties the Arbitral Tribunal took account of the above-mentioned facts and circumstances and allocated these costs as decided below.

J.
Decision

624. The Tribunal decides as follows:

1. The Respondent has violated the following provisions of the Treaty:
  - a. The obligation of fair and equitable treatment (Article 3 (1));
  - b. the obligation not to impair investments by unreasonable or discriminatory measures (Article 3 (1));
  - c. the obligation of full security and protection (Article 3 (2));
  - d. the obligation to treat foreign investments in conformity with principles of international law (Article 3 (5) and Article 8 (6), and
  - e. the obligation not to deprive Claimant of its investment (Article 5); and
2. The Respondent is obligated to remedy the injury that Claimant suffered as a result of Respondent's violations of the Treaty by payment of the fair market value of Claimant's investment as it was before consummation of the Respondent's breach of Treaty in 1999 in an amount to be determined at a second phase of this arbitration;
3.
  - (1) The Respondent shall bear its own legal costs.
  - (2) The Respondent shall pay to Claimant as refund of Claimant's legal costs and expenditures US $750,000.
  - (3) The Claimant shall bear one third and the Respondent two thirds of the Arbitral Tribunal's costs and expenditures. The Respondent, therefore, shall further pay to the Claimant as refund of Claimant's payments of the Tribunal's fees and disbursements US $257,749.81.

4. This Partial Award is final and binding in respect to the issues decided herein. The legal seat of the proceedings is Stockholm, Sweden.

The Tribunal will continue the arbitration proceedings in order to decide on the quantum of the Claimant's claim upon request of one of the Parties.

K. Statement in accordance with Article 32 (4) UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules related to Dr. Hándl's failure to sign the Partial Award

625. By letter dated September 11, 2001, Dr. Hándl requested the Chairman to attach to the Award (whose issuance he delayed) an explanation of his failure to sign the Award, as well as a dissenting opinion. Dr. Hándl refused to sign the Award with the following remark:

"Partial Award not signed by Dr. Hándl as expression of his protest and dissenting from this Award - dissenting opinion enclosed, date: 11.9.2001, signature Dr. Hándl"

The Chairman of the Tribunal, on his behalf and that of Judge Schwebel, pointed out to Dr. Hándl that his failure to sign would be in breach of his obligations as arbitrator. In the event, it is also a breach of his repeated recent assurances to the Chairman, in writing, that he "will sign" the Award.

The UNCITRAL Rules that govern this arbitration provide, in Article 32 (4), that: "An award shall be signed by the arbitrators . . ." (emphasis supplied). The Tribunal is confirmed in the conclusion that an arbitrator's failure to sign the award is a violation of the arbitrator's professional responsibilities by its examination of the rules and practice of the principal arbitral institutions as well as the papers and proceedings of the Stockholm and Paris Congresses of the International Council on Commercial Arbitration. Dr. Hándl's failure to perform his responsibilities as arbitrator is matched by the intemperance and inaccuracy of his dissent. He makes charges about the conduct of the hearings and the deliberations that are groundless. His position on the merits of the dispute speaks for itself.

Stockholm, 13 September 2001

(Dr. Wolfgang Kühn)
Chairman of the Arbitral Tribunal)

(Judge Stephen M. Schwebel)
Arbitrator

(JUDr. Jaroslav Hándl)
Arbitrator

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-104

388 F.Supp.3d 1133

United States District Court, N.D. California.

ALTERG, INC., Plaintiff,

v.

BOOST TREADMILLS LLC, et al., Defendants.

Case No. 18-cv-07568-EMC

Signed 05/20/2019

Synopsis

Background: Provider of impact reduction treadmills brought action against three former employees and competing company they founded, asserting patent infringement, breach of contract, trade secret misappropriation, breach of fiduciary duty, interference with contract, interference with prospective economic advantage, false advertisement, trade libel, unfair competition, and conspiracy. Defendants moved to dismiss for failure to state a claim.

Holdings: The District Court, Edward M. Chen, J., held that:

- [1] provider failed to state direct patent infringement claim;
- [2] provider failed to state claim for misappropriation of trade secrets;
- [3] provider failed to state breach of contract claim under California law;
- [4] provider failed to state breach of fiduciary duty claim under California law;
- [5] provider failed to state claim for intentional interference with contractual relations under California law;
- [6] provider failed to state a claim for interference of prospective economic advantage under California law; and
- [7] provider failed to satisfy heightened pleading standards for fraud, in Lanham Act false advertising claim.

Motion granted.

Procedural Posture(s): Motion to Dismiss for Failure to State a Claim.

West Headnotes (54)

[1] Federal Civil Procedure  Insufficiency in general

To survive a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, factual allegations must suggest that the claim has at least a plausible chance of success. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\).

[2] Federal Civil Procedure  Insufficiency in general

To survive a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the complaint must allege factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\).

[3] Federal Civil Procedure  Insufficiency in general

The “plausibility” standard for motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim is not akin to a “probability” requirement, but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\).

[4] Federal Civil Procedure  Insufficiency in general

In deciding a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, where a complaint pleads facts that are merely consistent with a defendant's liability, it stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility of entitlement to relief. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12\(b\)\(6\).

[5] Federal Civil Procedure  Matters deemed admitted; acceptance as true of allegations in complaint

On a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, to be entitled to the presumption of truth, allegations in a complaint or counterclaim may not simply recite the elements of a cause of action, but must contain sufficient allegations of underlying facts to give fair notice and to enable the opposing party to defend itself effectively. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6).

[6] Federal Civil Procedure ➡ Insufficiency in general

On a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim, the factual allegations that are taken as true must plausibly suggest an entitlement to relief, such that it is not unfair to require the opposing party to be subjected to the expense of discovery and continued litigation. Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(6).

[7] Patents ➡ Complaint or Other Initial Pleading

Pleading requirements for allegations of direct patent infringement are not satisfied by Form 18 of the Appendix of Forms to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, governing complaints for patent infringement; rather, sufficiency of claims for direct infringement are assessed under Twombly and Iqbal pleading standard. Fed. R. Civ. P. App., Form 18.

[8] Patents ➡ Infringement and Injury, Loss, or Damage

A direct patent infringement claim does not satisfy the standards of Twombly and Iqbal where it does not at least contain factual allegations that the accused product practices every element of at least one exemplary claim.

[9] Patents ➡ In general; comparison with patent claims

Failure to meet a single limitation is sufficient to negate infringement of a patent claim.

[10] Patents ➡ Infringement and Injury, Loss, or Damage

Allegations by provider of impact reduction treadmills that former employees and their business developed a competing machine, without addressing necessary elements of patent claims, failed to state direct infringement claim.

[11] Patents ➡ Indirect Infringement

Liability for indirect infringement of a patent requires direct infringement.

[12] Patents ➡ Enhanced or punitive damages

A finding of direct infringement of a patent is a prerequisite for willful infringement of kind warranting enhanced damages. 35 U.S.C.A. § 284.

[13] Antitrust and Trade Regulation ➡ Elements of misappropriation

To state a claim for trade secret misappropriation under Defend Trade Secrets Act (DTSA), a plaintiff must allege that (1) the plaintiff owned a trade secret; (2) the defendant misappropriated the trade secret; and (3) the defendant's actions damaged the plaintiff. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1839(5).

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Antitrust and Trade Regulation ➡ Pleading

A plaintiff need not spell out the details of the trade secret to state a claim for trade secret misappropriation under Defend Trade Secrets Act (DTSA), but must describe the subject matter of the trade secret with sufficient particularity to separate it from matters of general knowledge in the trade or of special persons who are skilled in the trade, and to permit the defendant to ascertain at least the boundaries within which the secret lies. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1839(5).

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[15] Antitrust and Trade Regulation ➡ Pleading

Allegations by provider of impact reduction treadmills regarding broad categories of information, including “positive and negative learnings” and “technology and negative information and learnings,” failed to allege trade secrets with sufficient particularity, as required to state claim against former employees and their competing business for misappropriation of trade secrets under Defend Trade Secrets Act (DTSA). 18 U.S.C.A. § 1839(5).

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[16] Antitrust and Trade Regulation ➡ Actions

Continued use of a trade secret after the effective date of Defend Trade Secrets Act (DTSA) is actionable, even if the secret was initially disclosed prior to effective date of DTSA. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1839(5).

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[17] Contracts ➡ Grounds of action

The elements of a breach of contract claim under California law are: (1) the existence of a contract, (2) performance or excuse for nonperformance, (3) defendant's breach, and (4) damages.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[18] Contracts ➡ Pleading contract or specifications

Under California law, a complaint for breach of contract must include the contract itself or plead its essential terms.

[19] Contracts ➡ Pleading contract or specifications

Allegations by provider of impact reduction treadmills regarding broad categories of information covered by confidentiality agreements, without pleading essential terms of relevant contract and the trade secrets they protected, failed to state breach of contract claim under California law against former employees who founded competing business.

[20] Damages ➡ Breach of contract

Under California law, non-speculative lost sales or profits can constitute contractual damages.

[21] Damages ➡ Loss of profits

Under California law, allegations of “lost sales or profits” caused by a competitor's contractual breach are sufficient to establish damages at the pleadings stage.

[22] Fraud ➡ Fiduciary or confidential relations

To state a claim for breach of fiduciary duty under California law, a plaintiff must allege (1) the existence of a fiduciary duty; (2) breach of the fiduciary duty; and (3) damage proximately caused by the breach.

[23] Corporations and Business Organizations ➡ Resignation

Corporations and Business Organizations ➡ Fiduciary nature of relation

Under California law, as a general matter, an officer's fiduciary duty to his employer ends upon his resignation.

[24] Corporations and Business Organizations ➡ Fiduciary Duties as to Management of Corporate Affairs in General

Under California law, officers are charged with a continuing duty to protect privileged and confidential information, which continues even after they leave the company.

[25] Fraud ➡ Allegations of fraud in general

Allegations by provider of impact reduction treadmills that former employee used its proprietary and confidential information to benefit competing business, without pleading essential terms of confidentiality agreements and the trade secrets they protected, failed to state breach of fiduciary duty claim under California law against former employee.

[26] Torts 🔑 Contracts

The elements of cause of action for intentional interference with contractual relations under California law are (1) a valid contract between plaintiff and a third party; (2) defendant's knowledge of this contract; (3) defendant's intentional acts designed to induce a breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; (4) actual breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; and (5) resulting damage.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[27] Torts 🔑 Contracts in general

Allegations by provider of impact reduction treadmills that former employees and their competing business worked with one of provider's longtime suppliers of treadmills to develop a competing machine failed to state claim for intentional interference with contractual relations under California law based on supplier's confidentiality agreements with provider, absent allegations that former employees and their business induced or caused supplier to disclose provider's confidential information to them.

[28] Torts 🔑 Pleading

Allegations by provider of impact reduction treadmills that former employees and their competing business interfered with contracts between provider and its vendors, suppliers, and customers, without identifying any of those vendors, suppliers, and customers, or providing any details about the contracts and contractual provisions with which former employees and their business allegedly interfered, failed to state claim for intentional interference with contractual relations under California law.

[29] Torts 🔑 Pleading

Allegations by provider of impact reduction treadmills that former employees interfered with each other's confidentiality agreements with provider when they founded competing business and developed another treadmill machine, absent allegations regarding the essential terms of the confidentiality agreements, failed to state claim for intentional interference with contractual relations under California law.

[30] Torts 🔑 Prospective advantage, contract or relations; expectancy

The elements of a claim for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage under California law are (1) an economic relationship between the plaintiff and some third person containing the probability of future economic benefit to the plaintiff; (2) knowledge by the defendant of the existence of the relationship; (3) intentional acts on the part of the defendant designed to disrupt the relationship; (4) actual disruption of the relationship; and (5) damages to the plaintiff proximately caused by the acts of the defendant.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[31] Torts 🔑 Defense, justification or privilege in general

Under California law, the chief practical distinction between interference with contract and interference with prospective economic advantage is that a broader range of privilege to interfere is recognized when the relationship or economic advantage interfered with is only prospective.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[32] Torts 🔑 Existence of valid or identifiable contract, relationship or expectancy

Torts 🔑 Business relations or economic advantage, in general

In context of claim for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, California law precludes recovery for overly speculative expectancies by initially requiring proof that it is reasonably probable that the prospective economic advantage would have been realized but for defendant's interference.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[33] Torts 🔑 Business relations or economic advantage, in general

Allegations by provider of impact reduction treadmills that former employees and their competing business worked with one of provider's longtime suppliers of treadmills to develop a competing machine, absent allegations how former employees' and their business's actions jeopardized the ongoing supplier relationship between supplier and provider, failed to state a claim for interference of prospective economic advantage under California law.

[34] Torts 🔑 Pleading

Allegations by provider of impact reduction treadmills that former employees and their competing business interfered with provider's relationships with its vendors, suppliers, and customers, absent factual allegations of their economic relationship with provider or how such relationships contained the probability of future economic benefit to provider, failed to state a claim for interference of prospective economic advantage under California law.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[35] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Advertising, Marketing, and Promotion

A false advertising claim under the Lanham Act has five elements: (1) a false statement of fact by the defendant in a commercial advertisement about its own or another's product, (2) the statement actually deceived or has the tendency to deceive a substantial segment of its audience, (3) the deception is material, in that it is likely to influence the purchasing decision, (4) the defendant caused the false statement to enter interstate commerce, and (5) the plaintiff has been or is likely to be injured as a result of the false statement, either by direct diversion of sales from itself to defendant or by a lessening of the goodwill associated with its products. Lanham Trade-Mark Act § 43, 15 U.S.C.A. § 1125(a).

[36] Federal Civil Procedure 🔑 Fraud, mistake and condition of mind

Lanham Act false advertising claims by provider of impact reduction treadmills, alleging that former employees and their competing business made false and misleading statements in bad faith, willfully, knowingly, and intentionally, sounded in fraud, and thus complaint was required to meet heightened pleading standards under federal rule. Lanham Trade-Mark Act § 43, 15 U.S.C.A. § 1125(a); Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b).

[37] Federal Civil Procedure 🔑 Fraud, mistake and condition of mind

To satisfy heightened pleading standards for fraud, plaintiff must include the who, what, when, where, and how of the fraud. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b).

[38] Federal Civil Procedure 🔑 Fraud, mistake and condition of mind

Provider of impact reduction treadmills failed to satisfy heightened pleading standards for fraud, in Lanham Act false advertising claim alleging former employees and their competing business made false and misleading statements in bad faith, willfully, knowingly, and intentionally, absent specific allegations of “when” and “where” the statements were made, and who made each statement. Lanham Trade-Mark Act § 43, 15 U.S.C.A. § 1125(a); Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b).

[39] Federal Civil Procedure 🔑 Fraud, mistake and condition of mind

“Everyone did everything” allegations do not satisfy heightened pleading standards for fraud. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b).

[40] Federal Civil Procedure 🔑 Fraud, mistake and condition of mind

In the context of a fraud suit involving multiple defendants, a plaintiff must, at a minimum, identify the role of each defendant in the alleged fraudulent scheme to satisfy the fraud pleading rule. Fed. R. Civ. P. 9(b).

[41] Libel and Slander 🔑 Nature and elements in general

“Trade libel” is an intentional disparagement of the quality of property, which results in pecuniary damage.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[42] Libel and Slander 🔑 Nature and elements in general

A trade libel claim under California law requires: (1) a publication, (2) which induces others not to deal with plaintiff, and (3) special damages.

[43] Libel and Slander 🔑 Actions

Plaintiff asserting trade libel claim under California law must allege: (1) who made the statements, (2) to whom the statements were made, (3) the time and place of publication, and (4) the substance of the statements.

[44] Libel and Slander 🔑 Actions

Allegations by provider of impact reduction treadmills that former employees and their competing business told provider's customers that provider was in poor financial health and going out of business, absent allegations when, where, and particular customers to whom the statements were made, failed to state trade libel claim under California law.

[45] Libel and Slander 🔑 Injury from slander

To establish the “special damages” element of trade libel claim under California law, a plaintiff may not rely on a general decline in business arising from the alleged falsehood, and must instead identify particular customers and transactions of which it was deprived as a result of the libel.

[46] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 In general; unfairness*Antitrust and Trade*Regulation 🔑 Advertising, marketing, and promotion

California's Unfair Competition Law (UCL) prohibits unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[47] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Source of prohibition or obligation; lawfulness

California's Unfair Competition Law (UCL) borrows violations of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices that the unfair competition law makes independently actionable. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[48] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 In general; unfairness

A business practice is “unfair” within meaning of California's Unfair Competition Law (UCL) if it violates established public policy or if it is immoral, unethical, oppressive, or unscrupulous and causes injury to consumers which outweighs its benefits. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[49] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Fraud; deceit; knowledge and intent

To state a claim under the fraudulent prong of California's Unfair Competition Law (UCL), it is necessary only to show that members of the public are likely to be deceived. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200.

[50] Antitrust and Trade

Regulation 🔑 Reliance; causation; injury, loss, or damage

Provider of impact reduction treadmills failed to allege its own reliance on alleged misrepresentations made by former employees and their competing business to provider's customers regarding product quality and provider's financial situation, precluding claim under fraudulent prong of California's Unfair Competition Law (UCL). Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 17200, 17204.

[51] Antitrust and Trade

Regulation 🔑 Injunction

Antitrust and Trade

Regulation 🔑 Monetary Relief; Damages

Damages cannot be recovered through a claim under California's Unfair Competition Law (UCL); a plaintiff who prevails on such a claim is limited to injunctive relief and restitution. Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200.

[52] Conspiracy 🔑 Definition and elements of civil conspiracy in general

Under California law, conspiracy is not a cause of action, but a legal doctrine that imposes liability on persons who, although not actually committing a tort themselves, share with the immediate tortfeasors a common plan or design in its perpetration.

[53] Conspiracy 🔑 Conspiracy as independent claim; necessity of and relationship to underlying wrong

Under California law, a conspiracy allegation must be activated by the commission of an actual tort.

[54] Patents 🔑 In general; utility

US Patent 7,591,795, US Patent 8,464,716, US Patent 8,840,572, US Patent 9,642,764, US Patent 10,004,656. Cited.

West Codenotes

Recognized as Invalid

Fed. R. Civ. P. App., Form 18.

Attorneys and Law Firms

*1139 Carmen Maria Aviles, David James Miclean, Miclean Gleason LLP, San Mateo, CA, Danielle Marie Mihalkanin, Manatt, Phelps and Phillips, LLP, Palo Alto, CA, for Plaintiff.

Rick C. Chang, Duane H. Mathiowetz, Morgan Franich Fredkin Siamas & Kays LLP, San Jose, CA, for Defendants.

ORDER GRANTING DEFENDANTS' MOTION TO DISMISS

Docket No. 15

EDWARD M. CHEN, United States District Judge

Plaintiff AlterG, Inc. (“AlterG”) brings this action against three of its former employees, Sean Whalen, Thomas Allen, and Michael James Bean (the “Individual Defendants”) and the competing company they founded, Boost Treadmills LLC (“Boost”) (collectively, “Defendants”). AlterG alleges that Defendants infringed its patents and misused its trade secret information to create Boost products. AlterG's complaint pleads ten causes of action: (1) patent infringement; (2) breach of contract; (3) trade secret misappropriation; (4) breach of fiduciary duty; (5) interference with contract; (6) interference with prospective economic advantage; (7) false advertisement; (8) trade libel; (9) unfair competition; and (10) conspiracy. Pending before the Court is Defendants' motion to dismiss all counts of the complaint. Docket No. 15 (“Mot.”).

For the reasons stated on the record at the hearing on May 9, 2019 and discussed below, the motion to dismiss is GRANTED.

I. FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND

The complaint alleges the following. Plaintiff AlterG is a “medical device company” that is the “leading provider of impact reduction treadmills,” also known as “Anti-Gravity Treadmills,” that are used for “orthopedic rehabilitation and training.” Docket No. 1 (“Compl.”) ¶ 14. “One of the keys [sic] drivers of AlterG’s success is its patented Differential Air Pressure (‘DAP’) technology,” which works by “us[ing] a pressurized bag to provide a counterforce to the subject’s body weight, reducing their effective weight on the treadmill surface.” Id. ¶ 15. From 2012 to 2015, AlterG devoted substantial resources to develop “a lower cost, bare bones AlterG machine” in response to “potential competitors who wanted to develop anti-gravity training and rehab machines using mechanical unweighting and other options, and at a lower price point than AlterG.” Id. ¶ 22. AlterG calls this project the “Low-Cost Platform Project,” or “LCPP.” Id. AlterG ultimately decided not to commercialize or sell any products developed as part of the LCPP. Id. ¶ 23.

The Individual Defendants are three former employees of AlterG. “Whalen was the founder of AlterG” as well as “the initial *1140 and primary inventor ... principally involved in developing the technology and products of the company.” Id. ¶ 19. He therefore “had intimate access to and knowledge of AlterG products, technology, business plans, intellectual property strategy, marketing strategy, financial data, vendors, suppliers, customers, and confidential research and development.” Id. In 2012, Whalen relinquished his former positions at AlterG but continued working for the company as a consultant until he stopped working for AlterG altogether on March 31, 2015. Id. ¶¶ 21, 24. During this consultancy period, “Whalen was the principal consultant and engineer” on the LCPP. Id. ¶ 22.

Allen joined AlterG in 2007 and has “held numerous jobs at AlterG in sales, business development, and in international sales.” Id. ¶ 25. Through those positions, he became “intimately familiar with the products of AlterG and specifically the costing, bill of materials (BOM), sales and financial information, customer acquisition, marketing projections, and business strategy for AlterG products.” Id. Like Whalen, Allen worked closely with the LCPP team from 2012 through 2015. Id. ¶ 27. Allen was also AlterG’s “principal liaison” to Woodway USA (“Woodway”), a longtime supplier of treadmills for AlterG. Id. ¶¶ 25, 28. He resigned from AlterG on April 28, 2015. Id. ¶ 29.

Bean joined AlterG in 2008 and worked in various sales roles at the company. Id. ¶ 34. He resigned from AlterG in April 2017. Id. ¶ 35. “Since Bean’s departure from AlterG in April 2017, AlterG has discovered communications between Bean and Allen about Allen’s work on a competing anti-gravity unit while Bean was still an employee of AlterG.” Id.

Each of the Individual Defendants signed various confidentiality and non-disclosure agreements with AlterG during their employment with the company, which provided that they would “not use or disclose AlterG’s proprietary and confidential information in any way contrary to the benefit of AlterG.” Id. ¶¶ 20, 25, 34. AlterG and Woodway also “entered into various confidentiality agreements whereby AlterG would provide to Woodway proprietary and confidential information to assist Woodway to build and supply AlterG with anti-gravity units.” Id. ¶ 31.

Boost was formed at the end of 2016 and registered in April 2017. Id. ¶ 36. Allen and Bean are founders of Boost, and Whalen worked for the company in product development. Id. AlterG believes that “Defendants conspired almost immediately [upon leaving AlterG] to create a competing machine incorporating AlterG intellectual property,” and that “Boost was developing an unweighting treadmill well prior to the company’s registration.” Id. ¶¶ 36, 39. As part of this process, Whalen and Allen started “secretly” working with Woodway and “utilized confidential, proprietary, and trade secret information from the [LCPP], and other AlterG intellectual property, to shortcut the research and development time to come to market with a lower cost unweighting treadmill.” Id. ¶ 33. “At the end of 2017, Boost introduced its first product—the Boost One,” which “infringes AlterG patents” and “incorporates numerous technology features developed by AlterG in connection with the [LCPP].” Id. ¶ 38.

AlterG further alleges that Defendants “falsely claim that the problematic Boost One is a superior product over the AlterG DAP systems ‘at a fraction of the cost.’ ” Id. ¶ 44. Defendants have also “told customers and prospects false statements to denigrate AlterG and its superior technology, falsely claiming that AlterG was going out of business, is in poor financial health and will not be able to get Woodway treadmills *1141 anymore.” Id. ¶ 45. The upshot of Defendants’ allegedly unlawful practices is that Defendants have been able to “sell over 20 units [of Boost products] to date to customers considering an AlterG unit.” Id. ¶ 46.

II. LEGAL STANDARD

[1] [2] [3] [4] For a plaintiff to survive a Rule 12(b)(6) motion to dismiss after Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 129 S.Ct. 1937, 173 L.Ed.2d 868 (2009) and Bell Atlantic Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 127 S.Ct. 1955, 167 L.Ed.2d 929 (2007), his factual allegations “must ... suggest that the claim has at least a plausible chance of success.” Levitt v. Yelp! Inc., 765 F.3d 1123, 1134-35 (9th Cir. 2014). In other words, the complaint “must allege ‘factual content that allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged.’ ” Id. (citations omitted). “The plausibility standard is not akin to a ‘probability requirement,’ but it asks for more than a sheer possibility that a defendant has acted unlawfully.” Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678, 129 S.Ct. 1937. Where a complaint pleads facts that are “merely consistent with” a defendant’s liability, it “stops short of the line between possibility and plausibility ‘of entitlement to relief.’ ” Id.

[5] [6] The Ninth Circuit has outlined a two-step process for evaluating pleadings against this standard. “First, to be entitled to the presumption of truth, allegations in a complaint or counterclaim may not simply recite the elements of a cause of action, but must contain sufficient allegations of underlying facts to give fair notice and to enable the opposing party to defend itself effectively. Second, the factual allegations that are taken as true must plausibly suggest an entitlement to relief, such that it is not unfair to require the opposing party to be subjected to the expense of discovery and continued litigation.” Levitt, 765 F.3d at 1135 (citations omitted).

III. DISCUSSION

A. Patent Infringement

AlterG alleges that Defendants directly, indirectly, and willfully infringed five of AlterG’s patents. The ’795 and ’572 Patents (the “Weight Calibration Patents”) relate to systems that adjust the air pressure inside the treadmill chamber in response to the body weight of the user. See Compl. ¶¶ 67–84. The complaint provides the following descriptions of the Weight Calibration Patents:

- [F]eatures of the technology claimed in the ’795 Patent provide a system by applying pressure to a portion of a body of an individual in a chamber having an aperture along a vertical axis for receiving the portion of the body of the individual. A pressure sensor is coupled to the chamber for measuring a pressure inside the chamber. A negative feedback control system, calibrates, adjusts, and maintains the pressure inside the chamber. Compl. ¶ 67.

- Broadly speaking, the ’572 Patent claims a system by applying pressure to a portion of a body of an individual in a chamber having an aperture along a vertical axis for receiving the portion of the body of the individual. A pressure sensor is coupled to the chamber for measuring a pressure inside the chamber. A negative feedback control system calibrates, adjusts, and maintains the pressure inside the chamber. Compl. ¶ 73.

The ’716, ’764, and ’656 Patents (the “Height Adjustment Patents”) relate to adjustable mechanisms that allow a treadmill to accommodate users of different *1142 heights. Compl. ¶¶ 49–66. The complaint provides the following descriptions of the Height Adjustment Patents:

- Broadly speaking, the ’716 Patent claims various embodiments of Differential Air Pressure systems and methods of using such systems. Without reference to the particular construction of any claim terms, features of the technology claimed in the ’716 Patent include a Differential Air Pressure system that (1) may comprise a chamber configured to receive a portion of a user’s lower body; (2) the Differential Air Pressure system may further comprise a user seal that seals the pressure chamber to the user’s body; and (3) the height of the user seal may be adjusted to accommodate users with various body heights. Compl. ¶ 49.
- Broadly speaking, the ’656 Patent claims various embodiments of Differential Air Pressure systems and components for Differential Air Pressure systems. Without reference to the particular construction of any claim terms, features of the technology claimed in the ’656 Patent include (1) various methods and related structures for sealing a user into a pressurizable chamber; (2) various methods and related structures for changing the shape and/or height of the chamber; (3) various types and configurations of chambers and support structures for chambers; and (4) various methods and related systems for treating various conditions using the differential air pressure systems, including but not limited to obesity, cardiac disease, multiple sclerosis, cerebral palsy, or Down Syndrome. Compl. ¶ 55.

- Broadly speaking, the '764 Patent claims various embodiments of Differential Air Pressure systems and methods of using such systems. Without reference to the particular construction of any claim terms, features of the technology claimed in the '764 Patent include a Differential Air Pressure system that may comprise (1) a chamber configured to receive a portion of a user's lower body and to create an air pressure differential upon the user's body; (2) the Differential Air Pressure system may further comprise a user seal that seals the pressure chamber to the user's body; and (3) the height of the user seal may be adjusted to accommodate users with various body heights. Compl. ¶ 61.

1. Direct Infringement

[7] The parties dispute the pleading standard that applies to claims of direct patent infringement. See Mot. at 6–7; Docket No. 19 (“Opp.”) at 4. This dispute arises from a conflict between the general pleading standard set forth in Twombly and Iqbal and the more lenient standard formerly applied to direct infringement claims pursuant to Form 18 to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Form 18 was abrogated in December 2015. See Novitaz, Inc. v. inMarket Media, LLC, No. 16-CV-06795-EJD, 2017 WL 2311407, at *1 (N.D. Cal. May 26, 2017). Since then, “the majority of district courts”—including this court—“have assessed the sufficiency of claims for direct patent infringement under the standard set forth in Twombly and Iqbal.” Id. at *2 (collecting cases); see Software Research, Inc. v. Dynatrace LLC, 316 F. Supp. 3d 1112, 1116 (N.D. Cal. 2018). The Court will continue to apply the same standard here.

[8] [9] A direct infringement claim “does not satisfy the standards of Twombly and Iqbal where it does not at least *1143 contain factual allegations that the accused product practices every element of at least one exemplary claim.” Novitaz, 2017 WL 2311407, at *3. This requirement is animated by the principle that “the failure to meet a single limitation is sufficient to negate infringement of [a] claim.” Laitram Corp. v. Rexnord, Inc., 939 F.2d 1533, 1535 (Fed. Cir. 1991).

[10] AlterG does not allege that Boost products practice every element of at least one exemplary claim. In particular, Defendants point out that the complaint contains no allegations that Boost products practice a key limitation of each of the two types of patents. The Weight Calibration Patents describe a mechanism that calibrates the pressure inside the treadmill chamber in response to the body weight of the user. See Compl., Exh. D ('795 Patent) (Claim 1 claiming a method of “generating a relationship between pressure and actual weight of the individual” and “regulating the pressure in the chamber with respect to the weight of the individual based on the relationship”); Exh. E ('572 Patent) (Claim 1 claiming an “exercise apparatus” that “is configured to receive an input of the individual's weight ..., generate a measured weight and positive pressure relationship for the individual, and ... to regulate the positive pressure in the chamber by referring to only the generated relationship.”). The complaint does not allege that Defendants' products regulate chamber pressure by reference to a measured user weight. In fact, the complaint appears to say the opposite. See Compl. ¶ 44 (“[T]he Boost One [does] not calibrate to specific user's actual weight and volume dimensions like the AlterG DAP systems....”).

The Height Adjustment Patents describe adjustable mechanisms that accommodate treadmill users of various heights. See Compl., Exh. A ('716 Patent) (Claim 1 claiming “a height adjustment assembly attached to the chamber adjacent to the seal interface”); Exh. B ('656 Patent) (Claim 1 claiming “a height adjustable structure having a plurality of height adjustment slots in a front of the chamber and a plurality of height adjustment slots in a rear of the chamber”); Exh. C ('764 Patent) (Claim 1 claiming “a movable assembly comprising ... a height adjustment bar attached to the seal frame ... configured to provide a vertical position adjustment of the height of the user seal by vertically moving the seal frame”). The complaint does not allege that the Boost One contains any height adjustment mechanism. AlterG's direct infringement claim is therefore inadequately pled. See Atlas IP LLC v. Pac. Gas & Elec. Co., No. 15-CV-05469-EDL, 2016 WL 1719545, at *4 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 9, 2016) (dismissing a direct infringement claim where “the complaint entirely fails to address [a] necessary element of claim 1”).

2. Indirect Infringement

[11] “[L]iability for indirect infringement of a patent requires direct infringement.” In re Bill of Lading Transmission & Processing Sys. Patent Litig., 681 F.3d 1323, 1333 (Fed. Cir. 2012). Because AlterG's direct infringement claims have not been adequately pled, its indirect infringement claims fail as well.

3. Willful Infringement

[12] AlterG alleges that Defendants' infringement of its patents is willful and therefore warrants enhanced damages under 35 U.S.C. § 284. However, this willful infringement claim must be dismissed because a finding of direct infringement is a prerequisite for willful infringement. See Halo Elecs., Inc. v. Pulse Elecs., Inc., — U.S. —, 136 S. Ct. 1923, 1930, 195 L.Ed.2d 278 (2016).

*1144 Defendants' motion to dismiss AlterG's patent infringement claims is GRANTED with leave for AlterG to amend its direct infringement claim.

B. Trade Secret Misappropriation

[13] AlterG's third cause of action is trade secret misappropriation. To state a claim for trade secret misappropriation under the DTSA, a plaintiff must allege that: "(1) the plaintiff owned a trade secret; (2) the defendant misappropriated the trade secret; and (3) the defendant's actions damaged the plaintiff." Alta Devices, Inc. v. LG Elecs., Inc., 343 F. Supp. 3d 868, 877 (N.D. Cal. 2018) (citation omitted); see 18 U.S.C. § 1839(5) (defining "misappropriation" in the context of trade secrets).

1. Alleging Trade Secrets with Sufficient Particularity

Defendants argue that AlterG fails to identify its allegedly misappropriated trade secrets with sufficient particularity to state a claim under the DTSA. Mot. at 13–15. The Court agrees.

[14] "A plaintiff need not spell out the details of the trade secret," but must "describe the subject matter of the trade secret with sufficient particularity to separate it from matters of general knowledge in the trade or of special persons who are skilled in the trade, and to permit the defendant to ascertain at least the boundaries within which the secret lies."<sup>1</sup> Alta Devices, 343 F. Supp. 3d at 881 (citations, internal quotation marks and alterations omitted). Alta Devices provides helpful guidance as to the degree of particularity that is required. The court there found that the plaintiff, a manufacturer of thin-film solar technology, adequately pleaded its trade secret claim based on a combination of factors. First, the plaintiff identified "the exact technology in question: thin-film GaAs solar technology." Id. Second, the plaintiff listed with specificity the types of trade secrets relating to the "thin-film GaAs solar technology": "[m]ethods of [ ] high throughput thin-film deposition; epitaxial lift-off of the thin-film; and GaAs substrate maintenance and re-use," as well as "confidential cost analysis; proofs and tests of manufacturing concepts and techniques; tool roadmaps; manufacturing process flows; and identification of equipment and equipment vendors; and information related to the foregoing." Id. In addition to the fact that the technology was described with specificity, a non-disclosure agreement between the parties described with further particularity the confidential information that was imparted to defendants, for example, "CVD technology and its commercial viability," including the "CVD (Alta 2T) chamber scheme," "growth rate," "thin film quality," "uniformity," "gas utilization efficiency," and "scalability and short cycle time feasibility." Id. Because the plaintiff's trade secret claims were based on the confidential information exchanged pursuant to the non-disclosure agreement, the court concluded that the defendant had fair notice of the scope of the trade secrets asserted. Id.

1 Plaintiff asserts that the "sufficient particularity" pleading standard applies only to claims under the California Uniform Trade Secrets Act ("CUTSA"), and not the DTSA. See Opp. at 9. Not so. The majority of courts in this district have held that the same standard is applied to both DTSA and CUTSA claims because "[t]he elements of misappropriation under the DTSA are similar to those under the CUTSA." Alta Devices, 343 F. Supp. 3d at 877; see id. at 880–81 ("Courts have held that the DTSA and the CUTSA share the same pleading requirements for the identification of trade secrets."). But see Physician's Surrogacy, Inc. v. German, No. 17CV0718-MMA (WVG), 2017 WL 3622329, at *9 (S.D. Cal. Aug. 23, 2017).

*1145 In contrast, the court in Vendavo, Inc. v. Price f(x) AG, No. 17-CV-06930-RS, 2018 WL 1456697 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 23, 2018) found that the plaintiff failed to allege its trade secret claim with sufficient particularity. The plaintiff, a provider of business software, claimed that the defendant had misappropriated trade secrets including "source code, customer lists and customer related information, pricing information, vendor lists and related information, marketing plans and strategic business development initiatives, 'negative knowhow' learned through the course of research and development, and other information related to the development of its price-optimization software, including ideas and plans for product enhancements." Id. at *3. The court determined that the plaintiff had "set out its purported trade secrets in broad, categorical terms, more descriptive of the types of information that generally may qualify as protectable trade secrets than as any kind of listing of particular trade secrets [it] has a basis to believe actually were misappropriated here.” Id. at *4 (emphasis in original).

[15] Here, AlterG alleges that Defendants misappropriated the following trade secrets:

- “[N]umerous learnings from AlterG's Low-Cost Platform Project that explored market alternatives that included positive and negative learnings of low cost mechanical unweighted systems, air pressure systems, and Differential Air Pressure systems under strict confidentiality and non-disclosure agreements. Compl. ¶ 40.
- Trade secrets “related to AlterG's development of anti-gravity rehabilitation products” and “mechanical unweighting mainframes,” including “technology and negative information and learnings.” Id. ¶¶ 95–96.
- “[T]rade secret information related to AlterG's design and development of its anti-gravity rehabilitation and training units, including, but not limited to its marketing and product strategy, cost strategies, customer needs, material selection and fabrication techniques, engineering and structural technology, selection and qualification of components, knowledge of vendors with appropriate, specialized skills, and technology innovation.” Id. ¶ 102.

These allegations more closely resemble the broad categories of information in Vendavo than the specific descriptions provided in Alta Devices. The references in paragraphs 40 and 95–96 to “positive and negative learnings” and “technology and negative information and learnings” are vague. The types of information listed in paragraph 102 are somewhat more concrete, but are not tethered to a specific technology; it cannot be discerned which aspects of AlterG's “anti-gravity rehabilitation and training units” the information pertains to. And although AlterG, like the plaintiff in Alta Devices, has alleged that the trade secrets at issue are covered by confidentiality agreements between the parties, AlterG only summarizes rather broadly the categories of information protected by the agreements. See Compl. at 5 n.2 (defining “Confidential Information” to include “techniques, sketches, drawings, models, inventions, know-how, processes, apparatus, equipment, algorithms, software programs, software source documents, and formulae related to the current, future and proposed products and services of the Company, and includes, without limitation, its respective information concerning research, experimental work, development, design details, and specifications, engineering, financial information, procurement requirements, purchasing *1146 manufacturing, customer lists, business forecasts, sales, and merchandising and marketing plans and information”). AlterG has not attached the agreements to the complaint, and its allegations fail to “describe the subject matter of the trade secret with sufficient particularity to separate it from matters of general knowledge in the trade or of special persons who are skilled in the trade.” Alta Devices, 343 F. Supp. 3d at 881.

Accordingly, Defendants' motion to dismiss AlterG's trade secret claim is GRANTED. AlterG is granted leave to amend its complaint to allege with greater specificity the types of trade secrets that were misappropriated and the exact technology to which they pertain. Such allegations may be enhanced if the confidentiality agreements between the parties detail the protected information that AlterG imparted to Defendants. In amending its trade secret claim, AlterG should also take care to delineate the boundaries between its trade secrets and its information that has been made public through patents and patent applications. See Aqua-Lung Am., Inc. v. Am. Underwater Prod., Inc., 709 F. Supp. 2d 773, 788 (N.D. Cal. 2010) (explaining that “a plaintiff has a viable trade secret claim that would protect his proprietary unpatented technology[ ] only if he reveals implementation details and techniques beyond what was disclosed in his patent.”) (emphasis in original) (citation omitted).

2. Standing under DTSA

Defendants separately argue that AlterG's DTSA claim must be dismissed because AlterG only alleges acts of misappropriation that took place prior to May 11, 2016, the effective date of the DTSA. Mot. at 15. The DTSA applies to “any misappropriation of a trade secret ... for which any act occurs on or after the date of the enactment of [the] Act.” Defend Trade Secrets Act of 2016, Pub. L. No. 114-153, § 2(e), 130 Stat. 376, 381 (2016). The complaint alleges that “Defendants conspired almost immediately [after resigning from AlterG] to create a competing machine incorporating AlterG intellectual property.” Compl. ¶ 39. Defendants seize upon the “almost immediately” language to suggest that the alleged acts of misappropriation must have started as early as April 2015, when Whalen and Allen resigned from AlterG, and before the DTSA was enacted. Mot. at 15.

[16] AlterG counters that, although Defendants may have initially disclosed its trade secrets in 2015, they used the secret information in 2017, when they were developing the Boost One. Opp. at 9–10; see Compl. ¶ 38. This allegation is sufficient to support liability under the DTSA because “misappropriation” is defined as the “disclosure or use of a trade secret.” 18 U.S.C. § 1839(5) (emphasis added). Relying on § 1839(5), courts have generally held that the continued use of a trade secret after the effective date of the DTSA is actionable, even if the secret was initially disclosed prior to May 11, 2016. See, e.g., Cave Consulting Grp., Inc. v. Truven Health Analytics Inc., No. 15-CV-02177-SI, 2017 WL 1436044, at *4 (N.D. Cal. Apr. 24, 2017); AllCells, LLC v. Zhai, No. 16-CV-07323-EMC, 2017 WL 2929380, at *1 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 27, 2017).<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> It is true, as Defendants note, that the court in Avago Techs. U.S. Inc. v. Nanoprecision Prod., Inc., No. 16-CV-03737-JCS, 2017 WL 412524 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 31, 2017) ruled the other way. However, Avago Techs pre-dates cases like AllCells and Cave Consulting, and its holding was informed in part by the plaintiff’s inability to “cite[ ] any authority suggesting that the DTSA allows a misappropriation claim to be asserted based on the continued use of information that was disclosed prior to the effective date of the statute.” Id. at *9. Since then, cases have consistently endorsed just that view.

*1147 The Court therefore finds that AlterG has standing to bring its trade secret claim.

C. Breach of Contract

[17] AlterG’s second cause of action alleges that each Individual Defendant entered into confidentiality agreements with AlterG and breached those agreements “by integrating and using AlterG’s proprietary and confidential information into the Boost treadmill products.” Compl. ¶ 91. The elements of a breach of contract claim are: (1) the existence of a contract, (2) performance or excuse for nonperformance, (3) defendant’s breach, and (4) damages. Oasis West Realty, LLC v. Goldman, 51 Cal. 4th 811, 821, 124 Cal.Rptr.3d 256, 250 P.3d 1115 (2011). Defendants argue that AlterG fails to adequately plead three of these four elements.

1. Existence of a Contract

[18] First, Defendants argue that the complaint does not describe with specificity the terms of the contracts that were allegedly breached. Mot. at 16. A plaintiff can state a claim for breach of contract by quoting verbatim the terms of the contract or attaching the contract to the complaint, but he is not required to do so. “[A] complaint for breach of contract must include the contract itself or plead its essential terms.” Gross v. Symantec Corp., No. C 12-00154 CRB, 2012 WL 3116158, at *11 (N.D. Cal. July 31, 2012).

[19] Here, AlterG has not pleaded all of the essential terms of the relevant contracts. While the complaint states clearly that the contracts at issue require Individual Defendants to “keep confidential and not use or disclose AlterG’s proprietary and confidential information in any way contrary to the benefit of AlterG,” Compl. ¶¶ 20, 25–26, 34, it does not allege with sufficient particularity what the “proprietary and confidential information” is. The complaint merely lists broad categories of information covered by the agreements. See id. ¶ 34; id. at 5 n.2. As explained above, these broad categories are insufficient to put Defendants on notice of the scope of the trade secrets that are the subject of AlterG’s DTSA claim. AlterG’s breach of contract claim is also predicated on Defendants’ alleged disclosure of trade secrets, and AlterG must allege with more specificity the types of information protected by its confidentiality agreements.

Two other arguments Defendants make are easily disposed of. The first is that AlterG references multiple confidentiality agreements but does not specify which particular ones were breached. Mot. at 16. But the complaint indicates that Defendants breached all of the agreements. See Compl. ¶ 91; Opp. at 11. The second argument is that the complaint does not explicitly state whether the confidentiality agreements continued to have effect after Defendants’ employment with AlterG terminated. Mot. at 17. The complaint alleges, however, that an agreement signed by Whalen provided that he would not disclose AlterG’s confidential information during his work with AlterG “or at any time thereafter.” Compl. ¶ 21. The allegations with respect to Allen’s and Bean’s agreements are not so explicit, but the complaint states that the agreements required Allen and Bean to “not disclose any of AlterG’s confidential and proprietary information without AlterG’s permission” without mentioning any time limitation. Id. ¶ 88. It is therefore reasonable to infer that the duty of confidentiality imposed by Defendants’ agreements extended beyond their periods of employment.

*1148 2. Defendants’ Breach

Next, Defendants argue that AlterG “failed to plead specifically how each individual has breached his respective contract(s)” because AlterG nowhere mentions “what specific confidential information or trade secrets were in fact integrated into the Boost One.” Mot. at 17–18. The complaint currently alleges that the Boost One utilized “an anti-gravity unit that derived directly from the technology Whalen and other AlterG engineers developed for AlterG in the Low Cost Platform Project”; that Bean, while still employed at AlterG, “disclosed confidential and proprietary information about AlterG technology, marketing strategy, and prospective and actual customers and test sites to his friends at Boost”; and that “Defendants have taken technology and negative information and learnings from the [Low Cost Platform] Project ... and applied them to the Boost One product.” Id. ¶¶ 33, 36, 95. Once AlterG amends the complaint to describe the terms of its confidentiality agreements and the substance of its trade secrets with more particularity, it will be able to allege the specific trade secrets incorporated into the Boost One in violation of the confidentiality agreements.

3. Damages

[20] [21] Finally, Defendants claim that AlterG has failed to explain how the alleged breaches caused it to suffer damages, given that AlterG admits the LCPP was “not commercialized.” Compl. ¶ 43. Defendants misapprehend AlterG's damages theory. The complaint states that Defendants used AlterG's confidential information to “unfairly compete with AlterG and sell over 20 units to date to customers considering an AlterG unit,” causing “monetary damages” to AlterG. Compl. ¶ 46. It is well-established that non-speculative lost sales or profits can constitute contractual damages. See Illumina, Inc. v. Ariosa Diagnostics, Inc., No. C 14-01921 SI, 2014 WL 3897076, at *4 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 7, 2014); Grupe v. Glick, 26 Cal. 2d 680, 692, 160 P.2d 832 (1945). AlterG may not have brought LCPP-derived products to market, but it has nevertheless alleged that it has lost potential sales of its treadmills as a result of Defendants' exploitation of its confidential information from the LCPP. Allegations of “lost sales or profits” caused by a competitor's contractual breach are sufficient to establish damages at the pleadings stage. Openwave Messaging, Inc. v. Open-Exchange, Inc., No. 16-CV-00253-WHO, 2016 WL 6393503, at *9 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 28, 2016).

Defendants' motion to dismiss AlterG's breach of contract claim is GRANTED. AlterG is granted leave to amend its complaint to either attach the relevant confidentiality agreements or to allege their essential terms.

D. Breach of Fiduciary Duty

[22] AlterG's fourth cause of action alleges that Whalen breached the fiduciary duty he owed to AlterG by using AlterG's proprietary and confidential information to benefit Boost. Compl. ¶¶ 115–19. To state a claim for breach of fiduciary duty, a plaintiff must allege: (1) the existence of a fiduciary duty; (2) breach of the fiduciary duty; and (3) damage proximately caused by the breach. Pierce v. Lyman, 1 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 1101, 3 Cal.Rptr.2d 236 (1991). Here, Defendants do not dispute that Whalen owed a fiduciary duty to AlterG while he was serving as its director, but contends that the duty ended when he joined Boost, because by that point he was no longer a director of AlterG. Mot. at 18–19.

[23] [24] Defendants are correct that, as a general matter, an officer's fiduciary duty to their employer ends upon their *1149 resignation. See GAB Bus. Servs., Inc. v. Lindsey & Newsom Claim Servs., Inc., 83 Cal. App. 4th 409, 421, 99 Cal.Rptr.2d 665 (2000), disapproved of on other grounds by Reeves v. Hanlon, 33 Cal. 4th 1140, 17 Cal.Rptr.3d 289, 95 P.3d 513 (2004). However, “[c]ourts addressing the issue have rejected an expansive reading of the decision in GAB Bus. Servs. and appropriately recognized that officers are also charged with a continuing duty to protect privileged and confidential information, which continues even after they leave the company.” Sonoma Pharm., Inc. v. Collision Inc., No. 17-CV-01459-EDL, 2018 WL 3398940, at *7 (N.D. Cal. June 1, 2018) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). Indeed, the Restatement of Agency makes clear that, post termination, an agent continues to have “a duty to the principal not to use or to disclose to third persons ... trade secrets, written lists of names, or other similar confidential matters given to him only for the principal's use.” Restatement (Second) of Agency § 396(b). This means that Whalen owed a continuing fiduciary duty to AlterG not to use its confidential information to its detriment, even after he joined Boost. See Language Line Servs., Inc. v. Language Servs. Assocs., LLC, No. C 10-02605 JW, 2011 WL 13153247, at *8 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 17, 2011) (finding breach of fiduciary claim adequately pled where plaintiff alleged that defendant “used his access to Plaintiff's proprietary customer information to further his own anti-competitive agenda during his subsequent employment with [a competitor]”).

[25] However, the breach of fiduciary duty claim arises from the same confidentiality agreements underlying AlterG's breach of contract claim. As explained above, AlterG needs to describe the terms of the confidentiality agreements and the trade secrets they protect with more particularity so that it can be ascertained whether Whalen's disclosures constituted a breach of his fiduciary duty. Accordingly, Defendants' motion to dismiss AlterG's breach of fiduciary duty claim is GRANTED, and AlterG may amend its complaint to either attach the relevant confidentiality agreements or to allege their essential terms.

E. Interference with Contract

[26] AlterG's fifth cause of action is interference with contract. Compl. ¶¶ 121–27. “The elements which a plaintiff must plead to state the cause of action for intentional interference with contractual relations are (1) a valid contract between plaintiff and a third party; (2) defendant's knowledge of this contract; (3) defendant's intentional acts designed to induce a breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; (4) actual breach or disruption of the contractual relationship; and (5) resulting damage.” Pac. Gas & Elec. Co. v. Bear Stearns & Co., 50 Cal. 3d 1118, 1126, 270 Cal.Rptr. 1, 791 P.2d 587 (1990). Here, the complaint alleges that Defendants interfered with three sets of contracts: the confidentiality agreements between AlterG and Woodway; contracts between AlterG and its vendors, suppliers, and customers; and the confidentiality agreements between each Individual Defendant and AlterG. Compl. ¶¶ 121–124. Defendants argue that AlterG's allegations are deficient as to all three.

1. Confidentiality Agreements between AlterG and Woodway

[27] Defendants claim that the complaint fails to specify what agreements between AlterG and Woodway were interfered with. Mot. at 20. Defendants also argue that the complaint “presents no facts that support a possible breach of such agreements.” Id.

*1150 The first argument is unpersuasive. The complaint specifies that the contracts at issue are two confidentiality agreements between AlterG and Woodway: “a Master Agreement signed May 30, 2007, and a subsequent agreement signed in 2012.” Compl. ¶ 32. The essential terms of the agreements are also specified: “AlterG would provide to Woodway proprietary and confidential information to assist Woodway to build and supply AlterG with anti-gravity units,” including “all specifications, drawings, files, instructions, and other documents,” and this information was “not to be shared or used with or on behalf of any other person or entity.” Id. ¶¶ 30–31.

However, Defendants' second argument has merit. The complaint states that “Whalen and Allen started secretly working with Woodway on developing a low-cost anti-gravity unit,” and “utilized confidential, proprietary, and trade secret information from the [LCPP], and other AlterG intellectual property, to shortcut the research and development time to come to market with a lower cost unweighting treadmill utilizing a Woodway treadmill.” Compl. ¶ 33. This does not mean, however, that Whalen and Allen induced or caused Woodway to disclose AlterG's confidential information to them. In fact, the complaint does not even allege that Woodway in fact disclosed any information; it merely states that Whalen and Allen “utilized” information. It is difficult to imagine that Woodway possessed any confidential information from the LCPP that Whalen and Allen did not already have, given that “Whalen was the principal consultant and engineer” on the LCPP and Allen was also heavily involved in the LCPP. Id. ¶¶ 22, 27. If anything, as AlterG's “principal liaison” to Woodway, Allen may have been the one who conveyed AlterG's information to Woodway in the first place. Id. ¶¶ 25, 28.

Thus, AlterG has failed to adequately allege that Defendants induced Woodway to breach its contracts with AlterG.

2. Contracts with Vendors, Suppliers, and Customers

[28] AlterG's allegations with respect to its vendors, suppliers, and customers are wholly lacking. The complaint states only that “[c]ontracts existed between AlterG ... and AlterG vendors, suppliers, and customers” and that “Defendants have ... interfered with contracts between AlterG and its vendors, suppliers, and customers.” Compl. ¶¶ 121, 124. AlterG does not identify any of these “vendors, suppliers, and customers,” nor provide any details about the contracts and contractual provisions with which Defendants allegedly interfered. AlterG has therefore failed to state a claim with respect to these contracts. See AccuImage Diagnostics Corp v. Terarecon, Inc., 260 F. Supp. 2d 941, 956 (N.D. Cal. 2003) (dismissing interference with contract claim because plaintiff merely made “conclusory allegations that valid ‘contracts’ exist between itself and an unspecified third party” and provided no “facts surrounding the type or nature of the ‘contracts’ [defendants'] conduct allegedly interfered with”).

3. Confidentiality Agreements between Individual Defendants and AlterG

[29] AlterG alleges that Defendants interfered with each other's confidentiality agreements with AlterG. Compl. ¶ 124.

Defendants counter that “[t]here is not a single statement, allegation, or fact set forth in the complaint regarding Defendant inducing another Defendant to breach” these agreements. Reply at 11. It is true that while the complaint alleges that the Individual Defendants disclosed confidential information to each other, it stops short of explicitly stating that they *1151 intentionally induced each other to disclose this information. See, e.g., Compl. ¶ 36 (“Bean ... disclosed confidential and proprietary information about AlterG technology, marketing strategy, and prospective and actual customers and test sites to his friends at Boost” while he was still working at AlterG.). Nevertheless, a reasonable inference in AlterG’s favor can be drawn that Defendants encouraged each other’s disclosure. The allegation that they “conspired ... to create a competing machine incorporating AlterG’s intellectual property” undercuts the possibility that Whalen, Allen, and Bean each made the independent decision to disclose AlterG’s information to each other without any prompting. Compl. ¶ 39.

However, because AlterG needs to allege with more specificity the essential terms of the confidentiality agreements underlying this contractual interference claim, the Court will dismiss this claim pending AlterG’s amendment.

Accordingly, Defendants’ motion to dismiss the interference with contract claim is GRANTED with leave to amend.

F. Interference with Prospective Economic Advantage

[30] [31] [32] AlterG’s sixth cause of action alleges that Defendants interfered with its prospective economic advantage with Woodway and with AlterG’s vendors, suppliers, and prospective and current customers. Compl. ¶¶ 129–33. The elements of a claim for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage are: “(1) an economic relationship between the plaintiff and some third person containing the probability of future economic benefit to the plaintiff; (2) knowledge by the defendant of the existence of the relationship; (3) intentional acts on the part of the defendant designed to disrupt the relationship; (4) actual disruption of the relationship; and (5) damages to the plaintiff proximately caused by the acts of the defendant.” Blank v. Kirwan, 39 Cal. 3d 311, 330, 216 Cal.Rptr. 718, 703 P.2d 58 (1985). “The chief practical distinction between interference with contract and interference with prospective economic advantage is that a broader range of privilege to interfere is recognized when the relationship or economic advantage interfered with is only prospective.” Pac. Gas, 50 Cal. 3d at 1126, 270 Cal.Rptr. 1, 791 P.2d 587. Nevertheless, courts have made clear that “[t]he law precludes recovery for overly speculative expectancies by initially requiring proof” that it is “reasonably probable that the prospective economic advantage would have been realized but for defendant’s interference.” Westside Ctr. Assocs. v. Safeway Stores 23, Inc., 42 Cal. App. 4th 507, 522, 49 Cal.Rptr.2d 793 (1996) (emphasis in original) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

[33] AlterG’s vague allegations are insufficient to state a claim for interference of prospective economic advantage. With respect to Woodway, the complaint explains that Woodway supplies treadmills to AlterG and has long worked with AlterG to build treadmills “using AlterG’s proprietary designs.” Compl. ¶ 30. Thus, it can be reasonably inferred that this established commercial relationship contains the probability of future economic benefit to AlterG as Woodway continues to supply AlterG with treadmills. However, AlterG wholly fails to explain how Defendants’ actions have jeopardized the ongoing supplier relationship between Woodway and AlterG.<sup>3</sup> *1152 The complaint does not allege that Defendants intentionally acted to disrupt Woodway’s supply of treadmills to AlterG, or that the supply was actually disrupted. Indeed, “[t]o this day, Woodway continues to supply treadmills to AlterG.” Compl. ¶ 30.

3 AlterG alleges Defendants induced Woodway to breach its confidentiality agreements with AlterG, but the complaint does not indicate that any such breach in confidentiality disrupted Woodway’s supply of treadmills to AlterG.

[34] The allegations are even more lacking when it comes to AlterG’s relationship with its “vendors, suppliers, and prospective and current customers.” Compl. ¶¶ 131. Nowhere does the complaint identify these entities or allege any facts to explain their economic relationship with AlterG, much less suggest that such relationships contain[s] the probability of future economic benefit to [AlterG].” Blank, 39 Cal. 3d at 330, 216 Cal.Rptr. 718, 703 P.2d 58. Without any facts, it is impossible for the Court to determine whether it is reasonably probable that the prospective economic advantage would have been realized but for Defendants’ interference. See Buxton v. Eagle Test Sys., Inc., No. C-08-04404 RMW, 2010 WL 1240749, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 26, 2010) (dismissing interference claim because the complaint did “not contain factual allegations about the existence of any specific economic relationships with identifiable third parties”).

Accordingly, Defendants' motion to dismiss Plaintiff's interference with prospective economic advantage claim is GRANTED with leave for AlterG to amend.

G. False Advertisement

[35] AlterG's seventh cause of action alleges that Defendants engaged in false advertising in violation of § 43(a) of the Lanham Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a). A false advertising claim under § 43(a) has five elements: "(1) a false statement of fact by the defendant in a commercial advertisement about its own or another's product; (2) the statement actually deceived or has the tendency to deceive a substantial segment of its audience; (3) the deception is material, in that it is likely to influence the purchasing decision; (4) the defendant caused the false statement to enter interstate commerce; and (5) the plaintiff has been or is likely to be injured as a result of the false statement, either by direct diversion of sales from itself to defendant or by a lessening of the goodwill associated with its products." Skydive Arizona, Inc. v. Quattrocchi, 673 F.3d 1105, 1110 (9th Cir. 2012) (citing 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1)(B)).

[36] [37] Because AlterG alleges that "Defendants' false and misleading statements were made in bad faith, willfully, knowingly, and intentionally," Compl. ¶ 136, its false advertising claim sounds in fraud and is subject to the heightened pleading requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 9(b). See TransFresh Corp. v. Ganzerla & Assoc., Inc., 862 F. Supp. 2d 1009, 1017–18 (N.D. Cal. 2012). Accordingly, the complaint must allege " 'the who, what, when, where, and how' of the fraud." Id. at 1017 (quoting Vess v. Ciba-Geigy Corp. USA, 317 F.3d 1097, 1106 (9th Cir. 2003)).

[38] AlterG's false advertising claim does not meet the Rule 9(b) pleading standard. The complaint adequately alleges "what" the content of the alleged false statements were and "how" they were false:

- (1) [T]he Boost One claims to adjust air pressure to allow specific body weight calibration at any body weight, between full weight and 20% of body weight, and can be adjusted in 1% increments of body weight. In fact, the Boost One, as tested, does not calibrate to a specific user, does not unweight in precise *1153 1% of body weight increments, and cannot even distinguish an over 50 lb. weight difference between three different users that happen to use the same shorts and same rack height adjustment;

- (2) Boost claims the Boost One is safe and precise. But, not only does the Boost One not calibrate to specific user's actual weight and volume dimensions like the AlterG DAP systems, but the Boost One, as tested, did not record an error or stop when the air pressure dropped during a session when the shorts were unzipped. The Boost One air pressure also oscillates up and down during a session and does not remain stable – though no difference in calibration or pressure was noted on the machine;

- (3) Boost also implies that the Boost One is suitable for use in medical markets or is approved for hospital and clinic use so that it may be "prescribe[d]" for "patients" under the heading "Therapy & Rehabilitation" under product features at woodway.com. On information and belief, the Boost One has not been FDA approved like the AlterG DAP system, and Boost is actively deceiving consumers in their Boost One specification sheet; [and]

- (4) Boost also falsely implies that the Boost One has enjoyed wide market adoption by imputing the Woodway 4Front market to Defendants' Boost One. While the Woodway 4Front is a popular and widely distributed treadmill, on information and belief, the Boost One that incorporates a Woodway 4Front has not enjoyed such widespread acceptance or use by "top athletes" and "Hollywood stars."

Compl. ¶ 44 (line breaks added).

But the complaint does not specify "when" and "where" these statements were made. It merely asserts that "Defendants have disseminated" these statements. Id. This is not enough. See TransFresh Corp. v. Ganzerla & Assoc., Inc., 862 F. Supp. 2d 1009, 1020 (N.D. Cal. 2012) (dismissing false advertising claim where plaintiff did not "allege specific facts as to when or where these statements were made").<sup>4</sup> Without information about where and when Defendants made the alleged false statements, the Court cannot determine whether the statements were "disseminated sufficiently to the relevant purchasing public to constitute 'advertising' or 'promotion' " within the meaning of the Lanham Act. Coastal Abstract Serv., Inc. v. First Am. Title Ins. Co., 173 F.3d 725, 734–75 (9th Cir. 1999) (quoting 15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)(1)(B)); see, e.g., Prager Univ. v. Google LLC, No. 17-CV-06064-LHK, 2018 WL 1471939, at *10 (N.D. Cal. Mar. 26, 2018) (dismissing false advertising claim because the complaint lacked enough detail from which the court could determine whether the challenged representations were sufficiently disseminated).

4 The only specific fact AlterG alleges in this regard is that Defendants' misrepresentation that the "Boost One is suitable for use in medical markets or is approved for hospital and clinic use" is displayed at "woodway.com." Compl. ¶ 44. However, as Defendants point out, AlterG has alleged no facts to suggest that this statement made on Woodway's website is attributable to Defendants.

[39] [40] The complaint similarly fails to identify the "who." "[W]ithin the realm of Rule 9(b), 'everyone did everything' allegations are not countenanced. Prime Media Grp. LLC v. Acer Am. Corp., No. 5:12-CV-05020 EJD, 2013 WL 621529, at *3 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 19, 2013) (citing *1154 Destfino v. Reiswig, 630 F.3d 952, 958 (9th Cir. 2011)). But that is exactly what AlterG has alleged here. The complaint's allegations regarding false advertising are completely undifferentiated, merely asserting that "Defendants" are responsible for the statements. See Compl. ¶ 44. Although "there is no absolute requirement that where several defendants are sued in connection with an alleged fraudulent scheme, the complaint must identify false statements made by each and every defendant," and, "at a minimum, identif[y] the role of [each] defendant [ ] in the alleged fraudulent scheme." Swartz v. KPMG LLP, 476 F.3d 756, 764 (9th Cir. 2007) (emphasis removed). AlterG has failed to do so.

Accordingly, Defendants' motion to dismiss AlterG's false advertisement claim is GRANTED with leave for AlterG to amend.

H. Trade Libel

[41] [42] [43] AlterG's eighth cause of action is trade libel, based on Defendants' "false, disparaging, and defamatory statements regarding AlterG's business and products to several AlterG customers and potential AlterG customers." Compl. ¶¶ 142–45. "Trade libel is defined as 'an intentional disparagement of the quality of property, which results in pecuniary damage.' " Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. v. Centennial Ins. Co., 838 F.2d 346, 351 (9th Cir. 1988) (quoting Erlich v. Etner, 224 Cal. App. 2d 69, 73, 36 Cal.Rptr. 256 (1964)). A trade libel claim requires: (1) a publication, (2) which induces others not to deal with plaintiff, and (3) special damages." Id. (citing Polygram Records, Inc. v. Superior Court, 170 Cal. App. 3d 543, 548–49, 216 Cal.Rptr. 252 (1985)). Moreover, "a plaintiff must allege: (1) who made the statements, (2) to whom the statements were made, (3) the time and place of publication, and (4) the substance of the statements." NPK Indus. v. Hunter, No. 15-CV-00811-SI, 2015 WL 5461667, at *4 (N.D. Cal. Sept. 16, 2015) (citations omitted).

[44] Here, AlterG has adequately alleged who made the statements and the substance of the statements. The complaint specifies that "each of" the Individual Defendants told AlterG customers that "AlterG was going out of business, is in poor financial health and will not be able to get Woodway treadmills anymore," and that "AlterG DAP technology is inferior to that of Boost and that Boost is an equal or better system than AlterG DAP technology, but at a lower cost." Compl. ¶¶ 45, 142.

In contrast, AlterG has not adequately alleged when, where, and to whom the statements were made. It only asserts vaguely that the false statements were made to "several AlterG customers and potential AlterG customers," without identifying any of the customers. Id. ¶ 142. The trade libel claim is thus insufficiently pled. Compare NPK Indus., 2015 WL 5461667, at *5 (finding a trade libel claim adequately pled where the complaint specified "that defendants ..., through phone calls, visits and emails, made disparaging statements about [plaintiff] to [plaintiff]'s customers and business partners, several of whom [plaintiff] identifies by name," and that "these activities took place beginning in July 2013 and November 2013").

[45] AlterG has also failed to plead the "special damages" element of its trade libel claim. To establish this element, a plaintiff "may not rely on a general decline in business arising from the [alleged] falsehood, and must instead identify particular customers and transactions of which it was deprived as a result of the libel." Mann v. Quality Old Time Serv., Inc., 120 Cal. App. 4th 90, 109, 15 Cal.Rptr.3d 215 (2004), disapproved of on other grounds by Baral v. Schnitt, 1 Cal. 5th 376, 385, 205 Cal.Rptr.3d 475, 376 P.3d 604 (2016). Here, *1155 AlterG asserts that Defendants have "s[old] over 20 units to date to customers considering an AlterG unit," causing "monetary damages" to AlterG. Compl. ¶ 46. However, AlterG has not identified any particular customers associated with these sales, nor explained whether these customers' decision to purchase Boost products in lieu of AlterG products was attributable to Defendants' trade libel. See Heartland Payment Sys., Inc. v. Mercury Payment

Sys., LLC, No. C 14-0437 CW, 2016 WL 304764, at *11 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 26, 2016) (dismissing trade libel claims because “[plaintiff] does not identify any customer who refused to do business with it as a result of [defendant]’s allegedly libelous statements”); Piping Rock Partners, Inc. v. David Lerner Assocs., Inc., 946 F. Supp. 2d 957, 981 (N.D. Cal. 2013) (dismissing trade libel claim where “it is not even clear if this allegation [of lost sales] is connected to counterdefendants’ [libel]”).

Accordingly, Defendants’ motion to dismiss AlterG’s trade libel claim is GRANTED with leave for AlterG to amend.

I. UCL Claim

[46] AlterG’s ninth cause of action is unfair competition, brought under California’s Unfair Competition Law (“UCL”). Compl. ¶¶ 147–53. The UCL prohibits “any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice and unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising.” Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200.

1. “Unlawful” Prong

[47] Under the “unlawful” prong, “[t]he UCL ‘borrows violations of other laws and treats them as unlawful practices that the unfair competition law makes independently actionable.’ ” Wilson v. Hewlett-Packard Co., 668 F.3d 1136, 1140 (9th Cir. 2012) (quoting Cel-Tech Commc’ns, Inc. v. L.A. Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 180, 83 Cal.Rptr.2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999)). Although AlterG’s claims are not properly pled at this juncture, it may be able to cure its pleading deficiencies through amendment and establish violations of other laws that serve as a predicate for its “unlawful” claim. Accordingly, AlterG’s claim under the “unlawful” prong of the UCL is DISMISSED without prejudice.

2. “Unfair” Prong

[48] The “unfair” prong of the UCL prohibits a business practice that “violates established public policy or if it is immoral, unethical, oppressive or unscrupulous and causes injury to consumers which outweighs its benefits.” McKell v. Wash. Mut., Inc., 142 Cal. App. 4th 1457, 1473, 49 Cal.Rptr.3d 227 (2006). The California Supreme Court has held that “[w]hen a plaintiff who claims to have suffered injury from a direct competitor’s ‘unfair’ act or practice invokes section 17200, the word ‘unfair’ in that section means conduct that threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law, or violates the policy or spirit of one of those laws because its effects are comparable to or the same as a violation of the law, or otherwise significantly threatens or harms competition.” Cel-Tech Commc’ns, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Tel. Co., 20 Cal. 4th 163, 186–87, 83 Cal.Rptr.2d 548, 973 P.2d 527 (1999).

Here, AlterG describes Boost as “a direct competitor to AlterG.” Compl. ¶ 117. However, nowhere in its complaint or briefing does AlterG allege or attempt to argue that the misconduct it describes with respect to Defendants threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law or has effects comparable to a violation of an antitrust law. Indeed, case law suggests that the misconduct of a direct competitor must rise to significantly more serious levels than what has been alleged here to *1156 sustain a finding of unfairness under the UCL. See, e.g., In re Acacia Media Techs. Corp., No. C 05-01114 JW, 2005 WL 1683660, at *5 (N.D. Cal. July 19, 2005) (repeated filings of “objectively baseless patent infringement lawsuits” in “bad faith” are covered by antitrust law).

In response, AlterG argues that the false claims made by Defendants have also harmed consumers, Opp. at 18–19, and such harm supports its claim under the unfair prong. For this proposition, Defendants rely on Luxul Technology Inc. v. Nectarlux, LLC, 78 F. Supp. 3d 1156 (N.D. Cal. 2015), in which the court determined that the plaintiff had stated a claim under the unfair prong by alleging that the defendant “wrongfully and unfairly represented to third parties that [plaintiff]’s business and/or products are affected by legal issues that do not exist.” Id. at 1174. But the parties in Luxul Technology were not direct competitors. Rather, the defendant was a sales representative for the plaintiff. Id. at 1165. That case is therefore inapposite.

3. “Fraudulent” Prong

[49] To state a claim under the fraudulent prong of the UCL, “it is necessary only to show that members of the public are likely to be deceived” by the business practice or advertising at issue. In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th 298, 312, 93 Cal.Rptr.3d 559, 207 P.3d 20 (2009) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). Before evaluating the substance of AlterG’s claim under this prong, however, the Court must ensure that AlterG has standing to bring the claim. The UCL limits standing to those individuals who had “suffered injury in fact and has lost money or property as a result of the unfair competition.” Cal. Bus. & Prof. Code § 17204. The California Supreme Court has interpreted this standing provision as “impos[ing] an actual reliance requirement on plaintiffs prosecuting a private enforcement action under the UCL’s fraud prong.” In re Tobacco II Cases, 46 Cal. 4th at 326, 93 Cal.Rptr.3d 559, 207 P.3d 20. Thus, “courts have recognized that UCL fraud plaintiffs must allege their own reliance—not the reliance of third parties—to have standing under the UCL.” O’Connor v. Uber Techs., Inc., 58 F. Supp. 3d 989, 1002 (N.D. Cal. 2014) (emphasis in original); see Kwikset Corp. v. Superior Court, 51 Cal. 4th 310, 327, 120 Cal.Rptr.3d 741, 246 P.3d 877 (2011) (holding that the “plaintiff must allege he or she was motivated to act or refrain from action based on the truth or falsity of a defendant’s statement”).

[50] AlterG’s fraud claims here are predicated on the allegedly false statements Defendants made “to customers and prospects” about AlterG’s financial situation and product quality. Compl. ¶¶ 45–46. While the complaint explains that AlterG was harmed by Defendants’ fraud because customers relied on the misrepresentations and avoided AlterG’s products, there is no allegation that AlterG itself relied on Defendants’ statements. AlterG’s opposition brief does not dispute this. Accordingly, AlterG does not have standing under the UCL to pursue a claim under the fraudulent prong. See 23andMe, Inc. v. Ancestry.com DNA, LLC, 356 F. Supp. 3d 889, 911 (N.D. Cal. 2018) (dismissing claim under the fraudulent prong of the UCL where plaintiff alleged a competitor’s misrepresentations deceived consumers).

4. Restitution

[51] Damages cannot be recovered through a UCL claim. Korea Supply Co. v. Lockheed Martin Corp., 29 Cal. 4th 1134, 1144, 131 Cal.Rptr.2d 29, 63 P.3d 937 (2003). A plaintiff who prevails on such a claim is limited to injunctive relief and *1157 restitution. Id. Defendants insist that AlterG is not entitled to UCL relief because “restitution under the UCL ... is limited to money or property that defendants took directly from a plaintiff or in which a plaintiff has a vested interest.” L.A. Taxi Coop., Inc. v. Uber Techs., Inc., 114 F. Supp. 3d 852, 867 (N.D. Cal. 2015) (citation and alterations omitted). Defendants’ argument would carry the day if AlterG were seeking to recover money that Defendants made from sales to customers who would otherwise have purchased treadmills from AlterG. In that case, AlterG would not be asking for money that Defendants took directly from AlterG or in which AlterG has a vested interest. L.A. Taxi Coop., 114 F. Supp. 3d at 867. But that is not AlterG’s theory of relief. Rather, AlterG clarifies in its opposition brief that it is seeking to recover the value of the proprietary and confidential information Defendants misappropriated from AlterG. See Opp. at 19. That information is property in which AlterG “had an ownership interest.” Korea Supply, 29 Cal. 4th at 1144–45, 131 Cal.Rptr.2d 29, 63 P.3d 937. AlterG is thus entitled to restitution.

Accordingly, Defendants’ motion to dismiss AlterG’s UCL claim is GRANTED as to the unfair and fraudulent prongs. Dismissal of the unfair and fraudulent prong claims is with prejudice because AlterG has not demonstrated that Defendants’ alleged conduct threatens an incipient violation of an antitrust law or that AlterG relied on Defendants’ false statements.

J. Conspiracy

AlterG’s tenth cause of action alleges that Defendants entered into a conspiracy “to interfere with and damage AlterG’s business and misappropriate AlterG’s intellectual property and confidential information.” Compl. ¶¶ 155–62. Defendants argues this claim must be dismissed because conspiracy cannot be pled as a standalone cause of action.

[52] [53] Defendants are correct that “[c]onspiracy is not a cause of action, but a legal doctrine that imposes liability on persons who, although not actually committing a tort themselves, share with the immediate tortfeasors a common plan or design in its perpetration.” Applied Equipment Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd., 7 Cal. 4th 503, 510–11, 28 Cal.Rptr.2d 475, 869 P.2d 454 (1994). A conspiracy allegation must be “activated by the commission of an actual tort.” Swipe & Bite, Inc. v. Chow, 147 F. Supp. 3d 924, 936 (N.D. Cal. 2015) (citing Applied Equipment, 7 Cal. 4th at 511, 28 Cal.Rptr.2d 475, 869 P.2d 454). Here, AlterG may be able to state viable tort claims, such as for breach of fiduciary duty and interference with contract, via amendment. Accordingly, Defendants’ motion to dismiss the conspiracy claim as an independent cause of action is GRANTED, but AlterG can amend its complaint to state the viable tort claim and to make clear that it is alleging that the Individual Defendants conspired to commit tortious acts and are therefore each liable for those acts under a theory of conspiracy liability.

IV. CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the Court GRANTS Defendants’ motion to dismiss. The following causes of action are dismissed with prejudice:

- Ninth (UCL claim under the unfair and fraudulent prongs);
- Tenth (conspiracy as an independent cause of action).

The following causes of action are dismissed without prejudice, with leave to amend within 30 days of the date of this Order:

- First (patent infringement);
- *1158 • Second (breach of contract);
- Third (trade secret misappropriation);
- Fourth (breach of fiduciary duty);
- Fifth (interference with contract);

- Sixth (interference with prospective economic advantage);
- Seventh (false advertisement);
- Eighth (trade libel);
- Ninth (UCL claim under the unlawful prong).

This order disposes of Docket No. 15.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

All Citations

388 F.Supp.3d 1133

---

End of Document

© 2020 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-105

2020 WL 3833018
Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Ronald F. COLEY, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.
ESKATON et al., Defendants and Appellants.

Co84328
|
Filed 6/11/2020
|

Certified for Partial Publication. *

* Pursuant to California Rules of Court, rules 8.1105 and 8.1110, this opinion is certified for publication with the exception of parts IA, IC, ID, IE, IF, IIB, and IIC of the Discussion.

Synopsis

Background: Homeowner brought action against homeowners association (HOA), two directors on HOA's board, and housing community operators that employed majority of HOA directors for breach of fiduciary duty and other claims, alleging directors approved actions of HOA for benefit of operators rather than HOA itself and homeowners. Following trial, the Superior Court, Sacramento County, No. 34-2014-00171851-CU-MC-GDS, David W. Abbott, J., found directors breached fiduciary duty to HOA and its members but declined to find directors liable in their personal capacities and awarded homeowner damages and attorney fees. Operators and directors appealed and homeowner cross-appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeal, Raye, J., held that:

[1] directors failed to establish HOA transactions were fair and reasonable;

[2] directors had personal financial interest in transactions they approved that was distinct from interest of HOA members generally; and

[3] directors breached fiduciary duty to HOA members by approving transactions in which they had material financial interest and which were not inherently fair to HOA and its members.

Affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded with instructions.

Procedural Posture(s): On Appeal; Judgment.

West Headnotes (20)

[1] Corporations and Business Organizations 🔑

The “business judgment rule” is a policy of deference to a corporate board’s decisionmaking.

[2] Corporations and Business Organizations 🔑

The common law business judgment rule is similar to the statutory business judgment rule for nonprofit mutual benefit corporations in that it immunizes directors for their corporate decisions that are made in good faith to further the purposes of the corporation, are consistent with the corporation’s governing documents, and comply with public policy. Cal. Corp. Code § 7231.

[3] Corporations and Business Organizations 🔑

The common law business judgment rule is broader than the statutory business judgment rule for nonprofit mutual benefit corporations in that it insulates from court intervention those management decisions that meet the rule’s requirements. Cal. Corp. Code § 7231.

[4] Corporations and Business Organizations 🔑

A director cannot obtain the benefit of the business judgment rule when acting under a material conflict of interest.

[5] Corporations and Business Organizations 🔑

Deference under the business judgment rule is premised on the notion that corporate directors are best able to judge whether a particular transaction will further the company's best interests, but that premise is undermined when directors approve corporate transactions in which they have a material personal interest unrelated to the business's own interest or, particularly, when a majority of directors approve transactions while having a material conflict of interest.

[6] Corporations and Business Organizations 🔑

Although the business judgment rule is inapplicable to a director's decision to approve a corporate transaction while having a material conflict of interest, that is not to say that corporate decisions affected by these types of conflicts are improper as a matter of law.

[7] Corporations and Business Organizations 🔑

The common law business judgment rule requires interested directors to prove that the business arrangement they approved was fair and reasonable, a rigorous standard that requires them not only to prove the good faith of the transaction but also to show its inherent fairness from the viewpoint of the corporation and those interested therein.

[8] Corporations and Business Organizations 🔑

Unlike the statutory business judgment rule for nonprofit mutual benefit corporations, the common law business judgment rule is not concerned only with transactions between a corporation and either its directors or a business in which its directors have a material financial interest; rather, recognizing the potential for self-dealing may also exist outside this particular context, the common law business judgment rule requires directors to also satisfy its requirements when they approve other transactions in which they have a material financial interest distinct from the corporation's own interest. Cal. Corp. Code § 7233.

[9] Corporations and Business Organizations 🔑

Under the common law business judgment rule, although a director's conflict of interest with respect to a corporate transaction does not necessarily establish actionable impropriety, it shifts the burden to the director to show the transaction was just and reasonable.

[10] Corporations and Business Organizations 🔑

Directors of homeowners association (HOA), a nonprofit mutual benefit corporation, failed to establish that HOA transactions they approved while operating under material conflict of interest were fair and reasonable, as necessary to uphold transactions under common law business judgment rule, where directors made no showing that transactions, namely, assessments against common interest development and individually-owned homes within it, were inherently fair from viewpoint of HOA and those interested therein.

[11] Corporations and Business Organizations 🔑

Majority directors who approve a corporate transaction while operating under a material conflict of interest must show the approved transaction was "fair and reasonable," meaning they must not only prove the good faith of the transaction but also show its inherent fairness from the viewpoint of the corporation and those interested therein.

[12] Corporations and Business Organizations 🔑

Directors of homeowners association (HOA), a nonprofit mutual benefit corporation, who were employed by housing community operators that were HOA members had a personal financial interest in HOA's imposition of assessments against homeowners that was distinct from the interest enjoyed by HOA members generally, and, thus, common law business judgment rule did not shield directors' approval of assessments from judicial scrutiny; directors' incomes were tied in part to financial performance of their employers, incentivizing directors to shift costs of operating communities from employers to homeowners.

[13] Torts 🔑

The three elements of a cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty are the existence of a fiduciary relationship, a breach of fiduciary duty, and damages.

[14] Corporations and Business Organizations 🔑

The directors of a nonprofit mutual benefit corporation are fiduciaries who must act for the benefit of the corporation and its members.

[15] Common Interest Communities 🔑

Directors of homeowners association (HOA), a nonprofit mutual benefit corporation, owed fiduciary duty to homeowners who were HOA members.

[16] Common Interest Communities 🔑

Directors of homeowners association (HOA), a nonprofit mutual benefit corporation, breached fiduciary duty to HOA members by approving HOA actions in which they had material financial interest, where actions, namely, HOA's assessment of security service fees against homeowners that would have otherwise been paid by housing community operators that employed HOA directors and individual director's disclosure of HOA's privileged communications with its own counsel for director's own benefit, were not inherently fair from viewpoint of HOA and its members.

[17] Corporations and Business Organizations 🔑

Although the common law business judgment rule may generally provide a director with immunity for decisions made in good faith, such immunity does not apply when the director is acting under a material conflict of interest.

[18] Common Interest Communities 🔑

Homeowner's failure to show that actions by directors of homeowners association (HOA), a nonprofit mutual benefit corporation, were motivated by any specific self-interest or that directors benefited from their breach of fiduciary duty to HOA members, which occurred when directors approved HOA actions that benefited directors' employers while being inherently unfair to HOA and member homeowners, did not preclude homeowner from establishing claim for breach of fiduciary duty; specific self-interest and personal benefit from breach were not elements of cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty.

[19] Corporations and Business Organizations 🔑

A corporate director may still be liable for damages resulting from his or her breach of fiduciary duties, even if the director did not personally benefit from that breach; to find otherwise would absolve directors of liability when they abuse their positions to benefit, for example, friends and family, and would inappropriately immunize directors who abuse their positions to benefit themselves but fail to succeed for reasons outside their control.

[20] Common Interest Communities 🔑

A director's unlawful failure to abide by a homeowners association's governing documents is mismanagement.

Witkin Library Reference: 9 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (11th ed. 2017) Corporations, § 383 [Self-Dealing by Interested Directors.]

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of Sacramento County, David W. Abbott, Judge. Reversed in part and affirmed in part. (Super. Ct. No. 34-2014-00171851-CU-MC-GDS)

Attorneys and Law Firms

Diepenbrock Elkin Gleason, David A. Diepenbrock, Sacramento; Brady & Vinding, Michael E. Vinding and Michael V. Brady for Plaintiff and Appellant.

Horvitz & Levy, Jon B. Eisenberg, Peder K. Batalden, Burbank; Hefner Stark & Mariois, Kenneth R. Stone, Sacramento, Michael R. Williams, San Clemente; Law Office of Jon B. Eisenberg and Jon B. Eisenberg for Defendants and Appellants.

Opinion

RAYE, P. J.

*1 Eskaton, Eskaton Village-Grass Valley (Eskaton Village), and Eskaton Properties Inc. (collectively, the Eskaton entities) are related corporations that develop and support common interest developments for older adults in Northern California. Ronald F. Coley owns a home in one of their developments, Eskaton Village Grass Valley (the Village). He brought this suit against the Village’s homeowners association, two of the directors on the association’s board, and the directors’ employers (the Eskaton entities), alleging these directors ran the association for the benefit of the Eskaton entities rather than the association and its members.

The trial court agreed with Coley in part, finding these directors breached their fiduciary duty to the homeowners association and its members in several respects. In particular, the court found one director improperly shared with the Eskaton entities the association’s privileged communications with its counsel, and both directors, in violation of the association’s governing documents, approved certain assessments that benefited the Eskaton entities and harmed many of the association’s members. Based on this conduct, the court found the directors’ employers, the Eskaton entities, were liable for any damages Coley suffered as a result, though it declined to find the directors liable in their personal capacities. It awarded Coley damages of $2,328.51 and attorney fees of $654,242.53.

Both parties appealed. The Eskaton entities and the two director defendants (collectively, the defendants) contend the court should have afforded the directors more deference under the business judgment rule—a rule under which courts tend to defer to the decisions of corporate directors. They also claim the court misread the association’s governing documents, miscalculated appropriate damages, and misapplied vicarious-liability principles in finding the Eskaton entities liable for their employees’ conduct even though their employees were not liable themselves. Finally, they assert the court awarded an excessive amount of attorney fees. Coley, in his cross-appeal, raises several additional issues. He contends the court should have found the two directors personally liable for their conduct, and alleges the court wrongly rejected several of his claims against the defendants.

We agree in part with both of the parties. We find, as the defendants contend, that the court miscalculated the damages on certain claims and should, after reducing the damages award on remand, reconsider the awarded attorney fees in light of this reduction. We also agree, as Coley asserts, that the court should have found the two directors personally liable for their actions. In all other respects, we affirm the judgment.

BACKGROUND

I. The Village and the Association

The Eskaton entities, among other things, develop and support common interest developments for older adults in Northern California. One of those developments is the Village. The Village consists of 130 homes known as the “Patio” homes and 137 rented residences housed in a building known as the “Lodge.” It also consists of several common areas accessible to both Patio and Lodge residents, including walking paths and a maintenance building. Eskaton Village, an Eskaton subsidiary, owns the Lodge and its 137 residences, and various individual homeowners, including Coley, own the 130 Patio homes. Eskaton Properties, another Eskaton subsidiary, is responsible for the Village’s day-to-day management.

*2 Eskaton Village and the Patio homeowners are members of the Eskaton Village, Grass Valley Homeowners Association (the Association), a nonprofit mutual benefit corporation. A five-member board of directors runs the Association subject to the requirements of the Association's governing document, the "Declaration of Covenants, Conditions and Restrictions for Eskaton Village-Grass Valley Homeowners Association" (or the CC&Rs).

II. The Association's Governance Structure

Since the Association's inception, Eskaton Village has controlled three out of the five seats on the Association's board. Under the CC&Rs, the owners of the 267 housing units (the 137 Lodge residences and 130 Patio homes) are entitled to one vote per housing unit owned. Because Eskaton Village owns a majority of these units (137 of 267), it holds a perpetual voting majority.

Exercising its majority voting power, Eskaton Village has consistently elected three employees of the Eskaton entities to sit on the Association's board. And, at least in recent years, it has appointed directors who are financially incentivized to run the Association for the benefit of Eskaton Village. Two of those employees are defendants here, Todd Murch and Elizabeth L. Donovan. Murch is the chief executive officer and president of all the Eskaton entities. Donovan is the chief operating officer of all the Eskaton entities. Both are paid by Eskaton Properties and receive bonuses and incentive compensation in part based on Eskaton Properties' performance. Eskaton Properties' performance, in turn, is based in part on Eskaton Village's performance. The higher Eskaton Village's operating losses, for example, the lower Eskaton Properties' profits given the latter's subsidizing of Eskaton Village in years of operating losses—which, in fiscal year 2015 alone, amounted in a subsidy of hundreds of thousands of dollars. Given Murch's and Donovan's pay structure, the lower this subsidy (i.e., the better Eskaton Village performs) the higher their potential compensation.

III. The Association's Assessments for Security Services

Under the CC&Rs, the Association is authorized to levy various assessments against Eskaton Village and the Patio owners. Using this authority, the Association has assessed both for, among other things, "Security/Emergency Response" services since its creation in the early 2000s.

For its initial 10 years, the Association allocated the cost of providing these security and emergency response services equally between Eskaton Village and the Patio owners, with each covering 50 percent of the total cost. But in late 2012, the Association's board, in a three-to-two vote, approved a new budget that increased the Patio owners' relative responsibility for the cost of these services. Under the new budget, the Patio owners would cover 83.3 percent of the total costs of security services and Eskaton Village would cover the remaining 16.7 percent. The Eskaton-affiliated directors, including Murch and Donovan, all voted in favor of the new budget. The two other directors, including Coley, voted against.

IV. Coley's Suit and the Trial Court's Judgment

In November of 2014, Coley and another Patio homeowner, Karen B. Lorini, filed a class action against the Eskaton entities, Murch, Donovan, and, as a nominal defendant, the Association.<sup>1</sup> In their complaint, the two named plaintiffs alleged that Murch and Donovan, acting pursuant to the direction of the Eskaton entities, were managing the Association for the benefit of the Eskaton entities and to the detriment of the Patio owners. In particular, the plaintiffs contended that Murch and Donovan unlawfully voted to require the Patio homeowners to cover 83 percent of the cost associated with security services, allowed Eskaton Village to use the Association's maintenance building rent free, and engaged in various other acts of misconduct to benefit the Eskaton entities. In doing so, the plaintiffs asserted, the defendants breached their fiduciary obligations to the Association and its members and committed elder abuse against Patio owners like Coley who were aged 65 or older.

<sup>1</sup> Coley and Lorini also originally named Mark T. Cullen and Trevor Hammond as additional defendants, but neither were listed in the plaintiffs' final amended complaint.

*3 Coley and Lorini later amended their complaint to add additional causes of action in light of the defendants' postcomplaint conduct. The first addition concerned the Association's assessment for legal fees. To cover the cost of litigation in this case, the Association initially relied on assessments imposed on both the Patio and Lodge owners. But beginning in late 2015, it began imposing certain fees on the Patio owners alone. Coley and Lorini contended the director defendants violated the Association's CC&Rs in approving this change. The second addition concerned Murch's disclosure of certain records. The Association's attorneys advised the Association on certain matters relating to this litigation. At some point, Murch shared this information with his personal counsel and the Eskaton entities' counsel. Based on this conduct, Coley and Lorini alleged Murch breached his fiduciary duty to the Association by disclosing the Association's privileged communications.

Before trial, Coley and Lorini moved to certify their action as a class action on behalf of themselves and similarly situated Patio homeowners. But after Coley's individual claims were severed from the proposed class to expedite the resolution of his claims, the parties agreed to stay the hearing on the motion for class certification until after the resolution of Coley's claims.

The trial on Coley's claims began in December of 2015, and in early 2017, the trial court issued its judgment. Before addressing Coley's specific claims, the court first noted a "principle issue in this case guiding the Court's determination of Plaintiff's claims against Defendants is whether a conflict of interest was created when Eskaton retained control of the [Association] Board of Directors by filling three positions with its own employees." The court concluded it was. Although Murch and Donovan, as directors of the Association, were charged with serving the best interest of the Association and all its members, the court found both were financially incentivized to operate the Association for the benefit of one member in particular—Eskaton Village. The court explained that both directors were paid in part based on Eskaton Properties' performance, and that Eskaton Properties' performance in turn was based in part on Eskaton Village's performance. Thus, the court reasoned, "the conclusion is inescapable that the financial success of [Eskaton Village] plays a role in determining [the directors'] compensation and advancement, even if is not the only factor." The court found this pay structure left the directors in an "irreconcilable conflict of interest."

Turning to Coley's specific claims, the trial court agreed in part with six of his 12 causes of action, several of which overlapped. It found Murch and Donovan breached their fiduciary duties and violated the Association's CC&Rs when they voted to raise the Patio owners' share of the security and emergency response costs from 50 percent to 83.3 percent. It found they further breached their fiduciary duties and violated the Association's CC&Rs when they voted to charge certain legal expenses to the Patio owners alone. And it found Murch also breached his fiduciary duty when he disclosed the Association's privileged communications with its counsel to further his own "interest rather than the interest of the [Association]." Because of this conduct, the court found all the defendants—including the corporate defendants—were liable to pay damages to Coley that resulted from the various breaches of fiduciary duty. The court calculated these damages to be $2,328.51.

The court, however, clarified in a prejudgment order that only the corporate defendants were in fact liable to pay this amount. Following the court's proposed statement of decision, Coley asked the court to clarify that Murch and Donovan were liable in their personal capacities. But the court declined to find the two directors liable, reasoning that Coley had failed to show they acted in self-interest, benefited from their breach of fiduciary duty, or mismanaged the Association. The court went on to note, however, that Eskaton Properties and Eskaton Village were "vicariously liable" for damages caused by the directors within the scope of their employment.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> As the defendants note, the court's reference to Eskaton Properties and Eskaton Village alone, and not also Eskaton, was an apparent oversight.

*4 Following the court's judgment, Coley moved to obtain attorney fees under Civil Code section 5975, which allows the prevailing party in any action to enforce the CC&Rs of a common interest development to obtain attorney fees and costs. Coley contended the court should find all his attorneys' time compensable, apply a positive multiplier to enhance the fee award, and award total fees in the amount of $1,140,445.03. The defendants, in opposition, contended the court should instead apply a negative multiplier and award fees only for the time spent on claims that allowed attorney fees. The court struck a middle path. Because it believed the considerations in favor of either a positive or negative multiplier canceled out, it rejected the parties' competing demands for a multiplier and instead declined to apply any multiplier. And because it found "the factual issues between fee-eligible and non-fee eligible claims were inextricably intertwined," it also rejected the defendants' request that Coley be awarded fees only for the time spent on fee-recoverable claims. The court awarded Coley attorney fees in the amount of $648,058.25 plus accrued interest of $6,184.28, for a total of $654,242.53.

Both parties timely appealed the court's judgment.

DISCUSSION

I. The Defendants' Appeal

A. The Corporate Defendants' Liability **

** See footnote *, ante.

B. Application of the Business Judgment Rule

[1] The defendants' next claim the court misapplied the business judgment rule. The business judgment rule is a policy of deference to a corporate board's decisionmaking. (Lamden v. La Jolla Shores Clubdominium Homeowners Assn. (1999) 21 Cal.4th 249, 257, 87 Cal.Rptr.2d 237, 980 P.2d 940 (Lamden)).) But the trial court here found the rule inapplicable because the Eskaton entities' employees who sat on the Association's board had an "irreconcilable conflict of interest" that "preclude[d] the business judgment rule as a defense to liability in this case." According to the defendants, rather than finding this conflict precluded the business judgment rule altogether, the court instead should have afforded the defendants an opportunity to reclaim the benefit of the rule by showing they acted in good faith after reasonably investigating material facts. We view the law differently.

1. Background law

*5 [2] [3] California recognizes two types of business judgment rules: one based on statute and another on the common law. (Lamden, supra, 21 Cal.4th at p. 259 & fn. 6, 87 Cal.Rptr.2d 237, 980 P.2d 940.) Corporations Code section 7231 supplies the relevant statutory rule for nonprofit mutual benefit corporations like the Association. Under that statute, a director is not liable for "failure to discharge the person's obligations as a director" if the director acted "in good faith, in a manner such director believes to be in the best interests of the corporation and with such care, including reasonable inquiry, as an ordinarily prudent person in a like position would use under similar circumstances." (Corp. Code, § 7231, subs. (a), (c).) The common law business judgment rule is similar but broader in scope. It is similar in that it immunizes directors for their corporate decisions that are made in "good faith ... to further the purposes of the [corporation], are consistent with the [corporation's] governing documents, and comply with public policy." (Nahrstedt v. Lakeside Village Condominium Assn. (1994) 8 Cal.4th 361, 374, 33 Cal.Rptr.2d 63, 878 P.2d 1275; see Lamden, supra, 21 Cal.4th at p. 257, 87 Cal.Rptr.2d 237, 980 P.2d 940.) And it is broader in that it also "insulates from court intervention those management decisions" that meet the rule's requirements.

(Lamden, supra, 21 Cal.4th at p. 257, 87 Cal.Rptr.2d 237, 980 P.2d 940.)

[4] [5] A director, however, cannot obtain the benefit of the business judgment rule when acting under a material conflict of interest. (Everest Investors 8 v. McNeil Partners (2003) 114 Cal.App.4th 411, 430, 8 Cal.Rptr.3d 31 (Everest Investors); Gaillard v. Natomas Co. (1989) 208 Cal.App.3d 1250, 1263, 256 Cal.Rptr. 702.) Deference under the business judgment rule is premised on the notion that corporate directors are best able to judge whether a particular transaction will further the company's best interests. (Gaillard, supra, 208 Cal.App.3d at p. 1263, 256 Cal.Rptr. 702.) But that premise is undermined when directors approve corporate transactions in which they have a material personal interest unrelated to the business's own interest. And it is particularly undermined when a majority of these directors approve transactions while having a material conflict of interest. Under those circumstances, the directors carrying this conflict of interest are precluded from seeking the benefit of the business judgment rule. (See Everest Investors, supra, 114 Cal.App.4th at p. 430, 8 Cal.Rptr.3d 31; Gaillard, supra, 208 Cal.App.3d at p. 1263, 256 Cal.Rptr. 702.)

[6] [7] [8] But although the business judgment rule is inapplicable under these circumstances, that is not to say that corporate decisions affected by these types of conflicts are improper as a matter of law. As with the business judgment rule generally, statutory and common law requirements are again relevant in this context. Corporations Code section 7233 supplies the relevant statutory rule. It provides, among other things, that an interested director who casts a deciding vote on a transaction must show the "transaction was just and reasonable as to the corporation at the time it was authorized, approved or ratified." (Corp. Code, § 7233, subd. (a)(3).) Section 7233, however, only applies to transactions "between a corporation and one or more of its directors, or between a corporation and any domestic or foreign corporation, firm or association in which one or more of its directors has a material financial interest." (Corp. Code, § 7233, subd. (a).) The common law rule, as before, is similar but broader in scope. It is similar in that it requires interested directors to "prove that the arrangement was fair and reasonable"—a rigorous standard that requires them "not only to prove the good faith of the transaction but also to show its inherent fairness from the viewpoint of the corporation and those interested therein." (Tenzer v. Superscope, Inc. (1985) 39 Cal.3d 18, 31-32, 216 Cal.Rptr. 130, 702 P.2d 212 (Tenzer)).) And it is broader in that, unlike Corporations Code section 7233, it is not concerned only with transactions between a corporation and either its directors or a business in which its directors have a material financial interest. (See Corp. Code, § 7233, subd. (a).) Rather, recognizing the potential for self-dealing may also exist outside this particular context, courts have found directors must also satisfy the common law requirements when they approve other transactions in which they have a material financial interest distinct from the corporation's own interest. (See Heckmann v. Ahmanson (1985) 168 Cal.App.3d 119, 127-128, 214 Cal.Rptr. 177 (Heckmann) [directors who approved corporate action intended to stave off a company takeover and protect their board positions were required to show “the transaction was entered in good faith” and was “inherent[ly] fair[ ] from the viewpoint of the corporation and those interested therein”]; see also Remillard Brick Co. v. Remillard-Dandini Co. (1952) 109 Cal.App.2d 405, 416-421, 241 P.2d 66 [common law requirements of “good faith” and “inherent fairness” exist independent of statutory “‘just and reasonable’” requirements].)

2. The trial court's application of the business judgment rule

*6 [9] Turning to the trial court's decision here, we find the court appropriately summarized the relevant principles governing the business judgment rule. It correctly explained that directors acting under a conflict of interest cannot obtain the benefit of the business judgment rule. (See Everest Investors, supra, 114 Cal.App.4th at p. 430, 8 Cal.Rptr.3d 31.) And it rightly added that although “a conflict does not necessarily establish actionable impropriety,” it shifts the burden to the director to show the transaction was “‘just and reasonable.’”<sup>3</sup> (See Tenzer, supra, 39 Cal.3d at pp. 31-32, 216 Cal.Rptr. 130, 702 P.2d 212.)

<sup>3</sup> The trial court derived the “just and reasonable” standard from Corporations Code section 7233. On the facts here, however, we believe it better to find these principles derive from the common law rather than section 7233. As discussed in Part I.B.1. ante, section 7233 only applies to transactions between a corporation and its directors or a business in which its directors have a material financial interest. (Corp. Code, § 7233, subd. (a).) And the disputed transactions here do not fit within one of these categories. But even so, we still agree with the court's finding that the director had the burden to show the transaction was just (or fair) and reasonable. (See Tenzer, supra, 39 Cal.3d at pp. 31-32, 216 Cal.Rptr. 130, 702 P.2d 212 [discussing the common law “fair and reasonable” requirements].)

The defendants make no effort to satisfy this “just and reasonable” standard, but instead assert the trial court should have shifted the burden to the Eskaton directors to show they approved the disputed transactions in “good faith” after a “reasonable inquiry.”

In support of this alternative standard, the defendants rely on Katz v. Chevron Corp. (1994) 22 Cal.App.4th 1352, 27 Cal.Rptr.2d 681 and Lee v. Interinsurance Exchange (1996) 50 Cal.App.4th 694, 57 Cal.Rptr.2d 798. Katz concerned a corporate board's defensive actions in response to an attempted corporate takeover—actions that were reviewed under Delaware law. (Katz, supra, 22 Cal.App.4th at pp. 1367-1368, 27 Cal.Rptr.2d 681.) Applying Delaware law, the Katz court found that because the board directors might have acted to protect their own interests in adopting these defensive measures, the board was not entitled to deference under the business judgment rule unless it first passed the “enhanced” scrutiny test—that is, unless the board showed (1) it had reasonable grounds for believing that “‘a danger to corporate policy and effectiveness existed because of another person's stock ownership’” —which could be established by “‘showing good faith and reasonable investigation’” —and (2) its action was “‘reasonable in relation to the threat posed.’” (Id. at p. 1367, 27 Cal.Rptr.2d 681.) The Lee court, in turn, relied on Katz in discussing California's general background rules on conflicts of interest—even though the Katz decision concerned Delaware, not California, law. (Lee, supra, 50 Cal.App.4th at p. 715, 57 Cal.Rptr.2d 798.) Never mentioning its principles derived from Delaware law, the Lee court suggested that a director is not entitled to the benefit of the business judgment rule in the event of a conflict of interest, unless the director first shows “good faith and reasonable investigation.” (Ibid.) But that suggestion was ultimately irrelevant to the case, as the appellants there did not even allege facts establishing a conflict of interest. (Id. at pp. 701, 715, 57 Cal.Rptr.2d 798.)

The defendants, in sum, rely on one case that summarized Delaware law, and another case that, in dictum, summarized a case that summarized Delaware law. Belatedly recognizing this heavy reliance on Delaware law after oral argument, the defendants submitted a postargument letter asserting that California courts “may properly rely on corporate law developed in the State of Delaware given that it is identical to California corporate law for all practical purposes.” (Oakland Raiders v. National Football League (2001) 93 Cal.App.4th 572, 586, fn. 5, 113 Cal.Rptr.2d 255.) But even if that were true, it would not favor the defendants’ argument.

*7 To begin, even under Delaware law, the defendants’ position would fail. Under Delaware law, courts apply “‘enhanced’ ” scrutiny—the type of scrutiny the defendants’ request here—in a narrow set of cases; specifically, “‘whenever the record reflects that a board of directors took defensive measures in response to a perceived threat to corporate policy and effectiveness which touches on issues of control.’ ” (Gantler v. Stephens (Del. 2009) 965 A.2d 695, 705.) But they apply “even more exacting scrutiny” when there is evidence of “actual self-interest” that “affects a majority of the directors approving a transaction.” (Paramount Communications Inc. v. QVC Network Inc. (Del. 1994) 637 A.2d 34, 42, fn. 9.) And it is the latter scenario, not the former, that describes the facts of our case. Under those circumstances, the directors must prove the “entire fairness” of the transaction—a test requiring directors to “demonstrate both their utmost good faith and the most scrupulous inherent fairness of transactions in which they possess a financial, business or other personal interest which does not devolve upon the corporation or all stockholders generally.” (Mills Acquisition Co. v. MacMillan, Inc. (Del. 1989) 559 A.2d 1261, 1280; see Weinberger v. UOP, Inc. (Del. 1983) 457 A.2d 701, 710 [“When directors of a Delaware corporation are on both sides of a transaction, they are required to demonstrate their utmost good faith and the most scrupulous inherent fairness of the bargain”].)

[10] [11] California law, more importantly, demands the very same of majority directors who approve transactions while operating under a material conflict of interest. Directors faced with such divided loyalties must show the approved transaction was “fair and reasonable”—meaning they must not only “‘prove the good faith of the transaction but also ... show its inherent fairness from the viewpoint of the corporation and those interested therein. [Citation.]’ ” (Tenzer, supra, 39 Cal.3d at pp. 31-32, 216 Cal.Rptr. 130, 702 P.2d 212; Heckmann, supra, 168 Cal.App.3d at pp. 127-128, 214 Cal.Rptr. 177.) And again, we find the trial court fairly captured this requirement in concluding the Eskaton-affiliated directors, because of their conflict of interest, had the burden to show their approved assessments were “just and reasonable.” The defendants here, however, never made this showing.<sup>4</sup>

4 Although the defendants never contend the directors’ actions were inherently fair, they at least assert the directors acted in good faith. But even there, we question whether their showing could be found sufficient. To demonstrate good faith, the defendants rely principally on two points. First, they contend the California Department of Real Estate’s approval of the creation of the Association (including its management structure) “demonstrates the requisite element of good faith.” But that the department initially approved the creation of the Association does not show the Association’s directors later governed the Association in good faith. Second, the defendants contend the trial court itself found their appointed directors “did nothing worse than make honest mistakes.” But the court only found that Coley failed to show these directors were “motivated by specific self-interest.” It never made an affirmative finding that the directors in fact acted in good faith.

Finally, as an alternative argument, the defendants argue that the Eskaton-affiliated directors had no improper conflict of interest at all, relying on Lexin v. Superior Court (2010) 47 Cal.4th 1050, 103 Cal.Rptr.3d 767, 222 P.3d 214 (Lexin). But Lexin offers them no support. The court in Lexin considered whether six city officials who voted on a matter that affected their government pension benefits violated Government Code section 1090—a statute barring public officials from being personally financially interested in the contracts they form in their official capacities. (Lexin, supra, 47 Cal.4th at p. 1062, 103 Cal.Rptr.3d 767, 222 P.3d 214.) It ultimately concluded most did not as a matter of law in light of a statutory exception to Government Code section 1090 that applies when the official’s financial interest is the same as the official’s constituency. (Lexin, supra, 47 Cal.4th at pp. 1063, 1094, 103 Cal.Rptr.3d 767, 222 P.3d 214.) As the court explained, although the charged officials were financially interested in the matter, their interest was shared by “thousands of their fellow retirement system members.” (Id. at p. 1063, 103 Cal.Rptr.3d 767, 222 P.3d 214.)

*8 [12] But the defendants here can point to no similar statutory exception to absolve them of their conflict. Nor would it matter if they could. The city officials in Lexin voted on a matter that affected them and their constituents in similar ways. For that reason, the court found, “the financial interest in question is not personal to an employee or official because it is shared with like members of the public agency’s constituency.” (Lexin, supra, 47 Cal.4th at p. 1095, 103 Cal.Rptr.3d 767, 222 P.3d 214.) But the same cannot be said of the Eskaton-controlled directors. Their financial interest was personal and distinct from that enjoyed by the Association members generally. As the trial court explained, the directors' incomes were tied in part to the financial performance of Eskaton Village—incentivizing the directors to shift costs from Eskaton Village to the Patio owners. And that is what they ultimately did, to the benefit of the Eskaton entities and the detriment of the Patio owners.

C.-F. ***

*** See footnote *, ante.

II. Coley's Cross-Appeal

A. Murch's and Donovan's Liability

Coley, in his cross-appeal, first contends the trial court should have found Murch and Donovan liable in their personal capacities. The trial court declined to do so because it concluded “the evidence failed to establish (1) conduct by the majority directors was motivated by specific self-interest; (2) the individual directors benefited from their breach of fiduciary duty or (3) that the actions of the directors amounted to mismanagement of the HOA.” According to Coley, the court erred in requiring this showing; it was enough, he maintains, that he showed (1) the directors had a fiduciary obligation to him and other Patio owners, (2) they breached this duty by approving transactions—while acting under a material conflict of interest—that were unfair to Coley and other Patio owners, and (3) Coley suffered damages as a result of this breach. We agree.

[13] [14] The trial court correctly set out the three elements of the cause of action at issue: existence of a fiduciary relationship, breach of fiduciary duty, and damages. (Oasis West Realty, LLC v. Goldman (2011) 51 Cal.4th 811, 820, 124 Cal.Rptr.3d 256, 250 P.3d 1115 (Oasis West Realty)). And as it further explained, the directors of a nonprofit mutual benefit corporation, like the Association here, are fiduciaries who must act for the benefit of the corporation and its members. (Frances T. v. Village Green Owners Assn. (1986) 42 Cal.3d 490, 513, 229 Cal.Rptr. 456, 723 P.2d 573 (Frances T.) [“Directors of nonprofit corporations ... are fiduciaries who are required to exercise their powers in accordance with the duties imposed by the Corporations Code”]; Cohen v. S & S Construction Co. (1983) 151 Cal.App.3d 941, 945, 201 Cal.Rptr. 173 [“This fiduciary duty extends to individual homeowners, not just the homeowners association”].)

The court also correctly applied these principles to the facts. It found the directors Murch and Donovan owed a fiduciary duty to the Association and its members—satisfying the first element for breach of fiduciary duty. It then concluded they breached their fiduciary duties by voting, inconsistent with the CC&Rs, to (1) raise the Patio owners' share of the security services from 50 percent to 83.3 percent, and (2) require the Patio owners alone, and not also the Lodge owners, to cover certain legal fees—satisfying the second element. It found Murch further breached his fiduciary responsibility by disclosing the Association's privileged communications with its counsel. Finally, the court found Coley suffered damages as a result of the directors' breaches of their fiduciary duties—satisfying the third and final element for breach of fiduciary duty.

*17 [15] [16] Each of these findings were supported by substantial evidence. First, as all parties accept, Murch and Donovan owed a fiduciary duty to Coley and other Patio owners. (See Frances T., supra, 42 Cal.3d at p. 514, 229 Cal.Rptr. 456, 723 P.2d 573; Jones v. H.F. Ahmanson & Co. (1969) 1 Cal.3d 93, 108-110, 81 Cal.Rptr. 592, 460 P.2d 464.) Second, substantial evidence supports the court's finding that Murch and Donovan breached this duty. As fiduciaries, Murch and Donovan were bound not to approve a transaction in which they had a material financial interest unless that transaction was “fair and reasonable”—meaning the transaction was entered in “ ‘good faith’ ” and was “ ‘inherent[ly] fair[ ] from the viewpoint of the corporation and those interested therein.’ ” (See Tenzer, supra, 39 Cal.3d at pp. 31-32, 216 Cal.Rptr. 130, 702 P.2d 212; see also id. at p. 32, 216 Cal.Rptr. 130, 702 P.2d 212 [discussing “the standards of fairness and good faith required of a fiduciary” in cases involving potential self-dealing]; Jones, supra, 1 Cal.3d at pp. 110, 112, 81 Cal.Rptr. 592, 460 P.2d 464 [majority shareholders owe a fiduciary duty of “good faith and inherent fairness to the minority in any transaction where control of the corporation is material”]; this “comprehensive rule of ‘inherent fairness’ ” also applies to directors who engage in transactions that conflict with their duty to shareholders]; Heckmann, supra, 168 Cal.App.3d at pp. 127-128, 214 Cal.Rptr. 177.)

But they failed to meet this standard. Even if the directors required the Patio owners to pay a greater share of the security-services fees and legal fees in good faith—which is debatable (see fn. No. 4, ante)—it could not be said that their doing so in violation of the CC&Rs was fair from the viewpoint of the Patio owners. Nor do we find Murch’s disclosure of the Association’s privileged communications was fair from the Patio owners’ perspective. Finally, substantial evidence supports the court’s finding that Coley and similarly situated Patio owners suffered damages as a result of these breaches—though, as discussed ante in Parts I.D. and I.E., some of the awarded damages must be adjusted downward.

Although the trial court found the directors breached their fiduciary duties, it declined to find them personally liable, reasoning in a prejudgment order that something more is required before the directors may be found personally liable for their misconduct. In the court’s view, Coley needed to show, in addition to the directors’ breach of their fiduciary duties, that they acted in self-interest, benefited from their breach of fiduciary duty, and mismanaged the Association.

[17] This was error. Once Coley established the existence of a fiduciary relationship, breach of fiduciary duty, and damages, he was entitled to damages absent some applicable affirmative defense. (See Meister v. Mensinger (2014) 230 Cal.App.4th 381, 395-397, 178 Cal.Rptr.3d 604 [“ ‘Where a breach of fiduciary duty occurs, a variety of equitable [and legal] remedies are available’ ”]; see also Oasis West Realty, supra, 51 Cal.4th at p. 820, 124 Cal.Rptr.3d 256, 250 P.3d 1115 [“The elements of a cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty are the existence of a fiduciary relationship, breach of fiduciary duty, and damages”]; Frances T., supra, 42 Cal.3d at pp. 503-504, 229 Cal.Rptr. 456, 723 P.2d 573 [corporate directors and officers may be liable for corporate wrongs when they “ ‘authorize[ ], direct[ ], or in some meaningful sense actively participate[ ] in the wrongful conduct’ ”].) As we have explained, although the common law business judgment rule may generally provide a director with immunity for decisions made in good faith, such immunity does not apply when, as here, the director is acting under a material conflict of interest.

[18] In demanding more from Coley before awarding damages, the court asked for too much. The court first faulted Coley for failing to show the “conduct by the majority directors was motivated by specific self-interest.” But even if the directors were not “motivated by specific self-interest,” and even if they acted in good faith, that would not be reason enough to avoid liability. Again, considering the directors’ material conflict of interest in the transactions they approved, they were required “ ‘not only to prove the good faith of the transaction but also to show its inherent fairness from the viewpoint of the corporation and those interested therein.’ [Citation.]” (Tenzer, supra, 39 Cal.3d at p. 32, 216 Cal.Rptr. 130, 702 P.2d 212.) And for reasons already discussed, the directors could not show their challenged actions were fair to Coley and other Patio owners.

*18 [19] The court next took issue with Coley’s failure to show “the individual directors benefitted from their breach of fiduciary duty.” But a director may still be liable for damages resulting from his or her breach of fiduciary duties, even if the director did not personally benefit from that breach. (See St. James Armenian Church of Los Angeles v. Kurkjian (1975) 47 Cal.App.3d 547, 553, 121 Cal.Rptr. 214 [“where a fiduciary, in breach of his duty of disclosure, causes secret profits to flow to a third party, the fiduciary may be held liable for those profits even though he did not personally receive any part of them”].) To find otherwise would absolve directors of liability when they abuse their positions to benefit, for example, friends and family. It would also inappropriately immunize directors who abuse their positions to benefit themselves but fail to succeed for reasons outside their control.

[20] Finally, the court faulted Coley for failing to show “that the actions of the directors amounted to mismanagement of the [Association].” But the directors’ failure to comply with the Association’s CC&Rs was mismanagement—at least to the extent of this failure. It may not have been pervasive mismanagement. It may not have been egregious mismanagement. But an unlawful failure to abide by an association’s governing documents is mismanagement to some degree nonetheless.

We find, in sum, the trial court should have found both Murch and Donovan personally liable for any damages resulting from their breaches of their fiduciary duties. We remand to allow the court to determine the amount of these damages consistent with Parts I.D. and I.E. of our opinion. We also remand to allow the court to determine the directors’ liability, if any, for Coley’s attorney fees.

B.-C.†

† See footnote *, ante.

DISPOSITION

The judgment is reversed in part and affirmed in part. We direct the trial court to enter a modified judgment finding

Murch and Donovan liable in their personal capacities for their respective breaches of their fiduciary duties. We also remand to allow the court to recalculate the damages award consistent with Parts I.D. and I.E. of our opinion; to consider whether the awarded attorney fees should be reduced in light of the reduced damages; and to determine Murch's and Donovan's liability for damages and their liability, if any, for Coley's attorney fees. In all other respects, the judgment is affirmed. The parties shall bear their own costs on appeal. (Cal. Rules of Court, rule 8.278(a)(5).)

We concur:

MAURO, J.

RENNER, J.

All Citations

--- Cal.Rptr.3d ----, 2020 WL 3833018, 20 Cal. Daily Op. Serv. 6832

---

End of Document

© 2020 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-106

248 Cal.App.4th 268

Court of Appeal, Fourth District, Division 1, California.

PALM SPRINGS VILLAS II
HOMEOWNERS ASSOCIATION, INC.,
Cross-complainant and Appellant,

v.

Erna PARTH, Cross-defendant and Respondent.

Do68731

Filed June 21, 2016

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing July 14, 2016

Petition for Review Denied October 12, 2016

Synopsis

Background: Condominium homeowners association brought action against former president for breach of fiduciary duty and breach of governing documents based on actions she took while president of the association. The Superior Court, Riverside County, No. INC1202588, John G. Evans, J., sustained former president's demurrer without leave to amend and granted summary judgment for former president, and association appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeal, Aaron, J., held that:

[1] genuine issue of material fact as to whether former president breached governing documents, and whether such breach fell outside the business judgment rule, precluded summary judgment under the business judgment rule on breach of fiduciary duty claim;

[2] genuine issue of material fact as to whether former president exercised reasonable diligence in investigating and paying roofers precluded summary judgment under the business judgment rule;

[3] genuine issue of material fact as to whether former president exercised sufficient diligence to inform herself of association's requirements pertaining to two loans secured by association assets precluded summary judgment under the business judgment rule;

[4] genuine issue of material fact as to whether former president acted in good faith precluded summary judgment under the business judgment rule;

[5] genuine issues of material fact as to application of exculpatory clause in conditions, covenants and restrictions precluded summary judgment; and

[6] association's cause of action for breach of governing documents was duplicative of cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty and thus was subject to dismissal by way of demurrer.

Reversed in part, affirmed in part.

Procedural Posture(s): On Appeal; Motion for Summary Judgment; Demurrer to Complaint.

West Headnotes (24)

[1] Appeal and Error  Summary Judgment

A summary judgment is not entitled to a presumption of correctness on appeal.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Corporations and Business Organizations  Business judgment rule in general

The common law business judgment rule refers to a judicial policy of deference to the business judgment of corporate directors in the exercise of their broad discretion in making corporate decisions; under this rule, a director is not liable for a mistake in business judgment which is made in good faith and in what he or she believes to be the best interests of the corporation, where no conflict of interest exists.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Corporations and Business Organizations  Business judgment rule in general

Notwithstanding the deference to a director's business judgment, the business judgment rule does not immunize a director from liability in the case of his or her abdication of corporate responsibilities. Cal. Corp. Code § 7231.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

- [4] Corporations and Business Organizations  Business judgment rule in general

Corporations and Business

Organizations  Duty to inquire; knowledge or notice

A director cannot close his eyes to what is going on about him in the conduct of the business of the corporation and have it said that he is exercising business judgment. Cal. Corp. Code § 7231.

- [5] Corporations and Business Organizations  Business judgment rule in general

Whether a director exercised reasonable diligence is one of the factual prerequisites to application of the business judgment rule. Cal. Corp. Code § 7231.

- [6] Corporations and Business Organizations  Business judgment rule in general

Corporations and Business

Organizations  Duty to inquire; knowledge or notice

Corporations and Business

Organizations  Trial and judgment

The business judgment rule raises various issues of fact, including whether a director acted as an ordinarily prudent person under similar circumstances and made a reasonable inquiry as indicated by the circumstances; such questions generally should be left to a trier of fact, but can become questions of law where the evidence establishes there is no controverted material fact. Cal. Corp. Code § 7231.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

- [7] Corporations and Business Organizations  Effect of ultra vires acts “Ultra vires conduct” is conduct that is beyond the power of the corporation, not an individual director.

- [8] Judgment  Particular Cases

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether former condominium association president breached governing documents, and whether such breach fell outside the business judgment rule, precluded summary judgment under the business judgment rule in homeowners association's action against former president for breach of fiduciary duty.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

- [9] Corporations and Business Organizations  Business judgment rule in general

Conduct contrary to governing documents may fall outside the business judgment rule. Cal. Corp. Code § 7231.

- [10] Judgment  Particular Cases

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether former condominium homeowners association president exercised reasonable diligence in investigating and paying roofers precluded summary judgment under the business judgment rule in association's action against former president for breach of fiduciary duty. Cal. Corp. Code § 7231.

- [11] Judgment  Particular Cases

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether former condominium homeowners association president exercised sufficient diligence to inform herself of association's requirements pertaining to two loans secured by association assets precluded summary judgment under the business judgment rule in association's action against former president for breach of fiduciary duty. Cal. Corp. Code § 7231.

[12] Judgment  Particular Cases

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether former condominium homeowners association president attempted to inform herself as to the extent of her and board's authority to approve multi-year landscaping contract without member approval precluded summary judgment under the business judgment rule in association's action against former president for breach of fiduciary duty. Cal. Corp. Code § 7231.

[13] Judgment  Particular Cases

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether former condominium homeowners association president proceeded with reasonable diligence in connection with property management company's termination precluded summary judgment under the business judgment rule in association's action against former president for breach of fiduciary duty. Cal. Corp. Code § 7231.

[14] Judgment  Particular Cases

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether former condominium homeowners association president exercised sufficient diligence when executing security contract precluded summary judgment under the business judgment rule in association's action against former president for breach of fiduciary duty. Cal. Corp. Code § 7231.

[15] Judgment  Particular Cases

Genuine issue of material fact as to whether former condominium homeowners association president acted in good faith in connection with various acts as president, including entering into contracts and loans, precluded summary judgment under the business judgment rule in association's action against former president for breach of fiduciary duty.

[16] Appeal and Error  Particular Cases and Contexts

Court of Appeal would deem forfeited condominium homeowners association's breach of fiduciary duty challenges to former presidents actions which were unsupported by argument and/or specific authority in appellate brief.

[17] Appeal and Error  Evidence and Trial

Former condominium homeowners association's president forfeited contention that evidence proffered in opposition to her motion for summary judgment on association's breach of fiduciary duty claims was inadmissible, where former president's appellate brief cited only her own evidentiary objections, rather than any ruling by the trial court, and did not offer any argument regarding the evidence itself other than to state generally that evidence without foundation is inadmissible.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[18] Corporations and Business Organizations  Business judgment rule in general

Corporations and Business Organizations  Degree of care required and negligence

There is no conflict between the business judgment rule and negligence, and application of that rule presupposes that reasonable diligence has in fact been exercised. Cal. Corp. Code § 7231.

[19] Judgment  Particular Cases

Genuine issues of material fact as to application of exculpatory clause in condominium homeowners association's conditions, covenants, and restrictions to association's breach of fiduciary claim against former president based on former president's actions, including whether she acted "upon the basis of such information as may be possessed" and whether she performed her duties in "good faith, and without willful or intentional misconduct” precluded summary judgment in association's action against former president for breach of fiduciary duty.

[20] Appeal and Error — Reply briefs

Condominium homeowners association could rely on business judgment rule arguments and evidence for issue of whether exculpatory clause in covenants, conditions and restrictions precluded form association president's liability for breach of fiduciary duty, where, although the association did not address the issue until its reply brief, it took the position that the exculpatory clause was a recitation of the business judgment rule, while president relied on the same undisputed facts to support both issues.

[21] Fraud — Time to sue and limitations

Purported four-year statute of limitations could not apply to only portion of condominium homeowners association's breach of fiduciary claim against former president.

[22] Judgment — Bar of statute of limitations

Genuine issues of material fact precluded resolution of statute of limitations issues at summary judgment stage in condominium homeowners association's breach of fiduciary duty action against association's former president.

[23] Pleading — Particular causes or grounds of action

Pleading — Surplusage and irrelevant, immaterial, or redundant matter

Condominium homeowners association's cause of action against former president for breach of governing documents was duplicative of cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty and thus was subject to dismissal by way of demurrer.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[24] Appeal and Error — Pleadings

Condominium homeowners association failed to offer any argument in appellate brief as to how it could amend its pleading to render breach of governing documents claim sufficient, and thus forfeited argument on appeal that trial court erred in sustaining former president's demurrer without leave to amend on grounds claim duplicated breach of fiduciary duty claim.

See 12 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (10th ed. 2005) Real Property, § 104.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

**510 APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of Riverside County, John G. Evans, Judge. Reversed in part, affirmed in part. (Super. Ct. No. INC1202588)

Attorneys and Law Firms

Epsten Grinnell & Howell, Anne L. Rauch and Joyce J. Kapsal, San Diego, for Cross-complainant and Appellant.

Kulik Gottesman & Siegel, Leonard Siegel, Thomas M. Ware II and Francesca N. Dioguardi, Sherman Oaks, for Cross-defendant and Respondent.

AARON, J.

*271 I

INTRODUCTION

The Palm Springs Villas II Homeowners Association, Inc. (Association), appeals from a judgment entered in favor of Erna Parth, in connection with actions she took while simultaneously serving as president of the Association and on its board of directors (Board). The court granted Parth's motion for summary judgment as to the Association's claim for breach of fiduciary duty on the basis of the business judgment rule and an exculpatory provision contained in the Association's declaration of covenants, conditions, and restrictions (CC&Rs). The court had previously sustained Parth's demurrer to the Association's claim for breach of governing documents without leave to amend, finding that the Association failed to allege a cognizable breach.

On appeal, the Association argues that the trial court erred in its application of the business judgment rule and that there remain material issues of fact in dispute regarding whether Parth exercised reasonable **511 diligence. We agree that the record discloses triable issues of fact that should not have been resolved on summary judgment. We therefore reverse the judgment in favor of Parth. The Association also contends that it stated a claim for breach of the governing documents and that the court erred in sustaining Parth's demurrer. We conclude that the document cause of action is, at best, duplicative of the fiduciary breach cause and affirm the ruling sustaining the demurrer as to that cause of action without leave to amend.

II

FACTUAL AND PROCEDURAL BACKGROUND<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> We rely on the facts that the parties set forth in their separate statements in the trial court and the evidence cited therein, as well as other evidence submitted with the parties' papers below. (Sandell v. Taylor–Listug, Inc. (2010) 188 Cal.App.4th 297, 303, fn. 1, 115 Cal.Rptr.3d 453.) However, we do not rely on evidence to which objections were sustained. (Wall Street Network, Ltd. v. New York Times Co. (2008) 164 Cal.App.4th 1171, 1176, 80 Cal.Rptr.3d 6.)

A. Background on Palm Springs Villas II and its governance

The Association is the governing body for Palm Springs Villas II, a condominium development, and is organized as a nonprofit corporation under California law. The Board, comprised of five homeowners or their agents, governs the Association. The Association's governing documents include the CC&Rs and its bylaws. Each homeowner is an Association member and is required to comply with the terms set forth in these documents.

*272 Certain provisions reserve to the Board the authority to take particular actions. Article VI, section 3, of the CC&Rs provides that the Board “shall have authority to conduct all business affairs of common interest to all Owners.” Article VI, section 1, of the bylaws describes the Board's powers, including to “contract ... for maintenance, ... and services” and to “borrow money and incur indebtedness ... provided, however, that no property of the association shall be encumbered as security for any such debt except under the vote of the majority of the members entitled to vote....”

Other provisions limit the Board's power and retain authority for the members. Article VI, section 1, of the bylaws explains that “[n]otwithstanding the foregoing, the Board shall not, except with the vote or written assent of a majority of the unit owners ... [¶] ... [e]nter into a contract with a third person wherein the third person will furnish goods or services for the common area or the association for a term longer than one year....” Article XVI, section 2, of the CC&Rs provides that “[n]otwithstanding any other provision of this Declaration or the Bylaws, the prior written approval of at least two-thirds (2/3) of the ... Owners ... shall be required” for actions including “the ... encumbrance, ... whether by act or omission, of the Common Area....”

The CC&Rs also contain an exculpatory provision. Article VI, section 16, provides: “No member of the Board ... shall be personally liable to any Owner, or to any other party, including the Association, for any damage, loss or prejudice of the Association, the Board, the Manager or any other representative or employee of the Association, or any committee, or any officer of the Association, provided that such person has, upon the basis of such information as may be possessed by him, acted in good faith, and without willful or intentional misconduct.”

**512 During the relevant time, Parth was president of the Association, as well as a Board member.

B. Events leading to breach allegations

1. Roofing repairs

In 2006, the Board hired AWS Roofing and Waterproofing Consultants (AWS) in connection with roofing repairs, with the intention that AWS would vet the companies submitting bids and perform other tasks related to the repairs. According to Parth, AWS prepared a budget estimate for the repairs, the Board submitted a request to the members for a special assessment to offset these costs, and the members voted against the request. Parth then found a roofing company on her own, without consulting either the Board or AWS.

*273 Parth indicated that she tried to contact the roofing company that had previously worked on the roofs, but it was no longer in business, and that she could not find another roofer due to the Association's financial condition. She obtained the telephone number for a company called Warren Roofing from a contractor that was working on a unit. The record reflects that the person Parth contacted was Gene Layton. At his deposition, Layton stated that he held a contractor's license for a company called Bonded Roofing and that he had a relationship with Warren Roofing, which held a roofing license. When asked about that relationship, Layton explained that on a large project, he would be the project manager.

At Parth's deposition, Association counsel asked Parth if she had investigated whether Warren Roofing had a valid license. She replied, "[h]e does and did and bonded and insured." Counsel clarified "[t]here's a Bonded Roofing and Warren Roofing. Who did you hire?" Parth responded "One Roofing. That's all one company, I think." Counsel then asked if she had "investigate[d] whether Bonded Roofing was licensed," and Parth answered, "I did not investigate anything."

According to a June 2007 Board resolution, the Board hired Bonded Roofing to work on a time and materials basis. Layton said that he never met with the Board in a formal meeting or submitted a bid for the work before he started work on the roof. The Association had no records of a written contract with Bonded Roofing or any other roofer.

Warren Roofing submitted invoices and was ultimately paid more than $1.19 million for the work. Many of the checks were signed by Parth. Layton stated that "Bonded Roofing had nothing to do with the money on this job" and that he was paid by Warren Roofing. Boardmember Tom Thomas indicated that no invoices from Warren Roofing were included in the packets provided to the Board members each month, and Boardmember Robert Michael likewise did not recall having seen the invoices. Parth explained that she relied on Board member and treasurer Robert ApRoberts, a retired certified public accountant, to review invoices. Larry Gliko, the Association's contracting expert, opined that the invoices submitted by Warren Roofing were "not at all characteristic" of those typically used in the building industry or submitted to homeowners' associations, included amounts that Gliko viewed as unnecessary, and charged the Association "almost double" what the work should have cost. Gliko also opined that "the work performed by Warren Roofing [was] deficient," "fell far below the standard of care," and "require[d] significant repairs."

**274 2. Repaving projects and loans*

In April 2007, the Board voted to hire a construction company to repair the walkways. **513 The Board asked the membership to vote on a special assessment to fund this and other repairs. The membership voted to approve the special assessment.

In July 2007, Parth signed promissory notes for $900,000 and $325,000, secured by the Association's assets and property. She stated that at the time the special assessment was approved, the Board was investigating the possibility of obtaining a loan to raise the capital needed to immediately commence work on the walkway project. Thomas indicated that, as an Association member, he was never asked to approve the debt and did not learn about it until this litigation commenced. The Association had no records indicating that the members were ever informed about, or voted on, the debt.

In April 2010, the Board approved a bid from a paving company to perform repaving work. According to Parth, the Board elected to finance this repaving project with a bank loan, the Board reviewed the loan at the April 2010 meeting, and "unanimously approved" that Parth and/or ApRoberts would sign the loan documents. Parth further stated that at a special Board meeting in May 2010, attended by her, ApRoberts, and Boardmember Elvira Kitt-Kellam, the Board "resolved that the Association had the power to borrow and pledge collateral" and authorized her and ApRoberts to execute loan documents. Thomas stated that he never received notice of this meeting. In May 2010, Parth and ApRoberts signed a promissory note for $550,000, secured by the Association's accounts receivable and assets. Thomas indicated that he was never asked to vote on this debt and, again, there were no Association records indicating that the members were notified about or voted on it.

In construction and business loan agreements in connection with the 2007 and 2010 notes, Parth and ApRoberts represented that the agreements were "duly authorized by all necessary action by [the Association]" and did not conflict with the Association's organizational documents or bylaws. Parth testified at her deposition that she had not reviewed the CC&Rs or bylaws regarding her authority to execute a promissory note and did not know whether she had such authority under the CC&Rs. In her declaration in support of summary judgment, Parth explained that she believed she "had authority to borrow money and execute loan documents on behalf of the Association in [her] capacity as president," and was "unaware that a vote of the majority of the members was required in order to pledge the Association's assets as security for the loan." She also indicated that "no one advised [her] that she did not have authority to sign the loan documents ... or that a vote of the membership was required."

*275 3. Jesse's Landscaping

At a December 2010 Board executive meeting attended by Parth, Michael, and Kitt-Kellam, those Board members approved and signed a five-year contract with Jesse's Landscaping. Thomas indicated that he was not given notice of the meeting. At her deposition, in response to a question regarding whether she had the authority to sign a five-year contract, Parth answered, "I don't know." During the same line of questioning, Parth also acknowledged that her "understanding of what [her] authority is under the bylaws" was "[n]one."

4. Termination of Personalized Property Management

During the relevant time period, the Association's management company was Personalized Property Management (PPM). According to Parth, PPM's owner advised **514 her in or around June or July 2011 that PPM no longer wanted to provide management services for the Association. At a July 9, 2011 Board meeting regarding termination of PPM, the Board tabled any decision to terminate PPM until bids from other companies were obtained and reviewed. Parth proceeded to hire the Lyttleton Company to serve as the Association's new management company. Thomas stated that he never received written notice of a Board meeting to vote on the hiring of Lyttleton. Parth noticed an executive meeting for July 16, 2011, to discuss termination of PPM and retention of a new company, at which time the Board voted three to two to terminate PPM. Thomas stated that he objected to the vote at the time, based on the Board's prior decision to table the matter.

5. Desert Protection Security Services contract

Gary Drawert, doing business as Desert Protection Security Services (Desert Protection), had provided security services for Palm Springs Villas II since 2004. The Association executed a written contract with Desert Protection in December 2003 for one year of security services. Thomas stated that, after joining the Board, he learned that Desert Protection and other vendors were providing services pursuant to "oral or month-to-month agreements." In July 2010, the Board authorized Thomas to obtain bids from security companies to provide security services for 2011.

In January 2011, Parth signed a one-year contract with Desert Protection. Her understanding was that "any contract that was not renewed in writing would ... be automatically renewed until terminated" and that she was *276 "merely updating the contract, as instructed by management."<sup>2</sup> She believed that she had the "authority to sign the contract as the Association's president." She further explained that, at the time, the Board had not voted to terminate Desert Protection and discussions regarding a new security company had been tabled.

<sup>2</sup> Although Parth's statement that she believed that she had been instructed by management to enter into the contract with Desert Protection is in the record, the trial court sustained an objection to her declaration statement that she was told that the contract "needed to be updated and was ready to be signed."

There were no records indicating that Parth submitted the 2011 Desert Protection agreement to the Board for review or that the Board authorized her to execute it. According to Thomas, Parth did not inform the other Board members that she had signed the agreement. Michael likewise indicated that he had not attended any Board meeting at which the agreement was discussed, and he did not recall the Board having voted on it. Kitt-Kellam stated that the Board never authorized the contract.

In February 2011, the Association's manager sent Parth and others an e-mail recommending that the Board update certain contracts, including the contract with Desert Protection. Thomas presented the security company bids at a March 2011 Board meeting. The Board tabled the discussion at this meeting and at the subsequent April 2011 meeting. At the July 2011 meeting, the Board approved a proposal from Securitas in a three-to-one vote, with Parth abstaining. According to Thomas, Parth did not disclose at any of these meetings that she had signed a one-year contract with Desert Protection in January 2011. Following the July 2011 Board meeting, Desert Protection was sent a 30-day termination letter, based on the Board's understanding that the company was operating on a month-to-month basis.

**515 In August 2011, Gary Drawert, the principal of Desert Protection, left a voicemail message for Thomas regarding the Desert Protection agreement. Thomas indicated that prior to this voicemail, he was not aware of the agreement. At the September 2011 Board meeting, Parth produced the Desert Protection agreement. The Board did not ratify it.

C. Desert Protection sues and the Association files a cross-complaint

Drawert sued the Association for breach of contract. The Association cross-complained against Desert Protection and Parth. Following an initial demurrer, the Association filed the operative first amended cross-complaint. The Association settled with Drawert.

With respect to Parth, the Association asserted causes of action for breach of fiduciary duty and breach of governing documents. The cause of action for *277 breach of fiduciary duty alleged that Parth had breached her duties to comply with the governing documents and to avoid causing harm to the Association by, among other things, refusing to submit bids or contracts to the Board, “unilaterally terminating” PPM, and signing the contract with Desert Protection. The breach of governing documents cause of action identified CC&R and bylaw provisions and identified actions taken by Parth in breach of these provisions, including the termination of PPM and entering into the Desert Protection contract.

Parth demurred to the first amended cross-complaint. With respect to the governing documents claim, she contended that the claim failed to state a cause of action and was uncertain. The court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend as to this cause of action. We discuss this ruling in more detail, post.

Parth moved for summary judgment, contending that the claim of breach of fiduciary duty was barred by the business judgment rule and by the exculpatory provision in the CC&Rs. The trial court granted the motion. In doing so, the court described the business judgment rule (including the requirement that directors “act[ ] on an informed basis”) and observed that courts will not hold directors liable for errors in judgment, as long as the directors were: “(1) disinterested and independent; (2) acting in good faith; and (3) reasonably diligent in informing themselves of the facts.” The court further noted that the plaintiff has the burden of demonstrating, among other things, that “the decision ... was made in bad faith (e.g., fraudulently) or without the requisite degree of care and diligence.”<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> The trial court also stated that the “business judgment rule standard is one of gross negligence

—i.e., failure to exercise even slight care,” citing Katz v. Chevron Corp. (1994) 22 Cal.App.4th 1352, 27 Cal.Rptr.2d 681. The court did not explain how this standard relates to the components of the business judgment rule. The parties likewise cite the concept without such analysis. Given that Katz relies on Delaware law for this standard and the issues before us can be resolved according to the standard of reasonable diligence under California law, we will not focus on gross negligence in our analysis. However, the facts that raise a triable issue as to Parth's diligence, discussed post, would also raise an issue as to whether she exercised “even slight care.”

The court found that Parth had set forth sufficient evidence that she was “disinterested,” and that she had “acted in good faith and without willful or intentional misconduct,” and “upon the basis of such information as she possessed.” The burden shifted to the Association to establish a triable issue of material fact and the court found that the Association failed to satisfy this burden. As to bad faith, the court found that there was a triable issue as to **516 whether Parth had violated the governing documents, but that such a violation would be insufficient to overcome the business judgment rule or the exculpatory provision of the CC&Rs. With respect to diligence, the court found no *278 evidence that Parth “did not use reasonable diligence in ascertaining the facts.” According to the court, the “gravamen of the [Association's] claims is ... that Parth repeatedly acted outside the scope of her authority,” and that “[t]he problem with this argument is that Parth believed in her authority to act and the need to act, and the [Association] [fails to] offer any evidence to the contrary, except to say that Parth's actions violated the ... CC&Rs.”

The trial court also ruled on the Association's evidentiary objections; the parties do not indicate whether the court ruled on Parth's objections. The court entered judgment for Parth and the Association timely appealed.

III

DISCUSSION

A. Motion for summary judgment

The Association claims that the trial court erred in granting Parth's motion for summary judgment.

1. Governing law

A defendant moving for summary judgment “bears the burden of persuasion that there is no triable issue of material fact and that [the defendant] is entitled to judgment as a matter of law.” (Aguilar v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2001) 25 Cal.4th 826, 850, 107 Cal.Rptr.2d 841, 24 P.3d 493 (Aguilar)). To meet this burden, the defendant must show that one or more elements of the cause of action cannot be established, or that there is a complete defense to that cause of action. (Ibid.) Once the defendant satisfies its burden, “the burden shifts to the plaintiff ... to show that a triable issue of one or more material facts exists as to that cause of action or a defense thereto.” (Id. at p. 849, 107 Cal.Rptr.2d 841, 24 P.3d 493.) “Because a summary judgment denies the adversary party a trial, it should be granted with caution.” (Colores v. Board of Trustees (2003) 105 Cal.App.4th 1293, 1305, 130 Cal.Rptr.2d 347.)

[1] We review a trial court's grant of summary judgment de novo. (Buss v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal.4th 35, 60, 65 Cal.Rptr.2d 366, 939 P.2d 766.) “[W]e must assume the role of the trial court and redetermine the merits of the motion. In doing so, we must strictly scrutinize the moving party's papers. [Citation.] The declarations of the party opposing summary judgment, however, are liberally construed to determine the existence of triable issues of fact. All doubts as to whether any material, triable issues of fact *279 exist are to be resolved in favor of the party opposing summary judgment.” (Barber v. Marina Sailing, Inc. (1995) 36 Cal.App.4th 558, 562, 42 Cal.Rptr.2d 697.)<sup>4</sup>

<sup>4</sup> Contrary to Parth's claim, a summary judgment is not “entitled to a presumption of correctness.” The cases on which she relies simply confirm the general principle that an appellant must establish error on appeal. (See, e.g., Denham v. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County (Marsh & Kidder) (1970) 2 Cal.3d 557, 564, 86 Cal.Rptr. 65, 468 P.2d 193 [“[E]rror must be affirmatively shown.”]; Reyes v. Kosha (1998) 65 Cal.App.4th 451, 466, fn. 6, 76 Cal.Rptr.2d 457 [“Although our review of a summary judgment is de novo, it is limited to issues which have been adequately raised and supported in [appellants'] brief.”].)

2. Application

a. Principles governing decisionmaking by a director

[2] “The common law ‘business judgment rule’ refers to a judicial policy of **517 deference to the business judgment of corporate directors in the exercise of their broad discretion in making corporate decisions.... Under this rule, a director is not liable for a mistake in business judgment which is made in good faith and in what he or she believes to be the best interests of the corporation, where no conflict of interest exists.” (Gaillard v. Natomas Co. (1989) 208 Cal.App.3d 1250, 1263, 256 Cal.Rptr. 702 (Gaillard)); see Ritter & Ritter, Inc. Pension & Profit Plan v. The Churchill Condominium Assn. (2008) 166 Cal.App.4th 103, 123, 82 Cal.Rptr.3d 389 (Ritter) [business judgment rule “sets up a presumption that directors' decisions are based on sound business judgment”].)

In California, there is a statutory business judgment rule. Corporations Code section 7231 applies to nonprofit corporations and provides that “[a] director shall perform the duties of a director, ..., in good faith, in a manner such director believes to be in the best interests of the corporation and with such care, including reasonable inquiry, as an ordinarily prudent person in a like position would use under similar circumstances.” (§ 7231, subd. (a); see Ritter, supra, 166 Cal.App.4th at p. 123, 82 Cal.Rptr.3d 389.) The statute goes on to state that “[a] person who performs the duties of a director in accordance [with the preceding subdivisions] ... shall have no liability based upon any alleged failure to discharge the person's obligations as a director...” (§ 7231, subd. (c); see Ritter, at p. 123, 82 Cal.Rptr.3d 389; see also § 7231.5, subd. (a) [limiting liability on the same grounds for volunteer directors and officers].)<sup>5</sup>

<sup>5</sup> All further statutory references are to the Corporations Code unless otherwise indicated.

[3] [4] “Notwithstanding the deference to a director's business judgment, the rule does not immunize a director from liability in the case of his or her abdication of corporate responsibilities.” ( *280 Gaillard, supra, 208 Cal.App.3d at p. 1263, 256 Cal.Rptr. 702.) “The question is frequently asked, how does the operation of the so-called ‘business judgment rule’ tie in with the concept of negligence? There is no conflict between the two. When courts say that they will not interfere in matters of business judgment, it is presupposed that judgment—reasonable diligence—has in fact been exercised. A director cannot close his eyes to what is going on about him in the conduct of the business of the corporation and have it said that he is exercising business judgment.” (Burt v. Irvine Co. (1965) 237 Cal.App.2d 828, 852–853, 47 Cal.Rptr. 392 (Burt); Gaillard, supra, at pp. 1263–1264, 256 Cal.Rptr. 702 [accord].)

[5] Put differently, whether a director exercised reasonable diligence is one of the “factual prerequisites” to application of the business judgment rule. (Affan v. Portofino Cove Homeowners Assn. (2010) 189 Cal.App.4th 930, 941, 117 Cal.Rptr.3d 481 (Affan); id. at p. 943, 117 Cal.Rptr.3d 481 [finding a homeowners association “failed to establish the factual prerequisites for applying the rule of judicial deference” at trial, where “there was no evidence the board engaged in ‘reasonable investigation’ (citation) before choosing to continue its ‘piecemeal’ approach to sewage backups”]; see §§ 7231, subd. (a), 7231.5, subd. (a); see also Lamden v. La Jolla Shores Clubdominium Homeowners Assn. (1999) 21 Cal.4th 249, 253, 87 Cal.Rptr.2d 237, 980 P.2d 940 (Lamden) [requiring “reasonable investigation” for judicial deference]; **518 Everest Investors 8 v. McNeil Partners (2003) 114 Cal.App.4th 411, 432, 8 Cal.Rptr.3d 31 (Everest) [accord].)

b. The business judgment rule on summary judgment

[6] The business judgment rule “raises various issues of fact,” including whether “a director acted as an ordinarily prudent person under similar circumstances” and “made a reasonable inquiry as indicated by the circumstances.” (Gaillard, supra, 208 Cal.App.3d at p. 1267, 256 Cal.Rptr. 702.) “Such questions generally should be left to a trier of fact,” but can become questions of law “where the evidence establishes that there is no controverted material fact.” (Id. at pp. 1267–1268, 256 Cal.Rptr. 702.) “The function of the trial court in ruling on [a] motion[ ] for summary judgment [is] merely to determine whether such issues of fact exist, and not to decide the merits of the issues themselves. [Citation.] Our function is the same as that of the trial court.” (Id. at p. 1268, 256 Cal.Rptr. 702; see id. at p. 1271, 256 Cal.Rptr. 702 [identifying a triable issue of fact as to whether it was reasonable for the directors on the compensation committee to rely on outside counsel “with no further inquiry,” and observing that “[a] trier of fact could reasonably find that the circumstances warranted a thorough review of the golden parachute agreements”]; id. at pp. 1271–1272, 256 Cal.Rptr. 702 [noting a “triable issue of fact as to whether some further inquiry” was warranted by the other directors regarding *281 the golden parachutes, under the circumstances, notwithstanding that they were entitled to rely on the recommendation of the compensation committee].)<sup>6</sup> (Cf. Harvey v. The Landing Homeowners Assn. (2008) 162

Cal.App.4th 809, 822, 76 Cal.Rptr.3d 41 [affirming summary judgment in dispute over attic space use where undisputed evidence showed the board, upon “reasonable investigation” and in good faith “properly exercised its discretion within the scope of the CC&R’s....”].)

6 (See Everest, supra, 114 Cal.App.4th at p. 430, 8 Cal.Rptr.3d 31 [finding that triable issues of fact as to the existence of improper motives and a conflict of interest “preclude[d] summary judgment based on the business judgment rule”]; Will v. Engebretson & Co. (1989) 213 Cal.App.3d 1033, 1044, 261 Cal.Rptr. 868 [“Will submitted evidence that ... the committee members never reviewed the complaint, the financial records of the corporation, or made any investigation into the matter at all. Company, of course, disputes these allegations. But it is precisely because the issues are disputed that it was error for the trial court to resolve the issues....”].)

c. The trial court erred in granting summary judgment

The Association raises two challenges to the summary judgment ruling: that the trial court erred by applying the business judgment rule to Parth's ultra vires acts (or conduct otherwise outside Parth's authority) and that there are triable issues of material fact as to whether Parth exercised reasonable diligence.

i. Ultra vires conduct

[7] The Association has not established that Parth's conduct was ultra vires. Ultra vires conduct is conduct that is beyond the power of the corporation, not an individual director. (See McDermott v. Bear Film Co. (1963) 219 Cal.App.2d 607, 610–611, 33 Cal.Rptr. 486 [“In its true sense the phrase ultra vires describes action which is beyond the purpose or power of the corporation.”]; Sammis v. Stafford (1996) 48 Cal.App.4th 1935, 1942, 56 Cal.Rptr.2d 589 [“If, however, the director's act was within the corporate powers, but was performed without authority or in an unauthorized manner, the act is not ultra vires.”].) The Association does not distinguish **519 these authorities, nor does it identify conduct by Parth that went beyond the power of the Association.

However, the Association does cite cases suggesting that noncompliance with governing documents may fall outside the scope of the business judgment rule, at least in certain circumstances. (See *282 Nahrstedt v. Lakeside Village Condominium Assn. (1994) 8 Cal.4th 361, 374, 33 Cal.Rptr.2d 63, 878 P.2d 1275 (Nahrstedt) [finding “courts will uphold decisions made by the governing board of an owners association,” where among other things, they “are consistent with the development's governing documents”]; Lamden, supra, 21 Cal.4th at p. 253, 87 Cal.Rptr.2d 237, 980 P.2d 940 [requiring that association board “exercise[] discretion within the scope of its authority under relevant statutes, covenants and restrictions” in order to merit judicial deference]; Dolan–King v. Rancho Santa Fe Assn. (2000) 81 Cal.App.4th 965, 979, 97 Cal.Rptr.2d 280 [accord]; Scheenstra v. California Dairies, Inc. (2013) 213 Cal.App.4th 370, 388, 153 Cal.Rptr.3d 21 [finding a “board's decision is not scrutinized under the business judgment rule ... until after the court determines that the action ... falls within the discretionary range of action authorized by the contract”].) See also Ekstrom v. Marquesa at Monarch Beach Homeowners Assn. (2008) 168 Cal.App.4th 1111, 1123, 86 Cal.Rptr.3d 145 (“Even if the Board was acting in good faith ..., its policy ... was not in accord with the CC&Rs.... The Board's interpretation of the CC&Rs was inconsistent with the plain meaning of the document and thus not entitled to judicial deference.”).

Parth contends that the business judgment rule protects a director who violates governing documents, as long as the director believes that the actions are in the best interests of the corporation. She relies on Biren v. Equality Emergency Medical Group, Inc. (2002) 102 Cal.App.4th 125, 125 Cal.Rptr.2d 325 (Biren). Biren, which involved a dispute between a company and a former director, held that the “business judgment rule may protect a director who acts in a mistaken but good faith belief on behalf of the corporation without obtaining the requisite shareholder approval.” The Biren court determined that the director in question was protected by the rule, even though she violated the shareholder agreement. (Id. at pp. 131–132, 125 Cal.Rptr.2d 325.) However, the court did not suggest that such conduct would always be protected. Rather, the court concluded that the violation “did not by itself make the business judgment rule inapplicable,” explaining that the company failed to prove that the director had “intentionally usurped her authority” or that “her actions were anything more than an honest mistake.” (Id. at p. 137, 125 Cal.Rptr.2d 325.) The court also noted the trial court's “finding that [the director] ‘reasonably relied’ on information she believed to be correct,” observing that this was “tantamount to a finding she acted in good faith.” (Id. at p. 136, 125 Cal.Rptr.2d 325.)

In other words, Biren held that the director's violation of the governing documents did not render the business judgment rule inapplicable under the circumstances; namely, where the remainder of the business judgment rule requirements were satisfied.

[8] [9] Here, the trial court agreed that there was a triable issue of material fact as to whether Parth breached the governing documents, but concluded that even if she had, this was insufficient to overcome the protection of the business judgment rule. However, the case law is clear that conduct contrary to *283 governing documents may fall outside the business judgment rule. (See, e.g., **520 Nahrstedt, supra, 8 Cal.4th at p. 374, 33 Cal.Rptr.2d 63, 878 P.2d 1275.) Even if Biren establishes an exception to this principle where the director has satisfied the remaining elements of the business judgment rule, in this case, triable issues of material fact exist as to other elements of the rule and render Biren inapplicable, at least at this stage. The trial court erred in assuming that the business judgment rule would apply to Parth's actions that violated the governing documents.

ii. Material issues of fact

Although the trial court properly recognized that a director must act on an informed basis, be reasonably diligent, and exercise care in order to rely on the business judgment rule, the court erred in concluding that the Association failed to demonstrate triable issues of fact with respect to these matters. (See Gaillard, supra, 208 Cal.App.3d at pp. 1271–1272, 1274, 256 Cal.Rptr. 702 [reversing summary judgment due to material issues of fact as to whether further inquiry was warranted].) We conclude that material issues of fact exist as to whether Parth exercised reasonable diligence in connection with the actions at issue.

[10] First, with respect to the roofing repairs, Parth explained how she found Warren Roofing and testified at her deposition that Warren Roofing was licensed. However, during the same line of questioning, she displayed ignorance of the relationship between Warren Roofing and Bonded Roofing and admitted that she had not “investigate[d] anything” pertaining to whether Bonded Roofing was licensed. The Association also established that Parth found a roofing contractor without any formal bid or contract, that the Board hired Bonded Roofing but paid Warren Roofing, that Warren Roofing may have significantly overcharged the Association for the work performed, and that this work was defective and required repair.<sup>7</sup> This evidence is sufficient to raise an issue as to Parth's diligence with respect to the investigation and payment of the roofers. (See Affan, supra, 189 Cal.App.4th at pp. 941, 943, 117 Cal.Rptr.3d 481 [business judgment rule did not apply where, among other things, there was no evidence of a reasonable investigation into sewage work].)<sup>8</sup> Parth's reliance on ApRoberts to review invoices does not resolve these issues. (See Gaillard, supra, 208 Cal.App.3d at p. 1271, 256 Cal.Rptr. 702 [although the directors could rely upon the recommendations of outside counsel and the *284 compensation committee, triable issues existed as to whether further inquiry was still required under the circumstances].)

7 There also was no evidence of a written warranty for the roofing work. Layton testified at deposition that he provided a warranty, but did not indicate that it was written, and Parth contends only that she obtained a verbal warranty.

8 The Association contends that both Warren Roofing and Bonded Roofing were unlicensed at the time the roofing work was done, while Parth maintains that Warren Roofing was licensed. We need not address this dispute. Although the existence of facts that the exercise of proper diligence might have disclosed (such as license status) may be relevant to whether Parth exhibited reasonable diligence (see Berg & Berg Enterprises, LLC v. Boyle (2009) 178 Cal.App.4th 1020, 1046, 100 Cal.Rptr.3d 875), we conclude that her admission that she “did not investigate anything,” in the context of a major repair project, is sufficient to raise a triable issue.

[11] Second, the 2007 and 2010 promissory notes, secured by Association assets, similarly raise issues as to whether Parth proceeded on an informed basis. She relies on her belief that she had the authority to take out the loans, her lack of awareness **521 that a member vote was required to encumber the assets of the Association, and that no one advised her that she lacked the authority or that membership approval was required. She also states in her declaration that she and two other Board members authorized her and ApRoberts to sign the 2010 note. However, as the Association points out, the governing documents require member approval for such debt and there is no record of such approval. Parth's deposition testimony also reflects that she did not know whether she had the authority under the governing documents to sign the loans, and that she made no effort to determine whether she had such authority. Whether Parth exercised sufficient diligence to inform herself of the Association's requirements pertaining to the loans at issue is a question for the trier of fact. (See Gaillard, supra, 208 Cal.App.3d at p. 1267, 256 Cal.Rptr. 702; id. at p. 1271, 256 Cal.Rptr. 702 [noting triable issue as to whether the “circumstances warranted a thorough review of the ... agreements”].) Parth “cannot close [her] eyes” to matters as basic as the provisions of the CC&Rs and bylaws of the Association and at the same time claim that she “exercis[ed] business judgment.” (Id. at p. 1263–1264, 256 Cal.Rptr. 702.)

[12] Third, as to Jesse's Landscaping, Parth indicated that three Board members, including herself, approved a five-year contract in 2010. However, the Association provided evidence that the governing documents require that a contract with a third party exceeding one year be approved by member vote. In addition, Parth acknowledged at her deposition that she did not know whether she had the authority to sign a five-year contract, and that she had no understanding of what her authority was under the bylaws. This evidence suggests that Parth may not have understood, nor made any effort to understand, whether the Board was permitted to authorize the Jesse's Landscaping contract without member approval. As with the loans, Parth's admitted lack of effort to inform herself of the extent of her authority in this regard is sufficient to establish a triable issue. (See Gaillard, supra, 208 Cal.App.3d at pp. 1263, 1267, 1271, 256 Cal.Rptr. 702.)

[13] Fourth, regarding the PPM termination, Parth explained that PPM's owner did not want PPM to be the management company for the Association any *285 longer and that the Board subsequently voted to terminate PPM on July 16, 2011. However, the Association's evidence reflects that the Board had tabled the issue of the termination of PPM on July 9 and that Parth met with and hired the Lyttleton Company, apparently without calling a Board meeting to vote on the matter. The time line of these events is somewhat unclear, including whether Parth hired Lyttleton before the Board voted to terminate PPM, but we will not attempt to resolve such factual issues on summary judgment. Regardless of the timing, the evidence presented as to the matter raises questions as to whether Parth proceeded with reasonable diligence. (See Gaillard, supra, 208 Cal.App.3d at pp. 1271–1272, 256 Cal.Rptr. 702; Affan, supra, 189 Cal.App.4th at pp. 941, 943, 117 Cal.Rptr.3d 481.)

[14] Finally, the Desert Security contract similarly calls into question Parth's diligence. Parth offered several explanations for her execution of the contract with Desert Security in January 2011, despite the Board's decision to consider

bids from other companies for security services. Some of her explanations were inconsistent,<sup>9</sup> and the Association's evidence cast **522 doubt on all of them. With respect to Parth's stated belief that she had the authority to sign the contract, the Association provided evidence in other contexts (e.g., the promissory notes) that Parth failed to understand the scope of her authority; this same evidence suggests that she made no effort to ascertain what authority she did possess to conduct the business of the Association. The business judgment rule would not extend to such willful ignorance. (See Gaillard, supra, 208 Cal.App.3d at p. 1263, 256 Cal.Rptr. 702.) Parth also indicated that at the time she signed the contract, the Board had tabled the security discussion and had not yet terminated Desert Protection. However, the Association provided evidence that Parth failed to bring the new contract to the attention of the Board or alert the Board to its existence, even after the security discussion had been reopened, thus calling into question Parth's explanations. This conduct raises serious questions as to Parth's diligence, particularly given the timing of the relevant events. (Id. at p. 1271, 256 Cal.Rptr. 702 [noting the "nature" and "timing" of the agreements at issue].)

<sup>9</sup> For example, Parth indicated both that she believed nonwritten contracts would be automatically renewed and that she was "merely updating" the contract, without explaining why a new or updated contract would be necessary if the existing contract would automatically be renewed.

Although the trial court declined to address much of the Association's evidence, it did discuss the Desert Protection situation. The court stated that the Association disputed the basis for Parth's belief in her authority to sign the Desert Protection contract by citing the bylaws, and concluded that this evidence did not controvert Parth's professed belief. While the Bylaws may *286 not undermine Parth's belief, together with the Association's other evidence, they do demonstrate the existence of a triable issue of material fact as to whether Parth's proceeding on such belief—without keeping the Board informed—showed reasonable diligence under the circumstances.

In sum, the Association produced evidence establishing the existence of triable issues of material fact as to whether Parth acted on an informed basis and with reasonable diligence, precluding summary judgment based on the business judgment rule. The trial court's erroneous conclusion that "there [was] no evidence that Parth did not use reasonable diligence" reflects a misapplication of the business judgment rule, summary judgment standards, or both. To the extent that the court viewed the Association's evidence regarding Parth's diligence as irrelevant, in light of her "belief[ ] in her authority to act and the need to act," the court failed to apply the reasonable diligence requirement in any meaningful way. Permitting directors to remain ignorant and to rely on their uninformed beliefs to obtain summary judgment would gut the reasonable diligence element of the rule and, quite possibly, incentivize directors to remain ignorant. To the extent that the trial court did consider the Association's evidence, but found it insufficient to establish a lack of diligence, the court improperly stepped into the role of fact finder and decided the merits of the issue.

[15] [16] In addition, the Association contends that courts treat diligence and good faith as intertwined, citing Biren's description of the trial court's finding that the director reasonably relied on information she believed to be correct as "tantamount" to a finding of good faith. (See Biren, supra, 102 Cal.App.4th at p. 136, 125 Cal.Rptr.2d 325.) Our own research reveals that other courts similarly have considered diligence as part of the good **523 faith inquiry. (See, e.g., Affan, supra, 189 Cal.App.4th at p. 943, 117 Cal.Rptr.3d 481 ["Nor was there evidence the Association acted 'in good faith ...', because no one testified about the board's decisionmaking process .... [¶] ... [I]n Lamden, ample evidence demonstrated the association board engaged in the sort of reasoned decisionmaking that merits judicial deference. There is no such showing in the case before us."]; see also Desaigouadar v. Meyercord (2003) 108 Cal.App.4th 173, 189, 133 Cal.Rptr.2d 408 ["[T]he court must look into the procedures employed and determine whether they were adequate or whether they were so inadequate as to suggest fraud or bad faith. That is, '[p]roof ... that the investigation has been so restricted in scope, so shallow in execution, or otherwise so pro forma or halfhearted as to constitute a pretext or sham, consistent with the principles underlying the application of the business judgment doctrine, would raise questions of good faith or conceivably fraud which would never be shielded by that doctrine.'"]) In light of these *287 authorities, we recognize that there may be a triable issue of material fact as to Parth's good faith, as well.<sup>10</sup>

<sup>10</sup> The Association also appears to challenge several other actions on the part of Parth, but fails to support its challenge with argument and/or specific authority. These actions include Parth's execution of the Board member Code of Conduct, certain purported violations of the Common Interest Open Meeting Act and Davis–Stirling Common Interest Development Act, and various facts pertaining to bad faith. We deem these matters forfeited. (People v. Stanley (1995) 10 Cal.4th 764, 793, 42 Cal.Rptr.2d 543, 897 P.2d 481 (Stanley) [it is not the reviewing court's role to “construct a theory” for appellant: “[E]very brief should contain a legal argument with citation of authorities on the points made. If none is furnished on a particular point, the court may treat it as waived....”].) In addition, because we conclude that the Association has established the existence of triable issues of material fact as to both the business judgment rule and the exculpatory provision of the CC & Rs, see discussion post, we need not reach its arguments under section 5047.5 and Civil Code section 5800 or its argument that Parth is estopped from claiming ignorance of the governing documents.

iii. Parth's contentions

[17] As a preliminary matter, Parth contends that “[v]irtually all of the evidence proffered in opposition to the motion for summary judgment was inadmissible,” but cites only her own evidentiary objections, rather than any ruling by the trial court. She also does not offer any argument regarding the evidence itself, other than to state generally that evidence without foundation is inadmissible (and, with one exception not relevant here, does not identify any specific evidence). We conclude that Parth has forfeited these objections. (Stanley, supra, 10 Cal.4th at p. 793, 42 Cal.Rptr.2d 543, 897 P.2d 481; Del Real v. City of Riverside (2002) 95 Cal.App.4th 761, 768, 115 Cal.Rptr.2d 705 [“[I]t is counsel's duty to point out portions of the record that support the position taken on appeal....”]; ibid. [“[A]ny point raised that lacks citation may, in this court's discretion, be deemed waived.”].)

Turning to Parth's substantive arguments, we first address her contention that she displayed no bad faith. She relies on cases characterizing bad faith as intentional misconduct, encompassing fraud, conflicts of interest, and intent to serve an outside purpose. (See, e.g., Barnes v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (1993) 16 Cal.App.4th 365, 379, 20 Cal.Rptr.2d 87.) However, the Association's appeal focuses on Parth's failure to exercise reasonable diligence, so establishing an absence of evidence of intentional misconduct unrelated to diligence does not undermine the Association's arguments.

**524 [18] Next, Parth suggests that the Association's concerns with respect to her lack of diligence in securing a roofing contractor sound in negligence, contending that “a director's conduct or decisions are not judged according to a negligence standard.” (Boldface omitted.) However, as the authorities *288 discussed ante make clear, there is “no conflict” between the business judgment rule and negligence, and application of that rule “presuppose[s] that ... reasonable diligence [ ] has in fact been exercised.” (Gaillard, supra, 208 Cal.App.3d at pp. 1263–1264, 256 Cal.Rptr. 702, quoting Burt, supra, 237 Cal.App.2d at pp. 852–853, 47 Cal.Rptr. 392; Affan, supra, 189 Cal.App.4th at p. 941, 117 Cal.Rptr.3d 481.)

[19] [20] Parth's reliance on the exculpatory clause of the Association's CC&Rs is similarly unpersuasive. She contends that even if she exceeded her authority, the “only condition for the stated contractual immunity is that the board members perform their duties in ‘good faith, and without willful or intentional misconduct.’ ” However, she fails to address the immediately preceding clause, which requires that the director act “upon the basis of such information as may be possessed by [her].” This language is arguably analogous to the business judgment rule's reasonable diligence requirement. (Gaillard, supra, 208 Cal.App.3d at pp. 1263–1264, 256 Cal.Rptr. 702.) At minimum, even if the exculpatory provision did not obligate Parth to obtain additional information regarding particular undertakings, it surely contemplated that she would familiarize herself with information already in her possession—such as the governing documents of the Association. Further, both the business judgment rule and the exculpatory clause of the CC&Rs require good faith and, as discussed ante, an absence of diligence may reflect a lack of good faith. Given this overlap, we conclude that at least some of the triable issues of material fact that bar summary judgment with respect to the business judgment rule similarly preclude it as to the exculpatory clause.<sup>11</sup>

<sup>11</sup> We reject Parth's claim that the Association waived the exculpatory clause issue. Although the Association did not address the issue until its reply brief, it takes the position on reply that the exculpatory clause is “a recitation of the business judgment rule.” Parth, meanwhile, relied on the same undisputed facts to support both issues. Under the circumstances, we see no reason to preclude the Association from relying on its business judgment rule arguments and evidence for the exculpatory clause issue.

[21] [22] Finally, we address Parth's contention that the Association's claim is time-barred to the extent that it concerns events that occurred prior to May 22, 2008. Parth contends that there is a four-year statute of limitations for a breach of fiduciary duty claim and that admissible evidence is required to support the claim, but does not explain how these principles would permit her to obtain summary judgment as to a portion of a cause of action. We agree with the Association both that Parth's attempt to apply the statute of limitations to obtain judgment on a part of its breach of fiduciary duty claim is improper and that the existence of material questions of fact preclude resolution of statute of limitations issues at this juncture. (See McCasky v. California State Automobile Assn. (2010) 189 Cal.App.4th 947, 975, 118 Cal.Rptr.3d 34 [“there can be no summary adjudication of less than an entire cause of action.... If a cause of action is not shown to be barred in its entirety, no order for summary judgment—or adjudication—can be entered.” (citation omitted)]; *289 Jolly v. Eli Lilly & Co. (1988) 44 Cal.3d 1103, 1112, 245 Cal.Rptr. 658, 751 P.2d 923 [“resolution of the statute of limitations issue is normally a question of fact”].)

**525 B. Demurrer

The Association contends that the trial court erroneously granted Parth's demurrer to its cause of action for breach of governing documents, without leave to amend.

1. Governing law

We review a ruling sustaining a demurrer de novo, exercising independent judgment as to whether the complaint states a cause of action as a matter of law. (Desai v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (1996) 47 Cal.App.4th 1110, 1115, 55 Cal.Rptr.2d 276.) “We affirm the judgment if it is correct on any ground stated in the demurrer, regardless of the trial court's stated reasons.” (Fremont Indemnity Co. v. Fremont General Corp. (2007) 148 Cal.App.4th 97, 111, 55 Cal.Rptr.3d 621.) Further, “[i]f another proper ground for sustaining the demurrer exists, this court will still affirm the demurrer[ ]....” (Jocer Enterprises, Inc. v. Price (2010) 183 Cal.App.4th 559, 566, 107 Cal.Rptr.3d 539.)

When a demurrer is sustained without leave to amend, “we decide whether there is a reasonable possibility that the defect can be cured by amendment: if it can be, the trial court has abused its discretion and we reverse; if not, there has been no abuse of discretion and we affirm. [Citations.] The burden of proving such reasonable possibility is squarely on the plaintiff.” (Blank v. Kirwan (1985) 39 Cal.3d 311, 318, 216 Cal.Rptr. 718, 703 P.2d 58 (Blank ).)

2. Application

With respect to the Association's cause of action for breach of governing documents, the trial court ruled: “The HOA has not alleged that Parth breached any covenant. The only sections of the governing documents referred to in the cross-complaint are bylaws that deal with the Boards [sic] transaction of the Associations [sic] business affairs 7–11. These sections describe how the Board acts. It ... does not appear that they are covenants between the HOA and individual members that the HOA may sue to enforce.”

First, the Association does not cite only the bylaws; it also cites the CC&R provision reserving authority over the Association's affairs to the Board. In any event, we see no reason why the governing document provisions would be unenforceable as to Parth, an owner and Association member who was *290 serving as president and was a member of the Board. (See Civ.Code, § 5975, subd. (a) [“The covenants and restrictions in the declaration shall be enforceable equitable servitudes ... and bind all owners” and generally “may be enforced by ... the association”], subd. (b) [“A governing document other than the declaration may be enforced by the association against an owner”]; see also, e.g., Biren, supra, 102 Cal.App.4th at p. 141, 125 Cal.Rptr.2d 325 [affirming judgment against director for breach of shareholder agreement]; Briano v. Rubio (1996) 46 Cal.App.4th 1167, 1172, 1180, 54 Cal.Rptr.2d 408 [affirming judgment against directors for violation of articles of incorporation].)

[23] Regardless, as Parth argues, the cause of action for breach of governing documents appears to be duplicative of the cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty. This court has recognized this as a basis for sustaining a demurrer. (See Rodriguez v. Campbell Industries (1978) 87 Cal.App.3d 494, 501, 151 Cal.Rptr. 90 [finding demurrer was properly sustained without leave to amend as to cause of action that contained allegations of other causes and “thus add[ed] nothing to the complaint by way of fact or theory of recovery”]; see also Award Metals, Inc. v. Superior Court (1991) 228 Cal.App.3d 1128, 1135, 279 Cal.Rptr. 459 [Second Appellate **526 District, Division Four; demurrer should have been sustained as to duplicative causes of action].)<sup>12</sup> The Association does not address

Parth's argument or explain how its document claim differs from the fiduciary breach claim. We conclude that the trial court properly sustained the demurrer.

IV

DISPOSITION

12 But see Blickman Turkus, LP v. MF Downtown Sunnyvale, LLC (2008) 162 Cal.App.4th 858, 890, 76 Cal.Rptr.3d 325 (Sixth Appellate District) (finding that duplication is not grounds for demurrer and that a motion to strike is the proper way to address duplicative material).

The order granting summary judgment and judgment are reversed. The ruling sustaining the demurrer to the breach of governing documents cause of *291 action without leave to amend is affirmed. The parties shall bear their own costs on appeal.

[24] Second, the burden is on the Association to articulate how it could amend its pleading to render it sufficient. (Blank, supra, 39 Cal.3d at p. 318, 216 Cal.Rptr. 718, 703 P.2d 58; Goodman v. Kennedy (1976) 18 Cal.3d 335, 349, 134 Cal.Rptr. 375, 556 P.2d 737 [“Plaintiff must show in what manner he can amend his complaint and how that amendment will change the legal effect of his pleading.”].) The Association offers no argument on this point and we therefore conclude that it has forfeited the issue. (Stanley, supra, 10 Cal.4th at p. 793, 42 Cal.Rptr.2d 543, 897 P.2d 481.)

Huffman, Acting P.J., and Prager, J. *, concurred.

* Judge of the San Diego Superior Court, assigned by the Chief Justice pursuant to article VI, section 6 of the California Constitution.

All Citations

248 Cal.App.4th 268, 204 Cal.Rptr.3d 507, 16 Cal. Daily Op. Serv. 6438, 2016 Daily Journal D.A.R. 6013

---

End of Document

© 2020 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-107

KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment

Distinguished by Cassidy v. Carvajal, Cal.App. 4 Dist., December 7, 2015

168 Cal.App.4th 1111

Court of Appeal, Fourth District, Division 3, California.

Robert EKSTROM et al., Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

MARQUESA AT MONARCH BEACH
HOMEOWNERS ASSOCIATION,
Defendant and Appellant.

No. G038537.

|

Nov. 3, 2008.

Synopsis

Background: Condominium homeowners brought action against homeowners association for declaratory and injunctive relief to compel association to comply with declaration of covenants, conditions, and restrictions (CC&Rs) by enforcing trimming of palm trees. The Superior Court, Orange County, No. 04CC12264, Charles Margines, J., granted declaratory and injunctive relief. Association appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeal, O'Leary, J., held that:

[1] association waived argument that judicial deference applied to its refusal to require trimming of palm trees;

[2] judicial deference did not apply to association's refusal to require trimming of palm trees;

[3] judicial deference did not apply to association's rules for determining what palm trees had to be trimmed;

[4] injunction requiring association to enforce CC&Rs provision requiring trees to be trimmed did not interfere impermissibly with association's discretion;

[5] injunction requiring association to enforce CC&Rs provision was not impermissibly vague; and [6] association waived argument that individual homeowners whose palm trees obstructed plaintiffs' views were indispensable parties.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (15)

[1] Appeal and Error Motions, hearings, and orders in general

Appeal and Error Judgment in General

An appealed judgment or order is presumed to be correct, and the appellant bears the burden of overcoming that presumption.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Declaratory Judgment Discretion of lower court

Generally, the trial court's decision to grant or deny declaratory and injunctive relief will not be disturbed on appeal unless it is clearly shown its discretion was abused.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Declaratory Judgment Scope and extent of review in general

Interpretation of provisions of a declaration of covenants, conditions, and restrictions (CC&Rs) is a question of law reviewed de novo, in reviewing a trial court's declaratory judgment.

6 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Corporations and Business Organizations Business judgment rule in general

The common law business judgment rule has two components, one which immunizes corporate directors from personal liability if they act in accordance with its requirements, and another which insulates from court intervention those management decisions which are made by directors in good faith in what the directors believe is the organization's best interest.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

- [5] Corporations and Business Organizations  Business judgment rule in general

A hallmark of the business judgment rule is that, when the rule's requirements are met, a court will not substitute its judgment for that of the corporation's board of directors.

- [6] Corporations and Business Organizations  Business judgment rule in general

The corporate business judgment rule, as a rule of judicial deference to good faith management decisions of corporate boards, is a defense.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

- [7] Common Interest Communities  Governing board; members, directors, and officers; committees
Pleading  Necessity for defense

The rule of judicial deference to good faith decisions of homeowner association boards is a defense, and thus may be waived if not raised in the trial court.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

- [8] Appeal and Error  In general; asserting new defense or grounds of opposition

An affirmative defense may be waived on appeal if it is not raised below.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

- [9] Declaratory Judgment  Scope and extent of review in general

By failing to raise the issue earlier than in its request for a statement of decision in the trial court, condominium homeowners association was precluded from asserting on appeal that its alleged violation of declaration of covenants, conditions, and restrictions (CC&Rs) in not requiring trimming or removal of palm trees was supported by the Lamden rule of judicial deference to decisions of homeowner association boards, since that rule was a defense of good faith that was necessarily factual in nature.

6 Cases that cite this headnote

- [10] Common Interest Communities  Other particular powers, duties, and functions

Condominium homeowners association was not entitled to judicial deference in its position that it could exempt all palm trees from provision in declaration of covenants, conditions, and restrictions (CC&Rs) that "all trees, hedges and other plant materials shall be trimmed by the Owner of the Lot upon which they are located so that they shall not exceed the height of the house on the Lot," even if trimming the tops off of palm trees would require their removal, since the association's interpretation of the CC&Rs was inconsistent with the plain meaning of the document.

See 12 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (10th ed. 2005) Real Property; § 104; Cal. Jur. 3d, Real Estate, § 1270; 9 Miller & Starr, Cal. Real Estate (3d ed. 2001) §§ 25B:70, 25B:101; Friedman et al., Cal. Practice Guide: Landlord-Tenant (The Rutter Group 2008) ¶ 3:4.3 (CALANDTEN Ch. 3-A).

10 Cases that cite this headnote

- [11] Common Interest Communities  Other particular powers, duties, and functions

Condominium homeowners association's rules for determining what palm trees had to be trimmed to the height of their owners' residences were not entitled to judicial deference, since they were in direct conflict with provision in declaration of covenants, conditions, and restrictions (CC&Rs) requiring that all trees and plants be trimmed so that they do not exceed the height of the house on the lot, except those determined by the condominium Architectural Review Committee not to block a view; association's rules excluded all palm trees not within narrow corridors defined by the homeowners' lot line, and excluded all palm trees planted before the year the rules were enacted, thus excluding the tallest palm trees.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Injunction  Covenants as to Use of Property

When a condominium homeowners association refuses to enforce its declaration of covenants, conditions, and restrictions (CC&Rs), a homeowner may seek an injunction compelling it to do so.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Injunction  Other particular uses and restrictions

Trial court's injunction ordering condominium homeowners association to utilize every enforcement mechanism available to it under the declaration of covenants, conditions, and restrictions (CC&Rs) and the law in order to enforce CC&Rs provision requiring trees to be trimmed to the height of their owners' residences was not so broad as to interfere impermissibly with association's discretion to determine how to enforce CC&Rs; in view of association's historical position that it need not and would not enforce the provision as to palm trees, a directive that it utilize all enforcement mechanisms available was necessary to ensure it did not simply make a token effort.

7 Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Injunction  Fences and hedges

Trial court's injunction ordering condominium homeowners association to utilize every enforcement mechanism available to it under the declaration of covenants, conditions, and restrictions (CC&Rs) and the law in order to enforce CC&Rs provision requiring trees to be trimmed to the height of their owners' residences was not impermissibly vague, even though it did not specify whether association was required to commence legal action, and if so against which homeowners and with respect to what trees;

the judgment was clear that association must exercise its discretion in good faith to determine which trees obstructed the plaintiff homeowners' views, and then undertake procedures outlined in CC&Rs to enforce CC&Rs as to those trees.

9 Cases that cite this headnote

[15] Declaratory Judgment  Scope and extent of review in general

By failing to raise the issue earlier than in its request for a statement of decision in the trial court, condominium homeowners association was precluded from asserting on appeal that judgment requiring association to enforce declaration of covenants, conditions, and restrictions (CC&Rs) provision requiring trees to be trimmed to the height of their owners' residences was void because the plaintiff homeowners failed to join as defendants the individual homeowners whose palm trees obstructed the plaintiffs' views, as indispensable parties. West's Ann.Cal.C.C.P. § 389.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

**147 Kulik, Gottesman, Mouton & Siegel, LLP, Thomas M. Ware II, Sherman Oaks, Sharon Barber; Borton, Petrini & Conron, LLP, Matthew J. Trostler, Los Angeles, for Defendant and Appellant.

Enterprise Counsel Group, David A. Robinson, Benjamin P. Pugh, Irvine; Jeffrey Lewis, for Plaintiffs and Respondents.

*1113 OPINION

O'LEARY, J.

Marquesa at Monarch Beach (Marquesa) is a common interest development governed by the Davis–Stirling Common Interest Development Act (Civ.Code, § 1350, et seq.). It is comprised of single family homes in the Monarch Beach development of Dana Point, many of which have ocean and golf course views. The community is managed by the Marquesa at Monarch Beach Homeowners Association (the Association), which is governed by a board of directors (the Board), and is subject to a recorded declaration of conditions, covenants, and restrictions (CC & Rs).

The Plaintiffs are individual homeowners within Marquesa whose views have been blocked by many palm trees in the development (some planted by the original developer, and some planted by homeowners), which have grown to heights exceeding the height of rooftops.<sup>1</sup> Because **148 trimming a palm tree would effectively require its removal, the Association has taken the position over the *1114 years that the CC & Rs' express requirement "[a]ll trees" on a lot be trimmed so as to not exceed the roof of the house on the lot, unless the tree does not obstruct views from other lots, does not apply to palm trees. Accordingly, it denied the Plaintiffs' demands that it enforce the CC & Rs and require offending palm trees be trimmed, topped, or removed.

<sup>1</sup> The plaintiffs and respondents are Robert and Margaret Ekstrom, James and Shendel Haines, Michael and Betty Sue Hopkins, Robert and Leona Kampling, Stephen and Cheryl Kron, Jim O'Neil, G. John and Joanne Scheffel, and Nicholas Shubin. For convenience, they will hereafter be referred to collectively as the Plaintiffs, unless the context indicates otherwise. In their respondents' brief, the Plaintiffs inform us that while this appeal was pending, Robert Kempling passed away. His estate was not substituted in. Additionally, Jim O'Neil and Michael and Betty Sue Hopkins no longer reside in Marquesa, although they have not been dismissed from this action.

The trial court granted the Plaintiffs' request for declaratory relief and mandamus to compel the Association to enforce its CC & Rs. The Association appeals contending: (1) the business judgment rule precludes judicial intervention in this matter; (2) the judgment is overbroad and void for vagueness; and (3) the judgment is void because the Plaintiffs did not join as defendants the individual homeowners whose trees might be affected by the judgment. We reject the contentions and affirm the judgment.

FACTS & PROCEDURE

CC & Rs

The Marquesa CC & Rs, recorded in 1989, provide for approval of all exterior improvements by the Association's Architectural Review Committee (ARC). Section 7.13 of the CC & Rs requires the owner of each lot to submit an exterior landscaping plan to the ARC for approval and "[e]ach Owner shall properly maintain and periodically replace when necessary all trees, plants, grass, vegetation and other landscaping improvements located on the Owner's lot... If any Owner fails to install or maintain landscaping in conformance with architectural rules ... the [ARC] ... shall have the right either to seek any remedies at law or in equity which it may have or to correct such condition and to enter upon such Owner's property for the purpose of doing so, and such Owner shall promptly reimburse the [ARC] for the cost thereof ...."

Section 7.10 of the CC & Rs provides: "View Impairment. Each Owner, by accepting a deed to a Lot, acknowledges that grading of, construction on or installation of improvements on other property within [the development] and surrounding real property may impair the view of such Owner, and consents to such impairment."

Section 7.18 of the CC & Rs, pertaining to plantings, provides: "Trees. All trees, hedges and other plant materials shall be trimmed by the Owner of the Lot upon which they are located so that they shall not exceed the height of the house on the Lot; provided, however, that where trees do not obstruct the view from any of the other Lots in the Properties, which determination shall be within the sole judgment of the [ARC], they shall not be required to be so *1115 trimmed. Before planting any trees, the proposed location of such trees shall be approved in writing by the [ARC] which approval shall consider the effect on views from other lots."

Section 13.1 of the CC & Rs, regarding their enforcement, provides: "The Association, Declarant and any Owner shall have the right to enforce, by any proceedings at law or in equity, all restrictions, conditions, covenants and reservations now or hereafter imposed by the [CC & Rs]. Failure by the Association, Declarant or any Owner to enforce any covenants or restrictions contained in the [CC & Rs] shall [not ] be **149 deemed a waiver of the right to do so thereafter."<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> As written, section 13.1 omitted the word "not," which we have italicized above, reading, "Failure ... to enforce any of the [CC & Rs] shall be deemed a waiver of the right to do so thereafter." The Plaintiffs introduced deposition testimony of the original drafter of the CC & Rs (now Justice Alex McDonald), that this was a typographical error, and the sentence should read “shall not be deemed a waiver” as was his practice in all CC & Rs he drafted [and the norm for CC & Rs]. In its statement of decision, the trial court found the section contained a typographical error and was intended to read as we have recited. The Association does not challenge the court's conclusion, but does assert the Board in good faith believed that by not enforcing the CC & Rs as to palm trees, it had waived the right to do so.

The Plaintiffs Buy View Homes

When each of the Plaintiffs purchased their homes in Marquesa, their homes had ocean and/or golf course views for which they paid a premium. Many of those views are now blocked by palm trees, which have been allowed to grow far above the height of the houses on the lots on which they are situated.

Plaintiff John Schoffel testified that when he moved into his house in 1997, he had a full ocean view that was not blocked by any trees. By 2002, he noticed palm trees growing into his view and by the time of trial, his home's view was about 40 percent blocked by 15 to 20 palm trees.

When Plaintiff Robert Ekstrom bought his home in 1999, it had a full ocean view. At that time, no palm trees in the community exceeded the height of the rooftops. Ekstrom's downhill neighbor, Davis Christakes—a member of the Association's Board of Directors—had about 20 palm trees growing on his property. Ekstrom reviewed the CC & Rs before his purchase and was satisfied section 7.18 would require Christakes' trees be trimmed or removed if they grew above the roofline and blocked Ekstrom's view.

Plaintiff Steve Kron bought his house with a full ocean view in 2001. Concerned that palm trees might grow to interfere with that view, Kron *1116 reviewed the CC & Rs prior to closing escrow and understood that section 7.18 would protect his view from the trees.

There was evidence the Association routinely enforced section 7.18 of the CC & Rs as to other tree species, ordering homeowners to trim their trees when they exceeded the height of the house. There was also evidence that when approving an individual homeowners landscape plans in 1991, the ARC specifically did so on the condition that if any approved tree grew to a height where it became a view obstruction, the owner would be required to have the tree topped, trimmed, or removed. And on at least one occasion in 1992, the ARC advised a homeowner that palm trees (apparently planted without ARC approval), had become a view obstruction from adjoining lots and must be removed or relocated to an area where they would not interfere with neighbors' views.

Christakes, who served on the Association Board for many years, owned a property on which over 20 palm trees are planted, several of which are among those now blocking the Plaintiffs' views. He participated over the years in Board actions concerning the enforcement of section 7.18 of the CC & Rs, consistently taking the position that section 7.18 could not be enforced as to palm trees. When a resident suggested Christakes had a conflict of interest as to the applicability of section 7.18 to palm trees, Christakes told her that since he had lost his own ocean view due to construction outside the development, he did not care if she lost hers as **150 well, and if she did not like the Board's decision to exclude palm trees completely from enforcement under section 7.18, she could file a legal action.

View HomeOwners Start to Complain

Sometime in 2002, various homeowners, including some of the Plaintiffs, saw their views being slowly eroded by growing palm trees. They demanded the Association enforce section 7.18 of the CC & Rs and require the offending trees be trimmed (or removed). The majority of the Board was of the opinion the aesthetic benefit to the entire community from the maturing and now very lush looking palm trees outweighed the value of preserving views of just a few homeowners. Since then, the community has been divided into two contentious factions: those opposing any effort to top or remove any existing palm tree and those wanting palm trees that obstruct individual homeowners' views topped or removed.

In May 2002, the Board asked its then attorney, Gary Dapelo, for a legal opinion as to the interpretation of the CC & R's and the Board's responsibilities regarding enforcement of the CC & Rs as to palm trees. Dapelo opined the CC & Rs did not give any homeowner a right to maintain an existing view *1117 because section 7.10 acknowledged grading and construction of improvements could impair an existing view. Section 7.18 gave the ARC (which in this case was the Board) sole discretion to decide that a tree did not obstruct a view and thus trimming or removal of the tree was not required. Dapelo opined that consistent with that discretion, the Board could exempt all palm trees entirely from enforcement. Dapelo also concluded homeowners with palms trees had defenses they could assert to any attempt to enforce section 7.18 of the CC & Rs making it unlikely the Association would prevail in any attempt to require any palm tree be trimmed or removed.

In June 2002, the Board sent a memorandum to all homeowners advising them it had decided it would be unreasonable to require any homeowner to top or remove any palm tree in the community. It referred homeowners to a set of Board Rules and Regulations adopted in 1996, in which palm trees were specifically excluded from section 7.18 of the CC & Rs, and which stated palm trees need only be trimmed to remove dead fronds.

In 2003, a newly elected board member, who sympathized with the home owners wanting to preserve their views, prevailed upon the Board to obtain a second legal opinion. It had been discovered that Christakes had a close personal relationship with Dapelo, who was inexperienced in representing homeowner's associations. In 2004, the Association retained attorney Richard Tinnelly to review the matter.

In May 2004, Tinnelly advised the Board that section 7.18 of the CC & Rs protected views from being obscured by trees growing above roof height on the lot where the tree was located, and the Board had no authority to exclude palm trees from application of the CC & Rs. Tinnelly advised the Board that CC & Rs section 7.10, concerning view impairment, applied to construction of physical improvements on properties, such as houses, fences, decks, but did not apply to view obstruction by trees, because that was specifically covered by section 7.18. He advised the Board it had no authority to promulgate rules and regulations that directly contradicted the express protection provided in the CC & Rs. Tinnelly advised the Board that if it wanted to continue with its policy of the wholesale exclusion of palm trees from the ambit of section 7.18, it would have to amend the CC & Rs, a prospect Tinnelly believed had little chance of success.

**151 Tinnelly recommended to the Board that as to existing palm trees, it should ascertain which specific palm trees interfered with views and as to those trees, the Board should determine which were planted with ARC approval (as part of a homeowner's approved landscaping plan), and which were planted without approval. As to palm trees planted with ARC approval, Tinnelly believed the homeowner might have a detrimental reliance defense to forced *1118 removal of the tree and the Board would need to look at each case individually to determine the possibility of success in any attempt to have the trees removed. Tinnelly advised the Board to require trimming or removal of unapproved palm trees growing above roof lines if it determined the tree blocked a view. He believed the Board did have discretion to formulate a definition of view.

The Board then attempted to amend the CC & Rs to exempt palms trees entirely from section 7.18, but could not garner sufficient homeowner votes. After the amendment attempt failed, one Board member commented within hearing of a homeowner that the Board could adopt regulations defining what constituted a "view" so narrowly that no palm tress would have to be removed.

Litigation Begins

In September 2004, Ekstrom wrote to the Board again about the palm trees obstructing his view. The Board did not respond. In November, the Plaintiffs' attorney wrote to the Board demanding it begin enforcing section 7.18 as to palm trees that were obstructing the Plaintiffs' views, and requesting mediation of the dispute.

At a board meeting on December 9, 2004, Tinnelly again urged the Board to start enforcing section 7.18 as to palm trees. He also urged the Board to engage in mediation with the Plaintiffs. Chrisakes commented that 75 percent of the homeowners did not want any palms trees removed and the Plaintiffs should be forced to "spend their own money if they want to sue to have trees removed." The Association refused to participate in mediation, and the Plaintiffs filed this action on December 17, 2004, seeking enforcement of the CC & Rs. The Plaintiffs' declaratory relief cause of action sought a declaration the Association had a duty to enforce section 7.18 as to growing palm trees, and sought an injunction directing the Board to appoint a committee to make a determination as to which palm trees obstructed the Plaintiffs' views and to direct that those trees be trimmed or removed as necessary.<sup>3</sup> <sup>3</sup> The complaint also contained causes of action against individual Board members and the Association's property management company. The individual Board members were dismissed after a successful summary judgment motion, and the management association settled.

The Board Adopts New Rules Concerning Palm Trees

While this lawsuit was pending, the Board adopted new rules and regulations concerning the enforcement of section 7.18 of the CC & Rs as to palm trees. The 2006 rules defined “view” as used in section 7.18 as being only that which is visible from the back of the view house, six feet above ground level, standing in the middle of the outside of the house looking straight ahead to infinity, with nothing to the left or right of the lot lines being considered part of the home's view. This definition of “view” precluded most of the Plaintiffs from claiming any view obstruction from palm trees either because of the shape of the lot (for example the Ekstroms' lot was pie shaped with the narrow point being at the back of the lot), or because the Plaintiffs' primary view was from the second floor of the house, not the first.

The 2006 rules provided no palm tree planted before adoption of the rules would be removed without the tree owners' approval. If the owner of the palm tree agreed to permit a palm tree be removed, the owner of the view lot would have to pay the cost of removal. The rules set out requirements for trimming and maintenance of each palm tree species (e.g., how many fronds the palm tree could have, which direction the fronds could be pointing, how often a palm tree owner could be required to trim the tree).

Statement of Decision

In its statement of decision, the trial court concluded section 7.18 was included in the CC & Rs to preserve ocean and golf course views. There was nothing unclear or ambiguous in the terms used. The provision required all trees be trimmed down to the height of the roof of the house on the lot where it sits if the tree obstructs the view from another lot. In the context of the CC & Rs, the plain meaning of the term “‘trimmed’ means removed, as by cutting, or cut down to a required size.” The word “[obstruct] means to block from sight or be in the way of (and thus even one palm frond would block some portion of a view)” and the term “[view] means that which is visible to the naked eye while standing, sitting or lying down anywhere in one's home, or anywhere on one's Lot, looking in any direction one wishes.” The court rejected the restrictive definition of view as used in the 2006 rules as being in conflict with the CC & R's.

The trial court concluded section 7.18 (trees must be trimmed) did not conflict with section 7.10 (view impairment from improvements), because the latter provision did not apply to trees or vegetation. It found requiring palms trees be trimmed or topped (even assuming trimming would result in death of the tree) was not unfair to the tree owners as they acquired their properties with knowledge of section 7.18 and its requirement their trees could not be permitted to grow to block views from other lots. The court rejected the Association's argument section 7.18 gave the ARC discretion to allow all palm trees that exceeded the roof height of the house. That sentence gave the ARC discretion to decide whether a particular palm tree obstructed a neighbor's view, but not to allow a palm tree that did in fact block a view to remain untrimmed.

In its statement of decision, the court rejected the Association's various defenses. The hardship on view lot owners if views (for which they paid a premium price) were destroyed outweighed the hardship on the owner of a palm tree if required to trim or remove the trees. There was no hardship to the Association because the CC & Rs require the owners of trees bear the expense of trimming, and the possibility of lawsuits against the Association by tree owners was speculative.

The four-year statute of limitations applicable to actions to enforce CC & Rs (Code Civ. Proc., § 337) did not commence until homeowners demanded enforcement of the CC & Rs in 2002, which was when their views started becoming obscured. The court concluded there was no basis for concluding the Association was estopped to enforce the CC & Rs (by having approved landscaping plans), and there was no evidence to support a waiver (by failing to enforce the CC & Rs) defense.

The court rejected several additional affirmative defenses because they had not been pled by the Association in its answer, or raised by it during trial, but were referenced for the first time in the Association's request for a statement of decision. They included the business judgment-judicial deference rule, the litigation committee defense, and failure to join indispensable parties. The court also rejected those defenses on the merits as well. The business judgment-judicial deference rule did not apply to acts beyond the authority of the Board. The adoption of the 2006 rules did not resolve the matter because the rules conflicted with the CC & Rs. The “litigation committee” defense was applicable only in the context of shareholder derivative suits. And owners of lots with palm trees that might eventually need to be removed were not indispensable parties to this action.

The Judgment

In its judgment, the court ordered the Association to enforce section 7.18 as to palm trees. It ruled that consistent with the

CC & Rs, the ARC had discretion, to be exercised in good faith, to determine whether any particular palm tree exceeding roof height in fact blocked a view, but the Association did not have discretion to exempt from enforcement palm trees that were found to block views. The ARC's approval of a landscaping plan that included palm trees did not exempt the palm tree from the requirements of section 7.18. The judgment defined “ ‘view’ ” as “a view of the ocean or neighboring golf course visible in any direction from anywhere on a homeowner's lot, inside or outside one's house.” It defined “ ‘obstruct’ ” as “to block from sight or be in the way even partially, and thus even one palm frond could block some portion of a view.” Neither the Plaintiffs nor the Association had waived their rights to enforce the CC & Rs. The individual *1121 homeowners with trees violating section 7.18 were not indispensable parties, and principles of res judicata would operate to bind all homeowners to the judgment. The judgment ordered the Association “to enforce [s]ection 7.18 and to utilize every enforcement mechanism available to it under the CC & Rs and the law in order to do so.” The court retained jurisdiction to enforce the judgment including jurisdiction to appoint a special master to ensure the Association's compliance with the judgment. The Plaintiffs were declared the prevailing parties and awarded their costs and attorney fees.

DISCUSSION

1. Standard of Review

[1] [2] [3] An appealed judgment or order is presumed to be correct, and the appellant bears the burden of overcoming that presumption. (Stevens v. Owens–Corning Fiberglas Corp. (1996) 49 Cal.App.4th 1645, 1657, 57 Cal.Rptr.2d 525.) The Plaintiffs sought and obtained declaratory relief and injunctive relief. Generally, the trial court's decision to grant or deny such relief will not be disturbed on appeal unless it is clearly shown its discretion was abused. (Salazar v. Eastin (1995) 9 Cal.4th 836, 849–850, 39 Cal.Rptr.2d 21, 890 P.2d 43 [injunctive relief]; Dolan–King v. Rancho Santa Fe Assn. (2000) 81 Cal.App.4th 965, 974, 97 Cal.Rptr.2d 280 (Dolan–King) [declaratory relief].) Where, however, the essential facts are undisputed, “in reviewing the propriety of the trial court's decision, we are confronted with questions of law. [Citations.] Moreover, to the extent our review of the court's declaratory judgment involves an interpretation of the [CC & Rs] provisions, that too is a question of law we address de novo. [Citations.]” (Ibid.)

2. Lamden Judicial Deference Rule

The Association contends the “judicial deference rule” adopted by the California Supreme Court in Lamden v. La Jolla Shores Clubdominium Homeowners **154 Assn. (1999) 21 Cal.4th 249, 87 Cal.Rptr.2d 237, 980 P.2d 940 (Lamden), which is an adaptation of the business judgment rule applicable to directors of corporations, precludes judicial review of any of its decisions concerning the enforcement or nonenforcement of section 7.18 of the CC & Rs as to palm trees. We disagree.

[4] [5] “ ‘The common law business judgment rule has two components—one which immunizes [corporate] directors from personal liability if they act in accordance with its requirements, and another which insulates from court intervention those management decisions which are made by directors in good faith in what the directors believe is the organization's best interest.’ [Citations.] A hallmark of the business judgment rule is that, when the rule's *1122 requirements are met, a court will not substitute its judgment for that of the corporation's board of directors. [Citation.]” (Lamden, supra, 21 Cal.4th at p. 257, 87 Cal.Rptr.2d 237, 980 P.2d 940.)

In Lamden, the owner of a condominium unit objected to the association's board of directors' decision to spot treat for termites rather tenting and fumigating the entire building. The Supreme Court adopted a rule it termed as analogous to the business judgment rule, holding, “Where a duly constituted community association board, upon reasonable investigation, in good faith and with regard for the best interests of the community association and its members, exercises discretion within the scope of its authority under relevant statutes, covenants and restrictions to select among means for discharging an obligation to maintain and repair a development's common areas, courts should defer to the board's authority and presumed expertise.” (Lamden, supra, 21 Cal.4th at pp. 253, 265, 87 Cal.Rptr.2d 237, 980 P.2d 940.) The Supreme Court adopted the association's position, at least as far as ordinary managerial decisions are concerned: “Common sense suggests that judicial deference in such cases as this is appropriate, in view of the relative competence, over that of courts, possessed by owners and directors of common interest developments to make the detailed and peculiar economic decisions necessary in the maintenance of those developments.” (Id. at pp. 270–271, 87 Cal.Rptr.2d 237, 980 P.2d 940.)

Lamden's holding, however, is not so broad as the Association asserts. It applied the “rule of judicial deference to community association board decisionmaking” where owners “seek to litigate ordinary maintenance decisions entrusted to the discretion of their associations' boards of directors. [Citation.]” (Lamden, supra, 21 Cal.4th at pp. 253, 260, 87 Cal.Rptr.2d 237, 980 P.2d 940.) And Lamden did not purport to extend judicial deference to board decisions that are outside the scope of its authority under its governing documents. Lamden specifically reaffirmed the principle that, “ ‘Under well-accepted principles of condominium law, a homeowner can sue the association for damages and an injunction to compel the association to enforce the provisions of the declaration. [Citations.]’ ” (Id. at pp. 268–269, 87 Cal.Rptr.2d 237, 980 P.2d 940, citing Posey v. Leavitt (1991) 229 Cal.App.3d 1236, 1246–1247, 280 Cal.Rptr. 568, Cohen v. Kite Hill Community Assn. (1983) 142 Cal.App.3d 642, 191 Cal.Rptr. 209.)

[6] [7] [8] [9] The Plaintiffs contend the Association has waived the application of the Lamden rule of judicial deference because it is in the nature of an affirmative defense that was not pled in the Association's answer or litigated at trial. The Association responds it was not required to raise the Lamden rule below because the rule merely *155 embodies the proper standard of judicial review—it is not a defense at all. But the very language used in Lamden, indicates judicial deference is owed only when its has been shown the Association acted after “reasonable investigation, in good faith and with regard for the best *1123 interests of the community association and its members....” (Lamden, supra, 21 Cal.4th at pp. 253, 265, 87 Cal.Rptr.2d 237, 980 P.2d 940.) A defense of good faith is necessarily factual in nature. (Everest Investors 8 v. McNeil Partners (2003) 114 Cal.App.4th 411, 432, 8 Cal.Rptr.3d 31.) Just as the corporate business judgment rule, which is a rule of judicial deference to good faith management decisions of corporate boards, is a defense (see Finley v. Superior Court (2000) 80 Cal.App.4th 1152, 1157, 96 Cal.Rptr.2d 128), so to is the rule of judicial deference to decisions of homeowner association boards articulated in Lamden. An affirmative defense may be waived if it is not raised below. (California Academy of Sciences v. County of Fresno (1987) 192 Cal.App.3d 1436, 1442, 238 Cal.Rptr. 154.) The defense was raised for the first time after trial in the Association's request for a statement of decision. The trial court correctly ruled the Association waived application of the Lamden rule of judicial deference by not raising it earlier.

Even if the judicial deference rule was not waived, we conclude the trial court correctly found it inapplicable in this instance. We consider the rule in two contexts. First, we consider whether the Association's position prior to the institution of this litigation that it could simply exempt all palm trees from the purview of section 7.18 of the CC & Rs is entitled to judicial deference. Second, we consider whether the Board's adoption of the 2006 rules concerning the enforcement of section 7.18 as to palm trees is entitled to judicial deference.

[10] The former issue is not so hard. We review the interpretation of the CC & Rs de novo. (Dolan–King, supra, 81 Cal.App.4th at p. 974, 97 Cal.Rptr.2d 280.) Section 7.18 is not at all ambiguous. It provides that “[a]ll trees, hedges and other plant materials shall be trimmed by the Owner of the Lot upon which they are located so that they shall not exceed the height of the house on the Lot....” (Italics added.) If, however, the ARC determines the trees “do not obstruct the view from any of the other Lots” then the trees do not need to be so trimmed (i.e., they may exceed the height of the house). The only reasonable construction to be given to the provision is that homeowners are afforded protection from having their views obstructed by vegetation, including trees. Nothing in the CC & Rs permits the Association to exclude an entire species of trees from section 7.18's application simply because it prefers the aesthetic benefit of those trees to the community. Even if the Board was acting in good faith and in the best interests of the community as a whole, its policy of exempting all palm trees from the application of section 7.18 was not in accord with the CC & Rs, which require all trees be trimmed so as to not obscure views. The Board's interpretation of the CC & Rs was inconsistent with the plain meaning of the document and thus not entitled to judicial deference. (Lamden, supra, 21 Cal.4th at pp. 253, 265, 87 Cal.Rptr.2d 237, 980 P.2d 940.)

*1124 The Association also argues the trial court was required to defer to the Association's decision in 2006 to adopt rules to enforce section 7.18 as to palm trees. It urges the new rules represent an appropriate balance between the communities' interest in maintaining the palm trees and the individual homeowner's interests in preserving their existing views. Accordingly, *156 the Association argues the 2006 rules render moot the entire dispute.

[11] We disagree the new rules are entitled to judicial deference under Lamden. As with the Board's prior policy that palm trees are exempt from the CC & Rs, the new rules are in direct conflict with the CC & Rs. The rules specifically exclude all palm trees planted before 2006—which basically means all trees that might currently obscure the Plaintiffs' views. But section 7.18 does not grant the Association discretion to exclude view-blocking trees, it only gives the ARC discretion to determine whether or not a particular tree blocks a view. Furthermore, the new rules established what might best be called a “bowling alley” definition of what constituted view. Even if the Board had some discretionary authority to define what was meant by “view”, it was not free to fashion a definition that rendered section 7.18 meaningless. (See Nahrstedt v. Lakeside Village Condominium Assn. (1994) 8 Cal.4th 361, 380–381, 33 Cal.Rptr.2d 63, 878 P.2d 1275 [CC & Rs to be interpreted according to rules of contracts with view toward enforcing reasonable intent of parties].)

The Association cites Harvey v. Landing Homeowners Assn. (2008) 162 Cal.App.4th 809, 76 Cal.Rptr.3d 41, for the proposition the trial court was required to defer to the Association's chosen method for enforcing the CC & Rs, i.e., the 2006 rules. In Harvey, the association board permitted owners of units adjacent to common area attic space to utilize portions of the common area for exclusive storage. (Id. at p. 813, 76 Cal.Rptr.3d 41.) The appellate court concluded the association board acted according to the authority granted to it in the CC & Rs. “ ‘The CC & R's make clear the Board has the ‘sole and exclusive’ right to ‘manage’ the common area ...; to ‘adopt reasonable rules and regulations not inconsistent with the provisions contained in [the CC & R's]’ relating to that use ...; to designate portions of the common area as ‘storage areas’ ...; and to authorize it to allow an owner to use exclusively portions of the common area ‘nominal in area’ adjacent to the owner's unit, provided such use ‘does not unreasonably interfere with any other owner's use or enjoyment of the project.’ ” (Id. at pp. 818–819, 76 Cal.Rptr.3d 41, fn. omitted.) Harvey went on to conclude the Lamden rule of judicial deference applied to more than just ordinary discretionary maintenance decisions. “Under the ‘rule of judicial deference’ adopted by the court in Lamden, we defer to the [b]oard's authority and presumed expertise regarding its sole and exclusive right to maintain, control and manage the common areas when it granted the fourth floor homeowners the right, under certain conditions, to use up to 120 square feet of inaccessible attic space common *1125 area for rough storage.” (Harvey, supra, 162 Cal.App.4th at p. 821, 76 Cal.Rptr.3d 41.) Harvey is inapposite. In Harvey, the board was acting consistently within the authority granted it in the CC & Rs. Here, the CC & Rs do not give the Board discretion to act as it did.

3. Vagueness and Overbreadth

The Association contends the judgment is void because it is too broad and too vague. Specifically, the Association attacks the language in the judgment ordering it not just to begin enforcing section 7.18, but “to utilize every enforcement mechanism available to it under the CC & Rs and the law in order to do so.”

[12] [13] The Association first contends this language is too broad and impermissibly interferes with its discretion to determine how (and whether and when) to enforce the CC & Rs. It cites us to Lamden, supra, 21 Cal.4th 249, 87 Cal.Rptr.2d 237, 980 P.2d 940, *Haley v. Casa Del Rey **157 Homeowners Assn.* (2007) 153 Cal.App.4th 863, 63 Cal.Rptr.3d 514, and Beehan v. Lido Isle Community Assn. (1977) 70 Cal.App.3d 858, 137 Cal.Rptr. 528, for the proposition the Association alone has discretion to determine how to enforce its CC & Rs. But as noted in Lamden, when an association refuses to enforce its CC & Rs, a homeowner may seek an injunction compelling it to do so. (Lamden, supra, 21 Cal.4th at p. 268, 87 Cal.Rptr.2d 237, 980 P.2d 940 [“ ‘[u]nder well-accepted principles of condominium law, a homeowner can sue the association for damages and an injunction to compel the association to enforce the provisions of the declaration’ ”].) In view of the Association's historical position that it need not and would not enforce section 7.18 as to palm trees, a directive that it utilize all enforcement mechanisms available is necessary to ensure the Association does not simply now make a token effort.

[14] The Association also complains the directive that it “utilize every enforcement mechanism available to it under the CC & Rs and the law” is vague because it is could be construed as a directive that it commence legal action against specific homeowners who have not been identified. To satisfy the requirement that injunctions concerning real property be specific, the Association argues the judgment must specify “against which homeowners, what properties, and with respect to what trees” it must act. It complains the lack of such direction in the judgment “severely impairs” its ability to comply with the judgment. We disagree.

Under section 7.18, it is the Association, through its ARC, that has the sole discretion under the CC & Rs to determine whether a specific palm tree that has grown beyond roof-top height “obstruct[s] the view from any of the other Lots....”

Until now, the Association has simply avoided any exercise of this *1126 discretion by taking the position all palm trees are excluded from the directive. Until the Association begins to do its job, the specific trees that must be trimmed will not be identified. The judgment is sufficiently clear as to what the Association must do. It must comply with its obligations by exercising its discretion “in good faith” to determine which trees obstruct the Plaintiffs’ views and it must then undertake the procedures outlined in the CC & Rs to enforce the CC & Rs as to those trees. The Association cannot feign ignorance of what it should do—it has apparently had no difficulty figuring out how to carry out its responsibilities as to other trees species and has in the past required homeowners to trim or remove such trees.

We are equally unimpressed by the Association’s assertion it should not be required to act at all to enforce section 7.18 as to palm trees because it has not been told how far it must go—specifically, whether it must go so far as to commence legal action. The trial court specifically retained jurisdiction to oversee enforcement. (See Molar v. Gates (1979) 98 Cal.App.3d 1, 25, 159 Cal.Rptr. 239.) It is pure speculation as to whether legal action against any homeowner will be necessary. And whether the Association should ultimately seek injunctive relief against any tree owner will have to be judged by the facts in existence at that time. (See Beehan, supra, 70 Cal.App.3d at p. 866, 137 Cal.Rptr. 528 [refusal of association to seek injunctive relief against homeowner in violation of CC & Rs “must be judged in light of the facts at the time the board consider[s] the matter”].) In current economic times, it might make little economic sense for the Association to pursue costly litigation against individual homeowners who refuse to comply with the CC & Rs, particularly since it is all the homeowners, **158 including Plaintiffs, who will ultimately bear the cost of such litigation. And in such case, the Plaintiffs are certainly free to pursue their own litigation against individual homeowners to compel removal of any specific offending palm trees. (See Lamden, supra, 21 Cal.4th at p. 268, 87 Cal.Rptr.2d 237, 980 P.2d 940 [homeowner can sue directly to enforce CC & Rs].)

4. Failure to Join Indispensable Parties

[15] The Association contends the judgment is void because the Plaintiffs failed to join as defendants the individual homeowners whose palm trees are obstructing their views as required by Code of Civil Procedure section 389. Accordingly, it argues the court in essence permitted an involuntary defense class action in which the rights of the individual tree owners have been adjudicated without their participation in this lawsuit. Because the Association did not raise this issue until after trial, in its request for a statement of decision, it has waived the argument on appeal. (McKeon v. Hastings College (1986) 185 Cal.App.3d 877, 889, 230 Cal.Rptr. 176.) Furthermore, Civil Code section 1368.3 provides an association may defend litigation concerning enforcement of CC & Rs without joining the individual homeowners in the association.

*1127 DISPOSITION

The judgment is affirmed. The Respondents are awarded their costs on appeal.

WE CONCUR: RYLAARSDAM, Acting P.J., and ARONSON, J.

All Citations

168 Cal.App.4th 1111, 86 Cal.Rptr.3d 145, 08 Cal. Daily Op. Serv. 14,671, 2008 Daily Journal D.A.R. 17,653

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-108

 An official website of the United States government
Here's how you know

The Role Of Competition Agencies In Regulated Sectors

~ Friday, May 11, 2007

---

THE ROLE OF COMPETITION AGENCIES IN REGULATED SECTORS

STUART M. CHEMTOB

Special Counsel for International Trade
Antitrust Division
U.S. Department of Justice

5th International Symposium on Competition Policy and Law
Institute of Law
Chinese Academy of Social Sciences
Beijing, China

May 11-12, 2007

5th International Symposium on Competition Policy and Law
Institute of Law
Chinese Academy of Social Sciences
May 11-12, 2007

THE ROLE OF COMPETITION AGENCIES IN REGULATED SECTORS

Stuart M. Chemtob
Special Counsel for International Trade
Antitrust Division
U.S. Department of Justice<sup>(1)</sup>

Market economies operate from the general principle that the invisible hand of the market results in a more optimal distribution of resources and a higher level of economic welfare than does regulation of economic activity by the heavy, visible hand of the government. The role of antitrust laws should be to ensure that the invisible hand is allowed to do its work efficiently and effectively.

That does not mean, however, that economic regulation has no place in market economies. Indeed, economists agree that in at least some industries—for example, industries characterized by constantly declining supply curves (often called "natural monopolies")—economic regulation by the government will provide more consumer welfare benefits than would a laissez-faire approach. Regulation has also been justified as a means of accomplishing objectives that go beyond pure competition goals—for example, to implement a policy of universal access to basic services, or to ensure that the economy can reap the benefits of network economies that might not otherwise be achieved. There may also be structural impediments or other market failures that counsel against deregulation at a given time. As a consequence, every country, including the United States, currently regulates some sectors of its economy.

Over the past 120 years and concurrent with the adoption and refinement of an economy-wide antitrust law, the United States has implemented a variety of federal regulatory schemes in particular sectors. After long experience with these regulatory approaches, however, we learned that over-regulation imposes substantial costs and inefficiencies on the economy. We also discovered that some sectors that we had considered to be natural monopolies and therefore appropriate subjects for regulation rather than competition have turned out, either because of better economic understanding or technological changes, not to be natural monopolies. These sectors are now understood to be suitable for market-based competition.

As a consequence, over the past 25 years the United States has pursued a policy of deregulation, during which we have eliminated or rolled-back regulation in most of the previously-regulated sectors, seeking instead to introduce competition and its market disciplines to the greatest extent possible. These deregulatory efforts have provided huge benefits to consumers and to the economy. One study estimated that deregulation in just three industries in the United States—airlines, motor carriers, and railroads—has increased U.S. GDP by about ½ percent each year.<sup>(2)</sup>

Where sectors have been fully deregulated, it is clear that the antitrust laws should fully apply. However, where there has been only partial deregulation, so that some competition has been introduced in a sector, but some regulation continues, the interplay between competition law and sectoral regulation becomes very important. Today I will discuss how the United States has approached this problem. I will then discuss the lessons that China may wish to take from the U.S. experience. Finally, I will make a few comments on the approach taken in the latest public version of China's draft Antimonopoly Law.

U.S. Approaches to the Interface of Competition Law and Sectoral Regulation

In the United States, our courts have recognized the important role that our antitrust laws play in our economy and in our society as a whole. In fact, the U.S. Supreme Court has described the antitrust laws as a "comprehensive charter of economic liberty."<sup>(3)</sup> In light of this high status accorded the antitrust laws, it is not surprising that our courts have been reluctant to conclude that the antitrust laws have been superseded by other regulatory systems. On the contrary, our courts have held that unless our Congress has expressed a clear intention to displace competition in a particular sector, the courts should interpret the regulatory regime and the antitrust laws in a way that tries to give effect to both.<sup>(4)</sup>

In actual practice, the United States has adopted several different models to define the relationship between sectoral regulators and antitrust enforcement agencies.

In a very few instances, our Congress has explicitly decided that some or all of the activities of enterprises in a particular regulated industry should be completely exempt from the antitrust laws, and subject only to the supervision of the regulatory authority. The Interstate Commerce Act, for example, exempted from antitrust scrutiny any rail carrier merger that was approved or exempted from approval by the regulatory agency. Instead, the Surface Transportation Board ("Board"), which currently oversees the rail sector, must approve rail carrier mergers. The Board is required to approve mergers that are "consistent with the public interest," based on consideration of a variety of factors, including whether the proposed transaction would have an adverse effect on competition among rail carriers in the affected region.<sup>(5)</sup> However, the Department of Justice must be notified of proposed mergers between major (class 1) rail carriers, and may choose to participate as a party in the proceedings before the Board.<sup>(6)</sup>

In the vast majority of regulated sectors in the United States, by contrast, the antitrust enforcement agencies are empowered to investigate and take enforcement action against any anticompetitive conduct in that sector. This statement is subject to one important caveat, however. The courts have developed the concept of "implied immunity" to protect from antitrust attack conduct that is necessary to implement the regulatory scheme intended by Congress. However, implied antitrust immunity is not found frequently, and is reserved for situations where there is a "clear repugnancy between the antitrust laws and the regulatory system."<sup>(7)</sup>

In some regulated sectors, our Congress has made it clear that the antitrust laws should fully apply to the conduct of regulated enterprises and that the courts should not find any implied antitrust immunity for such conduct. For example, the Telecommunications Act of 1996 makes clear that telecommunications carriers must conform their conduct to the requirements of both the Sherman Act as well as to the Telecommunications Act. The Congress included a specific provision in the Telecommunications Act to make clear its intention that that Act not be construed "to modify, impair, or supersede the applicability of any of the antitrust laws."<sup>(8)</sup> So, for example, if long-distance telephone companies were to enter into a price-fixing agreement to set the rates for long-distance calls, the companies would be subject to criminal antitrust prosecution, just as would companies in any other sector.<sup>(9)</sup>

In most regulated sectors in the United States, however, both the antitrust authorities and the regulatory authorities have concurrent jurisdiction over anticompetitive conduct. Both authorities may independently block or challenge anticompetitive conduct, with the regulatory agency's operative review standard typically including both competition and non-competition factors. The approval of one agency does not necessarily mean that the other agency will refrain from challenging or blocking the same conduct. As is readily apparent, having two agencies investigating and addressing the competitive effects of the same conduct -- such as is frequently the case for mergers in regulated sectors -- can lead to conflicting decisions, particularly in the absence of close cooperation and coordination between the antitrust authorities and the regulator. Let me provide a few examples of the operation of concurrent jurisdiction in the review of competitive effects of business conduct in regulated sectors in the United States.

Telecommunications

The telecommunications sector is one of the areas where concurrent jurisdiction over mergers works reasonably well. The Federal Communications Commission ("FCC") is required to review the transfer of telecommunications licenses and authorizations, such as will occur in the merger of two telecommunications companies. The FCC review is based on whether the transaction will serve "the public interest, convenience and necessity."<sup>(10)</sup> The FCC's public interest analysis is broader than the antitrust analysis conducted by the Department of Justice<sup>(11)</sup> under Section 7 of the Clayton Act,<sup>(12)</sup> since the FCC must consider not only whether the transaction preserves and enhances competition in relevant markets, but also whether the merger ensures that a diversity of voices is made available to the public and whether it will help accelerate the private sector deployment of advanced services.<sup>(13)</sup>

In its evaluation of the competitive effects of a merger, the FCC seeks to apply the same standards and criteria used by the Department of Justice.<sup>(14)</sup> To minimize the possibility that their respective analyses of the competitive effects of the transaction will lead to inconsistent results, our two agencies cooperate extensively on an informal basis. Although FCC rules generally require it to disclose any meetings with outside persons, the rules contain an exception for meetings with the antitrust authorities.<sup>(15)</sup> Consequently, we are able to share non-confidential industry information and discuss the appropriate relevant market parameters, theories of competitive harm, and proposed remedies. Cooperation is further enhanced when our agencies are able to share confidential information pursuant to a limited waiver of confidentiality by the parties to the transaction.

Electricity

In the energy sector, the interstate transmission of electricity is regulated by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC), and both FERC and the Department of Justice review mergers in the electricity sector. FERC reviews mergers pursuant to section 203 of the Federal Power Act,<sup>(16)</sup> which requires FERC to approve a merger if it will be "consistent with the public interest." Under this "public interest" test, FERC considers the effects of the merger in three areas: competition, rates, and regulation. In 1996, FERC issued a Merger Policy Statement, in which it adopted the antitrust agencies' Horizontal Merger Guidelines as the analytical framework under which it would analyze the competitive effects of a merger.<sup>(17)</sup> The adoption of the Merger Policy Statement by FERC means that it will analyze the competitive effects of mergers in the electricity sector with reference to the same merger guidelines as used by the antitrust agencies, which one would expect would lead both agencies to come to the same conclusion regarding the likely competitive effects of a transaction. However, FERC rules concerning disclosure of any discussions about a pending matter with outside parties (including with the Department of Justice) preclude the same informal, cooperative exchanges of information and discussion between staffs as occurs with the FCC with regard to mergers in the telecommunications area. Therefore, competitive effects analyses by FERC have not always matched the conclusions reached by the Department of Justice. I will briefly discuss one example.

In December 2004 Exelon Corporation proposed to merge with Public Service Enterprise Group, Inc., a transaction that would have created the largest electric and gas utility in the United States with assets of nearly $80 billion and annual revenues of $27 billion. The merging parties competed for electricity customers in the mid-Atlantic region of the United States as well as in four other states.

Both the Department of Justice and FERC separately reviewed the transaction to determine its likely competitive effects. Both agencies concluded that the proposed transaction, as originally structured, would likely substantially reduce competition in wholesale electricity rates in the mid-Atlantic region of the United States (albeit using slightly different geographic market definitions.) In June 2005 FERC announced that it would approve the transaction if the companies divested 4,000 megawatts of unspecified generation facilities in that region, and additionally agreed to sell 2,600 megawatts of energy from their nuclear plants.<sup>(18)</sup> One year later, the Department of Justice determined that the merger was anticompetitive, but also concluded that the competitive effects could be resolved and the transaction allowed to proceed if the parties divested six specific electricity generation plants in Pennsylvania and New Jersey, the area in which the merging companies had the greatest concentration of assets. The companies agreed to divest those plants, and the Department of Justice announced that, subject to court approval of the proposed Consent Decree, it would agree to allow the transaction to proceed under those conditions.<sup>(19)</sup>

The most significant difference between the FERC and Justice Department approaches in that case was in the construction of the remedy. The FERC remedy was focused primarily on lowering the concentration of ownership of generating facilities. The Justice Department approach was different. Although the Justice Department's divestiture plan would have substantially reduced market shares and concentration levels compared to the levels that would have existed had the merger gone through as originally proposed, the purpose of the DOJ-approved divestitures was to preserve competition, not to maintain market shares or concentration levels at their pre-merger levels.<sup>(20)</sup> Instead, the DOJ remedy sought divestiture by Exelon of specific key assets that would have made it profitable for Exelon to withhold output and raise prices in the relevant market. By contrast, FERC's unspecified divestiture did not guarantee that the merged firm would give up the critical assets needed to ensure that the merged firm could not withhold output and raise price profitably.<sup>(21)</sup>

Banking

The jurisdiction of the Department of Justice to review bank mergers was confirmed by the U.S. Supreme Court in its 1963 decision in the Philadelphia National Bank case.<sup>(22)</sup> Three years later, the Bank Merger Act and the Bank Holding Company Act were amended to provide for concurrent independent reviews of bank mergers by the Department of Justice and the relevant bank regulatory agency.<sup>(23)</sup> Under the Bank Merger Act of 1966, the bank regulator is required to seek a report on competitive factors involved in the merger from the Department of Justice. The bank regulator must take this report into consideration in its decision-making on the competitive effects of the transaction, but may not be required to follow the Justice Department's advice, depending on other factors. In 1995 the Department of Justice, Federal Reserve Board and Office of the Comptroller of the Currency jointly published bank merger screening guidelines<sup>(24)</sup> to help ensure that the bank regulators and the Department of Justice apply similar standards in evaluating the competitive effects of a merger, although the screening guidelines make clear that the regulatory agencies and the Department of Justice, in practice, do not necessarily use the same product market or geographic market definitions. For example, the Department of Justice examines the competitive effects of the transaction in disaggregated product markets (including retail, small business and middle-market lending) while the banking agencies look at the cluster of banking services. Remedies recommended by the Justice Department and the bank regulators may also differ, with Justice Department remedies more likely to be focused on ensuring that market competition is protected, rather than simply on restoring the pre-merger structural characteristics of the market (as was also the case in the Exelon electricity merger discussed earlier.) Unlike the laws applicable to mergers in the telecommunications or energy areas, however, the bank regulators are authorized to approve an anticompetitive merger if they find that the anticompetitive effects are "clearly outweighed in the public interest by the probable effects of the transaction in meeting the convenience and needs of the community to be served."<sup>(25)</sup>

Implications for China

With that background on U.S. practice, let me now turn to the question of whether China should adopt the same concurrent jurisdiction approach to review of the competitive effects of conduct in regulated sectors as is common in the United States. China should consider carefully whether it is appropriate to follow the practice of the United States in this area. It may make more sense to have one agency responsible for conducting competitive effects analyses of both mergers and other business conduct in regulated sectors. A concurrent jurisdiction approach may result in a wasteful duplication of efforts, as both the antitrust agency and the sectoral regulator each evaluate the particular conduct involved and its likely effects on competition in the industry. Although some of this duplication can be avoided through coordination between the agencies, the need for separate decisions will inevitably mean that both agencies will be required to expend significant resources investigating and evaluating the competitive effects of the same conduct.

Of even greater concern is the potential additional burden and uncertainty imposed on the business community by parallel reviews. First, both agencies will need to collect information necessary to conduct their respective competitive effects analyses from the enterprises engaged in the suspected anticompetitive conduct, as well as from other market participants. Since the competition agency and the sectoral regulator will typically not take identical approaches to the investigation, recipients of investigatory inquiries may have to incur significant costs responding separately to each agency's request. Second, separate competition reviews may lead to different and in some cases inconsistent determinations as to whether conduct is anticompetitive, which may make it more difficult for enterprises to determine in advance whether proposed conduct will be found to create competitive problems so that they can avoid costly mistakes. Finally, dual competition reviews may lead to inconsistent remedy orders, as happened in the Exelon case that I described earlier, or to over-intervention, since the more aggressive, interventionist decision will be the one that has the most binding effect.

Therefore China may want to avoid adopting a concurrent competition review approach and instead make just one agency responsible for reviewing the competitive effects of activities in regulated sectors. Generally, competition agencies will be in a better position than sectoral regulators to engage in that analysis for several reasons. First, the competition agency will have broad experience across many sectors in determining relevant product and geographic markets and in analyzing the competitive effects of business conduct. The competition agency will be able to apply a consistent and independent eye to the competitive consequences of particular activities, and will have developed good instincts, based on sound economic analysis and extensive experience, as to what types of conduct are more likely to present competitive problems and what questions to ask in evaluating that conduct. The Antimonopoly Authority is also likely to have better investigative tools for collecting the necessary information to make those determinations, since it will have been set up and organized with precisely those functions in mind.

The sectoral regulators, by contrast, will not be as experienced in conducting competition analyses as the antimonopoly enforcement agency. Moreover, sectoral regulators are susceptible to what is known as "regulatory capture" by the industry that they regulate. The day-to-day interactions between industry officials and regulatory agency bureaucrats may lead to a commonality of interests that can interfere with the arm's-length perspective necessary to evaluate competitive harms and to construct remedies that will protect competition for the benefit of the economy as a whole. This commonality of interests can be further strengthened if the regulatory agencies seek to hire people with expertise obtained by working in the industry. Moreover, it is possible that regulatory agency staff may develop an interest in promoting the status quo in the industry, in part because of a desire to ensure that their own jobs will remain relevant or that there is a demand for their bureaucratic expertise when they are ready to leave government service.

Another factor weighing against putting regulatory agencies in charge of protecting competition is that regulators will typically have a pro-regulatory bias to addressing behavioral problems in the industry, both for the reasons I just discussed and because their world view is naturally influenced by the scope of their work experience which is to rely on regulation rather than market forces. This means that in looking for remedies to address competition problems, regulators may be more comfortable approving proposed transactions that increase market power and then attempting to limit the consequences of their decisions by imposing behavioral remedies, implemented through day-to-day price or other regulation, rather than preventing the increase in market power through efficient and effective structural remedies. As a consequence, the structure of the industry may never evolve to the point where sufficient new entry is induced to permit further deregulation.<sup>(26)</sup>

For all of these reasons, China may want to consider giving the Antimonopoly Authority sole jurisdiction to evaluate and take enforcement action against anticompetitive conduct in regulated sectors. This does not mean, however, that the sectoral regulator should have no role to play in evaluating mergers and other conduct, and in promoting and protecting competition in their industries. First, the regulatory agency should cooperate with the Antimonopoly Authority wherever possible. The sectoral regulator will have a great deal of knowledge about the structure and day-to-day behavior of the markets within its purview. To the extent that the regulatory agency can share that information and cooperate in the antimonopoly investigation, the quality and efficiency of the Antimonopoly Authority's investigation and competitive effects determination will be significantly improved. For that reason, China should ensure that there are no unnecessary barriers to cooperation between the relevant agencies in the competition area, consistent with confidentiality requirements. Second, it may be appropriate for the regulatory agency to review mergers and other conduct for consistency with the agency's regulatory objectives. For example, as I mentioned earlier, the FCC examines mergers not only for their impact on competition, but also to ensure that there are a diversity of voices made available to the public and that the transaction will promote the dissemination of advanced telecommunications services.

I would like to add one caveat to the view that the competition enforcement agency be solely responsible for analyzing the competitive effects of business activities in regulated sectors. If it is determined that competition is best preserved through day-to-day regulation such as is typically the case in enforcing mandatory access to natural monopoly transmission networks then this is the type of competition-protecting activity that is better suited for regulatory agencies rather than competition enforcers.

This last point raises an additional role for competition agencies in regulated sectors engaging in competition advocacy. Where regulatory agencies are given a lead or concurrent role in promoting or preserving competition in a sector, or in balancing competition and non-competition objectives, competition agencies will often be able to use their expertise to provide useful advice on how to accomplish those objectives through the implementation of market-based solutions. For example, in 2005 the Department of Justice engaged in competition advocacy by submitting comments to the Federal Aviation Administration on how best to allocate take-off and landing slots at congested airports in that case Chicago's O'Hare International Airport in a manner that both addresses the problem of airport congestion and encourages competition.<sup>(27)</sup> The Justice Department recommended that the FAA conduct periodic anonymous take-off and landing slot auctions, which would thereby enable all carriers, both incumbents and entrants, to compete for access based on how efficiently they can use that scarce resource.

The competition advocacy function of antitrust agencies is a very useful and important one, particularly in regulated sectors, and I would encourage China to make clear in the Antimonopoly Law that the Antimonopoly Authority will have the authority to engage in competition advocacy activities.

Comments on Draft Antimonopoly Law Approach

Before closing today, I would like to take a few minutes to comment on the Antimonopoly Authority's role in regulated sectors as envisioned by the draft Antimonopoly Law currently being considered by the National People's Congress.<sup>(28)</sup> There are two primary provisions that appear to relate to the role of the Antimonopoly Authority in regulated sectors. First, Article 2 provides that the Antimonopoly Law does not apply "where other laws or administrative regulations provide provisions." Second, Article 44 states that where other laws or regulations stipulate that a particular department or organ shall investigate and handle conduct that would be prohibited by the Antimonopoly Law, that administrative agency shall have primary jurisdiction to investigate and handle the conduct. However, if the agency fails to investigate and handle the matter, then the Antimonopoly Authority may investigate and take appropriate action after seeking the opinion of the relevant agency.

My first comment is that these two provisions do not appear to be completely consistent. If Article 2 is read literally, once another law or regulation gives authority to an agency to investigate anticompetitive behavior, the Antimonopoly Law should not apply, and hence there would be no scope for the Antimonopoly Authority to take action even if the regulatory authority failed to act. Putting that problem aside, the approach taken in Article 44 to vest in the sectoral regulator or other supervisory agency primary jurisdiction to investigate and address potentially anticompetitive conduct appears to avoid the problems of duplicative competitive effects investigations that I discussed earlier. However, for the reasons I stated, China may want to consider whether it would be better to give that authority to the Antimonopoly Authority rather than to the sectoral regulator.

Finally, I would like to comment on the approach taken in Article 2 to declare the Antimonopoly Law invalid against conduct with respect to which other laws or regulations "provide provisions." As I discussed at the beginning of my talk, it is sensible to give priority to specific laws or regulations authorizing conduct that would otherwise be unlawful under the competition laws. In the United States, this conduct may be protected by an implied immunity, even where no statute explicitly immunizes the conduct, as Article 2 appears to do. However, not all conduct in sectors covered by regulatory systems needs to be immunized from the antitrust laws. On the contrary, only conduct that is necessary to give effect to the regulatory system should be immunized. The language of Article 2 is not very clear on this point, and could be interpreted to immunize a broader range of conduct than would be necessary or appropriate. Therefore, it might be useful to re-examine the language of Article 2 with a view to clarifying that the exemption only applies to the extent of the inconsistency between the regulatory scheme and the Antimonopoly Law.

Conclusion

In conclusion, determining the proper relationship between competition enforcement authorities and sectoral regulators is a complex issue that depends very much on the legal and regulatory systems of a country, the appropriate balance between sometimes conflicting regulatory and market-oriented objectives and the confidence that the government has in the effectiveness of the market in determining outcomes that are best for its citizens and its economy as a whole. I have provided my views on how best to address this problem, but there are many possible solutions, as is apparent just by looking at the multiple approaches taken in the United States. I wish the Chinese Government success in determining which approach is best for China.

Thank you.

FOOTNOTES

1. The views expressed are those of the author, and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Department of Justice.
2. Economic Report of the President (Feb. 2002) at p.63, available at http://www.gpoaccess.gov/usbudget/fy03/pdf/2002\_erp.pdf.
3. "The Sherman Act was designed to be a comprehensive charter of economic liberty aimed at preserving free and unfettered competition as the rule of trade. It rests on the premise that the unrestrained interaction of competitive forces will yield the best allocation of our economic resources, the lowest prices, the highest quality and the greatest material progress, while at the same time providing an environment conducive to the preservation of our democratic political and social institutions." Northern Pacific Railway Co. v. United States, 356 U.S. 1, 4-5 (1958).
4. See National Gerimedical Hospital & Gerontology Center v. Blue Cross, 452 U.S. 378, 392 (1981).
5. See 49 U.S.C.A. §§ 11324(c) and 11324(b)(5).
6. 49 U.S.C.A. §11325(b)(1).
7. See United States v. National Ass'n of Securities Dealers, Inc. 422 U.S. 694, 719-20 (1975).
8. 47 U.S.C. §152 note.
9. On the other hand, a violation of the rules or duties imposed on telecommunications carriers by the Federal Communications Commission the federal telecommunications regulator is not necessarily sufficient to constitute a violation of the antitrust laws. See the Supreme Court decision in Verizon Communications Inc. v. Law Offices of Curtis V. Trinko, 540 U.S. 398 (2004). See also, Goldwasser v. Ameritech Corp., 222 F.3d 390 (7th Cir. 2000).

10. Sections 214(a) and 310(d) of the Communications Act of 1934, 47 U.S.C. §214(a), §310(d). The FCC is also authorized to analyze telecommunications mergers under Section 7 of the Clayton Act. 15 U.S.C. §21.
11. The Federal Trade Commission does not have jurisdiction over telecommunications common carriers. See 15 U.S.C. §§21(a) and 45(a)(2).
12. 15 U.S.C. §18.
13. See In re Applications for Consent to the Transfer of Control of Licenses from Comcast Corp. and AT&T Corp. to AT&T Comcast, 17 F.C.C.R. 23246, at 23255.
14. See Department of Justice and Federal Trade Commission 1992 Horizontal Merger Guidelines, as revised in 1997, available at <http://www.usdoj.gov/atr/public/guidelines/hmg.htm>.
15. 47 C.F.R. §1.1204(a)(6).
16. 16 U.S.C.A. §824(b).
17. See Merger Policy Statement, FERC Order No. 592 (December 18, 1996), available at <http://www.ferc.gov/industries/electric/gen-info/mergers/rm96-6.pdf>.
18. See FERC order authorizing merger under section 203 of the Federal Power Act (Docket No. EC05-43-000, July 1, 2005), available at <http://www.ferc.gov/whats-new/comm-meet/063005/E-4.pdf>.
19. See Proposed Final Judgment in U.S. v. Exelon Corp. and Public Service Enterprise Group, Inc., available at <http://www.usdoj.gov/atr/cases/f216700/216784.htm>.
20. See, U.S. Department of Justice, Antitrust Division Policy Guide to Merger Remedies, §II (October 2004), available at <http://www.usdoj.gov/atr/public/guidelines/205108.htm> ("Restoring competition requires replacing the competitive intensity lost as a result of the merger rather than focusing narrowly on returning to premerger HHI levels.")
21. See Competitive Impact Statement in U.S. v. Exelon Corp. and Public Service Enterprise Group, Inc., available at <http://www.usdoj.gov/atr/cases/f217700/217717.htm>.
22. See United States v. Philadelphia National Bank, 374 U.S. 321 (1963).
23. There are four different industry-specific regulators that have authority to approve or deny bank mergers, depending on the type of bank involved in the transaction: the Federal Reserve Board, the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Office of Thrift Supervision. Of those four regulators, only the Federal Reserve Board has the authority to approve or deny bank holding company mergers. See 12 U.S.C. §1828(c) and §1842.
24. Bank Merger Competitive Review Introduction and Overview (1995), available at <http://www.usdoj.gov/atr/public/guidelines/6472.htm>. The Office of the Comptroller of the Currency version, dated July 18, 1995, is OCC Advisory Letter 95-4.
25. 12 U.S.C. §1828(c)(5).
26. I am indebted to my colleague, Jade Eaton, for this point.
27. See Comments of the Department of Justice on Congestion and Delay Reduction at Chicago O'Hare International Airport (May 24, 2005), available at <http://www.usdoj.gov/atr/public/comments/209455.htm>.
28. My comments are based on the June 22, 2006 draft Antimonopoly Law that was the subject of the first reading by the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress.

---

Speaker:

Stuart M. Chemtob, Special Counsel for International Trade

Attachment(s):

Download 225219.pdf

Download 225219.wpd

Component(s):

Antitrust Division

Updated June 25, 2015

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-109

Before the FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION
Washington, D.C. 20554

In the Matter of Policies Regarding Mobile Spectrum Holdings

WT Docket No. 12-269

Ex Parte* Submission of the United States Department of Justice

Executive Summary

In this filing, the Department of Justice's Antitrust Division reviews the importance of spectrum to competition and innovation in the wireless industry. The Department believes that a set of well-defined, competition-focused rules for spectrum acquisitions, particularly in auctions, would best serve the dual goals of putting spectrum to use quickly and promoting consumer welfare in wireless markets. The Department notes that bands of spectrum have different characteristics that may affect the competitive landscape. In particular, for instance, the propagation characteristics of lower frequency spectrum permit better coverage in both rural areas and building interiors. A carrier's position in low-frequency spectrum may determine its ability to compete in offering a broad service area, including its ability to provide coverage efficiently in rural areas. Therefore, the Department concludes that rules that ensure the smaller nationwide networks, which currently lack substantial low-frequency spectrum, have an opportunity to acquire such spectrum could improve the competitive dynamic among nationwide carriers and benefit consumers.

I. Introduction

The United States Department of Justice (“Department”) provides this filing in response to a Federal Communications Commission (“FCC” or “Commission”) Notice of Proposed Rulemaking (“Notice”), published in the Federal Register on October 9, 2012.<sup>1</sup> The Notice requests comments to assist the FCC in a comprehensive review of its policies governing mobile spectrum holdings. The last comprehensive review was in 2003. The FCC seeks to ensure that its rules provide “greater certainty, transparency and predictability to make investment and transactional decisions, while also promoting the competition needed” for continued innovation.<sup>2</sup>

The Department of Justice’s Antitrust Division, as a federal agency responsible for enforcing the antitrust laws and promoting competition, has significant expertise in telecommunications issues and has participated in prior Commission proceedings that addressed the role of competition in telecommunications.

Over the last thirty years, the Department has helped to facilitate the transformation of the telecommunications industry, either directly in its role as an agency that enforces the antitrust laws or indirectly in its role as competition policy advocate and statutory respondent in cases involving appeals of Commission orders under the Hobbs Act.<sup>3</sup> Thus, from the critical decisions involved in resolution of the AT&T antitrust litigation and the implementation of that consent decree, to the decisions related to the design of the wireless telecommunications marketplace and the implementation of the Telecommunications Act of 1996, the Department has ensured that the preservation of competition in the

---

<sup>1</sup> Policies Regarding Mobile Spectrum Holdings, 77 Fed. Reg. 61,330 (proposed Oct. 9, 2012) (to be codified at 47 C.F.R. pt. 20), available at www.gpo.gov/fdsys/pkg/FR-2012-10-09/pdf/2012-24790.pdf (“Notice”).

<sup>2</sup> Id. at 61,334.

<sup>3</sup> Hobbs Anti-Racketeering Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1951.

telecommunications industry has been a key priority.<sup>4</sup> Similarly, with respect to its merger review authority, the Department has evaluated a series of transactions that have reshaped the telecommunications marketplace, including investigations of the evolving roles of broadband Internet access and wireless services.<sup>5</sup>

Most recently, in 2011, after close coordination with the FCC, the Department filed a lawsuit to block a transaction that would have combined two of the only four wireless carriers with nationwide networks, AT&T Inc. and T-Mobile USA, Inc., ultimately leading the parties to abandon the merger.<sup>6</sup>

In 2012, the Department and the Commission reviewed a transaction in which Verizon, the largest wireless carrier in the nation, entered marketing agreements with and acquired spectrum from four of the nation's largest cable companies. The Department obtained limitations on the scope and duration of Verizon's agreements with the cable companies to prevent competitive harm and approved the acquisition of spectrum after

---

<sup>4</sup> See, e.g., United States v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 552 F. Supp. 131 (D.D.C. 1982), aff'd sub nom. Maryland v. United States, 460 U.S. 1001 (1983) (Modification of Final Judgment requiring Bell System break-up); Reply Comments of the United States Department of Justice, In re Amendment of the Commission's Rules To Establish New Personal Communications Services, FCC Gen. Docket No. 90-314, E.T. Docket No. 92-100 (Jan. 19, 1993) (addressing competition between cellular and PCS providers and allocation of PCS spectrum to promote competition); Evaluation of the U.S. Department of Justice, In re Application by SBC Communications Inc., Southwestern Bell Telephone Company, and Southwestern Bell Communications Services, Inc., d/b/a Southwestern Bell Long Distance for Provision of In-Region, InterLATA Services in Texas, FCC CC Docket No. 00-4 (Feb. 14, 2000) (regarding Regional Bell Operating Company entry into long distance services under Section 271 of the Telecommunications Act). More recently, the Department participated in the Commission's initial "net neutrality" proceeding. Ex Parte Filing of the United States Department of Justice, In re Broadband Industry Practices, FCC WC Docket 07-52 (Sept. 6, 2007).

<sup>5</sup> See case filings involving United States, et al. v. Cingular Wireless Corp., SBC Commc'n Inc., BellSouth Corp., and AT&T Wireless Serv's, Inc., available at www.justice.gov/atr/cases/cingular.htm; United States, et al. v. Verizon Commc'n Inc. and Alltel Corp., available at www.justice.gov/atr/cases/verizon3.htm; United States v. AT&T Inc. and Dobson Commc'n Corp., available at www.justice.gov/atr/cases/dobson.htm; United States et al. v. AT&T Inc. and Centennial Commc'n Corp., available at www.justice.gov/atr/cases/attcentennial.htm.

<sup>6</sup> See Press Release, U.S. Dep't of Justice, Justice Department Issues Statements Regarding AT&T Inc.'s Abandonment of Its Proposed Acquisition of T-Mobile USA Inc. (Dec. 19, 2011), available at www.justice.gov/atr/public/press\_releases/2011/278406.pdf.

Verizon agreed to sell a significant portion of that spectrum to T-Mobile.<sup>7</sup> In these cases and numerous other matters, the Department coordinated closely with the FCC.

In its Notice, the Commission sets forth a series of important questions. The Notice seeks comments on the Commission's current approach to product market definition in light of changes to technology and consumer demand, its approach to geographic market definition, and the most appropriate means for considering both local and national competitive effects. In addition, the Notice requests comments on how the Commission should approach differing characteristics of spectrum bands and how best to evaluate the spectrum holdings of each licensee.

The Commission also seeks comments on the costs and benefits of a case-by-case analysis of mobile spectrum aggregation to consumers and competition, and it requests comments on how those costs and benefits might differ when applying case-by-case analysis specifically to spectrum auctions. Furthermore, the Commission asks for comments on the application of bright-line limits to initial licenses acquired through competitive bidding.

The Department and the FCC, utilizing their respective expertise and statutory authority, work in complement to foster innovation and efficiency in our nation's telecommunications industry, to the benefit of consumers. For instance, the Commission possesses technical expertise in technology and spectrum, and the Department has broad expertise in analyzing how markets are structured and the dynamics of how they function. Under the federal antitrust laws, the Department's responsibilities include enforcing laws that prohibit transactions or conduct that substantially lessen competition or tend to create a monopoly.<sup>8</sup> At the same time, the Commission has a statutory framework vital for managing the Nation’s scarce spectrum resources across a variety of essential public and private uses, making it possible for the Commission to more broadly serve the “public interest, convenience, and necessity” in promoting a better competitive environment in wireless markets.<sup>9</sup> As a result, the Department’s ability to benefit from the Commission’s expertise greatly enhances its review of transactions and conduct in the telecommunications industry, while the Department provides market analysis that assists the Commission in crafting policies that promote competition under its statutory framework.

---

<sup>7</sup> See Press Release, U.S. Dep't of Justice, Justice Department Requires Changes to Verizon-Cable Company Transactions to Protect Consumers, Allows Procompetitive Spectrum Acquisitions to Go Forward (Aug. 16, 2012), available at www.justice.gov/atr/public/press\_releases/2012/286098.pdf.

The Department, the Commission, or both can further the goals of competition in a variety of ways, including: (a) merger enforcement; (b) prohibitions or prosecutions of business practices that thwart innovation; (c) distribution or allocation of public assets (such as spectrum); and (d) other public policies that affirmatively lower entry barriers facing new entrants and new technologies. In this filing, the Department discusses the importance of spectrum to competition and innovation in the wireless industry and the factors the Department considers to be important in assessing the competitive effects of transactions in wireless markets.

II. The Importance of Competition in Wireless Markets

Competition has been a major force in driving innovation in telecommunications, bringing consumers a wider range of choices of products and services and better prices.

---

<sup>8</sup> 15 U.S.C. § 1 et seq.

<sup>9</sup> 47 U.S.C. § 310(d).

Since the breakup of the Bell System in 1984<sup>10</sup> and passage of the Telecommunications Act of 1996,<sup>11</sup> the telecommunications industry has experienced significant technological, economic, and regulatory changes. Technological development has made it possible for providers of traditional telephone and video services to enter each others' markets while also bringing widespread access to mobile wireless data and broadband Internet services. At the same time, since the passage of the 1996 Act, federal laws and government policy increasingly have favored the provision of telecommunications services on a competitive basis. The Department's work with the Commission in support of this development is founded on the belief that competition generally represents the best method of ensuring that consumers receive low-priced, high-quality products and services, greater choice among providers, and important innovation.

Rivalry among competitors provides strong pressures to maintain existing demand and to win over new customers in a number of ways, such as seeking out means for lowering costs or for developing new or better products and services, through new technology, new business methods, or other sources of efficiency. Indeed, competitive forces have been a central driver of innovations that have enabled carriers to expand capacity and improve service quality. For instance, when challenging the proposed merger of AT&T and T-Mobile, the Department noted that AT&T felt competitive pressure from T-Mobile's network improvements, and that AT&T upgraded its own services in response.<sup>12</sup> In the year since the proposed AT&T and T-Mobile transaction was

---

<sup>10</sup> United States v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 552 F. Supp. 131 (D.D.C. 1982), aff'd sub nom. Maryland v. United States, 460 U.S. 1001 (1983).

<sup>11</sup> Telecommunications Act of 1996, Pub. L. No. 104-104, 110 Stat. 56 (1996), codified at 47 U.S.C. § 151 et seq.

<sup>12</sup> Complaint at 13-14, United States et al. v. AT&T Inc., T-Mobile USA, Inc. and Deutsche Telekom AG (D.D.C. filed Sep. 30, 2011) (No. 11-1560).

abandoned, T-Mobile has continued to develop new plan structures designed to win customers from AT&T, including by offering customers the choice of service plans that do not build in the cost of expensive handset subsidies.<sup>13</sup> In addition, T-Mobile and other carriers have aggressively pursued strategies for addressing their network constraints, such as reclaiming spectrum currently being used for older technologies, utilizing new “small cell” technology, or creating business models for commercializing new spectrum.<sup>14</sup>

Preserving rivalry and limiting or eliminating market power enables competitive forces to work to benefit consumers. The ability to exercise market power can take various forms and harm competition in multiple ways. Market power can lead directly to consumers paying higher prices, can insulate a carrier from the competitive pressures to expand service or improve quality, and can diminish innovation. Moreover, the fewer competitors in a market, the higher the risk that competitors can coordinate or act in concert to the detriment of consumers and innovation.

In its recent merger reviews the Department has found that the four largest wireless carriers (AT&T, Verizon, Sprint, and T-Mobile) compete across many dimensions, including coverage, network speed, network technologies, and price.<sup>15</sup> Moreover, the different arrays of choices offered by each of these carriers are important to consumers, creating an environment in which carriers are forced to compete and reposition themselves to improve and differentiate their offerings. Even though the carriers engage in this competition, the marketplace is not uniformly competitive. Carriers do have the ability and, in some cases, the incentive to exercise at least some degree of market power, particularly given that there is already significant nationwide concentration in the wireless industry. Therefore, the Department believes it is essential to maintain vigilance against any lessening of the intensity of competitive forces.

---

<sup>13</sup> See, e.g., Salvador Rodriguez, T-Mobile to ditch phone subsidies, go after AT&T in 2013, LOS ANGELES TIMES (Dec. 7, 2012), available at www.latimes.com/business/technology/la-fi-tn-t-mobile-iphone-subsidize-att-20121206,0,2610892.story (describing T-Mobile’s strategy to “aggressively target AT&T” with plans that “offer customers lower rates for their cellular services by disassociating it with the price of a subsidized phone”).

<sup>14</sup> See, e.g., Greg Bensinger, T-Mobile to Pump $4 Billion Into Network, 4G LTE Buildout, WALL ST. J. (Feb. 24, 2012) (describing T-Mobile’s plans to re-deploy some of its spectrum currently dedicated to 2G services in order to launch LTE); Marguerite Reardon, AT&T execs are confident about spectrum position, CNET (Nov. 7, 2012), news.cnet.com/8301-1035\_3-57546288-94/at-t-execs-are-confident-about-spectrum-position (describing AT&T’s efforts to “chart a new path,” including AT&T’s plan to deploy LTE to cover 300 million Americans, and quoting an AT&T executive saying “AT&T is well-positioned now”); Marguerite Reardon, 4G spectrum spat settled: Sirius and AT&T can coexist after all, CNET (Oct. 17, 2012), news.cnet.com/8301-13578\_3-57534378-38/4g-spectrum-spat-settled-sirius-and-at-t-can-coexist-after-all (describing an agreement between AT&T and Sirius paving the way for WCS spectrum to be used for wireless services); David Goldman, AT&T’s about-face on 4G, CNN MONEY (Nov. 7, 2012), money.cnn.com/2012/11/07/technology/mobile/att-4g/index.html (noting that AT&T was able to “charter[] a new path” after the merger in part using the WCS spectrum).

The Department also believes that spectrum policies that promote competition and enhance the potential for entry and expansion in the wireless market play a vital role in protecting, and indeed enhancing, the competitive dynamic to the benefit of American consumers. We therefore welcome the opportunity to provide our views on the relationship between the work of the Commission as it designs its auction and other spectrum-related rules and the preservation of the competitive forces that are a critical engine for innovation in the wireless market.

III. The Importance of Spectrum to Competition and Innovation

The Department of Justice's principal concern is that acquisitions of spectrum, whether at auction or through subsequent transactions, should not be used to create or enhance market power. For its part, the Department is charged with preventing transactions that are harmful to consumers and competition, including transactions involving the acquisition of spectrum. It is equally important, however, that spectrum auctions set the stage for the wireless industry to innovate and for consumers to fully realize the benefits of competition.

---

<sup>15</sup> In some local areas, smaller carriers may also offer alternatives that consumers value; for instance, in some rural areas, a local carrier operating with low-frequency spectrum may offer particularly strong coverage.

A. Spectrum Is a Key Input for Mobile Wireless Services

Our nation's ability to improve the competitive environment in wireless markets hinges on the availability of spectrum. In recent years, mobile wireless markets have undergone tremendous change. Mobile wireless telecommunications devices have evolved into a profusion of smartphones, feature phones, tablets, data cards, e-readers, and other devices, feeding into consumer demand for faster, more reliable mobile broadband connections that drive further innovation. These changes in technology and demand have made spectrum a critically scarce resource. Consequently, the Department strongly supports the Commission in taking on this comprehensive review of its mobile spectrum holdings policies as it also moves to reallocate a considerable array of spectrum and make it available for mobile wireless services.

For each wireless carrier—whether an incumbent national provider, a small carrier looking to expand into new markets or services, or a new entrant—spectrum in part determines the carrier's capacity. Therefore, carriers will need to acquire additional spectrum and make more efficient use of spectrum if they are to respond to growing consumer demand for a wide array of wireless services and devices.<sup>16</sup>

B. Spectrum Acquisitions Should Lead to Efficient Use of Spectrum

The goal in assigning licenses to spectrum reallocated for commercial services

---

<sup>16</sup> See Notice at 8 (citing the Council of Economic Advisers' finding that "the spectrum currently allocated to wireless is not sufficient to handle the projected growth in demand, even with technological improvements allowing for more efficient use of existing spectrum and significant investment in new facilities." Council of Economic Advisers, The Economic Benefits of New Spectrum for Wireless Broadband, at 5 (Feb. 2012)).

should be to ensure that it generates the greatest ultimate benefit to the consumers of those services. However, due to the scarcity of spectrum, the Department is concerned that carriers may have incentives to acquire spectrum for purposes other than efficiently expanding their own capacity or services.<sup>17</sup> Namely, the more concentrated a wireless market is, the more likely a carrier will find it profitable to acquire spectrum with the aim of raising competitors' costs. This could take the shape, for example, of pursuing spectrum in order to prevent its use by a competitor, independent of how efficiently the carrier uses the spectrum. Indeed, a carrier may even have incentives to acquire spectrum and not use it at all. The result is that spectrum may not be put to its most efficient use, which harms all consumers of wireless services and can have an exclusionary effect on the carrier's competitors.

Put another way, as the Department has explained previously,<sup>18</sup> once new spectrum is identified and freed up for broadband, there remains the issue of how to assign it to individual providers. When market power is not an issue, the best way to pursue this goal in allocating new resources is typically to auction them off, on the theory that the highest bidder, i.e., the one with the highest private value, will also generate the greatest benefits to consumers. But that approach may not lead to market outcomes that would ordinarily maximize consumer welfare due to the presence of strong wireline or wireless incumbents, since the private value for incumbents in a given locale includes not only the revenue from use of the spectrum but also any benefits gained by preventing rivals from improving their services and thereby eroding the incumbents' existing businesses. The latter might be called “foreclosure value” as distinct from “use value.” The total private value of spectrum to any given provider is the sum of these two types of value. However, the “foreclosure value” does not reflect consumer value; to the contrary, it represents the private value of foreclosing competition by, for instance, forestalling entry or expansion that threatens to inject additional competition into the market.

---

<sup>17</sup> See Ex Parte Submission of the United States Department of Justice, In the Matter of Economic Issues in Broadband Competition: A National Broadband Plan for Our Future, FCC GN Docket No. 09-51 (January 4, 2010) (hereinafter "U.S. Dep't of Justice Broadband Comments"), at 23-24.

<sup>18</sup> Id.

The Department believes that consideration of the role that “foreclosure value” might play in how spectrum is used is crucial because local mobile wireless markets across the nation are relatively concentrated. In a highly concentrated industry with large margins between the price and incremental cost of existing wireless broadband services, the value of keeping spectrum out of competitors’ hands could be very high. For example, if competitors acquire spectrum to provide broader service offerings, expand coverage, or increase capacity, prices for existing customers would fall, threatening the margins being earned. Also, a competitor’s lack of spectrum may require higher capital expenditures, such as having to build more cell towers, in order to provide competitive service. Thus, a large incumbent may benefit from acquiring spectrum even if its uses of the spectrum are not the most efficient if that acquisition helps preserve high prices. Accordingly, the Commission should consider the potential that the acquisition of specific blocks of spectrum may have to foreclose or raise the costs of competitors in its policies on spectrum acquisition.

This potential risk, in turn, underscores the need for additional spectrum. Based on the Department’s experience with highly concentrated telecommunications markets, and more generally, there are substantial advantages to making available new spectrum in order to enable smaller or additional providers to mount stronger challenges to large wireless incumbents.<sup>19</sup> Absent compelling evidence that the largest incumbent carriers are already using their existing spectrum licenses efficiently and their networks are still capacity-constrained, the Department would normally expect the highest use value for new spectrum that is in the public interest to come from rivals to the leading firms that could effectively make use of additional spectrum to expand capacity, improve coverage, or introduce new services in an effort to challenge the dominant firms.

C. The Competitive Significance of Different Spectrum

To determine whether a transaction will result in competitive harm in any relevant markets, the Department assesses each carrier's ability to compete, including its capacity to meet consumer demand. Since each carrier's portfolio of spectrum holdings in part determines its capacity, the differing characteristics of bands of spectrum are important. In its review of mergers involving spectrum transfers, the Department considers the characteristics of the spectrum being acquired and the capacity needs of the acquirer. For example, low-frequency spectrum (usually referring to frequencies below 1 GHz) has superior propagation characteristics, permitting better coverage in both rural areas and buildings. To the extent carriers have low-frequency spectrum available, often they seek to allocate at least some of that spectrum to each of their deployed technologies (as has been the case with 2G, 3G, and 4G) to ensure that customers with handsets utilizing each technology can maintain excellent coverage throughout the network. On the other hand, when a carrier is attempting to augment the capacity of its network in dense urban areas, <sup>19</sup> In the AT&T-Cingular merger, the Department required divestitures of bare spectrum in several markets. The Department was particularly concerned that, without the divestitures, the merged entity would control too much spectrum in those areas and therefore there would not be sufficient competition for new third generation high-speed data services. Competitive Impact Statement at 14-15, United States et al. v. Cingular et al. (D.D.C. filed Oct. 29, 2004) (No. 04-1850).

---

for example, higher-frequency spectrum may be just as effective as low-frequency spectrum. Therefore, the Department believes it is important to consider the differing characteristics of spectrum in determining its contribution to a carrier's competitive position.

The value of any particular block of spectrum also depends on the availability of networking equipment and consumer devices that support the use of that spectrum. When new spectrum first becomes available, it may be years before original equipment manufacturers can accommodate the spectrum in handsets. Because supporting each additional spectrum band class adds weight and cost to consumer devices, carriers usually seek to meet their capacity needs using as few different types of spectrum as possible. For the same reason, carriers may favor spectrum that is harmonized with the frequencies used by carriers in other countries, so that customers may continue to use their devices when travelling internationally. In addition to differences in propagation and device availability, spectrum can have a number of other characteristics that affect its value to a carrier, such as differing interference problems or regulatory obligations.

IV. Technical Considerations for Competitive Analysis of Wireless Markets

A. Considerations for Analyzing the Competitive Significance of Spectrum

1. Carriers will be most competitive with at least some low-frequency spectrum to provide a good coverage layer

As noted above, different bands of spectrum have characteristics that may have a crucial bearing on how the allocation of spectrum affects the competitive landscape. In particular, the propagation characteristics of low-frequency spectrum permit better coverage in both rural areas and building interiors. In previous wireless investigations, the Department has paid careful attention to whether merging wireless carriers had a particularly strong position in low-frequency spectrum.<sup>20</sup> This factor is particularly important for determining a carrier's ability to compete in offering coverage across a broad service area, including its ability to provide coverage efficiently in rural areas. As such, the Department believes it is important that the Commission devise policies that address the allocation of low-frequency spectrum in particular so that acquisitions of such spectrum do not hamper the ability of carriers to compete in markets where that spectrum is important. Particularly if low-frequency spectrum remains scarce, the Commission must ensure that the allocation of spectrum at auction does not enable carriers with high market shares to foreclose smaller carriers from improving their customers' coverage. Today, the two leading carriers have the vast majority of low-frequency spectrum,<sup>21</sup> whereas the two other nationwide carriers have virtually none. This results in the two smaller nationwide carriers having a somewhat diminished ability to compete, particularly in rural areas where the cost to build out coverage is higher with high-frequency spectrum.<sup>22</sup> The Commission's policies, particularly regarding auction of new low-frequency spectrum, can potentially improve the competitive landscape by preventing the leading carriers from foreclosing their rivals from access to low-frequency spectrum.

---

<sup>20</sup> See, e.g., Competitive Impact Statement at 10, United States, et al. v. Verizon Commc'n Inc. and Alltel Corp. (D.D.C. filed Oct. 30, 2008) (No. 08-1878) (noting that the merging parties owned the only two 850 MHz cellular licenses—the only low-frequency spectrum in use at the time—in a number of areas, and thus were one another's closest competitors for a significant number of customers in those markets).

<sup>21</sup> According to the most recent Commission report, the two leading carriers have 78% of low-frequency (cellular and 700 MHz) spectrum. See Implementation of Section 6002(b) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993, Annual Report and Analysis of Competitive Market Conditions with Respect to Commercial Mobile Services, WT Docket No. 10-133, Fifteenth Report, 26 FCC Rcd 9664, ¶ 298 (2011). Even this may understate the dominant position the two leading carriers hold in low-frequency spectrum given that the figure does not account for more recent transactions, and that there are interference and other concerns with a significant portion of the 700 MHz spectrum held by other carriers.

<sup>22</sup> A lack of low-frequency spectrum may also impair the ability of a local or regional carrier to provide an additional, significant, competitive option in particular local areas.

2. There are cost efficiencies associated with owning larger blocks of spectrum

Although a wireless carrier with a large market share may have the ability and incentive to harm competition by buying up significant quantities of spectrum independent of its need for that spectrum or its intention to use it in a timely manner, as described above, the Department also recognizes that there may be substantial efficiencies associated with ownership of relatively large blocks of spectrum. Specifically, due to the nature of wireless technology, for example, twice the spectrum may under certain conditions provide over twice the amount of capacity.

Similarly, there may be capital cost efficiencies associated with deploying larger blocks of spectrum. Running a wireless network typically involves high fixed capital investments in towers and radio equipment and comparatively lower costs on the ongoing maintenance and operation of the network.<sup>23</sup> Even if a carrier has not yet identified a use for specific spectrum to accommodate its customers' data consumption, deploying the spectrum can provide a significant increase in user throughput at relatively low cost.

Thus, the Commission should develop policies on spectrum holdings with the above considerations in mind, but should not needlessly prevent carriers from assembling spectrum portfolios that can take advantage of these efficiencies.

3. The efficiencies associated with owning larger blocks of spectrum taper off

However, the benefits of large blocks of spectrum may become more limited for larger and larger blocks of spectrum. For instance, although in some circumstances a carrier may be able to add incremental spectrum to existing cell sites to provide a significant increase in capacity and peak user throughput at very low cost, beyond a certain point, deploying more spectrum may require sizeable investments in equipment at each site. Without a pressing capacity need, carriers may have limited incentive to incur the incremental costs of fully deploying such great quantities of spectrum and may instead leave some of it unused solely to keep it from rivals.<sup>24</sup>

---

<sup>23</sup> Some capital equipment, for example, base station controllers, can accommodate significant spectrum bandwidth at little or no incremental cost.

Over time, the Department expects that carrier aggregation technology currently under development will permit wireless carriers to realize some of the efficiencies described above even with small, non-contiguous blocks of spectrum in different bands. This technology will enable carriers to achieve many of the capacity and peak throughput advantages previously attainable only with large blocks of contiguous spectrum by instead pairing small blocks of spectrum currently being used for older technologies with relatively small blocks of newly-allocated spectrum. Accordingly, larger incumbent carriers may be able to take significant advantage of economies of scale by acquiring relatively small blocks to pair with their existing holdings rather than acquiring large contiguous blocks. The Commission, therefore, may want to enable the acquisition of such smaller blocks even if it seeks to restrict the acquisition of larger blocks.

B. Measuring and Balancing Efficiencies

In addition, the Commission should consider the serious potential, described above, that carriers with large market shares could pursue an input foreclosure strategy at auction. We urge the Commission to weigh the risk of consumer harm from an input foreclosure strategy. Economies of scale should be balanced against those risks.

In numerous wireless transactions, including most recently in the proposed

---

<sup>24</sup> Cf. In re Applications of Cellco Partnership d/b/a Verizon Wireless and SpectrumCo LLC and Cox TMI, LLC, FCC Docket No. 12-175, ¶¶ 108-109 (released Aug. 23, 2012) (questioning whether Verizon Wireless would use more than 40 MHz of AWS spectrum in any market in the near term).

AT&T/T-Mobile merger and Verizon Wireless's acquisition of spectrum from a consortium of cable companies, the Department carefully considered assertions that the economies of scale arising from greater spectrum concentration will ultimately yield substantial benefits for consumers. As in any transaction, the key to this analysis is whether the efficiencies that could be realized as a result of the acquisition would reduce the marginal cost of service sufficiently to outweigh the often substantial benefits of additional competition.<sup>25</sup> Notably, the economies of scale often present in wireless networks are significantly tempered compared to those the Department has encountered when analyzing competition among wireline networks, since it is easier and less costly to expand capacity over a fixed amount of spectrum than it is, for example, to reduce the cost of constructing the physical "last-mile" link to each premises.<sup>26</sup>

Therefore, in the Department's experience in these and other matters, it is important that the efficiencies described above are assessed accurately, including accounting for all alternative means for carriers to use their existing spectrum resources to expand capacity or launch new services. For example, in the course of investigating the proposed transaction between AT&T and T-Mobile, the Department cast doubt on the parties' claims that there were few alternatives to deal with spectrum shortages. Since abandoning the transaction, both companies have announced plans to deploy LTE more extensively than they had earlier suggested would be possible by, for instance, deploying spectrum previously dedicated to older technologies.

---

<sup>25</sup> See U.S. DEP'T OF JUSTICE & FED. TRADE COMM'N, HORIZONTAL MERGER GUIDELINES § 10 (2010), available at www.usdoj.gov/atr/public/guidelines/hmg-2010.pdf (hereinafter Merger Guidelines).

<sup>26</sup> See U.S. Dep't of Justice Broadband Comments, at 13-14 (noting that "[t]he enormous sunk cost of wireline broadband networks makes it unlikely that additional wired broadband competitors will enter many geographic areas" but that "the sunk costs associated with deploying [wireless] networks are far less than those for wireline facilities").

As stated above, spectrum is a scarce resource and a key input for mobile wireless services. The Commission has an opportunity through its policies on spectrum holdings to preserve and promote competition and to ensure that the largest firms do not foreclose other rivals from access to low-frequency spectrum that would allow them to improve their coverage and make them stronger, more aggressive competitors.

C. The Appropriate Market Analysis for Promoting Competition

The Commission is seeking comment on the appropriate product and geographic markets for evaluating wireless spectrum holdings, and specifically whether it should modify the relevant market definition to reflect differentiated service offerings, devices, and contract features.

The Department evaluates mergers under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, which prohibits acquisitions the effect of which “may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly.” The Department analyzes wireless mergers essentially the same way it does transactions in other industries, as explained in the Horizontal Merger Guidelines jointly issued by the Department of Justice and Federal Trade Commission. The Department’s legal role is fundamentally one of enforcement, on a case-by-case basis, rather than an exercise in prospective rule-making, and it investigates mergers when they are proposed and examines the specific circumstances surrounding each transaction.

The Department believes that competition typically is best served by a thorough, case-by-case analysis of the competitive effects of each transaction. In past proceedings, the Department has recommended that the Commission develop a classification for evaluating the degree of competition in different markets using a method of analysis similar to that set forth in the Horizontal Merger Guidelines.<sup>27</sup> Over time, the Commission and the Department have aligned more closely their respective processes for analyzing transactions.

As part of its review of each transaction, the Department considers any and all factors relevant to the question of whether a transaction may give the parties the ability to exercise market power in any relevant antitrust market. Under the Horizontal Merger Guidelines, the touchstone for this inquiry should be the functional experience from the perspective of the customer, not the particular technologies used by the provider. Thus, when the Department evaluates a “market” for antitrust purposes, it assesses the extent to which consumers view various services as substitutes.<sup>28</sup> As the Department explains in the Guidelines, this involves defining the relevant geographic and product markets for the transaction.

For many wireless transactions, the Department has identified geographic areas of concern for mobile wireless telecommunications services via a fact-specific, market-by-market analysis. This analysis has included consideration of a number of factors, including, but not limited to, the number of mobile wireless service providers and their competitive strengths, weaknesses, and market shares; whether additional spectrum is likely to be currently or imminently available; whether any providers are limited by insufficient spectrum or other factors in their abilities to add new customers; the breadth and depth of coverage by different providers in each area and in surrounding areas; each carrier’s network coverage in relation to the population density of the license area; each provider’s retail presence; local wireless number portability data; the likelihood that any provider would expand its existing coverage or that new providers would enter; and other market characteristics.<sup>29</sup>

---

<sup>27</sup> U.S. Dep’t of Justice Broadband Comments, at 13. A screen on spectrum consolidation in conjunction with a case-by-case analysis can also be effective.

<sup>28</sup> Merger Guidelines § 4.

Generally, mobile wireless telecommunications services are sold to consumers in local markets, though these markets are affected by nationwide competition among the larger service providers. It is therefore appropriate both to identify local markets and to identify the nature of nationwide competitive effects affecting local markets. In its wireless investigations, the Department has typically considered the Cellular Market Areas (CMAs) that the Commission has identified and used to license mobile wireless services for certain spectrum bands as approximations of the local areas within which customers have the same competitive choices.<sup>30</sup>

In recent investigations of transactions involving mobile wireless carriers, the Department has defined mobile wireless telecommunications services as a relevant product market. For example, in its lawsuit challenging AT&T Inc.'s proposed acquisition of T-Mobile USA, Inc., the Department found that there are no cost-effective alternatives to mobile wireless telecommunications services: because neither fixed wireless services nor wireline services are mobile, they are not regarded by consumers of mobile wireless telecommunications services as reasonable substitutes.<sup>31</sup> However, because markets are dynamic, so are definitions of antitrust product markets: as wireless services have expanded to include offerings such as broadband access, consumer demand for new services can dictate different relevant product markets. This is one way the Department's

---

<sup>29</sup> See, e.g., Competitive Impact Statement at 10, United States, et al. v. Verizon Commc'n Inc. and Alltel Corp. (D.D.C. filed Oct. 30, 2008) (No. 08-1878).

<sup>30</sup> See, e.g., Complaint at 9-10, United States et al. v. AT&T Inc., T-Mobile USA, Inc. and Deutsche Telekom AG (D.D.C. filed Sep. 30, 2011) (No. 11-1560); Complaint at 7, United States v. Verizon and Alltel (D.D.C. filed Oct. 30, 2008) (No. 08-1878).

<sup>31</sup> Complaint at 7, United States v. AT&T and T-Mobile.

competitive analysis accounts for changes in technology and consumer demand.

In addition, for some matters the Department also has considered whether business or government customers constitute a distinct set of customers. (In various industries, the Department has denoted such customers as “enterprise customers.”) For these customers, in addition to effects in local markets, the Department also analyzes the extent to which such customers value a carrier that can provide services to employees, facilities, and devices that are geographically dispersed, including whether these customers require services that are national in scope. As such, the Department considers the potential for transactions to have broader geographical competitive effects, including at a national level. Consequently, the same transaction can require competitive analysis in both local markets and regional or national markets to ensure competition is fully protected.<sup>32</sup>

D. Spectrum Allocation Should Provide Certainty and Predictability

The Commission is seeking comment on whether a case-by-case analysis affords auction participants sufficient certainty to determine whether they would be allowed to hold a given license post-auction. In considering the appropriate policy for evaluating purchases at auction, the Commission should weigh the time and resources involved in conducting a thorough case-by-case review against the advantages to competition of a quick allocation of spectrum pursuant to an easily administered rule. Secondary market transactions typically come before the Commission and the Department one at a time, permitting staff to carefully evaluate the likely competitive consequences of the transaction. However, a case-by-case review of every acquisition by a winning bidder in a large auction could strain the agencies' resources and delay the quick allocation of spectrum critical for innovation and increased competition. As the Commission has found, the exploding demand for wireless broadband use and the time and resources historically involved in allocating spectrum to new use urge a more expedient process that increases clarity and predictability.<sup>33</sup> Therefore, in allocating spectrum at auction, the Commission's approach should reduce the time to make available scarce, much-needed spectrum while also preventing the transfers most likely to harm competition and minimizing the potential risk that procompetitive acquisitions would be erroneously prevented.

---

<sup>32</sup> Complaint at 8, United States v. AT&T and T-Mobile; see also Competitive Impact Statement at 10, United States v. Verizon and Alltel; Competitive Impact Statement at 11, United States, et al. v. Verizon Commc'n Inc., CellCo P'ship d/b/a Verizon Wireless, Comcast Corp., Time Warner Cable Inc., Cox Commc'n, Inc., and Bright House Networks, LLC (D.D.C. filed Aug. 16, 2012) (No. 12-1354).

Moreover, for spectrum auctions the Department believes that predictability is especially important. On the occasions that the Commission auctions off significant quantities of spectrum—with different frequency bands auctioned by different geographic boundaries—the Commission may put specific regulatory restrictions on the use of some bands of spectrum being auctioned, but not on others. In addition, the value to any wireless carrier of any particular spectrum license depends in part on how complementary that license is to the carrier's other wireless holdings. For example, operating a network using too many different spectrum band classes increases the cost of handsets and radio network equipment, since the devices require hardware to support all of the band classes. Carriers also seek enough spectrum to meet their needs in all of the geographic areas within their networks.

For these reasons, before crafting a bid on one license in an auction, a wireless carrier considers all alternative licenses available and the likelihood that the carrier may be able to purchase any of those licenses. A carrier might, for example, be willing to bid more on a particular block of spectrum if it knows it will also be permitted to acquire an adjacent block. Alternatively, if a carrier knows in advance it will only be permitted to purchase one of the available blocks of spectrum, it may be willing to bid higher to ensure that it is able to secure the block most complementary to its existing holdings. These complex interdependencies demonstrate that carriers' certainty of what spectrum they will be permitted to acquire can have a significant effect about whether the spectrum auction can achieve allocations that best serve the public interest.

---

<sup>33</sup> FED. COMM'NS COMM'N, CONNECTING AMERICA: THE NATIONAL BROADBAND PLAN 79 (2010) (highlighting that reallocations of spectrum historically have taken 6-13 years); see also FCC National Broadband Plan, September Commission Meeting, at 63, 66, 71, 73-74 (Sept. 29, 2009).

Therefore, the Department believes that a set of well-defined rules for spectrum acquisitions in auctions would best serve the dual goals of putting spectrum to use quickly and promoting competition in wireless markets.<sup>34</sup> Such rules could both provide predictability and prevent foreclosure of entry or expansion. Given the characteristics of different spectrum bands, as discussed above, different rules, weights, or caps could, for example, apply based on the kinds of spectrum frequency put up for auction. For instance, rules that ensure that the two smaller nationwide carriers are not foreclosed from access to more spectrum, and particularly low-frequency spectrum, could benefit consumers. Auction rules of this nature would ensure the smaller nationwide networks, which currently lack substantial low-frequency spectrum, would have an opportunity to acquire it. Such an outcome could improve the competitive dynamic among nationwide carriers. As such, using a pre-announced set of rules would allow the Commission to realize substantial benefits to competition from quick allocation of new spectrum while minimizing the potential risk that procompetitive acquisitions would be prevented.

---

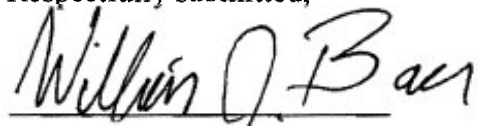

<sup>34</sup> In the context of mergers and other secondary market transactions, spectrum guidelines or screens can provide useful guidance while maintaining the flexibility inherent in a case-by-case analysis. See supra Part IV.C.

V. Conclusion

In this proceeding, the Commission reaffirms its interest in crafting rules that address spectrum aggregation in a manner that promotes competition and innovation in telecommunications markets. The Department strongly supports this effort, and commends the FCC in taking on this comprehensive review of its mobile spectrum holdings policies as it also moves to reallocate a considerable array of spectrum to make it available for mobile wireless services. The Department looks forward to working with the Commission in this and other proceedings as the Commission develops policies that ensure that the allocation of spectrum continues to support growth and innovation in the nation's economy.

Respectfully submitted,

William J. Baer
Assistant Attorney General
U.S. Department of Justice
Antitrust Division

Renata B. Hesse
Deputy Assistant Attorney General

Terrell McSweeney
Chief Counsel for Competition Policy

W. Robert Majure
Economics Director of Enforcement

April 11, 2013

Robert A. Potter
Chief, Legal Policy Section

Scott A. Scheele
Chief, Telecommunications and Media
Enforcement Section

Lawrence M. Frankel
Asst. Chief, Telecommunications and Media Enforcement Section

Oliver M. Richard
Asst. Chief, Economic Litigation Section

Douglas B. Rathbun
Matthew C. Mandelberg
Robert A. Lepore
Attorneys

William H. Gillespie
Economist

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-110

---

Horizontal Merger Guidelines

U.S. Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission

Issued: August 19, 2010

Table of Contents

1.	Overview.....	1
2.	Evidence of Adverse Competitive Effects.....	2
2.1	Types of Evidence.....	3
2.1.1	Actual Effects Observed in Consummated Mergers.....	3
2.1.2	Direct Comparisons Based on Experience.....	3
2.1.3	Market Shares and Concentration in a Relevant Market.....	3
2.1.4	Substantial Head-to-Head Competition.....	3
2.1.5	Disruptive Role of a Merging Party.....	3
2.2	Sources of Evidence.....	4
2.2.1	Merging Parties.....	4
2.2.2	Customers.....	5
2.2.3	Other Industry Participants and Observers.....	5
3.	Targeted Customers and Price Discrimination.....	6
4.	Market Definition.....	7
4.1	Product Market Definition.....	8
4.1.1	The Hypothetical Monopolist Test.....	8
4.1.2	Benchmark Prices and SSNIP Size.....	10
4.1.3	Implementing the Hypothetical Monopolist Test.....	11
4.1.4	Product Market Definition with Targeted Customers.....	12
4.2	Geographic Market Definition.....	13
4.2.1	Geographic Markets Based on the Locations of Suppliers.....	13
4.2.2	Geographic Markets Based on the Locations of Customers.....	14
5.	Market Participants, Market Shares, and Market Concentration.....	15
5.1	Market Participants.....	15
5.2	Market Shares.....	16
5.3	Market Concentration.....	18
6.	Unilateral Effects.....	20
6.1	Pricing of Differentiated Products.....	20
6.2	Bargaining and Auctions.....	22
6.3	Capacity and Output for Homogeneous Products.....	22
6.4	Innovation and Product Variety.....	23
7.	Coordinated Effects.....	24
7.1	Impact of Merger on Coordinated Interaction.....	25
7.2	Evidence a Market is Vulnerable to Coordinated Conduct.....	25
8.	Powerful Buyers.....	27

9.	Entry.....	27
9.1	Timeliness.....	29
9.2	Likelihood.....	29
9.3	Sufficiency.....	29
10.	Efficiencies.....	29
11.	Failure and Exiting Assets.....	32
12.	Mergers of Competing Buyers.....	32
13.	Partial Acquisitions.....	33

1. Overview

These Guidelines outline the principal analytical techniques, practices, and the enforcement policy of the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission (the “Agencies”) with respect to mergers and acquisitions involving actual or potential competitors (“horizontal mergers”) under the federal antitrust laws.<sup>1</sup> The relevant statutory provisions include Section 7 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18, Sections 1 and 2 of the Sherman Act, 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 2, and Section 5 of the Federal Trade Commission Act, 15 U.S.C. § 45. Most particularly, Section 7 of the Clayton Act prohibits mergers if “in any line of commerce or in any activity affecting commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly.”

The Agencies seek to identify and challenge competitively harmful mergers while avoiding unnecessary interference with mergers that are either competitively beneficial or neutral. Most merger analysis is necessarily predictive, requiring an assessment of what will likely happen if a merger proceeds as compared to what will likely happen if it does not. Given this inherent need for prediction, these Guidelines reflect the congressional intent that merger enforcement should interdict competitive problems in their incipiency and that certainty about anticompetitive effect is seldom possible and not required for a merger to be illegal.

These Guidelines describe the principal analytical techniques and the main types of evidence on which the Agencies usually rely to predict whether a horizontal merger may substantially lessen competition. They are not intended to describe how the Agencies analyze cases other than horizontal mergers. These Guidelines are intended to assist the business community and antitrust practitioners by increasing the transparency of the analytical process underlying the Agencies’ enforcement decisions. They may also assist the courts in developing an appropriate framework for interpreting and applying the antitrust laws in the horizontal merger context.

These Guidelines should be read with the awareness that merger analysis does not consist of uniform application of a single methodology. Rather, it is a fact-specific process through which the Agencies, guided by their extensive experience, apply a range of analytical tools to the reasonably available and reliable evidence to evaluate competitive concerns in a limited period of time. Where these Guidelines provide examples, they are illustrative and do not exhaust the applications of the relevant principle.<sup>2</sup>

---

<sup>1</sup> These Guidelines replace the Horizontal Merger Guidelines issued in 1992, revised in 1997. They reflect the ongoing accumulation of experience at the Agencies. The Commentary on the Horizontal Merger Guidelines issued by the Agencies in 2006 remains a valuable supplement to these Guidelines. These Guidelines may be revised from time to time as necessary to reflect significant changes in enforcement policy, to clarify existing policy, or to reflect new learning. These Guidelines do not cover vertical or other types of non-horizontal acquisitions.

<sup>2</sup> These Guidelines are not intended to describe how the Agencies will conduct the litigation of cases they decide to bring. Although relevant in that context, these Guidelines neither dictate nor exhaust the range of evidence the Agencies may introduce in litigation.

The unifying theme of these Guidelines is that mergers should not be permitted to create, enhance, or entrench market power or to facilitate its exercise. For simplicity of exposition, these Guidelines generally refer to all of these effects as enhancing market power. A merger enhances market power if it is likely to encourage one or more firms to raise price, reduce output, diminish innovation, or otherwise harm customers as a result of diminished competitive constraints or incentives. In evaluating how a merger will likely change a firm's behavior, the Agencies focus primarily on how the merger affects conduct that would be most profitable for the firm.

A merger can enhance market power simply by eliminating competition between the merging parties. This effect can arise even if the merger causes no changes in the way other firms behave. Adverse competitive effects arising in this manner are referred to as "unilateral effects." A merger also can enhance market power by increasing the risk of coordinated, accommodating, or interdependent behavior among rivals. Adverse competitive effects arising in this manner are referred to as "coordinated effects." In any given case, either or both types of effects may be present, and the distinction between them may be blurred.

These Guidelines principally describe how the Agencies analyze mergers between rival suppliers that may enhance their market power as sellers. Enhancement of market power by sellers often elevates the prices charged to customers. For simplicity of exposition, these Guidelines generally discuss the analysis in terms of such price effects. Enhanced market power can also be manifested in non-price terms and conditions that adversely affect customers, including reduced product quality, reduced product variety, reduced service, or diminished innovation. Such non-price effects may coexist with price effects, or can arise in their absence. When the Agencies investigate whether a merger may lead to a substantial lessening of non-price competition, they employ an approach analogous to that used to evaluate price competition. Enhanced market power may also make it more likely that the merged entity can profitably and effectively engage in exclusionary conduct. Regardless of how enhanced market power likely would be manifested, the Agencies normally evaluate mergers based on their impact on customers. The Agencies examine effects on either or both of the direct customers and the final consumers. The Agencies presume, absent convincing evidence to the contrary, that adverse effects on direct customers also cause adverse effects on final consumers.

Enhancement of market power by buyers, sometimes called "monopsony power," has adverse effects comparable to enhancement of market power by sellers. The Agencies employ an analogous framework to analyze mergers between rival purchasers that may enhance their market power as buyers. See Section 12.

2. Evidence of Adverse Competitive Effects

The Agencies consider any reasonably available and reliable evidence to address the central question of whether a merger may substantially lessen competition. This section discusses several categories and sources of evidence that the Agencies, in their experience, have found most informative in predicting the likely competitive effects of mergers. The list provided here is not exhaustive. In any given case, reliable evidence may be available in only some categories or from some sources. For each category of evidence, the Agencies consider evidence indicating that the merger may enhance competition as well as evidence indicating that it may lessen competition.

2.1 Types of Evidence

2.1.1 Actual Effects Observed in Consummated Mergers

When evaluating a consummated merger, the ultimate issue is not only whether adverse competitive effects have already resulted from the merger, but also whether such effects are likely to arise in the future. Evidence of observed post-merger price increases or other changes adverse to customers is given substantial weight. The Agencies evaluate whether such changes are anticompetitive effects resulting from the merger, in which case they can be dispositive. However, a consummated merger may be anticompetitive even if such effects have not yet been observed, perhaps because the merged firm may be aware of the possibility of post-merger antitrust review and moderating its conduct. Consequently, the Agencies also consider the same types of evidence they consider when evaluating unconsummated mergers.

2.1.2 Direct Comparisons Based on Experience

The Agencies look for historical events, or “natural experiments,” that are informative regarding the competitive effects of the merger. For example, the Agencies may examine the impact of recent mergers, entry, expansion, or exit in the relevant market. Effects of analogous events in similar markets may also be informative.

The Agencies also look for reliable evidence based on variations among similar markets. For example, if the merging firms compete in some locales but not others, comparisons of prices charged in regions where they do and do not compete may be informative regarding post-merger prices. In some cases, however, prices are set on such a broad geographic basis that such comparisons are not informative. The Agencies also may examine how prices in similar markets vary with the number of significant competitors in those markets.

2.1.3 Market Shares and Concentration in a Relevant Market

The Agencies give weight to the merging parties’ market shares in a relevant market, the level of concentration, and the change in concentration caused by the merger. See Sections 4 and 5. Mergers that cause a significant increase in concentration and result in highly concentrated markets are presumed to be likely to enhance market power, but this presumption can be rebutted by persuasive evidence showing that the merger is unlikely to enhance market power.

2.1.4 Substantial Head-to-Head Competition

The Agencies consider whether the merging firms have been, or likely will become absent the merger, substantial head-to-head competitors. Such evidence can be especially relevant for evaluating adverse unilateral effects, which result directly from the loss of that competition. See Section 6. This evidence can also inform market definition. See Section 4.

2.1.5 Disruptive Role of a Merging Party

The Agencies consider whether a merger may lessen competition by eliminating a “maverick” firm, i.e., a firm that plays a disruptive role in the market to the benefit of customers. For example, if one of the merging firms has a strong incumbency position and the other merging firm threatens to disrupt market conditions with a new technology or business model, their merger can involve the loss of actual or potential competition. Likewise, one of the merging firms may have the incentive to take the lead in price cutting or other competitive conduct or to resist increases in industry prices. A firm that may discipline prices based on its ability and incentive to expand production rapidly using available capacity also can be a maverick, as can a firm that has often resisted otherwise prevailing industry norms to cooperate on price setting or other terms of competition.

2.2 Sources of Evidence

The Agencies consider many sources of evidence in their merger analysis. The most common sources of reasonably available and reliable evidence are the merging parties, customers, other industry participants, and industry observers.

2.2.1 Merging Parties

The Agencies typically obtain substantial information from the merging parties. This information can take the form of documents, testimony, or data, and can consist of descriptions of competitively relevant conditions or reflect actual business conduct and decisions. Documents created in the normal course are more probative than documents created as advocacy materials in merger review.

Documents describing industry conditions can be informative regarding the operation of the market and how a firm identifies and assesses its rivals, particularly when business decisions are made in reliance on the accuracy of those descriptions. The business decisions taken by the merging firms also can be informative about industry conditions. For example, if a firm sets price well above incremental cost, that normally indicates either that the firm believes its customers are not highly sensitive to price (not in itself of antitrust concern, see Section 4.1.3<sup>3</sup>) or that the firm and its rivals are engaged in coordinated interaction (see Section 7). Incremental cost depends on the relevant increment in output as well as on the time period involved, and in the case of large increments and sustained changes in output it may include some costs that would be fixed for smaller increments of output or shorter time periods.

Explicit or implicit evidence that the merging parties intend to raise prices, reduce output or capacity, reduce product quality or variety, withdraw products or delay their introduction, or curtail research and development efforts after the merger, or explicit or implicit evidence that the ability to engage in such conduct motivated the merger, can be highly informative in evaluating the likely effects of a merger. Likewise, the Agencies look for reliable evidence that the merger is likely to result in efficiencies. The Agencies give careful consideration to the views of individuals whose responsibilities, expertise, and experience relating to the issues in question provide particular indicia of reliability. The financial terms of the transaction may also be informative regarding competitive effects. For example, a purchase price in excess of the acquired firm's stand-alone market value may indicate that the acquiring firm is paying a premium because it expects to be able to reduce competition or to achieve efficiencies.

---

<sup>3</sup> High margins commonly arise for products that are significantly differentiated. Products involving substantial fixed costs typically will be developed only if suppliers expect there to be enough differentiation to support margins sufficient to cover those fixed costs. High margins can be consistent with incumbent firms earning competitive returns.

2.2.2 Customers

Customers can provide a variety of information to the Agencies, ranging from information about their own purchasing behavior and choices to their views about the effects of the merger itself.

Information from customers about how they would likely respond to a price increase, and the relative attractiveness of different products or suppliers, may be highly relevant, especially when corroborated by other evidence such as historical purchasing patterns and practices. Customers also can provide valuable information about the impact of historical events such as entry by a new supplier.

The conclusions of well-informed and sophisticated customers on the likely impact of the merger itself can also help the Agencies investigate competitive effects, because customers typically feel the consequences of both competitively beneficial and competitively harmful mergers. In evaluating such evidence, the Agencies are mindful that customers may oppose, or favor, a merger for reasons unrelated to the antitrust issues raised by that merger.

When some customers express concerns about the competitive effects of a merger while others view the merger as beneficial or neutral, the Agencies take account of this divergence in using the information provided by customers and consider the likely reasons for such divergence of views. For example, if for regulatory reasons some customers cannot buy imported products, while others can, a merger between domestic suppliers may harm the former customers even if it leaves the more flexible customers unharmed. See Section 3.

When direct customers of the merging firms compete against one another in a downstream market, their interests may not be aligned with the interests of final consumers, especially if the direct customers expect to pass on any anticompetitive price increase. A customer that is protected from adverse competitive effects by a long-term contract, or otherwise relatively immune from the merger's harmful effects, may even welcome an anticompetitive merger that provides that customer with a competitive advantage over its downstream rivals.

Example 1: As a result of the merger, Customer C will experience a price increase for an input used in producing its final product, raising its costs. Customer C's rivals use this input more intensively than Customer C, and the same price increase applied to them will raise their costs more than it raises Customer C's costs. On balance, Customer C may benefit from the merger even though the merger involves a substantial lessening of competition.

2.2.3 Other Industry Participants and Observers

Suppliers, indirect customers, distributors, other industry participants, and industry analysts can also provide information helpful to a merger inquiry. The interests of firms selling products complementary to those offered by the merging firms often are well aligned with those of customers, making their informed views valuable.

Information from firms that are rivals to the merging parties can help illuminate how the market operates. The interests of rival firms often diverge from the interests of customers, since customers normally lose, but rival firms gain, if the merged entity raises its prices. For that reason, the Agencies do not routinely rely on the overall views of rival firms regarding the competitive effects of the merger. However, rival firms may provide relevant facts, and even their overall views may be instructive, especially in cases where the Agencies are concerned that the merged entity may engage in exclusionary conduct.

Example 2: Merging Firms A and B operate in a market in which network effects are significant, implying that any firm's product is significantly more valuable if it commands a large market share or if it is interconnected with others that in aggregate command such a share. Prior to the merger, they and their rivals voluntarily interconnect with one another. The merger would create an entity with a large enough share that a strategy of ending voluntary interconnection would have a dangerous probability of creating monopoly power in this market. The interests of rivals and of consumers would be broadly aligned in preventing such a merger.

3. Targeted Customers and Price Discrimination

When examining possible adverse competitive effects from a merger, the Agencies consider whether those effects vary significantly for different customers purchasing the same or similar products. Such differential impacts are possible when sellers can discriminate, e.g., by profitably raising price to certain targeted customers but not to others. The possibility of price discrimination influences market definition (see Section 4), the measurement of market shares (see Section 5), and the evaluation of competitive effects (see Sections 6 and 7).

When price discrimination is feasible, adverse competitive effects on targeted customers can arise, even if such effects will not arise for other customers. A price increase for targeted customers may be profitable even if a price increase for all customers would not be profitable because too many other customers would substitute away. When discrimination is reasonably likely, the Agencies may evaluate competitive effects separately by type of customer. The Agencies may have access to information unavailable to customers that is relevant to evaluating whether discrimination is reasonably likely.

For price discrimination to be feasible, two conditions typically must be met: differential pricing and limited arbitrage.

First, the suppliers engaging in price discrimination must be able to price differently to targeted customers than to other customers. This may involve identification of individual customers to which different prices are offered or offering different prices to different types of customers based on observable characteristics.

Example 3: Suppliers can distinguish large buyers from small buyers. Large buyers are more likely than small buyers to self-supply in response to a significant price increase. The merger may lead to price discrimination against small buyers, harming them, even if large buyers are not harmed. Such discrimination can occur even if there is no discrete gap in size between the classes of large and small buyers.

In other cases, suppliers may be unable to distinguish among different types of customers but can offer multiple products that sort customers based on their purchase decisions.

Second, the targeted customers must not be able to defeat the price increase of concern by arbitrage, e.g., by purchasing indirectly from or through other customers. Arbitrage may be difficult if it would void warranties or make service more difficult or costly for customers. Arbitrage is inherently impossible for many services. Arbitrage between customers at different geographic locations may be impractical due to transportation costs. Arbitrage on a modest scale may be possible but sufficiently costly or limited that it would not deter or defeat a discriminatory pricing strategy.

4. Market Definition

When the Agencies identify a potential competitive concern with a horizontal merger, market definition plays two roles. First, market definition helps specify the line of commerce and section of the country in which the competitive concern arises. In any merger enforcement action, the Agencies will normally identify one or more relevant markets in which the merger may substantially lessen competition. Second, market definition allows the Agencies to identify market participants and measure market shares and market concentration. See Section 5. The measurement of market shares and market concentration is not an end in itself, but is useful to the extent it illuminates the merger's likely competitive effects.

The Agencies' analysis need not start with market definition. Some of the analytical tools used by the Agencies to assess competitive effects do not rely on market definition, although evaluation of competitive alternatives available to customers is always necessary at some point in the analysis.

Evidence of competitive effects can inform market definition, just as market definition can be informative regarding competitive effects. For example, evidence that a reduction in the number of significant rivals offering a group of products causes prices for those products to rise significantly can itself establish that those products form a relevant market. Such evidence also may more directly predict the competitive effects of a merger, reducing the role of inferences from market definition and market shares.

Where analysis suggests alternative and reasonably plausible candidate markets, and where the resulting market shares lead to very different inferences regarding competitive effects, it is particularly valuable to examine more direct forms of evidence concerning those effects.

Market definition focuses solely on demand substitution factors, i.e., on customers' ability and willingness to substitute away from one product to another in response to a price increase or a corresponding non-price change such as a reduction in product quality or service. The responsive actions of suppliers are also important in competitive analysis. They are considered in these Guidelines in the sections addressing the identification of market participants, the measurement of market shares, the analysis of competitive effects, and entry.

Customers often confront a range of possible substitutes for the products of the merging firms. Some substitutes may be closer, and others more distant, either geographically or in terms of product attributes and perceptions. Additionally, customers may assess the proximity of different products differently. When products or suppliers in different geographic areas are substitutes for one another to varying degrees, defining a market to include some substitutes and exclude others is inevitably a simplification that cannot capture the full variation in the extent to which different products compete against each other. The principles of market definition outlined below seek to make this inevitable simplification as useful and informative as is practically possible. Relevant markets need not have precise metes and bounds.

Defining a market broadly to include relatively distant product or geographic substitutes can lead to misleading market shares. This is because the competitive significance of distant substitutes is unlikely to be commensurate with their shares in a broad market. Although excluding more distant substitutes from the market inevitably understates their competitive significance to some degree, doing so often provides a more accurate indicator of the competitive effects of the merger than would the alternative of including them and overstating their competitive significance as proportional to their shares in an expanded market.

Example 4: Firms A and B, sellers of two leading brands of motorcycles, propose to merge. If Brand A motorcycle prices were to rise, some buyers would substitute to Brand B, and some others would substitute to cars. However, motorcycle buyers see Brand B motorcycles as much more similar to Brand A motorcycles than are cars. Far more cars are sold than motorcycles. Evaluating shares in a market that includes cars would greatly underestimate the competitive significance of Brand B motorcycles in constraining Brand A's prices and greatly overestimate the significance of cars.

Market shares of different products in narrowly defined markets are more likely to capture the relative competitive significance of these products, and often more accurately reflect competition between close substitutes. As a result, properly defined antitrust markets often exclude some substitutes to which some customers might turn in the face of a price increase even if such substitutes provide alternatives for those customers. However, a group of products is too narrow to constitute a relevant market if competition from products outside that group is so ample that even the complete elimination of competition within the group would not significantly harm either direct customers or downstream consumers. The hypothetical monopolist test (see Section 4.1.1) is designed to ensure that candidate markets are not overly narrow in this respect.

The Agencies implement these principles of market definition flexibly when evaluating different possible candidate markets. Relevant antitrust markets defined according to the hypothetical monopolist test are not always intuitive and may not align with how industry members use the term "market."

Section 4.1 describes the principles that apply to product market definition, and gives guidance on how the Agencies most often apply those principles. Section 4.2 describes how the same principles apply to geographic market definition. Although discussed separately for simplicity of exposition, the principles described in Sections 4.1 and 4.2 are combined to define a relevant market, which has both a product and a geographic dimension. In particular, the hypothetical monopolist test is applied to a group of products together with a geographic region to determine a relevant market.

4.1 Product Market Definition

When a product sold by one merging firm (Product A) competes against one or more products sold by the other merging firm, the Agencies define a relevant product market around Product A to evaluate the importance of that competition. Such a relevant product market consists of a group of substitute products including Product A. Multiple relevant product markets may thus be identified.

4.1.1 The Hypothetical Monopolist Test

The Agencies employ the hypothetical monopolist test to evaluate whether groups of products in candidate markets are sufficiently broad to constitute relevant antitrust markets. The Agencies use the hypothetical monopolist test to identify a set of products that are reasonably interchangeable with a product sold by one of the merging firms.

The hypothetical monopolist test requires that a product market contain enough substitute products so that it could be subject to post-merger exercise of market power significantly exceeding that existing absent the merger. Specifically, the test requires that a hypothetical profit-maximizing firm, not subject to price regulation, that was the only present and future seller of those products (“hypothetical monopolist”) likely would impose at least a small but significant and non-transitory increase in price (“SSNIP”) on at least one product in the market, including at least one product sold by one of the merging firms.<sup>4</sup> For the purpose of analyzing this issue, the terms of sale of products outside the candidate market are held constant. The SSNIP is employed solely as a methodological tool for performing the hypothetical monopolist test; it is not a tolerance level for price increases resulting from a merger.

Groups of products may satisfy the hypothetical monopolist test without including the full range of substitutes from which customers choose. The hypothetical monopolist test may identify a group of products as a relevant market even if customers would substitute significantly to products outside that group in response to a price increase.

Example 5: Products A and B are being tested as a candidate market. Each sells for $100, has an incremental cost of $60, and sells 1200 units. For every dollar increase in the price of Product A, for any given price of Product B, Product A loses twenty units of sales to products outside the candidate market and ten units of sales to Product B, and likewise for Product B. Under these conditions, economic analysis shows that a hypothetical profit-maximizing monopolist controlling Products A and B would raise both of their prices by ten percent, to $110. Therefore, Products A and B satisfy the hypothetical monopolist test using a five percent SSNIP, and indeed for any SSNIP size up to ten percent. This is true even though two-thirds of the sales lost by one product when it raises its price are diverted to products outside the relevant market.

When applying the hypothetical monopolist test to define a market around a product offered by one of the merging firms, if the market includes a second product, the Agencies will normally also include a third product if that third product is a closer substitute for the first product than is the second product. The third product is a closer substitute if, in response to a SSNIP on the first product, greater revenues are diverted to the third product than to the second product.

Example 6: In Example 5, suppose that half of the unit sales lost by Product A when it raises its price are diverted to Product C, which also has a price of $100, while one-third are diverted to Product B. Product C is a closer substitute for Product A than is Product B. Thus Product C will normally be included in the relevant market, even though Products A and B together satisfy the hypothetical monopolist test.

The hypothetical monopolist test ensures that markets are not defined too narrowly, but it does not lead to a single relevant market. The Agencies may evaluate a merger in any relevant market satisfying the test, guided by the overarching principle that the purpose of defining the market and measuring market shares is to illuminate the evaluation of competitive effects. Because the relative competitive significance of more distant substitutes is apt to be overstated by their share of sales, when the Agencies rely on market shares and concentration, they usually do so in the smallest relevant market satisfying the hypothetical monopolist test.

---

<sup>4</sup> If the pricing incentives of the firms supplying the products in the candidate market differ substantially from those of the hypothetical monopolist, for reasons other than the latter’s control over a larger group of substitutes, the Agencies may instead employ the concept of a hypothetical profit-maximizing cartel comprised of the firms (with all their products) that sell the products in the candidate market. This approach is most likely to be appropriate if the merging firms sell products outside the candidate market that significantly affect their pricing incentives for products in the candidate market. This could occur, for example, if the candidate market is one for durable equipment and the firms selling that equipment derive substantial net revenues from selling spare parts and service for that equipment.

Example 7: In Example 4, including cars in the market will lead to misleadingly small market shares for motorcycle producers. Unless motorcycles fail the hypothetical monopolist test, the Agencies would not include cars in the market in analyzing this motorcycle merger.

4.1.2 Benchmark Prices and SSNIP Size

The Agencies apply the SSNIP starting from prices that would likely prevail absent the merger. If prices are not likely to change absent the merger, these benchmark prices can reasonably be taken to be the prices prevailing prior to the merger.<sup>5</sup> If prices are likely to change absent the merger, e.g., because of innovation or entry, the Agencies may use anticipated future prices as the benchmark for the test. If prices might fall absent the merger due to the breakdown of pre-merger coordination, the Agencies may use those lower prices as the benchmark for the test. In some cases, the techniques employed by the Agencies to implement the hypothetical monopolist test focus on the difference in incentives between pre-merger firms and the hypothetical monopolist and do not require specifying the benchmark prices.

The SSNIP is intended to represent a “small but significant” increase in the prices charged by firms in the candidate market for the value they contribute to the products or services used by customers. This properly directs attention to the effects of price changes commensurate with those that might result from a significant lessening of competition caused by the merger. This methodology is used because normally it is possible to quantify “small but significant” adverse price effects on customers and analyze their likely reactions, not because price effects are more important than non-price effects.

The Agencies most often use a SSNIP of five percent of the price paid by customers for the products or services to which the merging firms contribute value. However, what constitutes a “small but significant” increase in price, commensurate with a significant loss of competition caused by the merger, depends upon the nature of the industry and the merging firms’ positions in it, and the Agencies may accordingly use a price increase that is larger or smaller than five percent. Where explicit or implicit prices for the firms’ specific contribution to value can be identified with reasonable clarity, the Agencies may base the SSNIP on those prices.

Example 8: In a merger between two oil pipelines, the SSNIP would be based on the price charged for transporting the oil, not on the price of the oil itself. If pipelines buy the oil at one end and sell it at the other, the price charged for transporting the oil is implicit, equal to the difference between the price paid for oil at the input end and the price charged for oil at the output end. The relevant product sold by the pipelines is better described as “pipeline transportation of oil from point A to point B” than as “oil at point B.”

---

<sup>5</sup> Market definition for the evaluation of non-merger antitrust concerns such as monopolization or facilitating practices will differ in this respect if the effects resulting from the conduct of concern are already occurring at the time of evaluation.

Example 9: In a merger between two firms that install computers purchased from third parties, the SSNIP would be based on their fees, not on the price of installed computers. If these firms purchase the computers and charge their customers one package price, the implicit installation fee is equal to the package charge to customers less the price of the computers.

Example 10: In Example 9, suppose that the prices paid by the merging firms to purchase computers are opaque, but account for at least ninety-five percent of the prices they charge for installed computers, with profits or implicit fees making up five percent of those prices at most. A five percent SSNIP on the total price paid by customers would at least double those fees or profits. Even if that would be unprofitable for a hypothetical monopolist, a significant increase in fees might well be profitable. If the SSNIP is based on the total price paid by customers, a lower percentage will be used.

4.1.3 Implementing the Hypothetical Monopolist Test

The hypothetical monopolist's incentive to raise prices depends both on the extent to which customers would likely substitute away from the products in the candidate market in response to such a price increase and on the profit margins earned on those products. The profit margin on incremental units is the difference between price and incremental cost on those units. The Agencies often estimate incremental costs, for example using merging parties' documents or data the merging parties use to make business decisions. Incremental cost is measured over the change in output that would be caused by the price increase under consideration.

In considering customers' likely responses to higher prices, the Agencies take into account any reasonably available and reliable evidence, including, but not limited to:

- how customers have shifted purchases in the past in response to relative changes in price or other terms and conditions;
- information from buyers, including surveys, concerning how they would respond to price changes;
- the conduct of industry participants, notably:
  - sellers' business decisions or business documents indicating sellers' informed beliefs concerning how customers would substitute among products in response to relative changes in price;
  - industry participants' behavior in tracking and responding to price changes by some or all rivals;
- objective information about product characteristics and the costs and delays of switching products, especially switching from products in the candidate market to products outside the candidate market;
- the percentage of sales lost by one product in the candidate market, when its price alone rises, that is recaptured by other products in the candidate market, with a higher recapture percentage making a price increase more profitable for the hypothetical monopolist;
- evidence from other industry participants, such as sellers of complementary products;

- legal or regulatory requirements; and
- the influence of downstream competition faced by customers in their output markets.

When the necessary data are available, the Agencies also may consider a “critical loss analysis” to assess the extent to which it corroborates inferences drawn from the evidence noted above. Critical loss analysis asks whether imposing at least a SSNIP on one or more products in a candidate market would raise or lower the hypothetical monopolist’s profits. While this “breakeven” analysis differs from the profit-maximizing analysis called for by the hypothetical monopolist test in Section 4.1.1, merging parties sometimes present this type of analysis to the Agencies. A price increase raises profits on sales made at the higher price, but this will be offset to the extent customers substitute away from products in the candidate market. Critical loss analysis compares the magnitude of these two offsetting effects resulting from the price increase. The “critical loss” is defined as the number of lost unit sales that would leave profits unchanged. The “predicted loss” is defined as the number of unit sales that the hypothetical monopolist is predicted to lose due to the price increase. The price increase raises the hypothetical monopolist’s profits if the predicted loss is less than the critical loss.

The Agencies consider all of the evidence of customer substitution noted above in assessing the predicted loss. The Agencies require that estimates of the predicted loss be consistent with that evidence, including the pre-merger margins of products in the candidate market used to calculate the critical loss. Unless the firms are engaging in coordinated interaction (see Section 7), high pre-merger margins normally indicate that each firm’s product individually faces demand that is not highly sensitive to price.<sup>6</sup> Higher pre-merger margins thus indicate a smaller predicted loss as well as a smaller critical loss. The higher the pre-merger margin, the smaller the recapture percentage necessary for the candidate market to satisfy the hypothetical monopolist test.

Even when the evidence necessary to perform the hypothetical monopolist test quantitatively is not available, the conceptual framework of the test provides a useful methodological tool for gathering and analyzing evidence pertinent to customer substitution and to market definition. The Agencies follow the hypothetical monopolist test to the extent possible given the available evidence, bearing in mind that the ultimate goal of market definition is to help determine whether the merger may substantially lessen competition.

4.1.4 Product Market Definition with Targeted Customers

If a hypothetical monopolist could profitably target a subset of customers for price increases, the Agencies may identify relevant markets defined around those targeted customers, to whom a hypothetical monopolist would profitably and separately impose at least a SSNIP. Markets to serve targeted customers are also known as price discrimination markets. In practice, the Agencies identify price discrimination markets only where they believe there is a realistic prospect of an adverse competitive effect on a group of targeted customers.

Example 11: Glass containers have many uses. In response to a price increase for glass containers, some users would substitute substantially to plastic or metal containers, but baby food manufacturers would not. If a hypothetical monopolist could price separately and limit arbitrage, baby food manufacturers would be vulnerable to a targeted increase in the price of glass containers. The Agencies could define a distinct market for glass containers used to package baby food.

---

<sup>6</sup> While margins are important for implementing the hypothetical monopolist test, high margins are not in themselves of antitrust concern.

The Agencies also often consider markets for targeted customers when prices are individually negotiated and suppliers have information about customers that would allow a hypothetical monopolist to identify customers that are likely to pay a higher price for the relevant product. If prices are negotiated individually with customers, the hypothetical monopolist test may suggest relevant markets that are as narrow as individual customers (see also Section 6.2 on bargaining and auctions). Nonetheless, the Agencies often define markets for groups of targeted customers, i.e., by type of customer, rather than by individual customer. By so doing, the Agencies are able to rely on aggregated market shares that can be more helpful in predicting the competitive effects of the merger.

4.2 Geographic Market Definition

The arena of competition affected by the merger may be geographically bounded if geography limits some customers' willingness or ability to substitute to some products, or some suppliers' willingness or ability to serve some customers. Both supplier and customer locations can affect this. The Agencies apply the principles of market definition described here and in Section 4.1 to define a relevant market with a geographic dimension as well as a product dimension.

The scope of geographic markets often depends on transportation costs. Other factors such as language, regulation, tariff and non-tariff trade barriers, custom and familiarity, reputation, and service availability may impede long-distance or international transactions. The competitive significance of foreign firms may be assessed at various exchange rates, especially if exchange rates have fluctuated in the recent past.

In the absence of price discrimination based on customer location, the Agencies normally define geographic markets based on the locations of suppliers, as explained in subsection 4.2.1. In other cases, notably if price discrimination based on customer location is feasible as is often the case when delivered pricing is commonly used in the industry, the Agencies may define geographic markets based on the locations of customers, as explained in subsection 4.2.2.

4.2.1 Geographic Markets Based on the Locations of Suppliers

Geographic markets based on the locations of suppliers encompass the region from which sales are made. Geographic markets of this type often apply when customers receive goods or services at suppliers' locations. Competitors in the market are firms with relevant production, sales, or service facilities in that region. Some customers who buy from these firms may be located outside the boundaries of the geographic market.

The hypothetical monopolist test requires that a hypothetical profit-maximizing firm that was the only present or future producer of the relevant product(s) located in the region would impose at least a SSNIP from at least one location, including at least one location of one of the merging firms. In this exercise the terms of sale for all products produced elsewhere are held constant. A single firm may operate in a number of different geographic markets, even for a single product.

Example 12: The merging parties both have manufacturing plants in City X. The relevant product is expensive to transport and suppliers price their products for pickup at their locations. Rival plants are some distance away in City Y. A hypothetical monopolist controlling all plants in City X could profitably impose a SSNIP at these plants. Competition from more distant plants would not defeat the price increase because supplies coming from more distant plants require expensive transportation. The relevant geographic market is defined around the plants in City X.

When the geographic market is defined based on supplier locations, sales made by suppliers located in the geographic market are counted, regardless of the location of the customer making the purchase.

In considering likely reactions of customers to price increases for the relevant product(s) imposed in a candidate geographic market, the Agencies consider any reasonably available and reliable evidence, including:

- how customers have shifted purchases in the past between different geographic locations in response to relative changes in price or other terms and conditions;
- the cost and difficulty of transporting the product (or the cost and difficulty of a customer traveling to a seller's location), in relation to its price;
- whether suppliers need a presence near customers to provide service or support;
- evidence on whether sellers base business decisions on the prospect of customers switching between geographic locations in response to relative changes in price or other competitive variables;
- the costs and delays of switching from suppliers in the candidate geographic market to suppliers outside the candidate geographic market; and
- the influence of downstream competition faced by customers in their output markets.

4.2.2 Geographic Markets Based on the Locations of Customers

When the hypothetical monopolist could discriminate based on customer location, the Agencies may define geographic markets based on the locations of targeted customers.<sup>7</sup> Geographic markets of this type often apply when suppliers deliver their products or services to customers' locations. Geographic markets of this type encompass the region into which sales are made. Competitors in the market are firms that sell to customers in the specified region. Some suppliers that sell into the relevant market may be located outside the boundaries of the geographic market.

The hypothetical monopolist test requires that a hypothetical profit-maximizing firm that was the only present or future seller of the relevant product(s) to customers in the region would impose at least a SSNIP on some customers in that region. A region forms a relevant geographic market if this price increase would not be defeated by substitution away from the relevant product or by arbitrage, e.g., customers in the region travelling outside it to purchase the relevant product. In this exercise, the terms of sale for products sold to all customers outside the region are held constant.

---

<sup>7</sup> For customers operating in multiple locations, only those customer locations within the targeted zone are included in the market.

Example 13: Customers require local sales and support. Suppliers have sales and service operations in many geographic areas and can discriminate based on customer location. The geographic market can be defined around the locations of customers.

Example 14: Each merging firm has a single manufacturing plant and delivers the relevant product to customers in City X and in City Y. The relevant product is expensive to transport. The merging firms' plants are by far the closest to City X, but no closer to City Y than are numerous rival plants. This fact pattern suggests that customers in City X may be harmed by the merger even if customers in City Y are not. For that reason, the Agencies consider a relevant geographic market defined around customers in City X. Such a market could be defined even if the region around the merging firms' plants would not be a relevant geographic market defined based on the location of sellers because a hypothetical monopolist controlling all plants in that region would find a SSNIP imposed on all of its customers unprofitable due to the loss of sales to customers in City Y.

When the geographic market is defined based on customer locations, sales made to those customers are counted, regardless of the location of the supplier making those sales.

Example 15: Customers in the United States must use products approved by U.S. regulators. Foreign customers use products not approved by U.S. regulators. The relevant product market consists of products approved by U.S. regulators. The geographic market is defined around U.S. customers. Any sales made to U.S. customers by foreign suppliers are included in the market, and those foreign suppliers are participants in the U.S. market even though located outside it.

5. Market Participants, Market Shares, and Market Concentration

The Agencies normally consider measures of market shares and market concentration as part of their evaluation of competitive effects. The Agencies evaluate market shares and concentration in conjunction with other reasonably available and reliable evidence for the ultimate purpose of determining whether a merger may substantially lessen competition.

Market shares can directly influence firms' competitive incentives. For example, if a price reduction to gain new customers would also apply to a firm's existing customers, a firm with a large market share may be more reluctant to implement a price reduction than one with a small share. Likewise, a firm with a large market share may not feel pressure to reduce price even if a smaller rival does. Market shares also can reflect firms' capabilities. For example, a firm with a large market share may be able to expand output rapidly by a larger absolute amount than can a small firm. Similarly, a large market share tends to indicate low costs, an attractive product, or both.

5.1 Market Participants

All firms that currently earn revenues in the relevant market are considered market participants. Vertically integrated firms are also included to the extent that their inclusion accurately reflects their competitive significance. Firms not currently earning revenues in the relevant market, but that have committed to entering the market in the near future, are also considered market participants.

Firms that are not current producers in a relevant market, but that would very likely provide rapid supply responses with direct competitive impact in the event of a SSNIP, without incurring significant sunk costs, are also considered market participants. These firms are termed “rapid entrants.” Sunk costs are entry or exit costs that cannot be recovered outside the relevant market. Entry that would take place more slowly in response to adverse competitive effects, or that requires firms to incur significant sunk costs, is considered in Section 9.

Firms that produce the relevant product but do not sell it in the relevant geographic market may be rapid entrants. Other things equal, such firms are most likely to be rapid entrants if they are close to the geographic market.

Example 16: Farm A grows tomatoes halfway between Cities X and Y. Currently, it ships its tomatoes to City X because prices there are two percent higher. Previously it has varied the destination of its shipments in response to small price variations. Farm A would likely be a rapid entrant participant in a market for tomatoes in City Y.

Example 17: Firm B has bid multiple times to supply milk to School District S, and actually supplies milk to schools in some adjacent areas. It has never won a bid in School District S, but is well qualified to serve that district and has often nearly won. Firm B would be counted as a rapid entrant in a market for school milk in School District S.

More generally, if the relevant market is defined around targeted customers, firms that produce relevant products but do not sell them to those customers may be rapid entrants if they can easily and rapidly begin selling to the targeted customers.

Firms that clearly possess the necessary assets to supply into the relevant market rapidly may also be rapid entrants. In markets for relatively homogeneous goods where a supplier’s ability to compete depends predominantly on its costs and its capacity, and not on other factors such as experience or reputation in the relevant market, a supplier with efficient idle capacity, or readily available “swing” capacity currently used in adjacent markets that can easily and profitably be shifted to serve the relevant market, may be a rapid entrant.<sup>8</sup> However, idle capacity may be inefficient, and capacity used in adjacent markets may not be available, so a firm’s possession of idle or swing capacity alone does not make that firm a rapid entrant.

5.2 Market Shares

The Agencies normally calculate market shares for all firms that currently produce products in the relevant market, subject to the availability of data. The Agencies also calculate market shares for other market participants if this can be done to reliably reflect their competitive significance.

Market concentration and market share data are normally based on historical evidence. However, recent or ongoing changes in market conditions may indicate that the current market share of a particular firm either understates or overstates the firm’s future competitive significance. The Agencies consider reasonably predictable effects of recent or ongoing changes in market conditions when calculating and interpreting market share data. For example, if a new technology that is important to long-term competitive viability is available to other firms in the market, but is not available to a particular firm, the Agencies may conclude that that firm’s historical market share overstates its future competitive significance. The Agencies may project historical market shares into the foreseeable future when this can be done reliably.

---

<sup>8</sup> If this type of supply side substitution is nearly universal among the firms selling one or more of a group of products, the Agencies may use an aggregate description of markets for those products as a matter of convenience.

The Agencies measure market shares based on the best available indicator of firms' future competitive significance in the relevant market. This may depend upon the type of competitive effect being considered, and on the availability of data. Typically, annual data are used, but where individual transactions are large and infrequent so annual data may be unrepresentative, the Agencies may measure market shares over a longer period of time.

In most contexts, the Agencies measure each firm's market share based on its actual or projected revenues in the relevant market. Revenues in the relevant market tend to be the best measure of attractiveness to customers, since they reflect the real-world ability of firms to surmount all of the obstacles necessary to offer products on terms and conditions that are attractive to customers. In cases where one unit of a low-priced product can substitute for one unit of a higher-priced product, unit sales may measure competitive significance better than revenues. For example, a new, much less expensive product may have great competitive significance if it substantially erodes the revenues earned by older, higher-priced products, even if it earns relatively few revenues. In cases where customers sign long-term contracts, face switching costs, or tend to re-evaluate their suppliers only occasionally, revenues earned from recently acquired customers may better reflect the competitive significance of suppliers than do total revenues.

In markets for homogeneous products, a firm's competitive significance may derive principally from its ability and incentive to rapidly expand production in the relevant market in response to a price increase or output reduction by others in that market. As a result, a firm's competitive significance may depend upon its level of readily available capacity to serve the relevant market if that capacity is efficient enough to make such expansion profitable. In such markets, capacities or reserves may better reflect the future competitive significance of suppliers than revenues, and the Agencies may calculate market shares using those measures. Market participants that are not current producers may then be assigned positive market shares, but only if a measure of their competitive significance properly comparable to that of current producers is available. When market shares are measured based on firms' readily available capacities, the Agencies do not include capacity that is committed or so profitably employed outside the relevant market, or so high-cost, that it would not likely be used to respond to a SSNIP in the relevant market.

Example 18: The geographic market is defined around customers in the United States. Firm X produces the relevant product outside the United States, and most of its sales are made to customers outside the United States. In most contexts, Firm X's market share will be based on its sales to U.S. customers, not its total sales or total capacity. However, if the relevant product is homogeneous, and if Firm X would significantly expand sales to U.S. customers rapidly and without incurring significant sunk costs in response to a SSNIP, the Agencies may base Firm X's market share on its readily available capacity to serve U.S. customers.

When the Agencies define markets serving targeted customers, these same principles are used to measure market shares, as they apply to those customers. In most contexts, each firm's market share is based on its actual or projected revenues from the targeted customers. However, the Agencies may instead measure market shares based on revenues from a broader group of customers if doing so would more accurately reflect the competitive significance of different suppliers in the relevant market. Revenues earned from a broader group of customers may also be used when better data are thereby available.

5.3 Market Concentration

Market concentration is often one useful indicator of likely competitive effects of a merger. In evaluating market concentration, the Agencies consider both the post-merger level of market concentration and the change in concentration resulting from a merger. Market shares may not fully reflect the competitive significance of firms in the market or the impact of a merger. They are used in conjunction with other evidence of competitive effects. See Sections 6 and 7.

In analyzing mergers between an incumbent and a recent or potential entrant, to the extent the Agencies use the change in concentration to evaluate competitive effects, they will do so using projected market shares. A merger between an incumbent and a potential entrant can raise significant competitive concerns. The lessening of competition resulting from such a merger is more likely to be substantial, the larger is the market share of the incumbent, the greater is the competitive significance of the potential entrant, and the greater is the competitive threat posed by this potential entrant relative to others.

The Agencies give more weight to market concentration when market shares have been stable over time, especially in the face of historical changes in relative prices or costs. If a firm has retained its market share even after its price has increased relative to those of its rivals, that firm already faces limited competitive constraints, making it less likely that its remaining rivals will replace the competition lost if one of that firm's important rivals is eliminated due to a merger. By contrast, even a highly concentrated market can be very competitive if market shares fluctuate substantially over short periods of time in response to changes in competitive offerings. However, if competition by one of the merging firms has significantly contributed to these fluctuations, perhaps because it has acted as a maverick, the Agencies will consider whether the merger will enhance market power by combining that firm with one of its significant rivals.

The Agencies may measure market concentration using the number of significant competitors in the market. This measure is most useful when there is a gap in market share between significant competitors and smaller rivals or when it is difficult to measure revenues in the relevant market. The Agencies also may consider the combined market share of the merging firms as an indicator of the extent to which others in the market may not be able readily to replace competition between the merging firms that is lost through the merger.

The Agencies often calculate the Herfindahl-Hirschman Index ("HHI") of market concentration. The HHI is calculated by summing the squares of the individual firms' market shares,<sup>9</sup> and thus gives proportionately greater weight to the larger market shares. When using the HHI, the Agencies <sup>9</sup> For example, a market consisting of four firms with market shares of thirty percent, thirty percent, twenty percent, and twenty percent has an HHI of 2600 ( $30^2 + 30^2 + 20^2 + 20^2 = 2600$ ). The HHI ranges from 10,000 (in the case of a pure monopoly) to a number approaching zero (in the case of an atomistic market). Although it is desirable to include all firms in the calculation, lack of information about firms with small shares is not critical because such firms do not affect the HHI significantly.

---

consider both the post-merger level of the HHI and the increase in the HHI resulting from the merger. The increase in the HHI is equal to twice the product of the market shares of the merging firms.<sup>10</sup>

Based on their experience, the Agencies generally classify markets into three types:

- Unconcentrated Markets: HHI below 1500
- Moderately Concentrated Markets: HHI between 1500 and 2500
- Highly Concentrated Markets: HHI above 2500

The Agencies employ the following general standards for the relevant markets they have defined:

- Small Change in Concentration: Mergers involving an increase in the HHI of less than 100 points are unlikely to have adverse competitive effects and ordinarily require no further analysis.
- Unconcentrated Markets: Mergers resulting in unconcentrated markets are unlikely to have adverse competitive effects and ordinarily require no further analysis.
- Moderately Concentrated Markets: Mergers resulting in moderately concentrated markets that involve an increase in the HHI of more than 100 points potentially raise significant competitive concerns and often warrant scrutiny.
- Highly Concentrated Markets: Mergers resulting in highly concentrated markets that involve an increase in the HHI of between 100 points and 200 points potentially raise significant competitive concerns and often warrant scrutiny. Mergers resulting in highly concentrated markets that involve an increase in the HHI of more than 200 points will be presumed to be likely to enhance market power. The presumption may be rebutted by persuasive evidence showing that the merger is unlikely to enhance market power.

The purpose of these thresholds is not to provide a rigid screen to separate competitively benign mergers from anticompetitive ones, although high levels of concentration do raise concerns. Rather, they provide one way to identify some mergers unlikely to raise competitive concerns and some others for which it is particularly important to examine whether other competitive factors confirm, reinforce, or counteract the potentially harmful effects of increased concentration. The higher the post-merger HHI and the increase in the HHI, the greater are the Agencies' potential competitive concerns and the greater is the likelihood that the Agencies will request additional information to conduct their analysis.

---

<sup>10</sup> For example, the merger of firms with shares of five percent and ten percent of the market would increase the HHI by 100 ( $5 \times 10 \times 2 = 100$ ).

6. Unilateral Effects

The elimination of competition between two firms that results from their merger may alone constitute a substantial lessening of competition. Such unilateral effects are most apparent in a merger to monopoly in a relevant market, but are by no means limited to that case. Whether cognizable efficiencies resulting from the merger are likely to reduce or reverse adverse unilateral effects is addressed in Section 10.

Several common types of unilateral effects are discussed in this section. Section 6.1 discusses unilateral price effects in markets with differentiated products. Section 6.2 discusses unilateral effects in markets where sellers negotiate with buyers or prices are determined through auctions. Section 6.3 discusses unilateral effects relating to reductions in output or capacity in markets for relatively homogeneous products. Section 6.4 discusses unilateral effects arising from diminished innovation or reduced product variety. These effects do not exhaust the types of possible unilateral effects; for example, exclusionary unilateral effects also can arise.

A merger may result in different unilateral effects along different dimensions of competition. For example, a merger may increase prices in the short term but not raise longer-term concerns about innovation, either because rivals will provide sufficient innovation competition or because the merger will generate cognizable research and development efficiencies. See Section 10.

6.1 Pricing of Differentiated Products

In differentiated product industries, some products can be very close substitutes and compete strongly with each other, while other products are more distant substitutes and compete less strongly. For example, one high-end product may compete much more directly with another high-end product than with any low-end product.

A merger between firms selling differentiated products may diminish competition by enabling the merged firm to profit by unilaterally raising the price of one or both products above the pre-merger level. Some of the sales lost due to the price rise will merely be diverted to the product of the merger partner and, depending on relative margins, capturing such sales loss through merger may make the price increase profitable even though it would not have been profitable prior to the merger.

The extent of direct competition between the products sold by the merging parties is central to the evaluation of unilateral price effects. Unilateral price effects are greater, the more the buyers of products sold by one merging firm consider products sold by the other merging firm to be their next choice. The Agencies consider any reasonably available and reliable information to evaluate the extent of direct competition between the products sold by the merging firms. This includes documentary and testimonial evidence, win/loss reports and evidence from discount approval processes, customer switching patterns, and customer surveys. The types of evidence relied on often overlap substantially with the types of evidence of customer substitution relevant to the hypothetical monopolist test. See Section 4.1.1.

Substantial unilateral price elevation post-merger for a product formerly sold by one of the merging firms normally requires that a significant fraction of the customers purchasing that product view products formerly sold by the other merging firm as their next-best choice. However, unless pre-merger margins between price and incremental cost are low, that significant fraction need not approach a majority. For this purpose, incremental cost is measured over the change in output that would be caused by the price change considered. A merger may produce significant unilateral effects for a given product even though many more sales are diverted to products sold by non-merging firms than to products previously sold by the merger partner.

Example 19: In Example 5, the merged entity controlling Products A and B would raise prices ten percent, given the product offerings and prices of other firms. In that example, one-third of the sales lost by Product A when its price alone is raised are diverted to Product B. Further analysis is required to account for repositioning, entry, and efficiencies.

In some cases, the Agencies may seek to quantify the extent of direct competition between a product sold by one merging firm and a second product sold by the other merging firm by estimating the diversion ratio from the first product to the second product. The diversion ratio is the fraction of unit sales lost by the first product due to an increase in its price that would be diverted to the second product. Diversion ratios between products sold by one merging firm and products sold by the other merging firm can be very informative for assessing unilateral price effects, with higher diversion ratios indicating a greater likelihood of such effects. Diversion ratios between products sold by merging firms and those sold by non-merging firms have at most secondary predictive value.

Adverse unilateral price effects can arise when the merger gives the merged entity an incentive to raise the price of a product previously sold by one merging firm and thereby divert sales to products previously sold by the other merging firm, boosting the profits on the latter products. Taking as given other prices and product offerings, that boost to profits is equal to the value to the merged firm of the sales diverted to those products. The value of sales diverted to a product is equal to the number of units diverted to that product multiplied by the margin between price and incremental cost on that product. In some cases, where sufficient information is available, the Agencies assess the value of diverted sales, which can serve as an indicator of the upward pricing pressure on the first product resulting from the merger. Diagnosing unilateral price effects based on the value of diverted sales need not rely on market definition or the calculation of market shares and concentration. The Agencies rely much more on the value of diverted sales than on the level of the HHI for diagnosing unilateral price effects in markets with differentiated products. If the value of diverted sales is proportionately small, significant unilateral price effects are unlikely.<sup>11</sup>

Where sufficient data are available, the Agencies may construct economic models designed to quantify the unilateral price effects resulting from the merger. These models often include independent price responses by non-merging firms. They also can incorporate merger-specific efficiencies. These merger simulation methods need not rely on market definition. The Agencies do not treat merger simulation evidence as conclusive in itself, and they place more weight on whether their merger simulations consistently predict substantial price increases than on the precise prediction of any single simulation.

---

<sup>11</sup> For this purpose, the value of diverted sales is measured in proportion to the lost revenues attributable to the reduction in unit sales resulting from the price increase. Those lost revenues equal the reduction in the number of units sold of that product multiplied by that product's price.

A merger is unlikely to generate substantial unilateral price increases if non-merging parties offer very close substitutes for the products offered by the merging firms. In some cases, non-merging firms may be able to reposition their products to offer close substitutes for the products offered by the merging firms. Repositioning is a supply-side response that is evaluated much like entry, with consideration given to timeliness, likelihood, and sufficiency. See Section 9. The Agencies consider whether repositioning would be sufficient to deter or counteract what otherwise would be significant anticompetitive unilateral effects from a differentiated products merger.

6.2 Bargaining and Auctions

In many industries, especially those involving intermediate goods and services, buyers and sellers negotiate to determine prices and other terms of trade. In that process, buyers commonly negotiate with more than one seller, and may play sellers off against one another. Some highly structured forms of such competition are known as auctions. Negotiations often combine aspects of an auction with aspects of one-on-one negotiation, although pure auctions are sometimes used in government procurement and elsewhere.

A merger between two competing sellers prevents buyers from playing those sellers off against each other in negotiations. This alone can significantly enhance the ability and incentive of the merged entity to obtain a result more favorable to it, and less favorable to the buyer, than the merging firms would have offered separately absent the merger. The Agencies analyze unilateral effects of this type using similar approaches to those described in Section 6.1.

Anticompetitive unilateral effects in these settings are likely in proportion to the frequency or probability with which, prior to the merger, one of the merging sellers had been the runner-up when the other won the business. These effects also are likely to be greater, the greater advantage the runner-up merging firm has over other suppliers in meeting customers' needs. These effects also tend to be greater, the more profitable were the pre-merger winning bids. All of these factors are likely to be small if there are many equally placed bidders.

The mechanisms of these anticompetitive unilateral effects, and the indicia of their likelihood, differ somewhat according to the bargaining practices used, the auction format, and the sellers' information about one another's costs and about buyers' preferences. For example, when the merging sellers are likely to know which buyers they are best and second best placed to serve, any anticompetitive unilateral effects are apt to be targeted at those buyers; when sellers are less well informed, such effects are more apt to be spread over a broader class of buyers.

6.3 Capacity and Output for Homogeneous Products

In markets involving relatively undifferentiated products, the Agencies may evaluate whether the merged firm will find it profitable unilaterally to suppress output and elevate the market price. A firm may leave capacity idle, refrain from building or obtaining capacity that would have been obtained absent the merger, or eliminate pre-existing production capabilities. A firm may also divert the use of capacity away from one relevant market and into another so as to raise the price in the former market. The competitive analyses of these alternative modes of output suppression may differ.

A unilateral output suppression strategy is more likely to be profitable when (1) the merged firm's market share is relatively high; (2) the share of the merged firm's output already committed for sale at prices unaffected by the output suppression is relatively low; (3) the margin on the suppressed output is relatively low; (4) the supply responses of rivals are relatively small; and (5) the market elasticity of demand is relatively low.

A merger may provide the merged firm a larger base of sales on which to benefit from the resulting price rise, or it may eliminate a competitor that otherwise could have expanded its output in response to the price rise.

Example 20: Firms A and B both produce an industrial commodity and propose to merge. The demand for this commodity is insensitive to price. Firm A is the market leader. Firm B produces substantial output, but its operating margins are low because it operates high-cost plants. The other suppliers are operating very near capacity. The merged firm has an incentive to reduce output at the high-cost plants, perhaps shutting down some of that capacity, thus driving up the price it receives on the remainder of its output. The merger harms customers, notwithstanding that the merged firm shifts some output from high-cost plants to low-cost plants.

In some cases, a merger between a firm with a substantial share of the sales in the market and a firm with significant excess capacity to serve that market can make an output suppression strategy profitable.<sup>12</sup> This can occur even if the firm with the excess capacity has a relatively small share of sales, if that firm's ability to expand, and thus keep price from rising, has been making an output suppression strategy unprofitable for the firm with the larger market share.

6.4 Innovation and Product Variety

Competition often spurs firms to innovate. The Agencies may consider whether a merger is likely to diminish innovation competition by encouraging the merged firm to curtail its innovative efforts below the level that would prevail in the absence of the merger. That curtailment of innovation could take the form of reduced incentive to continue with an existing product-development effort or reduced incentive to initiate development of new products.

The first of these effects is most likely to occur if at least one of the merging firms is engaging in efforts to introduce new products that would capture substantial revenues from the other merging firm. The second, longer-run effect is most likely to occur if at least one of the merging firms has capabilities that are likely to lead it to develop new products in the future that would capture substantial revenues from the other merging firm. The Agencies therefore also consider whether a merger will diminish innovation competition by combining two of a very small number of firms with the strongest capabilities to successfully innovate in a specific direction.

The Agencies evaluate the extent to which successful innovation by one merging firm is likely to take sales from the other, and the extent to which post-merger incentives for future innovation will be lower than those that would prevail in the absence of the merger. The Agencies also consider whether the merger is likely to enable innovation that would not otherwise take place, by bringing together complementary capabilities that cannot be otherwise combined or for some other merger-specific reason. See Section 10.

---

<sup>12</sup> Such a merger also can cause adverse coordinated effects, especially if the acquired firm with excess capacity was disrupting effective coordination.

The Agencies also consider whether a merger is likely to give the merged firm an incentive to cease offering one of the relevant products sold by the merging parties. Reductions in variety following a merger may or may not be anticompetitive. Mergers can lead to the efficient consolidation of products when variety offers little in value to customers. In other cases, a merger may increase variety by encouraging the merged firm to reposition its products to be more differentiated from one another.

If the merged firm would withdraw a product that a significant number of customers strongly prefer to those products that would remain available, this can constitute a harm to customers over and above any effects on the price or quality of any given product. If there is evidence of such an effect, the Agencies may inquire whether the reduction in variety is largely due to a loss of competitive incentives attributable to the merger. An anticompetitive incentive to eliminate a product as a result of the merger is greater and more likely, the larger is the share of profits from that product coming at the expense of profits from products sold by the merger partner. Where a merger substantially reduces competition by bringing two close substitute products under common ownership, and one of those products is eliminated, the merger will often also lead to a price increase on the remaining product, but that is not a necessary condition for anticompetitive effect.

Example 21: Firm A sells a high-end product at a premium price. Firm B sells a mid-range product at a lower price, serving customers who are more price sensitive. Several other firms have low-end products. Firms A and B together have a large share of the relevant market. Firm A proposes to acquire Firm B and discontinue Firm B's product. Firm A expects to retain most of Firm B's customers. Firm A may not find it profitable to raise the price of its high-end product after the merger, because doing so would reduce its ability to retain Firm B's more price-sensitive customers. The Agencies may conclude that the withdrawal of Firm B's product results from a loss of competition and materially harms customers.

7. Coordinated Effects

A merger may diminish competition by enabling or encouraging post-merger coordinated interaction among firms in the relevant market that harms customers. Coordinated interaction involves conduct by multiple firms that is profitable for each of them only as a result of the accommodating reactions of the others. These reactions can blunt a firm's incentive to offer customers better deals by undercutting the extent to which such a move would win business away from rivals. They also can enhance a firm's incentive to raise prices, by assuaging the fear that such a move would lose customers to rivals.

Coordinated interaction includes a range of conduct. Coordinated interaction can involve the explicit negotiation of a common understanding of how firms will compete or refrain from competing. Such conduct typically would itself violate the antitrust laws. Coordinated interaction also can involve a similar common understanding that is not explicitly negotiated but would be enforced by the detection and punishment of deviations that would undermine the coordinated interaction.

Coordinated interaction alternatively can involve parallel accommodating conduct not pursuant to a prior understanding. Parallel accommodating conduct includes situations in which each rival's response to competitive moves made by others is individually rational, and not motivated by retaliation or deterrence nor intended to sustain an agreed-upon market outcome, but nevertheless emboldens price increases and weakens competitive incentives to reduce prices or offer customers better terms. Coordinated interaction includes conduct not otherwise condemned by the antitrust laws.

The ability of rival firms to engage in coordinated conduct depends on the strength and predictability of rivals' responses to a price change or other competitive initiative. Under some circumstances, a merger can result in market concentration sufficient to strengthen such responses or enable multiple firms in the market to predict them more confidently, thereby affecting the competitive incentives of multiple firms in the market, not just the merged firm.

7.1 Impact of Merger on Coordinated Interaction

The Agencies examine whether a merger is likely to change the manner in which market participants interact, inducing substantially more coordinated interaction. The Agencies seek to identify how a merger might significantly weaken competitive incentives through an increase in the strength, extent, or likelihood of coordinated conduct. There are, however, numerous forms of coordination, and the risk that a merger will induce adverse coordinated effects may not be susceptible to quantification or detailed proof. Therefore, the Agencies evaluate the risk of coordinated effects using measures of market concentration (see Section 5) in conjunction with an assessment of whether a market is vulnerable to coordinated conduct. See Section 7.2. The analysis in Section 7.2 applies to moderately and highly concentrated markets, as unconcentrated markets are unlikely to be vulnerable to coordinated conduct.

Pursuant to the Clayton Act's incipiency standard, the Agencies may challenge mergers that in their judgment pose a real danger of harm through coordinated effects, even without specific evidence showing precisely how the coordination likely would take place. The Agencies are likely to challenge a merger if the following three conditions are all met: (1) the merger would significantly increase concentration and lead to a moderately or highly concentrated market; (2) that market shows signs of vulnerability to coordinated conduct (see Section 7.2); and (3) the Agencies have a credible basis on which to conclude that the merger may enhance that vulnerability. An acquisition eliminating a maverick firm (see Section 2.1.5) in a market vulnerable to coordinated conduct is likely to cause adverse coordinated effects.

7.2 Evidence a Market is Vulnerable to Coordinated Conduct

The Agencies presume that market conditions are conducive to coordinated interaction if firms representing a substantial share in the relevant market appear to have previously engaged in express collusion affecting the relevant market, unless competitive conditions in the market have since changed significantly. Previous express collusion in another geographic market will have the same weight if the salient characteristics of that other market at the time of the collusion are comparable to those in the relevant market. Failed previous attempts at collusion in the relevant market suggest that successful collusion was difficult pre-merger but not so difficult as to deter attempts, and a merger may tend to make success more likely. Previous collusion or attempted collusion in another product market may also be given substantial weight if the salient characteristics of that other market at the time of the collusion are closely comparable to those in the relevant market.

A market typically is more vulnerable to coordinated conduct if each competitively important firm's significant competitive initiatives can be promptly and confidently observed by that firm's rivals. This is more likely to be the case if the terms offered to customers are relatively transparent. Price transparency can be greater for relatively homogeneous products. Even if terms of dealing are not transparent, transparency regarding the identities of the firms serving particular customers can give rise to coordination, e.g., through customer or territorial allocation. Regular monitoring by suppliers of one another's prices or customers can indicate that the terms offered to customers are relatively transparent.

A market typically is more vulnerable to coordinated conduct if a firm's prospective competitive reward from attracting customers away from its rivals will be significantly diminished by likely responses of those rivals. This is more likely to be the case, the stronger and faster are the responses the firm anticipates from its rivals. The firm is more likely to anticipate strong responses if there are few significant competitors, if products in the relevant market are relatively homogeneous, if customers find it relatively easy to switch between suppliers, or if suppliers use meeting-competition clauses.

A firm is more likely to be deterred from making competitive initiatives by whatever responses occur if sales are small and frequent rather than via occasional large and long-term contracts or if relatively few customers will switch to it before rivals are able to respond. A firm is less likely to be deterred by whatever responses occur if the firm has little stake in the status quo. For example, a firm with a small market share that can quickly and dramatically expand, constrained neither by limits on production nor by customer reluctance to switch providers or to entrust business to a historically small provider, is unlikely to be deterred. Firms are also less likely to be deterred by whatever responses occur if competition in the relevant market is marked by leapfrogging technological innovation, so that responses by competitors leave the gains from successful innovation largely intact.

A market is more apt to be vulnerable to coordinated conduct if the firm initiating a price increase will lose relatively few customers after rivals respond to the increase. Similarly, a market is more apt to be vulnerable to coordinated conduct if a firm that first offers a lower price or improved product to customers will retain relatively few customers thus attracted away from its rivals after those rivals respond.

The Agencies regard coordinated interaction as more likely, the more the participants stand to gain from successful coordination. Coordination generally is more profitable, the lower is the market elasticity of demand.

Coordinated conduct can harm customers even if not all firms in the relevant market engage in the coordination, but significant harm normally is likely only if a substantial part of the market is subject to such conduct. The prospect of harm depends on the collective market power, in the relevant market, of firms whose incentives to compete are substantially weakened by coordinated conduct. This collective market power is greater, the lower is the market elasticity of demand. This collective market power is diminished by the presence of other market participants with small market shares and little stake in the outcome resulting from the coordinated conduct, if these firms can rapidly expand their sales in the relevant market.

Buyer characteristics and the nature of the procurement process can affect coordination. For example, sellers may have the incentive to bid aggressively for a large contract even if they expect strong responses by rivals. This is especially the case for sellers with small market shares, if they can realistically win such large contracts. In some cases, a large buyer may be able to strategically undermine coordinated conduct, at least as it pertains to that buyer's needs, by choosing to put up for bid a few large contracts rather than many smaller ones, and by making its procurement decisions opaque to suppliers.

8. Powerful Buyers

Powerful buyers are often able to negotiate favorable terms with their suppliers. Such terms may reflect the lower costs of serving these buyers, but they also can reflect price discrimination in their favor.

The Agencies consider the possibility that powerful buyers may constrain the ability of the merging parties to raise prices. This can occur, for example, if powerful buyers have the ability and incentive to vertically integrate upstream or sponsor entry, or if the conduct or presence of large buyers undermines coordinated effects. However, the Agencies do not presume that the presence of powerful buyers alone forestalls adverse competitive effects flowing from the merger. Even buyers that can negotiate favorable terms may be harmed by an increase in market power. The Agencies examine the choices available to powerful buyers and how those choices likely would change due to the merger. Normally, a merger that eliminates a supplier whose presence contributed significantly to a buyer's negotiating leverage will harm that buyer.

Example 22: Customer C has been able to negotiate lower pre-merger prices than other customers by threatening to shift its large volume of purchases from one merging firm to the other. No other suppliers are as well placed to meet Customer C's needs for volume and reliability. The merger is likely to harm Customer C. In this situation, the Agencies could identify a price discrimination market consisting of Customer C and similarly placed customers. The merger threatens to end previous price discrimination in their favor.

Furthermore, even if some powerful buyers could protect themselves, the Agencies also consider whether market power can be exercised against other buyers.

Example 23: In Example 22, if Customer C instead obtained the lower pre-merger prices based on a credible threat to supply its own needs, or to sponsor new entry, Customer C might not be harmed. However, even in this case, other customers may still be harmed.

9. Entry

The analysis of competitive effects in Sections 6 and 7 focuses on current participants in the relevant market. That analysis may also include some forms of entry. Firms that would rapidly and easily enter the market in response to a SSNIP are market participants and may be assigned market shares. See Sections 5.1 and 5.2. Firms that have, prior to the merger, committed to entering the market also will normally be treated as market participants. See Section 5.1. This section concerns entry or adjustments to pre-existing entry plans that are induced by the merger.

As part of their full assessment of competitive effects, the Agencies consider entry into the relevant market. The prospect of entry into the relevant market will alleviate concerns about adverse competitive effects only if such entry will deter or counteract any competitive effects of concern so the merger will not substantially harm customers.

The Agencies consider the actual history of entry into the relevant market and give substantial weight to this evidence. Lack of successful and effective entry in the face of non-transitory increases in the margins earned on products in the relevant market tends to suggest that successful entry is slow or difficult. Market values of incumbent firms greatly exceeding the replacement costs of their tangible assets may indicate that these firms have valuable intangible assets, which may be difficult or time consuming for an entrant to replicate.

A merger is not likely to enhance market power if entry into the market is so easy that the merged firm and its remaining rivals in the market, either unilaterally or collectively, could not profitably raise price or otherwise reduce competition compared to the level that would prevail in the absence of the merger. Entry is that easy if entry would be timely, likely, and sufficient in its magnitude, character, and scope to deter or counteract the competitive effects of concern.

The Agencies examine the timeliness, likelihood, and sufficiency of the entry efforts an entrant might practically employ. An entry effort is defined by the actions the firm must undertake to produce and sell in the market. Various elements of the entry effort will be considered. These elements can include: planning, design, and management; permitting, licensing, or other approvals; construction, debugging, and operation of production facilities; and promotion (including necessary introductory discounts), marketing, distribution, and satisfaction of customer testing and qualification requirements. Recent examples of entry, whether successful or unsuccessful, generally provide the starting point for identifying the elements of practical entry efforts. They also can be informative regarding the scale necessary for an entrant to be successful, the presence or absence of entry barriers, the factors that influence the timing of entry, the costs and risk associated with entry, and the sales opportunities realistically available to entrants.

If the assets necessary for an effective and profitable entry effort are widely available, the Agencies will not necessarily attempt to identify which firms might enter. Where an identifiable set of firms appears to have necessary assets that others lack, or to have particularly strong incentives to enter, the Agencies focus their entry analysis on those firms. Firms operating in adjacent or complementary markets, or large customers themselves, may be best placed to enter. However, the Agencies will not presume that a powerful firm in an adjacent market or a large customer will enter the relevant market unless there is reliable evidence supporting that conclusion.

In assessing whether entry will be timely, likely, and sufficient, the Agencies recognize that precise and detailed information may be difficult or impossible to obtain. The Agencies consider reasonably available and reliable evidence bearing on whether entry will satisfy the conditions of timeliness, likelihood, and sufficiency.

9.1 Timeliness

In order to deter the competitive effects of concern, entry must be rapid enough to make unprofitable overall the actions causing those effects and thus leading to entry, even though those actions would be profitable until entry takes effect.

Even if the prospect of entry does not deter the competitive effects of concern, post-merger entry may counteract them. This requires that the impact of entrants in the relevant market be rapid enough that customers are not significantly harmed by the merger, despite any anticompetitive harm that occurs prior to the entry.

The Agencies will not presume that an entrant can have a significant impact on prices before that entrant is ready to provide the relevant product to customers unless there is reliable evidence that anticipated future entry would have such an effect on prices.

9.2 Likelihood

Entry is likely if it would be profitable, accounting for the assets, capabilities, and capital needed and the risks involved, including the need for the entrant to incur costs that would not be recovered if the entrant later exits. Profitability depends upon (a) the output level the entrant is likely to obtain, accounting for the obstacles facing new entrants; (b) the price the entrant would likely obtain in the post-merger market, accounting for the impact of that entry itself on prices; and (c) the cost per unit the entrant would likely incur, which may depend upon the scale at which the entrant would operate.

9.3 Sufficiency

Even where timely and likely, entry may not be sufficient to deter or counteract the competitive effects of concern. For example, in a differentiated product industry, entry may be insufficient because the products offered by entrants are not close enough substitutes to the products offered by the merged firm to render a price increase by the merged firm unprofitable. Entry may also be insufficient due to constraints that limit entrants' competitive effectiveness, such as limitations on the capabilities of the firms best placed to enter or reputational barriers to rapid expansion by new entrants. Entry by a single firm that will replicate at least the scale and strength of one of the merging firms is sufficient. Entry by one or more firms operating at a smaller scale may be sufficient if such firms are not at a significant competitive disadvantage.

10. Efficiencies

Competition usually spurs firms to achieve efficiencies internally. Nevertheless, a primary benefit of mergers to the economy is their potential to generate significant efficiencies and thus enhance the merged firm's ability and incentive to compete, which may result in lower prices, improved quality, enhanced service, or new products. For example, merger-generated efficiencies may enhance competition by permitting two ineffective competitors to form a more effective competitor, e.g., by combining complementary assets. In a unilateral effects context, incremental cost reductions may reduce or reverse any increases in the merged firm's incentive to elevate price. Efficiencies also may lead to new or improved products, even if they do not immediately and directly affect price. In a coordinated effects context, incremental cost reductions may make coordination less likely or effective by enhancing the incentive of a maverick to lower price or by creating a new maverick firm. Even when efficiencies generated through a merger enhance a firm's ability to compete, however, a merger may have other effects that may lessen competition and make the merger anticompetitive.

The Agencies credit only those efficiencies likely to be accomplished with the proposed merger and unlikely to be accomplished in the absence of either the proposed merger or another means having comparable anticompetitive effects. These are termed merger-specific efficiencies.<sup>13</sup> Only alternatives that are practical in the business situation faced by the merging firms are considered in making this determination. The Agencies do not insist upon a less restrictive alternative that is merely theoretical.

Efficiencies are difficult to verify and quantify, in part because much of the information relating to efficiencies is uniquely in the possession of the merging firms. Moreover, efficiencies projected reasonably and in good faith by the merging firms may not be realized. Therefore, it is incumbent upon the merging firms to substantiate efficiency claims so that the Agencies can verify by reasonable means the likelihood and magnitude of each asserted efficiency, how and when each would be achieved (and any costs of doing so), how each would enhance the merged firm's ability and incentive to compete, and why each would be merger-specific.

Efficiency claims will not be considered if they are vague, speculative, or otherwise cannot be verified by reasonable means. Projections of efficiencies may be viewed with skepticism, particularly when generated outside of the usual business planning process. By contrast, efficiency claims substantiated by analogous past experience are those most likely to be credited.

Cognizable efficiencies are merger-specific efficiencies that have been verified and do not arise from anticompetitive reductions in output or service. Cognizable efficiencies are assessed net of costs produced by the merger or incurred in achieving those efficiencies.

The Agencies will not challenge a merger if cognizable efficiencies are of a character and magnitude such that the merger is not likely to be anticompetitive in any relevant market.<sup>14</sup> To make the requisite determination, the Agencies consider whether cognizable efficiencies likely would be sufficient to reverse the merger's potential to harm customers in the relevant market, e.g., by preventing price

---

<sup>13</sup> The Agencies will not deem efficiencies to be merger-specific if they could be attained by practical alternatives that mitigate competitive concerns, such as divestiture or licensing. If a merger affects not whether but only when an efficiency would be achieved, only the timing advantage is a merger-specific efficiency.

<sup>14</sup> The Agencies normally assess competition in each relevant market affected by a merger independently and normally will challenge the merger if it is likely to be anticompetitive in any relevant market. In some cases, however, the Agencies in their prosecutorial discretion will consider efficiencies not strictly in the relevant market, but so inextricably linked with it that a partial divestiture or other remedy could not feasibly eliminate the anticompetitive effect in the relevant market without sacrificing the efficiencies in the other market(s). Inextricably linked efficiencies are most likely to make a difference when they are great and the likely anticompetitive effect in the relevant market(s) is small so the merger is likely to benefit customers overall.

increases in that market.<sup>15</sup> In conducting this analysis, the Agencies will not simply compare the magnitude of the cognizable efficiencies with the magnitude of the likely harm to competition absent the efficiencies. The greater the potential adverse competitive effect of a merger, the greater must be the cognizable efficiencies, and the more they must be passed through to customers, for the Agencies to conclude that the merger will not have an anticompetitive effect in the relevant market. When the potential adverse competitive effect of a merger is likely to be particularly substantial, extraordinarily great cognizable efficiencies would be necessary to prevent the merger from being anticompetitive. In adhering to this approach, the Agencies are mindful that the antitrust laws give competition, not internal operational efficiency, primacy in protecting customers.

In the Agencies' experience, efficiencies are most likely to make a difference in merger analysis when the likely adverse competitive effects, absent the efficiencies, are not great. Efficiencies almost never justify a merger to monopoly or near-monopoly. Just as adverse competitive effects can arise along multiple dimensions of conduct, such as pricing and new product development, so too can efficiencies operate along multiple dimensions. Similarly, purported efficiency claims based on lower prices can be undermined if they rest on reductions in product quality or variety that customers value.

The Agencies have found that certain types of efficiencies are more likely to be cognizable and substantial than others. For example, efficiencies resulting from shifting production among facilities formerly owned separately, which enable the merging firms to reduce the incremental cost of production, are more likely to be susceptible to verification and are less likely to result from anticompetitive reductions in output. Other efficiencies, such as those relating to research and development, are potentially substantial but are generally less susceptible to verification and may be the result of anticompetitive output reductions. Yet others, such as those relating to procurement, management, or capital cost, are less likely to be merger-specific or substantial, or may not be cognizable for other reasons.

When evaluating the effects of a merger on innovation, the Agencies consider the ability of the merged firm to conduct research or development more effectively. Such efficiencies may spur innovation but not affect short-term pricing. The Agencies also consider the ability of the merged firm to appropriate a greater fraction of the benefits resulting from its innovations. Licensing and intellectual property conditions may be important to this enquiry, as they affect the ability of a firm to appropriate the benefits of its innovation. Research and development cost savings may be substantial and yet not be cognizable efficiencies because they are difficult to verify or result from anticompetitive reductions in innovative activities.

---

<sup>15</sup> The Agencies normally give the most weight to the results of this analysis over the short term. The Agencies also may consider the effects of cognizable efficiencies with no short-term, direct effect on prices in the relevant market. Delayed benefits from efficiencies (due to delay in the achievement of, or the realization of customer benefits from, the efficiencies) will be given less weight because they are less proximate and more difficult to predict. Efficiencies relating to costs that are fixed in the short term are unlikely to benefit customers in the short term, but can benefit customers in the longer run, e.g., if they make new product introduction less expensive.

11. Failure and Exiting Assets

Notwithstanding the analysis above, a merger is not likely to enhance market power if imminent failure, as defined below, of one of the merging firms would cause the assets of that firm to exit the relevant market. This is an extreme instance of the more general circumstance in which the competitive significance of one of the merging firms is declining: the projected market share and significance of the exiting firm is zero. If the relevant assets would otherwise exit the market, customers are not worse off after the merger than they would have been had the merger been enjoined.

The Agencies do not normally credit claims that the assets of the failing firm would exit the relevant market unless all of the following circumstances are met: (1) the allegedly failing firm would be unable to meet its financial obligations in the near future; (2) it would not be able to reorganize successfully under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Act; and (3) it has made unsuccessful good-faith efforts to elicit reasonable alternative offers that would keep its tangible and intangible assets in the relevant market and pose a less severe danger to competition than does the proposed merger.<sup>16</sup>

Similarly, a merger is unlikely to cause competitive harm if the risks to competition arise from the acquisition of a failing division. The Agencies do not normally credit claims that the assets of a division would exit the relevant market in the near future unless both of the following conditions are met: (1) applying cost allocation rules that reflect true economic costs, the division has a persistently negative cash flow on an operating basis, and such negative cash flow is not economically justified for the firm by benefits such as added sales in complementary markets or enhanced customer goodwill;<sup>17</sup> and (2) the owner of the failing division has made unsuccessful good-faith efforts to elicit reasonable alternative offers that would keep its tangible and intangible assets in the relevant market and pose a less severe danger to competition than does the proposed acquisition.

12. Mergers of Competing Buyers

Mergers of competing buyers can enhance market power on the buying side of the market, just as mergers of competing sellers can enhance market power on the selling side of the market. Buyer market power is sometimes called “monopsony power.”

To evaluate whether a merger is likely to enhance market power on the buying side of the market, the Agencies employ essentially the framework described above for evaluating whether a merger is likely to enhance market power on the selling side of the market. In defining relevant markets, the Agencies

---

<sup>16</sup> Any offer to purchase the assets of the failing firm for a price above the liquidation value of those assets will be regarded as a reasonable alternative offer. Liquidation value is the highest value the assets could command for use outside the relevant market.

<sup>17</sup> Because the parent firm can allocate costs, revenues, and intra-company transactions among itself and its subsidiaries and divisions, the Agencies require evidence on these two points that is not solely based on management plans that could have been prepared for the purpose of demonstrating negative cash flow or the prospect of exit from the relevant market.

focus on the alternatives available to sellers in the face of a decrease in the price paid by a hypothetical monopsonist.

Market power on the buying side of the market is not a significant concern if suppliers have numerous attractive outlets for their goods or services. However, when that is not the case, the Agencies may conclude that the merger of competing buyers is likely to lessen competition in a manner harmful to sellers.

The Agencies distinguish between effects on sellers arising from a lessening of competition and effects arising in other ways. A merger that does not enhance market power on the buying side of the market can nevertheless lead to a reduction in prices paid by the merged firm, for example, by reducing transactions costs or allowing the merged firm to take advantage of volume-based discounts. Reduction in prices paid by the merging firms not arising from the enhancement of market power can be significant in the evaluation of efficiencies from a merger, as discussed in Section 10.

The Agencies do not view a short-run reduction in the quantity purchased as the only, or best, indicator of whether a merger enhances buyer market power. Nor do the Agencies evaluate the competitive effects of mergers between competing buyers strictly, or even primarily, on the basis of effects in the downstream markets in which the merging firms sell.

Example 24: Merging Firms A and B are the only two buyers in the relevant geographic market for an agricultural product. Their merger will enhance buyer power and depress the price paid to farmers for this product, causing a transfer of wealth from farmers to the merged firm and inefficiently reducing supply. These effects can arise even if the merger will not lead to any increase in the price charged by the merged firm for its output.

13. Partial Acquisitions

In most horizontal mergers, two competitors come under common ownership and control, completely and permanently eliminating competition between them. This elimination of competition is a basic element of merger analysis. However, the statutory provisions referenced in Section 1 also apply to one firm's partial acquisition of a competitor. The Agencies therefore also review acquisitions of minority positions involving competing firms, even if such minority positions do not necessarily or completely eliminate competition between the parties to the transaction.

When the Agencies determine that a partial acquisition results in effective control of the target firm, or involves substantially all of the relevant assets of the target firm, they analyze the transaction much as they do a merger. Partial acquisitions that do not result in effective control may nevertheless present significant competitive concerns and may require a somewhat distinct analysis from that applied to full mergers or to acquisitions involving effective control. The details of the post-acquisition relationship between the parties, and how those details are likely to affect competition, can be important. While the Agencies will consider any way in which a partial acquisition may affect competition, they generally focus on three principal effects.

First, a partial acquisition can lessen competition by giving the acquiring firm the ability to influence the competitive conduct of the target firm. A voting interest in the target firm or specific governance rights, such as the right to appoint members to the board of directors, can permit such influence. Such influence can lessen competition because the acquiring firm can use its influence to induce the target firm to compete less aggressively or to coordinate its conduct with that of the acquiring firm.

Second, a partial acquisition can lessen competition by reducing the incentive of the acquiring firm to compete. Acquiring a minority position in a rival might significantly blunt the incentive of the acquiring firm to compete aggressively because it shares in the losses thereby inflicted on that rival. This reduction in the incentive of the acquiring firm to compete arises even if cannot influence the conduct of the target firm. As compared with the unilateral competitive effect of a full merger, this effect is likely attenuated by the fact that the ownership is only partial.

Third, a partial acquisition can lessen competition by giving the acquiring firm access to non-public, competitively sensitive information from the target firm. Even absent any ability to influence the conduct of the target firm, access to competitively sensitive information can lead to adverse unilateral or coordinated effects. For example, it can enhance the ability of the two firms to coordinate their behavior, and make other accommodating responses faster and more targeted. The risk of coordinated effects is greater if the transaction also facilitates the flow of competitively sensitive information from the acquiring firm to the target firm.

Partial acquisitions, like mergers, vary greatly in their potential for anticompetitive effects. Accordingly, the specific facts of each case must be examined to assess the likelihood of harm to competition. While partial acquisitions usually do not enable many of the types of efficiencies associated with mergers, the Agencies consider whether a partial acquisition is likely to create cognizable efficiencies.

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-111

 KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment
Proposed Legislation

United States Code Annotated
Title 15. Commerce and Trade
Chapter 1. Monopolies and Combinations in Restraint of Trade (Refs & Annos)

15 U.S.C.A. § 18

§ 18. Acquisition by one corporation of stock of another

Effective: February 8, 1996

Currentness

No person engaged in commerce or in any activity affecting commerce shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no person subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of another person engaged also in commerce or in any activity affecting commerce, where in any line of commerce or in any activity affecting commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly.

No person shall acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital and no person subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Trade Commission shall acquire the whole or any part of the assets of one or more persons engaged in commerce or in any activity affecting commerce, where in any line of commerce or in any activity affecting commerce in any section of the country, the effect of such acquisition, of such stocks or assets, or of the use of such stock by the voting or granting of proxies or otherwise, may be substantially to lessen competition, or to tend to create a monopoly.

This section shall not apply to persons purchasing such stock solely for investment and not using the same by voting or otherwise to bring about, or in attempting to bring about, the substantial lessening of competition. Nor shall anything contained in this section prevent a corporation engaged in commerce or in any activity affecting commerce from causing the formation of subsidiary corporations for the actual carrying on of their immediate lawful business, or the natural and legitimate branches or extensions thereof, or from owning and holding all or a part of the stock of such subsidiary corporations, when the effect of such formation is not to substantially lessen competition.

Nor shall anything herein contained be construed to prohibit any common carrier subject to the laws to regulate commerce from aiding in the construction of branches or short lines so located as to become feeders to the main line of the company so aiding in such construction or from acquiring or owning all or any part of the stock of such branch lines, nor to prevent any such common carrier from acquiring and owning all or any part of the stock of a branch or short line constructed by an independent company where there is no substantial competition between the company owning the branch line so constructed and the company owning the main line acquiring the property or an interest therein, nor to prevent such common carrier from extending any of its lines through the medium of the acquisition of stock or otherwise of any other common carrier where there is no substantial competition between the company extending its lines and the company whose stock, property, or an interest therein is so acquired.

Nothing contained in this section shall be held to affect or impair any right heretofore legally acquired: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be held or construed to authorize or make lawful anything heretofore prohibited or made illegal by the antitrust laws, nor to exempt any person from the penal provisions thereof or the civil remedies therein provided.

Nothing contained in this section shall apply to transactions duly consummated pursuant to authority given by the Secretary of Transportation, Federal Power Commission, Surface Transportation Board, the Securities and Exchange Commission in the exercise of its jurisdiction under section 79j of this title, the United States Maritime Commission, or the Secretary of Agriculture under any statutory provision vesting such power in such Commission, Board, or Secretary.

CREDIT(S)

(Oct. 15, 1914, c. 323, § 7, 38 Stat. 731; Dec. 29, 1950, c. 1184, 64 Stat. 1125; Pub.L. 96-349, § 6(a), Sept. 12, 1980, 94 Stat. 1157; Pub.L. 98-443, § 9(l), Oct. 4, 1984, 98 Stat. 1708; Pub.L. 104-88, Title III, § 318\(1\), Dec. 29, 1995, 109 Stat. 949; Pub.L. 104-104, Title VI, § 601\(b\)\(3\), Feb. 8, 1996, 110 Stat. 143.)

15 U.S.C.A. § 18, 15 USCA § 18
Current through P.L. 116-149.

---

End of Document

© 2020 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-112

KeyCite Blue Flag – Appeal Notification

Appeal Filed by STEVES AND SONS, INC. v. JELD-WEN, INC., 4th Cir., April 16, 2019

345 F.Supp.3d 614

United States District Court, E.D. Virginia.

STEVES AND SONS, INC., Plaintiff,

v.

JELD-WEN, INC., Defendants.

Civil Action No. 3:16cv545

Signed 10/05/2018

Synopsis

Background: Door manufacturer filed suit against supplier of interior molded doorskins, claiming that allegedly illegal merger between supplier and competitor substantially lessened competition in doorskin market in violation of Clayton Act and that supplier breached parties' supply agreement. After jury returned verdict in favor of manufacturer, awarding treble antitrust damages in amount of $175,897,362 and breach of contract damages in amount of $12,151,873, reduced by $2,188,271 upon granting supplier judgment as matter of law, manufacturer moved for equitable relief, under Clayton Act, seeking order requiring supplier to divest acquired entity in order to restore competition in doorskin market and seeking behavioral or conduct remedies, including restrictions and obligations on supplier such that divested entity could successfully operate as viable stand-alone independent business or be successfully combined with assets of acquiring party so as to become effective competitor.

Holdings: The District Court, Robert E. Payne, Senior District Judge, held that:

[1] manufacturer had standing to seek divestiture as equitable remedy;

[2] in matter of first impression, divestiture was appropriate remedy for private antitrust litigant;

[3] special master would be appointed to assure successful divestiture process;

[4] ancillary conduct remedies were partially appropriate; and [5] manufacturer's antitrust action was not barred by laches.

Motion granted in part and denied in part.

Procedural Posture(s): Other; Motion for Judgment as a Matter of Law (JMOL)/Directed Verdict.

West Headnotes (66)

[1] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Forfeiture and seizure of property; divestiture

Under the Clayton Act, the injunctive relief private parties are allowed to obtain against threatened loss or damage by violation of the antitrust laws may include an order requiring the acquiring company to divest the assets of the acquired firm. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[2] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Damages and Other Relief

Under the Clayton Act, whoever brings suit, the federal government or private party, the relief in an antitrust case must be effective to redress the violations and to restore competition. Clayton Act §§ 15, 16, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 25, 26.

[3] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Types and Forms

Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Damages and Other Relief

Mergers come in a wide variety of shapes and sizes, so the antitrust remedy awarded for violation of the Clayton Act should be carefully tailored to the competitive harm in the case; thus, district courts are clothed with large discretion to fit the decree to the special needs of the individual case. Clayton Act §§ 15, 16, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 25, 26.

[4] Antitrust and Trade

Regulation 🔑 Forfeiture and seizure of property; divestiture

The most drastic, but most effective, of antitrust remedies, under the Clayton Act, is divestiture, but complete divestiture is the remedy best suited to redress the ills of a competitive merger. Clayton Act §§ 15, 16, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 25, 26.

[5] Antitrust and Trade

Regulation 🔑 Forfeiture and seizure of property; divestiture

The relief which can be afforded for an antitrust violation, under the Clayton Act provision allowing the federal government to institute proceedings to prevent and restrain such violations, is not limited to the restoration of the status quo ante in the pre-acquisition market; consequently, divestiture may extend to assets that were unrelated to the antitrust violation if the divested entity would need those assets to become competitive, or if the integration of legally- and illegally-acquired assets makes their separation impossible. Clayton Act § 15, 15 U.S.C.A. § 25.

[6] Antitrust and Trade

Regulation 🔑 Forfeiture and seizure of property; divestiture

Structural remedies like divestiture ordered as an equitable remedy for an antitrust violation, under the Clayton Act provision allowing the federal government to institute proceedings to prevent and restrain such violations, can be coupled with, or replaced entirely by, conduct remedies that can preserve a merger's efficiencies and limit anticompetitive conduct at the same time. Clayton Act § 15, 15 U.S.C.A. § 25.

[7] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Damages and Other Relief

Conduct relief can be a particularly effective option, under the Clayton Act provision allowing the federal government to institute proceedings to prevent and restrain antitrust violations, when a structural remedy would eliminate the merger's potential efficiencies, but, absent a remedy, the merger would harm competition; however, conduct remedies risk excessive government entanglement in the market, so they should be tailored as precisely as possible to the competitive harms associated with the merger. Clayton Act § 15, 15 U.S.C.A. § 25.

[8] Antitrust and Trade

Regulation 🔑 Forfeiture and seizure of property; divestiture

Under the Clayton Act provision allowing private parties to obtain injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by antitrust violations, a district court's ability to order divestiture does not mean that such power should be exercised in every situation in which the federal government would be entitled to such relief under the Clayton Act's provision allowing the government to institute proceedings to prevent and restrain antitrust violations. Clayton Act §§ 15, 16, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 25, 26.

[9] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Right of Action; Persons Entitled to Sue; Standing; Parties

Antitrust and Trade

Regulation 🔑 Forfeiture and seizure of property; divestiture

The Clayton Act provision, allowing private parties to obtain injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by antitrust violations, requires a plaintiff to establish standing to seek injunctive relief, and a defendant can rely on equitable defenses and other equitable considerations to avoid divestiture. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[10] Antitrust and Trade

Regulation 🔑 Restraints and misconduct in general

In actions by the federal government, under the Clayton Act, the proof of the antitrust violation may itself establish sufficient public injury to warrant equitable relief of divestiture. Clayton Act § 15, 15 U.S.C.A. § 25.

merger at issue and where its collateral consequences can be mitigated. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[11] Antitrust and Trade

Regulation 🔑 Forfeiture and seizure of property; divestiture

Under the Clayton Act provision allowing the government to institute proceedings to prevent and restrain antitrust violations, hardships of imposing divestiture as an equitable remedy do not need to be balanced nor the public interest assessed in the same way as in private cases. Clayton Act §§ 15, 16, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 25, 26.

[15] Antitrust and Trade

Regulation 🔑 Injunction

Under the Clayton Act provision, allowing private parties to obtain injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by antitrust violations, the appropriate remedy should be selected upon determining (1) what competitive harm the violation has caused or likely will cause and (2) how the proposed relief will remedy that particular competitive harm. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[12] Antitrust and Trade

Regulation 🔑 Forfeiture and seizure of property; divestiture

Under the Clayton Act, in a private action, divestiture is not as easy a remedy for an antitrust violation as it is in a government action. Clayton Act §§ 15, 16, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 25, 26.

[16] Antitrust and Trade

Regulation 🔑 Injunction

Under the Clayton Act provision, allowing private parties to obtain injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by antitrust violations, the remedy should be calculated to minimize adverse economic effects upon the industry, the public, and the stockholders affected by the unlawful merger. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[13] Antitrust and Trade

Regulation 🔑 Forfeiture and seizure of property; divestiture

Under the Clayton Act provision, allowing private parties to obtain injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by antitrust violations, district courts must rely on the facts of each case to decide whether divestiture is an appropriate remedy, and courts should resort to divestiture in limited circumstances. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[17] Antitrust and Trade

Regulation 🔑 Injunction

Under the Clayton Act provision, allowing private parties to obtain injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by antitrust violations, caution, progressive enforcement, and remedy formulation on a case-by-case basis are essential ingredients to effectively combat the effects of an antitrust violation and to minimize the risk of economic dislocation. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[14] Antitrust and Trade

Regulation 🔑 Forfeiture and seizure of property; divestiture

Under the Clayton Act provision, allowing private parties to obtain injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by antitrust violations, divestiture should be ordered when it is the most effective way of restoring the substantially lessened competition brought about by the

[18] Antitrust and Trade

Regulation 🔑 Injunction

Under the Clayton Act provision, allowing private parties to obtain injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by antitrust violations, well-established principles of equity establish the framework governing requests for injunctive relief, including divestiture. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[19] Antitrust and Trade

Regulation 🔑 Injunction

Under the Clayton Act provision, allowing private parties to obtain injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by antitrust violations, plaintiff must satisfy a four-factor test before a district court may grant such relief by demonstrating: (1) that it has suffered an irreparable injury, (2) that remedies available at law, such as monetary damages, are inadequate to compensate for that injury, (3) that, considering the balance of hardships between the plaintiff and defendant, a remedy in equity is warranted, and (4) that the public interest would not be disserved by a permanent injunction. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[20] Antitrust and Trade

Regulation 🔑 Injunction

Under the Clayton Act provision, allowing private parties to obtain injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by antitrust violations, even where the factors governing requests for injunctive relief are met, district courts still retain equitable discretion to grant or deny permanent injunctive relief. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[21] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Injury to Business or Property

Antitrust and Trade

Regulation 🔑 Injunction

In order to seek injunctive relief under the Clayton Act, a private plaintiff must allege threatened loss or damage of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants' acts unlawful; in other words, the plaintiff must be able to demonstrate a significant threat of injury from an impending violation of the antitrust laws or from a contemporary violation likely to continue or recur. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[22] Antitrust and Trade

Regulation 🔑 Particular cases

Antitrust and Trade

Regulation 🔑 Forfeiture and seizure of property; divestiture

Door manufacturer suffered significant threat of injury from impending antitrust violation by supplier of interior molded doorskins and from supplier's contemporary violation that was likely to continue or recur, and thus, manufacturer had standing to seek divestiture as equitable remedy in private lawsuit, under Clayton Act, in order to remedy threatened loss and continuing damages from supplier's merger with competitor that substantially lessened competition in doorskin market, where manufacturer would be forced out of business upon impending termination of parties' supply agreement, which was enabled by supplier's increased market power after merger, and supplier continued to engage in anticompetitive conduct following merger. Clayton Act §§ 7, 16, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 18, 26.

[23] Jury 🔑 Re-examination or other review of questions of fact tried by jury

A jury verdict in mixed law-equity cases is binding on the district court as to all matters in law and as to all matters in equity where the facts found are common to the law and equity issues.

[24] Antitrust and Trade

Regulation 🔑 Injunction

Generally, irreparable injury required for a private plaintiff to obtain equitable relief, under the Clayton Act, in the form of an injunction mandating divestiture and conduct remedies for antitrust violations, is suffered when monetary damages are difficult to ascertain or are inadequate. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[25] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Injunction

On a motion for equitable relief, under the Clayton Act, seeking an injunction mandating divestiture and conduct remedies for antitrust violations, whether a private plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law inevitably overlaps with whether it has suffered irreparable harm. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[26] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Injunction

On a motion for equitable relief, under the Clayton Act, seeking an injunction mandating divestiture and conduct remedies for antitrust violations, intentionally engaging in conduct that contributes to an irreparable injury may undermine a private plaintiff's irreparable harm showing. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[27] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Injunction

To obtain equitable relief for antitrust violations, under the Clayton Act, a private plaintiff must show that its harm cannot be compensated by money damages. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[28] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Injunction

On a motion for equitable relief, under the Clayton Act, seeking an injunction mandating divestiture and conduct remedies for antitrust violations, a private plaintiff's presentation of a future damages number may influence the irreparable injury and legal remedy inadequacy analysis. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[29] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Injunction

On a motion for equitable relief, under the Clayton Act, seeking an injunction mandating divestiture and conduct remedies for antitrust violations, a private plaintiff is not prohibited from seeking alternate injunctive relief merely because it tries to quantify its future harm in front of the jury. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[30] Election of Remedies 🔑 Necessity and time for election

Generally, a party is not required to elect between inconsistent remedies or rights or theories of recovery during the trial or at the pleading stage or prior to the jury's verdict; election is generally made after the verdict is entered prior to the entry of judgment, and in any event, a decision as to the time of election rests within the sound discretion of the trial court.

[31] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Forfeiture and seizure of property; divestiture

Door manufacturer would suffer irreparable injury from antitrust violation by supplier of interior molded doorskins for which adequate remedy at law was lacking, in absence of permanent injunctive relief mandating divestiture of competitor by supplier after their illegal merger substantially lessened competition in doorskin market in violation of Clayton Act; without injunctive relief restoring competition, manufacturer would likely, if not certainly, be forced out its family-owned business that had been operating for over 150 years, which could not be adequately remedied by award of future lost profits damages. Clayton Act §§ 7, 16, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 18, 26.

[32] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Injunction

Under the Clayton Act provision, allowing private parties to obtain injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by antitrust violations, in balancing hardships district courts must balance the competing claims of injury and must consider the effect on each party of the granting or withholding of the requested relief. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[33] Antitrust and Trade Regulation  Injunction

Under the Clayton Act provision allowing the federal government to institute proceedings to prevent and restrain antitrust violations, there is no balance of hardships. Clayton Act § 15, 15 U.S.C.A. § 25.

[34] Antitrust and Trade Regulation  Injunction

Under the Clayton Act provision, allowing private parties to obtain injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by antitrust violations, district courts may not conclude that any harm that would be suffered by a defendant was self-inflicted and thus entitled to lesser weight in the balancing-of-the-harms portion of the injunction calculus. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[35] Antitrust and Trade Regulation  Injunction

Under the Clayton Act provision, allowing private parties to obtain injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by antitrust violations, in balancing hardships of the parties loss of profits obtained through anticompetitive conduct is not a valid hardship because it is a product of doing what the antitrust laws require, that is, competing with other firms. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[36] Antitrust and Trade Regulation  Forfeiture and seizure of property; divestiture

Balance of hardships tipped decidedly in favor of permanent injunctive relief mandating divestiture by supplier of interior molded doorskins after its illegal merger with competitor substantially lessened competition in doorskin market in violation of Clayton

Act antitrust provisions; without injunctive relief restoring competition, manufacturer would suffer irreparable harm of being forced out its family-owned business that was in operation for over 150 years, but all of supplier's alleged hardships could be ameliorated by allowing time for orderly divestiture so that supplier could be assured of reliable source of doorskin to satisfy external and internal requirements for at least two years, by assuring that divestiture occurred under circumstances producing reasonable purchase price. Clayton Act §§ 7, 16, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 18, 26.

[37] Antitrust and Trade Regulation  Injunction

Under the Clayton Act provision, allowing private parties to obtain injunctive relief, including divestiture, against threatened loss or damage by antitrust violations, the obvious hardship of splitting up entities that have combined assets and operations after a merger weighs heavily in the equitable analysis when balancing the hardships of the parties. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[38] Antitrust and Trade Regulation  Injunction

Under the Clayton Act provision, allowing private parties to obtain injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by antitrust violations, the public interest inquiry primarily addresses impact on non-parties rather than parties. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[39] Antitrust and Trade Regulation  Injunction

Under the Clayton Act provision, allowing private parties to obtain injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by antitrust violations, district courts are reluctant to cause any concrete harms to innocent third parties; thus, if those potential effects exist, the public interest asserted in support of injunctive relief must rely on more than broad, abstract rule of law concerns. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[40] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Injunction

Under the Clayton Act provision, allowing private parties to obtain injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by antitrust violations, where a valid law speaks to the proper level of deference to a particular public interest, it controls in analyzing proposed injunctive relief. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[41] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Forfeiture and seizure of property; divestiture

Under the Clayton Act provision, allowing private parties to obtain injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by antitrust violations, divestiture is not always the ideal equitable relief for the public interest; in some cases, the divested entity might not actually restore competition, depending on the circumstances in which the entity would operate, and in other cases, divestiture might restore competition, but other injunctive relief might also do so with fewer impacts on the public interest. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[42] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Injunction

Under the Clayton Act provision, allowing private parties to obtain injunctive relief against threatened loss or damage by antitrust violations, district court may and should assess the propriety of equitable relief in each particular case, and the court may decline to restructure a firm where there are serious doubts as to feasibility or a likelihood that other remedies are likely to be sufficient to restore effective competition. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[43] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Forfeiture and seizure of property; divestiture

Public interest in restoring competition supported grant of permanent injunctive relief mandating divestiture by supplier of interior molded doorskins after its illegal merger with competitor substantially lessened competition in doorskin market in violation of Clayton Act antitrust provisions, since divested competitor would be viable standalone entity capable of providing significant competition in doorskin market, earning substantial profits, and restoring competition that merger lessened, and no alternative to divestiture would restore competition that merger substantially lessened. Clayton Act §§ 7, 16, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 18, 26.

[44] Federal Civil Procedure 🔑 Damages and relief obtainable

Special master would be appointed to assure that supplier of interior molded doorskins would receive fair price for divested entity after its illegal merger with competitor substantially lessened competition in doorskin market in violation of Clayton Act antitrust provisions and to assure that divestiture produced competitive entity that was likely to restore competition, where divestiture compliance involved extraordinarily complex issues that could not be effectively and timely addressed by district court or any judge in district, given state of court's docket and limited knowledge about asset sales in building products industry. Clayton Act §§ 7, 16, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 18, 26; Fed. R. Civ. P. 53(a)(1)(C).

[45] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Forfeiture and seizure of property; divestiture

Conduct remedies requested by door manufacturer would be partially granted, as equitable relief ancillary to divestiture for antitrust violations by interior molded doorskins supplier, whose illegal merger with competitor violated Clayton Act, including divestment not only of facility but also its equipment, transfer or licensing of all intangible assets at facility, affording new owner of facility reasonable opportunity to retain current employees, prohibiting supplier from rehiring those employees for two years, requiring facility to offer manufacturer supply contract but without fixed duration or specified prices, allowing supplier's customers to terminate their supply agreements with supplier without penalty, and allowing supplier to buy from facility's new owner with limitations. Clayton Act §§ 7, 16, 15 U.S.C.A. §§ 18, 26.

[46] Antitrust and Trade Regulation — Forfeiture and seizure of property; divestiture

Laches is an available equitable defense to divestiture requested by a private litigant for antitrust violations, under the Clayton Act; the defense also can bar proposed ancillary remedies. Clayton Act § 16, 15 U.S.C.A. § 26.

[47] Equity — Grounds and Essentials of Bar
Equity — Lapse of Time

Under the doctrine of laches, a court of equity, which is never active in relief against conscience or public convenience, has always refused its aid to stale demands, where the party has “slept” upon his rights and acquiesced for a great length of time; nothing can call forth the court into activity but conscience, good faith, and reasonable diligence.

[48] Equity — Nature and elements in general

“Laches” is defined as such neglect or omission to assert a right as, taken in conjunction with lapse of time, more or less great, and other circumstances causes prejudice to an adverse party.

[49] Equity — Grounds and Essentials of Bar
Equity — Prejudice from Delay in General

Under the doctrine of laches, what might be inexcusable delay in one case would not be inconsistent with diligence in another, and unless the nonaction of the complainant operated to damage the defendant, or to induce it to change its position, there is no necessary estoppel arising from the mere lapse of time.

[50] Equity — Grounds and Essentials of Bar

Under the doctrine of laches, what constitutes reasonable diligence depends upon the particular facts of the case, including the relationship between the parties.

[51] Equity — Application of doctrine in general

Laches imposes on the defendant the ultimate burden of proving (1) lack of diligence by the party against whom the defense is asserted and (2) prejudice to the party asserting the defense.

[52] Equity — Prejudice from Delay in General

The laches defense applies to preclude relief for a plaintiff who has unreasonably “slept” on his rights, barring claims where a defendant is prejudiced by a plaintiff's unreasonable delay in bringing suit after the plaintiff knew of the defendant's violation.

[53] Equity — Nature and elements in general

The laches analysis is highly fact-dependent.

[54] Equity — Following Statute of Limitations

In the application of the doctrine of laches, courts of equity are not bound by, but they usually act or refuse to act in analogy to, the statute of limitations relating to actions at law of like character.

[55] Equity — Following Statute of Limitations
Equity — Delay short of statutory period

Under ordinary circumstances, a suit in equity will not be stayed for laches, before, and will be stayed after the time fixed by the analogous statute of limitations at law; but if unusual conditions or extraordinary circumstances make it inequitable to allow the prosecution of a suit after a briefer period than that fixed by the statute, the court will not be bound by the statute, but will determine the extraordinary case in accordance with the equities which condition it.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[56] Equity 🔑 What constitutes unreasonable delay in general

Under the doctrine of laches, an inexcusable or unreasonable delay may occur only after the plaintiff discovers or with reasonable diligence could have discovered the facts giving rise to his cause of action.

[57] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Mergers and Acquisitions

In analyzing a laches defense, a Clayton Act antitrust violation from an illegal merger that restrains commerce or creates a monopoly may occur at or any time after the acquisition, depending upon the circumstances of the particular case. Clayton Act § 7, 15 U.S.C.A. § 18.

[58] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Forfeiture and seizure of property; divestiture

Door manufacturer did not unreasonably delay in bringing antitrust action against interior molded doorskins supplier, claiming that supplier's illegal merger substantially lessened competition in violation of Clayton Act, and thus, laches did not bar equitable relief of divestment; although action was filed slightly over four years after merger was announced, manufacturer did not know and could not reasonably have known of anticompetitive effects from merger until two years later when supplier exercised market power by threatened price increases and contract termination, after which manufacturer took all reasonable steps to try secure supply essential for survival including alternative dispute resolution process before filing novel suit against vastly better-financed opponent supplier. Clayton Act § 7, 15 U.S.C.A. § 18.

[59] Federal Civil Procedure 🔑 Sufficiency

Ordinarily, it is preferable for a court to articulate a single basis for decision, and thereby refrain from making alternative holdings.

[60] Equity 🔑 Prejudice from Delay in General

Even unreasonable delay does not animate the bar of laches if that delay does not cause harm to the defendant.

[61] Equity 🔑 Prejudice from Delay in General

Under the doctrine of laches, prejudice is shown by a disadvantage on the part of the defendant in asserting or establishing a claimed right or some other harm caused by detrimental reliance on the plaintiff's conduct, including economic prejudice.

[62] Equity 🔑 Prejudice from Delay in General

A defendant is always aided by the inference of prejudice warranted by the plaintiff's delay; the greater the delay, the less the prejudice required to show laches, and vice versa.

[63] Equity 🔑 Application of doctrine in general

In every case, the defendant is ultimately required to prove prejudice required for a laches defense, given the defendant's burden to plead and prove laches under the notice pleading rule. Fed. R. Civ. P. 8(c).

[64] Antitrust and Trade Regulation 🔑 Forfeiture and seizure of property; divestiture

Supplier of interior molded doorskins was not prejudiced by door manufacturer's delay in bringing antitrust action, claiming that supplier's illegal merger with competitor substantially lessened competition in violation of Clayton Act, and thus, equitable relief of divestment was not barred by laches, even though supplier made significant capital investments in acquired facility, since supplier did not rely on absence of asserted antitrust claim by manufacturer in making capital investments after merger, and instead made substantial investments even after being told that manufacturer had antitrust concerns and after manufacturer presented copy of antitrust complaint, and supplier had more than recovered capital investments made from any detrimental reliance on delay in filing suit. Clayton Act § 7, 15 U.S.C.A. § 18.

[65] Trademarks 🔑 Alphabetical listing
MiraTEC

[66] Trademarks 🔑 Alphabetical listing
Extira

Attorneys and Law Firms

*623 Marvin Grady Pipkin, Pro Hac Vice, Kortney Kloppe-Orton, Pro Hac Vice, Pipkin & Kloppe-Orton LLP, San Antonio, TX, Ashley Cummings, Pro Hac Vice, Hunton & Williams LLP, Atlanta, GA, Emily Claire Curran-Huberty, Pro Hac Vice, Kyle Mach, Pro Hac Vice, Munger Tolles & Olson LLP, San Francisco, CA, Glenn Pomerantz, Pro Hac Vice, Gregory Michael Sergi, Pro Hac Vice, Kuruvilla J. Olasa, Pro Hac Vice, Ted Dane, Munger Tolles & Olson LLP, Los Angeles, CA, Lewis Franklin Powell, III, Alexandra Leigh Klein, Douglas McCarley Garrou, John Samuel Martin, Maya Miriam Eckstein, William Howell Wright, Jr., Hunton Andrews Kurth LLP, Robert Dennis Fairbanks, Jr., Hunton & Williams LLP, Richmond, VA, for Plaintiff.

Craig Thomas Merritt, Michael W. Smith, Harrison Mann Gates, James Edward Moore, Rowland Braxton Hill, IV, Christian & Barton LLP, Richmond, VA, Elif Kimyacioglu,

Pro Hac Vice, Robin L. Kuntz, Pro Hac Vice, Alfred Carroll Pfeiffer, Jr., Pro Hac Vice, Sarah Meyers Ray, Pro Hac Vice, Latham & Watkins LLP, San Francisco, CA, Allyson McKenzie Maltas, Pro Hac Vice, Anna Moschet Rathbun, Pro Hac Vice, David Lee Johnson, James Scott Ballenger, Pro Hac Vice, Margaret M. Zwisler, Pro Hac Vice, Maximilian Antony Grant, Pro Hac Vice, Latham & Watkins LLP, Washington, DC, Lawrence Edward Buterman, Pro Hac Vice, Latham & Watkins LLP, New York, NY, for Defendants.

PUBLIC SEAL

MEMORANDUM OPINION

Robert E. Payne, Senior United States District Judge

*624 This matter is before the Court on PLAINTIFF STEVES AND SONS, INC.'S MOTION FOR EQUITABLE RELIEF (ECF No. 1191), which the parties addressed through briefs before and after the evidentiary hearing on equitable remedies (“the Remedies Hearing”). For the reasons set forth below, PLAINTIFF STEVES AND SONS, INC.'S MOTION FOR EQUITABLE RELIEF (ECF No. 1191) will be granted in part and denied in part.

GENERAL BACKGROUND

On June 29, 2016, Steves and Sons, Inc. (“Steves”) filed this action against JELD-WEN, Inc. (“JELD-WEN”) by filing a COMPLAINT FOR INJUNCTIVE AND DECLARATORY RELIEF, DAMAGES AND SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE (ECF No. 1). The Complaint contained six counts, including COUNT ONE which alleged a violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act, § 15 U.S.C. § 18, and sought damages under Section 4 of the Clayton Act, and injunctive relief under Section 16 of the Clayton Act, all by virtue of an allegedly illegal merger that occurred in 2012 but that subsequently substantially lessened competition in the so-called molded interior doorskin market. COUNT TWO alleged various breaches of contract. Steves voluntarily dismissed COUNT THREE (Breach of Warranty), COUNT FIVE (Specific Performance), and COUNT SIX (Trespass to Chattels). In COUNT FOUR, Steves sought declaratory relief and that claim remains for decision by the Court.

COUNTS ONE and TWO were tried to a jury and the jury returned a verdict in favor of Steves on both the antitrust claim and the breach of contract claims. Steves' claim for equitable relief is based on the jury's finding of liability on the antitrust violations in COUNT ONE and arises by virtue of Section 16 of the Clayton Act.

By agreement of the parties, the record in the antitrust and breach of contract trial is part of the record upon which the decision respecting Steves' motion for equitable remedies will be decided. In addition, the Court conducted a three day evidentiary hearing during which the parties presented additional evidence on the issues of equitable relief.

Equitable relief under Section 16 of the Clayton Act must be tethered to the alleged violation of Section 7 of the Clayton Act found by the jury. It is therefore appropriate briefly to summarize the evidence upon which the jury found that JELD-WEN had violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act.

The product at issue in this litigation is called an interior molded doorskin. It is created by pouring a moist, softened fibrous material (treated with resin and wax) into a mold and then subjecting it to heat and pressure. The doorskin is a component part of an interior molded door which is made with a four-sided wooden frame and certain filling material to which the molded doorskin is glued. The doorskin provides the decorative covering for the front and the back of the door. The end product resembles a solid wood door but is much lighter and can be made and shipped at a considerably lower cost than a solid wooden door.

Steves and JELD-WEN both sell interior molded doors. JELD-WEN also makes *625 doorskins, some of which it uses to make its own doors, and some of which it sells to independent door manufacturers (the "Independents") of which Steves is one. Steves has never made its own doorskins and has to purchase doorskins from doorskins manufacturers.

From 2001 to 2012, there were three manufacturers from which the Independents, including Steves, could purchase doorskins: Masonite Corporation, JELD-WEN, and Craftmaster International ("CMI"). All three were vertically integrated manufacturers of doorskins and interior molded doors. In 2011, Steves was negotiating for possible long-term supply contracts with all three manufacturers. In May 2012, JELD-WEN and Steves entered into a long-term supply agreement (the "Supply Agreement") that was to last for seven years and that contained an evergreen provision by which the contract was automatically renewed annually if notice of termination was not given in accord with the provisions of the Supply Agreement. In June 2012, JELD-WEN announced that it intended to acquire CMI and the acquisition was completed in October 2012.

The jury found that, as a consequence of the merger and JELD-WEN's conduct in 2014 and thereafter, competition was substantially lessened in the doorskin market and that, as a result, Steves sustained injuries of the type that the antitrust laws were designed to prevent. Thereupon, the jury awarded Steves $58,632,454.00 in antitrust damages which, when trebled as required by statute, amounts to antitrust damages in the amount of $175,897,362.00. The jury also found that JELD-WEN had breached Sections 1, 6, and 8 of the Long Term Supply agreement and awarded damages in the amount of $12,151,873.00 on account of those breaches. That award will be reduced by $2,188,271.00 because the Court granted JELD-WEN, INC'S MOTION FOR JUDGMENT AS A MATTER OF LAW AGAINST STEVES & SONS, INC. (ECF No. 1773).

As a primary equitable remedy, Steves asks the Court to order JELD-WEN to divest Towanda (formerly part of CMI) to restore competition in the doorskin market. Steves also asks the Court to impose certain so-called "behavioral" or "conduct" remedies, including restrictions and obligations on JELD-WEN, to the end that the divested entity will be able to successfully operate as a stand-alone independent business or to be successfully combined with the assets of the acquiring party so as to become an effective competitor. To those ends, Steves contends that the equitable remedy of divestiture must be accompanied by the following conduct remedies:

- (1) transfer of all tangible assets and likes necessary to develop, manufacture, and sell doorskins at Towanda;
- (2) a transfer of licensing of all intangible assets used in the development, manufacturing, and sale of molded doorskins at the Towanda facility to include:
  - Transfers or licenses to the purchasing entity of patents used to make doorskins, schematics or designs used to manufacture doorsins, customer lists, vendor lists, and know-how in trade secrets to operate the facility
- (3) an Order assuring that the acquiring entity can retain the services of the employees currently operating the Towanda facility;
- (4) an Order prohibiting JELD-WEN from hiring their employees for at least two-year transitional period;

*626 (5) a provision requiring the divested entity to offer an eight-year long-term supply agreement to Steves at reasonable prices and terms (based on the LTSA);

$8,630,567

(6) a provision allowing independent door manufacturers like Lynden, Haley, and Excel to terminate their supply agreements with JELD-WEN without penalty; and

(2) JELD-WEN's overcharging Steves for Madison and Monroe doorskins

$1,303,035

(7) a provision allowing JELD-WEN to be allowed to buy doorskins from the divested entity for a period of two years, the so-called transition period.

(3) JELD-WEN's shipping defective doorskins to Steves and failing to reimburse Steves for those doorskins

$441,458

At the trial on the merits, Steves proved, by a preponderance of the evidence that, before JELD-WEN acquired CMI in 2012, there was a competitive doorskin market with three vertically integrated suppliers. Indeed, the evidence showed, and the Court finds, that the competition among those three suppliers was vigorous and quite effective. The merger reduced the number of suppliers to two. Steves also proved that the merger substantially lessened competition in the doorskin market. The issue now to be decided is how competition can be restored, and whether divestiture of Towanda (without or along with the requested conduct remedies) is the correct, and, as Steves urges, indeed the only way to do that.

(4) JELD-WEN's refusing to reimburse Steves for the cost of doors that incorporated defective doorskins

$1,776,813

(b) As to COUNT ONE, we, the jury, find by a preponderance of the evidence, that the plaintiff is entitled to damages in the amount of $46,480,581 for future lost profits. If none, write "0."

Those findings are binding on the Court.

I. FINDINGS OF FACT

In making the decision about equitable relief, it is necessary to respect and apply the jury's findings which are binding factual findings and then for the Court to make factual findings based on the trial record and the record at the Remedies Hearing.

B. Factual Findings by the Court

The Court finds the following facts that pertain to the issues of equitable remedies as the parties have emphasized them in the briefing. Additional fact findings are set out along with topics to which they *627 relate in the Conclusions of Law. All findings of fact are proved by a preponderance of the evidence.

A. Jury Findings

The jury found that "JELD-WEN's acquisition of CMI violated Section 7 of the Clayton Act." (ECF No. 1022, ¶ 1). The jury also found that "JELD-WEN's violation of the Clayton Act caused an injury to Steves that was of the type that the antitrust laws were intended to prevent." (ECF No. 1022, ¶ 2). As to antitrust damages, the jury found:

1. Interior Molded Doorskin Market in 2001

As explained above, Steves and JELD-WEN were in 2012, and are now, participants in the interior molded doorskin market in the United States. Steves is an independent door manufacturer that has never produced its own doorskins. As a result, it must purchase doorskins from doorskin manufacturers. JELD-WEN, however, is a vertically integrated door manufacturer, meaning that it both produces doorskins and uses them internally to manufacture and sell finished doors.

3. (a) As to COUNT ONE, we, the jury, find by a preponderance of the evidence, that the plaintiff is entitled to damages for antitrust injuries already sustained as a result of the following conduct (if none, write "0"):

Before 2001, JELD-WEN and Masonite were the only doorskin manufacturers in the United States. In the 1970s, Masonite had built a manufacturing facility in Towanda,

(1) JELD-WEN's overcharging Steves for doorskins (other than Madison or Monroe)

Pennsylvania (“Towanda”), the facility that is at the center of Steves' request for equitable relief.

In 2000, Masonite was owned by a parent company, International Paper Company. Masonite primarily sold doorskins made at Towanda to Premdor, Inc., but it also sold to eleven other independent door manufacturers. Towanda, as a part of Masonite, did not have “standalone administrative departments” with research and development, accounting, or sales and marketing capabilities; those services were instead provided from separate locations by either Masonite or International Paper.

In 2000, Premdor agreed to buy all of Masonite, including Towanda, from International Paper. However, after Premdor's competitors expressed concerns to the Department of Justice (“DOJ”) about the effect of the acquisition on the supply of doorskins, International Paper and Premdor reached a settlement with the DOJ. Pursuant to that settlement agreement, Towanda would be divested and set up as a separate entity to be known as Craftmaster International, Inc. (“CMI”).

CMI was to serve as a doorskin supplier to Masonite and JELD-WEN and other customers among the Independents. CMI was then incorporated on September 1, 2001, after Premdor's purchase closed. In March 2002, following an auction sale, CMI was purchased by its new owners, who also owned two of the Independents, Haley and Woodgrain.

When CMI was incorporated, International Paper and Masonite also entered into certain agreements with CMI to enable it to function as an independent entity. First, International Paper and Masonite would provide administrative and technical support services to CMI until it could set up its own services—a process that eventually took longer than a year. Second, CMI and Masonite would be given three years to manufacture the dies needed to produce certain types of doorskins, so that both entities could offer the same complement of doorskins to their customers. Even though Towanda and Masonite's doorskin manufacturing plant in Laurel, Mississippi (“Laurel”) were “very similar,” certain products were made only at Towanda, and some were made only at Laurel. Similarly, CMI would sell doorskins to Masonite, and vice versa under set terms for three years to help assure that CMI would prosper going forwards. Finally, CMI received a royalty-free license to use such of Masonite's intellectual property as was necessary to manufacture doorskins at Towanda.

2. CMI's Performance as Independent Doorskin Supplier Before the Merger: 2002-2012

According to Bob Merrill (“Merrill”), the former CEO of CMI, and a current JELD-WEN executive, CMI did not become a *628 “completely standalone entity” until a little more than two and a half years after it was divested from Masonite. CMI's initial financial performance was strong because it could control costs and reduce overhead through the separation agreements, and the housing bubble increased demand for new homes and for doors, and in turn, component supplies like doorskins. For instance, in 2006—a year after the peak of the housing bubble—CMI's net sales were [ ], and its profitability was [ ], calculated as earnings before interest, taxes, depreciation, and allocations (“EBITDA”).<sup>1</sup> The Independents, including Steves, also benefitted from increased competition between CMI, Masonite, and JELD-WEN, each of which tried to create and sell new styles of doorskins as part of their efforts to win customers.

<sup>1</sup> EBITDA is a “surrogate ... for cash flow” that investors use as an approximate measure of an entity's profitability.

CMI also used Towanda to manufacture two so-called “trim board” products, MiraTEC and Extira. Masonite had started the MiraTEC business in 1998, but it had yielded only about [ ] in revenue (and negative EBITDA) by the time Towanda was divested in 2001. However, CMI viewed both MiraTEC and Extira as undeveloped products that held considerable promise and “worked to grow [them] aggressively.” As a result, those products' financial performance “grew rapidly,” and they were responsible for over [ ] in revenue and more than [ ] of EBITDA at CMI's peak in 2006. Moreover, they were important contributors to CMI's overall business after the housing bubble burst; indeed, Merrill testified that they were “the only thing that really kept [CMI] afloat.”

Like Masonite, CMI initially sold doorskins to eleven Independents in the United States and Canada. But beginning in 2003, CMI's customer base contracted significantly because eight of those eleven customers were acquired by companies to which CMI did not sell doorskins. In addition, CMI had only one long-term doorskin supply agreement, which ended when that customer was acquired by Masonite. This customer consolidation significantly reduced the volume of doorskins that CMI could sell. Consequently, the company took a cue from JELD-WEN and Masonite and “forward integrat[ed]” from 2005 to 2010, buying two door manufacturers and building two door manufacturing plants to allow the company to more efficiently use the doorskin volume produced by Towanda—that is, by selling doorskins internally as well as externally. By 2011, CMI's internal doorskin sales constituted nearly 40% of its total doorskin sales.

There is a dispute respecting the performance of Towanda's doorskin business from 2009 to 2014. Steves relies on PTX 341 and PTX 342 to show that, looking only at the doorskin business, Towanda posted positive EBITDA annually from 2009 through 2013 and that there was positive, albeit not sizeable, EBITDA projected for 2014. And, that is what those documents show.

The record is not entirely clear as to the provenance of PTX 341 and 342, but the record does prove that JELD-WEN prepared these figures based both on historical CMI records (for 2009 through 2012) that were acquired in the merger and on JELD-WEN's own records thereafter. And, JELD-WEN used these documents to make business and strategy decisions. Thus, even though their provenance is not entirely clear, the record shows that they are reliable and probative of the state of *629 the doorskin business at Towanda for the period involved.

JELD-WEN takes the view that the profitability of Towanda in 2011 and 2012 should be determined by CMI's audited financial statements, DTX 191, and by the information that JELD-WEN gave to the DOJ in August 2012, DTX 60. And, JELD-WEN says that the most important evidence on that point came from the testimony of Bob Merrill at the Remedies Hearing where Merrill testified that the figures in PTX 341 and 342 were not consistent with documents that he had seen.

The Court does not credit DTX 191 or DTX 60 on the issue of the profitability of the doorskin business at Towanda because those documents reflect information about CMI as a whole, not just Towanda's doorskin business. And, CMI had other businesses such as the door business and the trim business (MiraTEC and Extira) and locations other than Towanda.

Nor can the Court credit Merrill's testimony. If, as he said was the case, Merrill had documentary evidence to refute the proofs that appeared in PTX 341 and 342, those refuting documents would have, indeed should have, been produced. They were not. As a result, Merrill's testimony on the profitability of the doorskin business at Towanda for the time period involved is rejected as not reliable.

The evidence on this issue is probative in the remedial phase of these proceedings because, to find that divestiture is an appropriate remedy, the Court must be satisfied that a divested Towanda can operate competitively and profitably in the doorskin market. And, the fact that Towanda did that in the past, even in the face of adverse market conditions, is evidence that supports a finding that a divested Towanda could do so now.

In any event, it is not disputed that CMI, as an entity, was in difficult financial straits in 2011 and 2012 before the merger. CMI certainly was not profitable then, even with a slightly positive EDITDA from the doorskin business and a positive contribution from the Miratec and Exitera lines.

Indeed, by 2011, CMI's owners had been forced to invest their own funds into CMI to support its cash flow. Thus, after exploring several options, they decided to sell the company by putting it up for auction. As part of that process, they engaged an investment firm that worked with CMI's management to prepare offering documents, send out teaser memos to prospective buyers, and solicit bids from interested entities. One such entity was Steves, which, in October 2011, offered to invest [ ] in CMI in exchange for a minority ownership stake in the company. See DX-462 at 6. CMI's owners rejected the offer, and Steves did not pursue that possibility any further. CMI then identified what management considered to be the “serious prospective buyers” (either four or five) that had submitted purchase bids, and selected JELD-WEN and Masonite as the finalists. JELD-WEN was ultimately chosen as the buyer because of concerns about Masonite's intentions for CMI's door manufacturing plants.

In sum, CMI's doorskin business was quite profitable, and CMI was a competitive factor in the doorskin market from the time of its creation until the housing crisis. Even during the housing crisis, the doorskin component of CMI's business (i.e., Towanda) fared adequately (with slightly positive EBITDA). But, by 2011, it was necessary to put the entirety of CMI up for sale. And, even under those conditions, there were several serious buyers.

*630 3. JELD-WEN's Acquisition of CMI and Execution of the Supply Agreement with Steves

JELD-WEN was interested in acquiring CMI for three main reasons: (1) the availability of doorskins of a certain height that were made at Towanda; (2) the lower costs and higher efficiency of Towanda; and (3) the possibility of manufacturing MiraTEC and Extira (so-called “trim” products) at Towanda in addition to doorskins. JELD-WEN wanted to maintain CMI's doorskin volume, so it entered into long-term supply agreements with three of CMI's existing customers: Haley, Woodgrain, and Lynden Door (“Lynden”). The first two contracts were agreed to as part of JELD-WEN's acquisition of CMI (“the CMI Acquisition”) because Haley and Woodgrain were also owned by CMI's owners. See PTX-115 ¶ 1.

In 2011, JELD-WEN and Steves were parties to a long-term doorskin supply agreement that they had executed in 2003. But, in 2011, JELD-WEN terminated that agreement. Later in 2011, Steves initiated discussions with JELD-WEN about another long-term supply agreement. And, as part of its plan to secure merger approval, JELD-WEN entered into the current Supply Agreement.

Thus, it was that, on May 1, 2012, Steves and JELD-WEN entered into the Supply Agreement, pursuant to which Steves would purchase doorskins from JELD-WEN on defined terms. Stipulation of Undisputed Facts (ECF No. 1003-1) (“Stip.”) ¶ 10; see also Supply Agreement (PTX-149) at 1. Those terms applied to “the full range of JELD-WEN molded doorskin products.” Supply Agreement § 1. The Supply Agreement would be in effect through December 31, 2019, but would automatically renew for a successive seven-year term unless either party terminated the contract. Id. § 2. Steves could terminate the Supply Agreement for any reason upon two-year written notice to JELD-WEN, and JELD-WEN could likewise terminate it without cause upon seven-year written notice to Steves. Id. § 3(a)(2)(b).

The doorskin prices that JELD-WEN could charge Steves varied according to a contractually defined formula based on JELD-WEN's key input costs. The Supply Agreement, in fact, obligated JELD-WEN to give Steves annual notice of the prices and input costs for the coming year by November 30, and JELD-WEN could not impose any price increases if it failed to do so. Id. § 6(c). Although Steves had to purchase at least 80% of its interior molded doorskin requirements from JELD-WEN, Steves could purchase any quantity of doorskins from another supplier that offered a price at least 3% lower than JELD-WEN's purchase price, after JELD-WEN had the chance to match that lower price. Id. § 4.

Beyond those pricing provisions, the contract required JELD-WEN to provide Steves with doorskin products of satisfactory quality. If any doorskins were defective, JELD-WEN would have to reimburse Steves for the cost of those doorskins, but only after JELD-WEN's inspection and verification of the defect. Id. § 8. Reimbursements for any other costs beyond the price of the doorskins were to be negotiated on a case-by-case basis, Supply Agreement § 8, such that they were never mandatory.

Finally, any disputes under the Supply Agreement were to be resolved under a rather protracted alternative dispute resolution process. Only when that process was exhausted could a party begin litigation. That process would begin with an internal conference between the parties' senior executives. If they could not reach a resolution within thirty days of the dispute being submitted, the parties would have to proceed to mediation. A lawsuit could then be filed only where mediation had failed to *631 yield a solution to the parties' disagreement. Id. § 10.

On July 18, 2012, soon after executing the Supply Agreement, JELD-WEN publicly announced the CMI Acquisition, Stip. ¶ 9, the completion of which was contingent on regulatory approval by government agencies, see PTX-115 ¶ 5; DX-50 § 6.1. Early in 2012, JELD-WEN and CMI had decided to preemptively request approval of the transaction from the DOJ because executives from both companies had been involved in Premdor's acquisition of Masonite, and were therefore aware of the problems that DOJ review could pose. The record is clear that JELD-WEN decided to approach the DOJ only after it had entered into long-term supply contracts with the Independents, knowing that this oft-used tactic would assuage the concerns of the DOJ and the Independents about anticompetitive effects of the proposed merger.

After JELD-WEN approached the DOJ, the agency's Antitrust Division notified JELD-WEN that it had opened a preliminary investigation into the proposed CMI Acquisition. Representatives of CMI and JELD-WEN—Merrill and James Morrison (“Morrison”), respectively—then gave presentations to the DOJ about the Acquisition. See DX-60; DX-54. That presentation emphasized that JELD-WEN had entered into long-term supply contracts with the Independents. Thereafter, the DOJ also contacted Steves, which told the DOJ that it did not oppose the merger because it believed that the Supply Agreement would prevent JELD-WEN from taking any anticompetitive actions. The Antitrust Division subsequently closed its investigation on September 28, 2012, see DX-48, and the Acquisition was completed on October 24, 2012. Stip. ¶ 8. The final purchase price paid by JELD-WEN was [ ].

4. JELD-WEN's Integration of CMI's Operations

Following the merger, JELD-WEN made some general administrative changes. For instance, it closed CMI's head office in Chicago and two of CMI's four door manufacturing plants, and transitioned CMI's human resources, payroll, insurance, safety, environmental, and health and benefits functions into JELD-WEN's organizational structure. DX-933 at 2. Although JELD-WEN and CMI accounting managers were supposed to develop an integration plan, see DX-933 at 2, the accounting systems for Towanda and for JELD-WEN's "legacy plants" (the doorskin plants that it originally owned and developed) remain separate, with Towanda using different accounting software. Similarly, the consolidation of JELD-WEN's and CMI's operations has apparently not affected certain interactions with customers, at least from Steves' perspective. Steves still orders and pays for doorskins from Towanda in the same way it did before the CMI Acquisition; the same is true for Steves' orders of, and payments for, doorskins from JELD-WEN's legacy plants.

At the time of the merger, JELD-WEN operated a doorskin plant in Marion, North Carolina ("Marion" or "the Marion plant"). However, Marion's design prevented it from meeting environmental regulations, and bringing the plant up to standard was projected to be costly and time-consuming. In addition, Marion was both inefficient and unprofitable, with old equipment in poor condition. On the record as a whole, the Court finds that the Marion plant was closed because of the projected cost to bring it into compliance with environmental regulations, and the projected cost to improve its old and ill-maintained operational equipment, not because of the acquisition of CMI.

*632 Nevertheless, the acquisition of CMI allowed JELD-WEN to move Marion's doorskin production to Towanda. Moving Marion's doorskin production to Towanda—a very efficient and less cost-intensive plant—would therefore enable JELD-WEN to save around [ ] in manufacturing costs, and would eliminate [ ] in fixed costs associated with maintaining Marion as an operational plant. JELD-WEN mothballed Marion in June or July 2013.

In 2011, JELD-WEN had determined that its Dubuque plant was "[i]mpaired," PTX-668 at JW-CIV-00369666, which is analogous to a decision to close the plant. Because Dubuque was situated in an urban environment that was not conducive to doorskin manufacturing, it was JELD-WEN's second-most expensive fiber facility. The location of the Dubuque plant restricted JELD-WEN's ability to perform necessary environmental control tasks. DX-935 at 2. Dubuque would have been closed in 2011, but closure in 2011 was not practical because of startup problems and doorskin quality issues that were occurring at JELD-WEN's newly-opened plant in Dodson, Louisiana ("Dodson"). PTX-668. Once JELD-WEN acquired CMI, it closed the Dubuque plant because the capacities of Dodson and Towanda together rendered Dubuque's doorskin production unnecessary to overcome the problems at the Dodson plant. See DX-935 at 2, 5. JELD-WEN sold Dubuque in or around August 2016. Morrison, who recommended that Dubuque be closed and sold, testified that he would not have made that recommendation if the CMI acquisition had not occurred or if there was a reasonable chance that JELD-WEN would have to divest Towanda. For reasons set forth later, the Court declines to credit Morrison's testimony, finding him to be an untruthful witness. But, apart from that, the record shows that JELD-WEN had determined to close Dubuque before the merger.

JELD-WEN also made certain process changes at the Towanda facility after the CMI Acquisition. It spent around [ ] to install its own manufacturing processes at Towanda by the end of 2013. Among other changes, JELD-WEN: switched the primer used to JELD-WEN primer instead of more expensive third-party primer; reduced the amount of petroleum wax and resin used to make doorskins; enabled Towanda to make lower density doorskins and thereby save on specific component costs; improved the humidization process; and reduced the thickness of doorskins. DX-933 at 3. The changes made by JELD-WEN to the manufacturing process also have resulted in annual savings on doorskin manufacturing costs. The record is that the [ ] expense yielded annual savings of approximately [ ]. See DX-190 at 2. On this record as a whole, the Court finds that, because all of these processes were useful, and used, in other facilities, they would have been implemented in any event and are not attributable to the merger.

After the merger and over time, JELD-WEN made capital improvements to Towanda in order to improve the state of the facility and to decrease the doorskin defect rate. These investments included: (1) adding new doorskin dies, coating equipment, refiners, steam injection valves, a coating manufacturing plant to produce primer at Towanda, and a hydraulic commander to enhance doorskin fiber quality; DX-909 at 13; (2) replacing a line stacker that suffered from quality issues, the sprinkler system, malfunctioning mat separation conveyors, a fiber bin with water infiltration problems, and pressure pumps; DX-909 at 13-14; (3) repairing roofs to prevent water infiltration; DX-909 at 13; and (4) upgrading the doorskin coating process and boiler operating system. DX-909 at 14; DX-917.

*633 These steps cost JELD-WEN around [ ] in 2015 and [ ] in 2016. DX-909 at 13-14. All told, JELD-WEN estimates that it spent approximately [ ] in capital improvements from July 2014 to July 2017). The investments have generated benefits for JELD-WEN. Many of the improvements noted above were deemed “high return on investment projects,” meaning that their projected annual savings were only slightly less than their initial costs. DX-909 at 13-14. And, the record shows that the total returns from those projects to date exceed their total expense.

Through Morrison, JELD-WEN offered evidence that it would not have pursued them if there was a possibility that the CMI Acquisition would not be consummated or that divestiture would be required. As explained, the Court simply does not find Morrison to be a credible witness.

However, it is, of course, self-evident that JELD-WEN would not have made changes to Towanda if the CMI acquisition had not been consummated, because JELD-WEN simply could not have done that. So that aspect of Morrison's testimony is disingenuous. And, the record is that JELD-WEN has known of the risk of divestiture since mid-2015 and still has made many changes to, and investment in, Towanda. So the record disproves that aspect of Morrison's testimony.

JELD-WEN also asserts that, because it acquired CMI, it was able to modify the doorskin designs (“SKUs”) manufactured at each of its doorskin plants. After acquiring Towanda, JELD-WEN had four operational plants, but each one does not produce all the different SKUs offered to customers—both because of increased demand for certain SKUs in different parts of the United States, and because of some plants' inability to make certain SKUs given their actual production capacity (which accounts for the die changes necessary to produce a specific quantity of doorskins in a given amount of time).<sup>2</sup> Instead, in 2013, the company began using a statistical tool called a mix model to examine, every quarter, which particular SKUs should be produced at specific doorskin plants—in other words, how the total “mix” of SKUs should be allocated so that each plant's capacity is utilized most efficiently. The mix model accounts for a number of variables, including the overall sales of specific SKUs externally, to independent door manufacturers, and internally, to JELD-WEN's door manufacturing plants; the current and required location of different doorskin dies; and a freight analysis, which measures the freight costs associated with shipping doorskins from the four plants to the buyers' locations.

2 A die is a tool used to create a specific doorskin design. Because a plant cannot run all its dies simultaneously, the dies in service are rotated as needed to meet JELD-WEN's doorskin design needs. However, die changes increase downtime, reducing production efficiency and, in turn, production capacity.

The record shows that JELD-WEN would have developed the mix model whether or not it had acquired CMI. However, the record shows that having product from Towanda to use in the mix model provides some unquantified measure of savings to both JELD-WEN's internal customers and its external customers. That is because the model helps to balance doorskin production across four plants in different regions of the United States, thereby reducing transit times and freight costs. If one plant, such as Towanda, is closed or divested, then JELD-WEN's internal and JELD-WEN's freight-paying customers that received doorskins from that plant might pay higher freight costs because the doorskins would need to be shipped from another plant, from potentially *634 much farther away.<sup>3</sup> Similarly, a customer who received its doorskins primarily from Towanda would not be able to receive every SKU from other plants without substantial changes to JELD-WEN's mix allocation. JELD-WEN says that would cause production inefficiencies and reduced capacity that would inflate JELD-WEN's doorskin prices. All of these apprehended consequences of divestiture were posited in general terms, but JELD-WEN offered no quantification of the apprehended cost increase.

3 JELD-WEN decides which plants will supply particular doorskins to customers. Accordingly, even if Steves orders doorskins from Towanda, JELD-WEN may supply those doorskins from Dodson or one of its West Virginia plants. Because the mix model “balance[s] the mix across the group,” the plant identified by the customer might not make the requested SKU, or might not have sufficient volume for supply from that location to be most efficient for all customers.

The mix model also led to related changes in JELD-WEN's operations, such as a doorskin consolidation process that eliminated trade matches and redundant SKUs between JELD-WEN and CMI. That process cost around [ ] and took a year to complete. DX-917. This modification affected SKU availability at both Towanda and JELD-WEN's legacy plants. However, much like JELD-WEN's manufacturing process changes and capital improvements at Towanda, that project “paid for itself” within a relatively short period after it was finished. And, the record is that the mix model would still be used and useful in the event of divestiture. It would just operate differently.

Finally, JELD-WEN improved the MiraTEC and Extira business, which is independent of JELD-WEN's doorskin manufacturing business at Towanda. According to Merrill, JELD-WEN is the only company that currently makes both trim and doorskin products.

JELD-WEN has devoted significant resources to growing the MiraTEC and Extira business, which was responsible for around [ ] of Towanda's [ ] EBITDA in 2017. Moreover, exterior trim and panel products like MiraTEC and Extira are “key anchor products” that have allowed JELD-WEN to pursue expansion into the general building products industry, which involves other exterior components that JELD-WEN does not yet make, like siding and fencing. Based on this planned development, JELD-WEN's current CFO, L. Brooks Mallard (“Mallard”), has projected 2018 revenues and EBITDA for JELD-WEN of [ ] and [ ], respectively. See Apr. 12 Remedies Tr. at 710:19-711:21; DX-928 at 2-4.

Nothing in the record suggests that, in the event of divestiture, MiraTEC and Extira products made by an entity other than JELD-WEN could not be sold to JELD-WEN's existing customers for those products. But, if that is the case, the new owner of Towanda, not JELD-WEN, would be receiving the net revenues and the EBITDA generated by those sales.

5. Post-Merger Interactions Between Steves and JELD-WEN

Pursuant to the Supply Agreement, JELD-WEN supplied doorskins to Steves in 2012 and 2013. It is helpful to understand certain provisions of the Supply Agreement that were central to the antitrust violations found by the jury and that are important to the conduct of the parties.

Section 6a of the Supply Agreement sets forth the Initial Price of the doorskins to be supplied to Steves by reference to Schedule 1. Section 6b of the Supply Agreement provides that the “Initial Price shall remain in effect for the duration of this Agreement unless a price increase or *635 decrease takes place in accordance with the terms hereof.” Compl. Ex. A. Section 6c sets out the adjustment mechanism for the price increases or decreases that are referred to in Section 6b.<sup>4</sup> Section 6c provides that price adjustments are to be made with references to what are called “key input costs” for Raw Material (wood; resin, wax, oil, and sealer; paint; and packaging) and for Energy (electric power prices, natural gas prices, boiler fuel. (Compl. Ex. A, § 6(c), Sch. 2.)

<sup>4</sup> By making the damage award in paragraph 3(a)(1) of the Verdict Form, the jury had to conclude, based on the evidence, that Section 6c operated to measure both price increases and price decreases. That is proved by the testimony of the negotiators and the evidence about how the parties administered the contract.

The record shows that, after the merger, JELD-WEN's key input costs declined every year. Steves' damages expert, Avram Tucker (“Tucker”), testified that, based on his assessment and calculations, JELD-WEN had not disclosed to Steves the full extent of the cost decreases.

And, notwithstanding these declining costs, JELD-WEN, in 2013, 2014 and 2015, increased the prices that it charged Steves to purchase doorskins under the Supply Agreement.<sup>5</sup> Tucker determined that JELD-WEN had overcharged Steves a cumulative amount of 7.87% in the years following the CMI Acquisition. Steves' antitrust expert, Carl Shapiro (“Shapiro”), testified that other JELD-WEN customers without a supply agreement, such as Excel, Unidoor, and ABS, experienced even greater price increases. Documentary evidence from JELD-WEN's files confirms that testimony. In addition, JELD-WEN charged Steves markedly higher prices for the Madison and Monroe styles of doorskins because JELD-WEN took the view that they were outside the scope of the Supply Agreement, a view that the jury rejected.

<sup>5</sup> JELD-WEN did not communicate with Steves about key input costs or price changes in 2016 or 2017, so the doorskin prices imposed in 2015 remained the same for those years.

As Shapiro explained, JELD-WEN's pricing decisions were a consequence of JELD-WEN's enhanced market power after the CMI Acquisition. Following the merger, JELD-WEN and Masonite were the only two doorskin suppliers in the United States. Steves believed, as found above, that the Supply Agreement would protect it from any anticompetitive activity. Then, in July 2014, Orsino's replacement as JELD-WEN's CEO, Kirk Hachigian ("Hachigian"), sent Steves a presentation made by Masonite on a publically available telephone call for its investors in which Masonite's CEO made clear that Masonite would not sell doorskins to companies that competed with it in the North American door market, as Steves did. Shortly thereafter, in September 2014, Hachigian sent Steves a notice of termination of the Supply Agreement, effective September 10, 2021.<sup>6</sup> That letter followed Steves' rejection of Hachigian's demand to add to the normal doorskin prices permitted under Section 6b of the Supply Agreement a so-called "capital charge," which (according to Hachigian) was to help offset the cost of making capital improvements to JELD-WEN's facilities that made the doorskins sold to Steves. Nothing in the contractual pricing provisions of the Supply Agreement allowed a capital charge.<sup>7</sup> Although these events made Steves concerned about its ability to obtain an adequate doorskin supply, Steves did not terminate the Supply Agreement (as it could have done) to seek a supply elsewhere because Steves believed that there was no viable supply alternative.

<sup>6</sup> Hachigian subsequently sent Steves a letter, in March 2015, stating that JELD-WEN reserved the right to assert that the Supply Agreement terminated on December 31, 2019 (at the end of its normal seven-year term) instead of in September 2021. PTX-521. JELD-WEN (through Hachigian) abandoned that position at trial. However, proposed acceleration of the termination date is further evidence that JELD-WEN was emboldened by the knowledge that, in 2014, the substantial lessening of competition caused by the merger allowed JELD-WEN to pressure Steves to accept JELD-WEN's new pricing demands.

<sup>7</sup> The record shows that JELD-WEN extracted new contracts from other independent manufacturers requiring them to pay the capital charge. That was the result of lessened competition. It was either pay or face termination and the loss of doorskin supply.

In 2014, Steves also experienced a change in the way that JELD-WEN dealt with doorskin defects under the Supply Agreement. Before late 2014, the procedure followed between Steves and JELD-WEN was as follows:

If Steves discovers defects in JELD-WEN's doorskins after receiving them, it completes and submits a vendor debit memo ("VDM") to JELD-WEN to initiate the reimbursement process. From 2010 to 2011, JELD-WEN responded promptly after receiving VDMs, sometimes inspecting the defective doorskin at Steves' plant and sometimes extending Steves a credit based on a picture of the defect.

In mid-2014, JELD-WEN changed its approach and significantly limited reimbursements for those defects.

Likewise, in 2014-15, JELD-WEN changed the way that it compensated for defective doorskins that had been incorporated in the finished doors that Steves sold to its customers, for which Steves could negotiate for reimbursement under the Supply Agreement. Beginning in 2012, if a Steves' customer rejected a door as defective because of a defective doorskin, Steves would give its customer credits for the purchase price of the doors (assuming that Steves agreed with the defect assessments). Steves would then seek reimbursement from JELD-WEN for the full cost of the doors which had defective doorskin (i.e., the sale price that Steves refunded to the customers) and JELD-WEN would typically pay that entire amount. In those situations, Steves would submit a VDM for the defective door to JELD-WEN, just as it did with the defective doorskins.

However, the record shows that JELD-WEN adopted a policy in late 2014 or early 2015, to reimburse Steves only for the defective doorskins, rather than for the full cost of the doors. In explanation, JELD-WEN told Steves that "[t]here was a specific change in their [door reimbursement] policy," which applied whether the doors with defective doorskins were sold to customers or remained in Steves' manufacturing plant. This shift followed what Fancher characterized as a "general direction” from JELD-WEN's management to “tighten” its door reimbursement process.

At trial, JELD-WEN took the view that, although it was never contractually required to reimburse Steves for the cost of the doors, JELD-WEN did so as a matter of customer relations. However, it is clear that, because of the substantially lessened competition caused by the merger, JELD-WEN no longer felt that it was competitively necessary to extend this benefit to Steves in 2015 and thereafter.

The record establishes that JELD-WEN will continue to engage in this same sort of conduct respecting pricing and contract administration in the future. That is because, as Shapiro testified, the entry of another doorskin supplier besides JELD-WEN *637 and Masonite into the U.S. market is unlikely. In addition, JELD-WEN is still charging Steves inflated prices for doorskins under the Supply Agreement, including Madison and Monroe doorskins. Likewise, JELD-WEN continues to disregard the price adjustment provisions of § 6c. Moreover, JELD-WEN has tried unilaterally to add labor costs as a key input cost under Schedule 2 and has refused to supply the backup information for the key input costs. The jury found that Steves sustained damages because JELD-WEN had violated Section 6c and other pricing provisions of the contract, including those for the pricing of Madison and Monroe doorskins. And, the jury rightly found that those damages were the consequence of the antitrust violation, i.e., the substantial lessening of competition caused by the merger.

6. Steves' Efforts to Obtain Alternative Doorskin Supply and the Consequences of Not Doing So

After receiving the original and the accelerated notices of termination from JELD-WEN, Steves, with knowledge that a reliable supply of doorskins was essential to its survival, began to explore ways to obtain doorskins without relying on JELD-WEN. Of course, between now and September 2021, Steves can purchase as many doorskins as it needs from JELD-WEN under the Supply Agreement. However, the record proves that JELD-WEN cannot be relied upon to supply Steves with doorskins after that point. Indeed, JELD-WEN has expressed the view that it might be necessary to “kill off” a few of the Independents. That, for Steves, is the predictable result of terminating the Supply Agreement.

Faced with loss of doorskin supply from JELD-WEN, Steves tried to arrange a supply contract with Masonite, even after Masonite's July 2014 announcement that it would no longer sell doorskins to independent door manufacturers such as Steves. Masonite's CEO, Fred Lynch, told Steves that Masonite will not enter into any long-term supply agreement with Steves. Lynch did advise that Masonite remains generally willing to sell doorskins to Steves on a spot sale basis, depending on availability and without a supply agreement. Nonetheless, the prices that Masonite has offered Steves are around 37% higher than the prices it pays under the Supply Agreement.

Unable to secure a reliable, competitively priced source of supply from either domestic supplier, Steves approached foreign doorskin suppliers like Teverpan, Kastamonu, and Yildiz to explore alternate sources of supply. And, those discussions continue today. But, the record shows that Steves could fill only a small part of its doorskin requirements from foreign supply sources. And, the record shows that foreign suppliers can supply only a limited number of the doorskin designs and sizes that Steves uses to manufacture its doors. Further, Steves has experienced serious quality deficiencies with doorskin samples that it has received from foreign suppliers.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>8</sup> In opposing divestiture, JELD-WEN has asserted that it too has experienced quality problems with the products made by these foreign manufacturers. Indeed, JELD-WEN argues that product from foreign suppliers cannot help fill the short-fall in supply that would ensue a divestiture of Towanda.

Finally, Steves has investigated the possibility of building its own doorskin manufacturing plant (“the MDS Project”) so as to have a reliable source of supply after the Supply Agreement ends in September 2021. To that end, Steves hired former JELD-WEN employee John Pierce (“Pierce”) in March 2015 to, among other *638 things, provide information that Steves could use in furtherance of its MDS Project. Then, in July 2015, Steves engaged another former JELD-WEN employee, John Ambruz (“Ambruz”), for the primary purpose of completing a study about the feasibility of Steves building a doorskin manufacturing plant (“the Feasibility Study”). On March 30, 2016, Ambruz e-mailed Sam and Edward Steves the completed Feasibility Study, which discussed the challenges associated with building a doorskin manufacturing plant—particularly the cost, time, and need for a manufacturing partner.

In early 2017, Steves reached an interim conclusion that it could not feasibly build its own doorskin plant. The record establishes that Steves has made no concrete progress toward building a doorskin manufacturing plant. However, Ambruz and Gregory Wysock—a former Masonite employee hired to work on the MDS Project in July 2016—are still employed by Steves. Moreover, Steves has not completely abandoned its plans to build a plant. Thus, Steves continues to look for a manufacturing partner that could help construct a plant, and it was in contact with several potential partners before trial. However, Steves has had no further communication with those entities since before the trial began. Considered as a whole, the record establishes conclusively that Steves cannot fulfill its doorskin requirements from foreign manufacturers or by building its own doorskin plant.

If Steves cannot repair its relationship with JELD-WEN (which, on this record, will not happen) or acquire doorskins another way (which, as of now, is not possible), it will go out of business after the Supply Agreement expires in 2021. Steves' success rises and falls with its door manufacturing business; in 2017 alone, its interior molded doors sales constituted around 70% of its total revenue. And Steves cannot make those doors without interior molded doorskins. Consequently, if Steves cannot obtain a reliable doorskin supply, its business will soon fail.

That event would affect the 1,100 employees that currently work for Steves, and the members of the Steves family, which has run the company since it was founded in 1866. Steves' principal officers, Edward and Sam Steves, are the fifth generation of the Steves family to manage Steves. Moreover, Sam Steves' son and Edward Steves' daughter are current employees of Steves, and Sam Steves hopes to “pass[ ] on the reins” to them in the future. Maintaining Steves as a family business is an important goal of the entire Steves family.

7. The Discussions Between JELD-WEN and Steves; The Initiation of Alternative Dispute Resolution Process; The Filing of This Action: 2012-2016

JELD-WEN has presented the affirmative defense of laches, a topic that is separately considered in Section II.C, infra. The record contains considerable evidence about what Steves knew when, and what Steves did (in addition to attempting to secure an alternative source of supply as outlined in Section I.B.6). Additional facts on those topics are set out below as well as in Section II.C below that addressed the laches defense.

Steves began noticing doorskin quality issues after the merger as soon as November 2012. However, at that time, it did not view those defects as a result of the merger. It is difficult to pinpoint the exact period when Steves connected the dots between the CMI Acquisition and the decrease *639 in doorskin quality.<sup>9</sup> Similarly, Steves had concerns about JELD-WEN's doorskin prices when it received the first notification required by the Supply Agreement in late 2012, and had discussions with Orsino about accurate pricing throughout 2013. However, that initial disagreement concerned whether JELD-WEN's reduction of doorskin thickness should be reflected in doorskin pricing under the Supply Agreement, and it was not thought by Steves to be related to the CMI Acquisition. In fact, the problems with the key input costs provision that underlie Steves' pricing claims in this litigation did not arise until after Hachigian replaced Orsino as JELD-WEN's CEO in early 2014.

<sup>9</sup> Edward Steves stated during his deposition that he realized in early 2013 that the CMI Acquisition had caused the “degradation” of doorskin quality. Apr. 12 Remedies Tr. at 637:19-638:8. However, he later testified that he did not view the quality issues as related to the Acquisition. Id. at 685:6-17. Having heard the testimony and reviewed the deposition, the Court concludes that Edward Steves was speaking temporally, not causally.

The record shows that, as of August 2014, Sam and Edward Steves exchanged email messages that used the term “antitrust.” For example, on August 12, 2014, Sam Steves e-mailed Edward Steves to ask whether Steves was “finished with exploring anti trust issues if J[ELD-WEN] terms [terminated] the supply agreement.” DX-291. Then, on August 26, Sam Steves made reference to Steves' “claim on the overcharge” when considering how to respond to a Hachigian e-mail that discussed, in part, doorskin pricing under the Supply Agreement. Sam Steves noted that “the antitrust” was “perhaps the most important” issue at that point. DX-466.

Although the emails were offered in evidence, their meaning and context was not developed at trial. As explained more fully in Section II.C below, even though Steves was aware of potential antitrust ramifications of JELD-WEN's pricing pressure, changes in the treatment of defects, and arbitrary treatment respecting the key input costs, Steves reasonably focused its attention on finding alternative sources of doorskin supply in an effort to survive JELD-WEN's conduct, rather than place its hope for survival on pursuing a first of its kind antitrust action.<sup>10</sup> Many of those efforts took place in the fall of 2014 and early 2015. In addition, Steves, quite reasonably, continued to meet with JELD-WEN in an effort to find some reasonable commercial solution. Indeed, JELD-WEN, largely through Hachigian, repeatedly told Steves that JELD-WEN wanted some commercial solution. Faced, as it was with losing the supply of a key component of its most important product, Steves was reasonable in continuing to try to work on a commercial solution with JELD-WEN.

<sup>10</sup> As the parties so often observe, no previous case brought by a private party seeking divestiture under the Clayton Act had gone to verdict at the time so Steves had no precedents to inform whether to pursue such a course or, if pursued, what the likelihood of success might be.

In early 2015, it became obvious that negotiations with JELD-WEN would not work. Therefore, Steves formally initiated dispute resolution procedures under the Supply Agreement in March 11, 2015. See DX-243 at 1; see also PTX-149 § 10(a)-(b). The formal invocation of Section 10 did not, however, provide JELD-WEN with notice of Steves' possible antitrust claim. However, the dispute process was addressed to contractual matters that lay at the heart of Steves' antitrust concerns so resolution of those issues in the contractually required dispute process likely would *640 mean that Steves would have no antitrust injury.

Steves asked JELD-WEN to meet for the initial dispute resolution conference called for by the Supply Agreement on March 23, DX-243 at 2, but JELD-WEN deferred the internal conferences required by Section 10 until May 2015. Although the focus of those conferences was JELD-WEN's compliance with the key input costs and doorskin quality provisions of the Supply Agreement, Steves' attorney, Marvin Pipkin, also raised Steves' antitrust concerns at the second conference, and Bruce Taten responded on JELD-WEN's behalf. But, the record does not disclose the substance of the discussion about those antitrust concerns. After those conferences failed to yield a resolution to either the contract or antitrust issues, Steves requested, in July 2015, mediation, as is specified to be the next step under the Supply Agreement, see PTX-574 at 1. That occurred on September 4, 2015.

The mediation was also unsuccessful. At the end of it, Steves presented JELD-WEN with a draft complaint that raised both the contract and antitrust issues. The parties then chose to enter into a standstill agreement, which provided that Steves would not sue JELD-WEN on the date of the agreement, and that JELD-WEN would give Steves two days' notice before suing Steves, effective for thirty days. See PTX-591. The standstill agreement recited the mutual desire of Steves and JELD-WEN to continue efforts to work out a solution to their disputes, which then included both the contractual issues and the antitrust ramifications of JELD-WEN's conduct. Subsequently, Steves and JELD-WEN entered into standstill agreements with similar provisions on September 29, 2015; October 13, 2015; January 7, 2016; and April 25, 2016. See PTX-593; PTX-606; PTX-641; PTX-682. Sam Steves acknowledged that these agreements permitted Steves to file suit on any date other than the dates of the agreements themselves, but he said that Steves did not do so because it believed that the parties could resolve their dispute without litigation, as expressed in the standstill agreements.

As it was involved in this back-and-forth process with JELD-WEN, Steves, in December 2015, asked the DOJ to examine JELD-WEN's potentially anticompetitive conduct. Steves gave a presentation to the DOJ later that month, and then produced documents to the DOJ in January 2016, in response to a civil investigative demand. On April 7, 2016, JELD-WEN also made a presentation to the DOJ. See DX-45. On May 18, 2016, the DOJ closed its investigation without taking any action. See DX-182. Steves then asked JELD-WEN to execute another standstill agreement, and when JELD-WEN refused, Steves filed this action on June 29, 2016.

8. Current Status and Standalone Viability of Towanda

Whether divestiture is a viable remedy in this case depends, in part, on whether, if divested, Towanda would be able to operate as an effective competitor in the doorskin market and thereby restore the competition that the merger substantially lessened. The parties have quite different views on the subject.

Towanda occupies 19 of the 275 total acres of land on which the property sits. The plant consists of several different areas: the main plant, which contains the main production lines; the smaller "die form" plant, where Masonite originally manufactured doorskins and which still houses a production line today; the wood yard, which receives doorskin inputs like logs or chips; and the water treatment plant, which removes chemicals from water used in the manufacturing process before that water is redistributed to the environment *641 through the nearby spray fields. All these areas existed when JELD-WEN acquired Towanda, and JELD-WEN purchased the entire property. Towanda's operations require more than 400 total employees, and around 300 in the main plant alone.

Towanda has a design capacity of [ ] doorskins per year. That figure reflects Towanda's maximum production capacity based on its design, which accounts for the number of openings in a press, the number of dies that can be produced within that opening, the number of times the press can go up and down in a specific period of time, and some scheduled maintenance downtime.

However, design capacity is not the same as actual production capacity. The latter is more realistic for production calculations because it also incorporates the downtime that is required to change dies in the press so that different styles (SKUs) can be manufactured. A die change requires waiting for the press to cool down, replacing the die (using a crane), and then reheating the press.

Towanda's two doorskin manufacturing lines are Line 1 (in the main plant) and Dieform (in the die form plant). Line 1 is a high-volume/low-mix press, meaning that it produces a large quantity of a lower variety of SKUs. It currently produces only 6'8" doorskins—the most common size for residential construction—and can only produce between 50-60 different SKUs at one time. Line 1 is intended to be the “main production line” at Towanda. Thus, Line 1 has fewer die changes and far less downtime.

Dieform, in contrast, is a high-mix/low-volume press, sacrificing doorskin quantity for SKU variety. It uses smaller dies that can be changed without causing as much downtime as die changes for Line 1. Consequently, Dieform can produce over 250 different SKUs, and it accommodates all of JELD-WEN's 7' and 8' doorskins, as well as its smaller orders for more niche doorskin designs. That line's production capacity is therefore lower.

Even with Line 1 and Dieform being designed to maximize efficiency, some unaccounted-for downtime is still needed to produce the many SKUs sold. This downtime reduces Towanda's current actual production capacity to [ ] doorskins per year. In 2017, and for reasons not explained in the record, Towanda's actual production was [ ] doorskins. Towanda's current doorskin business is strong, generating EBITDA of [ ] in 2017.

These earnings are attributable to several factors. First, doorskin volume has increased because the housing market is performing well. There is evidence that the number of domestic “housing starts”—new homes for which construction is started—was approximately [ ] in 2001, and around [ ] in 2017. Thus, the current demand for doorskins is roughly similar to the demand in the early 2000s, when CMI achieved positive EBITDA (albeit not as high as 2006, when the number of housing starts was approximately [ ]). The market has also improved considerably since 2011, as reflected in the significantly higher volume of doorskins sold to JELD-WEN's external customers in 2016 ( [ ]) compared to 2011 ( [ ]). Towanda's volume is also used to supply JELD-WEN's door manufacturing plants, which in 2017 purchased about [ ] of Towanda's [ ] doorskins.

Second, the increased demand has helped spread out Towanda's high fixed costs, reducing Towanda's cost per doorskin in 2017 to approximately [ ]. This expense is even lower than the [ ] that each doorskin cost CMI at its peak in 2006 (and substantially lower than the [ ] per-doorskin cost at CMI's nadir in 2011). That *642 reduction is, in part, attributable to JELD-WEN's changes to Towanda, which have lowered both variable and fixed production costs.

Third, doorskin prices have rebounded since 2011, so that JELD-WEN can now charge an average of [ ] per doorskin—only slightly lower than the peak average price of [ ] in 2006.

Finally, JELD-WEN's mix model allows it to allocate SKU demand across its four doorskin plants, increasing Towanda's production efficiency and helping it operate at the level needed to achieve a profit. As Towanda's design capacity is [ ] doorskins, Towanda therefore must sell around [ ] doorskins each year at prices ranging from [ ] doorskin to be profitable. Given the current state of the market, Towanda's actual capacity of [ ] doorskins in 2017 easily surpassed that threshold.<sup>11</sup>

<sup>11</sup> Towanda's overall profitability is aided by its MiraTEC and Extira production. Towanda is the only facility in the world that makes those products. They are produced on Line 2, a sealed press that sits across from Line 1. However, the manufacturing process for doorskins and MiraTEC and Extira is intertwined in many respects, so those products share many of the same manufacturing facilities in the main plant. As a result, Line 2 and the production equipment needed for MiraTEC and Extira cannot be removed as part of divestiture, because doing so would make doorskin production impossible. Any acquisition of Towanda's doorskin business, then, must include the acquisition of its MiraTEC and Extira business.

The record proves, without dispute, that today Towanda is a profitable competitor in the doorskin market. And, the Court so finds. Also, the record shows, also beyond dispute, that Towanda was profitable from the formation of CMI in 2001 until the down turn in the housing market in 2006 and it was a competitor in the supply of doorskins to independent door manufacturers then as well. And, the Court so finds.

JELD-WEN argues that, if divested from JELD-WEN, Towanda cannot operate profitably or be a competitor in the doorskin industry. In support of that view, JELD-WEN makes several arguments.

First, JELD-WEN argues that divesting Towanda in its current state would be more complex than the successful divestiture from Masonite in 2001. That earlier process benefited from the relatively amicable relationship between Masonite and SMI and the existence of fewer doorskin designs. Towanda and Masonite's Laurel plant were also similar and the designs offered by each were "exact trade matches," so the companies simply needed time to duplicate dies at each plant. Here, however, says JELD-WEN, CMI and JELD-WEN had "completely different designs" when they merged, and that distinction has largely persisted. That, however, is really just an argument that JELD-WEN would need at least two years to replicate Towanda's design offerings at its legacy plants. And, thus, it relates not to Towanda's future as a competitive entity, but to JELD-WEN's.

Second, JELD-WEN says that Towanda's fixed costs would increase because it would have to set up its own departments to provide administrative and technology services. Those expenses are currently absorbed by JELD-WEN and thus not factored into Towanda's per-doorskin costs. That may well be true, but it hardly shows that a divested Towanda would not be profitable or competitive.

Third, says JELD-WEN, Towanda cannot adequately utilize its capacity without benefitting from JELD-WEN's other doorskin plants or internal door customers. It is true that JELD-WEN uses a good deal of Towanda's output. But, it is virtually *643 certain that Steves alone would purchase [ ] doorskins from a divested Towanda. And, JELD-WEN would buy some of its requirements from the new owner of Towanda (at least [ ] doorskins) at least for two years while it seeks other sources of supply. And, JELD-WEN might well choose to continue buying from Towanda thereafter if, as JELD-WEN has argued, it will not likely make up any shortfall by buying from foreign suppliers or building another plant. Further, the Independents reasonably can be considered as other potential customers of a new owner of Towanda, especially considering (1) the higher prices recently extracted by JELD-WEN in requiring those companies to re-negotiate their contracts and (2) the higher prices sought by Masonite. Combined, (all three) the sales would exceed the 17-18 million needed for profitable operation.<sup>12</sup> Thus, the record establishes that a divested Towanda likely would be able to sell at least as much doorskin product as it did in 2017.

<sup>12</sup> The record shows that, in the event of divestiture, JELD-WEN would continue to buy from Towanda at least until it could build a new plant which would take several years or until JELD-WEN could find a reliable source of foreign supply (which, like Steves, JELD-WEN has not deemed to be a viable solution). JELD-WEN's counsel have argued that JELD-WEN would not buy from divested Towanda. Because JELD-WEN's witnesses said otherwise and counsel's argument makes no sense if JELD-WEN is to meet its needs, the argument is rejected.

Of course, the owner of a divested Towanda would find it necessary to supply a more diverse range of SKUs than CMI supplied in 2005 or 2006 because fewer SKUs existed at that time. Fancher opined that Towanda could not, as a standalone entity, supply all the SKUs needed to meet its external customers' needs—both because "the design mix that would run through [Towanda] couldn't support it," and because Towanda and JELD-WEN's legacy plants both make designs that the other does not.

However, the record contains no particularized evidence from JELD-WEN about which specific SKUs purchased by JELD-WEN's external customers would be implicated by divestiture, or about the effect on Towanda's production capacity and profitability of devoting its resources to meeting the SKU needs of its customers. The consequence of that evidentiary void is that no specific finding can be made.

Nonetheless, the record does permit the general conclusion that divestiture would restrict to some extent Towanda's ability to meet the needs of JELD-WEN's Independent customers because the die changes required to produce the requisite SKU variety would lead to increased downtime and reduced production capacity. This reduced capacity could also result in higher costs for Towanda, which could reduce profitability. There is no evidence that permits the Court to find whether those costs would increase or by how much.

From this record, the Court finds that a divested Towanda would be required to adjust product mix in a not insignificant way, but that the facility is capable of being operated to produce a mix of products that will allow Towanda to be profitable and competitive even if it must make substantial adjustments to do so.

Finally, JELD-WEN argues that it is not possible to conclude that a divested Towanda would be competitive because the existence of a potential buyer who could profitably sell doorskins from Towanda is unknown at this time. It is correct that the record does not identify entities, other than Steves, that are currently interested in buying Towanda and are capable of *644 operating the plant within the scope of their corporate structure or separately.

Steves is the only entity that has expressed interest in acquiring Towanda. However, Steves' executives admittedly lack knowledge about operating a doorskin plant. Of course, in the event of divestiture, Towanda's management and line employees would be retained, or at least given the opportunity to remain. That would be so for a new owner because the retention of its operating personnel would afford the greatest likelihood for success in restoring competition that was substantially lessened by the merger. And, that approach succeeded when CMI was created and divested in 2002 and when CMI was acquired by JELD-WEN in 2012. The record discloses no reason why that approach would not be successful again.

It is not surprising that, at this juncture in the case, potential buyers have not emerged. This is, after all, the first privately brought action under Section 16 of the Clayton Act to have gone to verdict and, in which, a private party has sought divestiture. And, as the Supreme Court of the United States explained in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 82 S.Ct. 1502, 8 L.Ed.2d 510 (1962), there are not likely to be firm expressions of interest until after the issue of whether divestiture is an appropriate remedy is settled on appeal and the landscape is clear. But, the record shows that Towanda was a profitable operation before the housing crisis and is once again and that its doorskin business produced small, but positive, EBITDA even during the housing crisis. And, even when CMI was up for sale in 2011, at a time when it was not profitable, there were several interested buyers. On this record, the Court concludes that buyers for this profitable operation can be expected to emerge again when the legal battles are ended.

9. Impact of Divestiture on JELD-WEN and Other Entities

Divestiture has been on the table in this action since it was filed in June 2016. Nonetheless, the record is that JELD-WEN has not examined how it would operate in the event that JELD-WEN is ordered to divest Towanda. Nor has JELD-WEN developed a plan for that eventuality. Thus, there is no well thought-out or documented support for how JELD-WEN would be affected by divestiture.

Of course, the absence of such a plan does not foreclose testimony from JELD-WEN's officers and employees giving their opinions about how divestiture might affect JELD-WEN's overall operations in a general way and how a divestiture might affect JELD-WEN's customers. And that is how JELD-WEN has chosen to present evidence on those topics: by offering opinions of its executives. Those opinions may properly be considered even though they come from witnesses who admittedly have not studied the subject and who are biased to present the worst case scenario.

The lack of concrete analysis and the inherent bias make the opinions of JELD-WEN employees about future events (such as the restructuring of JELD-WEN's company-wide manufacturing operations, potential layoffs, and ripple effects on customers) quite speculative and rather unreliable. Nevertheless, it is possible to conclude that, if Towanda's capacity is removed from JELD-WEN's orbit, JELD-WEN will encounter, in the short run, difficulty manufacturing in its other facilities the number of doorskins that it needs to supply its own needs for making JELD-WEN doors and the needs of its independent doorskin customers.

It is helpful to review JELD-WEN's most recent production figures as a benchmark. In 2017, JELD-WEN, company-wide, *645 including Towanda, made approximately [ ] doorskins, consuming 30 million internally and selling [ ] to the Independents who are its customers, with [ ] of those going to Steves. If, after divestiture, Steves secured its requirements ( [ ] doorskins) from the new owner of Towanda, JELD-WEN would need to produce [ ] doorskins to meet its needs and those of its external customers.

The record is not precise on the point, but it appears that divestiture would result in a short-fall of approximately [ ] doorskins in JELD-WEN's internal and external needs (excluding Steves). However, that does not take into account that any divestiture order necessarily would make provision for JELD-WEN to purchase its short-fall from the new owner of Towanda for at least two years. That would be important to JELD-WEN, to its customers, and to the new owner of Towanda.

JELD-WEN also offered evidence that the “full production based on [m]ix” figures in [the record at PTX-1045] do not accurately reflect the effect of losing Towanda on JELD-WEN's doorskin capacity and production volume. That is because divestiture would make it necessary for JELD-WEN to redistribute to its legacy plants the SKUs that are currently manufactured at Towanda in order to provide the quantity and variety of doorskins that its customers desire. This change would cause two problems according to JELD-WEN. First, if those plants tried to accommodate those SKUs, their actual capacity would suffer, to some undefined extent, because the additional die changes needed would increase downtime, thereby reducing efficiency and lowering volume. Second, economics aside, producing the necessary quantity of the Towanda SKUs at the other plants is not possible without using the dies that are used at Towanda to produce those SKUs or making new dies of the same kind. Thus, those dies would have to be made for the legacy plants to use and that would require time.

The record does not show how much time or how much money that would require because JELD-WEN has not put “pen to paper” on that topic or any other relating to how to operate in the event of divestiture. That void notwithstanding, JELD-WEN has shown that divestiture would likely cause operational dislocations that would affect, to an undefined extent, its requirements for doorskins in the number of SKUs in its current line. However, because JELD-WEN has not analyzed how it would reallocate Towanda's SKUs, the degree of the resulting total capacity decrease at its legacy plants, like the degree of impact, is unclear.

It does appear from the record that it would be difficult to replace Towanda's production immediately. JELD-WEN's doorskin plant in Latvia currently has some excess capacity. However, that “excess” does not account for the reality that Latvia has never achieved close to its design capacity of [ ] doorskins per year. Furthermore, the Latvia plant is tailored to the European doorskin market and only produces a few doorskin designs that are usable in the U.S. market. Producing some of Towanda's SKUs in Latvia would also require the use of different dies than those used now in Latvia, and Latvia is currently running close to its total capacity, so that its production process could not be altered without consequences. The record does not show what those consequences are or what their economic impact would be.

Notwithstanding those difficulties, JELD-WEN's contingency business plans outlining options in the event that a natural disaster shuttered one or more of its plants shows that JELD-WEN considers that its Latvian plant, or other domestic plants (including a restarted Marion plant), *646 could be used to augment doorskin supplies until the shuttered plant was back on line. Thus, contrary to JELD-WEN's urgings, it is not possible to conclude that divesting Towanda would leave JELD-WEN without options, even in the short term. JELD-WEN's own business records show otherwise.

The record also leads to the conclusion that obtaining doorskins from alternate suppliers or building a replacement plant is not any more promising for JELD-WEN than it is for Steves. Because of the merger, the only other domestic supplier of doorskins is Masonite, purchase from which is conceptually possible but not considered viable by JELD-WEN. And, given Masonite's position on sales to the Independents, JELD-WEN is likely correct. JELD-WEN conceptually could also purchase doorskins from foreign suppliers, such as Teverpan. But JELD-WEN, like Steves, has concerns about the quality of doorskins made by foreign suppliers, and those suppliers offer fewer SKUs than Towanda. Considering the record as a whole, the Court concludes that foreign suppliers cannot meet a significant part of JELD-WEN's requirements any more than they can meet a significant part of Steves' requirements.

Finally, the record is clear JELD-WEN could build its own doorskin manufacturing plant to replace Towanda's production. And, JELD-WEN is equipped to do that because it has extensive experience building such plants. However, that option would require considerable time and resources. The record shows that JELD-WEN would need at least two to two and a half years, more likely longer, to complete the project. The cost to JELD-WEN has been estimated to be between [ ] to set up a facility with production lines similar to Towanda's. That is a very wide range and thus is quite imprecise.

In sum, the Court finds that divestiture of Towanda would have significant, but not well-documented, consequences for JELD-WEN. However, nothing in the record permits the Court to conclude that divestiture would create the “disaster” that JELD-WEN's counsel urge the Court to find.

The record shows that limitations on JELD-WEN's total production capacity could have several collateral consequences. For instance, JELD-WEN has long-term doorskin supply agreements with several door customers. One of those contracts, with a U.K.-based company called Howdens, provides for certain penalties if JELD-WEN cannot meet Howden's supply needs, with the precise consequences dependent on the size and frequency of the failure. See DX-943 §§ 3.3, 5.13. However, JELD-WEN's obligations with respect to those penalties are subject to a force majeure clause,<sup>13</sup> see id. § 22, which might apply to capacity reductions because of a divestiture order. See id. § 1.1, at 7. Although Howdens is a foreign customer that is supplied primarily by JELD-WEN U.K. and JELD-WEN Europe, see DX-943 § 3.3, JELD-WEN's contracts with domestic customers like The Home Depot and Lowe's contain similar provisions.

<sup>13</sup> JELD-WEN's assertion to the contrary is mistaken. See Def. FOF ¶ 190. The contract states that the force majeure provision applies “[w]ithout prejudice to clauses 5.10 to 5.16”—that is, including the cited penalty provision for delivery failures. DX-943 § 22; see also id. § 5.13.

In addition, JELD-WEN argues that both its internal and external customers would have to deal with higher doorskin prices and a less streamlined purchasing process. Reduced doorskin capacity, says JELD-WEN, would force JELD-WEN to raise its prices where permitted. Whether that would, or could, be done with a competitive *647 Towanda as a supplier was not addressed by JELD-WEN's witness.

Furthermore, if JELD-WEN's legacy plants cannot produce all of Towanda's SKUs, customers who previously received doorskins made only at Towanda would need to purchase from both Towanda and JELD-WEN (or another supplier).

And, JELD-WEN projects that losing its external volume altogether would cause it to lose almost [ ] of revenue and [ ] in EBITDA. Finally, says JELD-WEN, its internal customers—its own door plants—would lose earnings without Towanda because they would lack the doorskins needed to make the current volume of doors. That loss is projected to be roughly [ ] decrease in JELD-WEN's EBITDA.

The Court is concerned that the foregoing figures were belatedly cobbled together for the Remedies Hearing and were not produced during discovery so that they could be tested. And, although the Court rejected Steves' motion to exclude this evidence from consideration in the remedies phase of the case, it is not the sort of evidence in which the Court can place much confidence. That said, the record shows that divestiture, if ordered, would result in some not insignificant collateral consequences.

Finally, says JELD-WEN, Towanda's purchase price in a divestiture auction sale would likely not capture Towanda's full value to JELD-WEN. JELD-WEN offered the opinion of its CFO that Towanda's current enterprise value<sup>14</sup> is approximately nine times its EBITDA. By applying that multiplier to Towanda's 2017 EBITDA of [ ], JELD-WEN contends that the plant's enterprise value is around [ ]. That number, says JELD-WEN, is the minimum a purchaser would have to pay JELD-WEN in recognition of Towanda's worth. According to JELD-WEN, a divestiture sale is unlikely to yield this price.

<sup>14</sup> Enterprise value assesses how the stock market values an entity, taking into account the entity's market capitalization and its net debt.

Whether that multiplier (and hence the asserted enterprise value) is appropriate here is not a matter that has been supported by economic evidence. It is, at best, an unresearched, undocumented ball park figure. Nonetheless, as Shapiro testified, a forced sale always contains some “presumed detriments” for the seller. Id. at 808:16-21. There is nothing in the record to suggest otherwise here. However, it is both premature and improvident to conclude that a post-appeals bidding process would not yield a fair price for Towanda as it exists today. That assessment cannot, and should not, be made until there are bids made after the appellate process is ended and future buyers have a clear picture that they will not be engaged in a futile activity. But, the record is sufficient to find that Towanda, including its doorskin business, as well as the MiraTEC and Extira businesses, have value which potential buyers will recognize when it is clear whether divestiture is an appropriate legal remedy.

The jury findings and the foregoing factual findings made by the Court provide the framework for the legal analysis of Steves' request for equitable remedies. The legal analysis reflects additional factual findings that are most appropriately made in context of the specific legal issues to which those additional findings relate.

II. LEGAL ANALYSIS AND CONCLUSIONS

The most significant form of requested relief is divestiture. It will be assessed first. Then, the opinion will consider the so-called “conduct” remedies sought by Steves.

*648 A. Steves' Request for Divestiture

1. Legal Standard

[1] Section 16 of the Clayton Act allows private parties to obtain injunctive relief “against threatened loss or damage by a violation of the antitrust laws.” 15 U.S.C. § 26. This injunctive relief may include an order requiring the acquiring company to divest the assets of the acquired firm. California v. Am. Stores, 495 U.S. 271, 295, 110 S.Ct. 1853, 109 L.Ed.2d 240 (1990).

Given the lack of authority from private suits based on Section 7 of the Clayton Act that have reached the divestiture issue, the decisional law respecting the standard for injunctive relief must come mostly from decisions in cases brought by the Government under Section 15. That provision allows the Government to institute proceedings “to prevent and restrain violations of [the Clayton] Act.” 15 U.S.C. § 25. Notwithstanding the semantic difference between Sections 15 and 16, those provisions offer largely the same (and possibly identical) remedies. See Am. Stores, 495 U.S. at 281-82, 110 S.Ct. 1853.

[2] [3] Whoever brings suit, the Government or private party, “[t]he relief in an antitrust case must be ‘effective to redress the violations’ and ‘to restore competition.’” Ford Motor Co. v. United States, 405 U.S. 562, 573, 92 S.Ct. 1142, 31 L.Ed.2d 492 (1972) (quoting United States v. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 366 U.S. 316, 326, 81 S.Ct. 1243, 6 L.Ed.2d 318 (1961)); see also United States v. U.S. Gypsum Co., 340 U.S. 76, 88, 71 S.Ct. 160, 95 L.Ed. 89

(1950) (an antitrust remedy must, “so far as practicable, cure the ill effects of the illegal conduct, and assure the public freedom from its continuance”). “Mergers come in a wide variety of shapes and sizes,” so the remedy awarded should be “carefully tailored to the competitive harm” in the case. U.S. Dep't of Justice, Antitrust Division Policy Guide to Merger Remedies § I(A) (2011) (“Merger Remedies Guide”). District courts are thus “clothed with large discretion to fit the decree to the special needs of the individual case.” Ford, 405 U.S. at 573, 92 S.Ct. 1142 (internal quotations omitted); see also Zenith Radio Corp. v. Hazeltine Research, Inc., 395 U.S. 100, 131, 89 S.Ct. 1562, 23 L.Ed.2d 129 (1969) (“Section 16 should be construed and applied ... with the knowledge that the remedy it affords, like other equitable remedies, is flexible and capable of nice ‘adjustment and reconciliation between the public interest and private needs as well as between competing private claims.’ ” (quoting Hecht Co. v. Bowles, 321 U.S. 321, 329–330, 64 S.Ct. 587, 88 L.Ed. 754 (1944))).

[4] [5] The “most drastic, but most effective, of antitrust remedies” is divestiture. E.I. du Pont, 366 U.S. at 326, 81 S.Ct. 1243, but complete divestiture is “the remedy best suited to redress the ills of a competitive merger.” Am. Stores, 495 U.S. at 285, 110 S.Ct. 1853; see also Ford, 405 U.S. at 573, 92 S.Ct. 1142. For this reason, the DOJ seeks divestiture in “the vast majority of cases” like this one. Merger Remedies Guide § I(B)(1). Moreover, “[t]he relief which can be afforded [under Section 15] ... is not limited to the restoration of the status quo ante” in the pre-acquisition market. Ford, 405 U.S. at 573 n.8, 92 S.Ct. 1142; cf. U.S. Gypsum, 340 U.S. at 89, 71 S.Ct. 160 (equitable remedy for Sherman Act violation can affect “[legal] practices connected with acts actually found to be illegal,” so that defendants are “denied future benefits from their forbidden conduct”). Consequently, divestiture may extend to assets that were unrelated to the antitrust violation if the divested entity would need those assets to become competitive, or if the integration of legally- and illegally-acquired assets makes their *649 separation impossible. See Utah Pub. Serv. Comm'n v. El Paso Nat. Gas Co., 395 U.S. 464, 469, 89 S.Ct. 1860, 23 L.Ed.2d 474 (1969) (approving equal division between defendant and divested entity of gas reserves developed post-merger); Polypore Int'l, Inc. v. FTC, 686 F.3d 1208, 1218-19 (11th Cir. 2012) (affirming FTC's inclusion of a foreign plant in divestiture order because it “needed to be divested to restore the competition eliminated by the acquisition and provide the acquirer with the ability to compete”); see also Malcolm R. Pfunder et al., Compliance with Divestiture Orders under Section 7 of the Clayton Act: An Analysis of the Relief Obtained, 17 Antitrust Bull. 19, 56-67 (1972) (detailing approaches to identifying divestiture assets).

[6] [7] Structural remedies like divestiture also can be coupled with—or replaced entirely by—conduct remedies that can “preserve a merger’s ... efficiencies” and limit anticompetitive conduct at the same time. Merger Remedies Guide § II. “Conduct relief can be a particularly effective option when a structural remedy would eliminate the merger’s potential efficiencies, but, absent a remedy, the merger would harm competition.” Id.; see also In re Evanston Nw. Healthcare Corp., 144 F.T.C. 1, 520 (2007). However, “conduct remedies risk excessive government entanglement in the market,” Saint Alphonsus Med. Ctr.-Nampa Inc. v. St. Luke’s Health Sys., Ltd., 778 F.3d 775, 793 (9th Cir. 2015), so they should be “tailored as precisely as possible to the competitive harms associated with the merger.” Merger Remedies Guide § II n.12. This approach is consistent with the general need for courts considering divestiture to avoid “impos[ing] sanctions ... which ultimately create economic havoc” in industries in which courts are not “well-versed.” 5 Earl W. Kintner et al., Federal Antitrust Law § 40.9 (2017).

At the same time, courts have observed that divestiture is an “‘extreme remedy.’” Taleff v. Sw. Airlines Co., 828 F.Supp.2d 1118, 1122 (N.D. Cal. 2011), aff’d, 554 F. App’x 598 (9th Cir. 2014) (quoting Broadcom Corp. v. Qualcomm Inc., 501 F.3d 297, 322 (3d Cir. 2007) ). It also has some drawbacks. One antitrust treatise highlights three particular problems:

By and large, spinoffs of established businesses or subsidiaries are far more successful than the creation of new ones. Second, the merging firms have every incentive to make the divestiture work poorly, particularly if it calls for the creation of a competitive firm. Third, buyers who are not competitors or are not established in the business may start out at a very considerable disadvantage, which sometimes later proves fatal.

9G Phillip E. Areeda & Herbert Hovenkamp, Antitrust Law ¶ 990c2 (4th ed. 2016) (footnotes omitted); see also 5 Kintner et al., supra, § 40.12 (listing “potential hazards of divestiture”).

[8] [9] [10] [11] [12] Divestiture also operates somewhat differently in private suits. The Supreme Court has explicitly noted that a district court’s ability to order divestiture does not “mean that such power should be exercised in every situation in which the Government would be entitled to such relief under [Section] 15.” Am. Stores, 495 U.S. at 295, 110 S.Ct. 1853. Also, Section 16 requires a plaintiff to establish standing to seek injunctive relief, and a defendant can rely on equitable defenses and other equitable considerations to avoid divestiture. Id. at 295-96, 110 S.Ct. 1853. And, in government actions, “the proof of the violation of law may itself establish sufficient public injury to warrant relief.” Id. at 295, 110 S.Ct. 1853. Thus, it is no surprise that, in cases brought by the government, *650 Courts have viewed divestiture as “simple, relatively easy to administer, and sure,” E.I. du Pont, 366 U.S. at 331, 81 S.Ct. 1243, because hardships do not need to be balanced nor the public interest assessed in the same way as in Section 16 cases. See Ford, 405 U.S. at 575, 92 S.Ct. 1142 (“[O]nce the Government has successfully borne the considerable burden of establishing a violation of law, all doubts as to the remedy are to be resolved in its favor.” (quoting E.I. du Pont, 366 U.S. at 334, 81 S.Ct. 1243) ); El Paso Nat. Gas, 395 U.S. at 472, 89 S.Ct. 1860 (“[T]he pinch on private interests is not relevant to fashioning an antitrust decree, as the public interest is our sole concern.”); E.I. du Pont, 366 U.S. at 326, 81 S.Ct. 1243 (“[C]ourts are authorized, indeed required, to decree relief effective to redress the violations, whatever the adverse effect of such a decree on private interests.”). These differences do not make those precedents inapposite, but they do caution that, in a private action, divestiture is not as easy a remedy as it is in a government action.

It is also true that scholars have expressed doubt about the wisdom of divestiture under Section 16. Indeed, according to one treatise, “private divestiture is to be avoided when other injunctive relief is effective” because “courts are in agreement that divestiture should be applied in a relatively limited number of private suits due to the wide-ranging repercussions of such action, and the possible adverse effect on interests of those who are not parties to the antitrust violation.” 5 Kintner et al., supra, § 40.32 (citing, inter alia, Burkhead v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 308 F.Supp. 120, 127 (N.D. Cal. 1970) (“[D]ivestiture would appear to be appropriate only in a limited number of cases where no other form of preventative relief would suffice ....”); Schrader v. Nat’l Screen Serv. Corp., 1955 Trade Cas. ¶ 68,217, at 71,009 (E.D. Pa. 1955) (“[C]onsiderations of policy are against decreeing divestiture or the complete destruction of a nationwide business at the suit of an individual in a private action under the antitrust laws ....”); cf. Blue Cross & Blue Shield United of Wis. v. Marshfield Clinic, 883 F.Supp. 1247, 1264 (W.D. Wis. 1995), aff'd in part, rev'd in part on other grounds, 65 F.3d 1406 (7th Cir. 1995) (“It is questionable whether divestiture of a long completed transaction is an appropriate remedy in a private action under the Sherman Act.”). Similarly, Areeda and Hovenkamp take the view that “the Government’s recommendation of divestiture deserves far more weight than a similar request from other litigants.” 3D Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, ¶ 326b. Because divestiture can have “far-reaching effects on persons who are not parties to the litigation” and “can affect the viability of otherwise profitable companies, the status of preexisting contracts, and the fortunes of rivals,” they recommend taking “great care” before ordering divestiture in private actions. Id.

[13] American Stores, to some extent, has changed the Clayton Act landscape because most of the foregoing cases were decided and since the foregoing views were expressed by commentators. Nonetheless, the concerns expressed in the pre-American Store cases and comments teach that courts must rely on the facts of each case to decide whether divestiture is an appropriate remedy and that courts should resort to it in limited circumstances.

[14] [15] [16] [17] That said, it is still true that divestiture should be ordered when it is the most effective way of restoring the substantially lessened competition brought about by the merger at issue and where its collateral consequences can be mitigated. And, the appropriate remedy should be selected upon “determining (a) what competitive harm the violation has caused or likely will cause and (b) how the proposed relief will remedy that particular competitive harm.” Merger Remedies Guide § I(A). Moreover, that remedy should be “calculated to minimize adverse economic effects upon the industry, the public, and the stockholders affected by the unlawful merger.... [C]aution, progressive enforcement, and remedy formulation on a case-by-case basis are essential ingredients to effectively combat the effects of an antitrust violation, and to minimize the risk of economic dislocation.” 5 Kintner et al., supra, § 40.9 (footnote omitted).

[18] [19] [20] These general considerations should be kept in mind when assessing whether to award divestiture or alternate injunctive relief. However, the parties agree that “well-established principles of equity” establish the framework governing requests for injunctive relief, including divestiture, under the Clayton Act. eBay Inc. v. MercExchange, L.L.C., 547 U.S. 388, 391, 126 S.Ct. 1837, 164 L.Ed.2d 641 (2006); see also Am. Stores, 495 U.S. at 285, 110 S.Ct. 1853 (Section 16 permits divestiture only “when appropriate in light of equitable principles”). Under that approach, a plaintiff ... must satisfy a four-factor test before a court may grant such relief. A plaintiff must demonstrate: (1) that it has suffered an irreparable injury; (2) that remedies available at law, such as monetary damages, are inadequate to compensate for that injury; (3) that, considering the balance of hardships between the plaintiff and defendant, a remedy in equity is warranted; and (4) that the public interest would not be disserved by a permanent injunction.

eBay, 547 U.S. at 391, 126 S.Ct. 1837 (emphasis added).<sup>15</sup>

Even where those factors are met, district courts still retain “equitable discretion” to grant or deny permanent injunctive relief. Id.

<sup>15</sup> Although eBay applied that test to the Patent Act, the Supreme Court’s concluding statement that such discretion also extends to “other cases governed by such standards” makes clear that the test applies in other cases arising under federal statutes. E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co. v. Kolon Indus., Inc., 894 F.Supp.2d 691, 697 (E.D. Va. 2012) (citing eBay, 547 U.S. at 394, 126 S.Ct. 1837).

2. Section 16 Standing

[21] Before considering the eBay factors, the Court must assess whether Steves has standing to seek divestiture. “[I]n order to seek injunctive relief under [Section] 16, a private plaintiff must allege threatened loss or damage ‘of the type the antitrust laws were designed to prevent and that flows from that which makes defendants’ acts unlawful.’ ” Cargill, Inc. v. Monfort of Colo., Inc., 479 U.S. 104, 113, 107 S.Ct. 484, 93 L.Ed.2d 427 (1986) (quoting Brunswick Corp. v. Pueblo Bowl-O-Mat, Inc., 429 U.S. 477, 489, 97 S.Ct. 690, 50 L.Ed.2d 701 (1977) ). In other words, Steves must be able to demonstrate “a significant threat of injury from an impending violation of the antitrust laws or from a contemporary violation likely to continue or recur.” Zenith Radio, 395 U.S. at 130, 89 S.Ct. 1562.

[22] Steves contends that the likely loss of its business when the Supply Agreement expires in September 2021 gives it standing here. This “threatened loss” is linked to an antitrust injury that has already occurred: JELD-WEN’s termination of the Supply Agreement in September 2014, which was enabled by its increased market power after the CMI Acquisition. See Summary Judgment Op. at 30-31. JELD-WEN disagrees that Steves will go out of business when the *652 Supply Agreement ends. See Def. Post-Remedies Equitable Br. (ECF No. 1652) (Under Seal) at 25-27 (discussing issue in context of irreparable harm). If JELD-WEN is correct, then Steves would need to identify other threatened antitrust loss or damage to support its request for divestiture.

[23] If JELD-WEN is asserting that Steves lacks standing because it will not go out of business in September 2021, that argument is unpersuasive. Steves’ Section 7 claim sought both legal and equitable relief, and the Seventh Amendment entitled Steves to a jury trial on “all issues common to both claims.” Davis v. Amphill Rayon Workers, Inc., 446 F.Supp. 681, 683 (E.D. Va. 1978), aff’d, 594 F.2d 856 (4th Cir. 1979) (citing Beacon Theatres, Inc. v. Westover, 359 U.S. 500, 510-11, 79 S.Ct. 948, 3 L.Ed.2d 988 (1959) ). “[A] jury verdict in such mixed law-equity cases is binding on the court as to all matters in law and as to all matters in equity where the facts found are common to the law and equity issues.” Id. (citing Dairy Queen v. Wood, 369 U.S. 469, 479, 82 S.Ct. 894, 8 L.Ed.2d 44 (1962) ); see also Bresler v. Wilmington Tr. Co., No. CIV. PJM 09-2957, 2015 WL 1402377, at *22 (D. Md. Mar. 25, 2015), amended in part, 2015 WL 4385994 (D. Md. July 10, 2015) (“ [W]here claims at law and in equity are joined and the legal claims are tried separately by a jury, the jury’s verdict operates as a finding of fact binding on the trial court in its determination of the equitable claims.” (quoting Dybczak v. Tuskegee Inst., 737 F.2d 1524, 1526-27 (11th Cir. 1984) ) ); Int’l Wood Processors v. Power Dry, Inc., 593 F.Supp. 710, 737 (D.S.C. 1984), aff’d, 792 F.2d 416 (4th Cir. 1986) (“The court is ... bound by the jury verdict on its subsequent ruling on the equitable claims under the doctrine of collateral estoppel.”).

Here, the Court instructed the jury that Steves’ request for future lost profits was based on the claim that Steves “was harmed because, as a result of JELD-WEN’s alleged antitrust violation, Steves will be unable to maintain a viable interior molded door manufacturing business when the contract between Steves and JELD-WEN terminates on September 10, 2021, and will therefore be unable to exist as a company.” The Court further instructed the jury that it “must consider any factors that could affect the future success of Steves’ business and any other factors affecting Steves’ future performance.” Jury Instructions (ECF No. 1025), Instruction No. 35. After receiving these instructions, the jury awarded Steves damages for future lost profits. Verdict Form ¶ 3(b). Any factual determinations that were necessary to award these damages are binding on the Court.

To show that Steves will not go out of business, JELD-WEN relies on evidence suggesting that it might continue to sell doorskins to Steves after the Supply Agreement expires; that, without JELD-WEN, Steves can satisfy its doorskin needs through domestic or foreign suppliers like Masonite, Kastamonu, or Teverpan; and that Steves could build its own doorskin manufacturing plant to replace the lost volume from JELD-WEN. But JELD-WEN presented virtually the same evidence to the jury at trial. The jury could not have awarded future lost profits without considering and rejecting that evidence, which is essential to an issue the jury was required to consider—“the future success of Steves’ business and any other factors affecting Steves’ future performance.” Instead, the jury must have decided that Steves will go out of business because Steves cannot find any viable alternative means of doorskin supply. Furthermore, nothing from the Remedies Hearing or the trade secrets trial renders this jury’s conclusions *653 improper or unreliable.<sup>16</sup> Consequently, JELD-WEN’s position about the likelihood of Steves going out of business is foreclosed by the verdict.

<sup>16</sup> The parties dispute whether the Court may rely on the record in the trade secrets trial to help resolve the divestiture issue. See Aug. 2 Tr. (ECF No. 1751) at 90:15-91:20, 203:18-206:10. Assuming, without deciding, that the Court can, that record does not establish that Steves can prevent going out of business by building a doorskin plant by September 2021. At best, the evidence at the trade secrets trial indicates that Steves has preliminarily concluded that building a doorskin plant is not feasible, but is continuing to investigate the possibility of doing so. That is no different than what the evidence at the antitrust trial showed. See Def. FOF ¶¶ 265-78.

Moreover, given the factual overlay between the legal and equitable relief, the Court finds, by a preponderance of the evidence, that it is not likely that JELD-WEN will continue to supply Steves with doorskins after the Supply Agreement terminates. Indeed, part of JELD-WEN's pricing plan was to kill off some of the independent door makers that were its doorskin customers. And, the Court finds that JELD-WEN's conduct toward Steves (demanding price increases two years after the Supply Agreement was executed even though costs had decreased, engaging in evasive, sharp, and deceptive conduct over the calculation of input costs under Section 6 of the Supply Agreement, and in its general bullying conduct toward Steves) shows that JELD-WEN regarded Steves, a significant player in the interior door market, to be an independent to be killed off.

Further, the Court, as finder of the fact in the remedies phase of the case, finds that Steves has proved that, absent equitable relief, it will be forced out of business when the Supply Agreement terminates in 2021 (See Section II.A.3.(a), infra). And, as found above, JELD-WEN is still engaging in the conduct that led the jury to conclude that the merger had substantially lessened competition and that had caused Steves antitrust injury.

In sum, for the foregoing reasons, Steves has standing to seek injunctive relief under Section 16 that would remedy the threatened loss, and damage presented by the merger.

3. Equitable Factors Analysis

(a) Irreparable Injury & Absence of Adequate Remedy at Law

[24] [25] To obtain equitable relief in the form of an injunction here, and an order mandating divestiture and conduct remedies, Steves must prove that, absent such relief, it will suffer irreparable injury. Generally, “ ‘[i]rreparable injury is suffered when monetary damages are difficult to ascertain or are inadequate.’ ” Handsome Brook Farm, LLC v. Humane Farm Animal Care, Inc., 193 F.Supp.3d 556, 574 (E.D. Va. 2016) (quoting Multi-Channel TV Cable Co. v. Charlottesville Quality Cable Operating Co., 22 F.3d 546, 551 (4th Cir. 1994) ). Whether a plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law “inevitably overlaps” with whether it has suffered irreparable harm. MercExchange L.L.C. v. eBay, Inc., 500 F.Supp.2d 556, 582 (E.D. Va. 2007).

Most courts to have confronted the question have found that the permanent loss of a business constitutes irreparable injury. See, e.g., Warren v. City of Athens, 411 F.3d 697, 711 (6th Cir. 2005) (“financial ruin” that would happen without injunction is irreparable injury); Am. Passage Media Corp. v. Cass Commc'ns, Inc., 750 F.2d 1470, 1474 (9th Cir. 1985) (“The threat of being driven out of business is sufficient to establish irreparable harm.”). This is particularly true where a company has operated *654 as a family business for a substantial period of time. Judge Friendly recognized long ago that “the right to continue a business in which [a father] had engaged for twenty years and into which his son had recently entered is not measurable entirely in monetary terms” because “the [family] want[s] to sell automobiles, not to live on the income from a damages award.” Semmes Motors, Inc. v. Ford Motor Co., 429 F.2d 1197, 1205 (2d Cir. 1970). This “seminal decision” has been cited often, including by the Fourth Circuit. Auto. Elec. Serv. Corp. v. Ass'n of Auto. Aftermarket Distribs., 747 F.Supp. 1483, 1514 (E.D.N.Y. 1990) (“This is not a case of mere lost profits, but rather the basic existence of a seventy year old business may be threatened.”); see also Tom Doherty Assocs., Inc. v. Saban Entm't, Inc., 60 F.3d 27, 38 (2d Cir. 1995) (threat to “the very viability of the plaintiff's business” is irreparable injury); Wells Am. Corp. v. Ziff-Davis Pub. Co., 900 F.2d 258, 1990 WL 33532, at *2 (4th Cir. 1990) (“harm to plaintiffs' [sic] goodwill, its business reputation, business opportunities, or its continued existence” may be irreparable); Roso-Lino Beverage Distribs., Inc. v. Coca-Cola Bottling Co. of N.Y., 749 F.2d 124, 125–26 (2d Cir. 1984) (“The loss of [plaintiff]'s distributorship, an ongoing business representing many years of effort and the livelihood of its husband and wife owners, constitutes irreparable harm.”); Fed. Leasing, Inc. v. Underwriters at Lloyd's, 650 F.2d 495, 500 (4th Cir. 1981) (plaintiff showed irreparable harm where it “s[ought] to preserve its existence and its business”).

There is no reason for the Court to deviate from that majority approach here. The termination of a plaintiff's business might not constitute irreparable harm if the entity has only been in business for a “short period of time,” DFW Metro Line Servs. v. Sw. Bell Tel. Co., 901 F.2d 1267, 1269 (5th Cir. 1990) (per curiam); see also HCI Techs., Inc. v. Avaya, Inc., 446 F.Supp.2d 518, 521 (E.D. Va. 2006) (citing DFW Metro in dicta), or if that injury could be fully remedied by money damages, see Hardin v. Houston Chronicle Pub. Co., 426 F.Supp. 1114, 1117-18 (S.D. Tex. 1977), aff'd, 572 F.2d 1106

(5th Cir. 1978); Lamarca v. Miami Herald Publ'g Co., 395 F.Supp. 324, 328 (S.D. Fla. 1975), aff'd, 524 F.2d 1230 (5th Cir. 1975). But, Steves has been in business for more than 150 years, making the 1.5-year existence of the plaintiff in DFW Metro seem fleeting in comparison. 901 F.2d at 1269 n.7. In addition, as in several of the cases described above, there is independent value to continuing Steves as a family operation: Edward and Sam Steves described at the Remedies Hearing their family's deep connection with Steves' business, in which their children have begun to continue and, neither Hardin or Lamarca involved the facts that Steves has proved in this case.

[26] JELD-WEN tries to distinguish Semmes Motors and subsequent cases in three ways. First, it argues that Steves' business is not at risk because it has several viable doorskin supply alternatives when the Supply Agreement terminates. This line of reasoning has been addressed in connection with Steves' Section 16 standing. See supra Section I.A.2. In sum, the Court finds, as did the jury, that, after 2021, purchases from JELD-WEN, Masonite, or foreign suppliers do not provide viable alternative supplies of doorskins in the quantity and quality required by Steves. Indeed, it is disingenuous of JELD-WEN to suggest that Steves can turn to foreign suppliers when JELD-WEN itself will not do so. Further, as set out in Section II.B.6 above, the Court finds that building a doorskin plant of its own is *655 not a viable alternative way to supply Steves' doorskin needs after 2021.<sup>17</sup>

<sup>17</sup> JELD-WEN's claim that Steves should be held accountable here for delaying its efforts to build a doorskin plant is unpersuasive, especially where that factor did not affect the jury's future lost profits award. Intentionally engaging in conduct that contributes to an irreparable injury may undermine a plaintiff's irreparable harm showing. See Cone v. Randolph Cty. Schs. Bd. of Educ., No. 1:06CV00579, 2006 WL 3000445, at *5, *7 (M.D.N.C. Oct. 20, 2006) (child's loss of educational services was not irreparable injury, in part because it was caused by parents' intentional obstruction of school placement plan). However, the minimal, and unpersuasive, evidence cited by JELD-WEN does not establish that Steves ceased efforts to build a doorskin plant in order to improve its position in this litigation. Moreover, the record shows that Steves would not have made any notable progress towards building a plant had it devoted its full attention during these proceedings to finding a manufacturing partner. Steves' irreparable injury thus cannot be traced back to its decision to stop negotiations with manufacturing partners. In any event, the record shows that Steves simply cannot afford to build its own doorskin plant so JELD-WEN's position is academic at best.

Second, JELD-WEN argues that Steves' claimed injury is merely harm to members of the Steves family, which does not justify permanent injunctive relief for Steves. But the only two cases that JELD-WEN cites in support, Moody v. Michigan Gaming Control Board, No. 12-CV-13593, 2013 WL 1664380 (E.D. Mich. Apr. 17, 2013) and Law v. National Collegiate Athletic Association, No. 94-2053-KHV, 1996 WL 104328 (D. Kan. Jan. 5, 1996), are distinguishable. In Moody, the only harm underlying the plaintiff's emergency preliminary injunction motion was his nephew's and son's inability to obtain their harness racing training licenses—an injury not suffered by the plaintiff, whose occupational license had been suspended. 2013 WL 1664380, at *1-2. Similarly, in Law, the plaintiff coaches sought a classwide injunction under the Clayton Act to prevent the NCAA from enforcing a restricted earnings rule against any coach. However, each named plaintiff had to demonstrate a threat of antitrust injury because the class had not been certified, and just two were employed under the rule in question. As a result, those two coaches could seek injunctive relief only for themselves, not for the whole class. See Law, 1996 WL 104328, at *3-4.

Steves, on the other hand, is not seeking divestiture to remedy some harm suffered by individuals in the Steves family rather than Steves itself. Instead, Steves' irreparable injury is the loss of its business. That the business also has a family character is relevant to the irreparable injury analysis. See Semmes Motors, 429 F.2d at 1205; Auto. Elec. Serv., 747 F.Supp. at 1514. Moody and Law might be applicable if Steves had only identified as an irreparable injury the effect of the loss of Steves' business on, for instance, Edward and Sam Steves, but Steves has not made that claim here. Accordingly, the references to the Steves family in Steves' papers do not lessen the irreparable nature of the company's antitrust injury.

[27] Finally, JELD-WEN insists that Semmes Motors and its progeny, most of which deal with preliminary injunctions, are meaningless where, as here, a plaintiff has obtained future lost profits damages. To obtain equitable relief, a plaintiff must show that its harm cannot be compensated by money damages. Dairy Queen, 369 U.S. at 478, 82 S.Ct. 894; Hughes Network Sys., Inc. v. InterDigital Commc'ns Corp., 17 F.3d 691, 694 (4th Cir. 1994). Tucker, however, told the jury that his lost profits calculation was a “reasonable,” “conservative,” and non-speculative estimate of Steves' future harm. As Tucker proposed, *656 the jury awarded damages of $46,480,581 in loss profits. Trebling that part of the award under the Clayton Act yields total future lost profit damages of around $139 million. See 15 U.S.C. § 15(a).<sup>18</sup> In JELD-WEN's view, Steves' “strategic decision to calculate its future harm in money damages” at trial precludes it from now claiming that those damages are inadequate. Def. Post-Remedies Equitable Br. at 24.

18 There were other antitrust damages that also were trebled. Those that survived judgment as a matter of law also will be trebled.

[28] A plaintiff's presentation of a future damages number may influence the irreparable injury and legal remedy inadequacy analysis. In SAS Institute, Inc. v. World Programming Ltd., 874 F.3d 370 (4th Cir. 2017), the plaintiff sought and received damages for lost profits, almost half of which was based on expected future losses. The court rejected the plaintiff's request for permanent injunctive relief because it found that the “fact that [the plaintiff] already asked for and received these future damages undermines its claim of irreparable injury moving forward.” Id. at 386. Likewise, in International Wood Processors, the court determined that the plaintiff had an adequate remedy at law because it “requested and received prospective damages” at trial, and under its own damages theory, could “suffer no further future harm” after receiving future lost profits damages. 593 F.Supp. at 737. And, in Taleff, the court denied plaintiff's request for a post-merger divestiture order under Section 16 because the only alleged harm was “expressed in terms of monetary damages.” 828 F.Supp.2d at 1123. Thus, the plaintiff had not shown that legal remedies would be inadequate.

[29] [30] Nonetheless, a plaintiff is not prohibited from seeking alternate injunctive relief merely because it tries to quantify its future harm in front of the jury. The purpose of the Remedies Hearing was, in part, to allow Steves to present further evidence about the inadequacy of its future lost profits award. See Order (ECF No. 1127) at 2.<sup>19</sup> Steves then put on compelling evidence of the incalculable value of its business, which the Court (like the jury) finds would not survive without injunctive relief restoring competition. None of the cases cited by JELD-WEN involved this same sort of loss. See SAS Inst., 874 F.3d at 386 (“[Plaintiff]'s claims of difficult-to-calculate damages in the form of lost business relationships, market share, and goodwill were largely unsupported by evidence.”); Taleff, 828 F.Supp.2d at 1123 n.7 (plaintiff alleged harm in terms of higher ticket prices and less cost-effective service); Int'l Wood Processors, 593 F.Supp. at 737 (plaintiff would “suffer no further future harm” after receiving future lost profits). And, Steves has consistently asserted that JELD-WEN's Section 7 violation threatens the very existence of its business, so its current position *657 cannot be characterized as some sort of opportunistic about-face. Consequently, Steves' representations to the jury do not prevent it from arguing here that future lost profits damages are inadequate.

19 JELD-WEN continues to assert that Steves' quantification of damages must have been an election of legal over equitable remedies. But this wrongly assumes that Steves was required to make an election at some point before now. “Generally, a party is not required to elect between inconsistent remedies or rights or theories of recovery during the trial or at the pleading stage or prior to the jury's verdict; election is generally made after the verdict is entered prior to the entry of judgment.” 28A C.J.S. Election of Remedies § 6 (2018). In any event, “a decision as to the time of election rests within the sound discretion of the trial court.” Id.; see also Rahemtulla v. Hassam, No. CIV.A.3:05-0198, 2008 WL 2247195, at *1 (M.D. Pa. May 30, 2008) (collecting cases). Further, the cases present the so-called “election of remedies” issue as a question of how to preclude double recovery and how to proceed with entry of judgment where the principles of Brown Shoe Co. operate as they do under the facts of this case.

[31] The Court finds that, with an adequate supply of doorskins, Steves would, as it has for 150 years, continue in business and prosper. There is nothing in the record to suggest otherwise. The lost profits award would not provide a supply of doorskins. Rather, the Steves shareholders would, like the Semmes family, just live off of the damages award, a choice which, as explained in Semmes, it does not have to make. Were it otherwise, well-heeled companies, like JELD-WEN, would never have to face the undoing of an illegal merger but, instead, could simply pay the damages and finance their way out of the violation of the Clayton Act, leaving in place a merger that has been proved to have substantially lessened competition.

For these reasons, JELD-WEN's arguments fall short, and Steves has shown that the likely, if not certain, loss of its business is an irreparable injury that cannot be adequately remedied by the future lost profits damages it has been awarded.<sup>20</sup>

<sup>20</sup> Steves has agreed that it is not entitled to both remedies.

(b) Balance of Hardships

[32] Under the third eBay factor, “courts ‘must balance the competing claims of injury and must consider the effect on each party of the granting or withholding of the requested relief.’ ” Winter v. Nat. Res. Def. Council, Inc., 555 U.S. 7, 24, 129 S.Ct. 365, 172 L.Ed.2d 249 (2008) (quoting Amoco Prod. Co. v. Gambell, 480 U.S. 531, 542, 107 S.Ct. 1396, 94 L.Ed.2d 542 (1987) ). Before undertaking that assessment, the Court must address Steves' assertion that the hardships claimed by JELD-WEN should be disregarded because the jury has already found that JELD-WEN violated the Clayton Act. See Pl. Post-Remedies Equitable Br. (ECF No. 1606) (Under Seal) at 20 (divestiture is appropriate even if it entails “harsh consequences” for JELD-WEN). That argument necessarily affects the weight given to JELD-WEN's harms.

[33] Steves cites three cases in support of its position, including E.I. du Pont and El Paso Natural Gas. See El Paso Nat. Gas, 395 U.S. at 472, 89 S.Ct. 1860 (“[T]he pinch on private interests is not relevant to fashioning an antitrust decree, as the public interest is our sole concern.”); E.I. du Pont, 366 U.S. at 326, 81 S.Ct. 1243 (“[C]ourts are authorized, indeed required, to decree relief effective to redress the violations, whatever the adverse effect of such a decree on private interests.”). But Steves' reliance on those cases is misplaced. As noted above, in those cases, the Supreme Court was discussing divestiture in the context of Government actions, which, unlike Section 16 suits, do not implicate private hardships. The third case cited similarly involves an FTC enforcement action and, more importantly, relies on E.I. du Pont. See FTC v. Whole Foods Mkt., Inc., 548 F.3d 1028, 1033 (D.C. Cir. 2008) (“Even remedies which ‘entail harsh consequences’ would be appropriate to ameliorate the harm to competition from an antitrust violation.” (quoting E.I. du Pont, 366 U.S. at 327, 81 S.Ct. 1243) ). Notwithstanding what Steves believes about the perfect applicability of Government cases in the Section 16 setting, the differences between Government and private cases limit the relevance of the Government case principles on the balance of hardship factor because, in Government cases, there is no balance of hardships. See Am. Stores, 495 U.S. at 295-96, 110 S.Ct. 1853; supra Section II.A.1.

*658 [34] [35] Moreover, assigning less, or no, weight to JELD-WEN's hardships would contradict Supreme Court and Fourth Circuit precedent. Steves' argument essentially reduces a court's role to rubber-stamping divestiture based on a jury verdict finding a Section 7 violation. The Supreme Court, however, “has consistently rejected invitations to replace traditional equitable considerations with a rule that an injunction automatically follows a determination that a copyright has been infringed,” instead requiring the hardships to be balanced in every case. eBay, 547 U.S. at 392-93, 126 S.Ct. 1837. The Fourth Circuit found it “impossible to square this directive with the idea that hardship to the losing party should simply be ignored,” “even in cases involving clear wrongdoing.” SAS Inst., 874 F.3d at 388. This statement echoes its earlier determination that courts may not “conclude that any harm that would be suffered by a defendant was self-inflicted and thus entitled to lesser weight in the balancing-of-the-harms portion of the preliminary injunction calculus.” Scotts Co. v. United Indus. Corp., 315 F.3d 264, 285 (4th Cir. 2002). Thus, the Court must consider JELD-WEN's hardships in assessing the balance of hardships.<sup>21</sup>

<sup>21</sup> That is not to say that all harms that JELD-WEN might allege are cognizable here. For example, loss of profits obtained through anticompetitive conduct is not a valid hardship because it is a product of doing what the antitrust laws require—that is, competing with other firms. See New York v. Actavis, PLC, No. 14 CIV. 7473, 2014 WL 7015198, at *45 (S.D.N.Y. Dec. 11, 2014), aff'd sub nom. New York ex rel. Schneiderman v. Actavis PLC, 787 F.3d 638 (2d Cir. 2015); see also Cadence Design Sys., Inc. v. Avant! Corp., 125 F.3d 824, 830 (9th Cir. 1997). Yet JELD-WEN does not rely much on any such harm, and the instances where it does will be appropriately disregarded without affecting the hardship balancing.

[36] Turning then to the balancing of hardships, the Court finds that Steves will suffer irreparable injury without permanent injunctive relief. If the Court does not order an equitable remedy to restore competition, Steves will likely lose its entire business when the Supply Agreement expires.

This effect looms large in the balance of hardships. See Buffalo Courier-Express, Inc. v. Buffalo Evening News, Inc., 601 F.2d 48, 58 (2d Cir. 1979) (balance would have been “amply passed” if plaintiff had “shown a significant possibility that it would be driven out of business” by defendant’s anticompetitive actions); Auto. Elec. Serv., 747 F.Supp. at 1514 (highlighting “ruinous financial hardship” that would result if no equitable relief imposed); cf. SAS Inst., 874 F.3d at 387-88 (noting that permanent injunction “would likely be ruinous” for defendant (internal quotation marks omitted) ). Furthermore, as Steves argues, the relative impact of all the hardships cited by JELD-WEN would be less severe on JELD-WEN than the hardship that will befall Steves. JELD-WEN is a much larger business than Steves, and it is a very diversified company. And, as Steves argues, the record shows that the impact of divestiture on JELD-WEN would not be as a serious a hardship on JELD-WEN as would the loss of doorskin supply. Nevertheless, it is necessary to assess the hardship that likely will befall JELD-WEN in the event of divestiture. Of course, it is JELD-WEN’s burden to prove the hardships that it will face.

[37] JELD-WEN’s chief witness on this topic was its CFO, Brooks Mallard, who testified to numerous speculative consequences of divestiture which the Court will not consider because of their speculative nature. Nonetheless, other witnesses have testified, at least generally, about the hardship that divestiture would visit upon *659 JELD-WEN. Chief among those are the costs associated with separating Towanda as an independent entity. JELD-WEN and CMI integrated numerous functions when they merged in 2012, and it takes time and resources to “unscramble all those eggs” now. Suppl. Interrogatory Responses at 4. Courts have found that the “obvious hardship” of splitting up entities that have “combined ... assets and operations” after a merger weighs heavily in the equitable analysis. Ginsburg v. InBev NV/SA, 623 F.3d 1229, 1235-36 (8th Cir. 2010); see also Taleff, 828 F.Supp.2d at 1123 & n.8. That hardship is real, but it can be reduced by divestiture conditions that, for instance, allow current Towanda employees to remain at the plant and require the new owner and JELD-WEN to work together to effectuate an orderly transition of administrative support services. But JELD-WEN would still need to spend money to effect that transition, and there is no obvious way to eliminate that expense. And, of course, “[a] long time has elapsed between the closing of the merger and the conclusion of the litigation,” and that presents “greater risks of unforeseen costs and failure.” In re Evanston Nw. Healthcare, 144 F.T.C. at 521. The record does not permit quantification of those costs, but they are present in some measure, and must be considered in the balance of hardships.

As discussed in Section I.A.9, divestiture would also affect JELD-WEN’s ability to meet its customers’ doorskin demands. As explained previously, the mix model allocates SKU production across all four of JELD-WEN’s plants, and Towanda’s Dieform line permits the manufacture of many SKUs that JELD-WEN’s legacy plants do not currently produce. Even if Steves shifts its entire doorskin volume to the divested Towanda entity (thereby freeing capacity in JELD-WEN’s plants that supply much of Steves requirements), JELD-WEN would still need to satisfy its other customers’ demands for different doorskin varieties. JELD-WEN says that it could not fully accomplish this goal by simply increasing the number of SKUs produced by its legacy plants because those plants are already running close to full production capacity. But, there is present some unquantified additional capacity. Also, JELD-WEN says that attempting to produce more SKUs would add downtime because of die changes, thereby decreasing total production capacity.

The extent of this capacity decrease is not shown by the record because JELD-WEN has not studied how it would reallocate SKUs among its legacy plants if Towanda was divested, and thus the extent of the decrease must be considered as speculative and unproven. However, the Court can still consider that there will be some shortfall and that can be considered as a hardship. See SAS Inst., 874 F.3d at 387-88 (examining hardships in general manner); Ginsburg, 623 F.3d at 1235-36 (same).

JELD-WEN’s alternatives for obtaining doorskins present their own hardships. JELD-WEN’s Latvia facility only produces a few doorskin designs that are usable in the U.S. doorskin market. Other foreign suppliers do not offer as many SKUs as Towanda and, as Steves knows from experience, the quality is not consistent. But, JELD-WEN’s “disaster plan” includes supply from Latvia and foreign suppliers as short-term options. However, based on the record, the Court cannot conclude that all SKUs lost to JELD-WEN by virtue of the divestiture of Towanda could be replaced by Latvia and foreign suppliers. In contrast, also as considered on JELD-WEN’s disaster plan, restarting operation of the Marion plant would go much further in remedying JELD-WEN’s doorskin deficit. Marion has a low-volume/high-mix line that could serve a similar function to Towanda’s Dieform *660 line, even if the total production capacity is lower. It is estimated that to restart the Marion plant would cost [ ] because of the need to replace old equipment and comply with environmental relations. And it would take about two years to activate Marion.<sup>22</sup>

<sup>22</sup> The record teaches that building a new doorskin plant is not realistic in the short run, even with JELD-WEN's experience.

Of course, Steves' current divestiture proposal would prevent JELD-WEN from incurring any immediate deficit in doorskin supply. That proposal includes a condition by which JELD-WEN can purchase from the divested entity, for a period of two years, enough doorskins "to ensure that JELD-WEN will be able to fulfill orders of its door and doorskin customers" that exist at the time any divestiture order is entered, as long as those doorskins "cannot reasonably be manufactured as one of its remaining doorskin manufacturing facilities." Proposed Divestiture Order § VI(J). This provision would, in theory, permit JELD-WEN to meet its customers' doorskin needs through Towanda while setting up another long-term solution during that proposed two-year transition period. That approach would ameliorate the doorskins shortfall hardship identified by JELD-WEN and could even eliminate it, particularly if some of JELD-WEN's other independent customers choose to exit their contracts and buy from the new owner of Towanda. Of course, in that event, JELD-WEN would lose the profits from those sales.

The new owner of a divested Towanda might choose to supply JELD-WEN for longer than the two-year period proposed by Steves. Based on JELD-WEN's claim of hardship, that would seem to be an attractive proposition to JELD-WEN. And, a new owner likely would prefer the stability that would ensure a longer term supply contract with JELD-WEN. Thus, there are ameliorating measures for an even longer term hardship (beyond the first two years after divestiture).

The collateral effects of any sustained drop in doorskin volume are hard to predict on this record. JELD-WEN emphasizes the penalties that might be imposed under certain long-term supply agreements if those customers' needs cannot be met, but the language of the force majeure clauses in those contracts suggests that supply failures because of a divestiture order would not give rise to any fines. At the same time, JELD-WEN says that its door manufacturing plants would produce fewer doors based on the doorskins available, thereby reducing the company's EBITDA.

It is also reasonably inferable that JELD-WEN would lose some external customers, both because of the limited doorskin quantities and if JELD-WEN increases prices to cope with lower production capacity. Counting this loss as a hardship is questionable because, in most cases, it would be impossible to tell whether customers left because of the fallout from JELD-WEN's doorskin deficit or because of increased competition, which is an appropriate result of injunctive relief. See Actavis, 2014 WL 7015198, at \*45. That issue aside, loss of any customers would lower JELD-WEN's total revenue and EBITDA to some extent. But, if customers shift because of increased competition, that is a hardship that is expected to accompany divestiture and it does not weigh heavy in the balance of hardships.

JELD-WEN also claims hardship because the reallocation of production could cause loss of employment in its legacy *661 plants. That assertion is pure speculation. And, it is contrary to the assertion made by JELD-WEN that, after divestiture, its legacy plants would be operating at near capacity.

JELD-WEN also contends that divestiture would cause loss of employment at Towanda. That contention is illogical because a new owner would need the experience offered by Towanda's current management and employees. And, the contention is at odds with history because when JELD-WEN bought CMI, the Towanda management and employees came along with the facility. And, in any event, that apprehended harm will be lessened, or eliminated, by requiring the acquiring entity to allow Towanda's management and employees to remain. And, it is logical that those people would benefit from such a requirement.

Finally, JELD-WEN would lose the value of the improvements it has made at Towanda, as well as the MiraTEC and Extira business that it has developed there. JELD-WEN made total investments of around [ ] in manufacturing installations and capital improvements at the plant between 2014 and 2017, which it expected would pay dividends in the form of company-wide savings well into the future. Even if the loss of those investments can be discounted somewhat because they would not have been possible without the anticompetitive merger, they may still be considered as a hardship. See Smith & Nephew, 955 F.Supp.2d at 79; W. Watersheds Project v. Salazar, No. CV 11-00492, 2011 WL 13124018, at \*20 \(C.D. Cal. Aug. 10, 2011\). But, the record also shows that JELD-WEN has recouped (and then some) its investments in Towanda so they will not be lost.

JELD-WEN's acquisition of CMI's MiraTEC and Extira business, on the other hand, has never posed any antitrust concerns, so the loss of that business weighs more heavily in the hardship analysis. As detailed above, JELD-WEN has structured its business so that MiraTEC and Extira are important parts of its future trajectory, and divestiture would force the company to change course. The record establishes that the manufacturing of these lines could not be removed from Towanda.

Whether the new owner would be willing to pay an appropriate value for the MiraTEC and Extira lines is unknown. And, any sale of those lines would involve licensing of intellectual property necessary to make those products. But, here too, the existing management and employees know how to operate the lines and make the product, and there is no reason on the record to believe that the end products would not be bought by those who are buying them now. Certainly, JELD-WEN offered no evidence to that effect. And, if, as JELD-WEN says, the lines are good products, then a buyer of Towanda could be expected to place value on them.

As the foregoing discussion reflects, the consequences of divestiture on JELD-WEN cannot be discerned with certainty in large measure because JELD-WEN has chosen not to internally assess those effects, except in broad and somewhat speculative terms. Nonetheless, from the showing that JELD-WEN has made, the record proves that all of its claimed hardships can be ameliorated by allowing time for an orderly divestiture, by imposing terms to assure JELD-WEN a reliable source of doorskin supply to satisfy its external and internal requirements for at least two years, by assuring that divestiture occurs in an environment and under circumstances that will produce a reasonable purchase price. Steves, on the other hand, has presented forceful evidence to show a more certain and far more serious harm: permanently going out of business. Therefore, *662 even though the scales are not so one-sided as Steves contends, the balance of hardships tips decidedly in Steves' favor.

(c) Public Interest

(1) Legal Standard

[38] [39] The final eBay factor requires the Court to find “that the public interest would not be disserved by a permanent injunction.” eBay, 547 U.S. at 391, 126 S.Ct. 1837. “ ‘The public interest inquiry primarily addresses impact on non-parties rather than parties.’ ” Inst. of Cetacean Research v. Sea Shepherd Conservation Soc., 725 F.3d 940, 946 (9th Cir. 2013) (quoting Bernhardt v. L.A. Cnty., 339 F.3d 920, 931 (9th Cir. 2003) ). Courts are reluctant to cause any “concrete harms to innocent third parties.” If those potential effects exist, the public interest asserted must rely on more than “broad, abstract rule of law concerns.” SAS Inst., 874 F.3d at 388.

[40] That is not an issue here because the public interest in this case has been firmly established by Congress which is responsible not only for passing laws, but also “establish[ing] their relative priority for the Nation,” priorities which courts must respect. Tenn. Valley Auth. v. Hill, 437 U.S. 153, 194, 98 S.Ct. 2279, 57 L.Ed.2d 117 (1978). Accordingly, “[w]here a valid law speaks to the proper level of deference to a particular public interest, it controls.” Inst. of Cetacean Research, 725 F.3d at 946; see also 11A Charles Alan Wright & Arthur R. Miller, Federal Practice and Procedure § 2948.4 (3d ed. 1998) (“The public interest ... may be declared in the form of a statute.”). Here, by enacting Section 7 of the Clayton Act, Congress has explicitly indicated that preserving competition is in the public interest. United States v. Ivaco, Inc., 704 F.Supp. 1409, 1430 (W.D. Mich. 1989). Consequently, divestiture would serve the public interest here, assuming that such relief would “ ‘restore competition’ ”—the central aim of any injunctive relief under the Clayton Act. Ford, 405 U.S. at 573, 92 S.Ct. 1142 (quoting E.I. du Pont, 366 U.S. at 326, 81 S.Ct. 1243).

[41] [42] Nonetheless, divestiture is not always the ideal equitable relief for the public interest. In some cases, the divested entity might not actually restore competition, depending on the circumstances in which the entity would operate. In others, divestiture might restore competition, but other injunctive relief might also do so with fewer impacts on the public interest. Before ordering divestiture, then, the Court must consider two questions: (1) whether Towanda would be “a willing, independent competitor capable of effective production” in the doorskin market, White Consol. Indus., Inc. v. Whirlpool Corp., 781 F.2d 1224, 1228 (6th Cir. 1986); and (2) even if Towanda would be a viable entity, whether less intrusive injunctive relief can restore competition just as well as divestiture, see E.I. du Pont, 366 U.S. at 327-28, 81 S.Ct. 1243 (equitable relief should cause “as little injury as possible to the interest of the general public” (internal quotations omitted) ). Courts have not clearly addressed these issues before ordering divestiture. However,

[t]here is ... no doubt that the antitrust court may and should assess the propriety of equitable relief in each particular case ... and that the judge may decline to restructure a firm where there are serious doubts as to feasibility or a likelihood that other remedies are likely to be sufficient to restore effective competition.

3A Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, ¶ 303e3 (emphasis added). See also Pfunder et al., supra, at 54 (“In order to achieve the goal of restoring or restructuring competition, a *663 careful economic analysis must be undertaken of the particular assets or entity to be divested. In order for divestiture to achieve procompetitive structural relief, the assets to be divested must comprise an economically viable going concern—that is, the entity must have the economic capability of surviving and competing effectively in the market.” (emphasis added) ).

The parties vigorously dispute what showing Steves must make to enable the Court to answer these questions. JELD-WEN says that before deciding Steves' request for divestiture, Steves must prevail on five factors:

- (1) whether the divestiture assets are sufficient to create a business that will replace lost competition;
- (2) whether the divestiture buyer has the incentive to compete in the relevant market;
- (3) whether the divestiture buyer has the business acumen, experience, and financial ability to compete in the relevant market in the future;
- (4) whether the divestiture itself is likely to cause competitive harm; and
- (5) whether the asset sale is structured to enable the buyer to emerge as a viable competitor.

These factors are used by the DOJ in assessing the remedy of divestiture. Gov't Equitable Relief Statement (ECF No. 1640) at 1-2, 7; see also 5 Kintner et al., supra, § 40.12 (identifying similar “crucial factors considered when framing divestiture order or decree”). This approach, says JELD-WEN, is necessary because it is the approach that the DOJ takes before ordering divestiture. Treating this analysis as a threshold requirement would be dispositive. Although the first and fourth DOJ factors are included in the public interest framework set out above, and will be addressed here, Steves has provided practically no information that would inform the other three factors.

Steves, on the other hand, argues that Towanda's viability as a successful competitor be assessed quite differently. This type of assessment, Steves says, would be more in line with the public interest because the results of the analysis urged by JELD-WEN could be made worthless by changed market conditions and the outcome of future appeals. Moreover, as Steves asserts, the Supreme Court has approved of the method that it urges in Brown Shoe Co. v. United States, 370 U.S. 294, 82 S.Ct. 1502, 8 L.Ed.2d 510 (1962), another Section 7 case. There, the Supreme Court found that the trial court's divestiture order was sufficiently final to enable appellate review even though the order only commanded divestiture without specifying the details of the divestiture sale or separation process, which would be the subject of a proposed divestiture plan to be filed by the defendant. See id. at 304, 308-10, 82 S.Ct. 1502. According to Steves, the Court can conclude now that divestiture is appropriate, and then work out the particulars by appointing a special master to supervise divestiture after JELD-WEN appeals the order and if the remedy of divestiture is affirmed. The Fourth Circuit (and perhaps the Supreme Court) would then be able to affirm the liability and remedy decisions before the divestiture process moves to fruition. Only then, says Steves, would capable and serious buyers be willing to offer realistic prices for Towanda.

Steves is correct on this point. Neither JELD-WEN nor the DOJ cites any cases in which courts declined to order divestiture because the party seeking divestiture failed to provide the details that the DOJ uses in making its decisions. In fact, the general resources that address the issue teach that divestiture specifics are typically *664 worked out in the compliance process by the court, the parties, or some other monitor. One treatise explains:

Divestiture decrees rarely contain provisions specifying the details of satisfactory compliance with the order to divest; however, usually courts include continuing supervision provisions to ensure that the acquiring company divests itself of the offending assets and that they are divested in such a manner as to assure restoration of the competitive balance. Tribunals also retain jurisdiction to approve or reject the method of compliance, and to modify its decree or order if the prescribed remedy proves incapable of being carried out according to its terms....

Once the order to divest is entered, the defendant is required to propose within a specified time a plan of compliance indicating the method by which it proposes to locate a purchaser acceptable to the court. These plans are subject to the government's approval, and in instances where disagreements cannot be resolved at this late stage, the government must challenge the plan before the court. Some orders leave the defendant considerable discretion to choose the assets to be divested. Even broader is the defendant's discretion to negotiate with parties interested in purchasing the assets to be divested, and to accept the most lucrative offer that will not be attended by anticompetitive consequences.

5 Kintner et al., supra, § 40.12 (footnotes omitted); see also Pfunder et al., supra, at 95-111. The administrative law judge in one recent FTC case cited by JELD-WEN took this exact approach. See In re Evanston Nw. Healthcare, 144 F.T.C. at 335-45, 356-73. Although the FTC reversed that initial decision on substantive grounds, nothing in its opinion suggests that the ALJ's procedural methods were improper. See id. at 519-23.

Brown Shoe does not make it a hard and fast rule that courts must approach divestiture in this way. That case addressed the finality of a particular divestiture order under the Expediting Act, which would not provide the basis for any appeal here. See Brown Shoe, 370 U.S. at 306-08, 82 S.Ct. 1502. Nonetheless, the Supreme Court's guidance about the substance of general divestiture orders is both helpful and persuasive. In Brown Shoe, the district court's divestiture order only required the defendant to “divest itself completely of all stock, share capital, assets or other interests it held in [the divested entity], so that the “remaining task for the District Court [after appeal] w[ould] be its acceptance of a plan for full divestiture, and the supervision of the plan so accepted.” Id. at 304, 308, 82 S.Ct. 1502. The Supreme Court found the broader divestiture order ripe for review because it had “consistently reviewed antitrust decrees contemplating either future divestiture or other comparable remedial action prior to the formulation and entry of the precise details of the relief ordered.” Id. at 309-10, 82 S.Ct. 1502. The Supreme Court also instructed that policy interests supported that approach:

[A full divestiture] order requires careful, and often extended, negotiation and formulation. This process does not take place in a vacuum, but, rather, in a changing market place, in which buyers and bankers must be found to accomplish the order of forced sale. The unsettling influence of uncertainty as to the affirmance of the initial, underlying decision compelling divestiture would only make still more difficult the task of assuring expeditious enforcement of the antitrust laws. The delay in withholding review of any of the issues in the case until the details of a divestiture had *665 been approved by the District Court and reviewed here could well mean a change in market conditions sufficiently pronounced to render impractical or otherwise unenforceable the very plan of asset disposition for which the litigation was held. The public interest, as well as that of the parties, would lose by such procedure.

Id. at 309 (emphasis added).

JELD-WEN's sole response to the compelling logic set out by the Supreme Court is to argue that Brown Shoe is inapposite because it was a Government case, and the Government was presumed to be acting in the public interest. Following that logic, there was no need for that district court to have considered the identity and intention of the buyer of the divested assets. There are undoubtedly distinctions between Government actions and private suits for injunctive relief under the Clayton Act. However, those differences do not compel the Court to decide the propriety of divestiture in a manner that is directly contrary to the forceful logic of the Supreme Court.

JELD-WEN's “fear of piecemeal appeals” may be real, id. at 310, 82 S.Ct. 1502, but that alone cannot dictate a result that Brown Shoe observed makes no sense. Those practical concerns apply equally here. Moreover, the Court can decide whether divestiture is in the public interest without knowing the identity of the buyer. And, if divestiture is ordered and affirmed, and no buyer expresses interest in Towanda, then divestiture will simply not occur. If it turns out that the divestiture process yields a buyer that lacks the incentive or the means to operate Towanda competitively, the Court can decline to divest the plant to that buyer. Finally, if the Court orders a divestiture plan that directs the sale of Towanda to an unsatisfactory buyer, JELD-WEN could presumably appeal that order. That last issue remains unresolved. See id. (“No instance has been found in which the Court has reviewed a case following a divestiture decree such as the one we are asked to consider here, in which the party subject to that decree has later brought the case back to this Court with claims of error in the details of the divestiture finally approved.”). But, as this case has repeatedly shown, there is a first time for everything.

(2) The DOJ's Statement of Interest

Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 517, the DOJ submitted a Statement of Interest (ECF No. 1640) after the jury returned its verdict that the merger had substantially lessened competition and that Steves had sustained antitrust injury as a consequence. To begin, the DOJ expressed, in general, a strong preference for the structural relief of divestiture to restore competition. The DOJ then suggested that the Court should use the same analytical framework that the DOJ employs. That framework will be quite useful later.

The DOJ also expressed reservation about ordering divestiture, noting that a potential buyer (other than Steves) had not been identified. And, as to Steves, the DOJ expressed concern that, if Steves were to acquire Towanda, there would be three vertically integrated doorskin suppliers whereas before the JELD-WEN/CMI merger there had been two vertically integrated suppliers and one (CMI) that was not. On that point, the DOJ was in error because CMI was vertically integrated well before the merger.

The DOJ's other concern—the absence of an identified buyer at this state—is, as explained earlier, premature for the reasons set out by the Supreme Court in Brown Shoe. Moreover, it is unrealistic to think that the divestiture process in a private party case could proceed in the same way as the Government would proceed until the validity of the divestiture remedy has been *666 affirmed on appeal. Certainly that is so here because appeal has been promised, and it is unrealistic to expect that potential buyers will come forth and be vetted while an appeal looms. However, once the legal battles have ended, the Court fully expects that the Special Master will be able to proceed within much the same framework as used by the DOJ.

(3) Standalone Viability of Towanda

[43] The record here shows that a divested Towanda would provide significant competition in the doorskin market and restore competition that the merger lessened. The analysis begins with the undisputed evidence that, from its formation in 2002 until the housing crisis started in 2007, CMI, including Towanda's doorskins, was profitable. In this case, both parties agree that EBITDA is an appropriate measure of profitability. And the Court finds from PTX 341 and PTX 342 that, looking only at Towanda's doorskin business, the EBITDA was positive in every year from 2009 to 2013 and that it was projected to be profitable on that basis in 2014. That is to say, in the doorskin aspect of its business, Towanda's EBITDA in 2009, 2010, 2011 and 2012 was positive even though overall finances for that same period showed a loss. <sup>23</sup>

<sup>23</sup> The record is not entirely clear why that is so but it appears to be that the losses largely occurred in the door manufacturing businesses of CMI at the time because the EBITDA for the doorskin business was positive and, according to JELD-WEN and the record, the MiraTec and Extira business was also profitable during that period of time.

It is also clear from the record that CMI was losing money in 2011 and that made it necessary for the owners of the company to put it on the market. But, the record also shows that the situation has changed. In particular, the record establishes that:

- since the merger in 2012, demand for doorskins has increased substantially so that Towanda's most recent annual output was [ ] doorskins;
- from the time it was created CMI (through Towanda) was an important supplier of doorskins to all the Independents. Towanda is a low cost plant;
- Towanda has been significantly improved;
- the new owner could expect Steves to order [ ] doorskins per year under a long term supply contract.

Likewise the new owner would be able to count on contracts to supply JELD-WEN with [ ] doorskins per year. Given the high prices that JELD-WEN charges the other independent doormakers, it is likely that a new competitor would be able to attract business from JELD-WEN's Independent doorknife manufacturer customers other than Steves. And, the new owner of Towanda would have every incentive to try to attract business from the Independents, who are now customers of JELD-WEN's by offering lower prices than the high prices they are now paying to JELD-WEN.<sup>24</sup>

<sup>24</sup> Further, as did JELD-WEN in 2012 when it acquired CMI, the new owner will also have the MiraTec and Extira lines and will make those products available to the customers who now buy them from JELD-WEN.

The events of 2011 and 2012 also provide some evidence probative of whether Towanda could be a viable competitor in the doorskin market after divestiture. In particular, when the company was last on the market in 2011, there were approximately five serious buyers for the company. It is fundamentally correct that companies are not prepared to invest in other companies unless they believe they can make a profit *667 in so doing. And, the new buyer will be bidding on a far more successful entity than were the five serious buyers in 2011.

Further, the record shows that the margins at Towanda, which is a way of measuring profitability, were strong. The margin is the difference between the cost of manufacturing the doorskin against the selling price of the doorskin. Professor Shapiro testified that, as far back as 2012, the margin for doorskins made at Towanda was approximately 35%. Since then, JELD-WEN's costs have gone down because improvements have been made at Towanda, thereby lowering the cost of manufacturing the doorskins. Further, the evidence establishes that the key input costs at Towanda have declined. The ultimate conclusion from this information is that the margin has gone up.

Accordingly, there are three substantial reasons for concluding that a divestiture of Towanda is likely to be competitive and profitable. First, there is the fact that Towanda was profitable before the significant housing downturn and that it has returned significantly to profitability. Second, the EBITDA numbers show that, even during the rough periods during the housing crisis, Towanda's EBITDA for doorskins was positive, albeit not large. Third, the margin figures indicate that a substantial profit can be made.

(4) Divestiture Will Remedy the Lessened Competition Found by the Jury

Here, as the jury found, and the record shows, the merger substantially reduced competition in the doorskin industry. Less than two years after the merger reduced the number of suppliers from three to two, one of those suppliers essentially withdrew from the market, thereby depriving the Independents of that key component of a reliable supply source. Masonite made that decision known to its investors and to JELD-WEN in a public telephone conference. Not long thereafter, the other supplier, JELD-WEN, embarked upon a plan to raise doorskin prices, and, in so doing, emphasized that it was then the only game in town. At the same time, JELD-WEN felt free to disregard existing contract obligations respecting pricing and to engage in bullying tactics to get increased prices even if that would kill off some of the Independents who were its customers.

Also, the quality of JELD-WEN's doorskins declined as the lessened competition took hold. And, by the beginning of 2015, the manner in which JELD-WEN dealt with defective products changed because competition had lessened.

None of that was possible when, in 2011 and 2012, CMI had been a competitor. Divestiture will once again restore three competitors who make and sell doorskins. The record does not show whether Masonite can be expected to increase its participation in selling to the Independents. But, it does permit the finding that JELD-WEN and divested Towanda can be expected to compete in selling doorskins.

Divestiture is stiff medicine. Therefore, it is important to assess whether an alternative equitable remedy, or a combination thereof, can effectively restore the competition that was substantially lessened by the merger. This assessment starts by remembering that, in the spring of 2012, there were three vertically integrated doorskin suppliers: Masonite; JELD-WEN; and CMI. The record shows that these three companies competed vigorously in selling doorskins to Steves and the other independent (non-integrated) door manufacturers. That is pointedly illustrated by the fact that, in 2011 and 2012, Steves was in negotiations for a new long-term supply contract, and there was significant price competition for Steves' business. *668 The favorable terms were reflected in the Supply Agreement that JELD-WEN and Steves executed in May 2012, a few months before the merger closed.

Divestiture would once again place three domestic doorskin suppliers in the doorskin market. Nothing in the record points to how that could be accomplished short of divestiture. Neither party has posited an alternative.

Although the Court could solve Steves' supply problem by ordering JELD-WEN to supply Steves' requirements for a long term, that alternate remedy would not restore competition in the industry as a whole. And, the record proves that the lessened competition has adversely affected the Independents other than Steves. So simply securing a long-term supply for Steves would not aid those manufacturers.

Even if the Court could order JELD-WEN to sell, for a period of time, to Steves and the other Independents at the prices that prevailed before JELD-WEN secured new prices in 2014 and 2015, there still would be only one domestic supplier willing to sell to the Independents other than on a spot basis. And, there would be no structure in place to foster competition after the Court-ordered prices expired.

Based on this record, the Court can discern no alternative to divestiture that would restore competition that the merger substantially lessened.

(5) Use of Special Master

JELD-WEN also contests the potential appointment of a special master to assist with divestiture. JELD-WEN claims that using a special master exceeds the boundary defined in La Buy v. Howes Leather Co. See 352 U.S. 249, 256, 77 S.Ct. 309, 1 L.Ed.2d 290 (1957) (“The use of masters is to aid judges in the performance of specific judicial duties, as they may arise in the progress of a cause, and not to displace the court.” (internal citation and quotation marks omitted) ).

JELD-WEN is mistaken. Fed. R. Civ. P. 53 governs when a special master may be appointed. The cases cited by JELD-WEN discussed a version of Rule 53 that required an “exceptional condition” to justify special master referrals. See id. at 250, 256, 77 S.Ct. 309; Beazer E., Inc. v. Mead Corp., 412 F.3d 429, 440 (3d Cir. 2005); United States v. Microsoft Corp., 147 F.3d 935, 954 (D.C. Cir. 1998); Burlington N. R. Co. v. Dep't of Revenue of State of Wash., 934 F.2d 1064, 1071 (9th Cir. 1991). The current Rule 53 is very different, allowing special masters to, as relevant here, “address pretrial and posttrial matters that cannot be effectively and timely addressed by an available district judge or magistrate judge of the district.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 53(a)(1)(C). This provision accounts for courts' increased reliance on masters “to assist in framing and enforcing complex decrees.” In particular, it permits appointment of a special master “when a complex decree requires complex policing, particularly when a party has proved resistant or intransigent .... The master's role in enforcement may extend to investigation in ways that are quite unlike the traditional role of judicial officers in an adversary system.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 53(a)(1) advisory committee's note to 2003 amendment.

[44] Courts have frequently used Rule 53(a)(1)(C) to appoint special masters to oversee compliance with complex injunctive relief and make appropriate recommendations to those courts, see, e.g., RLI Ins. Co. v. Nexus Servs., Inc., No. 5:18-CV-00066, 2018 WL 3244413, at *13-14 (W.D. Va. July 2, 2018); Ohio Valley Envtl. Coal. v. Fola Coal Co., LLC, No. CV 2:13-16044, 2016 WL 3190255, at *14 (S.D.W. Va. June 7, 2016), or to conduct sales of disputed assets in foreclosure cases. See, e.g., *669 Stearns Bank Nat'l Ass'n v. Come Again, Inc., No. 8:15-CV-322-T-30JSS, 2016 WL 695990, at *2 (M.D. Fla. Feb. 22, 2016). Here, divestiture compliance involves extraordinarily complex issues that, given the state of the Court's docket and its limited knowledge about asset sales in the building products industry, “cannot be effectively and timely addressed by” the Court or any judge in this district. Fed. R. Civ. P. 53(a)(1)(C). And, even if Rule 53(a)(1)(C) did not confer appointment authority here, the Fourth Circuit has approved of special master appointments “based on [a court's] inherent authority to fashion appropriate post-verdict relief.” Trull v. Dayco Prods., LLC, 178 F. App'x 247, 251 (4th Cir. 2006). As a result, the Court has ample grounds for appointing a special master if it determines that divestiture is appropriate.

Finally, the parties will be afforded an opportunity to comment on and object to the order appointing the Special Master because the Court does not contemplate adopting the order proposed by Steves, and the Special Master would not be allowed to take significant action without the approval of the Court.

B. The Requested Ancillary Conduct Remedies

[45] To assure that the requested divestiture is effective in restoring competition, Steves proposes several forms of so-called “conduct remedies.” Some are appropriate. Others are not.

First, Steves says that JELD-WEN should divest to a new owner not only the Towanda facility, but also the equipment used to develop, manufacture, and sell doorskins there. That is a rather obvious requirement. Section II.A.1, supra.

Second, Steves would require transfer or licensing of all intangible assets used in the development, manufacturing, and sale of doorskins at Towanda (to include patents, schematics, designs, customer lists, vendor lists, trade secrets, and the know-how necessary to operate the facility).<sup>25</sup> A requirement of that sort is also permissible and appropriate. Section II.A.1, supra.

<sup>25</sup> If the buyer should be Steves, it will be necessary to make provisions that secure to JELD-WEN the benefits of the jury verdict and any relief granted in the trade secrets trial.

Third, Steves asks for an order affording the new owner a reasonable opportunity to retain the services of current Towanda employees. That too is permissible and appropriate so as to afford the divested entity an opportunity to succeed. Section II.A.1, supra.

Fourth, Steves asks that JELD-WEN be prohibited from rehiring those employees for two years. That is permissible and appropriate to afford the divested entity an opportunity to succeed. Section II.A.1, supra.

Fifth, to help assure the divested firm's success, Steves seeks an order requiring the divested entity to offer Steves an eight-year doorskin supply contract at prices based on the current Supply Agreement. Certainly, a provision requiring the new owner to agree to supply Steves beyond 2021 is a permissible, and necessary, step to remedy the irreparable remedy proved by Steves. And, the divested entity would benefit from a long-term supply agreement with Steves. However, fixing the duration of that agreement and specifying the prices to be based on the current supply agreement would be too great a restriction on the new owner which must be allowed to negotiate its own contract terms if it is to succeed. Section II.A.1, supra.

*670 Sixth, Steves seeks a provision that would allow JELD-WEN's independent customers-such as Lynden, Haley, and Excel-to terminate, without penalty, their supply agreement with JELD-WEN to help alleviate the effect of the lessened competition on them (the high prices recently extracted by JELD-WEN). Considering that the lessened competition from the merger allowed JELD-WEN to extract high prices from its independent customers, a provision of this sort would help restore competition. Section II.A.1, supra

Lastly, Steves asks that the Court limit JELD-WEN's ability to buy doorskins from the new owner of Towanda to a period of two years. A provision of that sort would not help the new owner to succeed. And, JELD-WEN, like Steves, would be a natural customer for the new owner because JELD-WEN already uses some of Towanda's output. On the other hand, JELD-WEN cannot be allowed to limit the quantity of doorskins that are available to the Independents by buying up all of the output of Towanda. Therefore, it would be appropriate to allow JELD-WEN to buy from the new owner of Towanda, but to require that, after the first two years following divestiture, the new owner satisfy the requirements of the Independents before supplying more than [ ] doorskins to JELD-WEN. Section II.A.1, supra.

For the foregoing reasons, and to the extent recited above, the ancillary provisions and conduct relief will be granted and denied.

C. JELD-WEN's Equitable Defenses

[46] As noted in a separate opinion, unclean hands is not a valid defense to a Section 16 request for injunctive relief on the facts of this case. See Divestiture Evidentiary Issues Op. (ECF No. 1759) at 14. Accordingly, laches is the only pleaded equitable defense remaining to JELD-WEN here. Laches is an available equitable defense to divestiture. See Am. Stores, 495 U.S. at 296, 110 S.Ct. 1853. The defense also can bar the proposed ancillary remedies.

[47] [48] [49] Laches “operates throughout the entire remedial portion of equity jurisprudence.” 2 John Norton Pomeroy, A Treatise on Equity Jurisprudence § 418, at 169 (5th ed. 1941). According to the eminent English chancellor, Lord Camden:

A court of equity, which is never active in relief against conscience or public convenience, has always refused its aid to stale demands, where the party has slept upon his rights, and acquiesced for a great length of time. Nothing can call forth this court into activity but conscience, good faith, and reasonable diligence.

Id. § 419, at 171 (emphasis added) (internal quotation marks omitted). Laches is thus defined as “such neglect or omission to assert a right as, taken in conjunction with lapse of time, more or less great, and other circumstances caus[es] prejudice to an adverse party.” Id. at 171-72 (internal quotation marks omitted). Each case turns on its own facts because, as explained by the Supreme Court, what might be inexcusable delay in one case would not be inconsistent with diligence in another, and unless the nonaction of the complainant operated to damage the defendant, or to induce it to change its position, there is no necessary estoppel arising from the mere lapse of time.

N. Pac. R. Co. v. Boyd, 228 U.S. 482, 509, 33 S.Ct. 554, 57 L.Ed. 931 (1913) (citing Townsend v. Vanderwerker, 160 U.S. 171, 186, 16 S.Ct. 258, 40 L.Ed. 383 (1895)).

In Townsend, the Supreme Court considered the assertion of laches where the defendant's dead and intestate relative *671 (“Marvin”) had agreed to convey to the plaintiff a one-half interest in a house on a lot owned by Marvin in exchange for the plaintiff contributing funds to build the house and supervising the construction. The plaintiff superintended the job from 1879 to 1880, and made the required payments from 1879 to 1884. But, he did not file a bill in equity until 1889, after Marvin had died. See Townsend, 160 U.S. at 172-73, 16 S.Ct. 258. The Supreme Court held that, this delay notwithstanding, the defense of laches was not available, and thus that plaintiff could treat the property as subject to a lien in his favor and could have it sold to satisfy his claim for half of its original value. Id. at 182-83, 16 S.Ct. 258.

[50] In making its decision, the Supreme Court examined the circumstances of the house payments and the relationship between Marvin and the plaintiff. As the Supreme Court explained, those individuals had lived together in the house after it was built. Moreover, Marvin regarded the plaintiff as a foster child, and had stated that she would include him in her will and intended the house to be his when she was done with it. Mindful of these circumstances, the Supreme Court held that laches did not preclude the equitable relief sought because,

[d]ealing with the person who stood in this relationship with him and whom he had always been upon friendly, and even intimate, terms, the same diligence could not be expected of [the plaintiff] as would have been if he had been treating with a stranger.

Id. at 185-86. In other words, what constitutes reasonable diligence depends upon the particular facts of the case, including the relationship between the parties.

The Supreme Court was confronted with another ten-year delay in Northern Pacific Railway Company. In that case, a railroad reorganization pursuant to bankruptcy proceedings had been completed in 1896, and the plaintiff attacked that reorganization by filing a bill in equity in 1906. Noting that background, the Supreme Court held that:

[t]he fact that improvements are put upon the property—that the stocks and bonds of the new company almost immediately became the subject of transactions with third persons—calls for the special application of the rule of diligence. But the doctrine of estoppel by laches is not one which can be measured out in days and months, as though it were a statute of limitation. For what might be inexcusable delay in one case would not be inconsistent with diligence in another, and unless the nonaction of the complainant operated to damage the defendant, or to induce it to change its position, there is no necessary estoppel of laches arising from the mere lapse of time.

N. Pac. R., 228 U.S. at 508-09, 33 S.Ct. 554 (emphasis added). The Court went on to assess the plaintiff's diligence and concluded that he had made reasonable, albeit time-consuming, efforts to put himself in the position of a judgment creditor of the railroad so that he could proceed in equity to collect his debt. See id. at 509, 33 S.Ct. 554. As does Townsend, this decision teaches that the determination of laches must be made in perspective of the facts of each case respecting the circumstances of the delay and the effects thereof.

[51] [52] [53] The Fourth Circuit's approach to the doctrine of laches is consistent with that foundation. "Laches imposes on the defendant the ultimate burden of proving '(1) lack of diligence by the party against whom the defense is asserted, and (2) prejudice to the party asserting the defense.'" White v. Daniel, 909 F.2d 99, 102 (4th Cir. 1990) (quoting *672 Costello v. United States, 365 U.S. 265, 282, 81 S.Ct. 534, 5 L.Ed.2d 551 (1961)). The defense "applies to preclude relief for a plaintiff who has unreasonably 'slept' on his rights," barring "claims where a defendant is prejudiced by a plaintiff's unreasonable delay in bringing suit after the plaintiff knew of the defendant's violation." PBM Prods., LLC v. Mead Johnson & Co., 639 F.3d 111, 121 (4th Cir. 2011); see also Kloth v. Microsoft Corp., 444 F.3d 312, 325 (4th Cir. 2006) (laches involves an "equitable balancing of a plaintiff's delay with prejudice to a defendant" (internal quotation marks omitted)). The laches analysis is highly fact-dependent. See White, 909 F.2d at 102.

Before addressing the elements of the laches framework, it is necessary to address Steves' contention that JELD-WEN must overcome the "strong presumption" that laches does not apply because Steves initiated this litigation within the Clayton Act's statute of limitations for damages claims. Synergistic Int'l, L.L.C. v. Korman, No. CIV. 2:05CV49, 2007 WL 517677, at *8 (E.D. Va. Feb. 8, 2007). Both cases that Steves cites as establishing this "presumption" are trademark infringement suits, so their principles do not necessarily control in an antitrust case. See Elvis Presley Enters., Inc. v. Elvisly Yours, Inc., 936 F.2d 889, 894 (6th Cir. 1991) (citing Tandy Corp. v. Malone & Hyde, Inc., 769 F.2d 362, 365 (6th Cir. 1985)); Synergistic Int'l, 2007 WL 517677, at *8 (citing Reno Air Racing Ass'n, Inc. v. McCord, 452 F.3d 1126, 1138-38 (9th Cir. 2006)).

Section 4B of the Clayton Act imposes a four-year statute of limitations for damages claims by any private plaintiff or by a government entity. See 15 U.S.C. § 15b. Section 16, on the other hand, contains no statute of limitations. See id. § 26; New York ex rel. Spitzer v. Saint Francis Hosp., 94 F.Supp.2d 399, 421-22 (S.D.N.Y. 2000). Nonetheless, because Section 4 and Section 16 provide different remedies for the same antitrust violations, Cargill, 479 U.S. at 113, 107 S.Ct. 484, several courts have used Section 4B's limitations period as a guideline for analyzing laches defenses to Section 16 claims. See Oliver v. SD-3C LLC, 751 F.3d 1081, 1086 (9th Cir. 2014); Midwestern Mach. Co. v. Nw. Airlines, Inc., 392 F.3d 265, 277 (8th Cir. 2004); Duty Free Ams., Inc. v. Estee Lauder Cos., Inc., No. 12-60741-CIV, 2014 WL 1329359, at *14 (S.D. Fla. Mar. 31, 2014), aff'd, 797 F.3d 1248 (11th Cir. 2015); KFC Corp. v. Marion-Kay Co., 620 F.Supp. 1160, 1168 (S.D. Ind. 1985); Argus Inc. v. Eastman Kodak Co., 552 F.Supp. 589, 600 (S.D.N.Y. 1982); Farbenfabriken Bayer, A. G. v. Sterling Drug, Inc., 197 F.Supp. 627, 629 (D.N.J. 1961), aff'd, 307 F.2d 210 (3d Cir. 1962).<sup>26</sup> Moreover, one of the first cases to adopt that approach was International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. v. General Telephone & Electronics Corp., 518 F.2d 913 (9th Cir. 1976). IT & T's conclusion was supported in part by the existence of what the court referred to as a "double standard" for calculating the laches period:

If relief is sought, not on the theory that past or present actions or behavior constitute actual violations of the substantive antitrust law, but because the plaintiff is threatened with an impending violation, then laches should normally run from the time when the plaintiff was first confronted with an enjoined threat and thus could have obtained injunctive relief. If the threat later matures into an actual violation and the plaintiff sues to prevent recurrence or *673 continuation of the violation, then laches should be recomputed from the time of the subsequent actual violation.

This 'double standard' for laches reflects the fact that there are two basic theories of relief for actions under [Section] 16. Injunctions may be obtained against (1) impending violations of the substantive law, and (2) past or present violations likely to continue or recur.

Id. at 928-29 (emphasis added) (citing Zenith Radio, 395 U.S. at 130, 89 S.Ct. 1562). In IT & T, the plaintiff sought to restrain certain actual violations of the Sherman and Clayton Acts, and the court held that "the proper starting point for computation of the laches period is the time when the alleged violations occurred." Id. at 929 (emphasis added). In doing so, it noted that "[t]he four-year limitation of ... Section 4B for private antitrust actions for damages is long enough to enable potential plaintiffs to observe the actual effects and the possible antitrust violation and to calculate its potential defects.” Id. That approach comports with the common sense understanding that the actual competitive effects of a merger may be delayed as they were in this case.

26 Although the Fourth Circuit implicitly approved of that approach, it has not directly addressed the question. See Weinberger v. Retail Credit Co., 498 F.2d 552, 556 (4th Cir. 1974).

[54] [55] Examining the laches period in this flexible manner is consistent with how laches operates in copyright infringement suits. See Petrella v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Inc., 572 U.S. 663, 134 S.Ct. 1962, 1977-78, 188 L.Ed.2d 979 (2014). More importantly, it comports with longstanding Fourth Circuit law:

In the application of the doctrine of laches, the settled rule is that courts of equity are not bound by, but that they usually act or refuse to act in analogy to, the statute of limitations relating to actions at law of like character. The meaning of this rule is that, under ordinary circumstances, a suit in equity will not be stayed for laches, before, and will be stayed after the time fixed by the analogous statute of limitations at law; but if unusual conditions or extraordinary circumstances make it inequitable to allow the prosecution of a suit after a briefer ... period than that fixed by the statute, the [court] will not be bound by the statute, but will determine the extraordinary case in accordance with the equities which condition it.

King v. Richardson, 136 F.2d 849, 862 (4th Cir. 1943) (emphasis added) (internal quotation marks omitted). Using Section 4B's limitations period as a guideline (as posited by ITT) and not a firm rule better serves the purposes of the Fourth Circuit's settled laches approach because it accounts for the alternate ways in which the laches period may start running under Section 16.

As a result, although Steves' initiating this action within Section 4B's limitations period does not necessarily lead to a strong presumption against laches (as it would in trademark infringement suits), it is appropriate to rely on that four-year period as a guideline to determine whether Steves unreasonably delayed here.

1. Reasonableness of Steves' Delay

[56] “An inexcusable or unreasonable delay may occur only after the plaintiff discovers or with reasonable diligence could have discovered the facts giving rise to his cause of action.” White, 909 F.2d at 102. This factor thus requires the Court to decide when Steves knew or should have known that it was facing “threatened loss or damage” from a Section 7 violation, as needed to establish Section 16 standing. 15 U.S.C. § 26. The laches period would have started running only at that time. See Ray Commc'ns, Inc. v. Clear Channel Commc'ns, Inc., 673 F.3d 294, 301 (4th Cir. 2012) (“Logic dictates that ‘unreasonable delay’ does not include any period of time before the [plaintiff] is able to pursue a claim ....” (internal quotation marks *674 omitted) ). And, of course, Steves could not have been aware of any Section 7 violation until it was reasonably knowable that “the effect of [the CMI] [A]cquisition may be substantially to lessen competition.” 15 U.S.C. § 18.

[57] JELD-WEN argues that Steves should have known of a threatened Section 7 violation as early as April 2012, when Steves became aware of the planned CMI Acquisition, and at the latest on October 24, 2012, when the merger was consummated. But accrual principles for Section 4 damages claims help show why that is not correct. Section 4B's limitations period “starts to run at ‘the point the act first causes injury.’ ” <sup>27</sup> Concord Boat Corp. v. Brunswick Corp., 207 F.3d 1039, 1051 (8th Cir. 2000) (quoting Klehr v. A.O. Smith Corp., 521 U.S. 179, 190–91, 117 S.Ct. 1984, 138 L.Ed.2d 373 (1997) ). Because Section 7 makes the acquisition itself illegal, and the antitrust harm from the acquisition is usually known when the merger is consummated, Section 4 claims often begin accruing on that date. See id. at 1050. But a Section 7 violation “may occur ‘at or any time after the acquisition, depending upon the circumstances of the particular case.’ ” Midwestern Mach., Inc. v. Nw. Airlines, Inc., 167 F.3d 439, 443 (8th Cir. 1999) (quoting United States v. E.I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., 353 U.S. 586, 597, 77 S.Ct. 872, 1 L.Ed.2d 1057 (1957) ); see also United States v. ITT Cont'l Baking Co., 420 U.S. 223, 242, 95 S.Ct. 926, 43

L.Ed.2d 148 \(1975\) (violation may occur post-consummation if there was “no realistic threat of restraint of commerce or creation of a monopoly” when acquisition completed).

27 Steves did not need to suffer actual antitrust injury to bring a Section 16 claim, which requires only “threatened” injury. However, based on the facts in the record, it is not clear that this distinction is relevant to the outcome here.

Areeda and Hovenkamp's example of this sort of situation is particularly apt here:

One might imagine a merger that occurred in 1980 but with no immediate price increase, perhaps because the firm at that point lacked the power. But suppose the firm thereafter augmented its power and finally exacted a monopoly price increase in 1990 ... and the plaintiff brings its action in 1993. In such a case the statute of limitation would not begin to run until the post-merger price increase occurred.

12 Areeda & Hovenkamp, supra, ¶ 1205b.

[58] With these principles in mind, the first task is to ascertain the period of delay that is involved here. This action was filed on June 29, 2016, slightly more than four years after JELD-WEN announced that it was going to acquire CMI and a few months before the fourth anniversary of the consummation of the merger. Therefore, at its maximum reach, the period of delay was equivalent to the four-year statute of limitations set by Section 4B for damages claims. Thus, the filing of the antitrust action was within the guideline period as outlined in ITT and King v. Richardson. That does not, however, resolve the reasonable delay analysis.

To begin, as explained below, the period from April 2012 to August 2014 cannot be included in the period of delay in the laches calculus. Thus, it is necessary to remember that JELD-WEN was aware at the time of the merger that the antitrust issues associated with the CMI Acquisition were significant. PTX-90. Indeed, having calculated market concentration as a consequence of the forthcoming acquisition and the Herfindahl-Hirschman indices for markets impacted by the merger, JELD-WEN retained highly-qualified antitrust counsel from one of the nation's largest *675 law firms, O'Melveny & Myers. In sum, and as the record shows, JELD-WEN knew full well of the merger's antitrust implications.

Mindful of those implications, JELD-WEN pursued an established merger strategy to assuage any possible concerns from the DOJ, from CMI's customers, and from JELD-WEN's own customers (including Steves). Specifically, JELD-WEN developed a plan to enter into long-term supply agreements with independent door manufacturers in the United States (notably Steves, Lynden, and Haley), see PTX-93; PTX-139. As part of its strategy, JELD-WEN deliberately decided not to approach the DOJ about the proposed CMI Acquisition until those long-term agreements had been entered. In fact, JELD-WEN's internal documents show that the company considered it a “tactical error to even call [the DOJ]” before entering into those supply agreements, and that JELD-WEN was fully aware that having those contracts in place would “be very positive for us [at the DOJ] if we ever go.” PTX-160. As Shapiro explained at trial, acquiring firms often enter into long-term contracts with customers in order to prevent a challenge to the merger. That tactic limits the DOJ's ability to secure evidence necessary to block a merger because customers with supply agreements are less willing to oppose a merger proposed by their supplier and because customers do not have reason to be threatened.

And, when JELD-WEN did approach the DOJ about the CMI Acquisition, it emphasized its long-term supply agreements with Steves, Lynden, and others. And Morrison, who led the company's presentation to the DOJ, admitted that the purpose of entering into such contracts was “to alleviate” customer concerns about not having a supply and “to assure the customers of CMI, who might eventually become customers of JELD-WEN, that JELD-WEN was committed to their continued supply.” See PTX-139.

Based on these facts, the Court finds that before, and at the time of, the merger in 2012, Steves had no reason to believe that there would be anticompetitive effects from the merger because JELD-WEN designed its pre-merger strategy to create that state of mind. To the contrary, Steves had a positive relationship with JELD-WEN through its CEO, Phillip Orsino, and had a recently signed long-term contract with JELD-WEN which Orsino described as a lifetime arrangement. And, although Steves did not take that assurance literally, under all the known circumstances, it was reasonable for Steves to believe that the merger would not produce a substantial lessening of the competition that had produced the favorable terms in the Supply Agreement.

The record here establishes, and the Court finds, that Steves did not know, and could not reasonably have known, that JELD-WEN's conduct violated Section 7 until August 2014 at the earliest. JELD-WEN is right that Steves learned of the CMI Acquisition in April 2012, and it knew that the merger would reduce the number of doorskin suppliers from three to two. But that did not mean much to Steves because it reasonably believed that the prices that JELD-WEN could charge were constrained by the Supply Agreement. Applying Section 4 accrual rules here, any claim would have been dead in the water in April or October 2012 because there was no existing or threatened antitrust injury, and antitrust damages would have required speculation about JELD-WEN's future acts.

Although, in November 2012, Steves subsequently noticed some decline in doorskin quality, it did not associate those problems with the CMI Acquisition then. *676 The same is true of the doorskin pricing issues arising in late 2012 through 2013, which Steves perceived as a purely contractual issue that could be, and eventually was, worked out through communications with Orsino. There was no reason for Steves to believe that these issues were anticompetitive effects from the merger; both sides treated Steves' concerns as essentially contract disputes. In any event, Steves could have tried to shift its doorskin purchases to Masonite if it was dissatisfied with JELD-WEN. In other words, even though JELD-WEN had acquired excess market power through the CMI Acquisition, it did not use that power before 2014.

However, the record establishes that, in May 2014, Hachigian, who had taken over from Orsino as JELD-WEN's new CEO, informed Steves that it would be necessary to renegotiate the Supply Agreement to secure higher prices, including a so-called "capital charge" (to help defray JELD-WEN's cost of capital invested in the business) because Hachigian thought that the Supply Agreement was mispriced and unfair to JELD-WEN. At that time, Hachigian also told Steves that he intended to invoke the termination provisions of the Supply Agreement to bring the parties to the bargaining table.

In retrospect, that conduct represented the first of a series of events wherein JELD-WEN exercised the market power brought about by the substantial lessening of competition effected by the merger (as found by the jury). However, Steves was reasonable in believing that the purpose of the threatened termination was, as Hachigian had represented, to bring the parties to the negotiating table to try to get a more favorable agreement for JELD-WEN. Then, in July 2014, Hachigian sent Sam Steves a Masonite presentation stating that Masonite would not sell doorskins to competing door manufacturers like Steves. Hachigian sent that presentation to Steves, not for mere informational purposes, but as a message from JELD-WEN that Steves had to deal with JELD-WEN because the only other supplier (Masonite) was not to be a future source of supply. That conduct, combined with the termination notice and Hachigian's actions in May 2014, portended that the JELD-WEN might now be using the increased market power that it had gained as a result of the merger.

Sam and Edward Steves appear to have recognized that possibility in mid-August 2014. Thus, on August 12, 2014, Sam Steves e-mailed Edward Steves to express his concerns about Masonite's statements that it and JELD-WEN were the only vertically integrated doorskin manufacturers and that the barrier to entry in the doorskin market was "prohibitive." Sam Steves then asked whether Steves was "finished with exploring anti trust issues if J[ELD-WEN] term[inate]s the [S]upply [A]greement." DX-291. Then, on August 26, Sam Steves sent Edward Steves another e-mail that proposed a response to an e-mail from Hachigian about various issues under the Supply Agreement, including the proposed capital charge. In that e-mail to his brother, Sam Steves suggested that Steves send a "VERY strong response" and "tee up [its] claim on the overcharge." His proposed response also included this suggested language: "We remain troubled that you continue to threaten termination of the agreement if we don't consent to ... a price increase! Finally, and perhaps most important—the antitrust." DX-466.

Neither Sam nor Edward Steves were called upon to explain the comments made in those emails. So, it is difficult to discern their meaning. Nonetheless, those e-mails show that Steves should have been alerted to the possibility that the threatened price *677 increases and the contract termination were effects of the merger. That possibility would have become more concrete when Hachigian sent the Supply Agreement termination letter on September 10, 2014. Accordingly, the record permits the conclusion that Steves should have known that it faced threatened or actual antitrust injury by August 12, 2014,<sup>28</sup> and that Steves did know by September 10, 2014.

28 At least one case has suggested that the continuing violations doctrine might apply to extend the laches period each time a new anticompetitive act occurs. See IT & T, 518 F.2d at 929. However, the Court already noted that this doctrine usually does not apply in Clayton Act cases, and held that the anticompetitive effects here were “unabated inertial consequences” of the CMI Acquisition, not independent Section 7 violations. See Summary Judgment Op. at 30-31 (internal quotations omitted). Therefore, any doorskin price increases or quality reductions after August 2014 did not change the beginning date of the laches period.

Therefore, the question becomes whether JELD-WEN has proven that the time between August 12, 2014 and June 29, 2016 (when this action was filed) constitutes unreasonable delay for purposes of laches. As previously explained, that is a case-specific inquiry that depends on the particular facts at hand.

In this case, the inquiry begins with the understanding that Steves needs a reliable supply of doorskins to survive, a fact known by both Steves and JELD-WEN. The inquiry also must take into account that, in August 2014, there were only two domestic doorskin manufacturers, and that one, Masonite, recently had announced that it would not sell doorskins to independent door manufacturers like Steves. The reasonableness assessment must also consider that the other supplier, JELD-WEN, had just given notice to Steves that the Supply Agreement would end in 2021 unless Steves agreed to JELD-WEN's demands for a substantial price increase. Also, in August 2014, there was virtually no decisional law around which to measure the viability of a private party antitrust lawsuit, much less one in which the substantial lessening of competition had been brought about under the circumstances presented by this record. Finally, the assessment must keep in mind that JELD-WEN was a far bigger and far better-heeled company than Steves. The question then becomes whether it was reasonable for Steves, confronted with these realities in August 2014, to have instituted a costly, protracted, and novel antitrust litigation to attempt to solve a supply dilemma that was then seven years in the future. The record teaches that such a course was not reasonable.

Instead, as the record here shows, when confronted with contract termination, Steves reasonably elected to try to find another reliable source of supply. To that end, in October 2014, the Steves Brothers met with Masonite's CEO, Fred Lynch who informed them that Masonite would not sell doorskins to Steves except on a spot basis, and at prices that were so high that Steves could not make a profit. Faced with that position by Masonite, it became both necessary and reasonable for Steves to treat further with JELD-WEN. So, in January 2015, Sam and Edward Steves met with Hachigian, Merrill, and other JELD-WEN representatives in an effort to resolve the differences between the two companies, and thereby to secure the reliable source of supply on which Steves' survival depended.

However, in that meeting, Hachigian threatened that JELD-WEN would be “total pricks” over the remaining term of the Supply Agreement if Steves did not agree to renegotiate the contract to pay higher *678 doorskin prices. See PTX-514. And, from January 2015 to the middle of that year, JELD-WEN informed Steves about a series of greater price increases, which JELD-WEN conceded at trial were actually prohibited by the Supply Agreement. During that same period, JELD-WEN refused to provide Steves with the contractually required information that would allow Steves to determine whether the proposed price increases were legitimate under the controlling provisions of the Supply Agreement.

With those developments, Steves again approached Masonite, the only other domestic supplier, about a supply of doorskins. It was reasonable to make the last ditch effort with Masonite. Lynch again informed Edward Steves that Masonite would not supply Steves with doorskins on a long-term basis, offering to sell Steves' doorskins only on a spot basis at prices that would be unprofitable for Steves.

Therefore, at about the same time, Steves found it necessary to explore the possibility of buying doorskins from foreign manufacturers or building its own doorskin plant. Steves ultimately determined that neither option was likely to provide an adequate source of supply by the time that the Supply Agreement would expire. Nonetheless, it was reasonable for a small company like Steves to explore securing a doorskin supply by purchasing from foreign suppliers or building its own plant rather than instituting a novel antitrust lawsuit against its much larger and more powerful supplier. The record shows that the process of assessing the viability of foreign manufacturers as a source of supply, like the process of evaluating whether it was possible or sensible to build a plant as the source of supply was complicated and time-consuming. Here, the record shows that, once Steves had determined that it could rely on neither of the two domestic doorskin suppliers (Masonite or JELD-WEN), it timely and diligently pursued the only other conceivable alternatives to filing an antitrust suit. Accordingly, the record here shows, and the Court finds, that Steves proceeded with reasonable diligence to consider the viability of these alternate sources of supply rather than starting a lengthy, costly, and novel antitrust lawsuit against its vastly better-financed supplier.

By early 2015, Steves had concluded that its future was at serious risk because the Supply Agreement with JELD-WEN would expire in 2021, and neither Masonite nor foreign suppliers offered a reasonable alternative mean of supply. Moreover, it was entirely uncertain whether Steves could afford to build a doorskin plant, either on its own or with a partner.

However, there was available to Steves another means to try to resolve the problems that both threatened Steves' existence and that, if not solved, would present antitrust injury: the alternative dispute resolution provision ("ADR") in the Supply Agreement. That process required Steves and JELD-WEN, as a first step, to hold an internal conference among senior executives. PTX-149 § 10(a). If that step was unsuccessful, the contract required the parties to engage in mediation as a second step. Id. § 10(b).

On March 11, 2015, Steves invoked the ADR provisions of the Supply Agreement, and it requested an internal conference among senior executives to occur on March 23. DX-243 at 2. However, the two internal conferences did not take place until May 2015. At one of those meetings, Steves' attorney, Marvin Pipkin, expressed Steves' concern about antitrust issues arising out of JELD-WEN's conduct. The record does not reflect the exact details of Pipkin's statements or JELD-WEN's response. But it is clear that, by May 2015, JELD-WEN *679 was aware of the risk of an antitrust claim if it persisted to exploit, in its dealings with Steves, the substantially lessened competition that the merger had produced. Of course, Steves too was aware of that potential antitrust claim.

After the internal conferences were unsuccessful, on July 2, 2015, Steves requested the mediation required by the Supply Agreement. That mediation took place in September 2015. The parties' disputes were not resolved then, but Steves presented JELD-WEN with a draft Complaint that raised both contract and antitrust claims.

Thereafter, on September 4, 2015, the parties entered into the first of several standstill agreements, which were extended on September 29, 2015; October 13, 2015; January 27, 2016; and April 25, 2016. Those agreements contained provisions reciting the parties' "desire to continue to discuss their differences in an effort to resolve these differences without litigation." See PTX-591; PTX-593; PTX-606; PTX-641; PTX-682.

While the standstill agreements were in effect, Steves, in December 2015, gave a presentation to the DOJ complaining of antitrust violations, after which the DOJ initiated a civil investigative demand. JELD-WEN subsequently gave a presentation to the DOJ on April 7, 2016. The investigation was closed by the DOJ on May 18, 2016. In June 2016, Steves requested JELD-WEN to agree to another extension of the standstill agreements, which JELD-WEN rejected. Immediately thereafter, on June 29, 2016, Steves filed this action.

On this record, the Court holds that JELD-WEN has not met its burden to prove that the delay between September 10, 2014 and June 29, 2016 was unreasonable. To the contrary, the record shows that, during that period, Steves took every reasonable step to try to secure a reliable supply of doorskins that was essential for its survival. It was reasonable for a small purchaser, like Steves, to try all reasonable measures to avoid litigation with the supplier of an ingredient essential to its core product line. That is especially so where, as here, the supplier is a vastly larger company that can afford costly litigation and where, as here, that supplier indicates a continued desire to attempt to work things out short of litigation. Public policy supports efforts by parties to work out difficult issues respecting their business relationships without resorting to litigation. See Essilor Int'l v. Nidek Co., 217 F.3d 857, 1999 WL 989071, at *5 (Fed. Cir. 1999); NAACP v. NAACP Legal Def. & Educ. Fund, Inc., 753 F.2d 131, 137 (D.C. Cir. 1985); Piper Aircraft Corp. v. Wag-Aero, Inc., 741 F.2d 925, 932 (7th Cir. 1984); cf. Petrella, 134 S.Ct. at 1976. Furthermore, common sense teaches that antitrust litigation would be lengthy and exceedingly expensive. And, in this case, the kind of antitrust case that Steves would have to bring would be the first of its kind. So there was no reliable way to predict what such litigation might cost or whether it would even be concluded before Steves would lose its source of supply in 2021.

Nor was it unreasonable for Steves to use the contractually-required ADR process to try to work out a business compromise to the contract-related problems that actually produced its antitrust injury, instead of immediately commencing antitrust litigation. Even after those procedures failed, the parties, both mindful of the potential for antitrust litigation, agreed to standstill agreements with a view to solving their differences. Considering the representations in those agreements that both parties wanted to resolve their differences without litigation, Steves reasonably avoided *680 filing an antitrust suit until JELD-WEN refused to continue the process.

Considering the record as a whole, JELD-WEN has not proven that the delay from August 2014 to June 2016 was unreasonable. That, of course, defeats JELD-WEN's laches defense, because it has failed to prove the first element of that defense. Thus, the inquiry respecting the application of laches to the equitable remedies is at an end.

2. Prejudice to JELD-WEN

[59] Ordinarily, it is preferable to articulate a single basis for decision, and thereby refrain from making alternative holdings. See Karsten v. Kaiser Found. Health Plan of Mid-Atl. States, Inc., 36 F.3d 8, 11 (4th Cir. 1994). However, this case presents an exception to that rule, given that it presents issues of first impression on which appeal is virtually certain, and considering the nature of the relief sought. Therefore, in the interest of judicial economy, it is appropriate to consider the prejudice element of JELD-WEN's laches defense so that the entire picture will be available for consideration in the likely event of appeal.

[60] [61] [62] [63] Even unreasonable delay does not animate the bar of laches if that delay does not cause harm to the defendant. Ray Commc'ns, 673 F.3d at 305. Prejudice is shown by “a disadvantage on the part of the defendant in asserting or establishing a claimed right or some other harm caused by detrimental reliance on the plaintiff's conduct,” White, 909 F.2d at 102, including economic prejudice. Ray Commc'ns, 673 F.3d at 305. In addition, a defendant is always “aided by the inference of prejudice warranted by the plaintiff's delay.” ... [T]he greater the delay, the less the prejudice required to show laches, and vice versa.” White, 909 F.2d at 102 (quoting Giddens v. Isbrandtsen Co., 355 F.2d 125, 128 (4th Cir. 1966)). But, in every case, “the defendant is ultimately required to prove prejudice (given the defendant's burden to plead and prove laches under Fed. R. Civ. P. 8\(c\) ).” Id.

[64] Here, there is no contention that JELD-WEN suffered any disadvantage in asserting or establishing a claimed right. Instead, JELD-WEN relies on the presence of “some other harm caused by detrimental reliance on [Steves'] conduct.” In particular, JELD-WEN asserts various economic disadvantages that it says constitute prejudice.

JELD-WEN contends that, beginning immediately after the merger and continuing through 2016, it took numerous steps to integrate Towanda into its overall manufacturing operation. It claims that it closed CMI's Chicago headquarters, consolidated administrative functions, mothballed the Marion plant in 2013, sold Dubuque in 2016, and otherwise integrated Towanda into its general manufacturing plans but for Steves' delay in initiating suit. Those positions are based almost exclusively on the testimony of Morrison, and the Court declines to accept his testimony.

Morrison, who also served as JELD-WEN's trade secrets expert in the liability phase of the trade secrets case, was shown at the trade secrets trial to be a witness who could not be believed. He lied on his resume, which was offered into evidence, stating that he had graduated from Louisiana State University when in fact he had attended but one semester. He lied again, at his deposition and trial, when asked about his resume and his education, and he allowed JELD-WEN to publicly tout him as a graduate of Louisiana State University for years. A person who will lie about something of that nature is not to be believed. Moreover, having observed Morrison's conduct when testifying in the Remedies Hearing, the Court notes that he was *681 more advocate than witness, and regrettably concludes that he would say anything to support JELD-WEN's cause whether it was supported by facts or not.

Accordingly, the Court does not believe his testimony that, in reliance on the absence of an antitrust suit, JELD-WEN would not have mothballed the Marion plant, closed the Dubuque plant, made the modifications in its system, and effectuated the integration of the Towanda plant into JELD-WEN's operations. Wholly apart from Morrison's lack of credibility, the record shows that the Marion plant was mothballed because of the expense of meeting environmental regulations and updating antiquated equipment. And, the record also shows that the decision to close the Dubuque plant was made in 2011, before the merger. Thus, the record also shows that Morrison's testimony is not credible.

Putting aside Morrison's testimony, the evidence is generally undisputed that JELD-WEN expended significant funds installing capital improvements and manufacturing processes in Towanda and integrating Towanda into its operation. But, the preponderance of the evidence does not establish that JELD-WEN relied on the absence of an asserted antitrust claim by Steves, in taking those steps. To the contrary, JELD-WEN made substantial investment in Towanda even after it was told by Pipkin in May 2015 that Steves had antitrust concerns and after Steves presented a copy of an anti complaint in September 2015. That JELD-WEN continued to invest in Towanda with that knowledge materially undercuts JELD-WEN's contention that it would not have made investments in Towanda had it been aware of a possible antitrust claim.

Further, the Court finds that JELD-WEN was fully aware that an antitrust action could be filed at any time within four years after the merger and, in any event, it is charged with that knowledge. And, mindful of that possibility, JELD-WEN made its investments in Towanda, integrated Towanda into its operational system, and took all the actions it now uses to prove the prejudice component of its laches defense.

The record shows that JELD-WEN relied not on Steves' inaction but on having successfully lulled Steves and the DOJ into action by entering into long-term contracts with the independent doorskin customers, including Steves. JELD-WEN thus relied on that tactic to insulate it going forward after the merger, not on Steves' inaction. Accordingly, JELD-WEN has not met its burden of proof on the component of detrimental reliance.

But, even if JELD-WEN can be said to have made the requisite showing of detrimental reliance, it has nonetheless failed to show prejudice that would suffice to establish laches. For example, the record is clear that JELD-WEN has more than recovered the capital investments (plant modifications and new equipment) that it made in Towanda after the merger, the making of which JELD-WEN asserts as prejudice. And, its operation of Towanda has yielded considerable profit. JELD-WEN, of course, will not have to disgorge that profit.

As discussed fully in Section II.A.3.(b) (Balance of Hardships), the operational changes that, of necessity, will be made in the event of divestiture will no doubt be troublesome to achieve, will entail significant expense, and will have some detrimental collateral consequences. However, the making of the changes necessary to restore competition is not such prejudice as will call into operation the equitable defense of laches into play.

JELD-WEN's position on laches is founded principally on the decisions in *682 Antoine L. Garabet M.D., LLC v. Antomonus Techy. Corp., 116 F.Supp.2d 1159 (C.D. Ca. 2000) and Taleff v. Southwest Airlines Co., 828 F.Supp.2d 1118 (N.D. Ca. 2011). In both cases, the plaintiffs sued under Section 7 of the Clayton Act, alleging that the merger itself would substantially lessen competition. In both cases, the plaintiffs were aware of the proposed merger and the threat to competition for several months before the merger. In Garabet, the plaintiffs filed suit after the merger (one day in Taleff, the same day in Garabet). In Garabet, the court held that the plaintiffs lacked antitrust standing for each antitrust injury and the court sustained a defense of laches. Garabet, 116 F.Supp.2d at 1165-71. In Taleff, the court did not actually decide the applicability of laches, but it held that the delay in filing suit until after the merger tipped the balance of hardship against the plaintiffs. 828 F.Supp.2d at 1123-24.

Neither Garabet nor Taleff apply here because the facts of this case are different. Here, unlike Garabet and Taleff, there was no reason for the plaintiff to apprehend a lessening of competition before or at the time of the merger. To the contrary, JELD-WEN's strategy was intended to give Steves comfort. And, as explained above, the conduct causing antitrust injury occurred well after the merger.

Accepting JELD-WEN's theory would mean that where, as here, the lessening of competition occurs after the merger, a party thereby injured simply could never seek equitable redress to restore competition. For the reasons previously explained, the rules of antitrust injury and antitrust standing as well as the fundamental principles of equity foreclose such a result.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons, and to the extent, set forth above, PLAINTIFF STEVES AND SONS, INC.'S MOTION FOR EQUITABLE RELIEF (ECF No. 1191) will be granted in part and denied in part. The motion will be granted to require that JELD-WEN divest itself of the Towanda facility and, to the extent set out in Section II.B, to grant the conduct remedies necessary to the success of the divested entity as a manufacturer of interior molded doorskins. The motion will be denied as to the requested conduct remedies not necessary to that purpose.

To assure, to the extent reasonably possible, that JELD-WEN receives a fair price for Towanda, and to assure that divestiture produces a competitive entity that is likely to restore competition, the process specified by the Supreme Court in Brown Shoe, will be followed so as to assure that the divestiture is conducted in a realistic setting that is conducive to attracting qualified buyers who will pay a fair price for Towanda. To assure the success of that process, a Special Master will be appointed.

It is so ORDERED.

All Citations

345 F.Supp.3d 614, 2018-2 Trade Cases P 80,553

---

End of Document

© 2020 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-113

Affirmed.

KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment

Distinguished by Poole v. Carter, Cal.App. 4 Dist., April 8, 2008

114 Cal.App.4th 1264

Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California.

Ala SINGH et al., Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

Gurdial SINGH et al., Defendants and Appellants.

No. A100705.

|

Jan. 20, 2004.

|

Certified For Partial Publication. *

* Pursuant to California Rules of Court, rules 976\(b\) and 976.1, this opinion is certified for publication with the exception of part I.

|

Review Denied April 14, 2004. **

** Kennard, Chin and Brown, JJ., dissented.

Synopsis

Background: Members of a religious society sued its board of directors alleging that they remained in office in violation of the Corporations Code. The Superior Court of Alameda County, No. 02-046093, Julia Spain, J., after a bench trial, entered judgment that election for board of directors be held. Board of directors appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeal, Lambden, J., held that:

[1] courts may adjudicate religious disputes concerning property;

[2] order for conducting election of board of directors was not unconstitutional;

[3] order outlining procedure for conducting election was constitutional; and [4] order that members have equal time to address congregation concerning election was valid.

West Headnotes (16)

[1] Religious Societies Judicial supervision in general

Courts cannot intrude into a religious organization's determination of religious or ecclesiastical matters such as theological doctrine, church discipline, or the conformity of members to standards of faith and morality.

6 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Courts Construction of federal Constitution, statutes, and treaties

California courts concerned with restraints under the First Amendment applicable to the states through the Fourteenth are bound by the authoritative interpretations of the First Amendment enunciated by the United States Supreme Court. U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 1, 14.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Religious Societies Judicial supervision in general

No matter whether the religious organization is hierarchical or congregational, the decisions of the highest religious tribunal on questions of discipline, faith, or ecclesiastical rule, custom, or law must be accepted by the courts.

7 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Religious Societies Jurisdiction of courts to determine rights of property

When a religious dispute to be resolved is essentially ownership or right to possession of property, the courts appropriately adjudicate the controversy even though it may arise out of a dispute over doctrine or other ecclesiastical question, provided the court can resolve the property dispute without attempting to resolve the underlying ecclesiastical controversy, and can use neutral principles of law.

8 Cases that cite this headnote

- [5] Constitutional Law 🔑 Internal affairs, governance, or administration; autonomy or polity

Religious Societies 🔑 Judicial supervision in general

In action by members of religious society to require board of directors, who had remained in office in violation of Corporations Code, to hold election for directors, court avoided impermissibly intruding into ecclesiastical matters by hearing evidence to determine whether any authority had determined whether reference in bylaws to certain religious traditions signified a life term for directors, and, upon determining that no ecclesiastical authority had decided issue, resolving dispute based on contract law and Corporations Code. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's Ann.Cal. Const. Art. 1, § 4; West's Ann.Cal.Corp.Code § 9220.

See 7 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (9th ed. 1988) Constitutional Law, § § 373, 374.

8 Cases that cite this headnote

- [6] Constitutional Law 🔑 Establishment of Religion

To avoid conflict with establishment clause: (1) challenged government activity must have secular legislative purpose; (2) principal or primary effect of the activity must be one that neither advances nor inhibits religion; and (3) activity must not foster excessive government entanglement with religion. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's Ann.Cal. Const. Art. 1, § 4.

- [7] Constitutional Law 🔑 Secular purpose

Under criterion of Lemon test inquiring whether government activity challenged under establishment clause has secular purpose, inquiry should be deferential and limited, and if government articulates plausible secular purpose, this should be accepted absent contrary showing by challenger. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's Ann.Cal. Const. Art. 1, § 4.

- [8] Constitutional Law 🔑 Advancement, endorsement, or sponsorship of religion; favoring or preferring religion

Constitutional Law 🔑 Inhibiting, interfering with, or coercing religion

Under criterion of Lemon test inquiring whether principal or primary effect of government activity challenged under establishment clause is one that neither advances nor inhibits religion, question is whether, irrespective of government's actual purpose, practice under review in fact conveys message of endorsement or disapproval to interested parties under objective standard. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's Ann.Cal. Const. Art. 1, § 4.

- [9] Constitutional Law 🔑 Entanglement

Under criterion of Lemon test inquiring whether government activity challenged under establishment clause fosters excessive government entanglement with religion, court determines whether state will be required to monitor challenged government activity for its religious content in order to assure that it does not have unintended effect of encouraging or discouraging religion. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's Ann.Cal. Const. Art. 1, § 4.

- [10] Constitutional Law 🔑 Internal affairs, governance, or administration; autonomy or polity

Constitutional Law 🔑 Membership

Religious Societies 🔑 Judicial supervision in general

In action by members of religious society to require board of directors, who had remained in office in violation of Corporations Code, to hold election by members for directors, trial court's order outlining procedure for determining membership did not violate establishment clause; order had clear secular purpose to comply with Corporations Code under which organization operated, order neither advanced nor inhibited religion, and appointment of special master to monitor procedure did not affect religious content or purport to set qualifications for members, but to settle disputes under organization's own bylaws. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's Ann.Cal. Const. Art. 1, § 4; West's Ann.Cal.Corp.Code § 9220(b).

5 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Constitutional Law 🔑 Entanglement

It is not the mere fact that government may have to continue to monitor activity of religious society that constitutes entanglement with religion in violation of establishment clause, but whether court will be required to monitor the activity for its religious content. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's Ann.Cal. Const. Art. 1, § 4.

[12] Constitutional Law 🔑 Entanglement

Religious Societies 🔑 Judicial supervision in general

In action by members of religious society against board members, who had remained in office in violation of Corporations Code, order requiring that when directors used Sunday services as a platform to lobby for their retention or re-election, that members be afforded equal time, including the opportunity to speak to the congregation, was not entanglement with religion, in violation of establishment clause; court was not interpreting or applying any religious doctrine, but was simply ensuring that the election process was fair. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 1; West's Ann.Cal. Const. Art. 1, § 4.

See 55 Cal.Jur.3d, Religious Organizations, § 30.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Appeal and Error 🔑 Written documents or instruments in general

When the trial court's interpretation is based solely upon the terms of the written instrument, and there is no conflict in the evidence, appellate court reviews the ruling de novo.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Appeal and Error 🔑 Written documents or instruments in general

Although court reviews the construction of the express terms of an instrument de novo, it reviews the evidence regarding the interpretation of the words under the substantial evidence test.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[15] Appeal and Error 🔑 Verdict, Findings, and Sufficiency of Evidence

Appeal and Error 🔑 Substantial evidence

Appellate court must uphold any factual determination of the trial court, express or implied, so long as there is substantial evidence in the record to support it; if the evidence is conflicting, court must accept that which supports the trial court's decision and make all reasonable inferences in support of the judgment.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[16] Corporations and Business Organizations 🔑 Construction, operation, and effect

Corporate bylaws are to be construed according to the general rules governing the construction of statutes and contracts, and must be given a reasonable construction and, when reasonably susceptible thereof, they should be given a construction that will sustain their validity.

10 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

**7 *1268 Law Offices of Walter W. Whelan, Walter W. Whelan, Fresno, Berliner Cohen, John F. Domingue, Thomas

P. Murphy, San Jose, for Defendants and Appellants Gurdial Singh et al.

Law Offices of Walter W. Whelan, Walter W. Whelan, Fresno, Berliner Cohen, John F. Domingue, Thomas P. Murphy, San Jose, for Defendants and Appellants Gurdial Singh et al. as Amici Curiae.

Cooper, White & Cooper, Stephen D. Kaus, Merrit M. Jones, San Francisco, Law Office of Mark Cohen, Mark Cohen, Fremont, for Plaintiffs and Respondents Ala Singh et al.

Taylor & Goins, N. Maxwell Njelita, for Plaintiffs and Respondents Ala Singh et al. as Amici Curiae.

Opinion

LAMBDEN, J.

The Sikh Temple–San Francisco Bay Area, Inc. (the Sikh Temple)<sup>1</sup> and its current board of directors (also referred to as the Supreme *1269 Council or Panj Pyaras),<sup>2</sup> Gurdial Singh, Harjot Singh, Amarjit Singh, Gurdev Singh, and Mota Singh, challenge a judgment following a bench trial. The Sikh Temple members Ala Singh, Karnail Singh, Ram Singh, Sukhdev Singh, Harjinder Singh, Joginder Singh, and Gurmeet Singh (collectively respondents or plaintiffs) sued the Sikh Temple and its current board of directors (collectively appellants or defendants) because they alleged that the board of directors or Supreme Council remained in office in violation of Corporations Code section 9220, subdivision (b).<sup>3</sup> The trial court found, among other things, that the Temple's bylaws do not specify a life term for the Supreme Council and section 9220 therefore applies, creating a term of one year. Appellants challenge this ruling, contending that a prior judgment involving them as the defendants should have been given collateral estoppel effect; the ruling violates their First Amendment rights; the ruling represents an unconstitutional entanglement with religion; and the bylaws were not silent regarding the term of office for the Supreme Council. We are unpersuaded by their arguments and uphold the lower court.

<sup>1</sup> The Sikh Temple is a nonprofit corporation that is also known as Gurdwara Sahib–San Francisco Bay Area, Fremont, California.

<sup>2</sup> The parties stipulated that the members of the Supreme Council or Panj Pyaras were the board of directors for the purposes of this lawsuit and the Corporations Code.

<sup>3</sup> All further unspecified code sections refer to the Corporations Code.

BACKGROUND

The Sikh Temple was incorporated as a nonprofit religious corporation in 1977. Its articles of incorporation provide that the bylaws shall specify the qualifications for members, voting rights, and other privileges of membership. The current bylaws were adopted in 1987.

Article II of the bylaws provides that the general membership shall select and appoint the Supreme Council, or Panj Pyaras. Article II reads: “The principles and practices of the Gurdwara Management will be those espoused by Sikh faith and Gurmat tradition. The institution of Panj Pyaras (five beloved ones) will be revived in order to provide the guidelines **8 for day-to-day functions of the Gurdwara. The Panj Pyaras (five beloved ones) will be selected and appointed by Sadh Sangat or membership of the Gurdwara Sahib [Sikh Temple]. If any of the Panj Pyaras is found unfit for his position, another Panj Pyara shall be selected by the General Body to fill up the vacancy. In the meantime, the Head Priest of the Gurdawara [sic] Sahib shall perform the duties of a Panj Pyara.”

Article IV concerns the dismissal of a member of the Supreme Council. It specifies that a member of the Supreme Council can be dismissed for breaking the Sikh code of conduct, as prescribed in Rehatnamas; for breaking the Sikh rule of objectivity by indulging in petty politics of factionalism and *1270 name calling; and for being unable to get along with the Supreme Council. Article V sets forth the procedures for selecting the Executive Committee or Parbandhak Committee, which oversees daily management of the Sikh Temple. It provides in relevant part: “The Parbandhak Committee shall consist of eleven members. The Supreme Council will ask for the names of Sewadars from the Sadh Sangat [general membership] every now and then depending upon the availability of vacancy on the Parbandhak Committee. The Supreme Council will ask the Sadh Sangat for nominations. The term of the Parbandhak Committee shall be for a period of two years. A Parbandhak can stay on the Executive Committee for a maximum period of four years....”

Article XVI provides in relevant part that any amendment to the bylaws must “be first presented to the Supreme Council of Panj Pyaras in the form of a petition, identifying major gaps or shortcomings according to Sikh tradition (Rahatmaryada). The Panj Pyaras should examine the petition carefully and submit their recommendations to the General Body of Gurdwara membership. The 3/4 majority of the Sikh membership in General Body can endorse the amendment and the Constitution can be changed accordingly.”

In 1988, pursuant to the newly adopted bylaws, the congregation nominated and elected five individuals to serve on the Supreme Council.<sup>4</sup> In 1991, four of the five members of the Supreme Council resigned. The congregation nominated and elected four new individuals. In 1993, all five members of the Supreme Council resigned and, subsequently, the congregation nominated and elected five new members.

<sup>4</sup> These undisputed facts regarding the history of the Supreme Council come from the statement of decision and/or the judgment.

In August 1996, a lawsuit was filed, Dhami v. Tut (Alameda County Superior Court, 1996, No. H–1921025). The plaintiffs sought, among other things, to remove three members of the Supreme Council, declare an earlier election valid or in the alternative order a new election, appoint a receiver, and determine the rights of the parties pursuant to section 9220. This case settled when the parties agreed to a court-supervised election of the Supreme Council. That election occurred on December 22, 1996, and resulted in the election of five Supreme Council members, including Gurdial Singh, Jarjot Singh, Amarjit Singh, and Gurdev Singh, who are appellants in the action before us.

In 1999, one member of the Supreme Council was involuntarily removed pursuant to Article IV of the bylaws. Mota Singh, an appellant in this action, was nominated and selected as a replacement by the congregation. Other than *1271 the filling of this vacancy, no elections for Supreme **9 Council were held between December 22, 1996 and March 31, 2002.

In December 1998, a second lawsuit, Dhami v. Singh (Alameda County Superior Court, 1998, No. H–204698–5), was filed.<sup>5</sup> The complaint was for declaratory relief, injunctive relief, and a receivership. The plaintiffs alleged that pursuant to section 7710 their action was derivative. They complained that there was an unlawful cancellation of a general election scheduled for December 20, 1998, by the defendants named in that case and the assumption of office by a new board of directors on December 6, 1998, without the benefit of an election. In their first cause of action for declaratory relief, they asserted that the defendants had violated the bylaws by refusing to permit the calling of the congregation to elect members of the Supreme Council and members of the Executive Committee or Management Committee. In the second cause of action, they requested the removal of these directors and officers. In their third cause of action, they alleged that the defendants had been in office for more than 12 consecutive months in violation of section 9220. They also alleged intentional infliction of emotional distress and requested injunctive relief and a receivership.

<sup>5</sup> The plaintiffs in this action were Avtar Singh Dhami, Avtar Singh Chahal, Kulwant Singh Mehrok, Amarjit Singh Sidhu, Jagmail Singh Saran, and Devinder Singh Channa.

Dhami v. Singh proceeded to a court trial in February 1999, the Honorable John Burke, presiding. The court ruled in favor of the defendants on the first cause of action. Defendants' counsel requested an order reflecting that the first cause of action had been bifurcated for final adjudication “without dealing with the other issues.” The court responded that it had ruled for the defense on the first cause of action. As to the second, the removal of directors and officer for breach of the bylaws, the court stated that it was also ruling for the defense on that action. The court continued: “The third cause of action was declaratory relief and injunctive relief in violation of [Corporations Code \[section\] 9220](#), and I rule for the defense in that. [¶] The fourth cause of action is for intentional infliction of emotional distress. The Court makes no ruling and took no evidence on [this]. [¶] The fifth cause of action is for the injunctive relief for harassing and annoying and threatening, and the Court rules for the defense in that.” The court also ruled for the defense on the sixth cause of action. The fourth cause of action was bifurcated for trial and eventually dismissed.

Following this trial, a general body meeting for March 31, 2002, was called by appellants upon verbal notice given to those in attendance at the Sikh Temple meetings on the two Sundays prior to March 31.<sup>6</sup> The verbal notice of the general body meeting did not state an election would be held or that removal of the Supreme Council would be sought.

<sup>6</sup> For the last several years, the annual general body meeting had been held in March.

*1272 Respondents submitted a written request to address the congregation at the March 31 meeting. Appellants wrote a letter back to them explaining that they deemed the request to address the congregation as a request to advocate for bylaw amendments and that no vote would take place because they had not followed the procedure set forth in Article XVI.

At the meeting of March 31, 2002, respondent Ram Singh addressed the congregation with the concern that the Supreme Council had been in office since 1996 and no elections had been held. He **10 stated that an election should take place. Respondent Gurmeet Singh also addressed the congregation and he told the congregation that it had complete authority to form or to dissolve the Supreme Council. He then proceeded with the following three proclamations: The congregation has decided that every four years there should be elections for the Supreme Council; the present Supreme Council and Executive Committee are dissolved; and respondents Sukdev Singh, Karnail Singh, Ram Singh, Harjinger Singh, Bhal Ala Singh, and Joginder Singh are the new Supreme Council and they will hold new elections in six months. Following each proclamation, the people attending the meeting orally, and simultaneously, voiced their approval or disapproval.

Following this March meeting, appellants remained as the Supreme Council and refused to vacate. Consequently, on April 3, 2002, respondents filed this action. On April 22, they filed their first amended complaint for judicial determination of the validity of the March 2002 election and for declaratory relief. Respondents asserted that appellants remained in office in violation of section 9220, subdivision \(b\), which requires annual elections of the board of directors unless the bylaws or articles of incorporation specify otherwise. They requested the court to determine the validity of the election of the Supreme Council on March 31, 2002, or to order a new election and determine the right of the Sikh Temple members to vote pursuant to section 9418, subdivision (c).

The Honorable Julia A. Spain presided over a court trial on this action in June 2002. The parties stipulated that the Supreme Council is the board of directors for purposes of a Corporations Code analysis. The court heard evidence regarding the term of office for the Supreme Council. Respondents argued that members of the Supreme Council were not elected for life and appellants argued that the institution of Panj Pyaras is permanent without any term limit for the Supreme Council. During the trial, the court advised the parties, on its own motion, of its intent to take judicial notice of the court files in the two earlier cases, Dhami v.

Tut and Dhami v. Singh. Appellants objected to the court's taking judicial notice of the entire court files in those *1273 actions, but later both parties stipulated that the court could take judicial notice of selected documents.<sup>7</sup> <sup>7</sup> We have received several requests for judicial notice of court documents, which have been granted.

On July 23, 2002, the court issued its tentative statement of decision that the Supreme Council's term had expired and it ordered a new election. Appellants filed written objections asserting, for the first time, that the court was bound by Dhami v. Singh on the issue of the Supreme Council's term.

The court's judgment was filed September 4, 2002. The court concluded that Dhami v. Singh did not have any res judicata or collateral estoppel effect on the case before it. It found that no final judgment had been entered in Dhami and appellants had waived the argument because, despite the court's invitation, they failed to plead, prove, or argue collateral estoppel as an affirmative defense. In addition, the court found the issues litigated in the two actions were not identical. The court explained: "According to the First Amended Complaint in Dhami v. Singh, each and every cause of action arose to some degree from the alleged unlawful cancellation of a general election scheduled for December 20, 1998, by the defendants named in that **11 case and the assumption of office by a new Board of Directors on December 6, 1998, without the benefit of an election. The First Amended Complaint in Dhami v. Singh refers to the members of the Supreme Council and the members of the Executive Committee (or Management Committee) as the 'Board of Directors,' and in the third cause of action seeks to limit the term of office for this collective group to one year and to compel a new election for this combined 'Board of Directors.' In the present case, the plaintiffs request judicial determination of the validity of an election held on March 31, 2002. For purposes of this litigation, the parties stipulated that only the Supreme Council is the corporate board of directors. The First Amended Complaint in this case seeks to compel a new election of the Supreme Council, exclusive of the Executive Committee. Thus, the Court finds the issues which were presented for judicial determination in Dhami v. Singh are not identical to those presented in the instant action. Defendants failed to carry their burden of proof on this requirement."

The court also found that appellants failed to establish that the Supreme Council's term had been actually litigated or necessarily decided in Dhami v. Singh. In addition, the court found there was no privity. None of the plaintiffs in the case before it was a party to the Dhami v. Singh action. In a footnote, the court explained that four of the named individual defendants in the action before it were also named defendants in Dhami v. Singh, as was the Sikh Temple. The court explained: “[T]hey are the parties ‘asserting’ collateral estoppel, not the parties against whom preclusion is sought. Therefore, that these four defendants are ‘identical’ is not determinative.”

*1274 As to the validity and outcome of the election on March 31, 2002, the trial court ruled that it had jurisdiction to decide which persons were entitled to manage the Sikh Temple, including control of significant corporate assets, by applying neutral principles of law, focusing on the bylaws themselves. The court found that the bylaws do not specify the term of office for the Supreme Council and therefore pursuant to section 9220, subdivision \(b\), the terms of office shall be one year. The court stated that it could not determine the outcome of the March 31, 2002 election from the evidence presented at trial and, since the term of office for each of the current Supreme Council members had expired, it was ordering new elections. The court ordered a new election by written ballot to occur on January 12, 2003.

Since the Sikh Temple had failed to maintain membership records in violation of section 9510, subdivision \(a\), the court ordered that the Temple undertake to admit members upon application and consent as specified in section 9350, subdivision \(b\), by applying the standards in Article X and the first sentence of Article XI of the bylaws. For this purpose, it ordered the creation of a membership committee consisting of four representatives appointed by plaintiffs and four representatives appointed by defendants. Any membership disputes that the membership committee was unable to resolve by majority vote were to be submitted to a special master for decision.

On September 10, 2002, judgment in Dhami v. Singh was entered.

Appellants filed a timely notice of appeal from the judgment order in this case.

**12 DISCUSSION

I. Collateral Estoppel**

** See footnote *, ante.

II. Jurisdiction

Appellants contend that the trial court did not have jurisdiction to consider respondents' request for declaratory relief in which they sought a determination of the validity and outcome of the election of March 31, 2002, or their request for a court-ordered election for the Supreme Council. They maintain that the court's decision violated the establishment clause of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution<sup>13</sup> and that the trial court was *1275 “simply not correct to say that the doctrinal issues raised by the references to the Gurmat tradition and the Panj Pyaras were merely incidental to the resolution of this dispute.” Respondents counter that the Supreme Council, as the board of directors, maintains control of the property and assets of the Sikh Temple and the court has jurisdiction to resolve disputes concerning the control of property of a religious organization.

<sup>13</sup> The establishment clause of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution states: “Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof....”

[1] The question presented is whether the restraints of the First Amendment to the United States Constitution, as applied to the states through the Fourteenth Amendment, as well as the restraints imposed by our state Constitution (Cal. Const., art. I, § 4),<sup>14</sup> permitted the trial court to order an election for the members of the Supreme Council. Clearly, courts cannot intrude into a religious organization's determination of religious or ecclesiastical matters such as theological doctrine, church discipline, or the conformity of members to standards of faith and morality. (Metropolitan Philip v. Steiger (2000) 82 Cal.App.4th 923, 98 Cal.Rptr.2d 605; Korean Philadelphia Presbyterian Church v. California Presbytery (2000) 77 Cal.App.4th 1069, 92 Cal.Rptr.2d 275 [competing factions within congregation claimed to be “true” church and any judicial determination would have required courts to interpret and apply religious doctrine].) “Ecclesiastical matters include in the main, creeds and proper modes of exercising one's belief.” (Rosicrucian Fellow v. Rosicrucian etc. Ch. (1952) 39 Cal.2d 121, 131, 245 P.2d 481 (Rosicrucian ).) Thus, we must determine whether the court in the case before us impermissibly intruded into the Sikh's Temple's ecclesiastical matters.

14 Section 4 of article I of the California Constitution provides: “Free exercise and enjoyment of religion without discrimination or preference are guaranteed. This liberty of conscience does not excuse acts that are licentious or inconsistent with the peace or safety of the State. The Legislature shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion.”

The United States Supreme Court and our state courts have grappled with the question of resolving disputes within religious organizations and excessive entanglement. Accordingly, prior to considering the facts of the case before us, we briefly review the extensive case law in this area.

A. The United States Supreme Court and State Case Law on the Establishment Clause and Adjudicating Disputes Among Religious Organizations

The approach of the United States Supreme Court to resolving property disputes involving religious organizations originally developed in Watson v. Jones (1871) 80 U.S. (13 Wall.) 679, 20 L.Ed. 666 **13 (Watson ), which was decided prior to the application of the First Amendment to the States. In *1276 resolving intra-church schisms or property disputes, the court identified two categories of church polities: congregational and hierarchical. (Id. at p. 722.) Although it was concerned with a hierarchical organization, the Watson court discussed the court's role in resolving property disputes in congregational organizations: “In such cases where there is a schism which leads to a separation into distinct and conflicting bodies, the rights of such bodies to the use of the property must be determined by the ordinary principles which govern voluntary associations. If the principle of government in such cases is that the majority rules, then the numerical majority of members must control the right to the use of the property. If there be within the congregation officers in whom are vested the powers of such control, then those who adhere to the acknowledged organism by which the body is governed are entitled to the use of the property. The minority in choosing to separate themselves into a distinct body, and refusing to recognize the authority of the governing body, can claim no rights in the property from the fact that they had once been members of the church or congregation. This ruling admits of no inquiry into the existing religious opinions of those who comprise the legal or regular organization; for, if such was permitted, a very small minority, without any officers of the church among them, might be found to be the only faithful supporters of the religious dogmas of the founders of the church. There being no such trust imposed upon the property when purchased or given, the court will not imply one for the purpose of expelling from its use those who by regular succession and order constitute the church, because they may have changed in some respect their views of religious truth.” (Id. at p. 725.)

As already mentioned, Watson did not involve a congregational church, but a hierarchical organization. In a hierarchical organization, “the local congregation is itself but a member of a much larger and more important religious organization, and is under its government and control, and is bound by its orders and judgments.” (Watson, supra, 80 U.S. at pp. 726–727.) “In this class of cases we think the rule of action which should govern the civil courts, founded in a broad and sound view of the relations of church and state under our system of laws, and supported by a preponderating weight of judicial authority is, that, whenever the questions of discipline, or of faith, or ecclesiastical rule, custom, or law have been decided by the highest of these church judicatories to which the matter has been carried, the legal tribunals must accept such decisions as final, and as binding on them, in their application to the case before them.” (Id. at p. 727.) Accordingly, the Supreme Court in Watson refused to resolve a property dispute between a national Presbyterian organization and local churches of that organization, because such a determination would have required the court to determine whether there had been departures from doctrine by the general church. (Id. at pp. 733–735.)

*1277 California courts interpreted Watson as supporting “the rule that civil and property rights [can] be adjudicated.” (Rosicrucian, supra, 39 Cal.2d at p. 131, 245 P.2d 481, citing Watson, supra, 80 U.S. 679, 20 L.Ed. 666 and other California cases.)<sup>15</sup> Shortly after issuing its opinion **14 in Rosicrucian, our Supreme Court reiterated in Providence Baptist Church v. Superior Ct. that courts “will entertain jurisdiction of controversies in religious bodies although some ecclesiastical matters are incidentally involved” as long as civil or property rights are involved. (Providence Baptist Church v. Superior Ct. (1952) 40 Cal.2d 55, 60–61, 251 P.2d 10 (Providence Baptist Church ).) Our Supreme Court in Providence Baptist Church focused on the fact that the dispute involved a congregational type of church where its affairs were controlled by the members. “That type exists ‘where each local group is in charge of all its affairs through majority vote of its members and there is no control from above.’ [Citation.]” (Providence Baptist Church, supra, at p. 61, 251 P.2d 10.) While acknowledging that there was some authority to the contrary of its holding, our Supreme Court stated: “[I]t has been held that where a religious society has no tribunal but the congregation, a court may determine whether the meeting at which a pastor was removed was properly conducted according to the usage, contracts and rules of the society, or according to pertinent principles of law where civil and property rights, such as the emoluments of the property rights, are involved, and that in so doing the court is not interfering with any ecclesiastical function.” (Id. at pp. 61–62, 251 P.2d 10.)

15 We note that this interpretation of Watson differs from the United States Supreme Court's conclusions in Presbyterian Church v. Hull Church (1969) 393 U.S. 440, 89 S.Ct. 601, 21 L.Ed.2d 658. The Hull court quoted Watson and then explained: “The logic of this language leaves the civil courts no role in determining ecclesiastical questions in the process of resolving property disputes.” (Hull, supra, at p. 447, 89 S.Ct. 601, citing Watson, supra, 80 U.S. at pp. 728–729.) The Hull court noted that later Supreme Court cases, such as Gonzalez v. Archbishop (1929) 280 U.S. 1, 16, 50 S.Ct. 5, 74 L.Ed. 131, recognized that marginal civil court review of ecclesiastical determinations is sometimes appropriate. (Hull, supra, at pp. 447–448 & fn. 6, 89 S.Ct. 601.)

In Providence Baptist Church, our Supreme Court held that it had jurisdiction to consider whether a congregational church had followed its own bylaws and internal procedures in discharging a pastor: “While we may not be dealing with the officer of a corporation in the strict sense (the pastor of a church is involved) the situation is similar and we see no reason why an election cannot be conducted where, as appears, a fair and proper election cannot be conducted by the church and the election previously held was irregular and of no effect. In other words the appropriate body of the church is assisted in acting within its proper sphere, according to its rules and regulations, to protect civil and property rights. If the problem was whether the pastor was preaching a theology contrary to the denominational doctrine or conducting religious services in a manner out of harmony with the ritual of the church, it would clearly not be within the province of a court to interfere, *1278 and the controversy would have to be settled by the church tribunals. But where, as here, the question presented is whether the property and funds of the church are being handled in accordance with the by-laws and rules of the church corporation or such by-laws and rules are being properly observed by the governing body of the church, those aggrieved may seek redress through court action.” (Providence Baptist Church, supra, 40 Cal.2d at pp. 63–64, 251 P.2d 10.)

The same year our Supreme Court decided Providence Baptist Church, a Court of Appeal addressed the issue, which is almost identical to the one raised in the case before us, whether the court could order and monitor an election of the directors of a religious corporation. (Burnett v. Banks (1955) 130 Cal.App.2d 631, 279 P.2d 579 (Burnett ).) In Burnett, the court adjudicated a dispute between rival **15 church factions regarding a pastor's right to appoint the directors rather than to hold elections by the congregation. (Id. at p. 635, 279 P.2d 579.) The court explained: “Certainly no directors of a corporation, whatever their number, may perpetuate themselves in office by refusing to call an election.” (Id. at p. 634, 279 P.2d 579.) “It is clear that the court has the right when it appears that a corporation election will not be held because of the failure of its directors to call it, or that such directors will not conduct a free, fair and full election to order one held under court auspices. This is not an ecclesiastical matter but a corporation one. But even if it were ecclesiastical, as the corporation owns real and personal property, the matter would come within the qualified rule set forth in Rosicrucian ....” (Id. at p. 635, 279 P.2d 579.)

These California cases specifically concerned congregational organizations, while subsequent cases in front of the United States Supreme Court, such as Presbyterian Church v. Hull Church, supra, 393 U.S. 440, 89 S.Ct. 601, 21 L.Ed.2d 658 (Hull ), involved hierarchical religious organizations. In Hull, the disputes involved a decision by an association of local Presbyterian churches (general church) to take over the property of two local churches that had withdrawn from the association. (Id. at pp. 441–443, 89 S.Ct. 601.) In holding that the First Amendment barred courts from adjudicating this property dispute because it would require the court to interpret church doctrine, the Hull court set forth the doctrine of “neutral principles” for resolving property disputes: “[T]he First Amendment severely circumscribes the role that civil courts may play in resolving church property disputes. It is obvious, however, that not every civil court decision as to property claimed by a religious organization jeopardizes values protected by the First Amendment. Civil courts do not inhibit free exercise of religion merely by opening their doors to disputes involving church property. And there are neutral principles of law, developed for use in all property disputes, which can be applied without ‘establishing’ churches to which property is awarded. But First Amendment values are plainly jeopardized when church property litigation is made to turn on the resolution by civil courts of controversies over religious doctrine and practice. If civil courts undertake to resolve such controversies in order to adjudicate the property dispute, the *1279 hazards are ever present of inhibiting the free development of religious doctrine and of implicating secular interests in matters of purely ecclesiastical concern. Because of these hazards, the First Amendment enjoins the employment of organs of government for essentially religious purposes, [citation]; the Amendment therefore commands civil courts to decide church property disputes without resolving underlying controversies over religious doctrine. Hence, states, religious organizations, and individuals must structure relationships involving church property so as not to require the civil courts to resolve ecclesiastical questions.’” (Id. at p. 449, 89 S.Ct. 601.)

About seven years later, the United States Supreme Court again addressed the question of adjudicating property rights within hierarchical religious organizations in Serbian Orthodox Diocese v. Milivojevic (1976) 426 U.S. 696, 708–720, 96 S.Ct. 2372, 49 L.Ed.2d 151 (Serbian). The Supreme Court held that civil courts could not properly countermand the decision by the highest authority of the Serbian Orthodox Church to defrock the bishop who presided over its American diocese, notwithstanding that this decision incidentally affected the control of diocesan property. (Id. at pp. 708–709, 96 S.Ct. 2372.) The **16 court stated that “this case essentially involves not a church property dispute, but a religious dispute the resolution of which under our cases is for ecclesiastical and not civil tribunals.” (Id. at p. 709, 96 S.Ct. 2372.) The court concluded: “In short, the First and Fourteenth Amendments permit hierarchical religious organizations to establish their own rules and regulations for internal discipline and government, and to create tribunals for adjudicating disputes over these matters. When this choice is exercised and ecclesiastical tribunals are created to decide disputes over the government and direction of subordinate bodies, the Constitution requires that civil courts accept their decisions as binding upon them.” (Id. at pp. 724–725, 96 S.Ct. 2372.)

The United States Supreme Court further explained and applied the neutral principles of law doctrine in Jones v.

Wolf (1979) 443 U.S. 595, 99 S.Ct. 3020, 61 L.Ed.2d 775 (Wolf). Wolf involved a dispute over ownership of church property following a schism in a local church affiliated with a hierarchical church organization. The court stated: “The State has an obvious and legitimate interest in the peaceful resolution of property disputes, and in providing a civil forum where the ownership of church property can be determined conclusively.” (Id. at p. 602, 99 S.Ct. 3020.) The court explained: “Most importantly, the First Amendment prohibits civil courts from resolving church property disputes on the basis of religious doctrine and practice. [Citations.] As a corollary to this commandment, the Amendment requires that civil courts defer to the resolution of issues of religious doctrine or polity by the highest court of a hierarchical church organization. [Citations.] Subject to these limitations, however, the First Amendment does not dictate that a State must follow a particular method of resolving church property disputes. Indeed, ‘a State may adopt any one of various approaches for settling church *1280 property disputes so long as it involves no consideration of doctrinal matters, whether the ritual and liturgy of worship or the tenets of faith.’” (Ibid.) In holding that there was no impermissible entanglement with religion in the case before it, the Wolf court set forth the “neutral principles of law” approach as requiring a civil court to examine in purely secular terms certain religious documents, such as a church constitution. (Id. at p. 604, 99 S.Ct. 3020.)

[2] [3] [4] Following these later Supreme Court case holdings, particularly that of Hull and Serbian, some California Courts of Appeal have asserted that the language, if not the holdings, in the earlier California cases of Rosicrucian, supra, 39 Cal.2d 121, 245 P.2d 481, Providence Baptist Church, supra, 40 Cal.2d 55, 251 P.2d 10, and Burnett, supra, 130 Cal.App.2d 631, 279 P.2d 579, is questionable. (See, e.g., Wilson v. Hinkle (1977) 67 Cal.App.3d 506, 512, 136 Cal.Rptr. 731; Vukovich v. Radulovich (1991) 235 Cal.App.3d 281, 293, 286 Cal.Rptr. 547.) Of course, California courts concerned with restraints under the First Amendment applicable to the states through the Fourteenth Amendment are bound by the authoritative interpretations of the First Amendment enunciated by the United States Supreme Court. We note that all of the United States Supreme Court cases, unlike the California cases, concerned hierarchical religious organizations; it remains unclear whether the constitutional analysis for congregational and hierarchical religious institutions is identical.<sup>16</sup> However, no matter whether the **17 religious organization is hierarchical or congregational, it is clear that the decisions of the highest religious tribunal on questions of discipline, faith, or ecclesiastical rule, custom, or law must be accepted. (See, e.g., Presbytery of Riverside v. Community Church of Palm Springs (1979) 89 Cal.App.3d 910, 919, 152 Cal.Rptr. 854.) “However, when the dispute to be resolved is essentially ownership or right to possession of property, the civil courts appropriately adjudicate the controversy even though it may arise out of a dispute over doctrine or other ecclesiastical question, provided the court can resolve the property dispute without attempting to resolve the underlying ecclesiastical controversy.” (Id. at p. 920, 152 Cal.Rptr. 854.)

16

Other jurisdictions have held that the constitutional analysis applied to hierarchical organizations is the same as that applied to congregational organizations. (See, e.g., Nunn v. Black (W.D.Va.1981) 506 F.Supp. 444, 448 [applied Serbian and refused to decide internal church dispute despite church's having “no structured decision-making process”], affirmed, Nunn v. Black (4th Cir.1981) 661 F.2d 925; Burgess v. Rock Creek Baptist Church (D.D.C.1990) 734 F.Supp. 30 [should apply analysis of Serbian to congregational church]; First Baptist Church of Glen Este v. State of Ohio (S.D. Ohio 1983) 591 F.Supp. 676, 682 [“because the ‘hands off’ policy espoused by the Serbian Court is of constitutional dimension, we find it difficult to justify the application of a different standard where a congregational church is involved”].) However, none of these cases addresses the issue of adjudicating a property dispute in a congregational organization when no authority in the organization nor the congregation has spoken and the organization has no peaceful procedure in place for deciding the issue.

*1281 We do not necessarily agree that these California cases decided in the 1950's cannot be reconciled with the United States Supreme Court holdings. None of the California cases stated that courts could adjudicate matters that were predominantly ecclesiastical. To the extent that these cases held that all property disputes could be resolved by civil courts, their holdings should be refined to restrict review to the application of neutral principles of law taking care “to decide church property disputes without resolving underlying controversies over religious doctrine.” (In re Metropolitan Baptist Church of Richmond, Inc. (1975) 48 Cal.App.3d 850, 858–859, 121 Cal.Rptr. 899 (Metropolitan Baptist Church) [jurisdiction to adjudicate distribution of dissolving church's assets and any ecclesiastical concern was incidental and remote]; see also Wolf, supra, 443 U.S. at p. 597, 99 S.Ct. 3020; Presbytery of Riverside v. Community Church of Palm Springs, supra, 89 Cal.App.3d at pp. 925–929, 152 Cal.Rptr. 854 [property dispute can be resolved without attempting to resolve underlying ecclesiastical controversy]; Protestant Episcopal Church v. Barker (1981) 115 Cal.App.3d 599, 615, 171 Cal.Rptr. 541.) “ [A]s long as the court does not have to resolve the doctrinal propriety [of a church's action] in order to determine who has legal control of the property, there is no unconstitutional intervention by the state in church affairs.” (Metropolitan Baptist Church, supra, at p. 859, 121 Cal.Rptr. 899.)

B. Applying Federal and State Precedent to Determine the Constitutionality of Ordering an Election for the Supreme Council

Respondents requested the trial court to determine that the election in March 2002 was valid or, alternatively, to order a new election because the current Supreme Council's term had expired and the current Supreme Council refused to order an election. Respondents argued that the express terms of the Sikh Temple's bylaws do not specify a term of office for the Supreme Council and therefore the law of the Corporations Code should be applied, which imposes a one-year term limit when **18 the bylaws are silent. (§ 9220, subd. (b).) Appellants responded that their term on the Supreme Council was for life<sup>17</sup> in accordance to the doctrine of the Gurmat tradition and the institution of Panj Pyaras. Any determination of their term of office, appellants asserted, requires the court to violate the establishment clause of the First Amendment because the court would be resolving a dispute regarding religious doctrine.

17

The bylaws in Article II provide that members of the Supreme Council can be dismissed and replaced by the general membership if found unfit.

Before trial, the parties stipulated to the fact that the Supreme Council, also known as the Panj Pyaras, is the corporate board of directors for the Sikh Temple. The board of directors is entitled to manage the affairs of the Sikh *1282 Temple, and therefore controls significant corporate assets.<sup>18</sup> Article XII of the bylaws specifies that the Executive Committee “shall consult the Supreme Council in all important financial and policy matters.” Since the Supreme Council is involved with the control of the financial assets of the Temple, the term of office for the Supreme Council involves control of the Temple's property. As discussed ante, under both federal and state law, courts have jurisdiction over disputes involving the control of property, even if they touch upon ecclesiastical concepts, as long as the court does not have to settle religious schisms and it can use neutral principles of law to settle the dispute. (See, e.g., Wolf, supra, 443 U.S. at pp. 602–604, 99 S.Ct. 3020; Metropolitan Baptist Church, supra, 48 Cal.App.3d at p. 858, 121 Cal.Rptr. 899.)

18 The record on appeal does not detail these assets, but neither party argued that property interests were not involved. Rather, appellants argued that the adjudication of property interests involved the determination of religious doctrine, which was unconstitutional.

The Sikh Temple has organized itself as a nonprofit religious corporation and is subject to the rules set forth in section 9110 et seq. Section 9210, subdivision (a) provides that each corporation shall have a board of directors and that the “activities and affairs of a corporation shall be conducted and all corporate powers shall be exercised by or under the direction of the board.” Section 9150, subdivision (a) provides: “ ‘Bylaws,’ as used in this part means the code or codes of rules used, adopted, or recognized for the regulation or management of the affairs of the corporation irrespective of the name or names by which such rules are designated.”

Of particular interest is section 9220, which provides in relevant part: “(a) The articles or bylaws may provide for the tenure, election, selection, designation, removal, and resignation of directors. [¶] (b) In the absence of any provision in the articles or bylaws, the term of directors shall be one year. [¶] (c) Unless the articles or bylaws otherwise provide, each director, including a director elected to fill a vacancy, shall hold office until the expiration of the term for which elected and until a successor has been elected and qualified.”

The bylaws of the Sikh Temple, as set forth in Article II, provide that the membership will select the Supreme Council or the board of directors. The bylaws do not specify the term of office. Appellants argue that the references to the Sikh faith, Gurmat tradition, and institution of Panj Pyaras in Article II require the court to interpret their religious doctrine.<sup>19</sup> Appellants **19 therefore *1283 seek to foreclose any court review based on the mention of the Gurmat tradition and Panj Pyaras in Article II. However, “ [t]here are occasions when civil courts must draw lines between the responsibilities of church and state for the disposition or use of property.” [Citation.] And the belief ‘that any conduct can be made a religious rite and by the zeal of the practitioners swept into the First Amendment’ has been consistently repudiated. [Citations.]” (Metropolitan Baptist Church, supra, 48 Cal.App.3d at p. 858, 121 Cal.Rptr. 899.)

19 Article II reads: “The principles and practices of the Gurdwara Management will be those espoused by Sikh faith and Gurmat tradition. The institution of Panj Pyaras (five beloved ones) will be revived in order to provide the guidelines for day-to-day functions of the Gurdwara. The Panj Pyaras (five beloved ones) will be selected and appointed by Sadh Sangat or membership of the Gurdwara Sahib. If any of the Panj Pyaras is found unfit for his position, another Panj Pyara shall be selected by the General Body to fill up the vacancy. In the meantime, the Head Priest of the Gurdawara Sahib shall perform the duties of a Panj Pyara.”

In support of their position, appellants cite the following language in Wolf, supra, 443 U.S. at page 604, 99 S.Ct. 3020: “[T]here may be cases where the deed, the corporate charter, or the constitution of the general church incorporates religious concepts in the provisions relating to the ownership of property. If in such a case the interpretation of the instruments of ownership would require the civil court to resolve a religious controversy, then the court must defer to the resolution of the doctrinal issue by the authoritative ecclesiastical body.” Here, as appellants concede, there is no authoritative ecclesiastical body,<sup>20</sup> but they argue that the court improperly interpreted the Gurmat tradition and the institution of Panj Pyaras. Appellants, however, ignore the sentence shortly following the quoted passage from Wolf that states: “We therefore hold that a State is constitutionally entitled to adopt neutral principles of law as a means of adjudicating a church property dispute.” (Ibid.) In addition, the Wolf court declared: “The State has an obvious and legitimate interest in the peaceful resolution of property disputes, and in providing a civil forum” to settle such disputes. (Id. at p. 602, 99 S.Ct. 3020.)

20 Although they acknowledge there has been no decision by any ecclesiastical tribunal and that the Sikh Temple is congregational in type rather than hierarchical, they point out that Article XII, which sets forth the powers of the Executive Committee, does declare a hierarchy regarding doctrinal issues. Paragraph five reads: “In matters related to the Gurmat and Sikh Rehatmaryada, [t]he Granthi/Priest of the Gurdwara Sahib should be the chief consultant. In matter of doubt, the opinion can be solicited from other Gursikhs, Gyanis and Saints. Sri Akal Takhat is the final authority on all religious matters.” The record does not indicate that the Granthi/Priest of the Sikh Temple has spoken regarding the term of office for the Supreme Council.

Integral to appellants' argument is that the court heard evidence on the meaning of Panj Pyaras and the Gurmat tradition and therefore it unconstitutionally decided the meaning of these terms. Appellants' witnesses testified that the institution of Panj Pyaras is permanent, and therefore no term limit for the Supreme Council exists. They relied upon the fact that the bylaws expressly provide a two-year term limit for the Executive Committee and provide for dismissal of Supreme Council members based on misconduct. Respondents' witnesses, including their expert, Dr. Tarlochan Singh Nahal, *1284 opined that nothing in the wording of Article II dictated the term of office for the Supreme Council. Witnesses for respondents testified that, although the concept of the Panj Pyaras is eternal, the Sikh tradition is for members to serve as Panj Pyaras for a limited time and purpose before returning to the general congregation or Sadh Sangat.

**20 [5] Appellants contend that the mere fact that the court considered evidence on this issue means that it had to resolve an argument over what Panj Pyaras means. As discussed ante, if the court must resolve an incidental issue that is religious in nature, it must first defer to the decision by any ecclesiastical tribunal in the hierarchy of the religious society. (Korean United Presbyterian Church v. Presbytery of the Pacific (1991) 230 Cal.App.3d 480, 498, 281 Cal.Rptr. 396.) The record does not establish that any ecclesiastical tribunal, the Granthi/Priest of the Sikh Temple, the congregation, or any other authority in the Sikh Temple has determined the term of office for the Supreme Council. “Where a schism has developed within a church, resulting in dispute as to who holds ultimate authority for congregational or corporate decisions, civil courts are unavoidably put to the task of identifying the true or legitimate authority. [Citation.] To do otherwise would be to deny ‘all legal protection to churches and [allow] church disputes to be settled by physical force.’ [Citation.]” (Higgins v. Maher (1989) 210 Cal.App.3d 1168, 1173, 258 Cal.Rptr. 757.) Accordingly, the court properly heard evidence to determine whether any authority had determined that the reference to Panj Pyaras or the Gurmat tradition in Article II signified a life term. The fact that experts provided differing opinions and no witness pointed to an authoritative decision on this issue within the Sikh Temple, amply established that there was neither a decision nor consensus on this matter.<sup>21</sup>

21 It is true that in its statement of decision the court concluded that the “legal significance of designating the Supreme Council as Panj Pyaras in Article II of the bylaws is to require that decisions be unanimous to be binding on the Temple corporation.” The court also stated: “Ultimately, the testimony of plaintiffs and their expert, Dr. Tarlochan Singh Nahal, proved by a preponderance of the evidence that there is nothing in the wording of Article II which dictates the term of office for the Supreme Council.” The court further explained that it was not determining the meaning of these terms but simply that there was no consensus that they meant a life term. Even if some of these statements indicate an improper consideration of the meaning of these religious terms, such statements do not constitute reversible error because the court's ruling did not rely on defining or settling the meaning of Panj Pyaras or the Gurmat tradition.

In this case, the court did not have to determine the meaning of Panj Pyaras, only that no authority in the Sikh Temple had adjudicated this issue. A civil court retains jurisdiction to determine purely secular issues. Here, the court determined that religious doctrine was not relevant to the interpretation of the bylaws and resolved the dispute based on contract law and provisions in the Corporations Code. (See *1285 Berry v. Society of Saint Pius X (1999) 69 Cal.App.4th 354, 365, 81 Cal.Rptr.2d 574 [civil court adjudications require analysis of language of instruments such as deeds, church charters, state statutes governing the holding of church property, and provisions in church constitutions pertaining to ownership and control of church property, taking special care to scrutinize documents in purely secular terms and not to rely on religious precepts].)

The court's application of contract law and provisions from the Corporations Code is a neutral-principles approach, which “cannot be said to ‘inhibit’ the free exercise of religion, any more than do other neutral provisions of state law governing the manner in which churches own property, hire employees, or purchase goods. Under the neutral-principles approach, the outcome of a church property dispute is not foreordained. At any time before the dispute erupts, the parties ... can modify the deeds or the corporate **21 charter.... The burden involved in taking such steps will be minimal. And the civil courts will be bound to give effect to the result indicated by the parties, provided it is embodied in some legally cognizable form.” (Wolf, supra, 443 U.S. at p. 606, 99 S.Ct. 3020, fn. omitted.) Similarly, here, under Article XVI,<sup>22</sup> the Supreme Council is not without recourse. The Supreme Council can recommend an amendment of the bylaws that the term of office for the Supreme Council is life and put the recommendation to the membership for approval.

<sup>22</sup>

Article XVI provides in relevant part: “The amendments to the constitution must be first presented to the Supreme Council of Panj Pyaras in the form of a petition, identifying major gaps or shortcomings according to Sikh tradition (Rahatmaryada). The Panj Pyaras should examine the petition carefully and submit their recommendations to the General Body of Gurdwara membership. The 3/4 majority of the Sikh membership in General Body can endorse the amendment and the Constitution can be changed accordingly.”

We therefore conclude that the trial court did not need to determine the meaning of the Panj Pyaras or the Gurmat tradition to interpret the bylaws regarding the term of office for the Supreme Council. Further, the trial court did not determine who was qualified to be a member or who should be a member of the Supreme Council. Rather, the court's ruling that an election should occur resulted from the application of neutral principles of law and the Corporations Code when interpreting the bylaws. We stress that this case is significantly different from those situations where a religious authority has spoken on the issue. Not only has no religious authority spoken, but the Sikh Temple has no viable means of resolving this issue. The bylaws are silent regarding any method of resolving any schism involving the interpretation of the bylaws. We therefore cannot say that the trial court *1286 overstepped its bounds of jurisdiction in ordering an election when doing so was secular in purpose.<sup>23</sup>

<sup>23</sup>

Although clearly not binding on us, we note that other jurisdictions have concluded that the First Amendment does not bar courts from ordering elections or developing procedures to ensure a fair election in religious institutions. (See, e.g., McKinney v. Twenty-Fifth Ave. Baptist Ch., Inc. (Ala.1987) 514 So.2d 837, 838–839 [ordered members of competing church factions to compile a list of church members eligible to vote in an election]; Wilkerson v. Battiste (La.App.1980) 393 So.2d 195, 196–197 [court had jurisdiction over claim that board of directors were not elected according to procedures of charter because this is procedural issue and not related to religious law, custom, or policy]; Pilgrim Rest Missionary Baptist Church v. Wallace (Miss.2003) 835 So.2d 67, 72–74 [court had authority to order election regarding pastor's employment].)

III. The Trial Court's Remedies and the Establishment Clause

Appellants contend that the trial court's remedies for resolving the disputes at the Sikh Temple represent an unconstitutional and excessive government entanglement with religion. Specifically, they complain that the court's interference into their method for accepting and denying membership, the ordering of an election, and the requirement that individuals have equal time to advocate for the election, violated the establishment clause of the First Amendment applied to the states through the Fourteenth Amendment of the United States Constitution.

A. The Three-Part Test

[6] Appellants complain that the remedies imposed by the trial court violate the three-part test regarding government action and the establishment clause set forth in **22 Lemon v. Kurtzman (1971) 403 U.S. 602, 91 S.Ct. 2105, 29 L.Ed.2d 745 (Lemon). The United States Supreme Court established three criteria, which must be satisfied to avoid conflict with the establishment clause: First, the challenged government activity must have a secular legislative purpose; second, the principal or primary effect of the activity must be one that neither advances nor inhibits religion; and third, the activity must not foster an excessive government entanglement with religion. (Id. at pp. 612–613, 91 S.Ct. 2105.)

[7] [8] [9] Under the first criterion, inquiry into the purpose of the challenged government action should be deferential and limited. If the government articulates a plausible secular purpose, this should be accepted absent a contrary showing by the challenger. (Wallace v. Jaffree (1985) 472 U.S. 38, 74–75, 105 S.Ct. 2479, 86 L.Ed.2d 29 (conc. opn. of O'Connor, J.)) *1287 Whereas the first criterion of the Lemon test involves a determination whether the purpose behind the challenged action is to endorse or disapprove religion, the second or effect criterion

“asks whether, irrespective of government's actual purpose, the practice under review in fact conveys a message of endorsement or disapproval.” (Lynch v. Donnelly (1984) 465 U.S. 668, 690, 104 S.Ct. 1355, 79 L.Ed.2d 604 (conc. opn. of O'Connor, J.)) Applying an objective standard, the question becomes whether the challenged action is sufficiently likely to be perceived by reasonable adherents of the controlling religion as an endorsement, or by reasonable nonadherents as a disapproval, of their individual religious choices. (Grand Rapids School District v. Ball (1985) 473 U.S. 373, 390, 105 S.Ct. 3216, 87 L.Ed.2d 267.) The third criterion of the Lemon test concerns entanglement with religion and contemplates a determination whether the state will be required to monitor the challenged government activity for its religious content in order to assure that it does not have the unintended effect of encouraging or discouraging religion. (Lemon, supra, 403 U.S. at p. 619, 91 S.Ct. 2105.)

B. Membership Application

The trial court ruled that, pursuant to section 9350, subdivision (b)<sup>24</sup> and section 9510, subdivision (a),<sup>25</sup> appellants and respondents “shall meet and confer to draft a mutually acceptable membership application, which shall include a reasonable standard for ‘regular’ attendance, to be presented to the Court for approval as hereinafter provided.” The court further explained that membership applications were to be solicited at five consecutive Sunday congregational meetings on dates to be specified. It ruled that a membership committee shall be formed consisting of four representatives appointed by respondents and four representatives appointed by appellants who shall be charged with the duty of admitting or denying membership, advising applicants of their decision with the grounds for any denial, and the preparation and maintenance of a membership list. The court specified that no named party in this action or any of the prior actions involving the Sikh Temple elections could serve on **23 the membership committee. Any disputes over admission to membership, which the membership committee could not resolve by a five-person majority vote, would be submitted to a special master.

<sup>24</sup> Section 9350, subdivision (b) provides: “No person is liable for any obligation arising from membership unless the person was admitted to membership upon the person's application or with the person's consent.”

<sup>25</sup> Section 9510, subdivision (a) reads: “(a) Each corporation shall keep: [¶] (1) Adequate and correct books and records of account. [¶] (2) Minutes of the proceedings of its members, board and committees of the board. [¶] (3) A record of its members giving their names and addresses and the class of membership held by each....”

*1288 Appellants assert that the trial court's decision “has empowered Plaintiffs with authority equal to that of the same Supreme Council....” Appellants argue that no one requested the court to make any decision regarding membership and this decision violates the establishment clause of the First Amendment. Further, they complain that it requires the court to be entangled in the Sikh Temple's religious affairs in violation of the First Amendment.

Appellants' argument that no one requested the court to make any decision regarding membership is without merit. Respondents requested in their first amended complaint that the court “determine the validity of memberships in defendant Gurdwara Sahib to assure a valid election under the by-laws of defendant Gurdwara Sahib, and direct such other and further relief as may be just and proper to assure a valid and peaceful election.”

[10] As to their argument that the ruling violates the establishment clause, we apply the Lemon test. The first criterion is whether the court has a clear secular purpose. (Lemon, supra, 403 U.S. at p. 612, 91 S.Ct. 2105; Wallace v. Jaffree, supra, 472 U.S. at pp. 74–75, 105 S.Ct. 2479.) Under California Corporations law, every religious corporation is mandated to keep “[a] record of its members with their names and addresses and the class of membership held by each.” (§ 9510, subd. (a)(3).) The membership records must be kept in writing or in a form capable of being converted into writing. (§ 9510, subd. (b).) The compelling state interest in requiring religious or nonprofit corporations to maintain such a list has been upheld. (See, e.g., Pacific–Union Club v. Superior Court (1991) 232 Cal.App.3d 60, 71–81, 283 Cal.Rptr. 287.) It was undisputed at trial that appellants never made or maintained a membership list or roster. Since the membership votes for the offices on the Supreme Council, a fair election can only be held if a list of members can be ascertained. Accordingly, the court's clear purpose was to ensure that the Sikh Temple complied with the law by maintaining a record of membership, and therefore the court's ruling had a secular purpose.

The ruling also satisfies the second criterion in the Lemon test in that the ruling neither advances nor inhibits religion. Requiring the Sikh Temple to comply with the statutes governing nonprofit corporations does not convey any message of endorsement or disapproval of the religious practices of the Temple.

[11] Appellants never address the first two criteria of the Lemon test, but they do argue, in a conclusory fashion, that the court's action fosters excessive government entanglement with the Sikh Temple, especially since any remaining disputes regarding membership are to be addressed by a special master. Thus, they appear to be arguing the ruling violates the third prong of the *1289 Lemon test. Appellants, however, misconstrue this final criterion. It is not the mere fact that the government may have to continue to monitor an activity that constitutes unconstitutional entanglement with religion. Rather, it is whether the court will be required to monitor the activity for its religious content. (Lemon, supra, 403 U.S. at p. 619, 91 S.Ct. 2105.)

In their reply brief, appellants assert that it is well settled that a church has the right to determine its own membership and that courts should not resolve disputes over who is or can be a member. (See, **24 e.g., Bouldin v. Alexander (1872) 82 U.S. (15 Wall.) 131, 139–140, 21 L.Ed. 69.) We agree. However, the court did not rule that it has the discretion to determine who qualifies as a member. Rather, the court is to resolve any disputes regarding the application of the criteria for membership as set forth in the Sikh Temple's own bylaws.

Appellants contend that they should retain the discretion to admit or not admit members even if applicants meet the requirements set forth in Article X of the bylaws. They complain that nothing in the bylaws mandates that they must accept members who meet these threshold requirements. Further, they claim that respondents should not be part of this decision making process since they were never elected to the Supreme Council.

The requirements for admission to membership are specified in the articles of incorporation and bylaws, as required by section 9310, subdivision (a).<sup>26</sup> Article X of the bylaws provides the following regarding membership: “There will be only one class of membership. There is no membership fee. [¶] Definition of a Sadh Sangat member: [¶] 1. Membership of the Gurdwara Sahib is open to a person who is resident of these counties: Santa Clara, Santa Cruz, San Mateo, Alamada [sic ], Contra Costa, San Francisco, Solano. [¶] 2. Is 18 years of age or over. [¶] 3. Believes in Sikhism, teachings of ten Gurus, Rehatnamas, accepts Guru Granth Sahib as a living Guru. [¶] 4. Pledges to abide by the constitution of the Gurdwara Sahib.” Article XI provides, in pertinent part: “The General Body/Sadh Sangat should consist of all those persons who attend the Gurdwara Sahib regularly.” The court interpreted this sentence in Article XI as providing grounds for denying or suspending membership due to lack of regular attendance. Nothing in the bylaws indicates that the Supreme Council has the sole authority to determine membership.<sup>27</sup>

26 Section 9310, subdivision (a) declares: “A corporation may admit persons to membership, as provided in its articles or bylaws, or may provide in its articles or bylaws that it shall have no members. In the absence of any provision in its articles or bylaws providing for members, a corporation shall have no members.”

27 Article XIII sets forth the duties and responsibilities of the Supreme Council or Panj Pyaras: “1. The Supreme Council should meet at least once a month. Quorum of the meeting consists of five members. 2. The Supreme Council should select a coordinator among themselves, who could call meetings, record the minutes of these meetings and act as a liason [sic ] with Executive Committee. [¶] 3. The Supreme Council meetings should be presided by Panj Pyaras on rotation basis. The subject of the meetings should be circulated among the members of the council before the scheduled date of the meeting.”

*1290 In the court's order, it made it clear that it recognized that the board of directors could augment the bylaws or develop written operating rules to further refine the process for accepting or denying membership. Thus, the court did not strip the board of directors from exercising their discretion. Rather, the court stated that the board of directors must comply with the law in setting forth the operating rules for accepting members. As the court noted, the bylaws and any operating rules must be applied “ ‘reasonably and equally ’ ” to all applicants and members. (See, e.g., Braude v. Automobile Club of Southern Cal. (1978) 78 Cal.App.3d 178, 182–185, 144 Cal.Rptr. 169.) If appellants desire to have the Supreme Council retain the ultimate right to accept or deny membership, they must propose such an amendment to the congregation for its approval.

The evidence indicates that, currently, appellants maintain an ad hoc method for **25 determining whether to accept or deny applications for membership. Thus, a full and fair election by the members cannot be conducted until criteria for membership are clearly set forth and fairly applied. The trial court established a procedure whereby the membership of the Sikh Temple could be ascertained to ensure a fair election and compliance with the Corporations Code. The court did so in the absence of clear bylaws and a higher religious authority. The order ensures that reasonable notice of the application procedure will be provided and that the application process will be conducted in an orderly manner. The court's order does not create the criteria for membership, nor does it inquire as to the reasons why certain criteria are or are not being used. Rather, the court specified that the membership committee must admit or deny membership based on the criteria set forth in the bylaws.

As already noted, the bylaws do not specify that only the Supreme Council retains the right to decide who can be a member. If a dispute regarding the membership occurs, the special master will hear evidence whether the applicant meets the criteria set forth in the bylaws. The special master will settle disputes if necessary, but the special master must limit any determination to the fairness of the procedure. The special master will not be determining the criteria for membership or whether the applicant, does in fact, believe in Sikhism, the teachings of ten Gurus, Rehatnamas, or accepts Guru Granth Sahib as a living Guru.<sup>28</sup> In settling any dispute regarding *1291 membership, the special master cannot make any determinations regarding the qualifications of that person, but only as to whether the criteria or qualifications have been applied fairly to that person.<sup>29</sup> attending if a dispute arises between appellants and respondents and the term remains undefined by the congregation, bylaws, or other authority in the Sikh Temple.

<sup>28</sup> Appellants further complain that a dispute could emerge about what “regularly” attending a meeting means, which is a threshold requirement for membership. Appellants and respondents are to determine what “regularly” means and then apply it uniformly. If the parties cannot agree on a definition of “regularly,” according to the court's order, the special master will hear evidence. As already stressed, the special master can ensure that procedures are being applied fairly and not arbitrarily, but the special master cannot adjudicate the meaning of any religious term. We need not decide at this point whether the court would have jurisdiction to resolve the question of “regularly”

<sup>29</sup> To the extent that the court's statement of decision suggests that the special master can make such a determination, it is unconstitutional. At this point, no challenge has been made to the acceptance or rejection of an application for membership, and no adjudication has been made regarding a member's qualifications. Thus, at this time, the trial court has not exceeded its authority.

C. Elections

The trial court found that the term of office for each of the current Supreme Council members had expired and it ordered a new election by written ballot on January 12, 2003, pursuant to section 9418 (see footnote 12, ante). The court reserved jurisdiction over this matter.

Appellants declare that requiring or overseeing an election involves excessive entanglement. They claim that their expert testified that “[t]he Panj Pyaras are usually selected from the Sangat [congregation].” Since 1988, the Sikh Temple has used a nomination and affirmation process. A contested election, according to appellants, is antithetical to this process of achieving unanimity in decisions made by the congregation.

To the contrary of appellants' argument, the record establishes that elections have **26 occurred at the Sikh Temple. More significantly, the bylaws require a vote of two-thirds of the Executive Committee to dismiss one of its members; they provide that “the majority vote will prevail” whenever the Executive Committee cannot reach a unanimous decision; they require a petition by at least one-fifth of the congregation to convene a special meeting of the general body; and they require a vote of three-fourths of the membership to amend the bylaws. Finally, appellants became members of the Supreme Council as a result of a court-supervised election after they had agreed that an election was the best way to resolve the leadership dispute.

Other than to state in a conclusory fashion that this ruling is an impermissible entanglement with religion, appellants fail to provide any analysis and avoid applying the Lemon test. (Lemon, supra, 403 U.S. at pp. 612–613, 91 S.Ct. 2105.) The *1292 court's ruling—to impose a fair election that complies with the law—satisfies the first prong of the test in that the ruling has a secular purpose. The court clearly explained the need for a new election, as the court was unable to review the results of the election on March 31, 2002. The court could not discern the majority vote because, following each proclamation, “a cacophony of sound ensued with congregants voicing approval or disapproval simultaneously. [¶] Each party urges the court to weigh the decibel level of any distinguishable responses as recorded in videotapes of the meeting and make a ruling on the basis. The court cannot determine a majority vote of either approval or disapproval from the evidence submitted.” (Bold in original.) Moreover, the court noted that it was unclear whether the votes or verbal responses were limited to Sikh Temple members. The court explained: “The election procedure used on March 31, permitting approval and disapproval to be voiced simultaneously, is suspect because it is vulnerable to giving great weight to the loud or demonstrative voice of one person who may be a non-member and little weight to the soft or restrained voice of another who may be a member. All members have the same right to one, equally weighted vote. (Article X; Corp.Code 9310(a); 9331). Non-members have no right to participate in Temple elections.”

With regard to the second prong, the court's order regarding an election does not advance or inhibit religion. Requiring an election does not convey a message of endorsement or disapproval of Sikh traditions. Rather, the evidence clearly supports the finding that a full, fair, and free election cannot be held unless it is completed by written ballot.

Appellants appear to be arguing that this ruling violates the third prong of the Lemon test in that it fosters an excessive government entanglement with religion. (Lemon, supra, 403 U.S. at pp. 612–613, 91 S.Ct. 2105.) However, as stressed ante, it is not the monitoring of a religious corporation that is prohibited, but the monitoring of the activity for its religious content, which may have the unintended effect of encouraging or discouraging religion. (Id. at p. 619, 91 S.Ct. 2105.) “Certainly no directors of a corporation, whatever their number, may perpetuate themselves in office by refusing to call an election.” (Burnett, supra, 130 Cal.App.2d at p. 634, 279 P.2d 579.) “It is clear that the court has the right when it appears that a corporation election will not be held because of the failure of its directors to call it, or that such directors will not conduct a free, fair and full election to order one held under court auspices. This is not an ecclesiastical matter but a corporation one.” (Id. at p. 635, 279 P.2d 579.)

**27 As discussed ante, the court had authority to order an election for the board of directors under the Corporations Code. The court merely sought to establish a procedure in which the majority of the congregation could be heard regarding their preference for who should be a member of the Supreme *1293 Council. Section 9418, subdivision (c) provides: “The court, consistent with the provisions of this part and in conformity with the articles and bylaws to the extent feasible, may determine the person entitled to the office of director or may order a new election to be held or appointment to be made, may determine the validity of the issuance of memberships and the right of persons to vote and may direct such other relief as may be just and proper.”

Accordingly, we conclude that the order to hold an election by written ballot did not violate the establishment clause of the First Amendment.

D. Equal Time Requirement

[12] In its statement of decision, the trial court stated that appellants “shall preserve the religious purpose of Sunday Temple services. To the extent that defendants use Sunday Temple services as a platform to lobby for their retention or re-election, plaintiffs shall be afforded equal time, including the opportunity to address the congregation from the stage or platform.” Appellants argue that enforcement of this order would impermissibly require the court to determine whether the services did or did not “preserve the religious purpose” of the services.

We disagree. The court would not have to interpret any religious doctrine. Rather, the court would simply determine whether appellants advocated or discussed their retention or reelection. The court would not be interpreting or applying any religious doctrine, but would simply be ensuring that the election process was fair.

IV. Interpretation of the Bylaws

[13] [14] [15] Appellants argue that, even if the court had jurisdiction to interpret the bylaws and the relief it ordered did not violate the establishment clause of the First Amendment, the court erred when it interpreted the bylaws as failing to provide for a term of office for the Supreme Council. They assert that we must apply de novo review. When the trial court's interpretation is based solely upon the terms of the written instrument, and there is no conflict in the evidence, we review the ruling de novo. (E.g., Peerless Lighting Corp. v. American Motorists Ins. Co. (2000) 82 Cal.App.4th 995, 1005, 98 Cal.Rptr.2d 753.) Although we review the construction of the express terms of the instrument de novo, we review the evidence regarding the interpretation of the words under the substantial evidence test. (E.g., Parsons v. Bristol Development Co. (1965) 62 Cal.2d 861, 865, 44 Cal.Rptr. 767, 402 P.2d 839.) We must uphold any factual determination of the trial court, express or implied, so long as there is substantial evidence in the record to support it. *1294 (Williams v. City of Belvedere (1999) 72 Cal.App.4th 84, 89, 84 Cal.Rptr.2d 658.) If the evidence is conflicting, we must accept that which supports the trial court's decision and make all reasonable inferences in support of the judgment. (Lake v. Reed (1997) 16 Cal.4th 448, 457, 65 Cal.Rptr.2d 860, 940 P.2d 311.)

[16] When interpreting the bylaws, the court properly used contract law and employed the applicable provisions of the Corporations Code. “ ‘It is generally accepted that corporate bylaws are to be construed according to the general rules governing the construction of statutes and contracts.’ [Citation.] Bylaws must ‘ ‘be **28 given a reasonable construction and, when reasonably susceptible thereof, they should be given a construction which will sustain their validity....’ ’ [Citation.]” (Sanchez v. Grain Growers Assn. (1981) 126 Cal.App.3d 665, 672, 179 Cal.Rptr. 459.)

Appellants argue that Article IV, which concerns the dismissal of a Supreme Council member, specifies when a Supreme Council member may be removed. Article IV dictates that a member of the Supreme Council “can be dismissed” for breaking the Sikh code of conduct, as prescribed in Rehatnamas; for breaking the Sikh rule of objectivity by indulging in petty politics of factionalism and name calling; and for being unable to get along with the Supreme Council. They contend that the situations set forth in Article IV are the only grounds for removing a member of the Supreme Council and this bylaw does not provide for elections. In addition, they assert that Article V mandates a two-year term of service for members of the Executive Committee and therefore the bylaws would have spelled out the length of the term of office for the members of the Supreme Council if there had been an intent to limit it. Although they insist that we should review their challenge de novo because no factual issues are in dispute or are necessary to interpret the bylaws, they proceed to cite testimony of their witnesses and the paucity of any elections as support for the argument that the intent was for the Supreme Council members was to have life terms.

The evidence amply supported a finding that there was no consensus regarding the meaning of Panj Pyaras and the Gurmat tradition and that no religious authority had spoken on the subject. Appellants' argument regarding the dearth of elections is similarly unavailing. It is undisputed that elections were held for members of the Supreme Council by a majority voice vote of the congregation in 1988, which was pursuant to the newly adopted bylaws; by a majority vote in 1991 and 1993;<sup>30</sup> and by a court-supervised election in 1996. Thus, even if we agreed that evidence of no elections supported *1295 appellants' interpretation that the Supreme Council serves a life term, the evidence in the record establishes that elections have occurred.

30 These votes following the resignation of four of the members of the Supreme Council in 1991 and all five members of the Supreme Council in 1993.

We also reject appellants' argument that Articles IV and V support the conclusion that the Supreme Council has a life term. Article II concerns the selection procedure for members of the Supreme Council. It also specifies that another person will be selected if a member is “found unfit.” Article IV concerns the situation when a member of the Supreme Council “can be dismissed” or be found unfit prior to the completion of the person's term of office. The fact that members can be dismissed does not mean that they otherwise serve indefinitely. Finally, Article V concerns the selection procedure for the Executive Committee. It is true that this Article limits the term for the Executive Committee member to two years, but this does not necessarily mean that the failure to specify a term for the Supreme Council indicates the intent to have the Supreme Council serve for life. Rather, it could also be argued that, if the intent was to have members of the Supreme Council appointed for life terms, Article II would have expressly provided for that.

The express terms of the bylaws provide for the selection of members of the Supreme Council, dismissal of members of the Supreme Council, and selection of and the terms of office for members of the Executive Committee. The bylaws are silent **29 regarding the term of office for members of the Supreme Council.

Section 9210<sup>31</sup> requires that the activities and affairs of a nonprofit religious corporation, like the Sikh Temple, be conducted and its corporate powers be exercised under the direction of a board of directors, subject to the provisions of the Corporations Code and to “any provisions in the articles or bylaws.” The bylaws of a religious corporation “may provide for the tenure, election, selection, designation, removal, and resignation of directors.” (§ 9220, subd. (a).) Subdivision (b) of section 9220 provides: “In the absence of any provision in the articles or bylaws, the term of directors shall be one year.” Since the bylaws were silent regarding the term of office for members of the Supreme Council, the trial court properly ruled that the members of the Supreme Council had a one-year term pursuant to section 9220, subdivision (b).

31 Section 9210 reads: “Subject to the provisions of this part and any provision in the articles or bylaws: [¶] (a) Each corporation shall have a board of directors. The activities and affairs of a corporation shall be conducted and all corporate powers shall be exercised by or under the direction of the board. [¶] (b) The board may delegate the management of the activities of the corporation to any person or persons provided that the activities and affairs of the corporation shall be managed and all corporate powers shall be exercised under the ultimate direction of the board.”

*1296 DISPOSITION

The judgment is affirmed. Respondents are awarded costs.

We concur: KLINE, P.J., and HAERLE, J.

All Citations

114 Cal.App.4th 1264, 9 Cal.Rptr.3d 4, 04 Cal. Daily Op. Serv. 496, 2004 Daily Journal D.A.R. 641

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-114

18A Am. Jur. 2d Corporations § 262

American Jurisprudence, Second Edition | May 2020 Update

Corporations

Barbara J. Van Arsdale, J.D.; Romualdo P. Eclavea, J.D.; George Blum, J.D.; John Bourdeau, J.D.; John Glenn, J.D.; Amy G. Gore, J.D., of the staff of the National Legal Research Group, Inc.; Jill Gustafson, J.D.; Glenda K. Harnad, J.D.; Janice Holben, J.D.; Alan J. Jacobs, J.D.; Sonja Larsen, J.D.; Jack K. Levin, J.D.; Lucas Martin, J.D.; Karen L. Schultz, J.D.; and Jeffrey J. Shampo, J.D.

VII. Bylaws

§ 262. Construction or interpretation

Topic Summary | Correlation Table | ReferencesWest's Key Number Digest

- West's Key Number Digest, Corporations and Business Organizations 🔑 1259 to 1263, 3384

Corporate bylaws are construed according to the general rules governing the construction of contracts,<sup>1</sup> statutes,<sup>2</sup> and other written instruments.<sup>3</sup> The bylaws are presumed to be valid, and the courts will construe the bylaws in a manner consistent with the law rather than strike them down.<sup>4</sup> They are to be construed reasonably,<sup>5</sup> and if they are susceptible of two reasonable constructions, one of which would make them invalid, in accordance with the view sustaining their validity.<sup>6</sup> In construing corporate bylaws, courts attempt to harmonize and give effect to every provision and presume that the parties intended to impose reasonable terms.<sup>7</sup> For purposes of construing bylaws, courts presume that every word has a meaning and should avoid any construction that would render any part of a bylaw nugatory.<sup>8</sup> Furthermore, ambiguous or obscure provisions of bylaws will be construed in harmony with the intent of the governing regulations taken as a whole<sup>9</sup> and that construction will be adopted which is best calculated to promote the business or essential welfare of the corporation.<sup>10</sup>

A corporation's bylaws establish rules of internal governance, which, like contracts and statutes, are construed according to their plain meaning within the context of the document as a whole.<sup>11</sup> Language is to be construed according to its usual, ordinary, and commonly accepted meaning<sup>12</sup> unless the context clearly requires a different one or unless legal phrases having a special meaning are used.<sup>13</sup> Where a bylaw uses a term which as a matter of law has no fixed meaning, the intent and understanding of the parties must control.<sup>14</sup> Any ambiguity in the bylaws will be construed against the corporation and its officers.<sup>15</sup>

The construction of an ambiguous bylaw by a corporation will be recognized and adopted by the courts.<sup>16</sup>

Articles of incorporation, by-laws, and covenants are correlated documents that are construed together when interpreting the governing documents of a corporation.<sup>17</sup> The interpretation of the language of a bylaw, when called into question in a judicial proceeding, has been deemed to present a question of law so that in cases tried before a jury, it must be determined by the court rather than the jury<sup>18</sup> although there is authority to the contrary.<sup>19</sup> © 2020 Thomson Reuters. 33-34B © 2020 Thomson Reuters/RIA. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works. All rights reserved.

Footnotes

- 1 Scheenstra v. California Dairies, Inc., 213 Cal. App. 4th 370, 153 Cal. Rptr. 3d 21 (5th Dist. 2013), review denied, (Apr. 17, 2013); Gentile v. SinglePoint Financial, Inc., 788 A.2d 111 (Del. 2001); Berkowitz v. Delaire Country Club, Inc., 126 So. 3d 1215 (Fla. 4th DCA 2012); Oberbillig v. West Grand Towers Condominium Ass'n, 807 N.W.2d 143 (Iowa 2011); Robinson v. Lagenbach, 439 S.W.3d 853 (Mo. Ct. App. E.D. 2014).
- 2 As to the construction of contracts, generally, see Am. Jur. 2d, Contracts §§ 328 to 404.
- 3 Singh v. Singh, 114 Cal. App. 4th 1264, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 4 (1st Dist. 2004); P.F.P. Family Holdings, L.P. v. Stan Lee Media, Inc., 252 P.3d 1 (Colo. App. 2010); Gentile v. SinglePoint Financial, Inc., 788 A.2d 111 (Del. 2001); Slatterly v. Madiol, 257 Mich. App. 242, 668 N.W.2d 154 (2003); Purcell v. Milton Hershey School Alumni Ass'n, 884 A.2d 372, 202 Ed. Law Rep. 702 (Pa. Commw. Ct. 2005).
- 4 P.F.P. Family Holdings, L.P. v. Stan Lee Media, Inc., 252 P.3d 1 (Colo. App. 2010); Gentile v. SinglePoint Financial, Inc., 788 A.2d 111 (Del. 2001); Purcell v. Milton Hershey School Alumni Ass'n, 884 A.2d 372, 202 Ed. Law Rep. 702 (Pa. Commw. Ct. 2005); Virginia High School League, Inc. v. J.J. Kelly High School, 254 Va. 528, 493 S.E.2d 362, 122 Ed. Law Rep. 536 (1997).
- 5 Boilermakers Local 154 Retirement Fund v. Chevron Corp., 73 A.3d 934 (Del. Ch. 2013), judgment entered, 2013 WL 3810127 (Del. Ch. 2013); Kansas Heart Hospital, L.L.C. v. Idbeis, 286 Kan. 183, 184 P.3d 866 (2008); Adams v. Christie's Inc., 880 A.2d 774 (R.I. 2005).
- 6 Phillips v. National Trappers Ass'n, 407 N.W.2d 609 (Iowa Ct. App. 1987).
- 7 Sanchez v. Grain Growers Ass'n of California, 123 Cal. App. 3d 444, 176 Cal. Rptr. 655 (3d Dist. 1981); Dugan v. Firemen's Pension Fund of Philadelphia, 372 Pa. 429, 94 A.2d 353 (1953).
- 8 In re Aguilar, 344 S.W.3d 41 (Tex. App. El Paso 2011).
- 9 Slatterly v. Madiol, 257 Mich. App. 242, 668 N.W.2d 154 (2003).
- 10 Storrs v. Lutheran Hospitals and Homes Soc. of America, Inc., 609 P.2d 24 (Alaska 1980) (repugnant provisions must be harmonized); Phillips v. National Trappers Ass'n, 407 N.W.2d 609 (Iowa Ct. App. 1987).
- 11 Denton Milling Co. v. Blewett, 254 S.W. 236 (Tex. Civ. App. Texarkana 1923), writ denied, 114 Tex. 582, 278 S.W. 1114 (1923).
- 12 Isaacs v. American Iron & Steel Co., 690 N.W.2d 373 (Minn. Ct. App. 2004).
- 13 Hibbert v. Hollywood Park, Inc., 457 A.2d 339 (Del. 1983); Wigod v. Chicago Mercantile Exchange, 141 Ill. App. 3d 129, 95 Ill. Dec. 566, 490 N.E.2d 39 (1st Dist. 1986).
- 14 A corporate bylaw is construed as it is written, and the language, if simple and unambiguous, is given the force and effect required. Kansas Heart Hospital, L.L.C. v. Idbeis, 286 Kan. 183, 184 P.3d 866 (2008).
- 15 Hibbert v. Hollywood Park, Inc., 457 A.2d 339 (Del. 1983).
- 16 Area, Inc. v. Stetenfeld, 541 P.2d 755 (Alaska 1975) (construction of term "book value").
- 17 Palermo v. Old Tram Hunting Club, 227 So. 2d 644 (La. Ct. App. 3d Cir. 1969).
- 18 Voss v. Lakefront Realty Corp., 48 Ill. App. 3d 56, 8 Ill. Dec. 109, 365 N.E.2d 347 (1st Dist. 1977).
- 19 Oberbillig v. West Grand Towers Condominium Ass'n, 807 N.W.2d 143 (Iowa 2011); Kansas City University of Medicine and Biosciences v. Pletz, 351 S.W.3d 254, 273 Ed. Law Rep. 891 (Mo. Ct. App. W.D. 2011); Roats v. Blakely Island Maintenance Com'n, Inc., 169 Wash. App. 263, 279 P.3d 943 (Div. 1 2012).
- 20 Carney v. New York Life Ins. Co., 162 N.Y. 453, 57 N.E. 78 (1900); Middle Tenn. Elec. Membership Corp. v. State ex rel. Adams, 193 Tenn. 513, 246 S.W.2d 958 (1952).

---

End of Document

© 2020 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-115

SINCE 1828

---

accountability

noun

ac·count·abil·i·ty | \ ə-,kaʊn-tə-'bi-lə-tē  \

Definition of accountability

: the quality or state of being accountable especially : an obligation or willingness to accept responsibility or to account for one's actions public officials lacking accountability

Examples of accountability in a Sentence

Recent Examples on the Web The damage goes beyond the lack of accountability, argues Sullivan, a media columnist for The Washington Post. — Susan Benkelman, Washington Post, "Local journalism has collapsed. Can anything save it?," 10 July 2020 As opposed to punitive justice, which excises people from their communities, the principles of transformative justice are rooted in a practice of community accountability. — Isabel Cristo, The New Republic, "Policing Doesn't Protect Women," 6 July 2020

These example sentences are selected automatically from various online news sources to reflect current usage of the word 'accountability.' Views expressed in the examples do not represent the opinion of Merriam-Webster or its editors. Send us feedback.

Home | Help | Apps | About Us | Shop | Advertising Info | Dictionary API |
Contact Us | Join MWU | Video | Word of the Year | Puku | Vocabulary Resources |
Law Dictionary | Medical Dictionary | Privacy Policy | Terms of Use |
Do Not Sell My Info

Browse the Thesaurus | Browse the Medical Dictionary | Browse the Legal Dictionary |
Browse the Spanish English Dictionary

© 2020 Merriam-Webster, Incorporated

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-116

Oxford English Dictionary | The definitive record of the English language

accountability, n.

Pronunciation: Brit. /əˌkaʊntəˈbɪlɪti/, U.S. /əˌkaʊn(t)əˈbɪlədi/

Frequency (in current use):

Origin: Formed within English, by derivation. Etymon: ACCOUNTABLE adj.

Etymology: < ACCOUNTABLE adj.: see -BILITY suffix. Compare earlier ACCOUNTABLENESS n.

1. The quality of being accountable; liability to account for and answer for one's conduct, performance of duties, etc. (in modern use often with regard to parliamentary, corporate, or financial liability to the public, shareholders, etc.); responsibility. Frequently with modifying word. Cf. ACCOUNTABLENESS n., ANSWERABILITY n., public accountability n. at PUBLIC adj. and n.

Compounds 1b.

- 1750 Censor censured: Answer to Mr. Droz's Remarks 10 It will still lie on you to prove..that the aforementioned moral Sensations, are, in any Propriety, Laws, when abstracted from all Idea of Accountability, and of Rewards and Punishments.
- 1808 Mem. Dr. J. Cadman (1853) 75 To affect the accountability of man.
- 1816 R. S. COXE Rep. Supreme Court New-Jersey 1 155 The orphan's court is..instituted by law to remedy and supply the defects in the powers of the perogative court, with regard to the accountability of executors, administrators and guardians.
- 1859 J. S. MILL Diss. & Disc. I. 467 Pushing to its utmost extent the accountability of governments to the people.
- 1935 Harvard Law Rev. 48 788 The reason why this distinction becomes crucial is..that financial accountability in the government means conformity with the legal requirements governing spending.
- 1986 G. KEILLOR Lake Wobegon Days 127 I had reached the age of accountability.
- 2007 R. LOVEGROVE Silent Fields iv. 87 They assumed accountability for..the supporting of maimed seamen and soldiers, highway maintenance, disbursing the poor rates, [etc..].

2. As a count noun: an instance of being accountable; a task, function, etc., for which one is accountable or responsible; a responsibility. Usually in plural.

- 1801 T. JEFFERSON Let. in Jrnl. Senate U.S. 16 Bringing back to a single department all accountabilities for money, where the examinations may be prompt, efficacious and uniform.
- 1880 Friends' Intelligencer 26 June 297/2 His energies are quickened, and, if he be a true man, he awakens to all the accountabilities of his new position.
- 1964 L. L. FULLER Morality of Law ii. 75 Blasting operations may be attended by an accountability for all harm that may result to others even though no intent to harm..can be demonstrated.
- 1996 Financial Times 11 Jan. 8/1 (advt.) Specific accountabilities include all aspects of Treasury management information, analysing product and market developments, communicating treasury policies, acting as senior dealer for forex, money markets and derivatives.

2004 N.Y. Times Mag. 19 Sept. 105 (adv.) In addition to investigating violations of federal criminal law, we are taking on new accountabilities as we work in conjunction with the Department of Homeland Security and other Federal agencies.

---

This entry has been updated (OED Third Edition, December 2011).

Oxford University Press

Copyright © 2020 Oxford University Press . All rights reserved.

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-117

DEFINITIONS ▾ | redress

GS WORD GAMES LEARN WRITING WORD OF THE DAYTOP DEFINITIONS QUIZZES RELATED CONTENT EXAMPLES EXPLORE DICTIONARY BRITISH

redress

 [ noun ree-dres, ri-dres; verb ri-dres ] SHOW IPA SEE SYNONYMS FOR redress ON THESAURUS.COM

noun

- 1 the setting right of what is wrong:
redress of abuses.
- 2 relief from wrong or injury.
- 3 compensation or satisfaction for a wrong or injury.

verb (used with object)

- 4 to set right; remedy or repair (wrongs, injuries, etc.).
- 5 to correct or reform (abuses, evils, etc.).
- 6 to remedy or relieve (suffering, want, etc.).

SEE MORE

DEFINITIONS ▾ | redress

MEANINGS WORD GAMES LEARN WRITING WORD OF THE DAY

Browse the Dictionary: # A B C D E F G H I J K L M N O P Q R S T U V W X Y Z

Browse by Category: Slang Emoji Acronyms Pop Culture More

About Careers Contact Us Cookies, Terms, & Privacy Do Not Sell My

Info

© 2020 Dictionary.com, LLC

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-118

Black's Law Dictionary (11th ed. 2019), redress

REDRESS

Bryan A. Garner, Editor in Chief

Preface | Guide | Legal Maxims | Bibliography

redress (ri-dres or ree-dres) n. (14c) 1. Relief; remedy <money damages, as opposed to equitable relief, is the only redress available>. 2. A means of seeking relief or remedy <if the statute of limitations has run, the plaintiff is without redress>. — redressable, adj. — redress (ri-dres), vb. — redresser, n.

- penal redress. (1874) A form of penal liability requiring full compensation of the injured person as an instrument for punishing the offender; compensation paid to the injured person for the full value of the loss (an amount that may far exceed the wrongdoer's benefit). See RESTITUTION.

- restitutionary redress. (1970) Money paid to one who has been injured, the amount being the pecuniary value of the benefit to the wrongdoer. See RESTITUTION.

Westlaw. © 2019 Thomson Reuters. No Claim to Orig. U.S. Govt. Works.

---

End of Document

© 2020 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-119

PUBLICATIONS DE LA COUR PERMANENTE DE JUSTICE
INTERNATIONALE

---

SÉRIE A — N° 17

Le 13 septembre 1928

---

RECUEIL DES ARRÊTS

---

N° 13

AFFAIRE RELATIVE A L'USINE DE CHORZÓW
(DEMANDE EN INDEMNITÉ)
(FOND)

---

---

PUBLICATIONS OF THE PERMANENT COURT
OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE

---

SERIES A.—No. 17

September 13th, 1928

---

COLLECTION OF JUDGMENTS

---

No. 13

CASE CONCERNING THE FACTORY AT CHORZÓW
(CLAIM FOR INDEMNITY) (MERITS)

LEYDE
SOCIÉTÉ D'ÉDITIONS
A. W. SIJTHOFF
1928

LEYDEN
A. W. SIJTHOFF'S
PUBLISHING COMPANY
1928

COUR PERMANENTE DE JUSTICE INTERNATIONALE

---

1928.
Le 13 septembre.
Dossier E. c. XIII.
Rôle XIV: 1.

QUATORZIÈME SESSION (ORDINAIRE)

---

Présents :

MM. ANZILOTTI,	Président,
HUBER,	ancien Président,
Lord FINLAY,		} Juges,
MM. LODER,
NYHOLM,
DE BUSTAMANTE, ALTAMIRA,
ODA, PESSÔA,
M. BEICHMANN,	Juge suppléant,
MM. RABEL,		} Juges nationaux.
EHRlich,

---

ARRÊT N° 13

---

AFFAIRE RELATIVE A L'USINE
DE CHORZÓW
(DEMANDE EN INDEMNITÉ)
(FOND)

Entre le Gouvernement d'Allemagne, représenté par M. le D<sup>r</sup> Erich Kaufmann, professeur à Berlin,

Demandeur,

et le Gouvernement de Pologne, représenté par M. le D<sup>r</sup> Thadée Sobolewski, agent du Gouvernement polonais auprès du Tribunal arbitral mixte polono-allemand,

Défendeur.

PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE.

---

FOURTEENTH (ORDINARY) SESSION.

---

1928.
September 13th.
File E. c. XIII.
Docket XIV: 1.

Before :

MM. ANZILOTTI,	President,
HUBER,	Former President,
Lord FINLAY,		} Judges,
MM. LODER,
NYHOLM,
DE BUSTAMANTE, ALTAMIRA,
ODA, PESSÔA,
M. BEICHMANN,	Deputy-Judge,
MM. RABEL,		} National Judges.
EHRlich,

---

JUDGMENT No. 13.

---

CASE CONCERNING THE FACTORY AT CHORZÓW
(CLAIM FOR INDEMNITY)
(THE MERITS).

The Government of Germany, represented by Dr. Erich Kaufmann, Professor at Berlin,

Applicant,

versus

The Government of the Polish Republic, represented by Dr. Thadeus Sobolewski, Agent for the Polish Government before the Polish-German Mixed Arbitral Tribunal,

Respondent.

LA COUR,

composée ainsi qu'il est dit ci-dessus, après avoir entendu les Parties en leurs observations et conclusions,
a rendu l'arrêt suivant :

Par Requête introductive d'instance, déposée au Greffe de la Cour le 8 février 1927, en conformité de l'article 40 du Statut et de l'article 35 du Règlement, le Gouvernement du Reich a introduit devant la Cour permanente de Justice internationale une instance relative à la réparation qui serait due par le Gouvernement polonais du chef du préjudice souffert par les Sociétés anonymes Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. (ci-après dénommée l'Oberschlesische) et Bayerische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. (ci-après dénommée la Bayerische) à la suite de l'attitude adoptée par ce Gouvernement, lors de la prise de possession par lui de l'usine d'azote sise à Chorzów, vis-à-vis de ces Sociétés, attitude que la Cour avait déclarée, dans son Arrêt n° 7 du 25 mai 1926, comme n'étant pas conforme aux dispositions des articles 6 et suivants de la Convention relative à la Haute-Silésie, conclue à Genève, le 15 mai 1922, entre l'Allemagne et la Pologne (et désignée ci-après sous le nom de Convention de Genève).

Au reçu, le 3 mars 1927, du Mémoire du Gouvernement allemand en l'affaire, le Gouvernement polonais souleva, le 14 avril 1927, une exception préliminaire qui, contestant la compétence de la Cour pour connaître de l'instance introduite devant elle, concluait à ce qu'il plaise à la Cour, « sans entrer dans le fond, se déclarer incompétente ».

Sur ce moyen, la Cour se prononça par son Arrêt n° 8 du 26 juillet 1927, par lequel elle décida de rejeter l'exception préliminaire soulevée par le Gouvernement de Pologne et de retenir, pour statuer au fond, l'instance introduite le 8 février 1927 par le Gouvernement d'Allemagne.

Cet arrêt chargeait, en outre, le Président de fixer les délais pour le dépôt des Contre-Mémoire, Réplique et Duplique sur le fond. Ces délais, fixés d'abord aux 30 septembre, 15 novembre et 30 décembre 1927, furent par la suite étendus, en vertu composed as above,

THE COURT,

having heard the observations and conclusions of the Parties,
delivers the following judgment :

The Government of the German Reich, by an Application instituting proceedings filed with the Registry of the Court on February 8th, 1927, in conformity with Article 40 of the Statute and Article 35 of the Rules of Court, has submitted to the Permanent Court of International Justice a suit concerning the reparation which, in the contention of the Government of the Reich, is due by the Polish Government for the damage suffered by the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. (hereinafter designated as the Oberschlesische) and the Bayerische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. (hereinafter designated as the Bayerische) in consequence of the attitude adopted by that Government towards those Companies in taking possession of the nitrate factory situated at Chorzów, which attitude has been declared by the Court in Judgment No. 7 (May 25th, 1926) not to have been in conformity with the provisions of Article 6 and the following articles of the Convention concerning Upper Silesia concluded at Geneva on May 15th, 1922, between Germany and Poland (hereinafter described as the Geneva Convention).

On receipt of the German Government's Case in the suit, on March 3rd, 1927, the Polish Government, on April 14th, 1927, raised a preliminary objection denying the Court's jurisdiction to hear the suit brought before it and submitting that the Court should, "without entering into the merits, declare that it had no jurisdiction".

The Court dealt with this plea in its Judgment No. 8 given on July 26th, 1927, by which it overruled the preliminary objection raised by the Polish Government and reserved for judgment on the merits the suit brought on February 8th, 1927, by the German Government.

Furthermore, under the terms of this judgment, the President was instructed to fix the times for the filing of the Counter-Case, Reply and Rejoinder on the merits. These times, which were in the first place fixed to expire on de décisions successives, aux 30 novembre 1927, 20 février et 7 mai 1928 respectivement.

Les pièces de la procédure écrite furent dûment déposées au Greffe dans les délais définitivement fixés, et firent l'objet des communications prévues à l'article 43 du Statut.

Au cours des audiences tenues les 21, 22, 25, 27 et 29 juin 1928, la Cour a entendu, en leurs plaidoiries, réplique et duplique, les agents des Parties, indiqués ci-dessus.

* * *

Les conclusions formulées dans la Requête du 8 février 1927 du Gouvernement allemand étaient ainsi conçues :

« Plaise à la Cour,

Dire et juger,

- 1° que, en raison de son attitude vis-à-vis des Sociétés anonymes Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke et Bayerische Stickstoffwerke, constatée par la Cour comme n'étant pas conforme aux dispositions des articles 6 et suivants de la Convention de Genève, le Gouvernement polonais est tenu à la réparation du préjudice subi de ce chef par lesdites Sociétés à partir du 3 juillet 1922 jusqu'à la date de l'arrêt demandé ;
- 2° que le montant des indemnités à payer par le Gouvernement polonais est de 59.400.000 Reichsmarks pour le dommage causé à l'Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. et de 16.775.200 Reichsmarks pour le dommage causé à la Bayerische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. ;
- 3° en ce qui concerne le mode de paiement :
  - a) que le Gouvernement polonais devra payer, pendant le délai d'un mois à dater de l'arrêt, les indemnités dues à l'Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. pour la reprise de son capital d'exploitation (matières premières, produits finis et demi-finis, matériel emmagasiné, etc.) et les indemnités dues à la Bayerische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. pour la période d'exploitation du 3 juillet 1922 jusqu'à l'arrêt ;
  - b) que le Gouvernement polonais devra payer les sommes restantes, au plus tard, le 15 avril 1928 ;

September 30th, November 15th and December 30th, 1927, were subsequently extended by successive decisions until November 30th, 1927, February 20th and May 7th, 1928, respectively.

The documents of the written proceedings were duly filed with the Registrar of the Court within the times finally fixed and were communicated to those concerned as provided in Article 43 of the Statute.

In the course of hearings held on June 21st, 22nd, 25th, 27th and 29th, 1928, the Court has heard the oral statements, reply and rejoinder submitted by the above-mentioned Agents for the Parties.

* * *

The submissions made in the German Government's Application of February 8th, 1927, were as follows:

It is submitted:

[Translation.]

- (1) that by reason of its attitude in respect of the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke and Bayerische Stickstoffwerke Companies, which attitude has been declared by the Court not to have been in conformity with the provisions of Article 6 and the following articles of the Geneva Convention, the Polish Government is under an obligation to make good the consequent damage sustained by the aforesaid Companies from July 3rd, 1922, until the date of the judgment sought;
- (2) that the amount of the compensation to be paid by the Polish Government is 59,400,000 Reichsmarks for the damage caused to the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke Company and 16,775,200 Reichsmarks for the damage caused to the Bayerische Stickstoffwerke Company;
- (3) in regard to the method of payment:
  - (a) that the Polish Government should pay within one month from the date of judgment, the compensation due to the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke Company for the taking possession of the working capital (raw material, finished and half-manufactured products, stores, etc.) and the compensation due to the Bayerische Stickstoffwerke Company for the period of exploitation from July 3rd, 1922, to the date of judgment;
  - (b) that the Polish Government should pay the sums remaining unpaid by April 15th, 1928, at latest;

- c) que, à partir de l'arrêt, des intérêts à raison de 6 % l'an seront payés par le Gouvernement polonais ;
- d) que les paiements visés sous a) — c) seront effectués sans aucune déduction au compte des deux Sociétés près la Deutsche Bank à Berlin ;
- e) que, jusqu'au 30 juin 1931, aucune exportation de chaux azotée et de nitrate d'ammoniaque n'aura lieu en Allemagne, dans les États-Unis d'Amérique, en France et en Italie.»

Ces conclusions ont, au cours de la procédure soit écrite, soit orale, subi des modifications dont il sera rendu compte ci-après. La Cour ne s'étant pas prévalué, dans la présente espèce, du droit à elle conféré par l'article 48 du Statut, de déterminer par voie d'ordonnance les « formes et délais dans lesquels chaque Partie doit finalement conclure », elle admet, aux fins de cette instance, la faculté pour les Parties de modifier, conformément aux précédents établis, leurs conclusions primitives, non seulement dans les mémoire et contre-mémoire (article 40 du Règlement), mais aussi tant dans les pièces ultérieures de la procédure écrite que dans les déclarations qu'elles peuvent faire au cours des débats oraux (article 55 du Règlement), sous réserve, seulement, que l'autre Partie soit toujours en mesure de se prononcer sur les conclusions amendées.

La conclusion n° 1 de la Requête n'a pas été modifiée par la suite.

En ce qui concerne, par contre, la conclusion n° 2, des modifications importantes sont intervenues. Dans le Mémoire, cette conclusion se trouve libellée de la manière suivante :

« Dire et juger. . . .

- 2) que le montant des indemnités à payer par le Gouvernement polonais est de 75.920.000 Reichsmarks, plus la valeur actuelle du capital d'exploitation (matières premières, produits finis et demi-finis, matières emmagasinées, etc.), saisi le 3 juillet 1922, pour le dommage causé à l'Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G., et de 20.179.000 Reichsmarks pour le dommage causé à la Bayerische Stickstoffwerke A.-G.»

En comparant la conclusion 2) du Mémoire avec la conclusion 2) de la Requête, il convient de tenir compte des faits suivants résultant du Mémoire, savoir :

- (c) that, from the date of judgment, interest at 6% per annum should be paid by the Polish Government;
- (d) that the payments mentioned under (a)—(c) should be made without deduction to the account of the two Companies with the Deutsche Bank at Berlin;
- (e) that, until June 30th, 1931, no nitrated lime and no nitrate of ammonia should be exported to Germany, to the United States of America, to France or to Italy.

These submissions have, in the course of the written or oral proceedings, undergone modifications which will be indicated below. As the Court has not in the present suit availed itself of the right conferred upon it under Article 48 of the Statute to make orders as to "the form and time in which each Party must conclude its arguments", it, in this case, allows the Parties, in accordance with established precedent, to amend their original submissions, not only in the Case and Counter-Case (Article 40 of the Rules), but also both in the subsequent documents of the written proceedings and in declarations made by them in the course of the hearings (Article 55 of the Rules), subject only to the condition that the other Party must always have an opportunity of commenting on the amended submissions.

Submission No. 1 of the Application has not been subsequently amended.

On the other hand, with regard to submission No. 2, important amendments have been made. In the Case this submission is worded as follows:

It is submitted: . . . .

[Translation.]

- (2) that the amount of the compensation to be paid by the Polish Government is 75,920,000 Reichsmarks, plus the present value of the working capital (raw materials, finished and half-manufactured products, stores, etc.) taken over on July 3rd, 1922, for the damage caused to the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke Company, and 20,179,000 Reichsmarks for the damage caused to the Bayerische Stickstoffwerke Company.

In comparing submission (2) of the Case with submission (2) of the Application, regard must be had to the following facts resulting from the Case:

- a) que le montant de 59.400.000 indiqué dans la Requête comme le dommage de l'Oberschlesische est calculé au 3 juillet 1922 ;
- b) que ce montant comprend la somme d'un million pour matières premières, produits finis et demi-finis, matières emmagasinées, etc. ;
- c) que la somme de 75.920.000 indiquée dans le Mémoire à titre de dommage pour l'Oberschlesische se décompose en 58.400.000 de dommages au 3 juillet 1922, et 17.520.000 d'intérêts à 6 % sur 58.400.000 pour la période 3 juillet 1922 — 2 juillet 1927 ;
- d) que cette somme ne comprend pas de montant pour le « capital d'exploitation », une indemnité pour ce capital « valeur actuelle » étant dans le Mémoire demandée en termes généraux ;
- e) que la somme de 16.775.200 indiquée dans la Requête comme montant du dommage de la Bayerische est calculée au 3 juillet 1922 ; et
- f) que la somme de 20.179.000 indiquée dans le Mémoire pour le dommage de la Bayerische est calculée au 2 (ou 3) juillet 1927 à un taux d'intérêt de 6 % ; le montant pour la Bayerische fourni dans la Requête serait entaché d'une erreur de calcul.

En dernier lieu, la conclusion 2) de la Requête a été modifiée dans la réplique orale de l'agent du Gouvernement allemand, savoir, en ce qui concerne l'indemnité réclamée pour le dommage causé à l'Oberschlesische. Ladite conclusion se trouve, en effet, dans les conclusions lues par l'agent à l'issue de sa réplique orale, libellée comme suit :

« Dire et juger que le montant des indemnités à payer au Gouvernement allemand est de 58.400.000 Reichsmarks, plus 1.656.000 Reichsmarks, plus les intérêts à 6 % de cette somme à partir du 3 juillet 1922 jusqu'à la date de l'arrêt (pour le dommage causé à l'Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G.) ;

que le montant des indemnités à payer au Gouvernement allemand est de 20.179.000 Reichsmarks pour le dommage causé à la Bayerische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. »

Il s'ensuit que, pour l'Oberschlesische, le Gouvernement allemand a) revient à la somme de 58.400.000 au 3 juillet 1922 ;

- (a) that the total of 59,400,000 mentioned in the Application as the figure representing the damage suffered by the Oberschlesische is calculated as on July 3rd, 1922 ;
- (b) that this sum includes the sum of 1 million for raw materials, finished and half-manufactured products, stores, etc. ;
- (c) that the sum of 75,920,000 mentioned in the Case as the figure representing the damage suffered by the Oberschlesische is made up of 58,400,000 for damages as on July 3rd, 1922, and 17,520,000 for interest at 6 % on 58,400,000 for the period July 3rd, 1922, to July 2nd, 1927 ;
- (d) that this sum does not include an amount for "working capital", compensation for the "present value" of this capital being in the Case sought in general terms ;
- (e) that the sum of 16,775,200 mentioned in the Application as the figure representing the damage suffered by the Bayerische is calculated as on July 3rd, 1922 ;
- (f) that the sum of 20,179,000 mentioned in the Case as representing the damage suffered by the Bayerische is calculated as on July 2nd (or 3rd), 1927, at a rate of interest of 6 % ; the amount for the Bayerische indicated in the Application is said to contain an error of calculation.

Lastly, submission (2) of the Application has been amended in the German Agent's oral reply as concerns the compensation claimed for the damage suffered by the Oberschlesische. This submission runs as follows in the submissions read by the Agent at the conclusion of his oral Reply :

It is submitted :

[Translation.]

that the total of the compensation to be paid to the German Government is 58,400,000 Reichsmarks, plus 1,656,000 Reichsmarks, plus interest at 6 % on this sum as from July 3rd, 1922, until the date of judgment (for the damage done to the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G.) ; that the total of the compensation to be paid to the German Government is 20,179,000 Reichsmarks for the damage done to the Bayerische Stickstoffwerke A.-G.

It follows that, as regards the Oberschlesische, the German Government (a) reverts to the sum of 58,400,000 as on

b) fixe à 1.656.000 la valeur du capital d'exploitation à cette date ; c) demande sur ces deux sommes les intérêts à 6 % jusqu'à la date de l'arrêt, en renonçant au calcul forfaitaire avancé dans le Mémoire.

En ce qui concerne la conclusion 3) de la Requête du Gouvernement allemand, il y a à noter, dans la suite de la procédure, des modifications tant de forme que de fond.

Pour ce qui est de la forme, l'alinéa e) de la conclusion 3 de la Requête constitue, dans le Mémoire, à elle seule une nouvelle conclusion 3, tandis que la substance des alinéas a) — d) de la conclusion 3 de la Requête a été versée dans une nouvelle conclusion 4 a) — d) du Mémoire. Dans ces conditions, il est préférable de retracer les modifications survenues à chacun des alinéas de la conclusion 3 primitive.

L'alinéa 3 a) est ainsi libellé dans le Mémoire (où il porte le n° 4 a) :

« Dire et juger, en ce qui concerne le mode de paiement, que le Gouvernement polonais devra payer, pendant le délai d'un mois à dater de l'arrêt, les indemnités dues à l'Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G., pour la reprise de son capital d'exploitation et les indemnités dues à la Bayerische Stickstoffwerke A.-G., pour la période d'exploitation du 3 juillet 1922 jusqu'à l'arrêt. »

Par rapport à la Requête, cet alinéa n'a, par conséquent, subi qu'une modification de pure forme (suppression d'une parenthèse explicative) ; elle n'a plus été amendée par la suite.

L'alinéa 3 b) est libellé de la manière suivante dans le Mémoire (où il porte le n° 4 b) :

« Dire et juger que le Gouvernement polonais devra payer les sommes restantes, au plus tard le 15 avril 1928 ; subsidiairement que, pour autant que le paiement serait effectué par tranches, le Gouvernement polonais délivre, pendant le délai d'un mois à dater de l'arrêt, des lettres de change aux montants des tranches, y compris les intérêts, à payer aux dates d'échéance respectives à l'Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. et à la Bayerische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. »

July 3rd, 1922; (b) fixes as 1,656,000 the value of the working capital on that date; (c) claims on these two sums interest at 6% until the date of judgment, thus abandoning the claim for a lump sum made in the Case.

As regards submission (3) of the German Government's Application, amendments both of form and of substance are to be noted in the course of the subsequent procedure.

As regards form, paragraph (e) of submission (3) of the Application constitutes by itself a new third submission in the Case, whilst the substance of paragraphs (a)—(d) of submission No. 3 of the Application has been embodied in a new submission No. 4 (a)—(d) in the Case. In these circumstances, it is preferable to trace back the modifications made to each of the paragraphs of the original third submission.

Paragraph 3 (a) is worded as follows in the Case (where it is numbered 4 (a)):

[Translation.]

that the Polish Government should pay, within one month from the date of judgment, the compensation due to the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke Company for the taking possession of the working capital and the compensation due to the Bayerische Stickstoffwerke Company for the period of exploitation from July 3rd, 1922, to the date of judgment.

As compared with the Application, therefore, this paragraph has undergone a purely superficial modification (deletion of an explanatory remark in parenthesis), and it has not subsequently been amended.

Paragraph 3 (b) is worded as follows in the Case (where it is numbered 4 (b)):

[Translation.]

that the Polish Government should pay the remaining sums by April 15th, 1928, at latest; in the alternative, that, in so far as payment may be effected in instalments, the Polish Government shall deliver, within one month from the date of judgment, bills of exchange for the amounts of the instalments, including interest, payable on the respective dates on which they fall due to the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke Company and to the Bayerische Stickstoffwerke Company.

Ainsi, à la conclusion principale primitive a été ajoutée une conclusion subsidiaire visant l'éventualité d'un paiement par tranches.

Le même alinéa est formulé comme suit dans la Réplique orale :

« Dire et juger que le Gouvernement polonais doit payer les sommes restantes au plus tard dans un délai de quinze jours à dater du commencement de l'année budgétaire qui suit l'arrêt ; subsidiairement, que, pour autant que le paiement serait effectué par tranches, le Gouvernement polonais délivre, pendant le délai d'un mois à dater de l'arrêt, des lettres de change aux montants des tranches, y compris les intérêts à payer aux dates d'échéance respectives à l'Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. et à la Bayerische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. »

La modification par rapport à la version précédente consiste en la substitution à la date du 15 avril 1928, déjà écoulée, d'un délai calculé en rapport avec l'ouverture de l'année budgétaire polonaise.

L'alinéa 3 c) des conclusions de la Requête (4 c) du Mémoire) n'a pas subi de changements par la suite.

Par contre, l'alinéa 3 d) de la Requête figure dans le Mémoire sous la forme suivante (n° 4 d) du Mémoire) :

« Dire et juger que le Gouvernement polonais n'est pas autorisé à compenser contre la créance susdite du Gouvernement allemand d'être indemnisé sa créance résultant des assurances sociales en Haute-Silésie ; qu'il ne peut se prévaloir d'aucune autre compensation contre ladite créance d'indemnité ; et que les paiements visés sous a) — c) seront effectués sans aucune déduction au compte des deux Sociétés près la Deutsche Bank à Berlin. »

La conclusion primitive se trouve dans le dernier membre de phrase de cette formule, dont la partie principale demande maintenant une déclaration excluant toute possibilité de compensation extra-judiciaire.

La formule du Mémoire a été maintenue tant dans la Réplique écrite que dans la réplique orale, sauf addition d'une nouvelle conclusion subsidiaire, relative à la question de l'interdiction d'une compensation extra-judiciaire, et ainsi conçue :

Thus to the main original submission has been added an alternative contemplating the possibility of payment by instalments.

The same paragraph is couched in the following terms in the oral reply :

[Translation.]

It is submitted that the Polish Government should pay the remaining sums at latest within fifteen days after the beginning of the financial year following the judgment; in the alternative that, in so far as payment may be effected by instalments, the Polish Government should, within one month from the date of judgment, give bills of exchange for the amounts of the instalments, including interest, payable on maturity to the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. and to the Bayerische Stickstoffwerke A.-G.

The modification as compared with the previous version consists in the substitution for the date April 15th, 1928, which had already passed, a time-limit fixed in relation to the beginning of the Polish financial year.

Paragraph 3 (c) of the submissions of the Application (4 (c) of the Case) has undergone no subsequent modification.

On the other hand, paragraph 3 (d) of the Application appears in the Case in the following form (No. 4 (d) of the Case) :

[Translation.]

that the Polish Government is not entitled to set off, against the above-mentioned claim for indemnity of the German Government, its claim in respect of social insurances in Upper Silesia; that it may not make use of any other set-off against the above-mentioned claim for indemnity; and that the payments mentioned under (a)—(c) should be made without any deduction to the account of the two Companies with the Deutsche Bank at Berlin.

The original submission is contained in the last part of this paragraph, the principal clause of which now seeks a declaration excluding any possibility of extra-judicial set-off.

The wording of the Case is retained both in the written and in the oral reply, except that a new alternative submission is added in regard to the question of the prohibition of extra-judicial set-off. This addition runs as follows :

« Dire et juger, subsidiairement, qu'une compensation n'est autorisée que lorsque le Gouvernement polonais invoque à cette fin une créance reconnue par le Gouvernement allemand ou constatée par un arrêt rendu entre les deux Gouvernements. »

Venant, enfin, à l'alinéa 3 e) des conclusions de la Requête, il y a lieu de constater que ce dernier se retrouve sans aucun changement dans la conclusion 3 du Mémoire. Par contre, la Réplique écrite, tout en reproduisant également la formule de la Requête, y ajoute la conclusion subsidiaire suivante :

« Juger et décider que le Gouvernement polonais est obligé de cesser l'exploitation de l'usine, respectivement des installations chimiques pour transformer l'azote de chaux en nitrate d'ammoniaque, etc. »

Ainsi complétée, la conclusion dont il s'agit figure également dans la réplique orale, savoir dans la forme suivante :

« subsidiairement, pour le cas où la Cour n'adopterait pas les points de vue développés aux paragraphes 55 et 57 de la Réplique, dire et juger que le Gouvernement polonais est obligé de cesser l'exploitation de l'usine, respectivement des installations chimiques pour produire le nitrate d'ammoniaque, etc. »

* * *

À l'occasion de certaines conclusions présentées par le Gouvernement polonais et relatives à l'indemnisation de l'Oberschlesische, le Gouvernement allemand a non seulement demandé à la Cour de les rejeter, mais a encore formulé deux autres conclusions, savoir :

« Dire et juger

1° que le Gouvernement polonais n'est pas autorisé à refuser le paiement au Gouvernement allemand des indemnités en raison d'arguments tirés de l'article 256 et en raison d'égards vis-à-vis de la Commission des Réparations et d'autres tierces personnes ;

2° que l'obligation du Gouvernement polonais de payer l'indemnité allouée par la Cour n'est nullement écartée par un jugement rendu ou à rendre par un tribunal interne polonais dans un procès ayant pour objet la question de la propriété de l'usine sise à Chorzów. »

[Translation.]

In the alternative it is submitted that set-off is only permissible if the Polish Government puts forward for this purpose a claim in respect of a debt recognized by the German Government or established by a judgment given between the two Governments.

Turning lastly to paragraph 3 (e) of the submissions in the Application, it is to be observed that this reappears unchanged in submission 3 of the Case. On the other hand, in the written Reply, whilst the submission of the Application is repeated, the following alternative is added :

[Translation.]

It is submitted that the Polish Government should be obliged to cease the exploitation of the factory and of the chemical equipment for the transformation of nitrate of lime into ammonium nitrate, etc.

With this addition, this submission also appears in the oral reply in the following form :

[Translation.]

in the alternative, should the Court not adopt the points of view set out in paragraphs 55 and 57 of the Reply, it is submitted that the Polish Government should be obliged to cease the exploitation of the factory or of the chemical equipment for the production of ammonium nitrate, etc.

* * *

In connection with certain submissions made by the Polish Government in regard to the compensation of the Oberschlesische, the German Government has not merely asked the Court to reject these submissions but has also formulated two other submissions, namely :

[Translation.]

(1) that the Polish Government is not entitled to refuse to pay compensation to the German Government on the basis of arguments drawn from Article 256 and for motives of respect for the rights of the Reparation Commission and other third parties ;

(2) that the Polish Government's obligation to pay the indemnity awarded by the Court is in no way set aside by a judgment given or to be given by a Polish municipal court in a suit concerning the question of the ownership of the factory at Chorzów.

Ces conclusions, formulées soit dans la Réplique écrite soit dans la première plaidoirie de l'agent allemand, ont été maintenues sans changement dans la réplique orale.

Abstraction faite de ces deux demandes complémentaires, les conclusions finales du Gouvernement allemand sont donc les suivantes :

« 1) que, en raison de son attitude vis-à-vis des Sociétés anonymes Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke et Bayerische Stickstoffwerke constatée par la Cour comme n'étant pas conforme aux dispositions des articles 6 et suivants de la Convention de Genève, le Gouvernement polonais est tenu à la réparation du préjudice subi de ce chef par lesdites Sociétés à partir du 3 juillet 1922 jusqu'à la date de l'arrêt demandé ;

2) a) que le montant des indemnités à payer au Gouvernement allemand est de 58.400.000 Reichsmarks, plus 1.656.000 Reichsmarks, plus les intérêts à 6 % de cette somme à partir du 3 juillet 1922 jusqu'à la date de l'arrêt (pour le dommage causé à l'Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G.) ;

b) que le montant des indemnités à payer au Gouvernement allemand est de 20.179.000 Reichsmarks pour le dommage causé à la Bayerische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. ;

3) que, jusqu'au 30 juin 1931, aucune exportation de chaux azotée et de nitrate d'ammoniaque n'aura lieu en Allemagne, dans les États-Unis d'Amérique, en France et en Italie ;

subsidiatement, que le Gouvernement polonais est obligé de cesser l'exploitation de l'usine, respectivement des installations chimiques pour produire le nitrate d'ammoniaque, etc. ;

4) a) que le Gouvernement polonais devra payer, pendant le délai d'un mois à dater de l'arrêt, les indemnités dues à l'Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. pour la reprise de son capital d'exploitation, et les indemnités dues à la Bayerische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. pour la période d'exploitation du 3 juillet 1922 jusqu'à l'arrêt ;

b) que le Gouvernement polonais doit payer les sommes restantes au plus tard pendant un délai de quinze jours à dater du commencement de l'année budgétaire qui suit l'arrêt ; subsidiatement, que, pour autant que le paiement serait effectué par tranches, le Gouvernement polonais délivre, pendant le délai d'un mois à dater de l'arrêt, des lettres de change aux montants des tranches, y compris les intérêts à payer aux dates d'échéance respectives à l'Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. et à la Bayerische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. ;

c) que, à partir de l'arrêt, des intérêts à raison de 6 % l'an seront payés par le Gouvernement polonais ;

These submissions, which were made in the written Reply and in the first oral statement of the German Agent respectively, have been maintained unaltered in the oral reply.

Apart from the two additional claims just referred to, the final submissions of the German Government are therefore as follows :

[Translation.]

(1) that by reason of its attitude in respect of the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke and Bayerische Stickstoffwerke Companies, which attitude has been declared by the Court not to have been in conformity with the provisions of Article 6 and the following articles of the Geneva Convention, the Polish Government is under an obligation to make good the consequent injury sustained by the aforesaid Companies from July 3rd, 1922, until the date of the judgment sought ;

(2) (a) that the amount of the compensation to be paid to the German Government is 58,400,000 Reichsmarks, plus 1,656,000 Reichsmarks, plus interest at 6 % on this sum as from July 3rd, 1922, until the date of judgment (for the damage caused to the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G.) ;

(b) that the amount of the compensation to be paid to the German Government is 20,179,000 Reichsmarks for the damage caused to the Bayerische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. ;

(3) that until June 30th, 1931, no nitrated lime and no nitrate of ammonia should be exported to Germany, to the United States of America, to France or to Italy ;

in the alternative, that the Polish Government should be obliged to cease from exploiting the factory or the chemical equipment for the production of nitrate of ammonia, etc. ;

(4) (a) that the Polish Government should pay, within one month from the date of judgment, the compensation due to the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. for the taking possession of the working capital and the compensation due to the Bayerische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. for the period of exploitation from July 3rd, 1922, to the date of judgment ;

(b) that the Polish Government should pay the remaining sums at latest within fifteen days after the beginning of the financial year following the judgment ; in the alternative, that, in so far as payment may be effected by instalments, the Polish Government should within one month from the date of judgment, give bills of exchange for the amounts of the instalments, including interest, payable on maturity to the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. and to the Bayerische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. ;

(c) that from the date of judgment, interest at 6 % per annum should be paid by the Polish Government ;

d) que le Gouvernement polonais n'est pas autorisé à compenser contre la créance susdite du Gouvernement allemand d'être indemnisé sa créance résultant des assurances sociales en Haute-Silésie; qu'il ne peut se prévaloir d'aucune autre compensation contre ladite créance d'indemnité; et que les paiements visés sous a) à c) seront effectués sans aucune déduction au compte des deux Sociétés près la Deutsche Bank à Berlin;

subsidiatement, qu'une compensation n'est autorisée que lorsque le Gouvernement polonais invoque à cette fin une créance reconnue par le Gouvernement allemand ou constatée par un arrêt rendu entre les deux Gouvernements.»

Le Gouvernement polonais n'a pas soulevé d'objection en la forme contre les modifications apportées successivement aux conclusions primitives du Gouvernement allemand.

* * *

Les conclusions que le Gouvernement polonais a formulées en réponse à celles qui se trouvent exprimées dans la Requête et dans le Mémoire allemand sont libellées de la manière suivante dans le Contre-Mémoire :

«Plaise à la Cour :

A. Pour ce qui concerne l'Oberschlesische :

- 1) débouter le Gouvernement requérant de sa demande;
- 2) subsidiatement, surseoir provisoirement sur la demande en indemnité;
- 3) très subsidiatement, pour le cas où la Cour serait amenée à allouer une indemnité quelconque, dire et juger que celle-ci ne sera payable que: a) après le retrait préalable par ladite Société de sa requête pendante au Tribunal arbitral mixte germano-polonais relative à l'usine de Chorzów et après sa renonciation en bonne et due forme à toute prétention contre le Gouvernement polonais, du chef de la prise en possession et de l'exploitation de l'usine de Chorzów; b) lorsque le procès civil intenté contre ladite Société par le Gouvernement polonais et ayant pour objet la validité de l'inscription de son titre de propriété au registre foncier sera définitivement jugé en faveur de la Société Oberschlesische.
- 4) En tout cas, dire et juger que le Gouvernement allemand doit, en premier lieu, livrer au Gouvernement polonais la totalité des actions de la Société anonyme Oberschlesische

(d) that the Polish Government is not entitled to set off against the above-mentioned claim for indemnity of the German Government, its claim in respect of social insurances in Upper Silesia; that it may not make use of any other set-off against the said claim for indemnity; and that the payments mentioned under (a) to (c) should be made without any deduction to the account of the two Companies with the Deutsche Bank at Berlin;

in the alternative, that set-off is only permissible if the Polish Government puts forward for this purpose a claim in respect of a debt recognized by the German Government or established by a judgment given between the two Governments.

The Polish Government has made no formal objection to the amendments successively made in the original submissions of the German Government.

* * *

The submissions formulated by the Polish Government in reply to those set out in the Application and Case of the German Government are worded as follows in the Counter-Case:

It is submitted:

[Translation.]

A. In regard to the Oberschlesische:

- (1) that the applicant Government's claim should be dismissed;
- (2) in the alternative, that the claim for indemnity should be provisionally suspended;
- (3) as a further alternative, in the event of the Court awarding some compensation, that such compensation should only be payable: (a) after the previous withdrawal by the said Company of the action brought by it and pending before the German-Polish Mixed Arbitral Tribunal in regard to the Chorzów factory and after the formal abandonment by it of any claim against the Polish Government in respect of the latter's taking possession and exploitation of the Chorzów factory; (b) when the civil action brought against the said Company by the Polish Government in respect of the validity of the entry of its title to ownership in the land register has been finally decided in favour of the Oberschlesische.
- (4) In any case, it is submitted that the German Government should, in the first place, hand over to the Polish Government the whole of the shares of the Oberschlesische

Stickstoffwerke, de la valeur nominale de 110.000.000 de marks dont il dispose en vertu du contrat du 24 décembre 1919.

B. Pour ce qui concerne la Bayerische :

- 1) a) débouter le Gouvernement requérant de sa demande en indemnité pour le passé, pour autant qu'elle dépasse la somme de 1.000.000 de Reichsmarks ;
  - b) allouer pro futuro une rente annuelle de 250.000 Reichsmarks payable à partir du 1<sup>er</sup> janvier 1928 jusqu'au 31 mars 1941 ;
  - c) dire et juger que ces indemnités ne seront payables qu'après le retrait préalable par ladite Société de sa requête pendante au Tribunal arbitral mixte germano-polonais relative à l'usine de Chorzów, et après sa renonciation, en bonne et due forme, à toute prétention contre le Gouvernement polonais du chef de la prise en possession et de l'exploitation de l'usine de Chorzów ;
- 2) débouter le Gouvernement requérant de sa conclusion n° 3, tendant à ce qu'il soit dit et jugé que, jusqu'au 30 juin 1931, aucune exportation de chaux azotée et de nitrate d'ammoniaque n'aura lieu en Allemagne, dans les États-Unis d'Amérique, en France et en Italie.

C. Pour ce qui concerne l'Oberschlesische et la Bayerische en commun :

rejeter la conclusion n° 4 tendant à ce qu'il soit dit et jugé que le Gouvernement polonais n'est pas autorisé à compenser, contre la créance susdite du Gouvernement allemand d'être indemnisé, sa créance résultant des assurances sociales en Haute-Silésie ; qu'il ne peut se prévaloir d'aucune autre compensation contre ladite créance d'indemnité, et que les paiements visés sous 4 a) — c) seront effectués sans aucune déduction au compte des deux Sociétés près la Deutsche Bank à Berlin. » Ces conclusions n'ont, par la suite, subi d'autres modifications que le retrait, opéré au moyen d'une déclaration insérée dans la Duplique écrite, de la conclusion A, 3 b).

Le Gouvernement allemand ayant contesté le droit pour le Gouvernement polonais de retirer cette conclusion, à laquelle le Gouvernement allemand avait opposé une demande de débouté, dans le stade de la procédure où ce retrait avait eu lieu, le Gouvernement polonais a déclaré maintenir le retrait.

Pour les motifs développés ci-dessus, la Cour estime qu'il n'y a rien qui puisse empêcher le Gouvernement polonais de Stickstoffwerke Company, of the nominal value of 110,000,000 Marks, which are in its hands under the contract of December 24th, 1919.

B. In regard to the Bayerische :

- (1) (a) that the applicant Government's claim for compensation in respect of the past, in excess of 1,000,000 Reichsmarks, should be dismissed ;
  - (b) that, pro futuro, an annual rent of 250,000 Reichsmarks, payable as from January 1st, 1928, until March 31st, 1941, should be awarded ;
  - (c) that these indemnities should only be payable after previous withdrawal by the said Company of the claim pending before the German-Polish Mixed Arbitral Tribunal in respect of the Chorzów factory and after the formal abandonment by it of any claim against the Polish Government in respect of the latter's taking possession and exploitation of the Chorzów factory ;
- (2) that the applicant Government's third submission to the effect that until June 30th, 1931, no exportation of nitrated lime or nitrate of ammonia should take place to Germany, the United States of America, France or Italy, should be dismissed.

C. In regard to the Oberschlesische and Bayerische jointly :

that submission No. 4—to the effect that it is not permissible for the Polish Government to set off, against the above-mentioned claim for indemnity of the German Government, its claim in respect of social insurances in Upper Silesia, that it may not make use of any other set-off against the above-mentioned claim for indemnity, and that the payments mentioned under 4 (a)—(c) should be made without any deduction to the account of the two Companies with the Deutsche Bank at Berlin—should be rejected.

These submissions have not subsequently been amended except that submission A, 3 (b), was withdrawn by means of a declaration contained in the written Rejoinder.

The German Government having disputed the right of the Polish Government to withdraw this submission (the rejection of which had been demanded by the former) at the stage of the proceedings reached when the withdrawal took place, the latter Government maintained its withdrawal.

For the reasons given above, the Court holds that there is nothing to prevent the Polish Government for its part from modifier, quant à lui, ses conclusions primitives, d'autant moins que cette modification s'est produite encore au cours de la phase écrite de la procédure et a pris la forme d'un abandon d'une partie des conclusions. De l'avis de la Cour, la seconde des « demandes complémentaires » du Gouvernement allemand, mentionnée ci-dessus, se dirigeait sans doute contre la conclusion polonaise qui a été abandonnée.

*

La Cour considère, par conséquent, qu'elle se trouve en présence de conclusions finales polonaises ainsi libellées :

« Plaise à la Cour :

A. pour ce qui concerne l'Oberschlesische :

- 1) débouter le Gouvernement requérant de sa demande ;
- 2) subsidiairement, surseoir provisoirement sur la demande en indemnité ;
- 3) très subsidiairement, pour le cas où la Cour serait amenée à allouer une indemnité quelconque, dire et juger que celle-ci ne sera payable qu'après le retrait préalable par ladite Société de sa requête pendante au Tribunal arbitral mixte germano-polonais relative à l'usine de Chorzów et après sa renonciation en bonne et due forme à toute prétention contre le Gouvernement polonais, du chef de la prise en possession et de l'exploitation de l'usine de Chorzów.
- 4) En tout cas, dire et juger que le Gouvernement allemand doit, en premier lieu, livrer au Gouvernement polonais la totalité des actions de la Société anonyme Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke, de la valeur nominale de 110.000.000 de marks, dont il dispose en vertu du contrat du 24 décembre 1919.

B. Pour ce qui concerne la Bayerische :

- 1) a) débouter le Gouvernement requérant de sa demande en indemnité pour le passé, pour autant qu'elle dépasse la somme de 1.000.000 de Reichsmarks ;
- b) allouer pro futuro une rente annuelle de 250.000 Reichsmarks payable à partir du 1<sup>er</sup> janvier 1928 jusqu'au 31 mars 1941 ;
- c) dire et juger que ces indemnités ne seront payables qu'après le retrait préalable par ladite Société de sa requête pendante au Tribunal arbitral mixte germano-amending its original submissions, especially seeing that this amendment occurred while the written proceedings were still in progress and took the form of the abandonment of a part of its submissions. In the Court's opinion, the second of the "additional claims" of the German Government mentioned above, was doubtless designed to meet the Polish submission which has been thus abandoned.

*

The Court therefore considers that the final submissions of the Polish Government may be set down as under :

"It is submitted :

A. As regards the Oberschlesische :

- (1) that the claim of the applicant Government should be dismissed ;
- (2) in the alternative, that the claim for indemnity should be provisionally suspended ;
- (3) as a further alternative, in the event of the Court awarding some compensation, that such compensation should only be payable after the previous withdrawal by the said Company of the action brought by it and pending before the German-Polish Mixed Arbitral Tribunal in regard to the Chorzów factory, and after the formal abandonment by it of any claim against the Polish Government in respect of the latter's taking possession and exploitation of the Chorzów factory.
- (4) In any case, it is submitted that the German Government should, in the first place, hand over to the Polish Government the whole of the shares of the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke Company, of the nominal value of 110,000,000 Marks, which are in its hands under the contract of December 24th, 1919.

B. As regards the Bayerische :

- (1) (a) that the applicant Government's claim for compensation in respect of the past, in excess of 1,000,000 Reichsmarks, should be dismissed ;
- (b) that, pro futuro, an annual rent of 250,000 Reichsmarks, payable as from January 1st, 1928, until March 31st, 1941, should be awarded ;
- (c) that these indemnities should only be payable after previous withdrawal by the said Company of the claim pending before the German-Polish Mixed Arbitral polonais relative à l'usine de Chorzów, et après sa renonciation, en bonne et due forme, à toute prétention contre le Gouvernement polonais du chef de la prise en possession et de l'exploitation de l'usine de Chorzów ;

- 2) débouter le Gouvernement requérant de sa conclusion n° 3 tendant à ce qu'il soit dit et jugé que, jusqu'au 30 juin 1931, aucune exportation de chaux azotée et de nitrate d'ammoniaque n'aura lieu en Allemagne, dans les États-Unis d'Amérique, en France et en Italie.

C. Pour ce qui concerne l'Oberschlesische et la Bayerische en commun :

rejeter la conclusion n° 4 tendant à ce qu'il soit dit et jugé que le Gouvernement polonais n'est pas autorisé à compenser contre la créance susdite du Gouvernement allemand d'être indemnisé, sa créance résultant des assurances sociales en Haute-Silésie ; qu'il ne peut se prévaloir d'aucune autre compensation contre ladite créance d'indemnité, et que les paiements visés sous 4 a) — c) seront effectués sans aucune déduction au compte des deux Sociétés près la Deutsche Bank à Berlin.»

* * *

D'une comparaison entre les conclusions finales allemandes et polonaises qui ont été ainsi établies, il ressort :

- I. — A) en ce qui concerne la conclusion allemande n° 1 : qu'il y a désaccord entre les Parties, sauf pour ce qui est de la réparation du dommage subi par la Bayerische ;
- B) en ce qui concerne la conclusion allemande n° 2 a : que le Gouvernement polonais demande que le Gouvernement allemand soit débouté ; et, subsidiairement, qu'il soit sursis provisoirement à la demande en indemnité ; c'est sans doute contre la demande subsidiaire opposée ainsi par le Gouvernement polonais à la conclusion n° 2 a du Gouvernement allemand que se dirige la première des « demandes complémentaires » de ce Gouvernement, mentionnées plus haut ;
- C) en ce qui concerne la conclusion allemande n° 2 b : que le Gouvernement polonais demande que le Gouvernement allemand en soit débouté, sauf pour ce

Tribunal in respect of the Chorzów factory and after the formal abandonment by it of any claim against the Polish Government in respect of the latter's taking possession and exploitation of the Chorzów factory;

- (2) that the applicant Government's third submission to the effect that until June 30th, 1931, no exportation of nitrate of lime or nitrate of ammonia should take place to Germany, the United States of America, France or Italy.

C. As regards the Oberschlesische and Bayerische jointly:

that submission No. 4—to the effect that it is not permissible for the Polish Government to set off against the above-mentioned claim for indemnity of the German Government its claim in respect of social insurances in Upper Silesia, that it may not make use of any other set-off against the above-mentioned claim for indemnity, and that the payments mentioned under 4 (a)—(c) should be made without any deduction to the account of the two Companies with the Deutsche Bank at Berlin—should be rejected.

* * *

A comparison between the German and Polish final submissions as thus set out leads to the following results:

- I.—(A) as regards the first German submission: that the Parties are at variance except in regard to the reparation of the damage sustained by the Bayerische;
- (B) as regards submission No. 2 a of the German Government: that the Polish Government asks that it should be dismissed; and, in the alternative, that the claim for indemnity should be provisionally suspended; it is doubtless the alternative claim thus put forward by Poland in reply to submission No. 2 a of the German Government that the first of the "additional claims" of the latter Government mentioned above is intended to meet;
- (C) as regards submission No. 2 b of the German Government: that the Polish Government asks that it should be dismissed except as regards the award, in respect of qui est de l'allocation, pour le passé, d'une somme ne dépassant pas 1.000.000 de Reichsmarks et, pour l'avenir, d'une rente annuelle de 250.000 Reichsmarks payable du 1<sup>er</sup> janvier 1928 au 31 mars 1941 ;

- D) en ce qui concerne la conclusion allemande n° 3 : que le Gouvernement polonais demande que le Gouvernement allemand soit débouté de la conclusion principale, mais ne se prononce pas en forme de conclusion sur la conclusion subsidaire inscrite sous ce numéro ;
- E) en ce qui concerne les conclusions allemandes n° 4 a) — c) : que le Gouvernement polonais ne se prononce pas spécifiquement sur ces conclusions, sauf en formulant sa conclusion A 3, relative au sursis de paiement ;
- F) en ce qui concerne la conclusion allemande n° 4 d) : que le Gouvernement polonais conclut au rejet de la conclusion principale portant ce numéro, mais ne se prononce pas en forme de conclusion sur la conclusion subsidaire allemande.

II. — En ce qui concerne les conclusions polonaises : que la conclusion A 4, dépassant le cadre des conclusions allemandes, a provoqué de la part du Gouvernement allemand une demande en rejet, formulée au cours de la phase orale de la procédure.

* * *

C'est donc exclusivement sur les points de divergence ainsi constatés qu'il appartient à la Cour de statuer dans l'arrêt qu'elle va rendre. Il est vrai que les Parties ont formulé, au cours de la procédure tant écrite qu'orale, encore d'autres demandes. Pour autant, cependant, que ces demandes ne constituent pas des développements des conclusions primitives, ou des demandes subsidiaires à ces conclusions, la Cour ne saurait les regarder autrement que, suivant l'expression de l'agent du Gouvernement allemand, comme des « motivations à titre subsidiaire », ou bien comme de simples suggestions quant à la procédure à suivre ; cela est certainement le cas en ce qui concerne les nombreuses demandes tendant à obtenir la consul-the past, of a sum not exceeding 1,000,000 Reichsmarks for the future, of an annual rent of 250,000 Reichsmarks payable as from January 1st, 1928, until March 31st, 1941;

- (D) as regards the German submission No. 3: that the Polish Government asks that the German Government's principal submission should be dismissed but does not formulate a definite submission with regard to the alternative submission under this number;
- (E) as regards the German submissions Nos. 4 (a)—(c): that the Polish Government does not say anything specific concerning these submissions except in so far as it formulates its submission A 3, regarding the suspension of payment;
- (F) as regards the German Government's submission No. 4 (d): that the Polish Government submits that the principal submission under this number should be rejected, but does not formulate any definite submission regarding the alternative German submission.

II.— As regards the Polish submissions: that submission A 4, which goes beyond the scope of the German submissions, has given rise to a claim for its rejection on the part of the German Government, formulated during the oral proceedings.

* * *

It is therefore solely with the points of divergence as set out above that the Court has to deal in the judgment which it is about to deliver. It is true that the Parties have, both in the written and oral proceedings, formulated yet other claims. In so far, however, as these claims do not constitute developments of the original submissions, or alternatives to them, the Court cannot regard them otherwise than—to use the expression of the Agent of the German Government—as “subsidiary arguments” or as mere suggestions as to the procedure to be adopted; this is certainly the case as regards the numerous requests with a view to the consultation of experts or the hearing of witnesses. There is no occasion for the Court tation d'experts ou l'audition de témoins. Sur toutes ces demandes, la Cour n'a pas besoin de statuer ; elle peut donc se borner à en tenir compte, dans la mesure où cela convient, au cours de la discussion, aux fins de l'exposé des motifs de l'arrêt des arguments avancés par les Parties à l'appui de leurs conclusions.

* * *

Les Parties ont soumis à la Cour de nombreux documents, soit comme annexes aux pièces de la procédure écrite, soit au cours des débats oraux, soit, enfin, à la suite de demandes formulées ou de questions posées par la Cour. (Annexe.)

POINT DE FAIT.

Les faits qui se trouvent à la base de la présente affaire ont déjà été succinctement exposés ou rappelés dans les Arrêts n<sup>os</sup> 6, 7, 8 et 11 rendus par la Cour les 25 août 1925, 25 mai 1926, 26 juillet 1927, et 16 décembre 1927.

Le présent arrêt, cependant, doit s'occuper de l'affaire dite de l'usine de Chorzów à un point de vue où la Cour n'a pas eu à se placer antérieurement, savoir, à celui de la nature — et, le cas échéant, du montant ainsi que des modalités de paiement — de la réparation due éventuellement par la Pologne pour avoir, ainsi que l'a constaté la Cour par son Arrêt n° 7, adopté une attitude qui n'était pas conforme à la Convention de Genève du 15 mai 1922. Il y a donc lieu, avant d'aborder le point de droit soulevé par la Requête allemande du 8 février 1927, de retracer brièvement les faits pertinents à ce point de vue particulier.

Le 5 mars 1915 avait été conclu entre le chancelier de l'Empire allemand, pour le Reich et la Bayerische, un contrat aux termes duquel la Société s'engageait à « installer pour le Reich et à commencer immédiatement à construire », entre autres, une usine d'azote de chaux à Chorzów en Haute-Silésie. Les terrains nécessaires seraient acquis pour le compte du Reich to pass upon all these requests; it may therefore confine itself to taking them into account, in so far as may be necessary during the discussion of the arguments advanced by the Parties in support of their submissions, for the purposes of stating the reasons of the judgment.

* * *

The Parties have presented to the Court numerous documents either as annexes to the documents of the written proceedings or in the course of the hearings, or, lastly, in response to requests made or questions put by the Court. (Annex.)

THE FACTS.

The facts underlying the present suit have already been succinctly stated or referred to in Judgments Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 11, given by the Court on August 25th, 1925, May 25th, 1926, July 26th, 1927, and December 16th, 1927.

The present judgment, however, must deal with the so-called case of the factory at Chorzów from a point of view with which the Court has not hitherto had to concern itself, namely, that of the nature—and, if necessary, the amount and method of payment—of the reparation which may be due by Poland in consequence of her having, as established by the Court in Judgment No. 7, adopted an attitude not in conformity with the Geneva Convention of May 15th, 1922. Accordingly, it is necessary, before approaching the point of law raised by the German Application of February 8th, 1927, briefly to trace out the relevant facts from this particular standpoint.

On March 5th, 1915, a contract was concluded between the Chancellor of the German Empire, on behalf of the Reich, and the Bayerische, according to which that Company undertook "to establish for the Reich and forthwith to begin the construction of", amongst other things, a nitrate factory at Chorzów in Upper Silesia. The necessary lands were to be acquired on et inscrits à son nom dans le livre foncier. Les installations mécaniques devaient être établies conformément aux brevets et licences ainsi qu'aux expériences de la Société, qui s'engageait à diriger, jusqu'au 31 mars 1941, l'exploitation de l'usine, en utilisant l'ensemble des brevets, licences, expériences et innovations, améliorations et perfectionnements, ainsi que tous contrats de fournitures et de livraisons qui lui revenaient. Dans ce but, une section spéciale de la Société devait être établie ; elle serait soumise, dans une certaine mesure, au contrôle du Reich, qui avait le droit de participer, pour chaque année financière, à l'excédent résultant de l'exploitation. Le Reich avait le droit de résilier au 31 mars de chaque année à partir du 31 mars 1926, après préavis de quinze mois, la direction de l'usine par la Société. Cette résiliation pouvait avoir lieu déjà à partir du 31 mars 1921, toujours après préavis de quinze mois, si la participation du Reich à l'excédent n'atteignait pas un niveau déterminé.

Ce contrat fut plus tard complété par une série de sept contrats additionnels, dont, cependant, seuls les deuxième et septième, conclus les 16 novembre 1916 et 22 novembre 1918 respectivement, ont trait à l'usine de Chorzów. Le 14 mai 1919, la Bayerische intenta un procès contre le Reich, demandant que celui-ci fût tenu à dédommager la Société pour le préjudice qu'elle aurait souffert à la suite de certains manquements allégués à l'exécution du contrat du 5 mars 1915 et des contrats additionnels. Cette affaire, toutefois, fut liquidée à l'amiable par une transaction conclue le 24 octobre 1919 entre le Reich et la Bayerische, transaction qui, remplaçant le cinquième contrat additionnel, n'avait pas trait à l'usine de Chorzów.

Le 24 décembre 1919 furent passés à Berlin divers actes juridiques notariés ayant pour but la création d'une nouvelle Société, l'Oberschlesische, au capital social de 250.000 marks, augmenté plus tard à 110.000.000 de marks, et la vente par le Reich à cette Société de l'usine de Chorzów, c'est-à-dire de l'ensemble des terrains, bâtiments et installations y appartenant, avec tous accessoires, réserves, matières premières et matériaux d'exploitation, ainsi que les stocks. La direction et l'exploita-behalf of the Reich and entered in its name in the land register. The machinery and equipment were to be in accordance with the patents and licences of the Company and the experience gained by it, and the Company undertook to manage the factory until March 31st, 1941, making use of all patents, licences, experience gained, innovations and improvements, as also of all supply and delivery contracts of which it had the benefit. For this purpose, a special section of the Company was to be formed which was, to a certain extent, to be subject to the supervision of the Reich, which had the right to a share of the profits resulting from the working of the factory during each financial year. The Reich had the right, commencing on March 31st, 1926, to terminate the contract for the management of the factory by the Company on March 31st of any year upon giving fifteen months' notice. The contract could be determined as early as March 31st, 1921, always on condition of fifteen months' notice being given, if the Reich's share of the surplus did not reach a fixed level.

This contract was subsequently supplemented by a series of seven additional contracts, of which, however, only the second and seventh, concluded on November 16th, 1916, and November 22nd, 1918, respectively, relate to the Chorzów factory. On May 14th, 1919, the Bayerische brought an action against the Reich, claiming that the latter was bound to compensate the Company for the damage said to have been suffered by it, owing to certain alleged shortcomings with respect to the fulfilment of the contract of March 5th, 1915, and the additional contracts. This matter was, however, settled out of court by an arrangement concluded on October 24th, 1919, between the Reich and the Bayerische, an arrangement which replaced the fifth additional contract and did not relate to the Chorzów factory.

On December 24th, 1919, a series of legal instruments were signed and legalized at Berlin with a view to the formation of a new Company, the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G., with a share capital of 250,000 marks, increased subsequently to 110 millions of marks, and the sale by the Reich to this Company of the factory at Chorzów, that is to say, the whole of the land, buildings and installations belonging thereto, with all accessories, reserves, raw material, equipment and stocks. The tion de l'usine devaient rester entre les mains de la Bayerische, qui utiliserait dans ce but ses brevets, licences, expériences et contrats. Ces rapports entre les deux Sociétés furent confirmés au moyen de lettres échangées entre elles, datées des 24 et 28 décembre 1919. L'Oberschlesische fut dûment inscrite, le 29 janvier 1920, à l'Amtsgericht de Königshütte, dans le livre foncier de Chorzów, comme propriétaire des biens-fonds qui constituaient l'usine d'azote de Chorzów. Le siège social de l'Oberschlesische qui, aux termes de l'acte de fondation, était établi à Chorzów, fut, dans la suite, par acte du 14 janvier 1920, transféré à Berlin.

Dans le contrat du 24 décembre 1919 entre le Reich et l'Oberschlesische nouvellement créée, intervint également une deuxième Société, à responsabilité limitée, créée le même jour, et appelée Stickstoff Treuhand Gesellschaft m. b. H. (ci-après dénommée la « Treuhand »), Société dont le capital social était de 300.000 marks, augmenté plus tard à 1.000.000 de marks. Aux termes du contrat, l'ensemble de l'usine pour la production de l'azote à chaux avec installations accessoires, sise à Chorzów, fut cédé par le Reich à l'Oberschlesische au prix de 110.000.000 de marks environ, prix calculé sur certaines données indiquées dans le contrat même, — la Treuhand reprenant aux lieu et place de l'Oberschlesische, comme débiteur unique et indépendant, toutes les obligations que le contrat imposait à cette Société à l'égard du Reich et obtenant, comme contre-prestation sans paiement, des actions de l'Oberschlesische de la valeur nominale de 109.750.000 marks. Plus tard, la Treuhand a acquis également les actions restantes de l'Oberschlesische et est ainsi devenue l'actionnaire unique de cette Société. En garantie des créances appartenant au Reich en vertu du contrat, la Treuhand s'engageait à procurer au Reich le droit de gage sur toutes les actions de l'Oberschlesische. La Treuhand amortirait le prix d'achat exclusivement en versant au Reich des dividendes sur les actions de l'Oberschlesische. Néanmoins, la Treuhand était autorisée à payer, à tout moment, en tout ou en partie, le prix d'achat, ce qui aurait pour effet de libérer du gage les actions dont le capital nominal correspondrait au versement ainsi effectué. Le Reich était auto-management and working of the factory were to remain in the hands of the Bayerische, which, for this purpose, was to utilize its patents, licences, experience gained and contracts. These relations between the two Companies were confirmed by means of letters dated December 24th and 28th, 1919, exchanged between them. The Oberschlesische was duly entered, on January 29th, 1920, at the Amtsgericht of Königs-hütte, in the Chorzów land register, as owner of the landed property constituting the nitrate factory at Chorzów. The registered office of the Oberschlesische which, under the memorandum of association, was established at Chorzów, was subsequently, by an amendment executed on January 14th, 1920, transferred to Berlin.

In the contract of December 24th, 1919, between the Reich and the newly created Oberschlesische, a second limited liability company, founded the same day and known as the Stickstoff Treuhand Gesellschaft m. b. H. (hereinafter called the "Treuhand") was also concerned. This Company had a share capital of 300,000 marks, subsequently increased to 1,000,000 marks. Under the contract, the whole of the factory for the production of nitrated lime, with the accessory installations, situated at Chorzów, was ceded by the Reich to the Oberschlesische at the price of approximately 110 million marks,—which price was calculated according to certain data indicated in the contract itself,—the Treuhand taking over, in the place of the Oberschlesische, as sole and independent debtor, all the obligations imposed by the contract upon the latter in regard to the Reich, and obtaining in consideration thereof, without payment, shares of the Oberschlesische—to the nominal value of 109,750,000 marks. Later, the Treuhand also acquired the rest of the shares of the Oberschlesische, thus becoming the sole shareholder of that Company. As guarantee for the sums due to the Reich under the contract, the Treuhand undertook to obtain for the Reich a lien on all the shares of the Oberschlesische. The Treuhand was to liquidate the purchase price exclusively by paying to the Reich the dividends on the shares of the Oberschlesische. Nevertheless, the Treuhand was authorized to pay at any time the whole or a part of the purchase price; this would have the effect of removing the lien on shares of a nominal value corresponding to the payment risé à exercer lui-même tous les droits découlant de la possession des actions et en particulier le droit de vote à l'assemblée générale, mais se déclarait d'accord pour maintenir la direction de l'exploitation de l'Oberschlesische entre les mains de la Bayerische. Une aliénation des actions engagées ne serait autorisée, même après l'expiration du droit de gage, qu'avec l'assentiment du Reich. En garantie de l'exécution de cette obligation, le Reich conserverait, même après cette expiration, la possession des actions et l'exercice de tous les droits découlant de cette possession. Le prix réalisé lors d'une vente éventuelle des actions servirait en premier lieu à amortir le solde de la créance du Reich. De tout excédent, le Reich toucherait, le cas échéant, soit les 85 % — si la vente était faite par la Treuhand —, soit les 90 % — si elle était faite par le Reich ; dans les deux cas, le solde seulement reviendrait à la Treuhand, qui, cependant, dans la seconde éventualité, obtenait le droit d'acquérir les actions au prix auquel le Reich désirait les réaliser.

Le 15 mai 1922 fut signée à Genève entre l'Allemagne et la Pologne la Convention relative à la Haute-Silésie.

Après la signature de cette Convention, mais avant la cession effective de la Haute-Silésie polonaise à la Pologne, la Treuhand offrit, par lettre du 26 mai 1922, à une société suisse, la Compagnie d'azote et de fertilisants S. A. à Genève, une option jusqu'à la fin de l'année pour l'achat, au prix de cinq millions de francs suisses à verser au plus tard le 2 janvier 1923, de la moitié (55 millions de marks) des actions de l'Oberschlesische, moyennant quoi la société genevoise obtiendrait, entre autres, le droit de participer aux négociations avec le Gouvernement polonais. Cette offre n'aboutit pas.

Le 1<sup>er</sup> juillet 1922, le Tribunal polonais de Huta Krolewska, qui avait succédé à l'Amtsgericht de Königshütte, rendit une décision suivant laquelle l'enregistrement près ce Tribunal de l'Oberschlesische comme propriétaire de l'usine en question, déclaré nul, devait être rayé, la situation antérieure rétablie, et le droit de propriété sur les biens-fonds dont il s'agit enregistré au profit du Fisc de l'État polonais. Cette décision, qui made. The Reich was authorized itself to exercise all the rights resulting from the possession of the shares, and in particular the right to vote at the general meeting of shareholders, but agreed that the management of the exploitation of the Oberschlesische should be left in the hands of the Bayerische. An alienation of the shares so pledged would be authorized only with the approval of the Reich, even after the lien had expired. As a guarantee for the fulfilment of this obligation, the Reich would, even after expiration of the lien, retain possession of the shares and the exercise of all rights resulting from such possession. The price realized in the event of a sale of the shares was in the first place to be devoted to the liquidation of the balance of the Reich's claim. Of any surplus, the Reich was to receive either 85%—if the sale were effected by the Treuhand—or 90 %—if it were effected by the Reich; in both cases, the balance only would fall to the Treuhand which, however, in the second case, would obtain a right to acquire the shares at the price at which the Reich wished that they should be disposed of.

On May 15th, 1922, was signed at Geneva between Germany and Poland the Convention concerning Upper Silesia.

After the signature of this Convention, but before the actual cession of Polish Upper Silesia to Poland, the Treuhand, by a letter dated May 26th, 1922, offered to a Swiss company, the Compagnie d'azote et de fertilisants S. A. at Geneva, an option until the end of the year for the purchase, at a price of five million Swiss francs, to be paid by January 2nd, 1923, at latest, of one half (55 million marks) of the shares of the Oberschlesische, in consideration of which the Genevese Company would, amongst other things, acquire the right to take part in the negotiations with the Polish Government. This offer came to nothing.

On July 1st, 1922, the Polish Court of Huta Krolewska, which had replaced the Amtsgericht of Königshütte, gave a decision to the effect that the registration with this Court of the Oberschlesische as owner of the factory, which was declared null and void, was to be cancelled and the previously existing situation restored and that the right of ownership in the landed property in question was to be registered in the name of the invoquait l'article 256 du Traité de Versailles, ainsi que les lois polonaises des 14 juillet 1920 et 16 juin 1922, fut mise à exécution le même jour.

Le 3 juillet suivant, M. Ignacy Moscicki, nommé fondé de pouvoirs général de l'usine de Chorzów, par un décret ministériel polonais du 24 juin 1922, prit possession de l'usine et en assumait l'administration, conformément aux termes du décret ; le Gouvernement allemand a allégué, et le Gouvernement polonais n'a pas contesté, que ledit fondé de pouvoirs, en entreprenant la gestion de l'exploitation de l'usine, se mit en même temps en possession des biens meubles et des brevets, licences, etc.

Après avoir saisi l'usine, le Gouvernement polonais l'inscrivit sur la liste des biens à lui transférés en vertu de l'article 256 du Traité de Versailles, liste qu'il a dûment notifiée à la Commission des Réparations. Le Gouvernement polonais allègue qu'à la suite de l'Arrêt n° 7 de la Cour, le Gouvernement allemand a demandé la radiation de l'usine de la liste en question ; il n'a cependant pas été informé que cette radiation ait été effectuée.

Entre temps, l'Oberschlesische avait introduit, le 15 novembre 1922, devant le Tribunal arbitral mixte germano-polonais à Paris, une requête concluant à faire condamner le Gouvernement polonais notamment à la restitution de l'usine. Cette requête, signifiée au Gouvernement défendeur le 17 janvier 1923, fut retirée par l'Oberschlesische en juin 1928, avant que le Tribunal eût eu l'occasion de statuer.

L'Oberschlesische intenta une action parallèle concernant les biens meubles qui se trouvaient à Chorzów lors de la prise de l'usine, en ouvrant, le 24 novembre 1922, une procédure contre le Fisc polonais devant le Tribunal civil de Katowice, procédure dont le but était d'obtenir soit la restitution à l'Oberschlesische ou à la Bayerische de ces biens, soit le remboursement de leur valeur ; ce procès n'aboutit cependant à aucune décision quant au fond.

En ce qui la concerne, la Bayerische a, elle aussi, intenté, le 25 mars 1925, devant le Tribunal arbitral mixte germano-polo-

Polish Treasury. This decision, which cited Article 256 of the Treaty of Versailles and the Polish laws of July 14th, 1920, and June 16th, 1922, was carried into effect on the same day.

On July 3rd, 1922, M. Ignacy Moscicki, who was delegated with full powers to take charge of the factory at Chorzów by a Polish ministerial decree of June 24th, 1922, took possession of the factory and took over the management in accordance with the terms of the decree. The German Government contended, and the Polish Government did not deny, that the said delegate, in undertaking the control of the working of the factory, at the same time took possession of the movable property, patents, licences, etc.

After having taken over the factory, the Polish Government entered it in the list of property transferred to it under Article 256 of the Treaty of Versailles, which list was duly communicated to the Reparation Commission. The Polish Government alleges that after the pronouncement of Judgment No. 7 by the Court, the German Government asked that the factory should be struck out of the list in question; the former Government has not, however, been informed whether this has been done.

In the meantime, the Oberschlesische, on November 15th, 1922, had brought an action before the German-Polish Mixed Arbitral Tribunal at Paris, claiming, amongst other things, that the Polish Government should be ordered to restore the factory. This action, notice of which was served upon the respondent Government on January 17th, 1923, was withdrawn by the Oberschlesische in June 1928, before the Tribunal had been able to give a decision.

The Oberschlesische, on November 24th, 1922, instituted a parallel action in regard to the movable property existing at Chorzów at the time of the taking over of the factory, against the Polish Treasury before the Civil Court of Katowice, with a view to obtaining either the restitution to the Oberschlesische or the Bayerische of such property, or the payment of the equivalent value. This action however led to no decision on the merits.

As regards the Bayerische, that Company also, on March 25th, 1925, brought an action before the German-Polish Mixed nais, une action contre le Fisc polonais, en vue d'obtenir une indemnité annuelle jusqu'à la restitution de l'usine à l'Oberschlesische et de se faire restituer la possession et la direction de l'usine. La requête introduisant cette instance fut signifiée au Gouvernement défendeur le 16 décembre 1925; mais l'affaire fut retirée en juin 1928, en même temps que l'instance introduite par l'Oberschlesische, et dans les mêmes conditions.

L'Arrêt n° 7 de la Cour fut rendu le 25 mai 1926. Cet arrêt fut la source d'événements qui se développèrent dans deux directions différentes.

D'une part, en effet, sur l'initiative du Gouvernement allemand, il vint à former le point de départ pour des négociations directes entre les deux Gouvernements intéressés. De ces négociations il y a lieu de retenir ici uniquement que, le 14 janvier 1927, le Gouvernement allemand avait reconnu que l'usine ne pouvait plus être restituée en nature, et que, par conséquent, la réparation due devait en principe prendre la forme du versement d'une indemnité, déclaration d'ailleurs formellement répétée dans le Mémoire. Les négociations, par ailleurs, n'aboutirent pas, à cause notamment du fait que, de l'avis du Gouvernement polonais, la nécessité d'une compensation entre l'indemnité à allouer à l'Allemagne et différents montants dont la Pologne serait créancière de l'Allemagne, s'imposerait. Leur insuccès eut pour résultat la présente instance.

D'autre part, l'Arrêt n° 7 de la Cour provoqua de la part du Gouvernement polonais une requête adressée au Tribunal polonais de Katowice contre l'Oberschlesische et demandant qu'il fût déclaré que celle-ci n'était pas devenue propriétaire des biens-fonds de Chorzów; que l'inscription au registre foncier opérée en sa faveur le 29 janvier 1922 était dépourvue de validité; et que — indépendamment des lois du 14 juillet 1920 et 16 juin 1922 — la propriété des biens-fonds en question revenait au Fisc de l'État polonais. L'arrêt du Tribunal sur cette requête — arrêt qui, rendu par contumace, fut publié le 12 novembre 1927 et entra en force de chose jugée le 2 janvier 1928. — fit droit à toutes les conclusions du demandeur.

Arbitral Tribunal against the Polish Treasury with a view to obtaining an annual indemnity until the restitution of the factory to the Oberschlesische, and to causing the possession and management of the factory to be restored to it. Notice of this action was served on the respondent Government on December 16th, 1925; but the case was withdrawn in June 1928, at the same time as the action brought by the Oberschlesische and in the same circumstances.

The Court's Judgment No. 7 was given on May 25th, 1926. This judgment was the source of developments tending in two different directions.

On the one hand, at the initiative of the German Government, it formed the starting point for direct negotiations between the two Governments concerned. In regard to these negotiations, it is only necessary here to note that, on January 14th, 1927, the German Government had recognized that the factory could no longer be restored in kind and that consequently the reparation due must, in principle, take the form of the payment of compensation, a statement which is moreover formally repeated in the Case. The negotiations were unsuccessful owing, amongst other things, to the fact that, in the opinion of the Polish Government, certain claims which Poland was said to have against Germany, must be set off against the indemnity to be awarded to Germany. The failure of the negotiations resulted in the institution of the present proceedings.

On the other hand, the Court's Judgment No. 7 gave rise on the part of the Polish Government to the bringing of an action before the Polish Court of Katowice against the Oberschlesische in order to obtain a declaration that that Company had not become owner of the landed property at Chorzów; that the entry in the land register made in its favour on January 29th, 1922, was not valid, and that—independently of the laws of July 14th, 1920, and June 16th, 1922,—the ownership of the landed property in question fell to the Polish Treasury. The judgment of the Court in this action—which was given by default—was published on November 12th, 1927, and took effect on January 2nd, 1928; it admitted all the submissions of the claimant.

Entre temps, la Cour avait été saisie, le 18 octobre 1927, d'une nouvelle requête, émanant du Gouvernement allemand qui, se fondant sur les dispositions de l'article 60 du Statut et l'article 66 du Règlement de la Cour, demanda à celle-ci de donner une interprétation de ses Arrêts n° 7, du 25 mai 1926, et n° 8, du 26 juillet 1927, dont le sens et la portée seraient devenus litigieux entre les deux Gouvernements, à savoir, sur le point qui avait servi d'origine à la procédure devant le Tribunal de Katowice.

La Cour rendit, le 16 décembre 1927, son arrêt, qui porte le n° 11, sur ladite requête. A teneur de cet arrêt, la Cour avait entendu reconnaître, par son Arrêt n° 7, avec force obligatoire pour les Parties au litige et dans le cas décidé, entre autres choses, le droit de propriété de l'Oberschlesische sur l'usine de Chorzów au point de vue du droit civil.

Tandis que la procédure relative à la demande en interprétation se poursuivait, le Gouvernement allemand, par Requête datée du 14 octobre 1927 et déposée au Greffe le 15 novembre suivant, demanda à la Cour d'indiquer au Gouvernement polonais qu'il devait payer au Gouvernement allemand, à titre provisoire, la somme de trente millions de Reichsmarks.

La Cour, statuant sur cette demande, qui était présentée sur la base de l'article 41 du Statut, décida par une Ordonnance, rendue le 21 novembre 1927, qu'il n'y avait pas lieu d'y donner suite, la demande du Gouvernement allemand devant être considérée comme visant non l'indication de mesures conservatoires, mais bien l'adjudication d'une partie des conclusions de la Requête du 8 février 1927.

Meanwhile, on October 18th, 1927, the Court had received a fresh application from the German Government which, relying on the terms of Article 60 of the Statute and Article 66 of the Rules of Court, prayed the Court to give an interpretation of its Judgments Nos. 7, of May 25th, 1926, and 8, of July 26th, 1927, alleging that a divergence of opinion had arisen between the two Governments in regard to the meaning and scope of these two judgments in connection with the point which had given rise to the proceedings before the Court of Katowice.

The Court, on December 16th, 1927, delivered its judgment in this suit (No. 11). According to this judgment the Court's intention in Judgment No. 7 had been to recognize, with binding effect between the Parties concerned and in respect of that particular case, amongst other things, the right of ownership of the Oberschlesische in the Chorzów factory under municipal law.

Whilst the proceedings in connection with the request for an interpretation were in progress, the German Government, by means of a Request dated October 14th, 1927, and filed with the Registry on November 15th, besought the Court to indicate to the Polish Government that it should pay to the German Government, as a provisional measure, the sum of 30 million Reichsmarks.

The Court gave its decision upon this request, which was submitted under the terms of Article 41 of the Statute, in the form of an Order made on November 21st, 1927. It held that effect could not be given to the request of the German Government, since it was to be regarded as designed to obtain not the indication of measures of protection, but judgment in favour of a part of the claim formulated in the Application of February 8th, 1927.

* * *

POINT DE DROIT.

I.

La Cour, avant d'aborder l'examen des conclusions des Parties, doit fixer le sens de la requête qui est à la base de la procédure actuelle, afin d'en établir la nature et la portée. C'est à la lumière de ces constatations qu'elle devra apprécier ensuite les conclusions qui lui ont été soumises au cours de la procédure tant écrite qu'orale.

La requête demande à la Cour :

1° de constater l'obligation du Gouvernement polonais, en raison de son attitude à l'égard des Sociétés Oberschlesische et Bayerische, attitude que la Cour a déclarée non conforme à la Convention de Genève, de réparer le préjudice subi de ce chef par lesdites Sociétés ;

2° d'allouer des indemnités, dont le montant est indiqué dans la requête, pour le dommage causé respectivement à l'une et à l'autre desdites Sociétés ;

3° de fixer le mode de paiement, entre autres de dire que les paiements à faire par le Gouvernement polonais devraient être effectués au compte des deux Sociétés près la Deutsche Bank à Berlin.

Au cours de la procédure orale, une divergence de vues s'est fait jour entre les Parties quant à la nature et à la portée de la requête. L'agent du Gouvernement allemand avait émis dans sa plaidoirie la thèse selon laquelle un gouvernement peut accepter une réparation dans toute forme qu'il jugera convenable, et que la réparation ne doit pas nécessairement consister en un dédommagement des personnes lésées. Il convient de retenir notamment le passage suivant :

« C'est, en effet, de son propre droit, du droit du Gouvernement allemand, qu'il s'agit. Le Gouvernement allemand n'intervient pas en qualité de représentant des individus qui ont souffert le dommage, mais il peut mesurer le dommage dont il réclame la réparation en son propre nom, d'après l'échelle des pertes subies par les sociétés pour lesquelles il a pris fait et

* * *

THE LAW.

I.

The Court, before proceeding to consider the Parties' submissions, must determine the import of the application which has given rise to the present proceedings, in order to ascertain its nature and scope. In the light of the results of this investigation, it will then proceed to consider the submissions made in the course of the written and oral proceedings.

In the application the Court is asked :

(1) to declare that the Polish Government, by reason of its attitude in respect of the Oberschlesische and Bayerische Companies, which attitude the Court had declared not to be in conformity with the Geneva Convention, is under an obligation to make good the consequent damage sustained by those Companies ;

(2) to award compensation, the amount of which is indicated in the application, for the damage caused to each of the respective Companies ;

(3) to fix the method of payment, and amongst other things to order the payments to be made by the Polish Government to be effected to the account of the two Companies with the Deutsche Bank at Berlin.

In the course of the oral proceedings, a difference of opinion between the two Parties became apparent as to the nature and scope of the application. The Agent for the German Government argued in his address to the Court that a government may content itself with reparation in any form which it may consider proper, and that reparation need not necessarily consist in the compensation of the individuals concerned. The following passage should especially be noted :

[Translation.]

"It is in fact a question of the German Government's own rights. The German Government has not brought this suit as representative of the individuals who have suffered injury, but it may estimate the damage for which it claims reparation on its own behalf, according to the measure provided by the losses suffered by the companies whose case it has cause. Le Gouvernement allemand peut demander le paiement de cette indemnité à tout locus solutionis qui lui semble utile en l'espèce, que ce soit une caisse publique ou une caisse privée.

Le litige actuel est donc un litige entre gouvernements, et rien qu'un litige entre gouvernements; il se distingue très nettement d'un procès ordinaire en dommages-intérêts, intenté par des particuliers par-devant un tribunal civil, comme le dit le Gouvernement polonais dans sa Duplique.»

L'agent du Gouvernement polonais, dans sa duplique, a dit estimer que cette manière de voir comportait une modification de l'objet du litige et, d'une certaine manière, aussi de la nature de la requête, car, selon la thèse polonaise, le demandeur aurait défini l'objet du litige comme étant l'obligation d'indemniser les deux Sociétés. Or, le dommage étant en corrélation avec l'indemnisation, la demande allemande se trouverait placée sur un autre terrain, dès qu'il s'agirait de l'indemnisation non plus des Sociétés, mais de l'État pour les torts par lui subis. L'agent du Gouvernement polonais a contesté au Gouvernement allemand le droit de faire ce changement dans l'état où se trouvait la procédure, et a refusé d'y consentir.

Même si les termes de la requête, ainsi que des conclusions ultérieures de la Partie demanderesse, permettaient de les interpréter comme visant une indemnisation due directement aux deux Sociétés pour les dommages subis par elles, et non une réparation due à l'Allemagne pour une violation de la Convention de Genève, il résulte toutefois des conditions dans lesquelles la Cour a été saisie de la présente affaire, ainsi que des considérations pour lesquelles elle l'a retenue, par son Arrêt n° 8, pour statuer quant au fond, que l'objet de la requête allemande ne peut viser que la réparation due pour un tort subi par l'Allemagne en sa qualité de Partie contractante de la Convention de Genève.

La présente requête se base explicitement et exclusivement sur l'Arrêt n° 7 qui a constaté que l'attitude du Gouvernement polonais à l'égard des deux Sociétés Oberschlesische et Baye-rische n'était pas conforme aux dispositions des articles 6 et suivants de ladite Convention. Déjà dans l'Arrêt n° 6, qui a établi la compétence de la Cour pour statuer sur la violation alléguée de la Convention de Genève, il a été reconnu par la taken up. The German Government may claim the payment of this compensation at any locus solutionis which it may think fit in this case, whether it be a public or a private office.

The present dispute is therefore a dispute between governments and nothing but a dispute between governments. It is very clearly differentiated from an ordinary action for damages, brought by private persons before a civil court, as the Polish Government has said in its Rejoinder."

The Agent for the Polish Government in his Rejoinder submitted that this method of regarding the question involved a modification of the subject of the dispute and, in some sort also, of the nature of the application, for, according to Poland's view, the subject of the dispute had been defined by Germany as the obligation to compensate the two Companies. But damage and compensation being interdependent conceptions, the German claim assumed another aspect if it was no longer a question of compensating the Companies, but of compensating the State for the injury suffered by it. The Agent for the Polish Government disputed the German Government's right to make this change at that stage of the proceedings and refused to accept it.

Even should it be possible to construe the terms of the application and of the subsequent submissions of the Applicant as contemplating compensation due directly to the two Companies for damages suffered by them and not reparation due to Germany for a breach of the Geneva Convention, it follows from the conditions in which the Court has been seized of the present suit, and from the considerations which led the Court to reserve it by Judgment No. 8 for decision on the merits, that the object of the German application can only be to obtain reparation due for a wrong suffered by Germany in her capacity as a contracting Party to the Geneva Convention.

The present application is explicitly and exclusively based on Judgment No. 7 which declared that the attitude of the Polish Government in respect of the two Companies, the Oberschlesische and Bayerische, was not in conformity with Article 6 and the following articles of the said Convention. Already in Judgment No. 6, establishing the Court's jurisdiction to deal with the alleged violation of the Geneva Convention, the Cour, conformément à une thèse de la Partie demanderesse, qu'il s'agissait exclusivement d'une contestation entre États au sujet de l'interprétation et application d'une convention en vigueur entre eux. L'article 23 de la Convention de Genève ne vise que les divergences d'opinions résultant de l'interprétation et application des articles 6 à 22 de la Convention de Genève, qui s'élèveraient entre les deux Gouvernements signataires. En effet, la Cour a affirmé sa compétence pour statuer sur la réparation demandée parce qu'elle considérait la réparation comme le corollaire de la violation des obligations résultant d'un engagement entre États. Cette manière de voir, conforme au caractère général d'une juridiction internationale qui, en principe, ne connaît que des rapports d'État à État, s'impose avec une force particulière en l'espèce parce que la Convention de Genève, dans son système très développé d'instances de recours, a précisément créé ou maintenu pour certaines catégories de réclamations de particuliers des instances arbitrales d'un caractère international spécial, telles que le Tribunal arbitral haut-silézien et le Tribunal arbitral mixte germano-polonais. C'est en se basant, entre autres, sur le caractère purement interétatique de la contestation tranchée par l'Arrêt n° 7 que la Cour avait retenu l'affaire, nonobstant le fait que des réclamations introduites par les deux Sociétés étaient pendantes devant l'une des instances arbitrales mentionnées ci-dessus, réclamations relatives à la même dépossession qui a donné lieu à la requête actuellement soumise à la Cour par le Gouvernement allemand.

La Cour ayant, par son Arrêt n° 8, retenu cette requête pour statuer au fond, n'a pu le faire que sur les mêmes bases qu'elle a admises pour son Arrêt n° 7, arrêt qui est le point de départ pour la demande en réparation avancée actuellement par l'Allemagne. C'est donc à la lumière de cette conception qu'il convient d'interpréter les déclarations de la Partie demanderesse dans la présente procédure ; il y aurait également lieu de suivre cette méthode même si ladite Partie n'avait pas formulé aussi explicitement sa thèse dans sa plaidoirie.

Il est un principe de droit international que la réparation d'un tort peut consister en une indemnité correspondant au dommage que les ressortissants de l'État lésé ont subi par

Court recognized that—as had been maintained by the Applicant—the matter was exclusively a dispute between States as to the interpretation and application of a convention in force between them. Article 23 of the Geneva Convention only contemplates differences of opinion respecting the interpretation and application of Articles 6 to 22 of the Geneva Convention arising between the two Governments. The Court in fact declared itself competent to pass upon the claim for reparation because it regarded reparation as the corollary of the violation of the obligations resulting from an engagement between States. This view of the matter, which is in conformity with the general character of an international tribunal which, in principle, has cognizance only of interstate relations, is indicated with peculiar force in this case for the specific reason that the Geneva Convention, with its very elaborate system of legal remedies, has created or maintained for certain categories of private claims arbitral tribunals of a special international character, such as the Upper Silesian Arbitral Tribunal and the German-Polish Mixed Arbitral Tribunal. It was on the basis, amongst other things, of the purely interstate character of the dispute decided by Judgment No. 7 that the Court reserved the case for judgment, notwithstanding the fact that actions brought by the two Companies were pending before one of the arbitral tribunals above mentioned, actions which related to the same act of dispossession which led to the filing with the Court of the German Government's Application now before it.

The Court, which by Judgment No. 8 reserved the present application for judgment on the merits, could only do so on the grounds on which it had already based its Judgment No. 7 which constitutes the starting point for the claim for compensation now put forward by Germany. Accordingly the declarations of the Applicant in the present proceedings must be construed in the light of this conception and this method must also have been followed even if that Party had not stated its contention as explicitly as it has done in the German Agent's address to the Court.

It is a principle of international law that the reparation of a wrong may consist in an indemnity corresponding to the damage which the nationals of the injured State have suffered suite de l'acte contraire au droit international. C'est même la forme de réparation la plus usitée ; l'Allemagne l'a choisie en l'espèce, et son admissibilité n'est pas contestée. Mais la réparation due à un État par un autre État ne change pas de nature par le fait qu'elle prend la forme d'une indemnité pour le montant de laquelle le dommage subi par un particulier fournira la mesure. Les règles de droit qui déterminent la réparation sont les règles de droit international en vigueur entre les deux États en question, et non pas le droit qui régit les rapports entre l'État qui aurait commis un tort et le particulier qui aurait subi le dommage. Les droits ou intérêts dont la violation cause un dommage à un particulier se trouvent toujours sur un autre plan que les droits de l'État auxquels le même acte peut également porter atteinte. Le dommage subi par le particulier n'est donc jamais identique en substance avec celui que l'État subira ; il ne peut que fournir une mesure convenable de la réparation due à l'État.

Le droit international n'exclut pas qu'un État accorde à un autre le droit de demander à des instances arbitrales internationales d'allouer directement aux ressortissants de ce dernier des indemnités pour des dommages qu'ils ont subis à la suite d'une violation du droit international par le premier État. Mais rien — ni dans les termes de l'article 23, ni dans les rapports entre cette clause et certaines autres dispositions d'ordre juridictionnel insérées dans la Convention de Genève — ne porte à croire que la juridiction établie par l'article 23 s'étende à des réparations autres que celles dues par une des Parties contractantes à l'autre comme conséquence d'une violation des articles 6 à 22 dûment constatée par la Cour.

Cette manière de voir peut, d'ailleurs, très bien se concilier avec les conclusions présentées par la Partie demanderesse. La première de ses conclusions vise, dans toutes les phases de la procédure, la constatation de l'obligation de réparer. Les indemnités à payer au Gouvernement allemand, selon la conclusion finale n° 2, constituent, aux termes de la conclusion 4 d, aussi bien du Mémoire que de la réplique orale, une créance de ce Gouvernement. La demande formulée dans la même conclusion et tendant à faire effectuer le paiement aux comptes des deux as a result of the act which is contrary to international law. This is even the most usual form of reparation; it is the form selected by Germany in this case and the admissibility of it has not been disputed. The reparation due by one State to another does not however change its character by reason of the fact that it takes the form of an indemnity for the calculation of which the damage suffered by a private person is taken as the measure. The rules of law governing the reparation are the rules of international law in force between the two States concerned, and not the law governing relations between the State which has committed a wrongful act and the individual who has suffered damage. Rights or interests of an individual the violation of which rights causes damage are always in a different plane to rights belonging to a State, which rights may also be infringed by the same act. The damage suffered by an individual is never therefore identical in kind with that which will be suffered by a State; it can only afford a convenient scale for the calculation of the reparation due to the State.

International law does not prevent one State from granting to another the right to have recourse to international arbitral tribunals in order to obtain the direct award to nationals of the latter State of compensation for damage suffered by them as a result of infractions of international law by the first State. But there is nothing—either in the terms of Article 23 or in the relation between this provision and certain others of a jurisdictional character included in the Geneva Convention—which tends to show that the jurisdiction established by Article 23 extends to reparation other than that due by one of the contracting Parties to the other in consequence of an infraction of Articles 6 to 22, duly recognized as such by the Court.

This view is moreover readily reconcilable with the submissions of the Applicant. The first of its submissions, throughout all stages of the proceedings, aims at the establishment of an obligation to make reparation. The indemnities to be paid to the German Government, according to No. 2 of the final submissions, constitute, in the terms of submission 4*d*, as set out in both the Case and the oral reply, a debt due to that Government. The claim formulated in the same submission, to the effect that payment should be made to the account of the Sociétés près la Deutsche Bank à Berlin est interprétée par l'agent du Gouvernement allemand comme visant seulement un locus solutionis.

La Cour est donc d'avis que la Partie demanderesse n'a pas changé l'objet du litige au cours de la procédure.

* * *

Il résulte de ce qui vient d'être exposé que la requête tend à obtenir, en faveur de l'Allemagne, une réparation dont le montant est déterminé par le dommage subi par les Sociétés Oberschlesische et Bayerische. Trois questions essentielles se posent :

1° L'existence de l'obligation de réparer.

2° L'existence des dommages qui doivent servir de base pour l'évaluation du montant de l'indemnité.

3° L'étendue de ces dommages.

Quant au premier point, la Cour constate que c'est un principe du droit international, voire une conception générale du droit, que toute violation d'un engagement comporte l'obligation de réparer. Déjà dans son Arrêt n° 8, la Cour, statuant sur la compétence qu'elle dérivait de l'article 23 de la Convention de Genève, a dit : la réparation est le complément indispensable d'un manquement à l'application sans qu'il soit nécessaire que cela soit inscrit dans la convention même. L'existence du principe établissant l'obligation de réparer comme un élément du droit international positif n'a du reste jamais été contestée au cours des procédures relatives aux affaires de Chorzów.

L'obligation de réparer étant reconnue en principe, il s'agit de savoir si une violation d'un engagement international a en effet eu lieu dans le cas d'espèce. Or, à cet égard, la Cour se trouve en présence d'une chose jugée. La non-conformité de l'attitude de la Pologne envers les deux Sociétés avec les articles 6 et suivants de la Convention de Genève est établie par le point n° 2 du dispositif de l'Arrêt n° 7. L'application du principe à la présente espèce s'impose donc.

two Companies with the Deutsche Bank at Berlin, is interpreted by the Agent for the German Government as solely relating to the locus solutionis.

The Court therefore is of opinion that the Applicant has not altered the subject of the dispute in the course of the proceedings.

* * *

It follows from the foregoing that the application is designed to obtain, in favour of Germany, reparation the amount of which is determined by the damage suffered by the Oberschlesische and Bayerische. Three fundamental questions arise:

- (1) The existence of the obligation to make reparation.
- (2) The existence of the damage which must serve as a basis for the calculation of the amount of the indemnity.
- (3) The extent of this damage.

As regards the first point, the Court observes that it is a principle of international law, and even a general conception of law, that any breach of an engagement involves an obligation to make reparation. In Judgment No. 8, when deciding on the jurisdiction derived by it from Article 23 of the Geneva Convention, the Court has already said that reparation is the indispensable complement of a failure to apply a convention, and there is no necessity for this to be stated in the convention itself. The existence of the principle establishing the obligation to make reparation, as an element of positive international law, has moreover never been disputed in the course of the proceedings in the various cases concerning the Chorzów factory.

The obligation to make reparation being in principle recognized, it remains to be ascertained whether a breach of an international engagement has in fact taken place in the case under consideration. Now this point is res judicata. The non-conformity of Poland's attitude in respect of the two Companies with Article 6 and the following articles of the Geneva Convention is established by No. 2 of the operative provisions of Judgment No. 7. The application of the principle to the present case is therefore evident.

Pour ce qui est du deuxième point, la question de savoir si un dommage a résulté du tort qui est constant, n'est aucunement résolue par les arrêts antérieurs de la Cour relatifs à l'affaire de Chorzów. La Partie demanderesse ayant calculé le montant de la réparation qu'elle réclame sur la base du dommage subi par les deux Sociétés par suite de l'attitude du Gouvernement polonais, il est nécessaire, pour la Cour, de vérifier si ces Sociétés ont effectivement subi un dommage de ce chef.

En ce qui concerne la Bayerische, la Pologne reconnaît l'existence d'un dommage qui donne lieu à réparation ; la divergence entre les Parties n'a trait qu'à l'étendue de ce dommage et aux modalités de la réparation ; par contre, la Pologne conteste pour l'Oberschlesische l'existence d'un dommage donnant lieu à réparation et conclut, par conséquent, à débouter l'Allemagne de sa demande. Le fait de la dépossession de l'Oberschlesische n'est aucunement contesté. Mais, selon le Gouvernement polonais, cette Société n'aurait nonobstant pas subi de dommage ; il allègue, en effet, d'une part, que le droit de propriété revendiqué par l'Oberschlesische aurait été entaché de nullité ou d'annulabilité ; et, d'autre part, que le contrat du 24 décembre 1919 attribuait au Reich des droits et avantages si considérables qu'en substance un dommage éventuel ne frapperait pas la Société. Subsidiairement, le Gouvernement polonais fait valoir que ces mêmes circonstances ont pour conséquence au moins de réduire essentiellement le dommage pouvant entrer en ligne de compte en ce qui concerne ladite Société.

Abstraction faite de ces objections de nature préalable, il y a désaccord entre les Parties sur le montant et les modalités de paiement d'une réparation éventuelle.

Dans ces conditions, il incombe à la Cour d'examiner tout d'abord s'il y a eu, non seulement pour la Bayerische, mais aussi pour l'Oberschlesische, un dommage susceptible de donner lieu à réparation.

As regards the second point, the question whether damage has resulted from the wrongful act which is common ground, is in no wise settled by the Court's previous decisions relating to the Chorzów case. The Applicant having calculated the amount of the reparation claimed on the basis of the damage suffered by the two Companies as a result of the Polish Government's attitude, it is necessary for the Court to ascertain whether these Companies have in fact suffered damage as a consequence of that attitude.

As regards the Bayerische, Poland admits the existence of a damage affording ground for reparation; the Parties only differ as to the extent of this damage and the mode of reparation; on the other hand, Poland denies the existence of any damage calling for reparation in the case of the Oberschlesische and consequently submits that Germany's claim should be dismissed. The fact of the dispossession of the Oberschlesische is in no way disputed. But notwithstanding this, in the contention of the Polish Government, that Company has suffered no damage: it argues, first, that the right of ownership claimed by the Oberschlesische was null and void or subject to annulment, and, secondly, that the contract of December 24th, 1919, attributed to the Reich rights and benefits so considerable that any possible damage would not materially affect the Company. In the alternative, the Polish Government contends that these same circumstances at all events have the effect of essentially diminishing the extent of the damage to be taken into account in so far as the said Company is concerned.

Apart from these preliminary objections, the Parties are at issue as to the amount and method of payment of any compensation which may be awarded.

In these circumstances, the Court must first of all consider whether damage affording ground for reparation has ensued as regards not only the Bayerische but also the Oberschlesische.

II.

Abordant cet examen, il convient de constater avant tout que, pour évaluer le dommage causé par un acte illicite, il faut tenir compte exclusivement de la valeur des biens, droits et intérêts qui ont été atteints et dont le titulaire est la personne au profit de laquelle l'indemnité est réclamée ou le dommage de qui doit servir de mesure pour l'évaluation de la réparation réclamée. Ce principe, admis dans la jurisprudence arbitrale, a pour conséquence, d'une part, d'exclure du préjudice à évaluer, les dommages causés aux tiers par l'acte illicite, et d'autre part de n'en pas exclure le montant des dettes et autres obligations à la charge du lésé. Le montant du préjudice causé à l'Oberschlesische du fait de la dépossession de l'entreprise de Chorzów est donc égal à la valeur totale — mais exclusivement à la valeur totale — des biens, droits et intérêts de cette Société dans ladite entreprise, sans déduction de passifs.

Le Gouvernement polonais soutient en premier lieu que l'Oberschlesische n'a pas subi de dommage à la suite de la dépossession, parce qu'elle n'était pas la propriétaire légitime, son droit de propriété n'ayant jamais été valable et, en tout cas, ayant cessé de l'être en vertu de l'arrêt rendu le 12 novembre 1927 par le Tribunal de Katowice ; de sorte qu'à partir de cette date tout au moins aucun dommage subi par ladite Société ne pourrait donner lieu pour elle à réparation.

A cet égard, la Cour constate ce qui suit : la Cour a été déjà appelée, lors de la procédure terminée par l'Arrêt n° 7, à s'occuper, comme d'un point incident et préalable, de la question de la validité des transactions en vertu desquelles la propriété de l'usine de Chorzów est passée du Reich à l'Oberschlesische. Elle est arrivée à la conclusion que les diverses transactions dont il s'agit étaient des actes réels et de bonne foi ; et c'est pourquoi elle a pu considérer l'usine de Chorzów comme appartenant à une société contrôlée par des ressortissants allemands, savoir, l'Oberschlesische. Quel que soit l'effet de cette décision incidente sur le droit de propriété du point de vue du droit civil, il est évident que le fait que l'usine

II.

On approaching this question, it should first be observed that, in estimating the damage caused by an unlawful act, only the value of property, rights and interests which have been affected and the owner of which is the person on whose behalf compensation is claimed, or the damage done to whom is to serve as a means of gauging the reparation claimed, must be taken into account. This principle, which is accepted in the jurisprudence of arbitral tribunals, has the effect, on the one hand, of excluding from the damage to be estimated, injury resulting for third parties from the unlawful act and, on the other hand, of not excluding from the damage the amount of debts and other obligations for which the injured party is responsible. The damage suffered by the Oberschlesische in respect of the Chorzów undertaking is therefore equivalent to the total value—but to that total only—of the property, rights and interests of this Company in that undertaking, without deducting liabilities.

The Polish Government argues in the first place that the Oberschlesische has suffered no loss as a result of its dispossession, because it was not the lawful owner, its right of ownership having never been valid and having in any case ceased to be so in virtue of the judgment given on November 12th, 1927, by the Court of Katowice; so that from that date at all events no damage for which reparation should be made could ensue as regards that Company.

In regard to this the Court observes as follows: the Court has already, in connection with Judgment No. 7, had to consider as an incidental and preliminary point, the question of the validity of the transactions in virtue of which the ownership of the Chorzów factory passed from the Reich to the Oberschlesische. It then arrived at the conclusion that the various transactions in question were genuine and bona fide; that is why it was able to regard the Chorzów factory as belonging to a company controlled by German nationals, namely, the Oberschlesische. Whatever the effect of this incidental decision may be as regards the right of ownership under municipal law, it is evident that the fact that the de Chorzów appartenait à l'Oberschlesische était la condition logique de la décision de la Cour d'après laquelle l'attitude du Gouvernement polonais à l'égard de l'Oberschlesische n'était pas conforme aux articles 6 et suivants de la Convention de Genève. Car, si l'usine n'appartenait pas à l'Oberschlesische, cette Société non seulement n'aurait pu subir aucun dommage du fait de la dépossession, mais elle n'aurait pas même pu être l'objet d'une dépossession contraire à la Convention de Genève ; or, par son Arrêt n° 7, la Cour a constaté que tel était le cas. Il y a lieu de faire observer que dans son Arrêt n° 7 la Cour ne s'est pas bornée à constater l'incompatibilité, avec ladite Convention, de l'application de la loi du 14 juillet 1920 aux propriétés inscrites au registre foncier au nom de sociétés contrôlées par des ressortissants allemands ; mais, en répondant aux objections soulevées par la Partie défenderesse, a dû s'occuper aussi de la question de savoir si cette inscription était le résultat de transactions fictives et frauduleuses ou bien réelles et de bonne foi. C'est la Pologne elle-même qui a allégué contre la deuxième conclusion de la Requête allemande du 15 mai 1925 que l'inscription de l'Oberschlesische au registre foncier, étant basée sur une transaction fictive et frauduleuse, n'était en tout cas pas valable, et qui a ainsi amené la Cour à se prononcer sur ce point.

Or, la requête qui donne lieu au présent arrêt étant basée sur le tort constaté par l'Arrêt n° 7, il n'est pas possible que le droit de l'Oberschlesische à l'usine de Chorzów soit apprécié d'une manière différente pour les besoins dudit Arrêt n° 7 et par rapport à la demande en réparation basée sur cet arrêt. La Cour ayant été d'avis que le droit de l'Oberschlesische sur l'usine de Chorzów justifiait la conclusion que l'attitude du Gouvernement polonais à l'égard de ladite Société n'était pas conforme aux articles 6 et suivants de la Convention de Genève, elle ne saurait se départir de cet avis alors qu'il s'agit actuellement d'apprécier la même situation juridique aux fins de statuer sur la demande en réparation fondée sur l'acte dont la non-conformité à la Convention a été constatée par la Cour.

Le Gouvernement polonais fait maintenant observer qu'après le prononcé de l'Arrêt n° 7, le Tribunal civil de Katowice, qui, Chorzów factory belonged to the Oberschlesische was the necessary condition precedent to the Court's decision that the attitude of the Polish Government in respect of the Oberschlesische was not in conformity with Article 6 and the following articles of the Geneva Convention. For if the factory did not belong to the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke, not only would that Company not have suffered damage as a result of dispossession, but furthermore it could not have been subjected to a dispossession contrary to the Geneva Convention, but the Court established by Judgment No. 7 that such was the case. It should be noted that the Court in Judgment No. 7 has not confined itself to recording the incompatibility with the Geneva Convention of the application of the law of July 14th, 1920, to properties entered in the land register in the name of companies controlled by German nationals, but has, in replying to the objections put forward by the Respondent, also had to deal with the question whether such entry was the outcome of fictitious and fraudulent transactions or of genuine and bona-fide transactions. Poland herself objected in connection with the second submission of the German Application of May 15th, 1925, that the entry of the Oberschlesische in the land register was in any case not valid as it was based on a fictitious and fraudulent transaction and thus caused the Court to deal with this point.

As the application now under consideration is based on the damage established by Judgment No. 7, it is impossible that the Oberschlesische's right to the Chorzów factory should be looked upon differently for the purposes of that judgment and in relation to the claim for reparation based on the same judgment. The Court, having been of opinion that the Oberschlesische's right to the Chorzów factory justified the conclusion that the Polish Government's attitude in respect of that Company was not in conformity with Article 6 and the following articles of the Geneva Convention, must necessarily maintain that opinion when the same situation at law has to be considered for the purpose of giving judgment in regard to the reparation claimed as a result of the act which has been declared by the Court not to be in conformity with the Convention.

The Polish Government now points out that, after Judgment No. 7 had been rendered, the Civil Court of Katowice selon les règles du droit international, est sans doute compétent pour connaître des contestations civiles touchant les immeubles situés dans sa circonscription, a déclaré non valable du point de vue du droit civil, et cela indépendamment des lois polonaises des 14 juillet 1920 et 16 juin 1922, l'inscription de l'Oberschlesische au registre foncier comme propriétaire ; il allègue également que la Cour, en statuant maintenant sur la question de la réparation, devrait tenir compte de ce fait nouveau.

La Cour n'a pas besoin de se prononcer sur la question de savoir quelle aurait été la situation juridique par rapport à la Convention de Genève, si la dépossession avait été précédée d'un jugement régulièrement rendu par une instance compétente. Il suffit de rappeler que la Cour, dans son Arrêt n° 8, a dit que la violation de la Convention de Genève qui consistait dans la dépossession d'un propriétaire protégé par les articles 6 et suivants de la Convention de Genève ne pouvait être effacée par un jugement national qui, après coup, enlèverait la base à l'applicabilité de la Convention, base que la Cour avait admise dans son Arrêt n° 7. Le jugement du Tribunal de Katowice du 12 novembre 1927 — jugement rendu par défaut vis-à-vis de l'Oberschlesische, et le Reich n'ayant pas été partie au procès — ne contient pas, dans le texte qui est connu de la Cour, les motifs pour lesquels l'inscription de la propriété en faveur de l'Oberschlesische est déclarée nulle ; mais il résulte de la requête qui a donné lieu à ce jugement que les motifs invoqués par le Fisc polonais sont essentiellement les mêmes que ceux qui ont été déjà débattus sur la base des conclusions du Gouvernement polonais devant la Cour dans la procédure qui a abouti à l'Arrêt n° 7, et qui, de l'avis de la Cour, n'ont pas suffi pour considérer l'Oberschlesische comme ne tombant pas sous le coup des articles 6 et suivants de la Convention de Genève. Si, considérant que l'usine n'appartenait pas à l'Oberschlesische, la Cour niait l'existence d'un dommage au détriment de cette Société, elle se mettrait en contradiction avec un des motifs sur lesquels elle a fondé son Arrêt n° 7 et elle admettrait qu'un jugement national pût infirmer indirectement un arrêt rendu par une instance internationale, ce qui est impossible. Quel que soit l'effet du jugement du Tribunal de Katowice, du 12 novembre 1927, du point de vue du which, under International Law, doubtless has jurisdiction in disputes at civil law concerning immovable property situated within its district, has declared the entry of the Oberschlesische in the land register as owner not to be valid under the municipal law applicable to the case, and this apart from the Polish laws of July 14th, 1920, and June 16th, 1922; it further contends that the Court, in now giving judgment on the question of damages, should bear in mind this new fact.

There is no need for the Court to consider what would have been the situation at law as regards the Geneva Convention, if dispossession had been preceded by a judgment given by a competent tribunal. It will suffice to recall that the Court in Judgment No. 8 has said that the violation of the Geneva Convention consisting in the dispossession of an owner protected by Article 6 and following of the Geneva Convention could not be rendered non-existent by the judgment of a municipal court which, after dispossession had taken place, nullified the grounds rendering the Convention applicable, which grounds were relied upon by the Court in Judgment No. 7. The judgment of the Tribunal of Katowice given on November 12th, 1927,—which judgment was given by default as regards the Oberschlesische, the Reich not being a Party to the proceedings,—does not contain in the text known to the Court the reasons for which the entry of the property in the name of the Oberschlesische was declared null and void; but it appears from the application upon which this judgment was given that the reasons advanced by the Polish Treasury are essentially the same as those already discussed before the Court on the basis of the Polish Government's submissions in the proceedings leading up to Judgment No. 7, which reasons, in the opinion of the Court, did not suffice to show that the Oberschlesische did not fall within the scope of Article 6 and the following articles of the Geneva Convention. If the Court were to deny the existence of a damage on the ground that the factory did not belong to the Oberschlesische, it would be contradicting one of the reasons on which it based its Judgment No. 7 and it would be attributing to a judgment of a municipal court power indirectly to invalidate a judgment of an international court, which is impossible. Whatever the droit interne; ce jugement ne saurait ni effacer la violation de la Convention de Genève constatée par la Cour dans son Arrêt n° 7, ni soustraire à cet arrêt une des bases sur lesquelles il est fondé.

C'est à l'objection dont la Cour vient de s'occuper, ainsi qu'à la conclusion y relative, formulée par le Gouvernement polonais dans son Contre-Mémoire mais retirée par lui plus tard, que se réfère la conclusion du Gouvernement allemand à l'effet que l'obligation du Gouvernement polonais de payer l'indemnité allouée par la Cour n'est nullement écartée par un jugement rendu ou à rendre par un tribunal interne polonais dans un procès ayant pour objet la question de la propriété de l'usine sise à Chorzów.

Cette conclusion a été maintenue malgré le retrait de ladite conclusion polonaise.

La Cour, étant d'avis que cette dernière conclusion doit être considérée comme valablement retirée, mais que, nonobstant, l'objection à laquelle elle se référerait subsiste, estime qu'il n'y a pas lieu de statuer en termes exprès sur la conclusion y relative formulée par le Gouvernement allemand, autrement qu'en rejetant la thèse du Gouvernement polonais fondée sur le jugement du Tribunal de Katowice.

* * *

Le Gouvernement polonais ne s'est pas borné à contester l'existence d'un dommage en alléguant que l'Oberschlesische ne serait pas ou aurait cessé d'être propriétaire de l'usine de Chorzów; il soutient en outre, à différents points de vue, que les droits que le Reich possède dans l'entreprise, étant passés à la Pologne, ne pourraient entrer en ligne de compte pour l'évaluation du dommage dont dépendra le montant de la réparation due par la Pologne à l'Allemagne.

Admettant, par hypothèse, que le contrat du 24 décembre 1919 ne soit pas nul, mais doive être traité comme un acte juridique réel et valable, le Gouvernement polonais considère que, d'après ledit contrat, c'est le Gouvernement allemand qui effect of the judgment of the Tribunal of Katowice of November 12th, 1927, may be at municipal law, this judgment can neither render in-existent the violation of the Geneva Convention recognized by the Court in Judgment No. 7 to have taken place, nor destroy one of the grounds on which that judgment is based.

It is to the objection dealt with above and to a submission connected therewith which the Polish Government made in its Counter-Case but subsequently withdrew, that the following submission of the German Government relates:

[Translation.]

that the obligation of the Polish Government to pay the indemnity awarded by the Court is in no way set aside by a judgment given or to be given by a Polish municipal court in a suit concerning the question of the ownership of the factory situated at Chorzów.

This submission has been maintained notwithstanding the withdrawal of the Polish submission referred to.

The Court, being of opinion that this latter submission is to be regarded as having been validly withdrawn, but that, nevertheless, the objection to which it referred still subsists, considers that there is no need expressly to deal with the submission in regard thereto made by the German Government, save in order to dismiss the submission of the Polish Government based on the judgment of the Tribunal of Katowice.

* * *

The Polish Government not only disputes the existence of a damage for the reason that the Oberschlesische is not or is no longer owner of the factory at Chorzów, but also contends from various points of view that the rights possessed by the Reich in the undertaking, having passed into the hands of Poland, cannot be included amongst the assets to be taken into account in the calculation of the damage sustained on which calculation will depend the amount of the reparation due by Poland to Germany.

The Polish Government, admitting, for the sake of argument, that the contract of December 24th, 1919, was not null and void, but must be regarded as a genuine and valid legal instrument, holds that, according to that contract, the Ger-est le propriétaire de la totalité des actions de l'Oberschlesische lesquelles représentent l'unique bien de celle-ci, à savoir l'usine. Il en tire la conclusion qu'il s'agit de la transformation d'une entreprise fiscale en une entreprise d'État par actions, et comme il est d'avis que les biens d'une société allemande, dont la totalité des actions appartient au Reich, rentrent dans la catégorie des « biens et propriétés appartenant à l'Empire » qui seraient dévolus à la Pologne en vertu de l'article 256 du Traité de Versailles, il estime qu'il est « difficile de se rendre compte quels furent les droits de l'Oberschlesische auxquels il a été porté atteinte par le Gouvernement polonais ».

Il a développé cette argumentation en insistant notamment sur ce que l'Oberschlesische serait en réalité une société contrôlée par le Gouvernement allemand et non une société contrôlée par des ressortissants allemands, non plus qu'une entreprise privée dans laquelle le Reich posséderait seulement des intérêts prépondérants.

Même s'il n'en était pas ainsi et qu'on voulût, par hypothèse, traiter l'acte du 24 décembre 1919 comme un contrat effectif et réel de vente de l'usine par le Reich à l'Oberschlesische, on ne saurait, selon le Gouvernement polonais, omettre de tenir compte de la circonstance que l'État allemand a conservé toute une série d'intérêts et droits dans l'entreprise. Comme l'indemnité demandée par le Gouvernement allemand est calculée, entre autres, sur la mesure du dommage présumé de l'Oberschlesische, il ne serait pas « fondé logiquement de reconnaître à cette Société des indemnités pour les droits et intérêts qui, dans l'entreprise de Chorzów, appartenaient au Reich ». Il faudrait donc éliminer ces droits des droits de l'Oberschlesische, lesquels, cette élimination effectuée, se réduiraient au seul nudum jus domini.

Le Gouvernement polonais invoque, en outre, qu'en vertu de l'article 256 du Traité de Versailles, les droits et intérêts du Gouvernement allemand dans l'entreprise de Chorzów sont transférés à l'État polonais, au plus tard à partir du moment du transfert à la Pologne de la souveraineté sur la partie de la Haute-Silésie à elle attribuée, et que, à supposer que le contrat du 24 décembre 1919 ait donné à l'État allemand la man Government is the owner of the whole of the shares of the Oberschlesische representing the sole property of that Company, namely the factory. It deduces from this that the transaction consists in the transformation of an ordinary State enterprise into a State enterprise with a share capital, and as it holds that the property of a German company, the whole of the shares of which belong to the Reich, falls within the category of "property and possessions belonging to the Empire" acquired by Poland under Article 256 of the Treaty of Versailles, it considers that it is "difficult to see what the rights of the Oberschlesische were which had been infringed by the Polish Government".

In developing this argument, it has laid special stress on the allegation that the Oberschlesische is in reality a company controlled by the German Government and not a company controlled by German nationals, or even a private enterprise in which the Reich merely possesses preponderating interests.

Even if this should not be the case and if the instrument of December 24th, 1919, were, for argument's sake, to be regarded as an effective and genuine contract for the sale of the factory by the Reich to the Oberschlesische, the Polish Government contends that it is impossible not to take into account the circumstance that the German State retained a whole complex of rights and interests in the undertaking. As the indemnity claimed by the German Government is calculated, amongst other things, on the extent of the damage presumed to have been sustained by the Oberschlesische, it would not be "logically correct to award to that Company compensation for rights and interests in the Chorzów undertaking which belonged to the Reich". These rights should therefore be eliminated from the rights of the Oberschlesische, which, if this were done, would amount simply to a nudum jus domini.

The Polish Government also alleges that, under Article 256 of the Treaty of Versailles, the rights and interests of the German Government in the Chorzów undertaking are transferred to the Polish State, at latest as from the date of the transfer to Poland of sovereignty over the part of Upper Silesia allotted to her, and that, on the supposition that the contract of December 24th, 1919, gave the German State totalité des actions de l'Oberschlesische afin de garantir au Reich ses droits et de lui permettre d'en faire usage, ces actions, à la possession desquelles sont attachés les droits du Reich, doivent être livrées à la Pologne. Si l'acte du 24 décembre 1919 doit être traité comme réel et effectif, le Gouvernement polonais estime que pour déterminer l'indemnité éventuellement due à l'Oberschlesische, il faudrait d'abord éliminer les droits du Reich ; et comme il est d'avis que cette élimination ne peut être réalisée que sous une seule forme, savoir la livraison par l'État allemand à la Pologne des actions de l'Oberschlesische d'une valeur nominale de 110 millions de marks, le Gouvernement polonais, à ce sujet, a formulé, dans son Contre-Mémoire, sous le n° A 4, une conclusion ainsi conçue :

« En tout cas, dire et juger que le Gouvernement allemand doit, en premier lieu, livrer au Gouvernement polonais la totalité des actions de la Société anonyme Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke de la valeur nominale de 110.000.000 de marks dont il dispose en vertu du contrat du 24 décembre 1919. »

A l'égard de cette conclusion, le Gouvernement allemand a, dans sa Réplique, fait les observations suivantes :

« D'abord, le Gouvernement polonais n'invoque aucune disposition sur laquelle peut être basée la compétence de la Cour pour connaître de cette question, qui résulte de l'interprétation de l'article 256. Dans les procédures antérieures, le Gouvernement polonais avait fortement souligné que l'interprétation de cet article ne serait pas même admissible en tant que question incidente et préalable pour l'interprétation des articles 6 à 22 de la Convention de Genève.

Le Gouvernement allemand ignore si le Gouvernement polonais pense au traité général d'arbitrage signé à Locarno et d'après lequel toute contestation d'ordre juridique doit être soumise à l'arbitrage, et, faute d'entente sur un tribunal arbitral spécial, à la Cour permanente de Justice internationale. Mais quoi qu'il en soit, le Gouvernement allemand, animé du désir d'assurer au Traité de Locarno toute l'étendue qu'il comporte sans s'arrêter aux questions des formes y prévues, et de voir vidée définitivement l'affaire de Chorzów, s'abstient d'entreprendre un examen détaillé sur les questions d'incompétence ou de prématurité même si ces questions entraînent en considération pour la demande reconventionnelle que le Gouvernement allemand veut voir dans la conclusion A 4 du Contre-Mémoire. Il se borne à rappeler l'article 40, alinéa 2, chiffre 4, du the whole of the shares of the Oberschlesische, as guarantee for its rights, and to enable it to exercise those rights, these shares, on the possession of which depend the rights of the Reich, should be transferred to Poland. If the contract of December 24th, 1919, is to be regarded as genuine and effective, the Polish Government holds that, in order to determine the indemnity which may be due to the Oberschlesische, the rights of the Reich must first be eliminated; and as it is of opinion that this can only be done in one way, namely, by the handing over by Germany to Poland of the shares of the Oberschlesische to the nominal value of 110 million marks, the Polish Government has in regard to this point made the following submission (No. A 4) in its Counter-Case:

[Translation.]

"In any case, it is submitted that the German Government should, in the first place, hand over to the Polish Government the whole of the shares of the Oberschlesische Company of the nominal value of 110,000,000 marks, which are in its hands under the contract of December 24th, 1919."

The German Government in its Reply made the following observations in regard to this submission:

[Translation.]

"In the first place, the Polish Government cites no provision on which it is possible to base the Court's jurisdiction to take cognizance of this question, which arises from the interpretation of Article 256. In the previous proceedings, the Polish Government strongly maintained that the interpretation of this article would not be admissible even as a question incidental and preliminary to the interpretation of Articles 6 to 22 of the Geneva Convention.

The German Government does not know whether the Polish Government has in mind the general treaty of arbitration signed at Locarno, according to which any dispute of a legal nature must be submitted to arbitration, and, unless some special arbitral tribunal is agreed upon, to the Permanent Court of International Justice. But, however that may be, the German Government, being animated by a wish to ensure that full scope shall be given to the Treaty of Locarno, without pausing to debate questions as to the procedure therein provided for, and also to see the Chorzów case settled once and for all, abstains from undertaking a detailed examination of the questions of lack of jurisdiction or prematurity, even though these questions might enter into account in connection with the counter-claim which, in the German Government's Règlement de la Cour, en vertu duquel la Cour peut statuer sur des demandes reconventionnelles pour autant que ces dernières rentrent dans la compétence de la Cour. Entre l'Allemagne et la Pologne, ce cas est réalisé pour toute question de droit litigieuse entre elles. On pourrait uniquement discuter le point de savoir si, pour le jeu dudit article du Règlement, aussi les conditions de forme et de délais doivent être remplies, ou s'il suffit que les conditions matérielles soient remplies. Mais ce point peut rester indécié puisque le Gouvernement allemand accepte la juridiction de la Cour pour la question soulevée par le Contre-Mémoire. Lors des négociations relatives à l'affaire de Chorzów, le plénipotentiaire allemand avait déjà proposé au plénipotentiaire polonais de soumettre cette question à la Cour.»

Dans les débats ultérieurs, le Gouvernement polonais ne s'est pas prononcé sur la question de la compétence de la Cour. On ne saurait donc dire s'il accepte la manière de voir du Gouvernement allemand selon laquelle cette compétence pourrait être déduite de la Convention entre l'Allemagne et la Pologne, paraphée à Locarno le 16 octobre 1925, ou s'il revendique la compétence en vertu d'un autre titre. En tout cas, il est constant qu'il n'a pas retiré sa demande et que, partant, il désire que la Cour statue sur la conclusion en question. D'autre part, le Gouvernement allemand, tout en fondant la compétence sur la Convention de Locarno, paraît avant tout désireux que la Cour statue sur cette conclusion au cours de la présente procédure.

Il y a donc accord entre les Parties pour soumettre à la décision de la Cour la question soulevée par ladite conclusion. Comme la Cour l'a dit dans son Arrêt n° 12, relatif à certains droits de minorités en Haute-Silésie, l'article 36 du Statut consacre le principe suivant lequel la juridiction de la Cour dépend de la volonté des Parties; la Cour est donc toujours compétente du moment où celles-ci acceptent sa juridiction, car il n'y a aucun différend que les États admis à ester devant la Cour ne puissent lui soumettre, sauf dans les cas exceptionnels où le différend serait de la compétence exclusive contention, is formulated in submission A 4 of the Counter-Case. It will simply refer to Article 40, paragraph 2, No. 4, of the Rules of Court, according to which the Court may give judgment on counter-claims in so far as the latter come within its jurisdiction. As between Germany and Poland this applies in respect of any question of law in dispute between them. The only point which might be disputed is the question whether, for the application of this article of the Rules, the conditions respecting forms and times must also be fulfilled, or whether it is enough that the material conditions should be fulfilled. This point, however, may be left open, since the German Government accepts the jurisdiction of the Court in regard to the question raised in the Counter-Case. In the course of the negotiations in regard to the Chorzów case, the German plenipotentiary had already proposed to the Polish plenipotentiary that this question should be referred to the Court."

In the subsequent proceedings, the Polish Government has not made any statement in regard to the question of the Court's jurisdiction. It is impossible, therefore, to say whether it accepts the view of the German Government according to which it may be inferred that such jurisdiction exists under the Convention between Germany and Poland initialled at Locarno on October 16th, 1925, or whether it contends that the Court has jurisdiction on some other basis. In any case, it is certain that it has not withdrawn its claim and that, consequently, it wishes the Court to give judgment on the submission in question. For its part the German Government, though basing the Court's jurisdiction on the Locarno Convention, seems above all anxious that the Court should give judgment on this submission in the course of the present proceedings.

The Parties therefore are agreed in submitting to the Court for decision the question raised by this submission. As the Court has said in Judgment No. 12, concerning certain rights of minorities in Upper Silesia, Article 36 of the Statute establishes the principle that the Court's jurisdiction depends on the will of the Parties; the Court therefore is always competent once the latter have accepted its jurisdiction, since there is no dispute which States entitled to appear before the Court cannot refer to it, save in exceptional cases where a dispute may be within the exclusive jurisdiction of some other body.

d'un autre organe. Or, tel n'est pas le cas en ce qui concerne la conclusion en question.

La Cour constate, en outre, que la demande reconventionnelle est basée sur l'article 256 du Traité de Versailles, qui constitue le fondement de l'exception soulevée par la Partie défenderesse, et que, partant, elle se trouve en rapport de connexité juridique avec la demande principale.

D'autre part, l'article 40 du Règlement de la Cour que le Gouvernement allemand a invoqué, stipule, entre autres, que les contre-mémoires comprennent :

« 4° des conclusions fondées sur les faits énoncés. Ces conclusions peuvent comprendre des demandes reconventionnelles, pour autant que ces dernières rentrent dans la compétence de la Cour. »

La demande ayant été formulée dans le Contre-Mémoire, les conditions de forme exigées par le Règlement pour des demandes reconventionnelles se trouvent donc réalisées en l'espèce aussi bien que les conditions de fond.

En ce qui concerne les rapports qui existent entre les demandes allemandes et la conclusion polonaise dont il s'agit, la Cour croit utile d'ajouter ce qui suit : Bien qu'étant formellement une demande reconventionnelle, car elle tend à condamner la Partie demanderesse à une prestation envers la défenderesse — en réalité, si l'on tient compte des motifs sur lesquels elle se fonde, la conclusion contient un moyen opposé à la demande de l'Allemagne tendant à obtenir de la Pologne une indemnité dont le montant serait calculé, entre autres, sur la base du dommage subi par l'Oberschlesische. Il s'agit, en effet, d'éliminer du montant de cette indemnité ce qui correspondrait à la valeur des droits et intérêts que le Reich possédait dans l'entreprise en vertu du contrat du 24 décembre 1919, valeur qui, selon le Gouvernement polonais, ne constitue pas une perte pour l'Oberschlesische, parce que ces droits et intérêts appartiendraient au Gouvernement polonais lui-même en vertu de l'article 256 du Traité de Versailles. La Cour ayant, par son Arrêt n° 8, admis sa compétence en vertu de l'article 23 de la Convention de Genève pour connaître de la réparation due du chef du dommage causé aux deux Sociétés par l'attitude du Gouvernement polonais envers elles, elle ne saurait se soustraire à l'examen des objections qui ont pour

But this is not the case as regards the submission in question.

The Court also observes that the counter-claim is based on Article 256 of the Versailles Treaty, which article is the basis of the objection raised by the Respondent, and that, consequently, it is juridically connected with the principal claim.

Again, Article 40 of the Rules of Court, which has been cited by the German Government, lays down amongst other things that counter-cases shall contain:

“4° conclusions based on the facts stated; these conclusions may include counter-claims, in so far as the latter come within the jurisdiction of the Court.”

The claim having been formulated in the Counter-Case, the formal conditions required by the Rules as regards counter-claims are fulfilled in this case, as well as the material conditions.

As regards the relationship existing between the German claims and the Polish submission in question, the Court thinks it well to add the following: Although in form a counter-claim, since its object is to obtain judgment against the Applicant for the delivery of certain things to the Respondent—in reality, having regard to the arguments on which it is based, the submission constitutes an objection to the German claim designed to obtain from Poland an indemnity the amount of which is to be calculated, amongst other things, on the basis of the damage suffered by the Oberschlesische. It is in fact a question of eliminating from the amount of this indemnity a sum corresponding to the value of the rights and interests which the Reich possessed in the enterprise under the contract of December 24th, 1919, which value, according to the Polish Government, does not constitute a loss to the Oberschlesische because these rights and interests are said to belong to the Polish Government itself under Article 256 of the Treaty of Versailles. The Court, having by Judgment No. 8 accepted jurisdiction, under Article 23 of the Geneva Convention, to decide as to the reparation due for the damage caused to the two Companies by the attitude of the Polish Government towards them, cannot dispense with an examination of the objections the but de démontrer soit qu'un tel dommage n'existe pas, soit qu'il n'a pas l'étendue que prétend la Partie demanderesse. Cela étant, il semble naturel de reconnaître aussi, en vertu du même titre, la compétence pour statuer sur les moyens allégués par le Gouvernement polonais afin d'obtenir que l'indemnité soit limitée au montant correspondant au dommage effectivement subi.

*

Passant maintenant à l'examen des objections susdites du Gouvernement polonais, la Cour estime utile, tout d'abord, de préciser quelle est, selon son avis, la nature des droits que le Gouvernement allemand possède à l'égard de l'entreprise de Chorzów en vertu du contrat du 24 décembre 1919, dont le contenu essentiel se trouve exposé plus haut. Renvoyant à cet exposé, la Cour constate que c'est la Treuhand et non le Reich allemand qui, en droit, est propriétaire des actions de l'Oberschlesische. Le Reich est créancier de la Treuhand et a, en cette qualité, un droit de gage sur les actions. Il a aussi, à côté de ce droit de gage, tous les droits découlant de la possession des actions, y compris le droit à la plus grande partie du prix en cas de vente de celles-ci. Ce droit, qui peut être considéré comme prépondérant, est, au point de vue économique, très proche de la propriété, mais il n'est pas la propriété; et on ne peut, même en se plaçant au point de vue économique, faire abstraction des droits de la Treuhand.

Telle étant la situation en droit, vouloir maintenant identifier l'Oberschlesische avec le Reich, ce qui aurait pour conséquence que la propriété de l'usine serait dévolue à la Pologne en vertu de l'article 256 du Traité de Versailles, serait se mettre en opposition avec la manière de voir adoptée par la Cour dans son Arrêt n° 7 et maintenue ci-dessus, manière de voir qui est le fondement de la décision selon laquelle l'attitude de la Pologne, aussi bien vis-à-vis de l'Oberschlesische que vis-à-vis de la Bayerische, n'était pas conforme aux dispositions de la Convention de Genève.

Il en est de même en ce qui concerne la thèse suivant laquelle l'Oberschlesische serait une société contrôlée non par des ressortissants allemands, mais par le Reich. Il est vrai, comme l'a rappelé le Gouvernement polonais, que la Cour, dans aim of which is to show either that no such damage exists or that it is not so great as it is alleged to be by the Applicant. This being so, it seems natural on the same grounds also to accept jurisdiction to pass judgment on the submissions which Poland has made with a view to obtaining the reduction of the indemnity to an amount corresponding to the damage actually sustained.

*

Proceeding now to consider the above-mentioned objections of the Polish Government, the Court thinks it well first of all to define what is, in its opinion, the nature of the rights which the German Government possesses in respect of the Chorzów undertaking under the contract of December 24th, 1919, the main features of which have been described above. Referring to this description, the Court points out that the Treuhand, and not the Reich, is legally the owner of the shares of the Oberschlesische. The Reich is the creditor of the Treuhand and in this capacity has a lien on the shares. It also has, besides this lien, all rights resulting from possession of the shares, including the right to the greater portion of the price in the event of the sale of these shares. This right, which may be regarded as preponderating, is, from an economic standpoint, very closely akin to ownership, but it is not ownership; and even from an economic point of view it is impossible to disregard the rights of the Treuhand.

Such being the situation at law, to endeavour now to identify the Oberschlesische with the Reich—the effect of which would be that the ownership of the factory would have passed to Poland under Article 256 of the Treaty of Versailles—would be in conflict with the view taken by the Court in Judgment No. 7 and reaffirmed above, on which view is based the decision to the effect that Poland's attitude as regards both the Oberschlesische and Bayerische was not in conformity with the provisions of the Geneva Convention.

The same applies in regard to the contention that the Oberschlesische is a company controlled not by German nationals but by the Reich. It is true, as the Polish Government has recalled, that the Court in Judgment No. 7 has declared son Arrêt n° 7, a déclaré ne pas avoir besoin d'examiner la question de savoir si l'Oberschlesische, vu les droits que le contrat du 24 décembre 1919 confère au Reich, doit être considérée comme contrôlée par ce dernier et, au cas où cette hypothèse se trouverait réalisée, quelles conséquences pourraient en découler pour l'application de la Convention de Genève. Mais la raison en était que la Cour était d'avis que le Gouvernement polonais n'avait pas soulevé cette question et que, abstraction faite de sa thèse relative à la fictivité des actes du 24 décembre 1919, il ne paraissait pas avoir contesté que ladite Société fût contrôlée par des ressortissants allemands.

En tout cas, il est clair que c'est seulement en estimant que ladite Société est, au point de vue de l'article 6 de la Convention de Genève, à considérer comme une société contrôlée par des ressortissants allemands, que la Cour a pu constater que l'attitude du Gouvernement polonais vis-à-vis de cette Société n'était pas conforme aux dispositions des articles 6 et suivants de ladite Convention.

Même si la question n'était pas préjugée et si la Cour était libre de l'examiner à nouveau maintenant, elle devrait arriver à la conclusion que l'Oberschlesische était contrôlée par la Bayerische. Car, vu que, d'après le contrat du 24 décembre 1919, le Reich s'était déclaré d'accord pour maintenir la direction de l'entreprise de Chorzów entre les mains de la Bayerische aux conditions antérieurement convenues avec le Reich, et que, par le contrat ultérieur, conclu entre la Bayerische et la Treuhand à la date du 25 novembre 1920, il avait été stipulé qu'à cette fin la Bayerische désignerait au moins deux membres de sa propre direction comme membres de la direction de l'Oberschlesische, c'est, de l'avis de la Cour, la Bayerische plutôt que le Reich qui a le contrôle sur l'Oberschlesische.

La Cour conclut donc que n'est pas fondée la thèse polonaise suivant laquelle l'Oberschlesische n'a pas subi de dommage parce que cette Société doit être considérée comme s'identifiant avec le Reich, et suivant laquelle les biens dont ladite Société a été privée par l'acte du Gouvernement polonais sont acquis à la Pologne en vertu de l'article 256 du Traité de Versailles.

that there was no need for it to consider the question whether the Oberschlesische, having regard to the rights conferred by the contract of December 24th, 1919, on the Reich, should be considered as controlled by the Reich, and, should this be the case, what consequences would ensue as regards the application of the Geneva Convention. But the reason for this was that the Court held that the Polish Government had not raised this question, and that, apart from its contention as to the fictitious character of the instruments of December 24th, 1919, that Government did not seem to have disputed that the Company was controlled by German nationals.

At all events, it is clear that only by regarding the said Company as a company controlled by German nationals within the meaning of Article 6 of the Geneva Convention, was the Court able to declare that the attitude of the Polish Government towards that Company was not in conformity with the terms of Article 6 and the following articles of the said Convention.

Even if the question were still open and the Court were now free once more to consider it, it would be bound to conclude that the Oberschlesische was controlled by the Bayerische. For seeing that, under the contract of December 24th, 1919, the Reich had declared that it agreed to leave the management of the Chorzów undertaking in the hands of the Bayerische, under the conditions previously settled with the Reich, and that, under the subsequent contract concluded on November 25th, 1920, between the Bayerische and the Treuhänder, it had been stipulated that for this purpose the Bayerische was to appoint at least two members of its own board as members of the board of the Oberschlesische, the Court considers that the Bayerische, rather than the Reich, controls the Oberschlesische.

The Court, therefore, arrives at the conclusion that the Polish contention to the effect that the Oberschlesische has not suffered damage, because that Company is to be regarded as identifiable with the Reich, and that the property of which the said Company was deprived by the action of the Polish Government has passed to Poland under Article 256 of the Treaty of Versailles, is not well founded.

*

A titre subsidiaire, le Gouvernement polonais a allégué que, même si les droits que le Reich possède d'après le contrat du 24 décembre 1919 dans l'entreprise de Chorzów ne devaient pas être considérés comme comportant la propriété des actions de l'Oberschlesische, la valeur de ces droits, qui tomberaient sous le coup de l'article 256 du Traité de Versailles, devrait néanmoins être déduite de l'indemnité réclamée du chef de l'Oberschlesische. La Cour ne saurait davantage accepter cette thèse.

A ce sujet, il y a lieu de remarquer que l'article 256 pose deux conditions, savoir qu'il s'agisse de « biens et propriétés » appartenant à l'Empire ou aux États allemands, et que ces « biens et propriétés » soient « situés » dans un territoire allemand cédé en vertu du Traité.

Il s'agit donc de savoir, entre autres, si les droits du Reich selon le contrat du 24 décembre 1919 sont « situés » dans la partie de la Haute-Silésie cédée à la Pologne. En tant que créance contre la Treuhand, il est clair que cette créance ne peut être considérée comme située dans la Haute-Silésie polonaise, la Treuhand étant une société dont le siège social est en Allemagne et dont les parts appartiennent à des sociétés qui ont également leur siège en Allemagne, et sur lesquelles le contrôle appartient sans conteste à des ressortissants allemands. Le fait que cette créance est garantie par un droit de gage sur les actions, dont les bénéfices, de même que le prix obtenu en cas de vente, serviront à amortir la créance, ne peut, de l'avis de la Cour, justifier l'opinion suivant laquelle les droits du Reich seraient situés en Haute-Silésie polonaise où se trouve l'usine. Ce ne sont que des droits sur les actions, lesquels, si on ne veut pas les considérer comme situés là où se trouvent les actions, doivent être regardés comme étant localisés au siège de la société, siège qui, en l'espèce, est à Berlin et non en Haute-Silésie polonaise. Le transfert du siège de l'Oberschlesische de Chorzów à Berlin après l'entrée en vigueur du Traité de Versailles ne peut être considéré comme illégal et nul ; les motifs pour lesquels la Cour, dans son Arrêt n° 7,

*

Alternatively, the Polish Government has contended that, even if the rights possessed by the Reich under the contract of December 24th, 1919, in the Chorzów undertaking are not to be considered as involving ownership of the shares of the Oberschlesische, the value of these rights, which fall within the scope of Article 256 of the Treaty of Versailles, should nevertheless be deducted from the indemnity claimed as regards the Oberschlesische. The Court is likewise unable to admit this contention.

In this respect, it should be noted that Article 256 contains two conditions, namely, that the "property and possessions" with which it deals must belong to the Empire or to the German States, and that such "property and possessions" must be "situated" in German territory ceded under the Treaty.

It must therefore be ascertained, amongst other things, whether the rights of the Reich under the contract of December 24th, 1919, are "situated" in the part of Upper Silesia ceded to Poland. In so far as these rights consist in a claim against the Treuhand, it is clear that this claim cannot be regarded as situated in Polish Upper Silesia, since the Treuhand is a company whose registered office is in Germany and whose shares belong to companies which also have their registered office in Germany and which are undeniably controlled by German nationals. The fact that this claim is guaranteed by a lien on the shares on which the profit, as well as the price obtained in the event of sale, is to be devoted to the payment of this claim, does not, in the Court's opinion, justify the view that the rights of the Reich are situated in Polish Upper Silesia where the factory is. These are only rights in respect of the shares; and these rights, if not regarded as situated where the shares are, must be considered as localized at the registered office of the Company which in this case is at Berlin and not in Polish Upper Silesia. The transfer of the registered office of the Oberschlesische from Chorzów to Berlin after the coming into force of the Treaty of Versailles cannot be regarded as illegal and null:

a considéré que des aliénations de biens publics sis dans la zone soumise au plébiscite n'étaient pas interdites par ledit Traité, s'appliquent à plus forte raison à l'acte par lequel une société anonyme a transféré son siège de cette zone en Allemagne.

C'est encore en vain que le Gouvernement polonais invoque le paragraphe 10 de l'annexe aux articles 297 et 298 du Traité de Versailles, paragraphe qui établit le devoir pour l'Allemagne de remettre « à chaque Puissance alliée ou associée tous les contrats, certificats, actes et autres titres de propriété se trouvant entre les mains de ses ressortissants et se rapportant à des biens, droits et intérêts situés sur le territoire de ladite Puissance alliée ou associée, y compris les actions, obligations ou autres valeurs mobilières de toutes sociétés autorisées par la législation de cette Puissance ». Même abstraction faite de la circonstance que l'Oberschlesische a été constituée sous le régime des lois allemandes et n'a pas été « autorisée » par la législation polonaise, ladite disposition est étrangère à l'article 256 et se réfère seulement aux articles en annexe auxquels elle se trouve.

*

L'exposé qui précède ayant établi que, selon l'opinion de la Cour, l'article 256 du Traité de Versailles n'est pas applicable aux droits que le Reich possède en vertu du contrat du 24 décembre 1919, il s'ensuit qu'il faut rejeter la thèse polonaise basée sur l'applicabilité dudit article, et selon laquelle il est nécessaire d'éliminer du montant de l'indemnité à allouer la valeur de ces droits. Il en est de même en ce qui concerne la conclusion du Gouvernement polonais demandant la remise à la Pologne de la totalité des actions de l'Oberschlesische, conclusion dont le but exprès est d'aboutir à une telle élimination. Car cette conclusion, elle aussi, a pour seul fondement la prétendue applicabilité dudit article du Traité de Versailles.

the reasons for which the Court, in Judgment No. 7, held that alienations of public property situated in the plebiscite zone were not prohibited by that Treaty, apply a fortiori in respect of the transfer by a company of its registered office from this zone to Germany.

It is also in vain that the Polish Government cites paragraph 10 of the Annex to Articles 297 and 298 of the Treaty of Versailles, which paragraph lays down that Germany shall deliver "to each Allied or Associated Power all securities, certificates, deeds, or other documents of title held by its nationals and relating to property, rights or interests situated in the territory of that Allied or Associated Power, including any shares, stock, debentures, debenture stock, or other obligations of any company incorporated in accordance with the laws of that Power". Even disregarding the circumstances that the Oberschlesische was constituted under German law and has not been "incorporated" in accordance with the laws of Poland, the clause quoted has nothing to do with Article 256 and relates only to the articles to which it is annexed.

*

Since, as has been shown above, Article 256 of the Treaty of Versailles is not, in the Court's opinion, applicable to the rights possessed by the Reich under the contract of December 24th, 1919, it follows that the Polish Government's contention—based on the applicability of that article—to the effect that the value of these rights should be eliminated from the amount of the indemnity to be awarded, must be rejected. The same is true as regards the Polish Government's submission that the whole of the shares of the Oberschlesische should be handed over to Poland, a submission the aim of which is precisely to bring about the elimination referred to. For this submission is likewise based solely on the alleged applicability of the same article of the Treaty of Versailles.

* * *

A titre subsidiaire, également au sujet de la demande d'une indemnité fondée sur le préjudice subi par l'Oberschlesische, le Gouvernement polonais a prié la Cour de « surseoir provisoirement » sur ladite demande en indemnité.

Les raisons pour lesquelles il demande ce sursis paraissent être les suivantes :

Le Gouvernement polonais a notifié à la Commission des Réparations la prise de possession, en vertu de l'article 256 du Traité de Versailles, de l'usine de Chorzów, en la portant sur la liste des biens d'État allemands acquis conformément audit article. Il appartient à la Commission des Réparations de fixer la valeur de ces biens, valeur qui doit être payée à la Commission par l'État cessionnaire pour être portée au crédit de l'Allemagne à valoir sur les sommes dues au titre des réparations. Or, après que la Cour eut rendu son Arrêt n° 7, le Gouvernement allemand avait demandé à la Commission des Réparations de radier l'usine de Chorzów de la liste des biens transférés à la Pologne, sans que, cependant, la Commission eût encore pris de décision à cet égard. La question de savoir si la Pologne doit être débitée de la valeur de l'usine reste donc en suspens, et le Gouvernement polonais est d'avis que, tant que cette question n'est pas tranchée et que la Commission des Réparations n'a pas radié l'usine de Chorzów de la liste, le Gouvernement polonais ne peut être contraint à un paiement en faveur de l'Oberschlesische.

A côté de ces considérations, le Gouvernement polonais invoque encore la Convention d'armistice et l'article 248 du Traité de Versailles. Ce dernier établit que, « sous réserve des dérogations qui pourraient être accordées par la Commission des Réparations, un privilège de premier rang est établi sur tous les biens et ressources de l'Empire et des États allemands, pour le règlement des réparations et autres charges résultant du présent Traité, ou de tous autres traités et conventions complémentaires, ou des arrangements conclus entre l'Allemagne et les Puissances alliées ou associées pendant l'armistice et ses prorogations ». Le Gouvernement polonais constate que, dans son Arrêt n° 7, la Cour a jugé que la Pologne, n'ayant pas

* * *

Alternatively, and also in regard to the claim for an indemnity based on the damage sustained by the Oberschlesische, the Polish Government has asked the Court "provisionally to suspend" its decision on the claim for indemnity.

The reasons for which it seeks this suspension appear to be as follows:

The Polish Government has notified the Reparation Commission of the taking over of the Chorzów factory, under Article 256 of the Treaty of Versailles, by entering it on the list of German State property acquired under that article. It is for the Reparation Commission to fix the value of such property, which value is to be paid to the Commission by the succession State and credited to Germany on account of the sums due for reparations. Now after the Court had delivered Judgment No. 7, the German Government asked the Reparation Commission to strike out the Chorzów factory from the list of property transferred to Poland, but the Commission has not yet taken any decision in regard to this. The question whether Poland is to be debited with the value of the factory therefore remains undecided, and the Polish Government considers that, until this question has been decided and the Reparation Commission has struck the Chorzów factory off the list, it—the Polish Government—cannot be compelled to make a payment in favour of the Oberschlesische.

In addition to these considerations, the Polish Government also cites the Armistice Convention and Article 248 of the Treaty of Versailles. The latter lays down that, "subject to such exceptions as the Reparation Commission may approve, a first charge upon all the assets and revenues of the German Empire and its constituent States shall be the cost of reparation and all other costs arising under the present Treaty or any treaties or agreements supplementary thereto or under arrangements concluded between Germany and the Allied and Associated Powers during the armistice or its extensions". The Polish Government says that in Judgment No. 7 the Court has decided first that Poland, not having been a party pris part à la Convention d'armistice, n'a pas le droit de se prévaloir des stipulations de celle-ci pour considérer nulle et non avenue l'aliénation de l'usine, et qu'elle ne peut se réclamer individuellement, dans le même but, de l'article 248 du Traité de Versailles. Mais il semble soutenir que, vu le droit que les États signataires de la Convention d'armistice peuvent avoir à s'opposer à la vente de l'usine, et vu le droit de la Commission des Réparations à veiller sur l'acquittement de la dette de réparation en général, et vu spécialement le droit qui lui est réservé par l'article 248, l'obligation de la Pologne de payer à l'Allemagne une indemnité en faveur de l'Oberschlesische dépend d'une approbation préalable desdits États ainsi que de la Commission des Réparations.

De son côté, le Gouvernement allemand, tout en contestant le bien-fondé desdites objections du Gouvernement polonais, a déclaré admettre la compétence de la Cour pour statuer sur celles-ci « en tant que questions préalables, pour les questions de la forme, du montant et des modes du paiement des indemnités qu'il réclame, questions pour lesquelles la Cour a déjà affirmé sa compétence ». Il a prié la Cour de rejeter la conclusion subsidiaire polonaise et de dire et juger :

« que le Gouvernement polonais n'est pas autorisé à refuser le paiement au Gouvernement allemand des indemnités en raison d'arguments tirés de l'article 256 ou en raison d'égards vis-à-vis de la Commission des Réparations ou d'autres tierces personnes ».

La Cour est d'avis que sa compétence pour statuer sur la conclusion polonaise en question n'est pas douteuse, mais que cette conclusion doit être rejetée comme non fondée.

A ce sujet, il y a lieu de remarquer, tout d'abord, que les faits allégués par la Pologne ne peuvent empêcher la Cour, saisie maintenant d'une demande en indemnité sur la base de son Arrêt n° 7, de statuer sur cette demande en ce qui concerne la fixation d'une indemnité correspondant, entre autres, au montant du dommage subi par l'Oberschlesische, dommage dont l'élément le plus important est représenté par la perte de l'usine. Car, en constatant par son Arrêt n° 7 que l'attitude du Gouvernement polonais vis-à-vis de l'Oberschle-to the Armistice Convention, is not entitled to avail itself of the terms of that instrument in order to establish that the alienation of the factory is null and void, and secondly, that that country cannot, on her own account, cite Article 248 of the Treaty of Versailles for the same purpose. It would seem, however, that the said Government contends that, in view of the right which the States signatory to the Armistice Convention may have to oppose the sale of the factory and in view of the right of the Reparation Commission to ensure the discharge of reparation debts in general and especially in view of the right reserved to it under Article 248, Poland's obligation to pay to Germany an indemnity in favour of the Oberschlesische is dependent on the previous approval of the said States and of the Reparation Commission.

The German Government, for its part, whilst disputing the justice of these objections of the Polish Government, has accepted the jurisdiction of the Court to decide upon them "as preliminary points in regard to the questions of form, amount and methods of payment of the indemnities claimed by it, questions with which the Court has already declared itself competent to deal". It has asked the Court to dismiss the Polish alternative submission and to decide:

"that the Polish Government is not justified in refusing to pay compensation to the German Government on the basis of arguments drawn from Article 256 or for motives of respect for the rights of the Reparation Commission or other third parties".

The Court considers that there is no doubt as to its jurisdiction to pass judgment upon the Polish submission in question, but that this submission must be rejected as not well-founded.

In this respect, it should be observed in the first place that the facts cited by Poland cannot prevent the Court, which now has before it a claim for indemnity based on its Judgment No. 7, from passing judgment upon this claim in so far as concerns the fixing of an indemnity corresponding, amongst other things, to the amount of the damage sustained by the Oberschlesische, of which damage the most important element is represented by the loss of the factory. For the Court, when it declared in Judgment No. 7 that the attitude sische n'était pas conforme aux dispositions des articles 6 et suivants de la Convention de Genève, — attitude qui consistait à considérer et à traiter ladite usine comme acquise par la Pologne en vertu de l'article 256 du Traité de Versailles, — la Cour a écarté, avec effet entre les Parties, l'applicabilité dudit article à l'usine de Chorzów. D'autre part, il ressort des documents soumis à la Cour par les Parties que la Commission des Réparations ne revendique pas la compétence pour statuer sur la question de savoir si tel ou tel bien est, oui ou non, acquis par un État cessionnaire en vertu dudit article. Elle accepte à ce sujet la solution que la question a pu recevoir, soit par les moyens dont disposent les intéressés — négociations diplomatiques, arbitrages, etc. — soit par un acte unilatéral de l'État cessionnaire lui-même. Et si maintenant les Parties sont d'accord sur ce que la Pologne doit conserver l'usine, cela n'est pas à cause de l'article 256 du Traité de Versailles, mais en raison de l'impossibilité pratique de restituer l'usine. Il ne semble pas douteux, dans ces circonstances, que la Pologne ne court aucun risque de devoir payer à nouveau la valeur de l'usine à la Commission des Réparations, si, conformément à la demande de l'Allemagne, elle paie à cet État la valeur de l'usine.

En ce qui concerne la Convention d'armistice et l'article 248 du Traité de Versailles, la question se pose autrement. La Convention d'armistice semble avoir été invoquée dans le but de réserver la possibilité de faire invalider la vente de l'usine à l'Oberschlesische par une action que les États signataires de ladite Convention intenteraient à cet effet. Comme, cependant, la Cour, dans son Arrêt n° 7, a estimé que la Pologne ne peut pas se prévaloir des dispositions de cette Convention, à laquelle elle n'est pas partie, la Cour ne saurait, sans inconséquence, lui reconnaître le droit d'invoquer la Convention aux fins d'obtenir un sursis à la réparation du dommage qu'elle avait causé par une attitude non conforme aux obligations résultant pour elle de la Convention de Genève.

Comme il a déjà été dit, la Cour, dans son Arrêt n° 7, a déclaré que la Pologne ne peut pas se réclamer individuellement de l'article 248 du Traité de Versailles aux fins d'annuler of the Polish Government in regard to the Oberschlesische was not in conformity with the provisions of Article 6 and the following articles of the Geneva Convention—which attitude consisted in considering and treating the Chorzów factory as acquired by Poland under Article 256 of the Treaty of Versailles—established that, as between the Parties, that article was not applicable to the Chorzów factory. Again it appears from the documents submitted to the Court by the Parties that the Reparation Commission does not claim to be competent to decide whether any particular property is or is not acquired by a succession State under the said article. The Commission accepts in this respect the solution arrived at in regard to this question either by the means at the disposal of those concerned—diplomatic negotiations, arbitration, etc.—or as the result of a unilateral act on the part of the succession State itself. The fact that the Parties are now agreed that Poland must retain the factory has nothing to do with Article 256 of the Treaty of Versailles, but is owing to the impracticability of returning it. In these circumstances there seems to be no doubt that Poland incurs no risk of having again to pay the value of the factory to the Reparation Commission, if, in accordance with Germany's claim, she pays this value to that State.

With regard to the Armistice Convention and Article 248 of the Treaty of Versailles, the question assumes a different aspect. The Armistice Convention appears to have been cited in order to reserve the possibility of getting the sale of the factory to the Oberschlesische declared invalid by means of an action to be brought to that end by the States signatory to that Convention. As, however, the Court, in Judgment No. 7, has held that Poland cannot avail itself of the provisions of the said Convention to which she is not a party, the Court cannot without inconsistency admit that country's right to invoke the Convention in order to delay making reparation for the damage resulting from her adoption of an attitude not in conformity with her obligations under the Geneva Convention.

As has already been said, the Court in Judgment No. 7 has declared that Poland cannot on her own account rely on Article 248 of the Treaty of Versailles in order to obtain the la vente de l'usine ; en outre, la Cour a constaté que cet article ne comporte pas de défense d'aliénation et que les droits réservés aux Puissances alliées et associées dans ledit article sont exercés par l'intermédiaire de la Commission des Réparations. Mais il serait difficile de comprendre comment lesdits droits pourraient être lésés du fait du versement au Reich, à titre d'indemnité, de la valeur de l'usine, vu que, sans un tel versement, les droits du Reich dans l'entreprise perdraient probablement toute valeur. L'objection basée sur cet article doit donc, elle aussi, être écartée.

La Cour estime devoir se borner à rejeter la conclusion par laquelle le Gouvernement polonais demande un sursis, considérant que, par ce rejet, ainsi que par le rejet des exceptions présentées par le Gouvernement polonais sur la base de l'article 256 du Traité de Versailles, elle fait droit à la conclusion allemande, dans toute la mesure où cette conclusion est justifiée ; en effet, la Cour ne saurait examiner la conclusion dont il s'agit pour autant qu'elle se réfère à des tierces personnes qui ne sont pas spécifiées.

III.

L'existence d'un dommage à indemniser étant reconnue par la Partie défenderesse en ce qui concerne la Bayerische, et les objections soulevées par cette Partie contre l'existence d'un dommage justifiant une indemnisation de l'Oberschlesische étant écartées, la Cour doit maintenant fixer les critères d'après lesquels il y a lieu de procéder à la détermination du montant de l'indemnité due.

L'acte de la Pologne que la Cour a jugé être contraire à la Convention de Genève, n'est pas une expropriation à laquelle n'aurait manqué, pour être légitime, que le paiement d'une indemnité équitable ; c'est une mainmise sur des biens, droits et intérêts qui ne pouvaient être expropriés même contre indemnité, sauf dans les conditions exceptionnelles déterminées par l'article 7 de ladite Convention. Comme la Cour l'a expressément constaté dans son Arrêt n° 8, la réparation est, en l'espèce, la conséquence non pas de l'application des articles 6 à 22 de la Convention de Genève, mais d'actes qui sont contraires aux dispositions de ces articles.

annulment of the sale of the factory. Furthermore, the Court has stated that this article does not involve a prohibition of alienation, and that the rights reserved to the Allied and Associated Powers in the article are exercised through the Reparation Commission. But it would be difficult to understand how these rights could be affected by the payment to the Reich, as an indemnity, of the value of the factory, seeing that, without such a payment, the rights of the Reich in the enterprise would probably lose all value. The objection based on this article must therefore also be overruled.

The Court considers that it should confine itself to rejecting the submission whereby the Polish Government asks for a suspension, since by so doing and by overruling the objections raised by the Polish Government on the basis of Article 256 of the Treaty of Versailles, it is deciding in conformity with the German submission to the extent that that submission is well-founded; the Court cannot, in fact, consider the submission in question in so far as it relates to third parties who are not specified.

III.

The existence of a damage to be made good being recognized by the respondent Party as regards the Bayerische, and the objections raised by the same Party against the existence of any damage that would justify compensation to the Oberschlesische being set aside, the Court must now lay down the guiding principles according to which the amount of compensation due may be determined.

The action of Poland which the Court has judged to be contrary to the Geneva Convention is not an expropriation—to render which lawful only the payment of fair compensation would have been wanting; it is a seizure of property, rights and interests which could not be expropriated even against compensation, save under the exceptional conditions fixed by Article 7 of the said Convention. As the Court has expressly declared in Judgment No. 8, reparation is in this case the consequence not of the application of Articles 6 to 22 of the Geneva Convention, but of acts contrary to those articles.

Il s'ensuit que l'indemnité due au Gouvernement allemand n'est pas nécessairement limitée à la valeur qu'avait l'entreprise au moment de la dépossession, plus les intérêts jusqu'au jour du paiement. Cette limitation ne serait admissible que si le Gouvernement polonais avait eu le droit d'exproprier et que si son tort se réduisait à n'avoir pas payé aux deux Sociétés le juste prix des choses expropriées ; dans le cas actuel, elle pourrait aboutir à placer l'Allemagne et les intérêts protégés par la Convention de Genève, et pour lesquels le Gouvernement allemand a pris fait et cause, dans une situation plus défavorable que celle dans laquelle l'Allemagne et ces intérêts se trouveraient si la Pologne avait respecté ladite Convention. Une pareille conséquence serait non seulement inique, mais aussi et avant tout incompatible avec le but visé par les articles 6 et suivants de la Convention, voire la défense, en principe, de liquider des biens, droits et intérêts des ressortissants allemands et des sociétés contrôlées par des ressortissants allemands en Haute-Silésie, car elle équivaldrait à identifier la liquidation licite et la dépossession illicite en ce qui concerne leurs effets financiers.

Le principe essentiel, qui découle de la notion même d'acte illicite et qui semble se dégager de la pratique internationale, notamment de la jurisprudence des tribunaux arbitraux, est que la réparation doit, autant que possible, effacer toutes les conséquences de l'acte illicite et rétablir l'état qui aurait vraisemblablement existé si ledit acte n'avait pas été commis. Restitution en nature, ou, si elle n'est pas possible, paiement d'une somme correspondant à la valeur qu'aurait la restitution en nature ; allocation, s'il y a lieu, de dommages-intérêts pour les pertes subies et qui ne seraient pas couvertes par la restitution en nature ou le paiement qui en prend la place ; tels sont les principes desquels doit s'inspirer la détermination du montant de l'indemnité due à cause d'un fait contraire au droit international.

Cette conclusion s'impose avec une force toute particulière à l'égard de la Convention de Genève, qui a pour but d'assurer le maintien de la vie économique en Haute-Silésie sur la base du respect du statu quo. La dépossession d'une entreprise industrielle, que la Convention défendait d'exproprier, a donc

It follows that the compensation due to the German Government is not necessarily limited to the value of the undertaking at the moment of dispossession, plus interest to the day of payment. This limitation would only be admissible if the Polish Government had had the right to expropriate, and if its wrongful act consisted merely in not having paid to the two Companies the just price of what was expropriated; in the present case, such a limitation might result in placing Germany and the interests protected by the Geneva Convention, on behalf of which interests the German Government is acting, in a situation more unfavourable than that in which Germany and these interests would have been if Poland had respected the said Convention. Such a consequence would not only be unjust, but also and above all incompatible with the aim of Article 6 and following articles of the Convention—that is to say, the prohibition, in principle, of the liquidation of the property, rights and interests of German nationals and of companies controlled by German nationals in Upper Silesia—since it would be tantamount to rendering lawful liquidation and unlawful dispossession indistinguishable in so far as their financial results are concerned.

The essential principle contained in the actual notion of an illegal act—a principle which seems to be established by international practice and in particular by the decisions of arbitral tribunals—is that reparation must, as far as possible, wipe out all the consequences of the illegal act and reestablish the situation which would, in all probability, have existed if that act had not been committed. Restitution in kind, or, if this is not possible, payment of a sum corresponding to the value which a restitution in kind would bear; the award, if need be, of damages for loss sustained which would not be covered by restitution in kind or payment in place of it—such are the principles which should serve to determine the amount of compensation due for an act contrary to international law.

This conclusion particularly applies as regards the Geneva Convention, the object of which is to provide for the maintenance of economic life in Upper Silesia on the basis of respect for the status quo. The dispossession of an industrial undertaking—the expropriation of which is prohibited by the pour conséquence l'obligation de la restituer, et, si cela n'est pas possible, d'en payer la valeur à l'époque de l'indemnisation destinée à remplacer la restitution devenue impossible. A cette obligation s'ajoute, en vertu des principes généraux du droit international, celle d'indemniser les pertes éprouvées à la suite de la mainmise. L'impossibilité, constatée par un accord des Parties, de restituer l'usine de Chorzów ne saurait donc avoir d'autre effet que celui de remplacer la restitution par le paiement de la valeur de l'entreprise ; il ne serait conforme ni aux principes juridiques, ni à la volonté des Parties, d'en déduire que la question de l'indemnité doit désormais être traitée comme si l'on était sur le terrain d'une véritable expropriation.

* * *

Tels étant les principes d'après lesquels il y a lieu de procéder à la détermination de l'indemnité due, il convient maintenant de rechercher si les dommages à indemniser doivent être évalués distinctement pour chacune des deux Sociétés, comme l'a fait la Partie demanderesse, ou s'il est préférable d'en déterminer la valeur globale.

Si la Cour était en présence de dommages qui, tout en étant causés par un même acte, auraient frappé des personnes indépendantes les unes des autres, la méthode qui s'imposerait naturellement serait l'évaluation séparée du dommage éprouvé par chacune d'elles ; la somme des indemnités ainsi évaluées constituerait alors le montant de la réparation due à l'État.

En l'espèce, la situation est différente. L'unité économique de l'entreprise de Chorzów, que la Cour a déjà fait remarquer dans son Arrêt n° 6, se manifeste surtout par le fait que les intérêts possédés par les deux Sociétés dans ladite entreprise sont interdépendants et complémentaires ; il s'ensuit qu'on ne saurait les additionner purement et simplement, sous peine d'indemniser deux fois le même dommage ; car tout ce que la Bayerische aurait retiré de sa participation à l'entreprise (redevances et parts des bénéfiques) aurait été à la charge de l'Oberschlesische. La valeur du droit d'option de la Bayerische à Geneva Convention—then involves the obligation to restore the undertaking and, if this be not possible, to pay its value at the time of the indemnification, which value is designed to take the place of restitution which has become impossible. To this obligation, in virtue of the general principles of international law, must be added that of compensating loss sustained as the result of the seizure. The impossibility, on which the Parties are agreed, of restoring the Chorzów factory could therefore have no other effect but that of substituting payment of the value of the undertaking for restitution; it would not be in conformity either with the principles of law or with the wish of the Parties to infer from that agreement that the question of compensation must henceforth be dealt with as though an expropriation properly so called was involved.

* * *

Such being the principles to be followed in fixing the compensation due, the Court may now consider whether the damage to be made good is to be estimated separately for each of the two Companies, as the Applicant has claimed, or whether it is preferable to fix a lump sum.

If the Court were dealing with damage which, though caused by a single act, had affected persons independent the one of the other, the natural method to be applied would be a separate assessment of the damage sustained by each of them; the total amount of compensation thus assessed would then constitute the amount of reparation due to the State.

In the present case, the situation is different. The economic unity of the Chorzów undertaking, pointed out by the Court in its Judgment No. 6, is shown above all in the fact that the interests possessed by the two Companies in the said undertaking are interdependent and complementary; it follows that they cannot simply be added together without running the risk of the same damage being compensated twice over; for all that the Bayerische would have obtained from its participation in the undertaking (sums due and shares in the profits) would have been payable by the Oberschlesische. The value l'achat de l'usine dépendait également de la valeur de l'entreprise. Tous les dommages que l'une ou l'autre des Sociétés ont subis à la suite de la dépossession, pour autant qu'ils ont trait à la suppression de l'exploitation et à la perte des bénéfices qu'elle aurait rapportés, sont déterminés par la valeur de l'entreprise comme telle ; partant, les indemnités à fixer de ce chef doivent se tenir dans ce cadre.

D'autre part, il est clair que les rapports juridiques entre les deux Sociétés sont tout à fait étrangers à la procédure internationale et ne sauraient constituer un obstacle à ce que la Cour se place sur le terrain d'une évaluation globale, correspondant à la valeur de l'entreprise, si, comme elle l'estime, cette évaluation est plus simple et donne plus de garanties d'arriver à une juste appréciation du montant du dommage et d'éviter des doubles emplois.

Une réserve cependant s'impose. L'évaluation globale, ci-dessus visée, ne concerne que l'entreprise de Chorzów et n'exclut pas la possibilité de tenir compte d'autres dommages que les Sociétés auraient subis du fait de la dépossession, mais en dehors de l'entreprise elle-même. Aucun dommage de cette nature n'a été allégué en ce qui concerne l'Oberschlesische, et il ne semble guère concevable qu'il en existe, car toute l'activité de l'Oberschlesische était concentrée dans l'entreprise. Par contre, il est possible que des dommages de cet ordre se soient vérifiés pour ce qui est de la Bayerische, laquelle possède ou exploite d'autres usines du même genre que celle de Chorzów ; la Cour examinera plus tard si de tels dommages entrent en ligne de compte pour la fixation du montant de l'indemnité.

* * *

Placée devant la nécessité de déterminer quelle est la somme qu'il convient d'allouer au Gouvernement allemand afin de lui permettre de remettre, autant que possible, les Sociétés dépossédées dans la situation économique dans laquelle elles se trouveraient vraisemblablement si la mainmise n'avait pas eu lieu, la Cour ne croit pas pouvoir se contenter des éléments d'évaluation qui lui ont été fournis par les Parties.

of the Bayerische's option on the factory depended also on the value of the undertaking. The whole damage suffered by the one or the other Company as the result of dispossession, in so far as concerns the cessation of the working and the loss of profit which would have accrued, is determined by the value of the undertaking as such; and, therefore, compensation under this head must remain within these limits.

On the other hand, it is clear that the legal relationship between the two Companies in no way concerns the international proceedings and cannot hinder the Court from adopting the system of a lump sum corresponding to the value of the undertaking, if, as is the Court's opinion, such a calculation is simpler and gives greater guarantees that it will arrive at a just appreciation of the amount, and avoid awarding double damages.

One reservation must, however, be made. The calculation of a lump sum referred to above concerns only the Chorzów undertaking, and does not exclude the possibility of taking into account other damage which the Companies may have sustained owing to dispossession, but which is outside the undertaking itself. No damage of such a nature has been alleged as regards the Oberschlesische, and it seems hardly conceivable that such damage should exist, for the whole activity of the Oberschlesische was concentrated in the undertaking. On the other hand, it is possible that damage of such a nature may be shown to exist as regards the Bayerische, which possesses or works other factories of the same nature as Chorzów; the Court will consider later whether such damage must be taken into account in fixing the amount of compensation.

* * *

Faced with the task of determining what sum must be awarded to the German Government in order to enable it to place the dispossessed Companies as far as possible in the economic situation in which they would probably have been if the seizure had not taken place, the Court considers that it cannot be satisfied with the data for assessment supplied by the Parties.

Les frais de construction de l'usine de Chorzów, que le demandeur a pris pour base de son calcul en ce qui concerne l'indemnité de l'Oberschlesische, ont soulevé de la part du défendeur des objections et des critiques, qui ne sont peut-être pas dénuées de tout fondement. Sans entrer dans cette discussion et sans nier l'importance que les frais de construction pourront avoir dans la détermination de la valeur de l'entreprise, la Cour se borne à observer qu'il n'est certainement pas exclu que les frais encourus pour la construction d'une usine ne soient pas en rapport avec la valeur qu'aura l'usine une fois bâtie. Cette possibilité doit entrer particulièrement en ligne de compte lorsque, comme dans le cas présent, l'usine a été bâtie par l'État en vue de faire face à des exigences impérieuses d'intérêt public et au milieu de circonstances exceptionnelles comme celles créées par la guerre.

D'autre part, la Cour ne saurait pas non plus s'arrêter au prix stipulé dans le contrat du 24 décembre 1919 entre le Reich, l'Oberschlesische et la Treuhand, ou à l'offre de vente d'actions de l'Oberschlesische à la Compagnie de l'azote et des fertilisants de Genève faite le 26 mai 1922. Il a déjà été observé ci-dessus que la valeur de l'entreprise au moment de la dépossession ne constitue pas nécessairement la mesure pour la fixation de l'indemnité. Or, il est constant que le moment auquel remontent le contrat de vente et les négociations avec la Société genevoise appartient à une période de crise économique et monétaire profonde ; l'écart entre la valeur qu'avait alors l'entreprise et la valeur qu'elle aurait eu actuellement peut donc être fort considérable. Tout cela sans compter que le prix stipulé dans le contrat de 1919 était déterminé par des circonstances et accompagné de clauses qui, en réalité, ne permettent guère de le regarder comme la véritable expression de la valeur que les Parties attribuaient à l'usine ; et que l'offre à la Société genevoise s'explique probablement par la crainte de mesures du genre de celles que le Gouvernement polonais a effectivement prises peu après contre l'entreprise de Chorzów et que la Cour a jugé n'avoir pas été conformes à la Convention de Genève.

The cost of construction of the Chorzów factory, which the Applicant has taken as a basis for his calculation as regards compensation to the Oberschlesische, gave rise to objections and criticisms by the Respondent which are perhaps not without some foundation. Without entering into this discussion and without denying the importance which the question of cost of construction may have in determining the value of the undertaking, the Court merely observes that it is by no means impossible that the cost of construction of a factory may not correspond to the value which that factory will have when built. This possibility must more particularly be considered when, as in the present case, the factory was built by the State in order to meet the imperious demands of public necessity and under exceptional circumstances such as those created by the war.

Nor yet can the Court, on the other hand, be satisfied with the price stipulated in the contract of December 24th, 1919, between the Reich, the Oberschlesische and the Treuhand, or with the offer of sale of the shares of the Oberschlesische to the Geneva Compagnie d'azote et de fertilisants made on May 26th, 1922. It has already been pointed out above that the value of the undertaking at the moment of dispossession does not necessarily indicate the criterion for the fixing of compensation. Now it is certain that the moment of the contract of sale and that of the negotiations with the Genevese Company belong to a period of serious economic and monetary crisis; the difference between the value which the undertaking then had and that which it would have had at present may therefore be very considerable. And further, it must be considered that the price stipulated in the contract of 1919 was determined by circumstances and accompanied by clauses which in reality seem hardly to admit of its being considered as a true indication of the value which the Parties placed on the factory; and that the offer to the Genevese Company is probably to be explained by the fear of measures such as those which the Polish Government in fact adopted afterwards against the Chorzów undertaking, and which the Court has judged not to be in conformity with the Geneva Convention.

Pour ce qui est enfin de la somme sur laquelle les deux Gouvernements, à un moment donné, étaient tombés d'accord au cours des négociations qui suivirent l'Arrêt n° 7 — somme, d'ailleurs, à laquelle ni l'une ni l'autre Partie n'a cru devoir se référer au cours de la présente procédure —, il suffit de rappeler que la Cour ne saurait faire état des déclarations, admissions ou propositions qu'ont pu faire les Parties au cours des négociations directes qui ont eu lieu entre elles, lorsque ces négociations n'ont pas abouti à un accord complet.

*

Dans ces circonstances, la Cour, afin d'éclairer sa religion, ayant toute détermination de l'indemnité que le Gouvernement polonais doit payer au Gouvernement allemand, fera procéder, conformément à l'article 50 de son Statut et aux suggestions mêmes de la Partie demanderesse, à une expertise. Cette expertise, dont les modalités sont déterminées par une Ordonnance en date de ce jour d'hui, portera sur les questions suivantes :

I. — A. Quelle était la valeur, exprimée en Reichsmarks actuels, au 3 juillet 1922, de l'entreprise pour la fabrication de produits azotés dont l'usine était sise à Chorzów, en Haute-Silésie polonaise, telle que cette entreprise (y compris les terrains, bâtiments, outillage, stocks, procédés dont elle disposait, contrats de fourniture et de livraison, clientèle et chances d'avenir) se trouvait à la date indiquée entre les mains des Bayerische et Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke ?

B. Quels auraient été les résultats financiers, exprimés en Reichsmarks actuels (profits ou pertes), que l'entreprise ainsi constituée aurait vraisemblablement donnés depuis le 3 juillet 1922 jusqu'à la date du présent arrêt, entre les mains desdites Sociétés ?

II. — Quelle serait la valeur, exprimée en Reichsmarks actuels, à la date du présent arrêt, de ladite entreprise de Chorzów, si cette entreprise (y compris les terrains, bâtiments, outillage, stocks, procédés disponibles, contrats de fourniture et de livraison, clientèle et chances d'avenir), étant restée entre les mains des Bayerische et Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke, soit était demeurée essentiellement en l'état de 1922, soit avait reçu, toutes proportions gardées, un développement analogue à

And finally as regards the sum agreed on at one moment by the two Governments during the negotiations which followed Judgment No. 7—which sum, moreover, neither Party thought fit to rely on during the present proceedings—it may again be pointed out that the Court cannot take into account declarations, admissions or proposals which the Parties may have made during direct negotiations between themselves, when such negotiations have not led to a complete agreement.

*

This being the case, and in order to obtain further enlightenment in the matter, the Court, before giving any decision as to the compensation to be paid by the Polish Government to the German Government, will arrange for the holding of an expert enquiry, in conformity with Article 50 of its Statute and actually with the suggestions of the Applicant. This expert enquiry, directions for which are given in an Order of Court of to-day's date, will refer to the following questions:

I.—A. What was the value, on July 3rd, 1922, expressed in Reichsmarks current at the present time, of the undertaking for the manufacture of nitrate products of which the factory was situated at Chorzów in Polish Upper Silesia, in the state in which that undertaking (including the lands, buildings, equipment, stocks and processes at its disposal, supply and delivery contracts, goodwill and future prospects) was, on the date indicated, in the hands of the Bayerische and Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke?

B. What would have been the financial results, expressed in Reichsmarks current at the present time (profits or losses), which would probably have been given by the undertaking thus constituted from July 3rd, 1922, to the date of the present judgment, if it had been in the hands of the said Companies?

II.—What would be the value at the date of the present judgment, expressed in Reichsmarks current at the present time, of the same undertaking (Chorzów) if that undertaking (including lands, buildings, equipment, stocks, available processes, supply and delivery contracts, goodwill and future prospects) had remained in the hands of the Bayerische and Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke, and had either remained substantially as it was in 1922 or had been developed proportionately on celui d'autres entreprises du même genre, dirigées par la Bayerische, par exemple l'entreprise dont l'usine est sise à Piesteritz ?

La question I a pour but d'établir la valeur en argent, tant de l'objet qui aurait dû être restitué en nature que du dommage supplémentaire, sur la base de la valeur estimée de l'entreprise, y compris les stocks, au moment de la prise de possession par le Gouvernement polonais, augmentée du profit éventuel présumable de cette entreprise entre la date de la prise de possession et celle de l'expertise.

D'autre part, la question II vise à arriver à la valeur actuelle en se fondant sur la situation au moment de l'expertise et en laissant de côté la situation présumée en 1922.

Cette question envisage la valeur actuelle de l'entreprise à deux points de vue : en premier lieu, on suppose que l'usine serait restée essentiellement dans l'état où elle se trouvait à la date du 3 juillet 1922, et en second lieu on envisage l'usine telle que celle-ci aurait hypothétiquement, mais raisonnablement, dû être entre les mains de l'Oberschlesische et de la Bayerische, si, au lieu d'être prise en 1922 par la Pologne, l'entreprise avait pu poursuivre son développement présumé normal à partir de cette époque. Le caractère hypothétique de cette question est atténué considérablement par la possibilité de la comparaison avec d'autres entreprises du même genre, dirigées par la Bayerische, et surtout avec l'usine de Piesteritz, dont l'analogie avec l'usine de Chorzów, de même d'ailleurs que certaines différences entre les deux, ont été signalées à maintes reprises au cours de la présente procédure.

A cet égard, il y a lieu d'observer que l'agent du Gouvernement allemand a déposé, au cours de la séance publique du 21 juin 1928, deux certificats notariés contenant un résumé des contrats passés le 16 avril 1925 et le 27 août 1927 entre la Mitteldeutsche Stickstoffwerke A.-G. et la Bayerische avec adhésion des Vereinigte Industrie-Unternehmungen A.-G., contrats moyennant lesquels les Mitteldeutsche donnent en bail à la Bayerische les biens-fonds à Piesteritz leur appartenant avec toutes les installations et pertinences y afférentes. L'agent du Gouvernement polonais cependant, dans sa plaidoirie du 25 juin, lines similar to those applied in the case of other undertakings of the same kind, controlled by the Bayerische, for instance, the undertaking of which the factory is situated at Piesteritz?

The purpose of question I is to determine the monetary value, both of the object which should have been restored in kind and of the additional damage, on the basis of the estimated value of the undertaking including stocks at the moment of taking possession by the Polish Government, together with any probable profit that would have accrued to the undertaking between the date of taking possession and that of the expert opinion.

On the other hand, question II is directed to the ascertainment of the present value on the basis of the situation at the moment of the expert enquiry and leaving aside the situation presumed to exist in 1922.

This question contemplates the present value of the undertaking from two points of view: firstly, it is supposed that the factory had remained essentially in the state in which it was on July 3rd, 1922, and secondly, the factory is to be considered in the state in which it would (hypothetically but probably) have been in the hands of the Oberschlesische and Bayerische, if, instead of being taken in 1922 by Poland, it had been able to continue its supposedly normal development from that time onwards. The hypothetical nature of this question is considerably diminished by the possibility of comparison with other undertakings of the same nature directed by the Bayerische, and, in particular, with the Piesteritz factory, the analogy of which with Chorzów, as well as certain differences between the two, have been many times pointed out during the present proceedings.

In regard to this, it should be observed that the Agent for the German Government, at the public sitting of June 21st, 1928, handed in two certificates by notaries containing a summary of contracts concluded on April 16th, 1925, and August 27th, 1927, between the Mitteldeutsche Stickstoffwerke A.-G. and the Bayerische, and adhered to by the Vereinigte Industrie-Unternehmungen A.-G., under which contracts the Mitteldeutsche leased to the Bayerische the landed properties at Piesteritz belonging to it, together with all installations, etc., connected therewith. The Agent for the Polish Govern-a déclaré que, ne connaissant pas les contrats, et ne pouvant nullement apprécier si les résumés en question contiennent tous les éléments nécessaires pour faire des calculs exacts, il s'opposait formellement à ce que lesdits résumés fussent pris pour base des présents débats.

En ce qui concerne le lucrum cessans, par rapport à la question II, il convient d'observer que les dépenses d'entretien des choses corporelles faisant partie de l'entreprise et même les dépenses d'amélioration et de développement normal des installations et de la propriété industrielle y incorporée, doivent absorber en première ligne les profits, présumables ou réels, de l'entreprise. Il y a donc lieu de faire abstraction, jusqu'à un certain point, des profits éventuels, car ils se trouveront être compris dans la valeur hypothétique ou réelle de l'entreprise au moment actuel. Si, cependant, de la réponse que les experts donneront à la question I B, il devait résulter qu'après compensation des déficits des années pendant lesquelles l'usine a fonctionné à perte et après application aux dépenses d'entretien et d'amélioration normale pendant les années suivantes, il reste une marge de profits, le montant de cette marge devrait être additionné à l'indemnité à allouer.

D'autre part, si le développement normal présupposé par la question II représentait un élargissement de l'entreprise et un investissement de capitaux nouveaux, leur montant devrait être déduit de la valeur recherchée.

La Cour ne manque pas de se rendre compte des difficultés que présentent ces deux questions : difficultés d'ailleurs inhérentes au cas spécial dont il s'agit et liées avec le temps qui s'est écoulé entre la dépossession et la demande en indemnité et avec les transformations de l'usine et les progrès de l'industrie qui en forme l'objet. C'est en vue de ces difficultés qu'elle estime préférable de chercher à arriver par des méthodes différentes à la valeur recherchée, afin de permettre une comparaison et de pouvoir éventuellement compléter les résultats de l'une par ceux des autres. Partant, la Cour se réserve toute liberté d'apprécier les évaluations visées par les diverses formules ; c'est sur la base des résultats desdites évaluations, ainsi que des faits et documents qui lui ont été soumis, qu'elle procédera à la fixation de la somme qu'il convient d'allouer ment, however, in his speech on June 25th, said that, not being acquainted with the contracts and being entirely unable to form an opinion as to whether the summaries in question contained all the data necessary for accurate calculations, he formally objected to the said summaries being taken as a basis in the present proceedings.

As regards the lucrum cessans, in relation to question II, it may be remarked that the cost of upkeep of the corporeal objects forming part of the undertaking and even the cost of improvement and normal development of the installation and of the industrial property incorporated therein, are bound to absorb in a large measure the profits, real or supposed, of the undertaking. Up to a certain point, therefore, any profit may be left out of account, for it will be included in the real or supposed value of the undertaking at the present moment. If, however, the reply given by the experts to question I B should show that after making good the deficits for the years during which the factory was working at a loss, and after due provision for the cost of upkeep and normal improvement during the following years, there remains a margin of profit, the amount of such profit should be added to the compensation to be awarded.

On the other hand, if the normal development presupposed by question II represented an enlargement of the undertaking and an investment of fresh capital, the amount of such sums must be deducted from the value sought for.

The Court does not fail to appreciate the difficulties presented by these two questions, difficulties which are however inherent in the special case under consideration, and closely connected with the time that elapsed between the dispossession and the demand for compensation, and with the transformations of the factory and the progress made in the industry with which the factory is concerned. In view of these difficulties, the Court considers it preferable to endeavour to ascertain the value to be estimated by several methods, in order to permit of a comparison and if necessary of completing the results of the one by those of the others. The Court, therefore, reserves every right to review the valuations referred to in the different formulæ; basing itself on the results of the said valuations and of facts and documents submitted to it, it will then au Gouvernement allemand, conformément aux principes de droit qui ont été résumés ci-dessus.

*

Il convient de constater que l'usine de Chorzów, à évaluer par les experts, comprend aussi l'usine chimique.

Le Gouvernement polonais, à côté des arguments qui, dans son opinion, auraient pour effet de démontrer que l'exploitation de ladite usine n'aurait pu être profitable — arguments qu'il appartiendra aux experts d'apprécier —, a fait valoir que l'exploitation dépendait d'une autorisation spéciale, et que les autorités polonaises étaient en droit de la refuser. Mais la Cour est d'avis que cette thèse n'est pas fondée.

L'autorisation visée semble être celle dont il est question dans le paragraphe 18 de la loi prussienne de 1861, aux termes duquel, sauf dispositions contraires d'un traité international, les personnes morales étrangères ne peuvent exercer une industrie sans l'autorisation du Gouvernement. Or, dans le cas dont il s'agit, il est certain que la Convention de Genève constitue bien le traité international qui, garantissant aux entreprises industrielles la continuation de leur activité, exclut toute nécessité de l'autorisation spéciale requise par la loi de 1861.

Le fait que l'usine chimique non seulement ne fonctionnait pas, mais encore n'était pas même achevée lors du transfert du territoire à la Pologne, ne saurait entrer en ligne de compte ; en effet, l'industrie chimique de toute espèce était expressément mentionnée dans les statuts de l'Oberschlesische comme un des buts de l'activité de cette Société, et les sections et installations de l'usine chimique, d'ailleurs étroitement liées aux sections et installations où était produite la chaux azotée, avaient été déjà prévues et mentionnées dans le contrat de construction et d'exploitation du 5 mars 1915 ; de la sorte, l'entrée en fonctionnement de l'usine n'était que le développement normal et prévu de l'activité industrielle que l'Oberschlesische avait le droit d'exercer en Haute-Silésie polonaise.

proceed to determine the sum to be awarded to the German Government, in conformity with the legal principles set out above.

*

It must be stated that the Chorzów factory to be valued by the experts includes also the chemical factory.

Besides the arguments which, in the Polish Government's opinion, tend to show that the working of the said factory was not established on a profitable basis—arguments which it will be for the experts to consider—that Government has claimed that the working depended on a special authorization, which the Polish authorities were entitled to refuse. But the Court is of opinion that this argument is not well-founded.

The authorization referred to seems to be that envisaged by paragraph 18 of the Prussian law of 1861, under which, failing international treaty provisions to the contrary, moral persons of foreign nationality cannot engage in industry without the authorization of the Government. In the present case, it is certain that the Geneva Convention does actually constitute the international treaty which, guaranteeing to industrial undertakings the continuation of their activities, does away with any necessity for the special authorization required by the law of 1861.

The fact that the chemical factory was not only not working, but not even completed, at the time of transfer of the territory to Poland, can be of no importance; for chemical industry of all kinds was expressly mentioned in the articles of the Oberschlesische Company as one of the objects of that Company's activities, and the sections and plant of the chemical factory, which were, moreover, closely connected with the sections and plant producing nitrate of lime, had already been provided for and mentioned in the contract for construction and exploitation of March 5th, 1915; thus, the entry into working of the factory was only the normal and duly foreseen development of the industrial activity which the Oberschlesische had the right to exercise in Polish Upper Silesia.

* * *

De l'avis de la Cour, la valeur envisagée par les questions formulées ci-dessus suffira pour lui permettre de fixer, en connaissance de cause, le montant de l'indemnité à laquelle a droit le Gouvernement allemand, en prenant comme mesure les dommages subis par les deux Sociétés dans l'entreprise de Chorzów.

Il est vrai que le Gouvernement allemand a fait valoir à plusieurs reprises, au cours de la procédure écrite et orale, qu'une indemnisation équitable du dommage éprouvé par la Bayerische ne saurait se borner au montant de la valeur de ce qu'on a appelé les « droits contractuels », savoir, la rémunération stipulée dans les contrats entre le Reich ou l'Oberschlesische et ladite Société, pour la mise à disposition de ses brevets, licences, expériences, etc., ainsi que pour la direction et l'organisation de la vente des produits finis. La raison en serait que cette rémunération, acceptée en vue des rapports particuliers qui liaient les Parties, ne correspondrait guère à la rémunération équitable à laquelle la Bayerische aurait pu, pour les mêmes prestations, prétendre d'un tiers quelconque, comme le Gouvernement polonais. C'est en partant de ce point de vue que le Gouvernement allemand a proposé de prendre pour base de l'évaluation du dommage souffert par la Bayerische, un contrat de licence, qui serait supposé conclu entre un tiers et ladite Société, dans des conditions normales et équitables.

Le point de vue auquel s'est placée la Cour en posant aux experts les questions indiquées ci-dessus, donne cependant satisfaction à la thèse du Gouvernement allemand pour autant qu'elle est justifiée. Car, si la Bayerische avait demandé une redevance plus élevée ou des paiements supplémentaires en sa faveur, ou bien si elle avait stipulé d'autres conditions à son profit, la valeur de son apport pour l'Oberschlesische en serait diminuée dans la même mesure, ce qui prouve que la relation entre prestation et contre-prestation n'entre pas en ligne de compte pour la valeur de l'entreprise dans son ensemble. Si la Bayerische avait eu, non seulement la direction, mais aussi la propriété de l'entreprise, cette valeur serait encore la même ;

* * *

In the Court's opinion, the value to which the above questions relate will be sufficient to permit it with a full knowledge of the facts to fix the amount of compensation to which the German Government is entitled, on the basis of the damage suffered by the two Companies in connection with the Chorzów undertaking.

It is true that the German Government has pointed out several times during the written and oral proceedings that fair compensation for damage suffered by the Bayerische could not be limited to the value of what has been called the "contractual rights", namely, the remuneration provided for in the contracts between the Reich or the Oberschlesische and the said Company for having made available its patents, licences and experience gained, for the management and for the organization of the sale of the finished products. The reason given is that this remuneration, which was accepted in view of the special relationship between the Parties, would hardly correspond to the fair remuneration which the Bayerische might have claimed from any third party, like the Polish Government, for the same consideration. It was on these grounds that the German Government proposed to take as a basis for the calculation of damage suffered by the Bayerische a licence supposed to be granted by the said Company to a third party under fair and normal conditions.

The method adopted by the Court in putting the questions set out above to the experts meets the German Government's contention, in so far as that contention is justified. For if the Bayerische had demanded a larger sum or additional payments in its favour, or if it had stipulated for other conditions to its advantage, the value to the Oberschlesische of its participation would to the same extent be diminished; this shows that the relation between value given and value received does not enter into consideration in calculating the worth of the enterprise as a whole. If the Bayerische had not merely managed but also owned the undertaking, this amount would still be the same; in fact, all the elements constituting the en effet, tous les éléments qui constituent l'entreprise — l'usine avec ses accessoires, d'une part, l'apport incorporel et autre de la Bayerische, d'autre part — sont indépendants des avantages qu'aux termes de ses contrats chacune des deux Sociétés peut retirer de l'entreprise.

Pour cette raison, la différence qui pourrait exister entre les conditions stipulées dans les contrats de 1915, 1919 et 1920 et celles d'un supposé contrat de licence avec un tiers, est sans importance pour l'évaluation du dommage.

* * *

Il ne reste alors qu'à examiner si, conformément à la réserve faite ci-dessus, la Bayerische a subi, par suite de la dépossession, des dommages autres que ceux qu'a subis l'entreprise et qui pourraient entrer en ligne de compte aux fins de l'indemnisation demandée par le Gouvernement allemand.

Bien que la position prise à cet égard par ledit Gouvernement ne lui semble pas claire, la Cour peut constater qu'il n'a pas manqué d'appeler l'attention sur certaines circonstances qui seraient de nature à démontrer l'existence de dommages de cet ordre. La possibilité d'une concurrence nuisible aux usines de la Bayerische par une tierce personne qui, moyennant un fait illicite, se serait procurée la connaissance et l'utilisation des procédés de fabrication de cette Société, est certainement la circonstance la plus importante et la plus facile à saisir dans cet ordre d'idées.

La Cour doit cependant observer qu'elle ne se trouve pas en possession d'éléments permettant de déterminer l'existence et l'étendue du dommage qui résulterait de la concurrence que l'usine de Chorzów aurait faite aux usines de la Bayerische; la Cour ne saurait pas même dire, en connaissance de cause, si l'on a employé et si l'on emploie encore à Chorzów les méthodes de la Bayerische, ni si les produits de cette usine se trouvent sur les marchés où la Bayerische vend ou pourrait vendre les produits de ses usines. Dans ces conditions, la Cour ne peut que constater le fait que le dommage qui aurait résulté de la concurrence est insuffisamment établi.

undertaking—the factory and its accessories on the one hand, the non-corporeal and other values supplied by the Bayerische on the other—are independent of the advantages which, under its contracts, each of the two Companies may derive from the undertaking.

For this reason, any difference which might exist between the conditions fixed in the contracts of 1915, 1919 and 1920 and those laid down in a contract supposed to be concluded with a third party, is of no importance in estimating the damage.

* * *

It therefore only remains to be considered whether, in conformity with the reservation made above, the Bayerische has, owing to the dispossession, suffered damage, other than that sustained by the undertaking, such as might be considered in calculating the compensation demanded by the German Government.

Although the position taken up on this subject by the German Government does not seem clear to it, the Court is in a position to state that this Government has not failed to draw attention to certain circumstances which are said to prove the existence of damage of such a nature. The possibility of competition injurious to the Bayerische's factories by a third party, alleged to have unlawfully become acquainted with and have obtained means of making use of that Company's processes, is certainly the circumstance which is most important and easiest to appreciate in this connection.

The Court must however observe that it has not before it the data necessary to enable it to decide as to the existence and extent of damage resulting from alleged competition of the Chorzów factory with the Bayerische factories; the Court is not even in a position to say for certain whether the methods of the Bayerische have been or are still being employed at Chorzów, nor whether the products of that factory are to be found in the markets in which the Bayerische sells or might sell products from its own factories. In these circumstances, the Court can only observe that the damage alleged to have resulted from competition is insufficiently proved.

Il rentrerait en outre dans la catégorie des dommages possibles mais éventuels et indéfinis dont, conformément à la jurisprudence arbitrale, il n'y a pas lieu de tenir compte.

Il en est de même, à plus forte raison, du dommage qui pourrait résulter du fait que la Bayerische a vu restreindre le champ où elle peut faire des expériences, perfectionner ses procédés et en trouver des nouveaux, ainsi que du dommage qui pourrait résulter du fait qu'elle n'est plus à même de faire sentir son influence sur le marché dans la mesure où elle aurait pu le faire si elle était restée à la direction de l'usine de Chorzów.

La Cour ayant écarté, faute de preuves suffisantes, les dommages que la Bayerische aurait subis hors de l'entreprise, il n'est pas nécessaire d'examiner si les intérêts dont il s'agit seraient protégés par les articles 6 à 22 de la Convention de Genève.

* * *

En plus de l'indemnité en argent au bénéfice de la Bayerische, le Gouvernement allemand demande à la Cour de dire et juger :

« que, jusqu'au 30 juin 1931, aucune exportation de chaux azotée et de nitrate d'ammoniaque n'aura lieu en Allemagne, dans les États-Unis d'Amérique, en France et en Italie ;

subsidièrement, que le Gouvernement polonais est obligé de cesser l'exploitation de l'usine, respectivement des installations chimiques pour produire le nitrate d'ammoniaque, etc. »

Au sujet de ces conclusions, il convient de constater, tout d'abord, qu'elles ne sauraient viser le dommage qui s'est déjà produit, mais uniquement celui que pourrait souffrir la Bayerische à l'avenir.

Si la défense d'exportation a pour objet le dommage résultant de la concurrence que l'usine de Chorzów serait à même de faire aux usines de la Bayerische, elle doit être écartée sans autre, en vertu du résultat auquel la Cour est arrivée ci-dessus. Aux raisons sur lesquelles se fondait ce résultat s'ajoute, en ce qui concerne la défense d'exportation, que la Partie demanderesse n'a fourni aucun renseignement qui permette à Moreover, it would come under the heading of possible but contingent and indeterminate damage which, in accordance with the jurisprudence of arbitral tribunals, cannot be taken into account.

This is more especially the case as regards damage which might arise from the fact that the field in which the Bayerische can carry out its experiments, perfect its processes and make fresh discoveries has been limited, and from the fact that the Company can no longer influence the market in the manner that it could have done if it had continued to work the Chorzów factory.

As the Court has discarded for want of evidence, indemnity for damage alleged to have been sustained by the Bayerische outside the undertaking, it is not necessary to consider whether the interests in question would be protected by Articles 6 to 22 of the Geneva Convention.

* * *

In addition to pecuniary damages for the benefit of the Bayerische, the German Government asks the Court to give judgment:

“that, until June 30th, 1931, no nitrated lime and no nitrate of ammonia should be exported to Germany, to the United States of America, to France or to Italy;

in the alternative, that the Polish Government should be obliged to cease working the factory or the chemical equipment for the production of nitrate of ammonia, etc.”

In regard to these submissions, it should be observed in the first place that they cannot contemplate damage already sustained, but solely damage which the Bayerische might suffer in the future.

If the prohibition of export is designed to prevent damage arising from the competition which the Chorzów factory might offer to the Bayerische factories, this claim must be at once dismissed, in view of the result arrived at above by the Court. To the reasons on which this result was based, it is to be added, in so far as the prohibition of export is concerned, that the Applicant has furnished no information la Cour d'admettre le bien-fondé de la conclusion allemande relativement à la désignation de certains pays dans lesquels aucune exportation ne devrait avoir lieu, et à une durée déterminée de cette défense.

Il convient encore d'observer que si la défense avait pour but de protéger les droits de propriété industrielle de la Bayerische et d'exclure le dommage que celle-ci pourrait éprouver par l'usage de ces droits par la Pologne en contradiction avec des licences accordées par la Bayerische à d'autres personnes ou sociétés, le Gouvernement allemand aurait dû fournir des renseignements précis en ce qui concerne l'existence et la durée des brevets et licences en question. Mais, malgré les demandes expresses formulées à ce sujet par le Gouvernement polonais, le Gouvernement allemand n'en a pas présenté. Cela s'explique, d'ailleurs, par le fait que le Gouvernement allemand ne paraît pas vouloir fonder sur l'existence de ces brevets et licences sa demande visant une défense d'exportation.

Par contre, la demande du Gouvernement allemand semble envisager la défense d'exportation sous la forme d'une clause qui aurait dû se trouver dans un contrat de licence juste et équitable, conclu entre la Bayerische et une tierce personne quelconque ; à ce sujet, il y a lieu de faire les observations suivantes :

Le simple fait d'exclure de tel ou tel marché les produits d'une entreprise déterminée ne saurait évidemment en lui-même être dans l'intérêt ni de cette entreprise, ni, en tant que telles, des personnes qui y sont intéressées. Si la Bayerische — qui, tout en participant avec l'Oberschlesische dans l'entreprise de Chorzów, constitue une entreprise absolument distincte de celle de Chorzów et pouvant même avoir des intérêts contraires, dans une certaine mesure, à ceux de Chorzów — limitait par une clause contractuelle les débouchés de l'usine en sa faveur, il s'ensuivrait que les bénéfices qu'elle retirerait de sa participation à l'entreprise de Chorzów se trouveraient éventuellement diminués dans une mesure correspondante. La Cour ayant, comme il est dit plus haut, adopté pour le calcul de l'indemnité à allouer au Gouvernement allemand une méthode suivant laquelle cette indemnité comprendra la valeur globale de l'entreprise, il s'ensuit que les bénéfices de la Bayerische seront évalués sans déduction des avantages qui pourraient résulter pour elle d'une clause limitant la faculté d'exenabling the Court to satisfy itself as to the justification for the German submission naming certain countries to which export should not be allowed and stating a definite period for which this prohibition should be in force.

It must further be observed that if the object of the prohibition were to protect the industrial property rights of the Bayerische and to prevent damage which the latter might suffer as a result of the use of these rights by Poland, in conflict with licences granted by the Bayerische to other persons or companies, the German Government should have furnished definite data as regards the existence and duration of the patents or licences in question. But notwithstanding the express requests made in this respect by the Polish Government, the German Government has produced no such data. The explanation no doubt is that the German Government does not appear to wish to base its claim respecting a prohibition of export upon the existence of these patents and licences.

On the contrary, the German Government's claim seems to present the prohibition of export as a clause which should have been included in a fair and equitable licensing contract concluded between the Bayerische and any third party; in this connection the following remarks should be made:

The mere fact that the produce of any particular undertaking is excluded from any particular market cannot evidently in itself be in the interests of such undertaking, nor of the persons who, as such, are interested therein. If the Bayerische—which, whilst participating with the Oberschlesische in the Chorzów undertaking, constitutes an entirely separate undertaking from that of Chorzów and one that may even to a certain extent have interests conflicting with those of Chorzów—were to limit in its own favour, by contract, the number of the markets of that factory, it would follow that the profit which it would draw from its share in the Chorzów undertaking might be correspondingly diminished. The Court having, as is said above, adopted, in calculating the compensation to be awarded to the German Government, a method by which such compensation shall include the total value of the undertaking, it follows that the profits of the Bayerische will be estimated without deducting the advantages which that Company might draw from a clause limiting export. The portation. La défense d'exportation demandée par le Gouvernement allemand ne saurait donc être accordée sous peine de donner deux fois la même indemnité.

Dès lors, la Cour n'a pas besoin de s'occuper de la question de savoir si une telle défense, tout en étant usitée dans les contrats entre particuliers, pourrait faire l'objet d'une injonction adressée par la Cour à un gouvernement, même si ce gouvernement, en tant que fisc, exploitait l'usine dont les exportations devraient être limitées, ni si la défense demandée serait équitable et appropriée dans les circonstances.

Pour ce qui est de la défense d'exploitation, subsidiairement demandée par le Gouvernement allemand, il y a lieu d'ajouter qu'elle ne semble guère compatible avec l'allocation d'une indemnité représentant la valeur actuelle de l'entreprise, car, lorsqu'aura été versée cette indemnité qui comprendra les chances d'avenir et sera constituée par une somme d'argent portant intérêts, le Gouvernement polonais aura acquis le droit de continuer l'exploitation de l'entreprise telle qu'elle aura été évaluée, d'autant plus qu'il y a accord entre les Parties pour reconnaître que l'usine doit rester entre les mains du Gouvernement polonais. Cet accord ne saurait être interprété dans ce sens que l'usine devrait rester une usine morte ou être adaptée à une destination différente, si la réparation envisagée ne comprenait pas, en dehors d'une indemnité pécuniaire, la défense d'exportation demandée. Il est d'ailleurs fort douteux que, abstraction faite de toute autre considération, une défense d'exploitation soit admissible sous l'empire de la Convention de Genève, laquelle a pour but d'assurer le maintien des entreprises industrielles, et qui, à cet effet, en permet même exceptionnellement l'expropriation (article 7).

IV.

La Cour estime préférable de ne pas examiner dès maintenant les conclusions des Parties concernant certaines conditions et modalités du paiement de l'indemnité à allouer, qui sont étroitement liées, soit au montant de la somme à payer, soit aux circonstances qui pourront exister au moment où le paiement devra être fait. Il en est ainsi notamment de la conclusion allemande n° 4 a) — b) — c) et des conclusions prohibition of export asked for by the German Government cannot therefore be granted, or the same compensation would be awarded twice over.

This being so, the Court need not deal with the question whether such a prohibition, although customary in contracts between individuals, might form the subject of an injunction issued by the Court to a government, even if that government were working, as a State enterprise, the factory of which export was to be limited, nor if the prohibition asked for would be fair and appropriate in the circumstances.

As regards the German Government's alternative claim for a prohibition of exploitation, it may be added that this seems hardly compatible with the award of compensation representing the present value of the undertaking; for when that compensation, which is to cover future prospects and will consist in a sum of money bearing interest, has been paid, the Polish Government will have acquired the right to continue working the undertaking as valued, more especially as the Parties agree that the factory shall remain in the hands of the Polish Government. This agreement cannot, in fact, be construed as meaning that the factory should remain inoperative or be adapted to some other purpose, if the reparation contemplated did not include, in addition to a pecuniary indemnity, the prohibition of export sought for. It is moreover very doubtful whether, apart from any other consideration, prohibition of exploitation is admissible under the Geneva Convention, the object of which is to provide for the maintenance of industrial undertakings, and which, for this purpose, even permits them, in exceptional cases, to be expropriated (Article 7).

IV.

The Court thinks it preferable not to proceed at this stage to consider the Parties' submissions concerning certain conditions and methods in regard to the payment of the indemnity to be awarded, which conditions and methods are closely connected either with the amount of the sum to be paid or with circumstances which may exist when the time comes for payment. This applies more especially as regards the polonaises A 3 et B I c), sur lesquelles, partant, la Cour se réserve de statuer dans l'arrêt qui fixera l'indemnité.

Il est, par contre, possible et convenable de trancher dès à présent la question dite de la compensation, à laquelle ont traité respectivement la conclusion n° 4 d) de la Partie demanderesse et la conclusion C de la Partie défenderesse.

La demande du Gouvernement allemand à cet égard a pris finalement la forme suivante :

« Dire et juger, que le Gouvernement polonais n'est pas autorisé à compenser contre la créance susdite du Gouvernement allemand d'être indemnisé, sa créance résultant des assurances sociales en Haute-Silésie ; qu'il ne peut se prévaloir d'aucune autre compensation contre ladite créance d'indemnité ; subsidiairement, qu'une compensation n'est autorisée que lorsque le Gouvernement polonais invoque à cette fin une créance reconnue par le Gouvernement allemand ou constatée par un arrêt rendu entre les deux Gouvernements. »

Quant au Gouvernement polonais, il s'est borné à demander le rejet de la susdite conclusion.

Si l'on prend la conclusion allemande au pied de la lettre, on peut croire qu'elle vise en premier lieu à exclure un cas de compensation concret, savoir la compensation qui résulterait de la créance que le Gouvernement polonais prétend avoir en vertu des assurances sociales en Haute-Silésie, et qui fut cause de l'échec des négociations entre les deux Gouvernements à la suite de l'Arrêt n° 7. Mais, si l'on examine la conclusion à la lumière des observations contenues dans le Mémoire et surtout dans la Réplique, il est facile de constater que la créance résultant des assurances sociales en Haute-Silésie n'est visée qu'à titre d'exemple. En réalité, le Gouvernement allemand demande à la Cour une décision de principe, dont l'effet serait, soit d'exclure toute compensation de la créance résultant du futur arrêt de la Cour, soit, subsidiairement, de n'admettre pareille compensation que dans des circonstances déterminées.

Quant au Gouvernement polonais, s'il se borne, comme on l'a vu plus haut, à demander dans sa conclusion le rejet de la conclusion allemande, il résulte avec certitude des motifs à German submission No. 4 (a)—(b)—(c), and the Polish submissions A 3 and B I (c), which the Court therefore reserves for the judgment fixing the indemnity.

On the other hand, it is possible and convenient at once to decide the so-called question of set-off to which submission No. 4 (d) of the Applicant and submission C of the Respondent respectively relate.

The claim of the German Government in regard to this matter has, in the last instance, been couched in the following terms:

[Translation.]

“It is submitted that the Polish Government is not entitled to set off, against the above-mentioned claim for indemnity of the German Government, its claim in respect of social insurances in Upper Silesia; that it may not make use of any other set-off against the above-mentioned claim for indemnity; in the alternative, that set-off is only permissible if the Polish Government puts forward for this purpose a claim in respect of a debt recognized by the German Government or established by a judgment given between the two Governments.”

The Polish Government, for its part, has simply asked for the rejection of this submission.

If the German submission is read literally, it is possible to regard it as mainly designed to prevent a specific case of set-off, that is to say, the setting-off in this case of the claim which the Polish Government contends that it possesses in respect of social insurances in Upper Silesia, and which was the cause of the failure of the negotiations between the two Governments following Judgment No. 7. But, if we consider the submission in the light of the observations contained in the Case and more especially in the Reply, it is easy to see that the claim in respect of social insurances in Upper Silesia is only taken as an example. In reality, the German Government asks the Court for a decision of principle the effect of which would be either to prevent the set-off of any counter-claim against the indemnity fixed in the judgment to be given by the Court, or, alternatively, only to allow such set-off in certain defined circumstances.

Though, as has been seen, the Polish Government for its part confines itself in its submission to asking the Court to reject the German submission, the arguments advanced in l'appui de sa demande qu'à son avis, ladite conclusion allemande est à la fois prématurée et inadmissible et que, par conséquent, la Cour n'a pas le pouvoir de s'en occuper.

Dès lors, la question de la compétence de la Cour se trouve posée. Un accord des Parties pour soumettre à la Cour la question dite de la compensation étant exclu, il convient d'examiner avant tout si la Cour est compétente pour statuer sur la conclusion allemande n° 4 d) en vertu d'un autre titre qui, en l'espèce, ne saurait être que l'article 23 de la Convention de Genève.

Il est évident que la question de savoir si le droit international admet la compensation des créances, et, dans l'affirmative, quelles sont les conditions dans lesquelles la compensation est admise, est, comme telle, en dehors de la compétence que la Cour puise dans ledit article. Mais le Gouvernement allemand prétend que la question posée par lui ne concerne qu'une modalité du paiement que le Gouvernement polonais devra faire, et que, de ce chef, elle constitue une divergence d'opinions comprise dans la clause compromissoire de l'article.

La Cour croit devoir interpréter cette thèse dans le sens que l'exclusion de la compensation est demandée dans le but d'assurer, en l'espèce, l'effectivité et l'efficacité de la réparation.

On peut admettre, comme la Cour l'a dit dans son Arrêt n° 8, que la compétence pour statuer sur la réparation, due à raison de la violation d'une convention internationale, implique la compétence pour statuer sur les formes et modalités de la réparation. Si la réparation consiste dans le paiement d'une somme d'argent, la Cour peut donc fixer les modalités de ce paiement. C'est pourquoi elle peut bien déterminer à qui le paiement doit être fait, dans quel endroit, et à quel moment ; si le paiement doit être intégral ou peut avoir lieu par tranches ; qui doit en supporter les frais, etc. Il s'agit alors de l'application au cas d'espèce des règles générales relatives aux paiements, et la compétence de la Cour découle tout naturellement de sa compétence pour allouer une indemnité en argent.

Mais on étendrait d'une manière injustifiée la portée de ce principe si on l'entendait dans le sens que la Cour pourrait connaître de n'importe quelle question de droit international, support of its claim clearly show that it considers the said German submission to be both premature and inadmissible, and that the Court has therefore no power to deal with it.

The question of the Court's jurisdiction is thus clearly raised. Since there is no agreement between the Parties to submit to the Court the so-called question of set-off, it remains first of all to be considered whether the Court has jurisdiction to pass judgment on the German submission No. 4 (d) in virtue of any other provision, which, in the present case, could only be Article 23 of the Geneva Convention.

It is clear that the question whether international law allows claims to be set-off against each other, and if so, under what conditions such set-off is permitted, is, in itself, outside the jurisdiction derived by the Court from the said article. But the German Government contends that the question raised by it only relates to one aspect of the payment which the Polish Government must make and that, this being so, it constitutes a difference of opinion covered by the arbitration clause contained in the article.

The Court considers that this argument must be interpreted in the sense that the prohibition of set-off is asked for in order to ensure that in the present case reparation shall be really effective.

It may be admitted, as the Court has said in Judgment No. 8, that jurisdiction as to the reparation due for the violation of an international convention involves jurisdiction as to the forms and methods of reparation. If the reparation consists in the payment of a sum of money, the Court may therefore determine the method of such payment. For this reason it may well determine to whom the payment shall be made, in what place and at what moment; in a lump sum or maybe by instalments; where payment shall be made; who shall bear the costs, etc. It is then a question of applying to a particular case the general rules regarding payment, and the Court's jurisdiction arises quite naturally out of its jurisdiction to award monetary compensation.

But this principle would be quite unjustifiably extended if it were taken as meaning that the Court might have cognizance of any question whatever of international law.

même tout à fait étrangère à la convention dont il s'agit, pour le seul motif que la manière dont cette question est résolue peut avoir une influence sur l'efficacité de la réparation demandée. Pareille thèse ne semble guère conciliable avec les principes qui sont à la base de la compétence de la Cour, compétence limitée aux cas spécialement prévus dans les traités et conventions en vigueur.

Le point de vue du Gouvernement allemand est cependant que le pouvoir pour la Cour de statuer sur l'exclusion de la compensation découlerait du pouvoir qu'elle a d'assurer l'efficacité de la réparation. Or, il semble clair que cette thèse ne peut se référer qu'à une exception de compensation opposée au bénéficiaire par le débiteur, et qui serait de nature à dénuer la réparation de son efficacité. Tel serait notamment le cas si la créance opposée à la créance de réparation était contestée et devait donner lieu à un procès qui aurait en tout cas pour effet de retarder l'entrée en possession par l'intéressé de l'indemnité qui lui a été reconnue. Au contraire, si à la créance de réparation était opposée une créance liquide et non contestée, on ne voit pas pourquoi une exception de compensation fondée sur cette demande affecterait nécessairement l'efficacité de la réparation. Il s'ensuit que la compétence de la Cour, fondée sur l'article 23 de la Convention de Genève, ne pourrait en tout cas être invoquée qu'à l'égard d'une exception soulevée par la Partie défenderesse.

Or, il est constant que la Pologne n'a soulevé aucune exception de compensation ayant trait à telle ou telle créance déterminée qu'elle prétendrait avoir envers le Gouvernement allemand.

Il est vrai que, dans les négociations qui suivirent l'Arrêt n° 7, la Pologne avait avancé la prétention de compenser une partie de l'indemnité qu'elle se serait obligée de verser au Gouvernement allemand contre sa prétendue créance résultant des assurances sociales en Haute-Silésie. Mais la Cour a déjà eu l'occasion de constater qu'elle ne saurait faire état des déclarations, admissions ou propositions qu'ont pu faire les Parties au cours de négociations directes qui ont eu lieu entre elles. Rien, d'ailleurs, n'autorise la Cour à penser que le Gouvernement polonais voudrait faire valoir, à l'encontre d'un arrêt de la Cour, des prétentions qu'il a cru pouvoir avancer, even quite foreign to the convention under consideration, for the sole reason that the manner in which such question is decided may have an influence on the effectiveness of the reparation asked for. Such an argument seems hardly reconcilable with the fundamental principles of the Court's jurisdiction, which is limited to cases specially provided for in treaties and conventions in force.

The German Government's standpoint however is that the power of the Court to decide on the exclusion of set-off is derived from the power which it has to provide that reparation shall be effective. Now, it seems clear that this argument can only refer to a plea of set-off raised against the beneficiary by the debtor, of such a nature as to deprive reparation of its effectiveness. Such for instance would be the case if the claim put forward against the claim on the score of reparation was in dispute and was to lead to proceedings which would in any case have resulted in delaying the entry into possession by the person concerned of the compensation awarded to him. On the contrary, if a liquid and undisputed claim is put forward against the reparation claim, it is not easy to see why a plea of set-off based on this demand should necessarily prejudice the effectiveness of the reparation. It follows that the Court's jurisdiction under Article 23 of the Geneva Convention could in any case only be relied on in regard to a plea raised by the respondent Party.

Now it is admitted that Poland has raised no plea of set-off in regard to any particular claim asserted by her against the German Government.

It is true that in the negotiations which followed Judgment No. 7 Poland had put forward a claim to set off a part of the indemnity which she would have undertaken to pay the German Government, against the claim which she put forward in regard to social insurances in Upper Silesia. But the Court has already had occasion to state that it can take no account of declarations, admissions or proposals which the Parties may have made during direct negotiations between them. Moreover, there is nothing to justify the Court in thinking that the Polish Government would wish to put forward, against a judgment of the Court, claims which it may have thought au cours d'une négociation amiable destinée, dans l'intention des Parties, à aboutir à une transaction. La Cour doit aussi rappeler à ce propos ce qu'elle a déjà dit dans son Arrêt n° 1, savoir qu'elle ne peut ni ne doit envisager l'éventualité que l'arrêt resterait inexécuté après l'expiration du délai fixé pour son exécution.

Dans ces conditions, la Cour doit s'abstenir de statuer sur les conclusions dont il s'agit.

* * *

PAR CES MOTIFS,

La Cour,

statuant contradictoirement, par neuf voix contre trois,

1) décide et juge que, en raison de l'attitude prise par le Gouvernement polonais vis-à-vis des Sociétés anonymes Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke et Bayerische Stickstoffwerke et constatée par la Cour comme n'étant pas conforme aux dispositions des articles 6 et suivants de la Convention de Genève, le Gouvernement polonais est tenu de payer, à titre de réparation, au Gouvernement allemand une indemnité correspondant au préjudice subi par lesdites Sociétés du chef de ladite attitude ;

2) rejette les exceptions du Gouvernement polonais, tendant à exclure de l'indemnité à payer tout montant correspondant à tout ou partie du dommage subi par les Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke, et fondées soit sur le jugement rendu par le Tribunal de Katowice, le 12 novembre 1927, soit sur l'article 256 du Traité de Versailles ;

3) rejette la conclusion formulée par le Gouvernement polonais tendant à ce que le Gouvernement allemand, en premier lieu, livre au Gouvernement polonais la totalité des actions de la Société anonyme Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke, de la valeur nominale de 110.000.000 de marks, dont le Gouvernefit to raise during friendly negotiations which the Parties intended should lead to a compromise. The Court must also draw attention in this connection to what it has already said in Judgment No. 1 to the effect that it neither can nor should contemplate the contingency of the judgment not being complied with at the expiration of the time fixed for compliance.

In these circumstances the Court must abstain from passing upon the submissions in question.

* * *

FOR THESE REASONS,

The Court,

having heard both Parties,

by nine votes to three,

(1) gives judgment to the effect that, by reason of the attitude adopted by the Polish Government in respect of the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke and Bayerische Stickstoffwerke Companies, which attitude has been declared by the Court not to have been in conformity with the provisions of Article 6 and the following articles of the Geneva Convention, the Polish Government is under an obligation to pay, as reparation to the German Government, a compensation corresponding to the damage sustained by the said Companies as a result of the aforesaid attitude ;

(2) dismisses the pleas of the Polish Government with a view to the exclusion from the compensation to be paid of an amount corresponding to all or a part of the damage sustained by the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke, which pleas are based either on the judgment given by the Tribunal of Katowice on November 12th, 1927, or on Article 256 of the Treaty of Versailles ;

(3) dismisses the submission formulated by the Polish Government to the effect that the German Government should in the first place hand over to the Polish Government the whole of the shares of the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke Company, of the nominal value of 110,000,000

ment allemand dispose en vertu du contrat en date du 24 décembre 1919 ;

4) rejette la conclusion formulée subsidiairement par le Gouvernement polonais tendant à faire surseoir provisoirement sur la demande en indemnité pour ce qui concerne la Société Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke ;

5) rejette les conclusions du Gouvernement allemand tendant à ce qu'il soit dit et jugé que, jusqu'au 30 juin 1931, aucune exportation de chaux azotée et de nitrate d'ammoniaque n'aura lieu en Allemagne, dans les États-Unis d'Amérique, en France et en Italie ; et, subsidiairement, que le Gouvernement polonais est obligé de cesser l'exploitation de l'usine de Chorzów, respectivement, des installations chimiques pour produire le nitrate d'ammoniaque, etc. ;

6) décide et juge qu'il n'y a pas lieu de statuer sur les conclusions formulées par le Gouvernement allemand et tendant à ce qu'il soit dit et jugé que le Gouvernement polonais n'est pas autorisé à compenser contre la créance susdite du Gouvernement allemand d'être indemnisé sa créance résultant des assurances sociales en Haute-Silésie ; qu'il ne peut se prévaloir d'aucune autre compensation contre ladite créance d'indemnité, et, subsidiairement, qu'une compensation n'est autorisée que lorsque le Gouvernement polonais invoque à cette fin une créance reconnue par le Gouvernement allemand ou constatée par un arrêt rendu entre les deux Gouvernements ;

7) décide et juge que l'indemnité à payer par le Gouvernement polonais au Gouvernement allemand sera fixée à une somme globale ;

8) se réserve de déterminer, dans un futur arrêt, le montant de ladite indemnité, après avoir reçu le rapport des experts qu'elle nommera pour éclairer sa religion sur les questions formulées dans le présent arrêt et après avoir entendu les Parties au sujet de ce rapport ;

9) réserve également, pour ce futur arrêt, les conditions et modalités du paiement de l'indemnité en ce qui concerne les points qui ne sont pas tranchés par le présent arrêt.

marks, which are in the hands of the German Government under the contract of December 24th, 1919 ;

(4) dismisses the alternative submission formulated by the Polish Government to the effect that the claim for indemnity, in so far as the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke Company is concerned, should be provisionally suspended ;

(5) dismisses the submission of the German Government asking for judgment to the effect that, until June 30th, 1931, no nitrated lime and no nitrate of ammonia should be exported to Germany, to the United States of America, to France or to Italy, or, in the alternative, that the Polish Government should be obliged to cease working the factory or the chemical equipment for the production of nitrate of ammonia, etc. ;

(6) gives judgment to the effect that no decision is called for on the submissions of the German Government asking for judgment to the effect that the Polish Government is not entitled to set off, against the above-mentioned claim for indemnity of the German Government, its claim in respect of social insurances in Upper Silesia ; that it may not make use of any other set-off against the said claim for indemnity, and, in the alternative, that set-off is only permissible if the Polish Government puts forward for this purpose a claim in respect of a debt recognized by the German Government or established by a judgment given between the two Governments ;

(7) gives judgment to the effect that the compensation to be paid by the Polish Government to the German Government shall be fixed as a lump sum ;

(8) reserves the fixing of the amount of this compensation for a future judgment, to be given after receiving the report of experts to be appointed by the Court for the purpose of enlightening it on the questions set out in the present judgment and after hearing the Parties on the subject of this report ;

(9) also reserves for this future judgment the conditions and methods for the payment of the compensation in so far as concerns points not decided by the present judgment.

Le présent arrêt ayant été rédigé en français et en anglais, c'est le texte français qui fait foi.

Fait au Palais de la Paix, à La Haye, le treize septembre mil neuf cent vingt-huit, en trois exemplaires, dont l'un restera déposé aux archives de la Cour et dont les autres seront transmis aux agents des Gouvernements des Puissances requérante et défenderesse respectivement.

Le Président :

(Signé) D. ANZILOTTI.

Le Greffier-adjoint :

(Signé) PAUL RUEGGER.

M. de Bustamante, juge, déclare ne pouvoir se rallier à l'arrêt rendu par la Cour, en ce qui concerne le n° 8 du dispositif, en ce sens qu'il est d'avis que les questions indiquées sous les numéros I B et II dans l'arrêt ne devraient pas être posées aux experts.

M. Altamira, juge, déclare ne pouvoir se rallier à l'arrêt rendu par la Cour en ce qui concerne le n° 6 du dispositif.

M. Rabel, juge national, désire ajouter à l'arrêt les observations qui suivent.

Lord Finlay, juge, et M. Ehrlich, juge national, déclarant ne pouvoir se rallier à l'arrêt rendu par la Cour et se prévalant du droit que leur confère l'article 57 du Statut, ont joint audit arrêt les exposés suivants de leur opinion individuelle.

M. Nyholm, juge, ne pouvant se rallier au résultat de l'arrêt, désire y ajouter les observations suivantes.

(Paraphé) D. A.

(Paraphé) P. R.

Done in French and English, the French text being authoritative, at the Peace Palace, The Hague, this thirteenth day of September nineteen hundred and twenty-eight, in three copies, one of which is to be placed in the archives of the Court, and the others to be forwarded to the Agents of the applicant and respondent Parties respectively.

(Signed) D. ANZILOTTI,
President.

(Signed) PAUL RUEGGER,
Deputy-Registrar.

M. de Bustamante, Judge, declares that he is unable to concur in the judgment of the Court as regards No. 8 of the operative portion; he considers that the questions numbered I B and II in the judgment should not be put to the experts.

M. Altamira, Judge, declares that he is unable to concur in the judgment of the Court as regards No. 6 of the operative portion.

M. Rabel, National Judge, desires to add to the judgment the remarks which follow hereafter.

Lord Finlay, Judge, and M. Ehrlich, National Judge, declaring that they cannot concur in the judgment of the Court and availing themselves of the right conferred on them by Article 57 of the Statute, have delivered the separate opinions which follow hereafter.

M. Nyholm, Judge, being unable to concur in the result arrived at by the judgment, desires to add the remarks which follow hereafter.

(Initialled) D. A.

(Initialled) P. R.

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-120

Home   US English   resolve

Definition of resolve in English:

resolve

Pronunciation    /rəˈzɒlv/   /rəˈzɔlv/

Translate resolve into Spanish

VERB

1 [with object] Settle or find a solution to (a problem, dispute, or contentious matter)
'the firm aims to resolve problems within 30 days'

More example sentences

Synonyms

1.1 Medicine [with object] Cause (a symptom or condition) to disperse, subside, or heal.
'endoscopic biliary drainage can rapidly resolve jaundice'

More example sentences

1.2 [no object] (of a symptom or condition) disperse, subside, or heal.
'symptoms resolved after a median of four weeks'

More example sentences

1.3 Music [no object] (of a discord) lead into a concord during the course of harmonic change.

[no object] 'dissonant notes resolve conventionally by rising or falling to form part of a new chord'

More example sentences

1.4 Music [with object] Cause (a discord) to pass into a concord.

2 [no object] Decide firmly on a course of action.
[with infinitive] 'she resolved to call Dana as soon as she got home'

More example sentences

Synonyms

2.1 [with clause] (of a legislative body, committee, or other formal meeting) make a decision by a formal vote.

[with infinitive] 'the conference resolved to support an alliance'

More example sentences

Synonyms

3 Chemistry

Separate or cause to be separated into components.

[with object] 'alpha-zein is often resolved into two major size components'

More example sentences

Synonyms

3.1 (resolve something into) [with object]

Reduce a subject, statement, etc. by mental analysis into (separate elements or a more elementary form)

'the ability to resolve facts into their legal categories'

More example sentences

Synonyms

3.2 Physics [with object] Analyze (a force or velocity) into components acting in particular directions.

'Harriot resolved the forces acting on the projectile into horizontal and vertical components.'

More example sentences

4 [no object] (of something seen at a distance) turn into a different form when seen more clearly.

'the orange glow resolved itself into four lanterns'

More example sentences

Synonyms

- 4.1 [with object] (of optical or photographic equipment) separate or distinguish between (closely adjacent objects)
'Hubble was able to resolve six variable stars in M31'

More example sentences

- 4.2 [with object] Separately distinguish (peaks in a graph or spectrum).
'For the detector to resolve two peaks, one pixel between the two peaks must receive a lower signal than its neighbors.'

More example sentences

---

NOUN

- 1 Firm determination to do something.

'she received information that strengthened her resolve'

More example sentences

Synonyms

- 1.1 US A formal resolution by a legislative body or public meeting.
'A resolution does not carry any force of law; it expresses the resolve of a legislative body by drawing attention and awareness to an important subject.'

More example sentences

---

Origin

Late Middle English (in the senses 'dissolve, disintegrate' and 'solve (a problem)'): from Latin resolvere, from re- (expressing intensive force) + solvere 'loosen'.

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-121

Oxford English Dictionary | The definitive record of the English language

resolve, v.

Pronunciation: Brit. /rɪ'zɒlv/, U.S. /rə'zɒlv/, /ri'zɒlv/,

/rə'zɑlv/, /ri'zɑlv/

Forms: ME resolu, ME–16 resolue, ME– resolve, 15 resoulve, 16 resollve, 16 resolv; Scottish pre-17 resol, pre-17 resolf, pre-17 resoll, pre-17 resollve, pre-17 resolue, pre-17 resolwe, pre-17 resoul, pre-17 risolv, pre-17 17– resolve, 18 resoal (Shetland), 19– rezol (Shetland).

Frequency (in current use):

Origin: A borrowing from Latin. Etymons: Latin resolvere, French resolver.

Etymology: < classical Latin resolvere to loosen, undo, unfasten, to unravel, solve, to unbind, to release, to separate into components, break up, to reduce to liquid, melt, dissolve, to soften, reduce to pulp, to make less tense, relax, to weaken the nerves of, paralyse, to make less strict or disciplined, to pay back (money owed), to discharge (a promise or vow), to put an end to, finish, settle, to cancel, nullify, to refute, rebut, in post-classical Latin also to flow out, emerge (6th cent.; < re- RE- prefix + solvere SOLVE v.), perhaps partly via Middle French (rare) resolver to solve (a problem), to make a decision (both c1370), to cause (a substance) to melt or dissolve (c1380); compare (with change of conjugation) Middle French resolvir to dissolve, melt (1528). The usual French verb expressing the senses of the English verb is Middle French resoudre, resouldre, ressoudre (French résoudre) (first quarter of the 13th cent. in Old French in past participle resous, originally in sense '(of a sum of money or damages) paid'; see below for a summary of its senses), a borrowing of classical Latin resolvere with alteration after Old French soldre, soudre SOIL v.<sup>2</sup> Compare Catalan resoldre (1438), Spanish resolver (first half of the 14th cent.), Portuguese resolver (14th cent.), Italian risolvere (c1340; also †resolvere). Compare SOLVE v. and earlier DISSOLVE v., which show partial semantic overlap with this word.

Senses of French résoudre which have a parallel in English include the following: to cause to melt or dissolve (beginning of the 14th cent., originally in passive construction etre resoult), to decide to follow a course of action (1356 in resoldre de; also used reflexively (c1500)), to break up or separate (a material thing) into constituent parts or elements, to reduce (a subject, statement, phenomenon, etc.) by analysis into more elementary forms, principles, etc. (both c1377), to release (something) from its bonds (second half of the 15th cent.), to cause to disappear (1525), to come to a conclusion about, to make a decision concerning (an issue) (1535), to disperse or dissolve (humours, morbid material, etc.) (1549), to change or transform (a material or immaterial thing) into some other state or form (1559), to cause (a thing, especially a part of the body) to become slack or limp (second half of the 16th cent.), to solve (a problem) (1564; 1690 with specific reference to a mathematical problem, 1765 with specific reference to an equation), to be satisfied or convinced (1568 in the passage translated in quot. 1585 at sense 22c), to inform (a person) about (something) (1609), to annul (a law, contract, etc.) (1668), (in music) to alter or transform (a discord) into a concord (1753).

I. Senses relating to liquefaction, dissolution, or softening.

1. In later use only with into (cf. sense 8).

a. transitive. To cause to melt or dissolve; to reduce from a solid to a liquid or fluid state. Now rare.

In quot. a1398: to soften by the application of heat.

- ▶ a1398 J. TREVISA tr. Bartholomaeus Anglicus De Proprietatibus Rerum (BL Add.) f. 199 A stoon resolueþ [read resolved; L. resolutus] wiþ hete torneþ in to bras.
- ?c1400 (▶ c1380) G. CHAUCER tr. Boethius De Consol. Philos. (BL Add. 10340) (1868) iv. met. v. l. 3814 Þe wey3te of þe snowe yhardid by þe colde is resolued [L. solvier] by þe brennyngte hete of phebus þe sonne.
- ▶ ?1440 tr. Palladius De re Rustica (Duke Humfrey) (1896) xii. 526 (MED) For brousty oil, whit wex is to resolue In fynest oil, and theryn throwe hit so.

- 1530 J. PALSGRAVE Lesclarcissement 688/1 This metall can nat be resolved without a marvayllous sharpe fyre.
- 1555 R. EDEN tr. Peter Martyr of Angleria Decades of Newe Worlde III. i. f. 93<sup>v</sup> Cleopatra..resolved a pearle in vineger and drunke it.
- 1609 P. HOLLAND tr. Ammianus Marcellinus Rom. Hist. 117 Euphrates was risen by reason of snow newly thawed and resolved.
- 1678 J. DRYDEN All for Love III. 32 He could resolve his mind, as Fire does Wax, From that hard rugged Image, melt him down [etc.].
- 1732 J. ARBUTHNOT Pract. Rules of Diet i. 270 Soaps which resolve solid Substances.
- 1735 T. DALLOWE tr. H. Boerhaave Elements Chem. I. II. 240 Let it [sc. the white of an egg] be exposed to 92 degrees of Heat..and it will in a little time be resolved into a Liquid, that grows continually thinner and thinner.
- 1834 P. M. ROGET Animal & Veg. Physiol. I. 97 A soft and transparent jelly, which by spontaneous decomposition after death..is resolved almost wholly into a limpid watery fluid.
- 1905 Atlantic Monthly Nov. 656/2 There it [sc. ice] will remain..until the warm sun of spring shall resolve it into water again.
- 1998 D. GARBER et al. in D. Garber & M. Ayers Camb. Hist. 17th-Cent. Philos. (2003) I. xviii. 560 Solid combustibles..., like resins and waxes, must first be resolved into liquid.

†b. transitive. To condense (a vapour or mist) to a liquid. Also figurative.
Obsolete.

- ▶ a1398 J. TREVISA tr. Bartholomaeus Anglicus De Proprietatibus Rerum (BL Add.) f. 199<sup>v</sup> Myst..soone þer after..is resolued in to reyn dropes.
- c1450 (▶ c1415) in W. O. Ross Middle Eng. Serm. (1940) 247 (MED) Som tyme he resolueþ by very contricion þe thike cloudes of synne in-to swete dewy teres.
- 1635 J. SWAN Speculum Mundi v. §2. 144 Green clouds..are altogether watery, and as it were already resolved into water.
- 1668 N. CULPEPER & A. COLE tr. T. Bartholin Anat. (new ed.) I. xxvii. 65 The sooty Vapors are condensed, and being resolved into water, are [etc.].
- 1878 Sanitary Rec. 4 Jan. 9/1 Another physicist..has attacked oxygen, and, with the aid of great pressure and cold, has resolved it into a liquid.
- 1892 T. S. HUNT Systematic Mineral. (ed. 2) iii. 18 The vapor of water above 100°..behaves like a true gas, but below that point is resolved into a liquid.

c. intransitive. To melt; to dissolve; to become liquid. Also figurative. Now rare.

- c1450 Alphabet of Tales (1905) II. 443 Þis yse resoluyd into watir.
- a1500 (▶ ?a1425) tr. Secreta Secret. (Lamb.) 72 In þis tyme..þe wyndes blowyn, þe snow resoluys.
- c1540 J. BELLENDEN tr. H. Boece Cosmog. viii, in tr. H. Boece Hyst. & Cron. Scotl. sig. Bv<sup>v</sup> Ony frosyn thyng (that is cassyn in it) meltis and resoluys hastelie.
- 1611 B. JONSON Catiline III. sig. H2 May my braine Resolue to water, and my bloud turne phlegme.
- a1616 W. SHAKESPEARE King John (1623) v. iv. 25 Euen as a forme of waxe Resolueth from his figure 'gainst the fire.
- 1665 Philos. Trans. (Royal Soc.) 1 106 After a while it resolves again, and grows dilute.

- 1696 T. SOUTHERNE Oroonoko v. v Our honours, interests resolving down, Run in the gentle current of our joys.
- 1731 J. ARBUTHNOT Ess. Nature Aliments iv. 46 When the Blood stagnates in any part of the Body, it first coagulates, then resolves, turns Alkaline.
- 1759 B. MARTIN Nat. Hist. Eng. I. 19 Congealed (as it were) in Clusters, which resolve, and the frozen Swallows revive by the Warmth.
- 1791 W. NICHOLSON tr. J. A. C. Chaptal Elements Chem. III. vi. ix. 365 White flocks are deposited on the sides of the glass, which resolve into a liquor by the contact of moist air.
- 1848 A. NORMANDY tr. H. Rose Pract. Treat. Chem. Anal. I. II. ii. 450 The compounds..all absorb moisture from the air, and resolve into a yellow liquid.
- 1912 A. TEIXEIRA DE MATTOS tr. J. H. Fabre Life of Spider vii. 187 When ripe, the fleshy core resolves into a liquid in which float the seeds.

d. transitive (reflexive). = sense 1c. Now rare.

- 1604 W. SHAKESPEARE Hamlet I. ii. 130 O that this too too sallid flesh would melt, Thaw and resolve it selfe into a dewe.
- 1800 R. SOUTHEY Cool Reflections in Ann. Anthol. II. 31 For the flesh upon them That hath resolved itself into a dew.
- 1808 Jrnl. Nat. Philos. Dec. 267 A white salt, which on exposure to the air speedily resolved itself into a fluid.
- 1868 SIR J. HERSCHEL in People's Mag. Jan. 63 Its pileus..has the singular property of resolving itself..into a black liquid.
- 1954 A. MOOREHEAD Summer Night iii. 61 Inside the press the grapes were bursting under their own weight, resolving themselves into a dark liquid pulp.

†2. transitive. To soften (literal and figurative); to cause to become slack or limp; to weaken. Also (occasionally) intransitive with object implied.

Obsolete.

- a1398 J. TREVISA tr. Bartholomaeus Anglicus De Proprietatibus Rerum (BL Add. 27944) (1975) I. x. vii. 563 By his scharpnesse cool sowdiþ iren and resolyth and slakeþ þe parties þerof and makeþ it neissche.
- ?a1425 tr. Guy de Chauliac Grande Chirurgie (N.Y. Acad. Med.) f. 24 (MED) When..þe ende is of þe state, be þer noȝt but þat resoluēþ & makeþ laxē.
- c1451 J. CAPGRAVE Life St. Gilbert (1910) 100 (MED) Þe grete constrictiō of hir wombe was resolved meruelously.
- 1484 W. CAXTON tr. Subtyl Historyes & Fables Esope f. iij By cause the water was hote and their stomake [was] resolved by the water.
- 1541 T. ELYOT Image of Gouvernance x. f. 18<sup>v</sup> Like as by the other the strength of body is resolved.
- 1577 H. RHODES Bk. Nurture (new ed.) sig. Eiii It is a very hard work of continence, to repell the paynting glose of flatterings whose words resolve the hart with plesure.
- 1588 T. KYD tr. T. Tasso Housholders Philos. f. 6<sup>v</sup> The night..[in which] we may sufficiently restore our bodies resolved with exceeding heate and contagions of the day.
- 1644 J. BULWER Chirologia 35 The Hand collected, the Fingers looking downwards, then turned and resolved.

1715 N. ROWE Lady Jane Gray II Every moving accent that she breathes Resolves my courage, slackens my tough nerves.

3. Medicine.

†a. transitive. To disperse or dissolve (humours, morbid material, etc.); to soften (an accumulation of hardened material). Also intransitive: to perform or undergo such a process. Obsolete.

In later use there is some overlap with sense 3c.

- ▶ a1398 J. TREVISA tr. Bartholomaeus Anglicus De Proprietatibus Rerum (BL Add. 27944) (1975) II. XVIII. lxxxvii. 1238 In wynter humours ben sadde yfastned togidres by colde... And þefore fewe fumositees ben resolved in þat tyme for passyng colde þat fastneþ þe humours in þe body.
- a1400 tr. Lanfranc Sci. Chirurgie (Ashm.) (1894) 210 (MED) If þou miȝt not..do awei þe enpostym ne resolve him..þan þou schalt do þerto medicyns maturatiuis.
- a1400 tr. Lanfranc Sci. Chirurgie (Ashm.) (1894) 353 (MED) þan oonli wiþ resolutiuis..þe sotil mater wole resolve, & þat oþir part wole bicombe hard.
- ?a1425 MS Hunterian 95 f. 105<sup>v</sup> (MED) Ane harde enpostume is cured wiþ resolutiues & mollificatiues, so þat o tyme þu schalt resolve & anoþer tyme mollifie.
- a1500 tr. Lanfranc Sci. Chirurgie (Wellcome) f. 23 (MED) If þe mater..is gret..resolu it with a light resolutiue.
- ?1541 R. COPLAND Galen's Fourth Bk. Terapeutyke sig. Hiv, in Guy de Chauliac's Questyonyary Cyrurgyens When ecchymosis is all dygested & resolved, than it is parmytted to drye the broken flesshe.
- 1562 W. TURNER Herball (1568) II. 117 Oyl that is made of vnrype oliues..doth myghtely resolve.
- 1585 J. BANISTER Wecker's Compend. Chyrurg. I. 242 If the tumor doe by these meanes resolve and vanish, pursue it with a cataplasme.
- 1601 P. HOLLAND tr. Pliny Hist. World II. 274 Those plasters which resolve or maturat any impostumed place.
- 1610 G. MARKHAM Maister-peece II. clxxiii. 483 It burneth, draweth, and resolueth, and is goode for scurfe.
- 1683 W. SALMON Doron Medicum II. 427 For it resolves all hard humors.
- 1708 Brit. Apollo 29–31 Dec. Green Tea..Resolves, and Attenuates.
- 1717 D. TURNER Syphilis II. 208 The inguinal Tumour entirely resolving, and the Pustules every where dying away and falling off.
- 1749 D. HARTLEY Observ. Man I. ii. §i. 127 Embrocations are of Use in resolving Obstructions.
- 1800 W. C. BROWN tr. G. Borsieri de Kanifeld Inst. Pract. Med. I. 296 Friction during the paroxysm..contributed much to resolve the remains of the swelling.

†b. transitive. To relieve or reduce (a condition, esp. pain or numbness). Obsolete. rare.

- 1573 Treas. Hid. Secrets xix Oyle of Rue is hot, resolving pain.
- a1617 P. BAYNES Comm. Ephes. (1658) 130 Fire..hath not onely heat resolving numbnesse,..but it hath light.
- 1638 W. RAWLEY tr. F. Bacon Hist. Nat. & Exper. Life & Death 29 The Drying caused by Cold, is but weak, and easily resolved.
- 1651 D. BORDER Πολυφαρμακος και Χυμωστης 135 It helpeth digestion and resolveth pain throughout the body, in what part soever they shall come, especially, when they have their beginning of cold.

c. transitive. To bring (a disease, pathological process, etc.) to resolution (RESOLUTION n.<sup>1</sup> 2c).

- 1730 Dr. Allen's Synopsis Medicinæ II. xii. 88 Aq. calcis vivæ, if anything else, always takes away the Inflammation, resolves and discusses it.
- 1732 J. ARBUTHNOT Pract. Rules of Diet iii. 321 Such a Fever is often resolv'd by a bleeding at the Nose.
- 1811 E. G. CLARKE New London Pract. Physic (ed. 7) 158 Emetics should be given with caution, if at all; and the clyster thrown up, which often resolves the inflammation.
- 1861 Chicago Med. Examiner 2 493 In relapsing fever, the powerful diaphoresis which so frequently at once resolves the fever, inculcates the same doctrine.
- 1898 T. C. ALLBUTT et al. Syst. Med. V. 361 When empyema follows upon pneumonia, the pulmonary inflammation sometimes is never resolved.
- 2002 Daily Tel. 3 May 24/8 This [sc. aloe vera gel] may resolve nasal polyps within eight weeks.

d. intransitive. Of a disease, pathological process, etc.: to undergo resolution (RESOLUTION n.<sup>1</sup> 2c).

- 1793 W. ROWLEY Rational Pract. Physic III. 13 Its cure should be attempted by a mode similar to the foregoing, by which the tumor often resolves.
- 1822 J. M. GOOD Study Med. II. 505 Regular fit of gout..gradually resolving, and leaving the constitution in its usual or improved health.
- 1898 P. MANSON Trop. Dis. xxvii. 434 These drugs have undoubtedly the power of causing the eruption in yaws to resolve.
- 1933 Jrnl. Hygiene 33 283/1 Eustachian drainage is quickly re-established, allowing middle ear inflammation to resolve.
- 2001 Cats Aug. 9/1 Another possibility is cholangiohepatitis... It often never completely resolves, and tends to flare up from time to time.

†4. intransitive. With of, from. To flow out, issue. Obsolete. rare.

- ?c1400 (► c1380) G. CHAUCER tr. Boethius De Consol. Philos. (BL Add. 10340) (1868) v. met. i. l. 4369 Tigris [and] eufrates resoluen [L. resolvunt] and spryngen of a welle in þe kragges of þe roche of þe contre of achemenye.
- 1601 P. HOLLAND tr. Pliny Hist. World I. XII. xvi. 369 Little peeces..yeeld a certaine whitish liquor which issueth and resolveth from them.

†5. transitive. With in, into, to. To cause to lapse into or be given over to a particular emotional state or mode of behaviour. Usually in passive. Obsolete.

When used in relation to tears (of grief, etc.) often as part of an extended metaphor, and as such closer in meaning to sense 1; cf. DISSOLVE v. 3.

- a1438 Bk. Margery Kempe (1940) I. 153 (MED) Sche was resoluyd in-to terys of pyte & compassyon.
- c1460 Tree & 12 Frutes (McClean) (1960) 15 (MED) Ofte tymes after mete many ben resoluid to lightnes and in to vnreligious myrthes.

- 1533 T. ELYOT Pasquil the Playne f. 7 Where thou seest thy lorde or mayster in the presence of many, resolved in to fury or wantonnesse.
- 1611 B. JONSON Catiline III. sig. G4 Each house [being] Resolu'd in freedome.
- 1631 R. BOLTON Instr. Right Comf. Affl. Consciences 260 The Alien..is by the heate of his slavish horrour, rather enraged with malice, then resolved into mercy.
- 1679 J. GOODMAN Penitent Pardoned II. i. 157 Such reflections and considerations as these break the very heart of a sinner, and resolve him into sighs and tears.

†6. transitive. To cause (conflict) to cease. Obsolete.

- a1530 W. BONDE Pylgrimage of Perfeccyon (1531) III. f. CCLxxxii<sup>v</sup> It resolueth discorde, reconsyleth ennemyes, & maketh them frendes.

7. transitive. Chiefly Scots Law. To annul (a law, contract, etc.). Also intransitive: (of a contract of sale) to become void. Now rare.

- 1537 in State Papers Henry VIII (1849) VII. 706 The act made for money by exchange, the wiche,..onles it be resolvid, wilbe a great ocacion..to cawse a stey for salis of wolen clothis.
- a1768 J. ERSKINE Inst. Law Scotl. (1773) II. III. iii. 449 If he fail to pay the price within the time limited, the sale resolves, and the property returns from him to the seller.
- 1771 in M. P. BROWN Decisions Lords of Council & Session 1766–91 (1826) I. 435 I do not see a substantial difference between the contract before and after the tailie: all the parties concerned may still agree to resolve the contract and tailie.
- 1838 W. BELL Dict. Law Scotl. 859 Resolutive Condition, a condition in a sale, which does not suspend the completion of the contract; but which resolves the sale, if the condition be purified at the time specified.
- 1978 Internat. & Compar. Law Q. 27 277 The far more usual practice [in Roman law] was for the contract of sale to fix the latest date by which the price should be paid and empower the seller to resolve the contract if it was not paid by then.

II. Senses relating to splitting, breaking up, or transformation.

8.

a.

(a) transitive. To break up or separate (a material thing) into constituent parts or elements; to disintegrate (something); (also) to cause (a body, earth, etc.) to decompose. Frequently (now usually) with into (formerly also †to).

- ▶ a1398 J. TREVISA tr. Bartholomaeus Anglicus De Proprietatibus Rerum (BL Add. 27944) (1975) I. VII. xxxvi. 384 Whanne picke mater and gret and glemy so ioyned in þe body meoviþ by hete, hit nediþ þat it be resolved..into vapour.
- ?c1400 (▶ c1380) G. CHAUCER tr. Boethius De Consol. Philos. (BL Add. 10340) (1868) II. pr. vii. l. 1600 What atteineiþ fame to swiche folk whan þe body is resolved by þe deēþ atte þe last[e].
- a1450 St. Katherine (Richardson 44) (1884) 52 (MED) Þou haue power for a tyme to vse þy cruelte vpon my body, whyche..abydeth to be resolved in to deþ.
- a1500 (▶ c1477) T. NORTON Ordinal of Alchemy (BL Add.) (1975) 2296 (MED) Liqueours departith qualitees a-sondyre, Substance resoluynge in attoms with wondire.

- 1533 J. BELLENDEN tr. Livy Hist. Rome (1901) I. i. xv. 85 Because þe stoupis and pillaris þareof war all of tre, they war haistelie brynt and resolut in powder.
- 1577 B. GOUGE tr. C. Heresbach Fourre Bks. Husbandry I. f. 17<sup>v</sup> A mellowe ground that is fatte, and wyll soone be resolved.
- 1579 T. LUPTON Thousand Notable Things II. 27 A flynt stone lying in Vineger the space of seuen dayes: maye be resolved into powder by rubbing betweene the fyngers.
- 1620 T. VENNER Via Recta iii. 52 They will too soon resolve the iuyce of lighter meats.
- 1633 BP. J. HALL Plaine Explic. Hard Texts I. 321 O ye my faithfull ones, who are now resolved to the very dust of the earth.
- 1667 T. VINCENT Christ's Appearance to Judgment iv. 17 The flesh is consumed, and resolved into its first elements.
- 1727 P. SHAW & E. CHAMBERS tr. H. Boerhaave New Method Chem. 177/1 The common doctrine., that the different substances into which mix'd bodies are commonly resolved by fire, are not of pure and elementary nature.
- 1776 T. BOWDEN Farmer's Director 18 By the assistance of alternate rain and drought, to resolve and break the hard clods.
- 1838 T. THOMSON Chem. Org. Bodies 54 When malic acid is distilled at the temperature of 349°, it is resolved into water, and two pyro-acids, which are isomeric.
- 1891 Spectator 4 July 5/2 A..campaign intended to break up Italy, or to resolve the German Empire back again into its elements.
- 1931 A. D. HALL Soil (ed. 4) ii. 48 Repeatedly kneading and working it [sc. clay], by which process the naturally formed aggregates are resolved into their ultimate particles.
- 1945 R. A. KNOX God & Atom i. 13 It might be possible..to resolve the molecule into its component parts, but beyond that lay something smaller yet, completely indivisible.
- 1989 Hobart Mercury (Nexis) 10 Jan. The polysaccharide plastic can be resolved into soil in one to 12 months, depending on its ingredients.
- 2005 D. J. DAVIES & L. H. MATES Encycl. Cremation 327/2 The cremationists..argued..that cremation merely resolved the body into its constituent elements.

(b) intransitive. Usually with into (formerly also +to). Of a material thing: to undergo dissolution or separation into constituent parts or elements, or into a more basic or fundamental state; to decompose; to disintegrate. Also figurative.

- a1500 ( ▶ ?a1425) tr. Secreta Secret. (Lamb.) 68 (MED) Mannys body, þat ys takynge mete and drynke, continuely er dimunished and resoluyn aʒeyn, als wel þe bodyes þat ressayuen als þe mete and þe drynke ressayued.
- 1509 J. FISHER Mornyngge Remembraunce Countesse of Rychemonde (de Worde) sig. Biii<sup>v</sup> Fyrst it [sc. the body] anone begynneth to putrefye & resolute in to foule corrupcyon.
- 1589 R. GREENE Menaphon sig. F4<sup>v</sup> Pleusidippus eyes at this speach resolved into fire.
- 1648 R. SANDERSON Serm. II. 245 As soon as touched..[they] resolve all into dust and smoak.
- a1657 G. DANIEL Trinarchodia: Henry IV lxxvii, in Poems (1878) IV. 20 This Insect..Resolves to dirt againe in the next Storme.
- 1674 Philos. Trans. (Royal Soc.) 9 4 They [sc. leaves] will soon become very hot..and after a few days resolve into a pappy substance.
- 1716 A. POPE tr. Homer Iliad II. VII. 113 Go then! resolve to Earth from whence ye grew.

- 1787 G. ADAMS Ess. Microscope 462 The several species of microscopic animals may subside, resolve again into gelatinous filaments, and again give lesser animals.
- 1820 Edinb. Encycl. (1830) XIV. 138/1 The iron..becomes dry and brittle, resolves into grains, and refuses to cohere or extend under the hammer.
- 1878 M. A. BROWN tr. J. L. Runeberg Nadeschda 66 The marble then In transformation dire into speech resolved.
- 1916 Lancet 8 July 67/1 The proteins do not all alike resolve into the same amino-acids.
- 1976 Compar. Biochem. & Physiol. B. 54 434/2 The haemolysates of both plaice and flounder resolve into several components during isoelectric focusing.
- 2004 G. J. H. GRUBBEN & O. A. DENTON Plant Resources Trop. Afr. II. 273/2 When cooked the flesh of mature fruits resolves into thin strands which look like spaghetti.

(c) transitive (reflexive) in same sense. Now rare.

- 1812 Q. Rev. Sept. 30 The whole fabric [of the ship] resolves itself into its constituent parts, scarcely any two of them remaining in adhesion.
- 1851 W. B. CARPENTER Man. Physiol. (ed. 2) 487 The first change..in the Mammalian ovum, is the 'segmentation' of the yolk; the entire mass of which..resolves itself..into..segments.
- 1905 Bot. Gaz. 40 88 This vesicle..resolves itself into fibers.
- 1937 C. D. DARLINGTON Rec. Adv. in Cytol. (ed. 2) i. 22 The characteristic process of mitosis in the course of which the whole nucleus, apart from the nucleoli, resolves itself into longitudinally split threads, the chromosomes.

†b. transitive. To produce (a substance) by disintegration or decomposition;
esp. to cause (smoke or vapour) to be given off from something. Obsolete.

- ▶ a1398 J. TREVISA tr. Bartholomaeus Anglicus De Proprietatibus Rerum (BL Add. 27944) (1975) I. x. x. 565 Asken..is gendrid and resolued [L. resolutus] of substaunce of erþy matiere by strengþe of hete.
  - ▶ a1398 J. TREVISA tr. Bartholomaeus Anglicus De Proprietatibus Rerum (BL Add. 27944) (1975) II. xvii. ii. 892 More smal and sotil smoke is resolued of þe male [tree] þan of þe femel.
- c1425 tr. J. Arderne Treat. Fistula (Sloane 6) (1910) 59 (MED) Of rawnes of digestion is þe vryne discolored, And it appereþ with poudry resolucions which bene resolued of malencolious blode.
- a1475 in Neuphilol. Mitteilungen (1957) 58 61 (MED) The son and other sterrys, sendyng ther beemys unto the erthe and water, resolveth of and pulleþe fro the erthe diverse vapores.
- a1500 ( ▶ c1477) T. NORTON Ordinal of Alchemy (BL Add.) (1975) l. 1973 (MED) Odour is a smokish vapour resoluyd with hete Owte of a substance bi a Invisible swete.

9.

a.

(a) transitive. To reduce (a subject, statement, phenomenon, etc.) by analysis into more elementary forms, principles, etc.; to consider or demonstrate (something) to be divisible or analysable into. Formerly also with †in.

- ▶ a1398 J. TREVISA tr. Bartholomaeus Anglicus De Proprietatibus Rerum (BL Add.) f. 329v Þe triangle may nouȝt be so y-deled in oþre figures than triangles in þis wise..þat oþere figures beþ resolued and deled in triangles.

- a1450 ( ▶ a1397) Prol. Old Test. in Bible (Wycliffite, L.V.) (Cambr. Mm.2.15) (1850) xv. 57 An ablatif case absolute may be resoluid into these thre wordis.
- 1570 H. BILLINGSLEY tr. Euclid Elements Geom. i. f. 41<sup>v</sup> Euery right lined figure is resolued in two triangles.
- 1628 T. SPENCER Art of Logick 284 When the causes doe argue the effect, the effect is resolued into the causes.
- a1674 EARL OF CLARENDON Brief View Leviathan (1676) 8 He resolv'd all Wisdom and Religion itself into a simple obedience and submission to it.
- 1719 D. DEFOE Life Robinson Crusoe 237 After I had entertain'd these Notions, and by long musing, had as it were resolved them all into nothing.
- 1774 T. PENNANT Tour Scotl. 1772 233 I was for resolving this phænomenon into Ship-wrecks.
- 1841–8 F. MYERS Catholic Thoughts II. iv. §2. 184 Why may we not..resolve Christianity into a system of practical Morality?
- 1871 B. JOWETT in tr. Plato Dialogues III. 335 All sensation is to be resolved into a similar combination of an agent and patient.
- 1916 J. E. BOODIN Realistic Universe ii. 20 We cannot resolve reality, whether conscious or unconscious, into bundles of perception, or into experience of any form, altogether.
- 1958 J. S. HINES tr. A. Mathiot Brit. Polit. Syst. i. ii. 88 Such an issue can be resolved into a simple choice between two parties.
- 2003 Jrnl. Paleontol. 77 1088/1 The distribution of living corbulid genera can be resolved into three broad biogeographic regions.

(b) transitive (reflexive). Of a subject, statement, etc.: to be susceptible of such reduction or analysis.

- 1739 D. HUME Treat. Human Nature I. i. 11 All the perceptions of the human mind resolve themselves into two distinct kinds, which I shall call Impressions and Ideas.
- 1814 T. CHALMERS Evid. Christian Revel. ii. 46 The argument..resolves itself into four parts.
- 1879 J. LUBBOCK Addresses, Polit. & Educ. iii. 44 His complaint resolves itself into two parts.
- 1904 Athenæum 9 Apr. 464/3 I find..upon making a careful stichometrical analysis of the Libellus, that it resolves itself into thirty-eight sections.
- 1956 Shakespeare Q. 7 387 It will be seen from the above printing that the song resolves itself into five sections.
- 2001 D. KEPPEL-JONES Strict Metrical Trad. 26 Rhythm tends to resolve itself into three aspects.

b. transitive. To reduce or convert (a quantity) into specified units. Now rare.

- ?a1560 L. DIGGES Geom. Pract.: Pantometria (1571) i. xxi. sig. G j<sup>v</sup> Then resolue 20 foote into inches.
- 1669 S. STURMY Mariners Mag. II. vi. 66 The Degrees resolved into Hours and Minutes, is 1 Hour 49 Min.
- a1687 W. PETTY Polit. Anat. Ireland (1691) 352 The victuals.., resolved into money, may be estimated 3s. 6d. per week.
- a1803 R. CHAMBERS Treat. Estates & Tenures (1824) vi. 189 The reliefs in earlier times..were paid in horses, and arms, and habiliments of war: but these, like other things, were in time resolved into money.
- 1873 Amer. Educ. Monthly May 193 This day.., if resolved into minutes, and divided by 365, will give the four minutes difference between solar and sidereal time.

- 1908 Strand Mag. Oct. 440/1 Eighteen thousand francs is not a large sum when resolved into pounds, shillings, and pence.
- 1938 Navy Dept. Appropriation Bill: Hearings before House Appropriations Comm. (75th U.S. Congr., 3rd Sess.) 207 I should like to have that resolved into dollars and cents... The cost..is $1,713.88.

†c. transitive. To analyse, examine (a statement). Obsolete. rare.

- 1593 R. HOOKER Of Lawes Eccl. Politie II. vii. 120 Examine, sift, and resolute their alleaged proofes, till you come to the very roote..whence they springe.
- 1599 tr. A. Munday Treat. Vertue of Crosse sig. C4<sup>v</sup> These matters first heere noted, haue vrged vs to resolute such allegations, as are containyd in the first placard.

10.

a.

(a) transitive. To convert, transform, alter, render (a material or immaterial thing) into some other thing or form. Formerly also with †to. Also figurative.

- a1450 ( ▶ a1397) Prol. Old Test. in Bible (Wycliffite, L.V.) (Cambr. Mm.2.15) (1850) xv. 57 A participle of a present tens..mai be resoluid into a verbe of the same tens, and a coniunccion copulatif, as thus..seinyge, mai be resoluid thus, and seith, eithir that seith.
- a1538 T. STARKEY Dial. Pole & Lupset (1989) 11 Yf ther be any cyvyll law ordeynyd wych can not be resolvyd therto, hyt ys of no value.
- 1565 N. SANDERS Supper of Our Lord IV. f. 196 The cause why the verb est should be resolved into the verb significat, must nedes come from the word corpus body.
- 1591 R. WILMOT Tancred & Gismund II. iii. sig. C2<sup>v</sup> A resolution that resolves my bloud Into the Ice-sie drops of Lethes flood.
- a1616 W. SHAKESPEARE Timon of Athens (1623) IV. iii. 441 The Seas a Theefe, whose liquid Surge, resolves The Moone into Salt teares.
- a1623 H. SWINBURNE Treat. Spousals (1686) 27 By the same means..are those Spousals by them contracted in their Minority..resolved or turned into Matrimony.
- 1674 R. BAXTER Full & Easie Satisfaction IV. vii. 127 All their faith of this [sc. the doctrine of transubstantiation] is by them resolved into a phanattick pretence of Inspiration.
- 1743 M. TOMLINSON Protest. Birthright 13 Into whose Authority all Christians have resolved their Faith and Obedience.
- 1750 J. CAMPBELL Present State Europe x. 281 A very large Proportion of the Debt was, if not paid, at least resolved into Waste Paper.
- 1861 C. DICKENS Great Expectations III. v. 84 The spectral figure..seemed all resolved into a ghastly stare.
- 1875 E. C. STEDMAN Victorian Poets (ed. 13) 387 The succeeding chorus..resolves attention to enchantment.
- 1889 Standard 9 Apr. Emin..has seen islands resolved into headlands.
- 1933 Mod. Psychologist Nov. 247 Old mind-sets have to be resolved into a hospitable flexibility in order that new attitudes and expectancies may be formed.
- 1951 A. SCHWARZSCHILD tr. R. Luxemburg Accumulation of Capital II. 55 Referring each private capital unit to its place of production in order to resolve it into a mere product of labour.
- 2007 D. CLARKE in P. Cheney Cambr. Compan. Shakespeare's Poetry x. 193 Her suffering has been resolved into narrative, as she retells her rape.

(b) intransitive. With into or (now less commonly) to. Of an immaterial thing: to change or be transformed into some other form or state; esp. to be susceptible of being interpreted as some other thing. Formerly also with †in.

- 1598 R. BARCKLEY Disc. Felicitie of Man v. 393 It resolveth into this inconvenience, that the covetousnes of one wicked man is satisfied by the prejudice of a whole nation.
- 1647 BP. J. TAYLOR Θεολογία Ἐκλεκτικῆ II. 30 The whole businesse of submitting our understanding to humane authority, comes to nothing; for either it resolves into the direct duty of submitting to God, or if it be spoken of abstractedly, it is no duty at all.
- 1679 J. DRYDEN Troilus & Cressida I. i. 2 Then every thing resolves to brutal force And headlong force is led by hoodwink'd will.
- 1709 LD. SHAFTESBURY Moralists III. i. 158 I..celebrate the Beautys which resolve in Thee, the Source..of all..Perfection.
- 1752 D. HUME Balance of Trade in Ess. (1817) I. 315 These cases, when examined, will be found to resolve into our general theory.
- 1819 W. SCOTT Bride of Lammermoor ii, in Tales of my Landlord 3rd Ser. II. 32 It would resolve into an equitable claim.
- 1877 G. MEREDITH in New Q. Mag. Apr. 20 The Comedy might be performed by a troop of the corps de ballet; and in the recollection of the reading it resolves to an animated shuffle of feet.
- 1955 R. GRAVES Crowning Privilege 227 Each scowl resolves into a leer.
- 1995 I. DUNCAN in A. Conan Doyle Lost World (1998) p. xix It is at that moment..that Malone resolves into a murderous, alien, yet organic and original self.

(c) transitive (reflexive) in same sense.

- 1652 H. L'ESTRANGE Americans No Iewes 73 At last the ridiculous excesse thereof was restrained, and soon after the folly of the devise resolved it self into its dissolution.
- 1840 U.S. Mag. & Democratic Rev. Jan. 24 The quasi discords of Sappho's melodized passion—still recurring, and still resolving themselves into music.
- 1856 C. J. LEVER Martins of Cro' Martin xxiii. 245 All resolves itself to some question of a harm to one side.
- 1920 W. T. TILDEN Art of Lawn Tennis 67 Match play..resolves itself into a battle of wits and nerve.
- 1928 Amer. Mercury Oct. 180/1 Consequently, between the violent outrushing of the Holy Spirit and the bad acoustics, the service is apt to resolve itself into one vast gr-r-r-r-r.
- 1976 Times 26 Jan. 6/7 It was a pity that a match which reached such a high pitch of excitement should have resolved itself into a trial by ordeal.
- 2000 M. RICKARDS Encycl. Ephemera (2001) 244/1 In many cases the matter resolved itself into a dispute between one parish and another.

b. transitive (reflexive). Of a deliberative body, meeting, etc.: to convert itself into a committee for some particular purpose. Also in passive and intransitive in same sense.

- 1641 S. D'EWES Speech Commons, July 7th (title page) Being resolved into a committee, (so neer as it could be collected together) in the Palatine cause.

- 1654 T. FULLER Ephemeris Parliamentaria 240 Let us be resolved into a Committee, and presently fall to debate thereof.
- 1659 S. BUTLER Acts & Monuments Late Parl. 5 Thereupon the house resolved into a grand Committee to debate the proportioning of the said lands to the particular members.
- 1710 London Gaz. No. 4699/3 The House resolved it self into a Committee of the whole House.
- 1753 Scots Mag. Aug. 388/2 The house having resolved itself into a committee of the whole house upon the..bill.
- 1828 tr. A.-J.-M.-R. Savary Mem. I. II. v. 43 The commission resolved itself into a council to deliberate.
- 1885 Manch. Examiner 7 Oct. 5/3 The meeting unanimously resolved itself into a committee.
- 1902 Jrnl. Polit. Econ. 10 414 A formal motion to the effect that on a certain day the house will resolve itself into a committee to consider the supply to be granted to His Majesty.
- 1977 S. Central Bull. 37 12/1 Professor Werbow moved that the executive committee resolve into a committee of the whole to discuss a matter of general welfare.
- 1995 Sunday Mail (Queensland) (Nexis) 24 Sept. The use of a council local law on meeting procedure might allow it to resolve itself into a committee to allow the consideration of a secret ballot.

11.

a. transitive and intransitive. Mathematics. To analyse (a force or other vector quantity) into two or more components acting in different directions but collectively having the same effect as the original vector. Cf. RESOLUTION n.<sup>1</sup> 10.

- 1719 G. GORDON Remarks Newtonian Philos. 13 All that can here be inferred is, that the actual Motion of the Body in the Line bc, may be resolved into the Forces bf and bg; but then it may as well be resolved into bf, bo and br.
- 1781 Philos. Trans. 1780 (Royal Soc.) 70 559 Let FD..represent the force communicating the motion at the point D, which resolve into two others.
- 1806 O. G. GREGORY Treat. Mech. I. I. ii. 24 Resolve each of the forces into components respectively parallel to these co-ordinates.
- 1852 J. B. PHEAR Elem. Hydrostatics v. 89 Hence, resolving along cO and in a plane perpendicular to it, we have [etc.].
- 1909 W. H. P. CREIGHTON Steam-engine & Other Heat-motors (ed. 2) xv. 452 Resolve these velocities along the line of motion of the bucket.
- 1948 Sci. News 7 23 In aerodynamics it is customary to resolve the reaction of the air on a surface into two components, namely lift..and drag.
- 1956 W. MERCHANT & A. BOLTON Introd. Theory Structures i. 11 Find the size and position of the resultant force R acting on the lamina. Resolving vertically,  $V = 4 - 2 = 2$  lb.
- 2005 B. J. NELSON et al. in P. Dario & R. Chatila Robotics Res. III. 120 Capacitors are orthogonally configured to make the force sensor capable of resolving forces in both the x and y directions.

b. transitive. Science. To analyse (a phenomenon, esp. a wave motion) into components which when added together give that phenomenon. Cf. Fourier analysis at FOURIER n.

- 1873 Med. Times & Gaz. 4 Oct. 396/1 This wave the ear can resolve into its component parts.

- 1894 Proc. Physical Soc. 13 94 It was most useful to resolve the motion into its fundamental harmonic motions and its overtones.
- 1936 R. S. GLASGOW Princ. Radio Engin. i. 22 The flat-topped wave of Fig. 16a and the peaked wave of Fig. 16b may be resolved into a fundamental and third harmonic.
- 1965 Math. in Biol. & Med. (Med. Res. Council) i. 38 Figure 3 shows how an analogue computer is used to resolve such a curve into its components.
- 2005 Proc. National Acad. Sci. U.S.A 102 13928/1 To resolve the early phases of the isotonic velocity transient, the acquisition rate was 200 kHz.

12. Music.

a. transitive. To alter or transform (a discord, or relatively dissonant harmony) so as to form a concord, or relatively more consonant harmony.

Cf. RESOLUTION n.<sup>1</sup> 9b.

- 1728 E. CHAMBERS Cycl. at Discord The Discord is resolved by being immediately succeeded by a Concord.
- 1797 Encycl. Brit. XVI. 125/1 There is no possible manner of resolving a dissonance which is not derived from an operation of cadence.
- 1838 Penny Cycl. XII. 50/1 Most discords require to be prepared, and all must be resolved.
- 1868 F. A. G. OUSELEY Harmony (1875) ii. 20 When the discords have thus been rendered agreeable to the ear, they are said to be resolved.
- 1924 Musical Times Feb. 132/2 If we resolve the dominant chord at the double-bar on page 5, it makes a complete movement in itself.
- 2003 L. BLACK Franz Schubert 31 The root of the dominant-seventh chord..is not actually heard in the crucial chord..., though it is there again in the upper part immediately the dissonance is resolved.

b. intransitive. Of a discord or relatively dissonant harmony: to undergo such a transformation. Of a note: to effect such a transformation by passing to another note. Frequently with on to or upon.

- 1825 J. F. DANNELEY Encycl. Music The seventh and ninth are dissonant, and therefore resolve or descend one degree.
- 1878 Johnson's New Universal Cycl. (new ed.) III. 683/1 A seventh, instead of resolving into the perfect triad, may be succeeded by another seventh.
- 1889 E. PROUT Harmony xiv. §332 All chords of the ninth can resolve upon their own generator.
- 1942 Music & Lett. 23 20 In the middle parts there is an F persisting which only resolves on to Eb on the final two notes.
- 1989 P. VAN DER MERWE Origins Pop. Style (1992) xx. 173 Typically these blue sevenths..fall to the dominant, resolving onto the dominant in much the same way as the blue third resolves onto the tonic.
- 2006 Daily Tel. (Nexis) 17 June 4 Basically, Wagner sounds a chord at the beginning and it never resolves until the very end.

13.

a. transitive. Science. Originally: (of optical instruments or persons using them) to reveal or perceive (a nebula) as a cluster of distinct stars. Later more widely: to distinguish parts or components of (something) that are close together in space or time; to identify or distinguish individually (peaks in a graph, lines in a spectrum, etc.). Cf. RESOLUTION n.<sup>1</sup> 6.

- 1785 Philos. Trans. (Royal Soc.) 75 219 When he resolves one nebula into stars, he discovers ten new ones which he cannot resolve.
- 1833 London & Edinb. Philos. Mag. 2 338 These small brown moths possess very delicate and unique scales, requiring some tact in the management of the illumination, to resolve their lines distinctly.
- 1868 J. N. LOCKYER Elem. Lessons Astron. §77 Star-clusters..so distant that even in telescopes of great power they could not be resolved.
- 1932 Proc. Royal Soc. A. 136 313 Two particles separated by as little as 1/500th second could be 'resolved' and correctly recorded.
- 1962 H. D. BUSH Atomic & Nucl. Physics iii. 58 If the fine structure is examined with the aid of very high resolution instruments, each component of the fine structure is resolved into further components.
- 2001 N. J. LANE in R. Catlow & S. Greenfield Cosmic Rays 73 The light microscope was unable to resolve detail much below 0.2µm.

b. intransitive and transitive (reflexive). With into. Of an object initially perceived indistinctly: to become identifiable, esp. as a number of discrete objects, when seen more clearly. Also in extended use.

- 1825 R. TAYLOR Key to Knowl. Nature iv. 78 Many of the stars which appear single to the naked eye, on the application of the telescope, resolve themselves into two or more.
- 1853 L. SUNDERLAND Bk. Human Nature 42 Were we to look at our solar system from myriad millions of miles, it would appear to us a conglobated or solid mass... But when we near it, it resolves into planets and satellites.
- 1890 K. MUNROE Under Orders v. 67 As he rounded a corner this noise resolved itself into the shouts, cheers, and yells of an angry mob.
- 1897 Yale Literary Mag. Oct. 35 It resolved into a black speck and a white one.
- 1921 National Geographic Mag. Mar. 269/1 A minute object that separated into two as we drew nearer, and finally resolved itself into a pair of vessels linked together with a tow-line.
- 1985 Pop. Sci. Feb. 70/1 As the distance closes, the pod resolves into a trio of connected cylinders, each larger than a tour bus.
- 1992 F. KEMSKE Lifetime Employ. xii. 161 The faint cracking sound resolved itself into the din of a half dozen different kinds of firearm being discharged repeatedly.
- 2002 A. PROULX That Old Ace in Hole (2003) i. 3 There appeared, far ahead..a wambling black dot that resolved into a bicyclist.

14. transitive. Chemistry. To separate (a racemic compound or mixture) into optical isomers.

- 1899 J. MCCRAE tr. H. Landolt Optical Activity & Chem. Composition 90 Fermentation lactic acid in the form of its zinc ammonium salt..has been resolved [Ger. zerfällt] by crystallisation into the d- and l-lactates.
- 1919 S. W. COLE Pract. Physiol. Chem. (ed. 5) v. 151 Equal parts of the d- and l- varieties are formed. These can often be resolved into their active constituents.

- 1983 R. O. C. NORMAN & D. J. WADDINGTON Mod. Org. Chem. (ed. 4) xv. 245 Racemic mixtures which are not acids or bases can often be resolved by first making them into derivatives with acid groups.
- 2001 J. S. VARCOE Clin. Biochem. xi. 16 Chiral additives can be included in the buffer to resolve stereo isomers.

15. transitive. Computing. To translate (a readable, alphanumeric domain name) into a numerical IP address, typically by means of the domain name system. Also: to identify (the IP address) of a particular domain name. Cf. RESOLVER n. 5.

- 1983 P. MOCKAPETRIS Request for Comments (Network Working Group) (Electronic text) No. 882. 15 These name servers..must resolve names for at least all the hosts in the domain.
- 1993 InfoWorld (Nexis) 25 Oct. 65 We noticed we were unable to use our host's file to resolve IP addresses. Another call to technical support.
- 2003 B. KOMAR et al. Firewalls for Dummies (ed. 2) x. 175 Type the Web site name in the address bar of the Web browser. This name is resolved to the IP address of the Web site with the help of DNS servers.

III. To untie; to answer, solve; to decide, determine.

16. transitive. To untie, unbind, loosen; to release (something) from its bonds (literal and figurative); (perhaps) to disentangle.

In later use only in figurative contexts with reference to knots.

- ▶ a1398 J. TREVISA tr. Bartholomaeus Anglicus De Proprietatibus Rerum (BL Add. 27944) (1975) I. III. xxii. 123 ȝif þis spirit ben apeired and ihurt and ilette of here worchinge..þe acord of þe body and soule is resolued.
- ▶ a1398 J. TREVISA tr. Bartholomaeus Anglicus De Proprietatibus Rerum (BL Add. 27944) (1975) I. XI. iii. 574 Þe west wynd..resolueþ and vnbindiþ wyntir and bringiþ for[þ] gras, herbis, and floures.
- c1450 (▶ 1410) J. WALTON tr. Boethius De Consol. Philos. (Linc. Cathedral 103) 204 (MED) Youre resouns weyuen [y]e so wondirly In maner like þe hous of Dydalus Full hard for to resoluen and vnplye [L. inextricabilem labyrinthum rationibus texens].
- ?1518 A. BARCLAY tr. D. Mancinus Myrroure Good Maners sig. B.iv<sup>v</sup> Thy wyttes to apply To resolue or argue: with wordes superflue The knottes intrycate, of bablynge sophystry.
- 1558 T. PHAER tr. Virgil Seuen First Bks. Eneidos VII. 155 Resolue [L. solvite] your heades attyre, & celebrate this daunce with me.
- 1591 H. SMITH Treat. Lords Supper I. 26 Resolue this knot & al is cleere.
- 1610 Bible (Douay) II. Dan. v. 16 Thou canst interpret obscure thinges, and resolue [L. dissolvere] thinges bound.
- a1637 B. JONSON Magnetick Lady IV. viii. 51 in Wks. (1640) III What deserves he In your opinion, Madam..can resolve the knot?
- 1776 J. BERINGTON Lett. Materialism II. 30 He..resolves the knot, by asking another question.
- 1844 N. Brit. Rev. May 132 A true philosophy..resolves the knot when it is most perplexed.
- 1881 T. WOOLNER Pygmalion VI. 89 You..Tend to resolve all tangles by the stroke Of steel.
- 1936 E. FITZGERALD tr. F. Mehring Karl Marx III. 65 In the one case it is a question of resolving the knot, and in the other one of first tying it.
- 2005 Windsor (Ont.) Star (Nexis) 29 Dec. B4 Perhaps he can unravel and resolve some of the emotional knots that leave him so tied up that he cannot be successful.

17.

a.

(a) transitive. To answer (a question); to solve (a problem of any kind); to determine, settle, or decide upon (a point or matter regarding which there is doubt or dispute). Formerly also: †to make an effective response to (a proposition, argument, etc.) (obsolete). Also reflexive.

Sometimes with indirect question as object.

- ▶ a1438 Bk. Margery Kempe (1940) I. 35 (MED) Þe clerkys askyd þis creatur many hard qwestyons, þe wych sche be þe grace of Ihesu resoluyd, so þat hir answerys lykyd þe Bysshop rygth wel.
- ▶ c1454 R. PECOCK Folewer to Donet 34 Þilke persoones whiche ben so lowȝe and symple in witt, leernyng, and kunnyng þat þei not sufficen to resolue and bryngte maters of philosophie in to her groundis of resoun.
- 1550 T. CRANMER Def. Sacrament IV. f. 94 S. Augustine, most plainly resolueth this matter in his booke., disputing against two kinds of heretiques.
- 1577 tr. St. Augustine in H. I. tr. H. Bullinger 50 Godlie Serm. II. III. ix. sig. Oo.j<sup>v</sup>/1 Mee thinketh therefore that this question can bee none otherwise resolved.
- 1581 J. BELL tr. W. Haddon & J. Foxe Against Jerome Osorius 212 Least he exclayme agayne that his argumentes are not throughly resolved, I will answer in few wordes.
- 1612 T. TAYLOR Αρχη ἂν Ἀπάντων: Comm. Epist. Paul to Titus (i. 9) 29 Resolving all doubtful cases.
- 1647 J. SPRIGGE Anglia Rediviva (1854) II. i. 72 This resolved the question at the council of war without putting it.
- 1661 J. DAVIES tr. D. Blondel Treat. Sibyls II. xi. 110 Does the Flaming Sword keep the entrance of Paradise against the Saints? But the Question resolves it self.
- 1704 J. SWIFT Disc. Mech. Operat. Spirit i, in Tale of Tub 284 I have been perplexed for some time, to resolve what would be the most proper Form to send it abroad in.
- 1749 H. FIELDING Tom Jones II. IV. xii. 87 Whether Mrs. Honour really deserved that Suspicion..is a Matter which we cannot indulge the Reader's Curiosity by resolving .
- 1750 S. JOHNSON Rambler No. 19. ¶15 After a great part of life spent in enquiries which can never be resolved.
- 1830 J. F. W. HERSCHEL Prelim. Disc. Study Nat. Philos. III. i. 221 We are called upon to resolve the important but complicated problem.
- 1858 D. BOUCICAULT Pope of Rome I. ii. 9 The business our friends are summoned hither to determine will resolve the matter.
- 1941 Astounding Sci.-Fiction Feb. 115/2 Don't drive yourself crazy trying to resolve the paradoxes of time-travel.
- 1969 Times 15 Aug. 4/5 New studies designed to resolve how insulin works.
- 1980 J. CALDER RLS iii. 56 He reflected on the tricky problem of chastity, but could not resolve it.
- 2002 New Yorker 11 Nov. 78/3 Comedy theorists..have yet to resolve even such simple questions as where knock-knock jokes come from.

(b) transitive. With double object. Now rare.

- 1577 M. HANMER tr. Socrates Scholasticus IV. xviii, in Aunc. Eccl. Hist. 331 I mused what to answer, and requested him to resolue me the doubt.
- 1594 W. SHAKESPEARE Titus Andronicus v. iii. 35 Resolue me this, Was it well done..To slay his daughter.

- 1706 R. ESTCOURT Fair Example I. i Pray will you resolve me one Question?
- a1707 T. BROWN Saints in Uproar in Wks. (1707) I. 109 Resolve me a Question or two.
- 1786 E. INCHBALD I'll tell you What IV. i. 65 If you can resolve me that..I have no censure for you.
- 1819 W. SCOTT Ivanhoe III. x. 233 And how should my poor valour succeed, Sir Jester, when thy light wit halts?—resolve me that.
- 1862 Church of People Jan. 10 Perhaps so,—but first resolve me the question in what does brutishness consist?
- 1905 H. C. BEECHING Let. 30 Sept. in E. V. Lucas Post-bag Diversions (1934) 13 Now resolve me a question.
- 1946 L. DE LA TORRE Dr. Sam: Johnson, Detector 190 'Pray, Dr. Johnson,' said I, 'resolve me one thing. If the strange message was not Ogam, what was it?'

†b. transitive. To explain; to make clear. Obsolete.

- c1592 Faire Em sig. B2<sup>v</sup> In frendship then resolue What is the cause of your vnlookt for stay?
- 1633 J. FORD 'Tis Pitty shee's Whore I. sig. B2<sup>v</sup> Flo. What's the ground? Sor. That with your patience Signiors, I'll resolue.
- a1661 T. FULLER Worthies (1662) Yorks. 206 Some resolve all his passion on a point of meer revenge.
- 1718 M. PRIOR Solomon on Vanity III, in Poems Several Occasions (new ed.) 504 The Man who would resolve the Work of Fate, May limit Number, and make Crooked Strait.
- 1821 W. WORDSWORTH Eccl. Sonn. I. xxix The full-orbed Moon..doth appear Silently to consume the heavy clouds; How no one can resolve.
- 1866 H. BUSHNELL Vicarious Sacrifice Introd. 14 Attempts have been made, in all ages,..to assert..what is called 'the moral view' of the atonement, and resolve it by the power it wields in human character.
- 1877 E. LEIGH Gloss. Words Dial. Cheshire 168 Au canna mak it out, yoe mun resolve it.

c. transitive. Mathematics. To solve (a mathematical problem, esp. an equation); to find a simpler form of (an equation) from which a solution can be readily inferred. Cf. RESOLUTION n.<sup>1</sup> 14a(b).

- 1613 R. WITT (title) Arithmetical questions..briefly resolved.
- 1669 Philos. Trans. (Royal Soc.) 4 934 Dr Wallis, who hath so excellently resolved..Cubick Æquations.
- 1685 J. WALLIS Let. 25 Apr. in R. Boyle Corr. (2001) VI. 115 A Question of Compound Interest, Resolved by Logarithms, at One Operation.
- 1737 tr. I. Newton Treat. Method of Fluxions 21 I then assume some Number for a and resolve this Equation.
- 1798 C. HUTTON Course Math. I. 240 All equations, in which there are two terms involving the unknown quantity..are resolved like quadratics, by completing the square.
- 1850 C. DAVIES Logic & Utility Math. 266 Every geometrical question can be solved, if we can resolve the corresponding algebraic equation.
- 1874 J. FICKLIN Compl. Algebra xiii. 240 Resolve the first member of the equation  $x^2 + 73x + 780 = 0$  into two binomial factors. Ans.  $(x + 60)(x + 13) = 0$ .
- 1905 F. M. SAXELBY Course Pract. Math. vi. 68 No general rule can be given for resolving an expression into factors.
- 1970 Times 16 June p. vii/2 The optimum development of so many schemes depends upon resolving a simultaneous equation where the unknowns are design, cost and return.
- 2007 Desalination 209 302/1 We resolve the equation system by fixing parameters.

d. transitive. To settle (a dispute or argument); to reconcile opposing elements or tendencies within (a conflict, contradiction, etc.).

- 1875 Pall Mall Gaz. 7 Jan. 7/1 If, to resolve those conflicts, you should think it desirable..to arm the Executive Power with the right of appealing to the judgment of the country.
- 1901 Times 1 Feb. 3/6 He suggested that it be given to a tribunal to resolve the dispute which existed between Protestants and Roman Catholics.
- 1914 Philos. Rev. 23 353 Plotinus's effort..to resolve the conflict between these two elements in his view, Dr. Fuller finds to be wholly futile.
- 1972 M. HALPERIN Rise & Decline Fidel Castro xxv. 280 A special mode of communication that permitted the two parties to conduct and resolve the quarrel in public without acknowledging the existence of the quarrel.
- 1988 Engineer 17 Mar. 7/1 British Coal is expected to meet the South of Scotland Electricity Board to try to resolve the stand-off over cheap coal imports.
- 2005 Campaign 22 July 21/4 Since this spat is more damaging to you than to him, he may not be all that keen to resolve it.

18.

a. transitive. To remove, clear away, dispel (a doubt, uncertainty, or obscurity).

- 1548 Hall's Vnion: Edward IV f. cxci<sup>v</sup> All suche doubttes, were now shortly resolued and determind, and all feare of his doynge, wer clerely put vnder and extinct.
- ?a1560 L. DIGGES Geom. Pract.: Pantometria (1571) I. xix. sig. F ij Small practize will resolue all doubttes.
- a1616 W. SHAKESPEARE Henry VI, Pt. 3 (1623) IV. i. 132 But ere I goe, Hastings and Mountague Resolue my doubt.
- 1643 SIR T. BROWNE Religio Medici (authorized ed.) 48 Myself can shew a catalogue of Doubts which are not resolved at the first hearing.
- 1667 A. MARVELL Let. 2 Feb. in Poems & Lett. (1971) II. 54 If you find any thing perplex in it I shall..resolue any scruple that you may haue of its exposition.
- 1706 J. VANBRUGH Mistake II. i. 10 You must resolve one Doubt which often gives me great Disturbance.
- 1776 E. GIBBON Decline & Fall I. xvii. 464 He was frequently requested to resolve the doubts of inferior judges.
- 1817 J. MILL Hist. Brit. India II. IV. v. 165 All doubts might be resolved by the interrogation..of the commander.
- 1873 W. BLACK Princess of Thule xiii. 198 She had bravely resolved her doubts and made up her mind.
- 1939 Chester (Pa.) Times 22 Mar. 3/4 Such grim statistics resolve any lingering doubt as to the effectiveness of Russia's military power.
- 1991 Times Educ. Suppl. 22 Feb. 38/3 The encyclopaedist aims to resolve uncertainty, not to enjoy its multiple creative possibilities.
- 2008 P. MASTERSON Sense of Creation 110 Such observations..cannot be presumed to resolve the profoundly held misgivings of atheists about the existence..of God.

b. transitive. To dispel, allay, assuage (an emotion or feeling, as fear, curiosity, etc.).

- 1580 J. LYLY Euphues & his Eng. in Euphues (new ed.) f. 18<sup>v</sup> Your reply hath fully resolved that feare.
- a1626 W. ROWLEY Birth of Merlin (1662) sig. G4 Speak learned Merlin, and resolve my fears.
- 1635 J. REYNOLDS Triumphs Gods Revenge (new ed.) iv. xvii. 341 The patience of a little time, will shortly resolve our curiositie, whereunto these different affections will tend.
- 1723 J. ROBE Fatal Legacy v. 67 While yet I have remaining Life to hear thee, Resolve the Fears thy Words have rais'd within me.
- 1749 H. FIELDING Tom Jones III. vii. iii. 15 Indeed we cannot resolve his Curiosity as to this Point.
- 1833 W. J. NEALE Port Admiral III. xii. 243 She..ascended to the top of Maker Tower, anxious yet dreading to descry the approach of some vessel, which would resolve her fears.
- 1958 J. BETJEMAN Coll. Poems 278 The waltz was played, the songs were sung, The night resolved our fears.

†19. transitive (reflexive). To join oneself to a person's opinion. Obsolete.
rare<sup>-1</sup>.

- 1548 Hall's Vnion: Henry VI f. clxxxij Therle of Salisbury and other his frendes, seing his corage, resolved themselves to his opinion.

†20.

a. transitive. To free (a person) from doubt or perplexity; to bring to a clear understanding; to provide with definite information. Obsolete.

In quot. 1548 with the senses as object.

- 1548 E. GEST Treat. againste Masse sig. Biv<sup>v</sup> The broken bread and blessed wyne be institute purposely to resolve and ascertayn our senses.
- 1549 J. PONET Def. Mariage Priestes sig. Dviii<sup>v</sup> I haue wysshed that som learned man wold take the paynes to resolve the vnlearned sorte touchyng that poynt.
- 1596 W. LAMBARDE Perambulation of Kent (rev. ed.) 399 If you yet doubt, conferre (I pray you) his report with theirs, and it shall resolve you.
- a1616 W. SHAKESPEARE Measure for Measure (1623) iv. ii. 208 Yet you are amaz'd, but this shall absolutely resolve you.
- 1649 Bp. J. TAYLOR Great Exemplar II. 98 To strengthen the weake, to resolve the scrupulous, to teach the ignorant.
- 1719 D. DEFOE Life Robinson Crusoe 356 We knew not what Course to take, but the Creatures resolv'd us soon.
- 1766 A. WILLIAMS tr. P. Metastasio Uninhabited Island vi, in Misc. 161 Whate'er it be, it has a pleasing form: My Sister shall resolve me.
- 1772 J. WESLEY Jrnl. 31 Oct. They asked me, 'whether they were good or bad spirits?' But I could not resolve them.

b. transitive. With of or in and complement expressing the matter of doubt. Obsolete.

- 1549 J. PONET tr. B. Ochino Tragoedie Unjuste Usurped Primacie sig. f.iii<sup>v</sup> I am also resolved nowe in another doubt, whereof I shoulde neuer haue ben answered yf ye had not made me perceyue it.

- 1549 J. PONENT tr. B. Ochino Tragoedie Unjuste Usurped Primacie sig. y.ii We haue sent for you..to resolue vs of a dout, that is come to our minde.
- 1567 in J. H. Burton Reg. Privy Council Scotl. (1877) 1st Ser. I. 515 That thai being certifiit of the veritie may be resolvit of all doubt.
- ?1573 H. CHEKE tr. F. Negri Freewyl II. ii. 75 I haue ben desirous of long tyme to know it, and I could neuer meete with any whiche was able to resolue me in this poynt.
- 1597 T. MORLEY Plaine & Easie Introd. Musicke 4 If you remember that which before you tolde mee you vnderstood: you would resolue your selfe of that doubt.
- 1648 T. GAGE Eng.-Amer. 6 To resolve the Pope himself of whatsoever difficult points in Divinity may be questioned.
- 1651 N. CULPEPER Semeiotica Uranica sig. B3<sup>v</sup> I know you would be resolved in one particular.
- a1742 T. STORY Jrnl. of Life (1747) 212 Not knowing how we might afterwards be engaged, we did not resolve him in that Point.
- 1767 'CORIAT JUNIOR' Another Traveller! II. 23 You may ask whatever questions you please, and you shall be resolved of everything within my power.

c. transitive. With indirect question as complement. Obsolete (in later use passing into sense 23b).

- 1565 J. JEWEL Replie Hardinges Answere i. 18 Concerning Consecration, he doth greate wronge to charge vs with y<sup>e</sup> breache thereof, before he him selfe and others of his side be better resolved wherein standeth Consecration.
- 1595 W. SHAKESPEARE Henry VI, Pt. 3 II. i. 9 I cannot ioy vntil I be resolu'de, Where our right valiant father is become.
- a1648 LD. HERBERT Life Henry VIII (1649) 520 He sent to Spain to be resolved..which of the two Marriages were most convenient.
- 1690 J. LOCKE Two Treat. Govt. I. xi. §147 It will always remain a Doubt..till our A. resolves us, whether Shem..had right to Govern.
- 1720 D. DEFOE Life Capt. Singleton 273 Whether we..may come off any better..I cannot resolve thee.
- 1756 G. WASHINGTON Let. in Writings (1889) I. 253 I wish your Honor would resolve me, whether the militia..must be supplied out of the public stocks of provisions.

†21.

a. transitive. To come to a conclusion about, settle in one's mind, be sure of. Also with clause or infinitive as object. Obsolete.

- c1565 'T. C.' tr. G. Boccaccio Galesus Cymon & Iphigenia sig. A.vi<sup>v</sup> Her Heere, like goulden wyre, he painted foorth with praise, And fully was resolved in minde, they shonne as Phebvs rayes.
- a1618 W. RALEIGH Remains (1644) 237 He left me so weak that he resolved not to find me alive.
- 1659 T. BURTON Diary (1828) IV. 55 I was some days since to seek what to resolve in this great debate.
- 1702 J. LOGAN in Mem. Hist. Soc. Pennsylvania (1870) IX. 122 Having solicitously resolved several things in my thoughts relating to it, I endeavoured to stave them off.

b. transitive. With object complement: to be certain that (a person or thing) is what is specified; (also) to show conclusively to be of a certain character. Obsolete. rare.

- 1613 J. STEPHENS Cinthias Reuenge v. vi. sig. R<sup>v</sup> I (Madam) will remoue the deere suspence Of question..And so resolue you a whore absolute.
- 1616 B. JONSON Epicœne IV. v, in Wks. I. 579 But he looses no reputation with vs, for we all resolu'd him an asse before.
- 1625 R. MONTAGU Appello Cæsarem 2 All things..so Delivered..are Errors actuall in themselves; and so stand resolved and accounted of in the Doctrine of the Church.

c. transitive. To fix upon (a person) for a particular purpose. Obsolete. rare

-1
.

- 1710 D. MANLEY Mem. Europe I. III. 358 She had..resolved him for her peculiar Pleasures, tho' she knew not what way to compass what she had resolved.

†22.

a. transitive. Chiefly with of or that. To convince or assure (a person) that something is the case. Obsolete.

- 1567 G. FENTON tr. M. Bandello Certaine Tragical Disc. i. f. 13 Being at larg resolved of that which you haue hard by speciall reporte [he] went imediatlye to his chamber [Fr. Ayant ouy ceste histoire; It. Anselmo hebbe inteso il periglio oue Carlo si trouaua].
- 1567 T. STAPLETON Counterblast IV. ix. f. 473 M. Horn..goeth roundlye to the matter, and resolueth vs, that this Decree was made not by the Apostles only.
- 1590 E. WEBBE Rare & Wonderful Things (new ed.) To Rdr. They doubtles will resolue them that it is true which is here expressed.
- a1604 M. HANMER Chron. Ireland 159 in J. Ware Two Hist. Ireland (1633) This Lacy behaved himselfe so discreetly..that the King was resolved of his truth and fidelity.
- a1616 W. SHAKESPEARE Henry VI, Pt. 1 (1623) III. viii. 20 Long since we were resolved of your truth.
- 1642 D. ROGERS Naaman 830 It is said of Hanna, that ere Eli had resolved her from God of a sonne, shee was full of trouble.
- 1650 R. STAPLETON tr. F. Strada De Bello Belgico VIII. 30 And, when they resolved him no danger should accrue to either [etc.].
- 1726 W. R. CHETWOOD Voy. & Adventures Capt. R. Boyle 258 The Colonel resolv'd me that he had the Means in his own Hands to pacify him.
- 1736 H. FIELDING Tumble-down Dick Argt. sig. Aiv She advises him to go to the Round-House,..and there be resolved from his own Mouth of the Truth of his Sire.

b. transitive (reflexive). To assure, satisfy, or convince oneself in regard to something. Also: to be assured, know with certainty (frequently in imperative). Obsolete.

- 1567 W. PAINTER Palace of Pleasure II. xxv. f. 223<sup>v</sup> Rhomeo, thou must fully resolue thy selfe vpon one of these .ij. points.

- 1585 T. BILSON True Difference Christian Subiection I. 139 You shall thereby resolve your selfe howe farre Princes then lawfully might, and carefully did medle with guiding and ruling the Church of God.
- 1587 A. FLEMING et al. Holinshed's Chron. (new ed.) III. Contin. 1351/1 Resolve your selfe my lord, you haue a goodlie soule.
- 1593 T. LODGE Life & Death William Long Beard C 3 In youth be true, and then in age resolve thee, Friends will be friends.
- a1618 W. RALEIGH Remains (1644) 237 If I live to return, resolve your self that it is the care for you that hath strengthened my heart.
- 1657 S. PURCHAS Theatre Flying-insects 74 If you taste it, you will easily resolve your self.
- 1692 T. TAYLOR tr. G. Daniel Voy. World Cartesius I. 39 Settle and compose your self, for you seem a little disturb'd: And resolve your self you need not fear, and that you shall receive no harm.
- 1707 D. MANLEY Almyna I. i. 9 Soon resolve your self, he is a Lover, But with that Duty, to his Royal Brother, As without his permission, not to hope.
- 1709 LD. SHAFTESBURY Moralists II. iii. 92 We apprehend a larger Scheme, and easily resolve our selves why Things were not compleated in this State.
- 1814 H. F. CARY tr. Dante Vision III. xxviii. 7 [As one who] turneth to resolve him, if the glass Have told him true.
- 1830 E. BULWER-LYTTON Paul Clifford II. i. 32 Could he do so? Umph! No, I have resolved myself, that is impossible.
- 1869 E. M. GOULBURN Pursuit of Holiness vi. 48 He must resolve himself on the question.

c. intransitive. To be satisfied, certain, or convinced. Obsolete.

- 1585 T. WASHINGTON tr. N. de Nicolay Nauigations Turkie I. xx. 24 The Gouvernor by the counsell of those that had perswaded him too surrender,..resolved vppon so smal an assurance of the Bascha [Fr. resolut soubz tant peu assurée parole du Bascha].
- 1601 B. JONSON Every Man in his Humor I. iii. sig. C3 Bob. For do you see sir,..I would not extend thus farre. Mat. O Lord sir I resolve so.
- a1616 W. SHAKESPEARE Henry VI, Pt. 1 (1623) I. iii. 70 Resolve on this, thou shalt be fortunate, If thou receiue me for thy Warlike Mate.
- 1659 H. HAMMOND Paraphr. & Annot. Psalms (cxix. 151–152 Paraphr.) 610 I have allwayes, since I knew any thing of thee, resolved of the truth of it.

†23.

a. transitive. To inform or tell (a person) of something. Obsolete.

- 1568 Reg. Privy Council Scotl. I. 629 It is thocht convenient to resolve all personis of the same, that nane heireftir sall pretend occasioun of ignorance.
- 1597 W. SHAKESPEARE Richard III IV. v. 19 These letters will resolve him of my minde.
- 1632 W. LITHGOW Total Disc. Trav. x. 451 He went back, resolving them of my stiffe denyall.
- 1645 J. CORBET Hist. Relation Mil. Govt. Gloucester 124 Colonell Massie tooke courage to resolve them of the incapacitie of that service for the present.

b. transitive. With clause as complement, esp. expressing an indirect question. Also in imperative with a direct question to which the speaker seeks an answer. Obsolete (archaic in later use).

- 1568 in J. Anderson Coll. Mary Queen of Scotl. (1728) IV. II. 56 We desir to be resolvit quhether ye haife..sufficient autoritie..to pronounce..giltie or not giltie.
- 1588 A. MUNDAY tr. Palmerin D'Oliua xxx. f. 93 Are ye (my Lord) the king of Thessalie, for whom my hart hath suffered exceeding greefe? I praie ye resolute me presentlie.
- a1593 C. MARLOWE Massacre at Paris (c1600) sig. D5 The wound I warrant ye is deepe my Lord, Search Surgeon and resolute me what thou seest.
- 1602 B. JONSON Poetaster IV. ii. sig. G<sup>v</sup> Pray you, resolute me, why you giue that heauenly praise, to this earthly Banquet?
- 1607 J. NORDEN Surueyours Dialogue II. 56 I pray thee, if thou canst, resolute me. Whether is the heriot payd [etc.]?
- 1697 J. DRYDEN tr. Virgil Aeneis VIII, in tr. Virgil Wks. 438 Resolve me, Strangers, whence, and what you are.
- a1704 T. BROWN Saints in Uproar in Wks. (1707) I. 111 Who was your Father? Come, resolve me immediately.
- 1709 M. PRIOR Poems Several Occasions 137 Can Sense this Paradox endure? Resolve me, Cambray, or Fontaine.
- 1778 R. CUMBERLAND Battle of Hastings III. 46 Go! Yet stay—resolve me, hast thou weigh'd the danger?
- 1840 E. S. WORTLEY Jairah I. ii. 36 But first—resolve me!—saidst thou thou hadst prayed, And vainly to thy Zöphiel's silent shade?
- 1860 A. C. SWINBURNE Queen-mother III. iii. 91 Cino. Are you yet satisfied? Ca. This is dead ware... Cino. But are you not? resolve me; are not you?

c. transitive. To answer (a person); to reply to. Obsolete.

- 1586 G. PETTIE & B. YONG tr. S. Guazzo Ciuile Conuersat. (rev. ed.) IV. f. 219 I resolute thee (faire Ladie) thus [Fr. Vous devez sçavoir que; It. Io ui faccio sapere, che], that many times I tried [etc.].
- 1632 J. VICARS tr. Virgil XII Aeneids v. 144 Then aged Nautes..Resolves him thus; [etc.].

†24.

a. transitive. To advise (a person) to do something. Also with subordinate clause: to give advice to (a person) regarding something. Obsolete.

- 1579 G. FENTON tr. F. Guicciardini Hist. Guicciardin x. 577 He..was nowe resolved [Fr. resolu] by discreete councill..to spare no liberalities nor offers of money to reduce them to his amitie.
- a1648 LD. HERBERT Life Henry VIII (1649) 395* He was resolv'd by his Counsel rather to weary and famish the Emperors Army.
- 1656 T. BURTON Diary (1828) I. 32 I would have the Committee to resolve you how you will proceed.

b. intransitive. To consult, take counsel. Obsolete.

- 1591 E. SPENSER Prosopopoeia in Complaints 123 It behoves, ere that into the race We enter, to resolve first hereupon.
- a1629 W. HINDE Faithfull Remonstr. (1641) xviii. 56 He made them sometimes as his counsellours, to advise, conferre, consult, and resolve with them, in matters of conscience.

1719 D. DEFOE Life Robinson Crusoe 303 Let us retreat out of their View or Hearing, least they awake, and we will resolve further.

25. transitive. With clause as object: to decide or establish conclusively; to conclude. Also in passive with it as subject.

- 1586 EARL OF LEICESTER Corr. (1844) 401 The surgion doth fully resolue..he is without danger for this blowe.
- 1621 M. WROTH Countesse of Mountgomeries Urania 40 They all beheld this place with great wonder, Parselius resolving it was some Enchantment.
- 1642 J. MARCH Argument Militia 18 It is resolved by the Judges..that the King may well hold his Parliament..without the Spirituall Lords.
- a1729 J. ROGERS 19 Serm. (1735) iii. 49 This Happiness, it was presently resolved by all.., must be some one uniform End,..attainable by every Man.
- 1735 Lives Most Remarkable Criminals I. 354 I..could not resolve..whether these humorous gentlemen..were to be ranked under the Denomination of Knights Errants, or plain robbery.
- 1818 W. CRUISE Digest Laws Eng. Real Prop. (ed. 2) II. 309 It was resolved, that the remainder limited to B. was good.
- 1842 COLE Westm. Abbey 107 Whether or not they [sc. mandates] were executed, our antiquaries have not yet resolved.
- 1883 W. BLACK Shandon Bells I. iii. 76 He resolved that it was now too late for doubt.
- 1916 Outlook (N.Y.) 5 July 552/1 The plain people of Mexico resolved that there was nothing divine about the order which fattened the few at the cost of the many.
- 1969 Eng. Hist. Rev. 84 504 They [sc. the House of Lords] resolved that there had been a plot.
- 2003 R. A. GABRIEL Mil. Hist. Anc. Israel iii. 63 Although the habiru were..an important factor in Egyptian and Israelite history, further research has not completely resolved that they were not the Hebrews.

IV. To determine or fix upon a course of action.

26.

a. To determine or decide upon (a course of action, something to be achieved or brought about, etc.); to make (something) one's firm intention.

(a) transitive. With simple object, or (more commonly) with clause as object (usually preceded by that).

- 1523 KING HENRY VIII in J. O. Halliwell Lett. Kings Eng. (1846) I. 284 We..have resolved and determined that..ye shall then have our letters of discharge.
- 1594 W. SHAKESPEARE Titus Andronicus II. i. 106 So must you resolue, That..You must perforce accomplish as you may.
- 1616 B. JONSON Epicæne III. iii, in Wks. I. 557 It shall be done, that's resolu'd .
- 1632 J. HAYWARD tr. G. F. Biondi Eromena 21 They resolved that the Admirall should goe disguised..to assure himselfe of the fact.
- 1667 J. MILTON Paradise Lost IX. 830 Confirm'd then I resolve, Adam shall share with me in bliss or woe.
- 1759 W. ROBERTSON Hist. Scotl. (1761) (ed. 4) II. VII. 151 Elizabeth resolved that no circumstance of pomp or solemnity should be wanting.
- 1781 E. GIBBON Decline & Fall III. xxix. 125 As soon as they had resolved his death, they condescended to flatter his pride.

- 1819 P. B. SHELLEY Cenci III. i. 42 All must be suddenly resolved and done.
- 1842 R. I. WILBERFORCE Rutilius & Lucius 265 He had seen enough of the Christians to resolve that nothing should induce him to stain his hands with their blood.
- 1870 J. J. McCLOSKEY & O. D. BYRON Across Continent in L. Grover et al. Davy Crockett & Other Plays (1940) 105 I resolved I would lead such a life no longer, and I became a gambler.
- 1952 T. ARMSTRONG Adam Brunskill ix. 305 She sternly resolved that, if she really were to be a support to her uncle, she must take herself in hand.
- 1996 J. LANCHESTER Debt to Pleasure (1997) 4 I resolved that I would jot down my thoughts on the subject of food as I went.

(b) transitive. With infinitive as object. Also reflexive, with infinitive complement, in same sense.

- 1542 N. UDALL tr. Erasmus Apophtegmes II. f. 238 Thei had purposed and fully resolved to murdre hym, when he should nexte bee in dooyng sacrifice.
- 1596 W. LAMBARDE Perambulation of Kent (rev. ed.) sig. A2<sup>v</sup> I resolved (for sundrie iust respectes) to begin first with that Shire.
- 1598 W. SHAKESPEARE Love's Labour's Lost IV. iii. 347 Shall we resolve to woe these gyrls of Fraunce?
- 1600 E. BLOUNT tr. G. F. di Conestaggio Hist. Uniting Portugall to Castill 25 Solliciting Sebastian to resolve himselfe either to enter or be excluded.
- 1613 S. PURCHAS Pilgrimage VIII. iii. 744 He..committed many errorrs, especially in resolving to winter in that desolate place.
- 1653 W. RAMESEY Astrologia Restaurata To Rdr. 10 So they fell to words and at last..they resolved to kill one another.
- 1707 J. MORTIMER Whole Art Husbandry 427 I resolved to cut a Cart-way..to carry off both my Wood and Timber.
- 1761 F. SHERIDAN Mem. Miss Sidney Bidulph III. 312 Having resolved himself to attend him as far as Harwich, he would, at the hour appointed, call on him in a coach.
- 1791 A. RADCLIFFE Romance of Forest II. viii. 32 She resolved to acquaint Madame La Motte with the purport of the late conversation.
- 1856 J. A. FROUDE Hist. Eng. (1858) I. iii. 252 At one time he had resolved..to give way.
- 1879 W. H. DIXON Royal Windsor I. ii. 15 He resolved to take the Scottish invader in a trap.
- 1920 A. CARNEGIE Autobiogr. x. 140 I resolved to leave the service of the railway company and devote myself exclusively to my own affairs.
- 1966 M. PEI How to learn Langs. 92 If you resolve to learn a language, you must grit your teeth and stick at it.
- 1988 Amer. Art Jrnl. 20 75/1 He finally resolved himself to remain while La Farge painted.
- 2005 T. UMRIGAR Space between Us (2007) xii. 132 Bhima resolves to ask Serabai for the name of some strength tonic for the girl.

b. intransitive, and transitive (reflexive). To come to a firm decision in regard to future action or intention; to determine to do something.

(a) With on or upon; formerly also †of, †in.

- a1528 in J. Strype Eccl. Memorials (1721) I. App. 57 We desired his Ho[liness] that it wold please hym schortely to resolve hymself therin.
- 1548 Hall's Vnion: Henry VI f. clxxxv These two great lordes, resoluinge them selfs vpon this purpose,..entered the cite of London.
- 1586 C. MARLOWE Tamburlaine: 1st Pt. II. vi Since..He dares so doubtlessly resolve of rule.
- a1616 W. SHAKESPEARE Antony & Cleopatra (1623) III. xi. 9 I haue my selfe resolu'd vpon a course, Which has no neede of you.
- 1649 BP. J. TAYLOR Great Exemplar I. v. iii. 90 After..the punitive part of repentance is resolved on, and begun, and put forward..we then enter into the illuminative way of religion.
- 1660 S. PEPYS Diary 23 Jan. (1970) I. 26 This day the Parliament..resolved of the declaration to be printed for the people's satisfaction.
- 1706 W. NICOLSON London Diaries 30 Jan. (1985) 367 He..was there informed (and convinced) that the Conclave had resolved on his Death.
- 1782 F. BURNEY Cecilia IV. VIII. vii. 294 Cecilia..had still the..good sense..to resolve upon making the best use [etc.].
- 1809 Susan II. 103 Mrs. Howard..immediately resolved in going with him.
- 1837 T. HOOK Jack Brag III. v. 180 He resolved upon having a strong reinforcement of comestibles.
- 1872 1st Rep. Vermont State Board Agric. 1871–2 289 He who sets out to subdue a piece of quack must resolve on no half-way measures.
- 1934 'J. FIELD' Life of One's Own vi. 96 When what I had resolved upon did not happen I thought it must be due to some inherent weakness.
- 1951 Times 3 Aug. 7/1 Anderson..resolved himself upon a gallant attack, and, with Stedman..keeping his end up, they achieved the task.
- 1975 N. LUCAS Mod. Hist. Israel xv. 380 Ben-Gurion had resolved on pre-emptive military action in the autumn of 1955.
- 1992 E. PEARCE Election Rides iii. 29 We resolve upon lunch at the Cutty Sark pub.

†(b) Without construction. Obsolete.

- a1528 in J. Strype Eccl. Memorials (1721) I. App. 62 I desired his Ho[liness] to resolve hymself without delay or difficultie.
- 1581 P. WIBURN Checke or Reproofe M. Howlets Shreeching f. 59<sup>v</sup> Hee resolueth generally euen like hymselfe,..and for fornication particularly.
- 1590 J. SMYTHE Certain Disc. Weapons Ded. 8 To know, how of hymselfe..with valour to resolute and performe.
- 1597 F. BACON Of Coulers Good & Euill f. 20<sup>v</sup>, in Ess. As he sayth well, Not to resolute, is to resolute, and many times it..ingageth as farre in some other sort as to resolute.
- 1667 J. MILTON Paradise Lost IX. 97 Thus he resolv'd, but first..His bursting passion into plaints thus pour'd.
- 1748 J. THOMSON Castle of Indolence II. lxii Resolve! resolve! and to be men aspire!
- 1762 O. GOLDSMITH Citizen of World I. 107 So after resolving, and re-resolving, I had courage enough to tell her my mind.
- a1859 J. AUSTIN Lect. Jurispr. (1879) I. xxi. 452 When such expressions as 'resolving' and 'determining' are applied to a present intention to do a future act.

c. transitive. to resolve with oneself: = sense 26a. Now rare.

- 1578 G. BEST True Disc. Passage to Cathaya I. 45 He determined and resolved wyth himselfe, to go make full prooffe thereof.
- 1588 J. UDALL True Remedie v. 86<sup>v</sup> The prophet..resolueth with himselfe, that though they regard not their owne good, yet will hee continue his care ouer them.
- 1624 E. BOLTON Nero Caesar 140 It must necessarily precede, that he resolved with himselfe, not to issue out to fight with Boadicia.
- 1710 LD. SHAFTESBURY Soliloquy 1 I have resolv'd with my self, that the Maxim might be admitted.
- 1743 H. FIELDING Jonathan Wild III. ii, in Misc. III. 196 Am I so absolutely their Master, that I can resolve with myself, so far only will I grieve?
- 1823 J. GALT Ringan Gilhaize I. 122 My grandfather resolved with himself to depart betimes for Kilmarnock, in case of any change in his temper.
- 1859 H. B. STOWE Minister's Wooing xvii. 277 He had inly resolved with himself that he would give Candace his opinion.
- 1908 E. PHILLPOTTS Mother 396 Seriously he resolved with himself to destroy Northmore.

†d. intransitive. To decide to set one's course for a place, destination, etc.

Also (occasionally) transitive (reflexive) in same sense. Obsolete.

- a1592 R. GREENE Frier Bacon (1594) sig. D3 [They] Haue in their iests resolved for Oxford towne.
- 1600 W. SHAKESPEARE Henry IV, Pt. 2 II. iii. 67 I will resolute for Scotland.
- a1625 J. FLETCHER Noble Gentleman IV. iv, in F. Beaumont & J. Fletcher Comedies & Trag. (1647) sig. Ff/1 Tell me, have you resolv'd your selfe for Court?
- a1643 W. CARTWRIGHT Ordinary (1651) v. v. 88 Let's swear Fidelity to one another, and So resolve for New England.
- 1700 'AN APOTHECARY' Devil's Journey to London 9 This mighty Prince..Resolves for London now what ere betide.
- 1740 tr. C. Rollin Anc. Hist. (ed. 2) VII. 261 He resolved for Sicily, which would open him a passage into Africa.
- 1760 Impostors Detected II. iv. iii. 189 We were obliged to separate, and every one take his chance... As for me I resolved for Lisbon.

e. transitive. Of an event or circumstance: to make (a person) resolved or determined to do something. Also with on.

- 1814 J. H. MERIVALE Orlando in Roncesvalles III. 66 Smarting Pride contended with his fear, And half resolved him to abide the tempest hurrying near.
- 1836 R. BROWNING & J. FORSTER Life Strafford (1892) 15 The events of the interim had resolved the leaders of the house on abandoning the terms proposed.
- 1890 SIR C. RUSSELL in Daily News 24 July 2/7 The knowledge of this marriage resolved Lord and Lady C...to send their son abroad.
- a1902 S. BUTLER Way of All Flesh (1903) lxvii. 300 It was this that resolved him to part once and for all with his parents.
- 1933 A. BRYANT S. Pepys (1934) iv. 80 He received such unmistakable signs of the spirit of the people as resolved him to wait no longer.
- 2005 A. J. HACIKYAN et al. Heritage Armenian Lit. 875 This episode resolved him to learn his native tongue.

27.

a. transitive. Esp. of a deliberative body or meeting: to determine formally as a resolution (RESOLUTION n.<sup>1</sup> 15a); to adopt or pass as a resolution.

Usually with that-clause as object; frequently in passive with it as subject (also with ellipsis of it and the auxiliary verb to be).

- 1563 Orig. Jrnls. House of Commons 21 Jan. 1 f. 219 Yt is resolved that M<sup>r</sup> Speaker shall direct hys letter in the name of the house to come and [etc.].
- 1590 Articles against Cartwright in T. Fuller Church-hist. Brit. (1655) ix. 201 At some of such meetings..it was resolved..that such..conferences in severall Shires should be erected.
- 1604 Orig. Jrnls. House of Commons 26 June 3 f. 325<sup>v</sup> Resolved vpon further mocion, that Mr. Speaker..should present thanks to his ma<sup>tie</sup>.
- 1641 in E. Nicholas Papers (1886) I. 10 It was resolved that there shalbe on ye 7th of September next a publique thanksgiving for this good accord betweene ye 2 nacions.
- 1706 in Acts & Resolves Mass. Bay (1895) VIII. 721 Resolved That the sum of three hundred & fifty Pounds, be allowed..to Mr Thomas Oakes the memorialist.
- 1781 G. COCKINGS Amer. War v. 124 They [sc. Congress] resolved, 'That the embarkation of Lieutenant-general Burgoyne, and the army under his command, be suspended till [etc.]'.
- 1806 Med. & Physical Jrnl. 15 253 Resolved unanimously, that this meeting..entertains the most firm conviction that [etc.].
- 1835 Baptist Mag. July 282/1 The following Resolutions were resolved unanimously.
- 1849 T. B. MACAULAY Hist. Eng. I. ii. 175 The Commons began by resolving that every member should, on pain of expulsion, take the sacrament [etc.].
- 1905 S. DILL Roman Society (ed. 2) II. iii. 275 The meeting..formally resolved that the honourable Julianus should be requested to accept the distinction.
- 1970 Music Educators Jrnl. 56 85/2 Therefore, be it resolved that we..do nominate John Philip Sousa to the Hall of Fame for Great Americans.
- 1995 Methodist Recorder 3 Aug. 3/3 A special meeting..resolved that one of its five ministerial appointments..be devoted exclusively to outreach among young people in the circuit.

†b. transitive. To put (a person) out of a condition by passing a resolution.
Obsolete. rare.

- 1798 I. ALLEN Nat. & Polit. Hist. Vermont 237 The inhabitants of Vermont had lived in a state of independence.., and could not now submit to be resolved out of it.

---

This entry has been updated (OED Third Edition, March 2010).

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-122

PUBLICATIONS DE LA COUR PERMANENTE DE JUSTICE
INTERNATIONALE

SÉRIE A — N° 13

Le 16 décembre 1927

RECUEIL DES ARRÊTS

N° 11

INTERPRÉTATION
DES ARRÊTS N<sup>OS</sup> 7 ET 8
(USINE DE CHORZÓW)

PUBLICATIONS OF THE PERMANENT COURT
OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE.

SERIES A.—No. 13

December 16th, 1927

COLLECTION OF JUDGMENTS

No. 11

INTERPRETATION
OF JUDGMENTS Nos. 7 AND 8
(THE CHORZÓW FACTORY)

LEYDE
SOCIÉTÉ D'ÉDITIONS
A. W. SIJTHOFF
1927

LEYDEN
A. W. SIJTHOFF'S
PUBLISHING COMPANY
1927

COUR PERMANENTE DE JUSTICE INTERNATIONALE

1927.
Le 16 décembre.
Dossier E. c. XIV.
Rôle XII. 5.

DOUZIÈME SESSION (ORDINAIRE)

Présents :

MM. HUBER, Président,
LODER, ancien Président,
Lord FINLAY,
MM. NYHOLM,
ALTAMIRA, } Juges,
ODA,
ANZILOTTI, }
BEICHMANN, } Juges suppléants,
NEGULESCO, }
MM. RABEL, } Juges nationaux.
EHRlich, }

ARRÊT N° II

INTERPRÉTATION
DES ARRÊTS N<sup>OS</sup> 7 ET 8
RELATIFS A L'AFFAIRE DITE
DE L'USINE DE CHORZÓW

entre le Gouvernement allemand, représenté par M. le D<sup>r</sup> Erich Kaufmann, professeur à Bonn, et le Gouvernement de Pologne, représenté par M. le D<sup>r</sup> Thadée Sobolewski, agent du Gouvernement polonais auprès du Tribunal arbitral mixte polono-allemand,

Demandeur,

Défendeur.

PERMANENT COURT OF INTERNATIONAL JUSTICE.

1927.
December 16th.
File E. c. XIV.
Docket XII. 5.

TWELFTH (ORDINARY) SESSION.

Before :

MM. HUBER, President,
LODER, Former President,
Lord FINLAY,
MM. NYHOLM,
ALTAMIRA, } Judges,
ODA, }
ANZILOTTI, }
BEICHMANN, } Deputy-Judges,
NEGULESCO, }
MM. RABEL, } National Judges.
EHRlich, }

JUDGMENT No. II.

INTERPRETATION
OF JUDGMENTS Nos. 7 AND 8
CONCERNING THE CASE OF THE FACTORY AT CHORZÓW.

The Government of Germany, represented by Dr. Erich Kaufmann, Professor at Bonn,

Applicant,

versus

The Government of Poland, represented by Dr. Thadeus Sobolewski, Agent of the Polish Government before the Polish-German Mixed Arbitral Tribunal,

Respondent.

LA COUR,
composée ainsi qu'il est dit ci-dessus, après avoir entendu les Parties en leurs observations et conclusions,
a rendu l'arrêt suivant :

Par une Requête déposée au Greffe de la Cour le 18 octobre 1927, en conformité de l'article 60 du Statut et de l'article 66 du Règlement de la Cour, le Gouvernement allemand a introduit devant la Cour permanente de Justice internationale, une demande en interprétation des Arrêts n°s 7 et 8 rendus respectivement par la Cour les 25 mai 1926 et 26 juillet 1927, entre les Gouvernements allemand et polonais, et dont, aux termes de la Requête, le sens et la portée seraient devenus litigieux entre ces deux Gouvernements.

La Requête conclut à ce qu'il plaise à la Cour dire et juger :

« que la thèse que

1° dans son Arrêt n° 7, la Cour aurait réservé au Gouvernement polonais le droit d'annuler par la voie judiciaire, encore après l'arrêt susdit, l'acte du 24 décembre 1919 et l'inscription, basée sur cet acte, de l'Oberschlesische comme propriétaire aux registres fonciers ;

2° la requête introduite par le Gouvernement polonais contre l'Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. auprès du Tribunal civil de Kattowitz, tendant à effectuer cette annulation, serait d'une importance internationale pour l'affaire relative à l'usine de Chorzów (demande en indemnité) et pendante auprès de la Cour, ne correspond pas à une bonne interprétation des Arrêts n°s 7 et 8. »

La Requête du Gouvernement allemand fut notifiée, le jour même de son dépôt, conformément aux dispositions de l'article 66, alinéa 2, du Règlement, au Gouvernement polonais, qui fut en même temps informé qu'il lui appartenait, s'il le désirait, de présenter ses observations sur la demande en interprétation dans un délai que la Cour fixa ultérieurement au 7 novembre 1927. En communiquant aux Parties en cause

THE COURT,
 composed as above,
 having heard the observations and conclusions of the Parties,
 delivers the following judgment :

The German Government, by an Application filed with the Registry of the Court on October 18th, 1927, in conformity with Article 60 of the Statute and Article 66 of the Rules of Court, has submitted to the Permanent Court of International Justice a request for an interpretation of Judgments Nos. 7 and 8 given by the Court on May 25th, 1926, and July 26th, 1927, respectively, in suits between the German and Polish Governments, a divergence of opinion having, according to the Application, arisen between the two Governments in regard to the meaning and scope of these two judgments.

It is submitted in the Application :

“that the contention

- (1) that in Judgment No. 7 the Court reserved to the Polish Government the right to annul by process of law, even after the rendering of that judgment, the Agreement of December 24th, 1919, and the entry, based on that agreement, of the name of the Oberschlesische as owner in the land registers ;
- (2) that the action brought by the Polish Government against the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. before the Civil Tribunal of Kattowitz, with a view to effecting this annulment, is of international importance in connection with the suit concerning the Chorzów factory (claim for indemnity) now pending before the Court, is not in accordance with the true construction of Judgments Nos. 7 and 8.”

Notice of the German Government's Application was given, on the date of filing, in conformity with the terms of Article 66, paragraph 2, of the Rules, to the Polish Government, which was at the same time informed that it might, if it desired to do so, submit its observations upon the request for an interpretation within a time-limit subsequently fixed by the Court to expire on November 7th, 1927. When notifying la décision relative à ce délai, la Cour ne manqua pas d'attirer leur attention sur le fait qu'il correspondait, pour la procédure en interprétation, au délai de présentation du Contre-Mémoire visé, en ce qui concerne la procédure ordinaire, par l'article 38, alinéa premier, du Règlement.

Le 7 novembre 1927, le Gouvernement polonais déposa au Greffe de la Cour des « Observations » sur la demande en interprétation des Arrêts n°s 7 et 8 formulée par le Gouvernement allemand. Ces observations conclurent à ce qu'il plaise à la Cour :

« Déclarer qu'il n'y a pas lieu de donner suite à la demande du Gouvernement allemand en date du 17 octobre 1927. »

Saisie de cette conclusion ainsi que des observations qui la précédaient, la Cour adopta, le 9 novembre, la Résolution suivante, laquelle fut dûment communiquée aux Parties en cause :

« La Cour, vu l'article 60 de son Statut et les articles 38 et 66 de son Règlement, décide :

1° d'inviter le Gouvernement allemand à présenter, s'il le désire, dans un délai expirant le 21 novembre, un exposé écrit contenant, avec un supplément d'information sur les conclusions de sa Requête du 17 octobre 1927, ses observations et conclusions au sujet des observations soumises par le Gouvernement polonais ;

2° d'inviter le Gouvernement polonais à présenter, s'il le désire, dans le même délai, un supplément d'information sur les conclusions de la requête allemande du 17 octobre 1927. »

Dans le délai fixé, le Gouvernement allemand déposa, conformément à la décision de la Cour, un « Exposé » en conclusion duquel il pria la Cour de

« 1° Prononcer la jonction des procédures relatives aux exceptions préliminaires soulevées par le Gouvernement polonais et relatives au fond.

2° Déclarer qu'il y a lieu de donner suite à la demande du Gouvernement allemand tendant à obtenir, conformément à l'article 60 du Statut, une interprétation des Arrêts n°s 7 et 8.

3° Dire et juger conformément aux conclusions de la Requête allemande. » the Parties of the decision in regard to this time-limit, the Court duly drew their attention to the fact that it corresponded, as regards the proceedings for an interpretation, to the time-limit for the submission of the Counter-Case provided for, in the case of ordinary proceedings, by Article 38, paragraph 1, of the Rules of Court.

On November 7th, 1927, the Polish Government filed with the Registry "Observations" upon the request for an interpretation of Judgments Nos. 7 and 8 made by the German Government. In these observations it was submitted "that effect should not be given to the Request of the German Government dated October 17th, 1927".

On receipt of this submission and of the observations leading up to it, the Court, on November 9th, adopted the following Resolution which was in due course communicated to the Parties in the case:

"The Court, having regard to Article 60 of the Statute and Articles 38 and 66 of the Rules of Court, decides:

(1) to invite the German Government to submit, should it so desire, on or before November 21st, a written statement containing, together with further explanations regarding the submissions of its Application of October 17th, 1927, its observations and conclusions in regard to the observations filed by the Polish Government;

(2) to invite the Polish Government to submit, should it so desire, within the same limit of time, further explanations regarding the submissions of the German Application of October 17th, 1927."

Within the time laid down, the German Government, in accordance with the Court's decision, filed a "Statement" in which it was submitted

"(1) that the proceedings in regard to the preliminary objections raised by the Polish Government should be joined to the proceedings on the merits;

(2) that effect should be given to the request made by the German Government with a view to obtaining an interpretation of Judgments Nos. 7 and 8 in conformity with Article 60 of the Statute;

(3) that judgment should be given in accordance with the submissions of the German Application."

De son côté, le Gouvernement polonais déclara « renoncer à la déposition d'informations supplémentaires concernant la demande en interprétation des Arrêts nos 7 et 8 ».

Dans ces conditions, la Cour, conformément à sa Résolution du 9 novembre 1927, tint, le 28 novembre, une audience au cours de laquelle elle entendit les exposés oraux de MM. Kaufmann et Sobolewski, agents des Gouvernements en cause. La Cour ayant, à la suite de ces exposés, décidé de clore les débats, après avoir fourni auxdits agents l'occasion de répliquer, M. Kaufmann prononça une brève réplique, tandis que M. Sobolewski, déclarant qu'à son avis les discussions antérieures avaient complètement épuisé la matière, renonça à la parole.

* * *

POINT DE FAIT.

L'Arrêt n° 7 de la Cour, rendu le 25 mai 1926 dans le procès entre les Gouvernements allemand et polonais au sujet de « certains intérêts allemands en Haute-Silésie polonaise » — intérêts qui, aux termes de l'arrêt, avaient trait, entre autres, « à la radiation aux registres fonciers, comme propriétaire de certains biens-fonds à Chorzów, de la Société Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G., et à l'inscription à sa place du Trésor polonais » —, déclara, dans son dispositif, « que l'attitude du Gouvernement polonais vis-à-vis des Sociétés anonymes Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke . . . n'était pas conforme aux dispositions . . . de la Convention de Genève », conclue le 15 mai 1922 entre l'Allemagne et la Pologne.

Partant de cette décision de la Cour, les deux Gouvernements entrèrent en négociations en vue de régler à l'amiable les demandes de ladite Société, entre autres, par le paiement d'une indemnité en argent.

Ces négociations n'aboutirent pas, et le Gouvernement allemand, ayant informé le Gouvernement polonais que les points de vue des deux Gouvernements lui semblaient si différents qu'il paraissait impossible d'éviter un appel à une

The Polish Government, for its part, announced that it "did not intend to file further explanations in regard to the request for an interpretation of Judgments Nos. 7 and 8".

In these circumstances, the Court, in accordance with its Resolution of November 9th, 1927, held a public sitting on November 28th, 1927, at which it heard the oral statements of MM. Kaufmann and Sobolewski, the Agents of the Governments concerned in the case. At the conclusion of these statements, the Court decided to close the hearing, after having given the Agents an opportunity of replying; whereupon M. Kaufmann replied briefly, and M. Sobolewski, stating that in his opinion the previous discussions had completely exhausted the question, waived his right to reply.

* * *

THE FACTS.

In the terms of Judgment No. 7 given by the Court on May 25th, 1926, in the case between the German and Polish Governments, in regard to "certain German interests in Polish Upper Silesia"—which interests, according to the Judgment, related, amongst other things, to the "deletion from the land registers of the name of the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. as owner of certain landed property at Chorzów, and the entry, in its place, of the Polish Treasury"—it was declared "that the attitude of the Polish Government in regard to the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke . . . was not in conformity with . . . the Geneva Convention" concluded on May 15th, 1922, between Germany and Poland.

On the basis of this decision of the Court, the two Governments entered upon negotiations with a view to a settlement by friendly arrangement in regard to the claims of the above-mentioned Company amongst others, by means of the payment of pecuniary compensation.

These negotiations failed, and the German Government, having informed the Polish Government that the points of view of the two Governments seemed so different that it appeared impossible to avoid recourse to an international instance internationale, saisit la Cour, le 8 février 1927, d'une Requête tendant à ce que la Cour dise et juge, entre autres, « que le Gouvernement polonais est tenu à la réparation du préjudice subi » par l'Oberschlesische, à raison de l'attitude dudit Gouvernement vis-à-vis d'elle. Le Gouvernement polonais ayant excipé de l'incompétence de la Cour de connaître de l'instance ainsi introduite, la Cour rendit, sur cette exception, le 26 juillet 1927, son Arrêt n° 8, par lequel elle décida de retenir l'instance en question pour statuer au fond, et de charger le Président de fixer les délais pour le dépôt des pièces de la procédure écrite ; ces délais furent ultérieurement arrêtés de manière à permettre à l'affaire au fond d'être en état le 1<sup>er</sup> mars 1928.

Or, d'après la Requête déposée par le Gouvernement allemand au Greffe de la Cour le 18 octobre 1927, le Gouvernement polonais avait introduit auprès du Tribunal régional de Katowice, dans le ressort duquel sont sis les immeubles dont il s'agit et qui sont connus sous la dénomination d'« usine de Chorzów », une requête contre l'Oberschlesische, signifiée à cette dernière le 16 septembre 1927. Cette requête aurait conclu à ce que :

- « 1° il soit déclaré que la société défenderesse n'est pas devenue propriétaire des biens-fonds Chorzów (vol. XXIII, fol. 725, etc.) ;
- 2° il soit déclaré que l'inscription en faveur de la société défenderesse du changement de la propriété, effectué le 29 janvier 1920, était invalide, et que les fonds mentionnés au chiffre 1° des présentes conclusions sont restés la propriété du Reich allemand en dépit de l'Auflassung et de l'inscription, en date du 29 janvier 1920, de la société défenderesse comme propriétaire ;
- 3° il soit déclaré que, indépendamment des lois du 14 juillet 1920 (Bulletin des Lois de la République polonaise — pos. 400) et du 16 juin 1922 (Bulletin — pos. 388), la propriété des biens-fonds mentionnés sous chiffre 1° revient au Fisc de l'État polonais. »

L'exposé des motifs sur lesquels la requête fondait ses conclusions aurait contenu, entre autres, le passage suivant :

tribunal, filed with the Court on February 8th, 1927, an Application submitting, amongst other things, "that the Polish Government is under an obligation to make good the injury sustained" by the Oberschlesische in consequence of the attitude of that Government in respect of the Company mentioned. The Polish Government having disputed the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the suit thus brought, the Court, on July 26th, 1927, delivered judgment (No. 8) upon this objection, deciding to reserve the suit for judgment on the merits, and to instruct the President to fix the times for the deposit of the documents of the written proceedings; these times were subsequently fixed in such a way as to enable the suit on the merits to be ready for hearing on March 1st, 1928.

According to the Application deposited by the German Government with the Registry on October 18th, 1927, the Polish Government had filed with the District Court of Katowice, within the jurisdiction of which are situated the landed properties in question, known as "the factory of Chorzów", a claim against the Oberschlesische, which claim was served upon that Company on September 16th, 1927. In this claim it is—according to the German Government's Application—submitted:

- "(1) that it should be declared that the defendant Company has not become the owner of the landed property at Chorzów (vol. XXIII, fol. 725, etc.);
- (2) that it should be declared that the entry of the change of ownership in favour of the defendant Company, made on January 29th, 1920, was null and void, and that the landed properties mentioned under No. (1) of these submissions remained the property of the German Reich, notwithstanding the Auflassung and entry in the register on January 29th, 1920, of the defendant Company as owner;
- (3) that it should be declared that, independently of the laws of July 14th, 1920 (Legal Gazette of the Polish Republic—pos. 400), and of June 16th, 1922 (Gazette—pos. 388), the ownership of the landed properties mentioned under No. (1) falls to the Polish Treasury."

The statement of the grounds on which these submissions are based is said to contain the following passage amongst others:

« L'arrêt [scil. n° 7 de la Cour] a décidé le différend sous l'angle de vue des dispositions du droit international; et la Cour a observé dans les considérants qu'elle ne préjugait pas à la question de savoir si le transfert de la propriété et l'inscription aux registres fonciers étaient valides sous l'angle de vue du droit civil. L'argumentation polonaise basée sur l'exception de l'invalidité civile de la transaction du 24 décembre 1919, et, partant, de l'inscription du 29 janvier 1920, n'a pas été discutée par la Cour, qui se retrancha derrière l'existence formelle de l'inscription. Mais, en même temps, la Cour a dit que, si la Pologne veut contester la validité de cette inscription, son annulation ne saurait, en tout cas, résulter que d'une décision rendue par la juridiction compétente.

Se basant sur l'arrêt susdit, le Reich allemand a introduit, le 8 février 1927, auprès de la Cour permanente de Justice internationale à La Haye, une nouvelle requête relative à l'indemnité due en raison de la violation des droits de la société défenderesse ainsi que de ceux des Bayerische Stickstoffwerke, violation effectuée par la reprise de l'usine par l'État polonais.

Dans ces conditions, le Fisc utilise la possibilité, lui réservée par l'arrêt de la Cour à La Haye, de contester devant le tribunal compétent la validité tant du changement de la propriété que de l'inscription.»

L'exactitude de ces citations n'a pas été contestée par le Gouvernement polonais.

D'un autre côté, le texte complet de la requête signifiée, le 16 septembre 1927, à l'Oberschlesische, n'a pas été soumis à la Cour dans la présente procédure. De même, le texte de la décision que, selon les informations données au cours de la procédure orale, le Tribunal régional de Katowice aurait rendue par défaut sur cette requête et qui aurait adjugé au Gouvernement polonais ses conclusions, n'a pas été porté à la connaissance de la Cour.

* * *

POINT DE DROIT.

La demande en interprétation émanant du Gouvernement allemand, et dont les conclusions sont reproduites ci-dessus,

“The Judgment [i.e. No. 7 of the Court] has decided the dispute from the standpoint of the rules of international law; and the Court observes in its reasoning that it does not pass any opinion on the question whether the transfer of ownership and entry in the land registers were valid at municipal law. The Polish argument based on the objection that the transaction of December 24th, 1919, was not valid at municipal law and that consequently the entry of January 29th, 1920, was also invalid, is not discussed by the Court, which simply relies on the mere fact of the existence of the entry. At the same time, however, the Court says that if Poland wishes to dispute the validity of this entry, it can, in any case, only be annulled in pursuance of a decision given by the competent tribunal.

Relying on this judgment, the German Reich, on February 8th, 1927, filed with the Permanent Court of International Justice at The Hague a new application respecting the indemnity due in consequence of the violation of the rights of the defendant Company and of those of the Bayerische Stickstoffwerke, which violation consisted in the taking over of the factory by the Polish State.

In these circumstances, the Treasury avails itself of the possibility, reserved to it by the judgment of the Hague Court, of disputing before the competent tribunal both the validity of the change of ownership and the entry in the land register.”

The correctness of these quotations has not been disputed by the Polish Government.

On the other hand, the complete text of the claim served upon the Oberschlesische on September 16th, 1927, has not been laid before the Court in the present proceedings. Similarly, the text of the decision which, according to information given during the oral proceedings, has been rendered by default by the District Court of Katowice upon this claim, and which is said to have granted to the Polish Government the relief sought, has not been placed before the Court.

* * *

THE LAW.

The request for an interpretation submitted by the German Government, the conclusions of which are reproduced above, a été introduite en vertu de l'article 60 du Statut de la Cour, lequel est ainsi conçu :

« L'arrêt est définitif et sans recours. En cas de contestation sur le sens et la portée de l'arrêt, il appartient à la Cour de l'interpréter, à la demande de toute Partie. »

Le Gouvernement polonais ayant contesté que, dans le cas présent, les conditions requises par ledit article pour qu'il puisse être donné suite à une demande en interprétation se trouvent réalisées, il faut d'abord examiner si tel est bien le cas.

Il ressort de l'article que ces conditions sont les suivantes :

1° il faut qu'il y ait contestation sur le sens et la portée d'un arrêt de la Cour ;

2° il faut que la demande vise une interprétation de l'arrêt.

En ce qui concerne la dernière condition, la Cour est d'avis que, par l'expression « interprétation », il faut entendre l'indication précise du « sens » et de la « portée » que la Cour a entendu attribuer à l'arrêt en question, et le Gouvernement polonais ne paraît pas prétendre que tel ne soit pas le sens. En revanche, il nie l'existence d'une contestation, entre les deux Gouvernements, sur le sens et la portée des arrêts cités dans la demande allemande, et sa conclusion est qu'il n'y a pas lieu de donner suite à la demande.

*

Avant d'aborder la question ainsi posée, la Cour croit utile de préciser le sens à donner aux termes « contestation » et « sens et portée de l'arrêt », tels qu'ils ont été employés dans l'article 60 du Statut.

Pour ce qui est du terme « contestation », la Cour constate que l'article 60 du Statut, d'après sa teneur, n'exige pas que l'existence de la contestation se soit manifestée d'une certaine manière, par exemple par des négociations diplomatiques. Il paraît bien désirable qu'un État ne procède pas à une démarche aussi sérieuse que l'assignation d'un autre État devant la was made under Article 60 of the Statute of the Court, which runs as follows :

“The judgment is final and without appeal. In the event of dispute as to the meaning or scope of the judgment, the Court shall construe it upon the request of any Party.”

The Polish Government having refused to admit the existence in this case of the conditions required by the article in question in order that a request for interpretation may be proceeded with, it is necessary in the first place to consider whether this contention is well-founded.

From the article it appears that these conditions are the following :

(1) there must be a dispute as to the meaning and scope of a judgment of the Court ;

(2) the request should have for its object an interpretation of the judgment.

As regards the latter condition, the Court is of the opinion that the expression “to construe” must be understood as meaning to give a precise definition of the meaning and scope which the Court intended to give to the judgment in question, and the Polish Government does not appear to claim that this is not its meaning. But it denies the existence of a dispute between the two Governments as to the meaning and scope of the judgments referred to in the German Request, and its submission is that there is no ground for proceeding with the Request.

*

Before examining the question which has thus been raised, the Court thinks it advisable to define the meaning which should be given to the terms “dispute” and “meaning or scope of the judgment”, as employed in Article 60 of the Statute.

In so far as concerns the word “dispute”, the Court observes that, according to the tenor of Article 60 of the Statute, the manifestation of the existence of the dispute in a specific manner, as for instance by diplomatic negotiations, is not required. It would no doubt be desirable that a State should not proceed to take as serious a step as summoning

II ARRÊT N° II. — ARRÊTS N°S 7 ET 8 (INTERPRÉTATION)

Cour, sans avoir auparavant, dans une mesure raisonnable, tâché d'établir clairement qu'il s'agit d'une différence de vues qui ne peut être dissipée autrement. Mais, vu la teneur du texte, la Cour estime ne pas pouvoir exiger que la contestation se soit formellement manifestée ; à son avis, il doit suffire que les deux Gouvernements aient en fait manifesté des opinions opposées quant au sens et à la portée d'un arrêt de la Cour. Celle-ci croit, à ce sujet, devoir rappeler que, dans son Arrêt n° 6 (relatif à l'exception d'incompétence soulevée par la Pologne au sujet de la requête qu'avait introduite le Gouvernement allemand en vertu de l'article 23 de la Convention de Genève concernant la Haute-Silésie), elle a estimé que, ledit article ne posant pas la condition de négociations diplomatiques préalables, la Cour pouvait être saisie aussitôt que l'une des Parties estimait qu'il y avait divergence d'opinions résultant de l'interprétation et de l'application des articles 6 à 22 de la Convention.

Pour apprécier le sens que revêt, dans l'article 60 du Statut, l'expression « sens et portée de l'arrêt », il y a lieu de rapprocher cette expression de l'article précédent du Statut, qui déclare qu'une décision de la Cour n'est obligatoire que pour les Parties en litige et dans le cas qui a été tranché.

Il semble tout naturel de penser que c'est afin de permettre à la Cour de préciser au besoin ce qui a été décidé avec force obligatoire dans un arrêt, que la deuxième phrase de l'article 60 a été introduite, et qu'en revanche, une demande qui n'a pas ce but ne rentre pas dans le cadre de cette disposition. Pour qu'une divergence de vues puisse faire l'objet d'une demande en interprétation en vertu de l'article 60 du Statut, il faut donc qu'il y ait divergence entre les Parties sur ce qui, dans l'arrêt en question, a été tranché avec force obligatoire. Cela ne veut pas dire qu'il doive être incontesté que le point dont le sens prête à discussion regarde une partie de l'arrêt ayant force obligatoire. Une divergence de vues, si tel ou tel point a été décidé avec force obligatoire, constitue, elle aussi, un cas qui rentre dans le cadre de la disposition another State to appear before the Court without having previously, within reasonable limits, endeavoured to make it quite clear that a difference of views is in question which has not been capable of being otherwise overcome. But in view of the wording of the article, the Court considers that it cannot require that the dispute should have manifested itself in a formal way; according to the Court's view, it should be sufficient if the two Governments have in fact shown themselves as holding opposite views in regard to the meaning or scope of a judgment of the Court. The Court in this respect recalls the fact that in its Judgment No. 6 (relating to the objection to the jurisdiction raised by Poland in regard to the application made by the German Government under Article 23 of the Geneva Convention concerning Upper Silesia), it expressed the opinion that, the article in question not requiring preliminary diplomatic negotiations as a condition precedent, recourse could be had to the Court as soon as one of the Parties considered that there was a difference of opinion arising out of the interpretation and application of Articles 6 to 22 of the Convention.

In order to realize the meaning of the expression "meaning or scope of the judgment" in Article 60 of the Statute, this expression should be compared with the terms of the preceding article of the Statute, which states that a decision of the Court has no binding force except between the Parties and in respect of the particular case decided.

The natural inference to be drawn is that the second sentence of Article 60 was inserted in order, if necessary, to enable the Court to make quite clear the points which had been settled with binding force in a judgment, and, on the other hand, that a request which has not that object does not come within the terms of this provision. In order that a difference of opinion should become the subject of a request for an interpretation under Article 60 of the Statute, there must therefore exist a difference of opinion between the Parties as to those points in the judgment in question which have been decided with binding force. That does not imply that it must be beyond dispute that the point the meaning of which is questioned is related to a part of the judgment having binding force. A difference of opinion as to whether en question, et la Cour ne pourrait se soustraire à l'obligation d'interpréter l'arrêt dans la mesure nécessaire pour pouvoir se prononcer sur pareille divergence.

Il s'agit donc de savoir si une telle divergence de vues s'est, en fait, manifestée entre les deux Gouvernements dans le cas présent, quant au sens et à la portée des Arrêts n°s 7 et 8. La Cour traitera cette question séparément par rapport à chacun des arrêts dont il s'agit et à chacune des deux thèses qu'attribuent au Gouvernement polonais les conclusions de la Requête allemande.

Il y a lieu, à ce sujet, de rappeler les faits qui ont précédé l'introduction de la Requête en interprétation par le Gouvernement allemand.

Déjà au cours des négociations entamées sur la base de l'Arrêt n° 7, dans une lettre du 9 septembre 1926 adressée au Gouvernement allemand, le Gouvernement polonais avait exprimé l'opinion que — dans la mesure où il s'agissait de l'indemnisation de l'Oberschlesische pour ses dommages prétendus —, restait encore ouverte, indépendamment de l'arrêt de la Cour, la question de savoir si, au point de vue du droit civil, l'inscription aux registres fonciers de ladite société comme propriétaire de l'usine de Chorzów était valide. Le Gouvernement allemand répondit le 2 octobre, en faisant valoir que la Cour avait, en termes exprès, décidé qu'il n'y avait aucun motif justifiant le point de vue selon lequel le transfert de l'usine de Chorzów à l'Oberschlesische ne constituerait pas une aliénation ayant pleine validité juridique, et que, par conséquent, à la date où le transfert de la souveraineté à la Pologne s'était produit, la propriété de l'usine revenait indubitablement à cette société et non au Reich allemand. « Toute l'affaire », disait le Gouvernement allemand, « a été définitivement réglée et décidée par l'arrêt de la Cour permanente de La Haye. » Les négociations ayant échoué et la question de l'indemnité ayant été portée devant la Cour par le Gouvernement allemand, l'avocat du Gouvernement polonais, dans sa plaidoirie du 22 juin 1927 relative à la a particular point has or has not been decided with binding force also constitutes a case which comes within the terms of the provision in question, and the Court cannot avoid the duty incumbent upon it of interpreting the judgment in so far as necessary, in order to adjudicate upon such a difference of opinion.

It thus becomes necessary to ascertain whether such a difference of opinion has in fact become manifest in the present case between the two Governments, as regards the meaning or scope of Judgments Nos. 7 and 8. The Court will deal with this question separately in relation to each of the judgments in question and each of the two contentions which the conclusions of the German Government impute to the Polish Government.

In this respect, the facts which preceded the submission of the Application for an interpretation by the German Government should be recalled.

In the course of the negotiations entered upon on the basis of Judgment No. 7, the Polish Government, by a letter of September 9th, 1926, addressed to the German Government, had already expressed the opinion that—in so far as the compensation of the Oberschlesische for the damages which they claimed to have sustained was concerned—the question whether, at municipal law, the entry in the land register of the Company in question as owners of the factory of Chorzów was valid, remained open, independently of the judgment of the Court. The German Government replied, on October 2nd, pointing out that the Court had expressly decided that there was no ground justifying the contention that the transfer of the factory of Chorzów to the Oberschlesische did not constitute an alienation valid at law, and that, consequently, at the time when the transfer of sovereignty to Poland took place, the ownership of the factory unquestionably belonged to that Company and not to the German Reich. "The whole matter", the German Government stated, "has been finally settled and decided by the judgment of the Permanent Court at The Hague." The negotiations having failed, and the question of indemnities having been brought before the Court by the German Government, Counsel for the Polish Government, in the course of his pleadings on June 22nd, 1927, in relation compétence de la Cour pour juger de cette question, a repris le point de vue exprimé par le Gouvernement polonais dans la lettre du 9 septembre 1926, et y a expressément déclaré que le principe de l'indemnité de l'Oberschlesische continue à être contesté sur la base même dudit arrêt (l'Arrêt n° 7), qui avait reconnu à la Pologne « la faculté de contester la validité de cette inscription ». Il en tirait la conclusion que la question relative à la reconnaissance du principe des réparations réclamées n'était pas encore « litigieuse » en ce qui concerne l'Oberschlesische, « tant que la question de la validité de l'inscription de son titre de propriété, réservé par la Cour », n'aurait « pas été réglée par les tribunaux compétents, c'est-à-dire par les tribunaux polonais, que le Gouvernement polonais » était « sur le point de saisir ».

L'agent allemand y répondit dans sa plaidoirie du 24 juin : il contestait que la Cour ne se fût pas encore définitivement prononcée et qu'elle eût fait une réserve quant à la validité des transactions de 1919 au point de vue du droit civil ; il soutenait que, à son avis, vu les considérants et le dispositif de l'arrêt, il n'était guère douteux que la phrase invoquée par l'avocat du Gouvernement polonais ne peut avoir le sens qui lui avait été attribué par ce Gouvernement et, par conséquent, que cette phrase ne pouvait être opposée aux réclamations du Gouvernement allemand. Il faut noter que l'agent du Gouvernement polonais, qui assistait à ces plaidoiries, n'a rien dit pour démentir ou modifier lesdites observations de l'avocat de son Gouvernement. Au contraire, il y a fait allusion dans son propre plaidoyer devant la Cour. Il n'y a donc pas lieu de douter que telles aient bien été alors les vues du Gouvernement polonais.

Peu après que la question de compétence eut été tranchée par la Cour (Arrêt n° 8), le Gouvernement polonais introduisit, contre l'Oberschlesische, la requête annoncée par son représentant lors des débats de juin, et dont les motifs allégués et cités ci-dessus paraissent confirmer l'opinion que la requête a bien été introduite dans le dessein annoncé lors desdits débats.

to the jurisdiction of the Court to adjudicate upon this question, again took up the point of view put forward by the Polish Government in its letter of September 9th, 1926; and he then expressly stated that the principle of the right of the Oberschlesische to compensation was still in dispute, on the very basis of the said Judgment (Judgment No. 7), which was said to have reserved to Poland "the right to dispute the validity of this entry". From that he inferred that the question relating to the recognition of the principle of the compensation claimed did not as yet constitute an issue as far as concerned the Oberschlesische, pending the decision by the competent tribunals, that is to say by the Polish tribunals—before which the Polish Government was on the point of bringing the matter—, of the question of the validity of the registration of its title as owner, a question said to have been reserved by the Court.

The German Agent replied in his pleadings on June 24th: he disputed the contention that the Court had not so far given a definite ruling and that it had made a reservation as to the lawful character under municipal law of the transactions which took place in 1919; he maintained that, in his opinion, having regard to the grounds and the operative part of the Judgment, there could be no doubt that the phrase invoked by Counsel for the Polish Government could not have the meaning which it was given by that Government, and that consequently that phrase could not be quoted in argument against the claims of the German Government. It should be observed that the Agent for the Polish Government, who was present at these pleadings before the Court, said nothing calculated to impugn or modify the said remarks of Counsel for that Government. On the contrary, he alluded to them in his own statement before the Court. There is thus no room for doubt that at the time those were the views of the Polish Government.

Shortly after the question of jurisdiction had been decided by the Court (Judgment No. 8), the Polish Government brought against the Oberschlesische the application announced by its representative during the hearings in June; and the grounds upon which this application is based, which are given above, appear to confirm the view that it was indeed brought De ces faits il résulte que, tandis que le Gouvernement allemand soutient que l'Arrêt n° 7 de la Cour a définitivement tranché, avec effet obligatoire pour la demande en indemnisation présentée en faveur de l'Oberschlesische, la question relative à la propriété de cette société sur l'usine de Chorzów, voire du point de vue du droit civil, le Gouvernement polonais a soutenu une opinion contraire et s'est appuyé sur un certain passage dudit arrêt (p. 42) qui, selon lui, démontrait le bien-fondé de son opinion et qui, dans un certain sens, pourrait être caractérisé comme une réserve. Il y a donc vraiment une contestation sur un point qui, selon les explications apportées ci-dessus, concerne le sens et la portée dudit Arrêt n° 7, pour autant qu'il s'agit de la première conclusion du Gouvernement allemand.

Le Gouvernement polonais objecte que ledit passage n'a pas été invoqué par lui comme conférant un titre au droit de saisir le Tribunal de Katowice de la Requête qui y a été introduite, mais seulement comme étant la constatation par la Cour d'un droit qui lui appartenait déjà, abstraction faite de toute réserve. Le Gouvernement polonais objecte également que la demande allemande d'interprétation ne porte pas sur le dispositif de l'arrêt, qui, selon le Gouvernement polonais, peut seul faire l'objet d'une demande en interprétation, et qu'il ne prétend pas que le dispositif contienne une réserve telle qu'elle est visée dans la conclusion n° 1 du Gouvernement allemand. La Cour, cependant, ne peut se rallier à cette manière de voir. Car il est clair en tout cas que, s'il n'y a pas divergence sur le fait que le texte du dispositif de l'arrêt ne contient pas la réserve en question, l'existence, dans les motifs de l'arrêt, d'un passage que l'une des Parties interprète comme exprimant une réserve — réserve qui aurait pour effet de limiter la force obligatoire de l'Arrêt n° 7 — ou comme la constatation d'un droit qui serait incompatible avec la situation juridique que l'autre Partie considère comme établie avec force obligatoire, permet de saisir valablement la Cour du point relatif à l'interprétation des vrais sens et portée dudit arrêt.

for the purpose indicated at the time of the hearing in question.

From a consideration of these facts, it follows that—whereas the German Government contends that Judgment No. 7 of the Court finally decided, with binding effect as concerns the claim for compensation put forward on behalf of the Oberschlesische, the question relating to the right of ownership possessed by that Company over the factory at Chorzów, also under municipal law—the Polish Government supported the opposite view and, at the same time, relied on a certain passage in the judgment in question (p. 42) which, according to its opinion, showed the soundness of this view, and which might in one sense be described as a reservation. There is therefore, in so far as the first of the submissions of the German Government is concerned, a true dispute over a point which, in accordance with the explanations set out above, relates to the meaning and scope of Judgment No. 7.

The Polish Government contends that the passage in question was not invoked by it as conferring a right of bringing before the Tribunal of Katowice the Application actually submitted to that Tribunal, but only as an affirmation by the Court of a right which that Government already possessed, apart from any reservation. The Polish Government also contends that the German request for an interpretation does not relate to the operative part of the judgment (which, according to the former Government, can alone be the subject of a request for interpretation), and asserts that it does not claim that the operative part contains a reservation of the kind referred to in submission No. 1 of the German Government. The Court, however, is unable to take this view. For it is clear in any case that, although it is not contested that the terms of the operative part of the judgment do not contain the reservation in question, the fact that the grounds for the judgment contain a passage which one of the Parties construes as a reservation (the effect of which would be to restrict the binding force of Judgment No. 7) or as affirming a right inconsistent with the situation at law which the other Party considers as established with binding force, allows of the Court's being validly requested to give an interpretation fixing the true meaning and scope of the judgment in question.

D'autre part, en ce qui concerne l'Arrêt n° 8, la Cour estime que le sens et la portée de cet arrêt ne sont pas directement touchés par la première conclusion allemande. En effet, ledit arrêt ne statue que sur la compétence de la Cour pour juger l'affaire introduite par la Requête allemande du 8 février 1927. Toutefois, il y a lieu de mentionner que certains passages de cet arrêt peuvent entrer ici en ligne de compte comme exprimant le sens et la portée que la Cour attribuait à l'Arrêt n° 7 en prononçant son Arrêt n° 8.

La deuxième conclusion allemande semble poser la question des effets que la requête introduite auprès du Tribunal de Katowice pourrait avoir sur l'affaire pendante devant la Cour et relative à l'indemnité réclamée par l'Allemagne sur la base de l'Arrêt n° 7. D'après l'argumentation donnée, il est cependant clair que cette conclusion vise une application à un cas spécial d'un point que le Gouvernement allemand considère comme réglé avec force obligatoire par les arrêts déjà rendus, mais qui, selon le Gouvernement polonais, laisse encore ouverte la question relative à la validité, au point de vue du droit civil, du transfert de la propriété à l'Oberschlesische et de son inscription aux registres fonciers. Cette deuxième conclusion a donc, elle aussi, implicitement pour objet une question contestée visant le sens et la portée de l'Arrêt n° 7. En revanche, pour ce qui est de l'Arrêt n° 8, la Cour se borne à renvoyer à ce qu'elle a dit à ce sujet par rapport à la première conclusion allemande.

* * *

Ayant ainsi constaté que les conclusions allemandes contiennent toutes les deux des demandes en interprétation de l'Arrêt n° 7 de la Cour, la Cour doit passer à l'examen de ce qu'on peut considérer comme le fond de l'affaire.

En procédant à cet examen, la Cour ne se considère pas comme tenue de répondre simplement par oui ou non aux propositions formulées dans les conclusions de la Requête allemande. Elle se place à ce point de vue parce que, pour interpréter un arrêt, elle ne saurait être liée par des formules

On the other hand, as regards Judgment No. 8, the Court considers that the meaning and scope of that Judgment are not directly affected by the first of the German submissions. For that Judgment only decides as to the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the case submitted by the German Application of February 8th, 1927. It may, however, be stated that certain passages of that Judgment may in this connection be taken into account as showing the meaning and scope which the Court, when it pronounced Judgment No. 8, attributed to Judgment No. 7.

The second of the submissions of the German Government appears to raise the question of the effect which the application made to the Katowice Tribunal might have on the case pending before the Court with regard to the indemnity claimed by Germany on the basis of Judgment No. 7. According to the reasoning put forward, it is nevertheless clear that this submission relates to the application to a particular case of a point which the German Government considers as having been settled with binding effect by the judgments already rendered, but which, according to the Polish Government, leaves open the question as to the validity under municipal law of the transfer of the ownership to the Oberschlesische and of its entry in the land register. This second submission thus also refers, implicitly, to a disputed question relating to the meaning and scope of Judgment No. 7. On the other hand, as regards Judgment No. 8, the Court confines itself to a reference to what it has stated on this subject in relation to the first of the German submissions.

* * *

Having thus shown that the submissions of the German Government both comprise requests for the interpretation of the Court's Judgment No. 7, the Court must now proceed to consider what may be regarded as the merits of the suit.

In so doing, the Court does not consider itself as bound simply to reply "yes" or "no" to the propositions formulated in the submissions of the German Application. It adopts this attitude because, for the purpose of the interpretation of a judgment, it cannot be bound by formulæ chosen by the choisies par les Parties en cause, mais doit pouvoir se prononcer librement. Cette manière de voir se trouve en harmonie avec le texte actuel de l'article 66 du Règlement. En effet, aux termes de cet article — par lequel la Cour a entendu donner les indications indispensables relatives à la procédure en interprétation —, la requête introduisant la demande en interprétation doit comprendre :

« a) la mention de l'arrêt dont l'interprétation est demandée ;

« b) l'indication précise du ou des points litigieux. »

Tandis que l'article 35 du Règlement, qui a trait à la requête introduisant une affaire ordinaire, exige « la désignation de la chose demandée », l'article 66 parle de « l'indication . . . des points litigieux ». Et tandis que, pour la procédure ordinaire, l'article 40 du Règlement prévoit la présentation obligatoire de mémoires contenant, comme un élément essentiel, « les conclusions », l'article 66 ne mentionne que des « observations » facultatives et « un supplément d'information » à fournir sur invitation de la Cour.

La Cour estime donc devoir interpréter les conclusions de la Requête allemande du 18 octobre 1927 comme constituant simplement l'indication, au sens de l'article 66 du Règlement, des points dont le sens et la portée sont contestés entre les Parties. Selon toute autre interprétation, en effet, la Requête en question ne satisferait pas aux conditions formelles posées par ledit article ; et, comme elle a déjà eu l'occasion de le dire dans des arrêts antérieurs, la Cour peut, dans des limites raisonnables, faire abstraction des imperfections de forme des pièces qui lui sont soumises.

Au point de vue qui vient d'être invoqué, il y a lieu de retenir que les deux conclusions formulées dans la Requête allemande se révèlent, à l'analyse, comme ayant trait au même point litigieux, envisagé sous un double aspect. Ce point, qui a été suffisamment défini ci-dessus, se rattache au passage, figurant à la page 42 de l'Arrêt n° 7, que le Gouvernement polonais a invoqué dans la requête adressée par lui au Tribunal de Katowice ; ce passage est ainsi conçu :

Parties concerned, but must be able to take an unhampered decision. This view is consistent with the present terms of Article 66 of the Rules of Court. In fact, according to this article—which was intended by the Court to furnish information indispensable in regard to proceedings for interpretation—, the application submitting the request for an interpretation shall contain :

“(a) a specification of the judgment the interpretation of which is requested ;

“(b) an indication of the precise point or points in dispute.”

Whereas Article 35 of the Rules, which deals with an application instituting ordinary proceedings, requires “an indication of the claim”, Article 66 provides for “an indication of the . . . points in dispute”. And whereas, in the case of ordinary procedure, Article 40 of the Rules provides for the compulsory submission of Cases containing, as an essential part, “a statement of conclusions”, Article 66 only mentions optional “observations” and “further explanations” to be furnished upon the invitation of the Court.

The Court therefore considers that it should interpret the “submissions” of the German Application of October 18th, 1927, as simply constituting an indication, within the meaning of Article 66 of the Rules, of the points the meaning and scope of which are in dispute between the Parties. Construed in any other way, the Application in question would not satisfy the express conditions laid down by the above-mentioned article ; and the Court, as it has already had occasion to observe in previous judgments, may within reasonable limits disregard the defects of form of documents placed before it.

Adopting the standpoint indicated above, it is to be observed that, on analysis, the two submissions formulated in the German Application are seen to refer to the same disputed point regarded from two different aspects. This point, which has been sufficiently defined above, relates to the passage appearing on page 42 of Judgment No. 7, which passage the Polish Government has cited in the claim brought by it before the Tribunal of Katowice ; this passage is as follows :

« Si la Pologne veut contester la validité de cette inscription, son annulation ne saurait, en tout cas, résulter que d'une décision rendue par la juridiction compétente. »

C'est donc, en réalité, de ce passage de l'Arrêt n° 7, considéré par rapport à l'ensemble de l'arrêt, que le Gouvernement allemand demande l'interprétation au double point de vue du sens et de la portée.

S'occupant d'abord du premier de ces points de vue, la Cour observe que, pris isolément, les termes du passage qui vient d'être cité peuvent donner l'impression que la Cour a entendu réserver à la Pologne la faculté de faire établir, par un recours aux tribunaux polonais, et avec effet pour l'affaire alors tranchée, que l'Oberschlesische n'était pas, du point de vue du droit civil, valablement inscrite comme propriétaire de l'usine de Chorzów.

Le raisonnement, dans lequel se trouvent les lignes citées, a la teneur suivante (p. 42) :

« En ce qui concerne la thèse du défendeur, selon laquelle le contrat du 24 décembre 1919 et le transfert de la propriété, les 28-29 janvier suivants, par l'Auflassung et l'inscription au registre foncier, seraient entachés de fictivité ou de fraude, il y a lieu de constater d'abord que la Cour ne saurait attribuer à cette thèse, pour autant que l'on peut considérer que la Partie défenderesse a voulu l'appuyer sur des considérations tirées du droit civil allemand, une valeur indépendante ; en effet, la loi polonaise, dont l'application à l'usine de Chorzów a provoqué le présent différend entre les deux Puissances, ne se fonde ni principalement ni à titre subsidiaire sur la validité ou l'invalidité, au point de vue du droit civil allemand, du transfert des propriétés qu'elle vise, mais exclusivement sur la date du transfert par rapport au 11 novembre 1918. Il faut constater ensuite que la Cour, en exercice de la juridiction visée par l'article 23 de la Convention de Genève, n'examinera qu'en tant qu'un point incident ou préliminaire la question de l'existence éventuelle de droits au regard de la législation allemande.

La Cour a déjà constaté qu'au point de vue du droit international la transaction dont il s'agit doit, à son avis, être considérée comme effective et de bonne foi. Elle n'a trouvé dans les arguments portés à sa connaissance par la Pologne, à l'appui de sa thèse susmentionnée aucune raison propre à modifier, au point de vue du droit civil, le résultat auquel

“If Poland wishes to dispute the validity of this entry, it can, in any case, only be annulled in pursuance of a decision given by the competent tribunal.”

In reality, therefore, what the German Government seeks is an interpretation of this passage—considered in relation to the Judgment as a whole—from two aspects, namely that of its meaning and that of its scope.

Proceeding first of all to consider the first of these aspects, the Court observes that, considered by themselves, the terms of the passage above quoted may give the impression that the Court meant to reserve to Poland the right to obtain from the Polish Courts a decision which would apply to the case settled by Judgment No. 7, to the effect that the Oberschlesische was not, from the point of view of municipal law, validly entered as owner of the Chorzów factory.

The argument, in the course of which the lines quoted above occur, is as follows (p. 42):

“With regard to the argument of the Respondent to the effect that the contract of December 24th, 1919, and the transfer of ownership on the following January 28th-29th, by means of Auflassung and entry in the land register, are fictitious or fraudulent, it should in the first place be observed that the Court cannot consider this argument, in so far as it may be assumed that the intention of the Respondent is to support it, by considerations of German municipal law, as an independent one; for the Polish law, the application of which in regard to the Chorzów factory has led to the present dispute between the two Powers, is based neither directly nor indirectly on the validity or invalidity, from the standpoint of German municipal law, of the transfer of the properties covered by it; it is based exclusively on the date of the transfer in relation to November 11th, 1918. In the next place, it must be observed that the Court, in the exercise of the jurisdiction granted by Article 23 of the Geneva Convention, will not examine, save as an incidental or preliminary point, the possible existence of rights under German municipal law.

The Court has already observed that from the point of view of international law, the transaction under consideration must, in its opinion, be regarded as effective and as entered into in good faith. The Court has found in the arguments advanced by Poland in support of the above-mentioned contention no reasoning calculated to elle est ainsi arrivée sur la base du droit international. Dans le cas actuel, la Cour est, en effet, d'avis que le droit de propriété de l'Oberschlesische sur l'usine de Chorzów doit être considéré comme établi, son inscription dans cette capacité au registre foncier ayant été dûment effectuée. Si la Pologne veut contester la validité de cette inscription, son annulation ne saurait, en tout cas, résulter que d'une décision rendue par la juridiction compétente ; c'est ce qui ressort du principe du respect des droits acquis, principe qui, ainsi que la Cour a eu l'occasion de le constater à maintes reprises, fait partie du droit international commun qui, sur ce point, entre autres, est à la base de la Convention de Genève.

Ceci est exact bien que, ainsi que le fait observer la Pologne, les contrats du 24 décembre 1919 aient été conclus à un moment où, faute d'inscription au registre du commerce, l'Oberschlesische manquait encore de personnalité juridique. La Cour constate, en effet, que ces contrats ont été conclus après la fondation de l'Oberschlesische et par ses directeurs régulièrement constitués ; elle constate, en outre, que l'aliénation de l'usine de Chorzów fut effectuée par l'Auflassung, acte de caractère contractuel, et par l'inscription au livre foncier, ce qui eut lieu seulement après l'inscription de l'Oberschlesische au registre du commerce. D'ailleurs, par des actes concluants, s'étendant sur une période de plus de deux ans, tous les intéressés ont continué de reconnaître la validité des contrats dont il s'agit. »

Il ressort tout d'abord de ce raisonnement — ceci avait d'ailleurs été expressément dit plus haut dans l'arrêt (p. 35) — que, pour répondre à la conclusion n° 2 a de la demande du Gouvernement allemand en l'affaire qui lui était alors soumise, la Cour a constaté la nécessité de trancher, bien que comme un point incident et préliminaire, la question relative à la thèse de la Pologne, selon laquelle le contrat du 24 décembre 1919 et le transfert de la propriété (savoir de l'usine de Chorzów à l'Oberschlesische), effectué les 28-29 janvier suivants, l'Auflassung et l'inscription au registre foncier, seraient entachés de fictivité et de fraude.

Il s'ensuit encore, entre autres, que la Cour n'a trouvé dans les arguments de la Pologne aucun motif propre à modifier, au point de vue du droit civil, le résultat auquel elle modify, from the standpoint of municipal law, the conclusion at which it has thus arrived on the basis of international law. In the present case, in fact, the Court holds that the Oberschlesische's right of ownership of the Chorzów factory must be regarded as established, its name having been duly entered as owner in the land register. If Poland wishes to dispute the validity of this entry, it can, in any case, only be annulled in pursuance of a decision given by the competent tribunal; this follows from the principle of respect for vested rights, a principle which, as the Court has already had occasion to observe, forms part of generally accepted international law, which, as regards this point, amongst others, constitutes the basis of the Geneva Convention.

This is true, though, as is pointed out by Poland, the contracts of December 24th, 1919, had been concluded at a time when, not having been entered in the commercial register, the Oberschlesische possessed as yet no legal personality. The Court, in fact, notes that the contracts in question were concluded after the creation of the Oberschlesische and by its regularly appointed Directors; it further notes that the transfer of the Chorzów factory was effected by means of the Auflassung, a transaction of the nature of a contract, and of the entry in the land register, which formality took place only after the entry of the Oberschlesische in the commercial register. Moreover, by acts extending over a period of more than two years, all the Parties concerned have clearly shown that they still recognized the validity of the contracts in question."

In the first place—and this is expressly stated earlier in the Judgment (p. 35)—it follows from this reasoning that the Court found it necessary, in order to reply to submission 2a of the German Government's Application in the suit then under consideration, to decide, though as an incidental and preliminary point, the question raised by Poland's contention that the contract of December 24th, 1919, the transfer of ownership (i.e. of the Chorzów factory to the Oberschlesische) effected on January 28th-29th following, the Auflassung and the entry in the land register, were fictitious and fraudulent.

Again it follows, amongst other things, that the Court found in the arguments of Poland nothing calculated to modify, from the standpoint of municipal law, the conclusion at était arrivée sur la base du droit international, mais qu'en revanche, de l'avis de la Cour, le droit de propriété de l'Oberschlesische sur l'usine de Chorzów était établi, « son inscription dans cette capacité au registre foncier ayant été dûment effectuée ». Cette dernière partie de la phrase ne peut être considérée ni comme constituant la seule raison qui ait motivé pour la Cour le résultat auquel elle arrivait, ni comme conditionnée par la non-observation de la manière de procéder indiquée dans les lignes précitées qui lui font suite. Ce qu'on peut trouver exprimé dans ces lignes est plutôt un argument additionnel, tiré du droit international commun. Si de l'emploi du verbe au temps présent on peut conclure que la Cour a envisagé la possibilité, pour la Pologne, d'instituer, même après l'arrêt, une procédure en vue d'obtenir l'annulation de l'inscription par une décision des tribunaux nationaux compétents, il serait contraire à tout le raisonnement d'y voir une réserve dans ce sens que les effets obligatoires de l'arrêt rendu et spécialement du paragraphe n° 2 a du dispositif (« que l'attitude du Gouvernement polonais vis-à-vis des Sociétés anonymes Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke et Bayerische Stickstoffwerke n'était pas conforme aux dispositions des articles 6 et suivants de la Convention de Genève »), doivent dépendre du résultat d'une telle procédure instituée ultérieurement. En effet, une réserve dans ce sens aurait pour résultat de priver ladite conclusion 2 a de sa base logique et nécessaire, et ainsi de ne donner à ladite conclusion 2 a que le caractère d'une décision provisoire.

C'est aussi en ce sens que la Cour s'est exprimée dans son Arrêt n° 8 (p. 15). Elle y a dit, en ce qui concerne le transfert de l'usine à l'Oberschlesische, qu'elle a estimé, entre autres, « que le droit de propriété de l'Oberschlesische devait être considéré comme établi et n'aurait pu être contesté que devant un tribunal compétent ». Quant au passage qui figure à la page 31 de l'Arrêt n° 8 et qui est ainsi libellé :

« . . . il s'ensuit qu'une fois la dépossession accomplie sans examen préalable du droit de propriété, la possibilité d'entreprendre pareil examen afin de justifier, après coup, cette dépossession, ne saurait effacer une violation qui a which it arrived on the basis of international law; but that, on the contrary, the Oberschlesische's right of ownership of the Chorzów factory was established, "its name having been duly entered as owner in the land register". This latter part of the sentence cannot be regarded either as constituting the only reason upon which the Court based the result at which it arrived, nor as dependent upon failure to act in the manner indicated in the lines which follow it in the above quotation. These lines are rather to be regarded as containing an additional argument, drawn from generally accepted international law. Though from the use of the present tense it may be concluded that the Court had in view the possibility of the institution by Poland, even after the judgment, of proceedings with a view to obtaining the annulment of the entry by means of a decision of the competent municipal tribunals, it would be contrary to the whole of the reasoning to construe it as a reservation implying that the binding effect of the Judgment given—and more especially of paragraph 2*a* of the operative part thereof ("that the attitude of the Polish Government in regard to the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke and Bayerische Stickstoffwerke Companies was not in conformity with Article 6 and the following articles of the Geneva Convention")—were to depend on the result of such proceedings instituted subsequently. Such a reservation would in fact have the result of depriving conclusion 2*a* of the Judgment of its logical and necessary foundation, and would thus give that conclusion merely the character of a provisional decision.

And the Court has also expressed itself to this effect in Judgment No. 8 (p. 15). It there stated, in regard to the transfer of the factory to the Oberschlesische, that it held—amongst other things—"that the Oberschlesische's right of ownership must be regarded as established, and could have been disputed only before a competent tribunal". As regards the passage appearing on page 31 of Judgment No. 8, which runs as follows:

"... it follows that once dispossession has taken place without previous investigation of the right of ownership, the possible undertaking of this investigation in order to justify such dispossession after it has taken déjà eu lieu de la Convention de Genève, ni affecter la compétence de la Cour », il semble également démontrer que, dans la pensée de la Cour, une démarche ultérieure du Gouvernement polonais pour justifier, après coup, son attitude à l'égard de l'Oberschlesische ne pourrait pas entrer en ligne de compte.

Ayant ainsi établi le sens qu'il convient d'attribuer au passage par rapport auquel elle a été priée d'interpréter son Arrêt n° 7, la Cour procède maintenant à l'examen de la portée de l'arrêt, visée par la conclusion n° 2 de la Requête allemande.

Ainsi qu'il a été rappelé ci-dessus, la Cour a, par ledit arrêt, dit et jugé que l'attitude du Gouvernement polonais vis-à-vis de l'Oberschlesische n'était pas conforme aux dispositions de la Convention de Genève. Cette conclusion, qui est maintenant, sans conteste, passée en force de chose jugée, reposait, entre autres, d'une part, sur la constatation qu'au point de vue du droit international, le Gouvernement allemand avait bien le droit d'aliéner l'usine de Chorzów, et, d'autre part, sur la constatation qu'au point de vue du droit civil, l'Oberschlesische avait valablement acquis le droit de propriété sur l'usine — constatations qui constituent une condition absolue de la décision de la Cour. La constatation suivant laquelle, au point de vue du droit civil, l'usine appartenait à l'Oberschlesische fait, par conséquent, partie des points que l'Arrêt n° 7 a tranchés avec force obligatoire aux termes de l'article 59 du Statut. Le contexte dans lequel se trouve le passage dont il s'agit sert précisément à établir le droit de propriété de l'Oberschlesische au point de vue du droit civil.

L'Arrêt n° 7 de la Cour est de la nature d'un jugement déclaratoire qui, selon son idée, est destiné à faire reconnaître une situation de droit une fois pour toutes et avec effet obligatoire entre les Parties, en sorte que la situation juridique ainsi fixée ne puisse plus être mise en discussion, pour ce qui est des conséquences juridiques qui en découlent.

La Cour a eu l'occasion, dans son Arrêt n° 7 (p. 19), de se prononcer sur le point de savoir si l'article 59 du Statut de la Cour lui interdit de rendre des jugements purement déclaplace, cannot undo the fact that a breach of the Geneva Convention has already taken place, or affect the Court's jurisdiction", this also seems to show that, in the intention of the Court, subsequent action on the part of the Polish Government to justify, after the event, its attitude in respect of the Oberschlesische, could not enter into account.

Having thus established the meaning to be attributed to the passage in regard to which it has been requested to construe Judgment No. 7, the Court will now proceed to consider the scope of the Judgment, which scope forms the subject of submission No. 2 of the German Application.

As has been recalled above, the Court, by that Judgment, decided that the attitude of the Polish Government in regard to the Oberschlesische was not in conformity with the provisions of the Geneva Convention. This conclusion, which has now indisputably acquired the force of res judicata, was based, amongst other things, firstly, on the finding by the Court that, from the standpoint of international law, the German Government was perfectly entitled to alienate the Chorzów factory, and, secondly, on the finding that, from the standpoint of municipal law, the Oberschlesische had validly acquired the right of ownership to the factory—and these findings constitute a condition essential to the Court's decision. The finding that, in municipal law, the factory did belong to the Oberschlesische is consequently included amongst the points decided by the Court in Judgment No. 7, and possessing binding force in accordance with the terms of Article 59 of the Statute. The very context in which the passage in question occurs is calculated to establish the right of ownership of the Oberschlesische from the standpoint of municipal law.

The Court's Judgment No. 7 is in the nature of a declaratory judgment, the intention of which is to ensure recognition of a situation at law, once and for all and with binding force as between the Parties; so that the legal position thus established cannot again be called in question in so far as the legal effects ensuing therefrom are concerned.

The Court has had occasion in Judgment No. 7 (p. 19) to state its opinion upon the question whether Article 59 of the Court's Statute prevents it from rendering purely ratoires ; elle y a répondu négativement en déclarant que le but de l'article 59 est seulement d'éviter que des principes juridiques admis par la Cour dans une affaire déterminée, soient obligatoires pour d'autres États ou d'autres litiges.

Dans cet ordre d'idées, il y a lieu de constater ce qui suit : L'affaire concernant l'indemnisation demandée par le Gouvernement allemand sur la base de l'Arrêt n° 7 de la Cour est encore pendante quant au fond, et la procédure écrite ne sera terminée que le 1<sup>er</sup> mars 1928. Selon les observations de l'agent du Gouvernement polonais, il est possible que ce Gouvernement veuille se prévaloir dans ce procès de l'issue de l'action intentée devant le Tribunal de Katowice contre l'Oberschlesische. Une exception de litispendance à ce sujet n'a pas été formulée. En tout cas, l'obligation, imposée à la Cour par l'article 60 du Statut, d'interpréter ses arrêts à la demande de toute Partie, ne saurait fléchir pour la seule raison que l'interprétation que la Cour doit donner pourrait avoir éventuellement de l'importance pour un autre procès en cours. L'interprétation n'ajoute rien à la chose jugée et ne peut avoir effet obligatoire que dans les limites de la décision de l'arrêt interprété.

D'autre part, la Cour écarte dans ses interprétations toute appréciation de faits autres que ceux qu'elle a examinés dans l'arrêt qu'elle interprète, et, en conséquence, tous faits postérieurs à cet arrêt. De même, la Cour s'abstient de toute appréciation au sujet de la portée qu'aurait l'arrêt à interpréter sur les conclusions énoncées par les Parties dans une autre procédure ou autrement à elle signalées. Elle se borne à expliquer par l'interprétation ce qu'elle a déjà dit et jugé.

* * *

PAR CES MOTIFS,

La Cour, jugeant contradictoirement, décide et juge, par huit voix contre trois :

declaratory judgments; it answered this question in the negative, stating that the object of Article 59 is simply to prevent legal principles accepted by the Court in a particular case from being binding also upon other States or in other disputes.

In this connection, the Court thinks it right to make the following statement: The proceedings on the merits in the case concerning the compensation claimed by the German Government on the basis of Judgment No. 7 are still pending, and the written procedure will not be terminated until March 1st, 1928. Judging from the observations of the Agent for the Polish Government, it is possible that that Government may wish in this suit to rely on the result of the action brought by it before the Tribunal of Katowice against the Oberschlesische. No plea of litispendency has been formulated in this connection. At all events, the obligation incumbent upon the Court under Article 60 of the Statute to construe its judgments at the request of any Party, cannot be set aside merely because the interpretation to be given by the Court might possibly be of importance in another case which is pending. The interpretation adds nothing to the decision, which has acquired the force of res judicata, and can only have binding force within the limits of what was decided in the judgment construed.

Moreover, the Court, when giving an interpretation, refrains from any examination of facts other than those which it has considered in the judgment under interpretation, and consequently all facts subsequent to that judgment. Similarly, the Court abstains from any consideration of the effect which the judgment to be construed might exercise upon submissions made by the Parties in another case or otherwise brought to its knowledge. It confines itself to explaining, by an interpretation, that upon which it has already passed judgment.

* * *

FOR THESE REASONS,

The Court, having heard both Parties, gives judgment as follows, by eight votes to three:

Que, dans son Arrêt n° 7, la Cour n'a pas réservé au Gouvernement polonais le droit de demander par la voie judiciaire, même après l'arrêt susdit et avec effet sur le cas décidé, la constatation de la nullité de l'inscription, basée sur l'acte du 24 décembre 1919, de la Société Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. comme propriétaire de l'usine de Chorzów aux registres fonciers ; mais que, par ledit arrêt, la Cour a entendu reconnaître, avec force obligatoire pour les Parties au litige et dans le cas décidé, entre autres choses, le droit de propriété de la Société Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. sur l'usine de Chorzów au point de vue du droit civil.

Le présent arrêt ayant été rédigé en français et en anglais, c'est le texte français qui fait foi.

Fait au Palais de la Paix, à La Haye, le seize décembre mil neuf cent vingt-sept, en trois exemplaires, dont l'un restera déposé aux archives de la Cour, et dont les autres seront transmis aux agents des Gouvernements des Puissances requérante et défenderesse respectivement.

Le Président :

(Signé) MAX HUBER.

Le Greffier :

(Signé) Å. HAMMARSKJÖLD.

M. Moore, juge, a pris part aux débats en l'affaire et voté en faveur de l'arrêt rendu par la Cour, mais a dû quitter La Haye avant le prononcé de cet arrêt.

M. Anzilotti, juge, déclarant ne pouvoir se rallier à l'arrêt et se prévalant du droit que lui confère l'article 57 du Statut, a joint audit arrêt l'exposé suivant de son opinion individuelle.

(Paraphé) M. H.

(Paraphé) Å. H.

That, in Judgment No. 7, the Court did not reserve to the Polish Government the right of asking by process of law, even after the rendering of that Judgment and with application to that particular case, for a declaration that the entry, in pursuance of the Agreement of December 24th, 1919, of the name of the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. in the land registers as owners of the Chorzów factory is null and void; but that, by the aforesaid Judgment, the Court meant to recognize, with binding effect between the Parties concerned and in respect of that particular case, amongst other things, the right of ownership of the Oberschlesische Stickstoffwerke A.-G. in the Chorzów factory under municipal law.

Done in English and French, the French text being authoritative, at the Peace Palace, The Hague, this sixteenth day of December 1927, in three copies, one of which is to be placed in the archives of the Court and the others to be forwarded to the Agents of the applicant and respondent Parties respectively.

(Signed) MAX HUBER,
President.

(Signed) Å. HAMMARSKJÖLD, Registrar.

Mr. Moore, Judge, took part in the discussion and voted for the adoption of the present Judgment, but had to leave The Hague before judgment was delivered.

M. Anzilotti, Judge, declaring that he is unable to concur in the Judgment delivered by the Court, and availing himself of the right conferred on him by Article 57 of the Statute, has delivered the separate opinion which follows hereafter.

(Initialed) M. H.

(Initialed) Å. H.

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-123

Document information

Publication

International Commercial Arbitration (Second Edition)

Bibliographic reference

'Chapter 23: Form and Contents of International Arbitral Awards', in Gary B. Born, International Commercial Arbitration (Second Edition), 2nd edition (© Kluwer Law International; Kluwer Law International 2014) pp. 3012 - 3112

Chapter 23: Form and Contents of International Arbitral Awards

[Chapter 23] (1)

P 3013 An arbitral award possesses particular legal significance, conferred by both international arbitration conventions and national law. Concurrent with producing ● these legal effects, most national laws require that arbitral awards satisfy a number of important legal requirements, as to form, content and other matters. This Chapter addresses the categories of international arbitral awards, the form requirements applicable to arbitral awards, the requirement for a “reasoned” arbitral award, the possibility of majority and other non-unanimous awards, dissenting, concurring and other separate opinions, and the types of relief typically granted in arbitral awards. The subjects of annulment and recognition of international arbitral awards, as well as the res judicata effects of awards, are discussed in separate Chapters below. (2)

§ 23.01 CATEGORIES OF INTERNATIONAL ARBITRAL AWARDS (3)

Most national laws and institutional arbitration rules provide for a variety of different types of arbitral “awards,” (4) including final awards, partial awards, interim awards, consent awards and default awards. Each of these categories of arbitral award is discussed below. Unfortunately, there is some inconsistency in the usage of these various terms; as discussed below, different authorities, and different legal systems, sometimes adopt different meanings for the same term, or the same meaning for different terms, requiring that these labels be used with care. (5)

[A] Final Awards

The term “final award” is used in a number of different senses, and has often led to confusion. It is important to avoid such confusion by being clear about those different meanings.

First, as discussed above, all arbitral awards can be regarded as “final,” in the sense that they finally resolve a particular claim or matter with preclusive effect. (6) Even awards granting provisional relief can be considered to be “final,” notwithstanding the fact that they will be superseded by subsequent relief, because they finally dispose of a particular request for relief. (7) Much the same is true with regard to interim awards that decide a particular issue (e.g., choice of applicable law) without granting or denying a party’s underlying claim. (8) In this sense, every award rendered during the course of an ● arbitration, before its final conclusion, is “final” because of the preclusive effect that it enjoys. (9)

Second, as also discussed below, some international arbitration conventions and national arbitration statutes provide for the recognition of only “final” awards, and not of other, “non-final” awards. (10) Used in this sense, a “final” award refers only to those awards that have achieved a sufficient degree of finality in the arbitral seat (most obviously, by being granted confirmation or exequatur) or that are no longer subject to appeal or annulment in the arbitral seat. (11) Typically, only after an award has been granted exequatur, or after appeals from the award have been rejected (or become untimely), is it categorized as “final.” (12) (The categorization of an award as “final,” in this sense, should not be confused with the categorization of an award as “binding,” as generally required for recognition of awards under the New York Convention. (13) )

Third, and also confusingly, there is a further usage of the term “final” in connection with arbitral awards. The concept of a “final award” must be distinguished from an “award” that is “final,” with the latter two terms being used together in the sense of an award no longer being subject to judicial review. As its name suggests, the term “final award” refers to the last award in an arbitration, which disposes of all (or all remaining) claims and terminates the tribunal’s mandate. (14) This is a “final” award in the sense used by Article 32(1) of the UNCITRAL Model Law. (15) A “final” award in this sense is also to be distinguished from “partial awards,” which “finally” resolve part (but not all) of the parties’ claims, and which may become sufficiently “final” for recognition, in each case without terminating the arbitration. (16)

Most national legislation is consistent with this terminology; (17) these are also the formulae used in most institutional rules. (18) Under this approach, a “final award” is the ● award that disposes of either all the parties’ claims or all the parties’ remaining claims in the arbitration. Both such a “final award” and earlier “partial awards” are “final,” and may be capable of recognition and enforcement, but only a “final award” concludes the arbitration and renders the tribunal functus officio. (19)

It follows from the above that an arbitral tribunal should not purport to make a “final award” unless it has considered and disposed of all the parties’ claims in the arbitration (including claims for costs and interest). If a tribunal fails to resolve all the parties’ claims, then its final award will be subject to annulment or non-recognition on grounds of infra petita or otherwise. (20) Alternatively, under some national laws, the award may be subject to an application for remission to the tribunal for disposition of the remaining claims or the tribunal may be authorized to issue an “additional award.” (21)

[B] Partial Awards

A “partial award” is an arbitral decision that finally disposes of part, but not all, of the parties’ claims in an arbitration, leaving some claims for further consideration and resolution in future proceedings in the arbitration. (22) As to the claims that it disposes of, a partial award may become final and binding on the parties and may be recognized and enforced (or annulled). (23) Under many national laws, a “partial” award differs from an “interim” award in that it finally decides and disposes of a particular claim (e.g., awards damages for a particular breach of contract), while an interim award decides an issue (e.g., choice of law, liability) relevant to disposing of a claim, but does not finally dispose of the claim. (24)

- P 3016 ● Many national laws provide expressly that an arbitral tribunal has the power to make partial awards (absent contrary agreement). (25) For example, the Swiss Law on Private International Law provides that “unless the parties have agreed otherwise, the arbitral tribunal may make partial awards.” (26) Other arbitration statutes are similar. (27)

Institutional rules also generally provide for the possibility of partial awards. Article 34(1) of the 2010 UNCITRAL Rules provides that, “[t]he arbitral tribunal may make separate awards on different issues at different times.” (28) Other institutional rules are similar. (29) There is no question but that such provisions validly grant the arbitrators authority to make partial awards, even in the absence of statutory authorization; this is merely an application of the parties’ more general procedural autonomy. (30)

Moreover, even in the absence of statutory authorization or institutional rules permitting partial awards, a tribunal has the power to take such an approach (except in the case of contrary agreement by the parties). (31) This authority is inherent in the arbitrators’ mandate to resolve the parties’ dispute in an efficient manner. (32) Only clear and unambiguous language should be permitted to produce the unusual and inefficient result of denying arbitrators the authority to make partial awards.

- P 3017 ● Partial awards are typically used for separate determinations of specified claims, with other claims reserved for further proceedings. (33) For example, a tribunal might render an award rejecting the claimant’s contractual claims or upholding such claims and awarding damages, while leaving for subsequent proceedings the parties’ noncontractual claims. Alternatively, a tribunal might deal with some of the parties’ contractual claims, while leaving other contractual claims for later proceedings.

There are many circumstances where partial (or interim) awards are important to a constructive and efficient arbitral procedure. As with partial or interlocutory decisions in judicial proceedings, such awards allow a tribunal to decide a complex case in steps, enabling it and the parties to focus on and resolve issues sequentially, rather than in a single decision. (34) This sometimes has very significant advantages in terms of efficiency and speed.

On the other hand, if the parties’ arbitration agreement excludes partial awards, and requires a single award disposing of the entire dispute, that agreement must be given effect. (35) In practice, parties generally do not exclude the possibility of partial awards in their arbitration agreements (and, on the contrary, do the opposite, by incorporating institutional rules that provide for partial awards). (36) In the rare cases that this approach is considered, it is usually in an effort to ensure a “fast-track” process that resolves all disputes in a single, concentrated proceeding.

It is also conceivable that a tribunal would abuse its authority to make a partial award (or refuse to make a partial award). (37) In general, a challenge on this basis would be exceedingly difficult to sustain.

- P 3018 ● A tribunal’s decision whether or not to bifurcate proceedings, and to resolve certain issues before others, usually turns on minute assessments of efficiency that are the domain of the arbitral tribunal, where national courts should virtually never interfere. Some institutional rules encourage the use of partial awards in certain instances (particularly jurisdictional issues). (38) Even in these cases, however, it is highly unlikely (and undesirable) that a tribunal’s exercise of its procedural discretion would be second-guessed by a national court.

The overwhelming trend of modern arbitration legislation, and national court decisions, has been to permit the recognition and enforcement of partial awards that finally dispose of a particular, discrete aspect of a dispute (e.g., a particular set of claims), even if other aspects of the dispute remain to be decided in further arbitral proceedings. (39) The decisive issue is whether the parties’ arbitration agreement permits bifurcation and partial awards (which, as discussed above, is the case absent express contrary agreement). (40)

The same analysis applies to annulment proceedings under most national laws, including the UNCITRAL Model Law: a partial award, like other forms of awards, is subject to annulment under Article 34 of the Model Law. In one commentary's words, "[s]etting aside proceedings under Article 34 are admissible against all types of arbitral awards, irrespective of whether they completely terminate the proceedings or are ● awards finally determining certain claims only." (41) Among other things, separate awards on costs may be the subject of annulment proceedings. (42)

[C] Jurisdictional Awards

As discussed above, national arbitration legislation, institutional rules and customary practice recognize the arbitrators' authority to consider and decide jurisdictional disputes involving challenges to the existence, validity and scope of a putative agreement to arbitrate. (43) There is uncertainty regarding the characterization of the arbitrators' jurisdictional rulings and, in particular, whether or not the tribunal's decision is characterized as an "award," rather than an "order" or "direction." (44)

Positive jurisdictional decisions (upholding an arbitral tribunal's jurisdiction) are generally subject to interlocutory judicial review. (45) Nonetheless, it is unclear whether those decisions are "awards," subject to annulment and recognition, or interim rulings that are either not subject to immediate judicial review or subject only to specialized judicial review (for example, under Article 16(3) of the UNCITRAL Model Law). (46) As discussed above, the better view is that positive jurisdictional rulings are properly characterized as awards, generally subject to annulment, recognition and enforcement like other awards, but national court authority on the subject remains divided. (47)

Similarly, courts in a few jurisdictions have held that negative jurisdictional rulings are "non-awards," (48) while other courts have held that, although constituting an "award," a negative jurisdictional decision cannot be the subject of judicial review in an annulment proceeding. (49) As discussed above, these decisions are unpersuasive; the better view is that negative jurisdictional decisions should be categorized in the same manner as positive jurisdictional rulings, namely, as awards.

[D] Interim Awards

As noted above, national law, institutional rules and arbitral practice also provide for "interim awards," also sometimes referred to as "interlocutory" awards. (50) As with other ● terminology in this field, there is sometimes unfortunate confusion about the meaning of this phrase. (51)

As a practical matter, the term "interim award" is often used synonymously with "partial award," in the sense that an award is made, disposing of certain claims for relief, prior to disposition of all the issues (i.e., the award is made at an interim stage in the arbitration). In this usage, an interim award is no different than a partial award. (52)

The term "interim award" is sometimes used more narrowly to refer to an award that does not dispose finally of a particular claim (e.g., one of several claims for damages arising from several alleged breaches of contract), but instead decides a preliminary issue relevant to disposing of such claims (e.g., choice of law, liability, construction of a particular contractual provision). In this sense, an award is "interim" because it is a step towards disposing of a portion of the parties' claims (like a partial award), but does not purport to make a final decision either granting or rejecting those claims.

The phrase "interim award" is also used with respect to decisions granting provisional relief. (53) In this sense, an award is "interim" because it is subject to subsequent revision ● by the arbitral tribunal, either in the final award or in a revised decision on provisional measures. (54) In this usage, an "interim award" is distinguishable from a "partial award" in that the former does not provide final resolution of part of the dispute, but resolution of all of a claim for provisional relief, subject to later revision.

There is little point to debating this terminology at length. The better practice is to explain with precision what is meant by a reference to an "interim award," and in particular whether the award grants provisional relief, finally decides a particular issue, or does something else. Confusion could be reduced by use of a reference such as "interim award of provisional relief," which specified clearly what the tribunal's decision entailed.

Some legal systems do not permit applications to annul (or recognize) interim awards, although they do permit applications to annul (and recognize) partial awards. That is true of Austria, where judicial decisions have consistently held that interim awards of provisional relief are not subject to annulment or recognition; (55) Germany, where similar results have been reached; (56) and Australia, where the Queensland Supreme Court held that an interim award of provisional relief "is not an 'arbitral award' within the meaning of the Convention nor a 'foreign award.'" (57)

As discussed above, however, the better view of the New York Convention, as well as national arbitration legislation, is that interim awards of provisional relief "finally" dispose of requests for such relief and should be capable of recognition and enforcement in national courts, like other awards granting relief. (58) The same conclusion applies to a tribunal's reasoned decision regarding a significant legal and factual issue (e.g., liability, choice of law). (59)

[E] Consent Awards

P 3022 Parties not infrequently arrive at agreements to settle ongoing arbitrations. Indeed, one of the perceived benefits of the arbitral process is that the arbitration can be structured so as to encourage settlement and that the confidentiality and (sometimes) collegiality of the arbitral process can facilitate settlement efforts. (60)

[1] Reasons for Consent Awards

If parties succeed in reaching a negotiated resolution of their dispute(s), one option is to simply dismiss the arbitration, recording the terms of the settlement in an agreement to this effect. Alternatively, however, parties may wish to obtain a “consent award” (or “award on agreed terms”), which records some or all of the terms of their settlement. (61)

A consent award is often perceived as providing a greater degree of certainty and enforceability than a simple settlement agreement: in particular, a consent award may be capable of being enforced as an award (e.g., if it contains a payment obligation), (62) rather than requiring suit for breach of contract. (63) A consent award may also have practical benefits, such as conferring a degree of formality on the parties’ settlement agreement. (64)

P 3023 Many arbitration statutes expressly allow for the possibility of consent awards. (65) Article 30(1) of the UNCITRAL Model Law provides that, if the parties reach a settlement during the arbitration, the tribunal “shall ... if requested by the parties and not objected to by the arbitral tribunal, record the settlement in the form of an arbitral award on agreed terms.” (66) Similar provisions exist in other arbitration legislation, (67) or are accepted by national court decisions. (68) Most institutional rules also provide that arbitral tribunals may make consent awards if requested to do so by the parties. (69) Both national laws (70) and institutional rules (71) provide that any general requirement that arbitral awards be “reasoned” does not apply to consent awards.

[2] Arbitral Tribunal’s Power to Make Consent Award

The prevailing approach of both institutional rules (72) and national law (73) is to permit an arbitral tribunal to make a consent award if requested to do so by the parties, but not to expressly require the arbitrators to do so. On the contrary, most national statutes and institutional rules leave the arbitrators with the choice of whether or not to make a consent award when requested by the parties to do so. The UNCITRAL Model Law is representative, with Article 30(1) granting the arbitrators discretion to make (or not to make) a consent award if requested by the parties during the course of an arbitration. (74)

P 3024 An arbitral tribunal has the authority to make a consent award only if the parties commenced an arbitration regarding an actual dispute. The authority to make a consent award does not extend to cases where the parties settle a dispute and then subsequently commence an arbitration solely for the purpose of recording the settlement as a consent award. (75) Some courts have explained this result on the basis that no “dispute” exists to be referred to arbitration where a claim is settled before arbitral proceedings are initiated. (76) In Model Law jurisdictions, a few states have amended Article 30 to permit the making of consent awards where a settlement agreement is reached in the course of conciliation or mediation proceedings. (77)

Article 30(1) of the Model Law does not impose formalistic restrictions on the arbitrators’ consideration of requests to make consent awards. One arbitral tribunal granted the parties’ request to reopen proceedings for the purpose of recording a settlement agreement and make it in the form of a consent award. (78) That is an appropriate exercise of the arbitrators’ procedural discretion and is fully consistent with Article 30(1).

On the other hand, Article 30(1) imposes minimal formal requirements for a consent award: in order for Article 30(1) to apply, a tribunal must “record” the parties’ settlement “in the form of an arbitral award on agreed terms”; in turn, Article 30(2) incorporates the generally-applicable formal requirements of Article 31. (79) It is not sufficient that parties merely conclude a settlement agreement; rather, the tribunal must take the further, affirmative action of recording that settlement in an instrument satisfying the formal requirements of an award. Consistent with the language of Article 30(1), some Model Law courts have held that only a settlement agreement, which has been recorded in the form of an award on agreed terms pursuant to the formal requirements of Article 30(2) and that stated it was an award on its face, could be recognized under Article 36; a mere record of the settlement is insufficient. (80)

[3] Arbitral Tribunal’s Power to Refuse to Make Consent Award

It is sometimes suggested that the tribunal is subject to the parties’ agreement and should therefore be obliged, absent illegality, to make a consent award if so requested by the parties. That misconceives an arbitral tribunal’s adjudicatory role: the parties are free to settle their claims as they wish, but they are not free to require that the tribunal exercise its own authority to approve that settlement.

A tribunal may consider that a consent award would improperly affect the rights of third parties, or public interests, which had not been (and could not be) spoken for in the arbitration. In these circumstances, the issuance of a consent award might be considered as giving effect to a private settlement to the detriment of either other parties or the law. The drafting history of the Model Law suggests that an arbitral tribunal could refuse to make a consent award in cases of fraud, illegality, or gross unfairness. (81) Judicial authority in Model Law jurisdictions is similar. (82)

P 3025 ● It is unclear whether these concerns warrant refusing to make a consent award. In principle, the arbitral tribunal's mandate extends to the issuance of a consent award, resolving the parties' dispute (which is the fundamental objective of the arbitral process). Only where there is a compelling reason for declining to make an award, including a consent award, may a tribunal properly do so: the objective of international arbitrations is to resolve disputes, which is what consent awards accomplish, and tribunals should in principle endeavor to advance this objective by making such awards. (83)

In practice, tribunals rarely decline to make consent awards. The fundamental purpose of arbitration is to provide a means for resolving disputes and tribunals are not only obliged, but almost always willing, to contribute to this objective insofar as possible, including by making a consent award. Only if there are well-founded bases for refusing to approve a settlement – such as indications of fraud, corruption, or violation of applicable mandatory law (e.g., exchange controls, money-laundering regulations, competition laws) should a tribunal refuse a request for a consent award. (84)

[4] Legal Status of Consent Awards

If a consent award is made, questions may arise as to whether it is to be treated as an arbitral award for purposes of the New York Convention (or other international treaties) and national arbitration legislation. There is little authority on the topic.

The New York Convention does not address the question of whether a consent award qualifies as an “arbitral award” for purposes of Article V. (85) Although a consent award is intended as an award (in that it is a formal written instrument made and signed by the arbitrators that finally disposes of the parties' claims and terminates the arbitration), (86) it arguably lacks the adjudicative character required of an “award” (in that it is not the product of adversarial proceedings and is not “reasoned” (87)).

The better view is that a consent award should be regarded as an award, within the meaning of the Convention and national arbitration legislation (including the UNCITRAL Model Law), insofar as the rights of the parties to the arbitration are concerned. (88) Parties are fully entitled to settle their claims, including in arbitration, (89) and if they do so in the form of a consent award, after having previously presented their respective positions in an adversarial process, that award should be fully binding and enforceable on the parties to the arbitration.

This is confirmed by the text of most national arbitration statutes. Article 30(2) of the Model Law is representative, providing that a consent award “has the same status and effect as any other award on the merits of the case.” (90) This text leaves no doubt but that consent awards are subject to recognition, confirmation and enforcement in the same manner as other arbitral awards. (91) Conversely, a consent award should also in principle be subject to annulment, again like other awards. (92)

Nevertheless, great care should be taken in recognition and enforcement of consent awards insofar as third party rights are arguably affected. In general, an award will only have preclusive effects on the parties to the arbitration. (93) There may be unusual circumstances, however, where a consent award is alleged to affect third parties; in these circumstances, recognition of the award under international arbitration conventions and/or arbitration statutes should be subject to particular scrutiny.

[F] Default Awards

As discussed above, arbitral proceedings sometimes involve one party's failure or refusal to appear and present its case in the arbitration. (94) A party's default does not prevent the arbitral tribunal from considering the parties' claims and resolving their dispute. On the contrary, most national arbitration legislation (95) and judicial authority (96) provides that arbitral tribunals may make default awards and that such awards are subject to recognition (and annulment), just as contested awards are. The fact that a party refuses to participate in arbitral proceedings, and an award is rendered against it in its absence, has also repeatedly been held not to constitute a denial of procedural rights under either Article V(1)(b) of the New York Convention or developed arbitration statutes. (97)

As discussed above, most institutional rules provide for default proceedings and awards if one party refuses to participate in the arbitration. (98) Even without express authorization from national law or institutional rules, a tribunal has the inherent authority to conduct proceedings in the absence of one party and to make a default award. (99) Doing so is an essential element of adjudicatory power and is necessary in order to ensure an effective arbitral process which one party cannot frustrate or obstruct through a refusal to participate.

As also discussed above, an arbitral tribunal may not simply accept the non-defaulting

P 3028 party's claims, without independently reviewing them and an evidentiary record. (100) In ● this regard, a default proceeding in an arbitration is in concept no different from a proceeding in which both parties participate: the tribunal must afford both parties the opportunity to present their cases and then make an award based upon the evidence that has been submitted and the law. (101) That award then has precisely the same status and effects as an award made after proceedings in which both parties participated. (102)

[G] Additional Award

As discussed below, many arbitration statutes and institutional rules provide for the making of "additional awards" (sometimes also referred to as "complementary" or "supplemental" awards), after what was intended as the final award is made. (103) These additional awards are made, at the request of a party, when a tribunal's final award mistakenly fails to dispose of a claim that had been asserted in the arbitration. An additional award is treated no differently from other "awards," (104) and is subject to applications for annulment and to recognition and enforcement. (105)

[H] Corrections and Interpretations

As also discussed below, many arbitration statutes and institutional rules provide for the possibility of corrections or interpretations by an arbitral tribunal of its award(s). (106) These corrections and interpretations should themselves have the same status as an award (107) and should be capable of annulment, recognition and enforcement under both international arbitration conventions and national law. (108)

P 3029 ● [I] Termination of Arbitral Proceedings Without Award

Arbitrations are occasionally concluded without an arbitral award. This is typically because the parties agree to settle their dispute (but without a consent award) or because the claimant abandons its claims.

[1] National Arbitration Legislation

Most national arbitration regimes permit the arbitral tribunal to terminate the arbitration without an award in limited circumstances. Article 32(2) of the Model Law provides for the termination of arbitral proceedings by "order" if: (a) the claimant withdraws its claims, "unless the respondent objects thereto and the arbitral tribunal recognized a legitimate interest on his part in obtaining a final settlement of the dispute"; (b) the parties agree to terminate the proceedings; or (c) the continuation of the arbitration has "become unnecessary or impossible." (109) This provision is more detailed than the broadly similar UNCITRAL Rules (discussed below). (110)

Other arbitration legislation is usually silent concerning the termination of arbitral proceedings without an award. (111) For the most part, however, national law provides results comparable to those under the Model Law. That is, the arbitrators may – in limited cases of settlement, impossibility and claimant's withdrawal of its claims – terminate the arbitral proceedings without an award. (112)

The consequences of termination of the arbitration for the parties' claims are generally governed by national law. In principle, there is nothing that should prevent either party from reasserting its claims or counterclaims in a new arbitration; the parties' arbitration agreement remains in effect, notwithstanding termination of the arbitration, (113) and applies to any further claims by either party.

Ordinarily, national law would not prevent either party from reasserting previously-asserted claims or counterclaims. The arbitration (which had been terminated) would not produce an award, capable of being recognized or having preclusive effects; at the same time, termination of the arbitration does not itself ordinarily produce preclusive ● effects. (114) Rather, termination of the arbitration would merely be a withdrawal of both parties' claims and defenses without prejudice to their being reasserted in subsequent proceedings.

P 3030

[2] Institutional Arbitration Rules

Most institutional rules make express provision for the termination of arbitral proceedings without an award. The 2010 UNCITRAL Rules provide for the arbitral tribunal to "issue an order for the termination of the arbitral proceedings" if the parties agree upon a settlement (115) or if "the continuation of the arbitral proceedings becomes unnecessary or impossible." (116) These provisions allow the tribunal, in appropriate cases, to terminate the arbitration and the arbitrators' mandate without making an award.

Similarly, the LCIA Rules provide for the arbitral tribunal to be "discharged" and "the arbitration proceedings concluded" in the event of a settlement between the parties. (117) The ICC Rules also (impliedly) contemplate termination of arbitral proceedings in the case of a settlement that is not recorded in a consent award. (118) Neither the LCIA Rules nor the ICC Rules provide expressly for the termination of arbitral proceedings, without an award, in other circumstances.

Even absent express authorization in institutional rules for termination of an arbitration, however, such a power is implicit in the tribunal's procedural authority. (119) The tribunal has the authority, if the parties do not pursue their claims or agree to settle their dispute, to terminate the arbitration.

§ 23.02 FORMAL REQUIREMENTS FOR INTERNATIONAL ARBITRAL AWARDS

Like an arbitration agreement, (120) an international arbitral award must satisfy specialized form requirements. Unless these requirements are complied with, the award is potentially subject to annulment, in the place of arbitration, or, less clearly, non-recognition, in other jurisdictions. As discussed below, the form requirements applicable to international arbitral awards are generally set forth in the arbitration ● legislation of the arbitral seat, (121) and the parties' arbitration agreement, including any applicable institutional rules.

[A] No Form Requirements in International Arbitration Conventions

In contrast to their treatment of arbitration agreements, (122) international arbitration conventions do not generally impose form requirements with respect to arbitral awards. (123) As discussed above, it is implicit in most arbitration conventions that an award will be a written instrument made by the arbitrators: (124) in particular, Article IV(1)(a) of the New York Convention requires presentation of a "duly authenticated original award or a duly certificated copy thereof" as a condition of recognition, presupposing the existence of a written instrument. (125) This provision would presumably allow a Contracting State to deny recognition to a foreign "award" that was not in writing, although oral awards are virtually never made in international arbitration practice. (126)

Although international arbitration conventions do not prescribe form requirements for arbitral awards, they also do not expressly forbid Contracting States from doing so. As discussed below, national arbitration legislation routinely imposes formal requirements on locally-seated arbitrations, (127) and there is no suggestion that the New York Convention (or other international arbitration conventions) were intended to forbid this. (128)

P 3032 ● The New York Convention arguably does not permit Contracting States to impose form requirements on foreign awards as a requirement for recognition (as distinguished from a basis for annulment). That conclusion would rest on the fact that Article V includes no exception based on a failure to satisfy formal requirements of the recognition state (or otherwise). (129)

Consistent with this conclusion, states have in practice virtually never invoked the form requirements of the arbitral seat (or of the judicial enforcement forum) as grounds for denying recognition to foreign arbitral awards. (130) A potential exception involves the requirement that awards be reasoned, (131) although most courts have been prepared to recognize unreasoned awards if this was permitted in the arbitral seat. (132)

[B] Form Requirements in National Arbitration Legislation

Many national laws prescribe mandatory form requirements for international arbitral awards. In general, these provisions require a written and (almost always) reasoned instrument, signed by some or all of the arbitrators, which is dated. In some cases, these requirements are mandatory and parties are not capable of altering them by agreement. In general, these requirements are non-controversial and readily complied with, thus giving rise to few issues of interpretation.

[1] Parties' Autonomy to Alter Form Requirements

The UNCITRAL Model Law is representative of most national arbitration statutes' treatment of form requirements. It provides that an award (a) "shall be made in writing," (133) (b) "shall be signed by the arbitrator or arbitrators," (134) (c) "shall state its date and the place of arbitration," (135) and (d) "shall state the reasons upon which it is based, unless the parties have agreed that no reasons are to be given or the award is an award on agreed terms." (136) With the exception of the requirement for a reasoned award, these form requirements are mandatory under the Model Law. (137) Although every jurisdiction imposes its own particular form requirements for awards made locally, most other arbitration legislation is broadly similar. (138)

P 3033 ● In the United States, the FAA does not impose any express form requirement(s), although it presumes that awards will be written. (139) This is in contrast to certain U.S. state law requirements (likely preempted by the FAA) that contain form requirements. (140)

In some jurisdictions, the parties' autonomy to agree upon the form requirements applicable to the award is expressly recognized. In contrast to the generally mandatory provisions of the UNCITRAL Model Law, §52(1) of the English Arbitration Act, 1996, provides that "the parties are free to agree on the form of the award." (141) Absent agreement, the English Arbitration Act provides (like the Model Law) that the award shall be in writing, signed and reasoned, and shall provide the date of the award and seat of the arbitration. (142) This approach, giving effect to the parties' agreement, is to be preferred and, where statutory language will permit, other national arbitration statutes should be interpreted to produce the same result.

[2] Writing and Signature, Place and Date Requirements

For the most part, the form requirements for arbitral awards under national law are readily satisfied and non-controversial. As noted above, most national laws simply require a writing, signature, date and place. Not surprisingly, little debate has arisen concerning these requirements, which are almost always satisfied.

P 3034 ● [a] Writing and Signature

It is not unusual or controversial that awards must generally be in writing. (143) This is essential both to ensure due reflection by the arbitral tribunal and to record with (hopeful) clarity precisely what the tribunal has decided, both for the parties and for any subsequent judicial enforcement or annulment proceedings. (144)

In some national legal systems, all of the arbitrators are required to sign the award. (145) Where such a requirement exists, it is ordinarily a matter of mandatory law, which prevails over inconsistent institutional rules. (146) Although early authority was sometimes to the contrary, (147) there is no requirement that the arbitrators all sign the award at the same time or when they are physically located in the same place. (148) There is also no requirement that all of the pages of the award be signed and, instead, only a requirement that the final page of the award be signed. (149)

P 3035 ● Interpreted literally, and without exceptions, the requirement for a signed award by all the members of a multi-person tribunal would give a dissenting arbitrator the wholly-inappropriate power to block the making of an award, by refusing to sign the award. This is not the intention or the effect of such statutory requirements. The real purpose of the signature requirement is to ensure personal attention and responsibility (150) and to provide an evidentiary record.

As discussed below, in most jurisdictions, the award may, if necessary, be signed by either a majority of the arbitrators (151) or by the chairman alone. (152) Where one arbitrator refuses to sign the award, an explanation of the refusal is generally required (from the majority or chairman of the tribunal). (153) National courts have adopted relatively lenient approaches to the requirements for an explanation for the lack of a signature, (154) although there are occasional exceptions (particularly when the arbitrator whose signature is missing did not participate in the tribunal's deliberations). (155)

P 3036 The requirement that the absence of a signature be explained (contained in Article 32(3) of the 1976 UNCITRAL Rules, as well as a number of national arbitration ● statutes) was misused in the Iran-U.S. Claims Tribunal, which saw "numerous attempts by Iranian judges to turn this rule on its head. In many cases, the Iranian judges insisted on supplying their own statement of reasons for why they refused to sign an award, with the apparent aim of invalidating the award and undermining the Tribunal's legitimacy." (156)

[b] Place

As discussed elsewhere, the place where the award is made can have significant legal consequences, including in determining the forum for an annulment action. (157) To minimize uncertainties, most arbitration legislation requires arbitrators to confirm the place of the arbitration by specifying it in the award; (158) similarly, many arbitration statutes also provide that the award will be deemed to have been made at the place of the arbitration. (159) Consistent with this, it is common practice for arbitrators to specify the location of the arbitral seat on the face of the award, regardless where they sign the award.

As discussed elsewhere, the place where an award is physically signed has been held, in a few older decisions, as affecting the place where the award is "made" for purposes of the New York Convention and some national arbitration statutes. (160) More recent authority almost universally deems that the award is made in the arbitral seat, as selected by the parties' agreement, regardless where it is physically signed by each of the arbitrators. (161)

[c] Date

P 3037 As noted above, most arbitration legislation requires that awards be dated. The date on which the award is made may have consequences for the commencement of the ● time period for seeking to correct, annul, or confirm the award under applicable national law. (162)

[3] Reasons for Award

The requirement that arbitral awards state their reasons, which is imposed by most developed arbitration statutes, has provoked more discussion than other formal requirements. This requirement typically involves questions more readily considered to be matters of substance, and not form, and is addressed separately below. (163)

[4] Consequences of Noncompliance With Statutory Form Requirements

As noted above, statutory form requirements for arbitral awards are often mandatory. In many instances, failure to satisfy a formal requirement (e.g., to sign or date the award or indicate the place of arbitration) will be capable of invalidating the award in a subsequent annulment proceeding. (164) Such errors are readily capable of correction, where applicable arbitration legislation or institutional rules permit, and this is obviously the preferable course to annulling an otherwise valid award. (165) In many other jurisdictions, arbitration legislation does not provide for annulment based on technical formal defects in the award. (166)

As noted above, states have virtually never relied upon noncompliance with form requirements for arbitral awards as grounds for denying recognition to foreign awards. (167) The only arguable exception is the requirement that for reasoned awards, (168) and, even here, most courts have recognized unreasoned awards if the law of the arbitral seat permitted such awards. (169)

P 3038 ● [C] Form Requirements Under Arbitration Agreement and Institutional Rules

Arbitral awards must also comply with any form requirements set forth in the parties' arbitration agreement. In general, arbitration clauses themselves do not expressly impose specific or additional form requirements. (170) Nevertheless, institutional rules typically do prescribe form requirements for arbitral awards, although these usually do not differ materially from those set forth in the Model Law.

The UNCITRAL Rules track precisely the form requirements of the Model Law, (171) as do most other modern institutional rules. (172) In contrast, some institutional rules impose more detailed form requirements (which are not generally difficult to satisfy). (173) Noncompliance with these requirements may expose the award to annulment or non-recognition on the grounds that the parties' agreed arbitral procedures were not complied with. (174)

[D] Language of Award

Typically, parties will specify (through their arbitration agreement) the language of the arbitration, which will impliedly extend to the award. (175) Where the parties have not selected the language of the arbitration, the tribunal will do so, again generally impliedly encompassing the language of the award. (176) In both instances, failure to make the award in the requisite language may constitute a defect of form and provide a basis for annulment or non-recognition of the award. (177)

It is possible that national law in the arbitral seat would impose language requirements on the award. (178) If this were the case, the award would be exposed to annulment or non-recognition if it were not in the required language (subject to arguments that, where the parties had otherwise agreed, national law was contrary to Articles II and V(1)(d) of the New York Convention). (179)

P 3039 ● § 23.03 REQUIREMENT THAT INTERNATIONAL ARBITRAL AWARDS BE REASONED (180)

It is now a nearly universal principle that, unless otherwise agreed, international arbitral awards must set forth the reasons for the tribunal's decision, as well as containing a dispositive section specifying the relief ordered by the tribunal. This requirement for a reasoned award is reflected in international arbitration conventions, national law and institutional rules, and plays a central role in the international arbitral process.

[A] Requirements for Reasoned Award in International Arbitration Conventions

The New York Convention (like the Inter-American Convention) does not expressly address the subject of reasoned awards. In contrast, Article VIII of the European Convention provides that the parties "shall be presumed to have agreed that reasons shall be given for the award," except where: (a) the parties "expressly declare" to the contrary, or (b) the parties "have assented to an arbitration procedure under which it is not customary to give reasons for awards" and neither party requests reasons. (181) This provision is expressive of the expectations of parties in most contemporary international contexts, and (absent contrary agreement) can be regarded as a general principle of law in the context of international commercial arbitration. (182)

P 3040 ● [B] Requirement for Reasoned Award in National Arbitration Legislation

Historically, there was no universal rule under many national laws that arbitral awards be reasoned. (183) The traditional rule under English common law was that unreasoned awards were enforceable and the practice of making unreasoned awards was common. (184) Consistent with this, English, U.S., Indian and Hong Kong courts historically did not require that arbitral awards state the arbitrators' reasons for their award. (185) Nonetheless, modern arbitration legislation in most developed jurisdictions – save the United States – has superseded the common law rule and expressly requires that arbitrators give reasons for awards made within national territory, unless otherwise agreed by the parties. (186)

Article 31(2) of the UNCITRAL Model Law is representative of contemporary arbitration legislation, providing that “the award shall state the reasons upon which it is based, unless the parties have agreed that no reasons are to be given.” (187) Under the Model Law, reasoned awards are the default rule, unless the parties affirmatively agree to the contrary. (188) Other arbitration legislation is similar, (189) while some statutes go further, mandatorily requiring reasons to be given in all cases (regardless of the parties’ agreement). (190) Similarly, leading institutional rules almost uniformly require reasoned awards, either on a mandatory basis (191) or absent contrary agreement. (192)

P 3041

The requirement for reasoned awards rests on contemporary assessments of the demands of the adjudicative process. A leading English authority expressed the rationale as follows:

“By the end of the judgment the whole of the judge’s thinking on the facts and the law should have been laid bare, that all who run may read. It should be fair to assume that he has not been led to his decision by matters he has not mentioned. No cards regarded by him as significant should remain face downwards or in the pack. His decision may later be held to have been right or wrong, but at least there should be no real doubt what he decided or why.” (193)

Simply put, it is regarded as an essential aspect of the judicial process – and the related adjudicative process of arbitration (194) – that the decision-maker be required to explain his or her reasons. This is necessary in order to constrain the power of the decision-maker (reducing the risk of arbitrary, whimsical, or lazy decisions), to enhance the quality of the decision-making process (by requiring thoughtful, diligent analysis) and to provide the parties with the opportunity not only to be heard, but to hear that their submissions have been considered and how they have been disposed of. (195)

P 3042

Indeed, a reasoned decision, explaining how legal rules apply to factual determinations, is the essence of adjudication, distinguishing it from legislative, executive and other forms of decision-making. (196) These considerations are more, not less, important in the context of arbitral decisions, as compared to judicial decisions, because arbitrators do not have the training, institutional responsibilities and discipline, or appellate oversight, of national court judges. (197)

It has been suggested that the requirement for reasoned awards conflicts with the arbitrator’s independence and ability creatively and flexibly to resolve commercial disputes:

“When we talk about the arbitrator’s freedom from reasoned awards, it will frequently be the case that we are really talking about his freedom from over-broad rules or time-honoured categories that might otherwise appear to dictate a result he would prefer to avoid. This is, then, a freedom that makes possible an arbitrator’s flexibility in decision-making and a maximum attention to context.” (198)

Although there is practical force to this observation, it mischaracterizes the essential character of international commercial arbitration, which is an adjudicative process in which arbitrators apply the law. If parties wish to give an arbitrator “freedom from over-broad rules or time-honoured categories,” they agree to arbitration ex aequo et bono, which grants arbitrators that freedom from legal rules. If parties do not do so, however, then the arbitrators’ mandate is to apply the law – hopefully with a strong sense of the parties’ commercial setting and objectives – with the requirement for reasons serving to guarantee the diligence and quality of that adjudicatory process.

[C] Content of Requirement for Reasoned Award Under National Arbitration Legislation

The requirement for reasons under most national arbitration legislation does not demand that the arbitrators write a learned article on the issues in dispute, nor deliver an award of any particular length. Indeed, in some instances, longer is not better, but worse, by tending to obscure the real issues and bases for decision. (199) The essential requirement is that the tribunal identify the issues that were dispositive in the dispute and explain, concisely, the thought-process underlying its decision.

P 3043

There are various formulations for what constitutes a reasoned award. (200) One of the most satisfactory is:

“All that is necessary is that the arbitrators should set out what, on their view of the evidence, did or did not happen and should explain succinctly why, in the light of what happened, they have reached their decision and what that decision is. This is all that is meant by a ‘reasoned award.’” (201)

This requirement for a concisely-reasoned award can be regarded as expressing the parties’ presumptive expectations in any contemporary international commercial arbitration. Indeed, a well-reasoned Australian decision adopts precisely this view under the UNCITRAL Model Law:

“The Model Law, Art. 31(2) ... [does] not say that the arbitrator must deal with every substantial argument put forward by the contending parties. Nor [does it] state that the arbitrator should state the evidence from which he or she draws his or her findings of fact and give reasons for preferring some evidence over other evidence. The reasons required are those for making the award. To the extent that a crisp summary of that is required, I would adopt the statement of principle of Donaldson LJ in Bremer v Westzucker [quoted above].” (202)

P 3044 ● Among other things, there is no requirement that a “reasoned” award list the evidence that the parties submit or discuss how the tribunal evaluates each item of evidence. (203) Some courts have also held that an arbitral award need not satisfy the same standard of reasoning as a national court judgment, on the basis that arbitration is designed to settle disputes expeditiously. (204)

The requirement for a reasoned award is also not a requirement for a well-reasoned award: bad or unpersuasive reasons are still reasons, and satisfy statutory requirements for reasoned awards. (205) As discussed below, in a limited number of jurisdictions, awards made in locally-seated arbitrations may be annulled if they are internally-contradictory. (206) This requirement focuses on the dispositive portions, rather than the reasoning, of the award and should not be seen as a form of requirement for clear or consistent reasoning.

It is essential that the requirement for reasons not be turned into a vehicle for substantive review of the arbitral award. Reasons can be short and concise or they can be ill-phrased, unpersuasive and unreflective; but they are still reasons. As long as the award demonstrates that the arbitrators have applied their understanding of the law to their understanding of the facts, the requirement for reasons is satisfied. (207)

It is important to note that, in most developed jurisdictions, the requirement for a reasoned award is not mandatory: parties are free to contract out of this requirement and to agree to the arbitrators’ provision of an unreasoned award. (208) This reflects the parties’ general autonomy with regard to the arbitral procedure, (209) including with regard to fundamental procedural safeguards of the adjudicative process.

There is no reason to criticize this recognition of the parties’ procedural autonomy: where commercial parties choose to dispense with the costs, delays and formalities of reasoned awards, and to encourage the informality and compromise that may sometimes accompany unreasoned awards, it is virtually always appropriate to permit ● this. (210) Thus, where statutory language will allow, arbitration legislation should be interpreted to permit parties to agree to unreasoned arbitral awards. Based on similar analysis, where parties have so agreed, an unreasoned foreign award should be recognized; that is true even if local law in the judicial enforcement forum ordinarily requires reasoned arbitral awards in locally-seated arbitrations. (211)

There are a limited number of industries and/or institutional settings where reasoned arbitral awards are not the rule. So-called “quality” arbitrations, where the quality of commodities are assessed, traditionally do not involve reasoned awards; this is understandable because of the nature of the decision, the need for expedition and the ongoing relations among the parties concerned. In these circumstances, unreasoned awards should be permitted even absent express agreement permitting an unreasoned award (on the basis of clear evidence demonstrating the parties’ implied expectations). (212)

Some national legal systems provide for the annulment of awards that violate statutory requirements that awards be reasoned. (213) Courts in other states, including some states that require reasoned awards, have held that an award’s lack of reasons is not grounds for annulment. (214) The rationale for these decisions is that the lack of reasoning, although a violation of statutory requirements for arbitral awards, is not sufficiently fundamental to warrant annulling an award.

[D] No General Requirement for Reasoned Award Under U.S. Domestic Federal Arbitration Act

A significant exception to the general international consensus presumptively requiring reasoned awards is the United States, where older authority has preserved the historic common law rule permitting unreasoned awards. (215) A 1960 opinion of the U.S. Supreme Court is representative, remarking in dicta that “[a]rbitrators have no obligation to the court to give their reasons for an award.” (216) Similarly, U.S. courts have generally held that unreasoned awards are valid and enforceable (provided that applicable institutional rules or the parties’ agreement do not require a reasoned award). (217)

P 3046 Where the parties’ agreement or applicable institutional rules provide for a ● reasoned award, as is generally the case, (218) U.S. courts will demand compliance with this requirement. (219)

In many respects, the domestic U.S. approach to reasoned awards is the mirror-image of the UNCITRAL Model Law and most other contemporary arbitration legislation. Under both approaches, the parties are free to agree to either reasoned or unreasoned awards; the difference between the two approaches is that the domestic U.S. default rule is to permit unreasoned awards, while the UNCITRAL Model Law's default rule is to require reasoned awards.

The U.S. domestic approach is out of line with contemporary international views and should not be applied in international arbitrations (including international arbitrations seated in the United States). In international arbitrations, reasoned awards are customary and represent the implied expectations of the parties: that is reflected in the essentially unanimous approach of institutional rules (220) and national arbitration legislation, (221) presumptively requiring reasoned awards. This is supported by the parties' presumptive desire to avoid potential uncertainties with regard to the enforcement of unreasoned awards outside the United States. Given these considerations, the presumptive default rule in international arbitrations seated in the United States and elsewhere should be that reasoned awards are required, absent contrary agreement.

[E] Recognition of Unreasoned Arbitral Awards

P 3047 Significant questions arise concerning the recognition and enforcement of an unreasoned foreign award that is made in a place where local law permits unreasoned ● awards (e.g., the United States). There is substantial authority for the proposition that unreasoned awards will be recognized and enforced in foreign courts, even in states that require reasoned awards in arbitrations seated on their territory, provided that unreasoned awards were permitted in the arbitral seat. (222) Where the parties to a foreign arbitration have agreed, expressly or impliedly, that awards may be unreasoned, it is particularly difficult to see what grounds would exist for denying recognition of an unreasoned foreign award. (223)

Even where a recognition court requires that foreign awards be reasoned, courts proceed from the premise that different legal systems adopt different approaches to the arbitral process, (224) including with regard to the methods of drafting awards. (225) In one court's words, "[i]n the case of foreign arbitral awards, it must be borne in mind that the deciding arbitrators come from different legal cultures and follow the customs of their procedural systems when writing reasons." (226)

P 3048 ● Although there is force to these conclusions, unreasoned awards sometimes attract objections under Article V(2)(b)'s public policy exception where the parties have not affirmatively agreed to waive a statement of reasons by the arbitrators (as can occur under the FAA): in these instances, an unreasoned award arguably deprives the parties, without their agreement, of a fundamental procedural protection. A few national courts have denied recognition of unreasoned awards in these circumstances. (227) Other courts are also likely to be attracted by the notion, underlying these decisions, that a statement of reasons is an expected, vitally-important aspect of the adjudicative process, upon which parties should be permitted to insist, absent express contrary agreement. (228)

The better view is that unreasoned awards should not be subject to non-recognition where the parties have expressly or impliedly agreed that no reasons are required or where unreasoned awards are permitted under the law of the arbitral seat. The requirement for reasons does not rise to the level of a mandatory international requirement; where parties have accepted unreasoned awards, either directly or by choice of an arbitral seat that does not require reasoned awards, there is no justification for imposing a different result. Similarly, there is generally no basis for concluding that national public policy permits non-recognition of an award under Article V(2)(b) of the New York Convention; if the parties have agreed, in a foreign-seated arbitration where such agreements are permitted, to forego reasons, that agreement should not ordinarily violate another state's public policies.

Conversely, where the parties have agreed upon a reasoned award, either directly or by choice of the arbitral seat, the failure to provide one will ordinarily be grounds for non-recognition. That will generally be true under Article V(1)(d) of the Convention, providing for non-recognition of awards where the arbitrators did not apply the parties' agreed arbitral procedures. (229)

§ 23.04 MAJORITY AWARDS AND AWARDS BY PRESIDING ARBITRATOR

Virtually all arbitration legislation and institutional rules provide, in cases of multi-person tribunals, for non-unanimous decisions by the arbitrators. This typically permits majority awards, but can also include awards by the presiding arbitrator acting alone. P 3049 Although possible, both of these avenues are exceptions, with the vast majority ● of all international arbitral awards being unanimous awards, signed by all members of the tribunal. (230)

[A] Majority Awards

Almost all modern arbitration legislation permits awards to be made by a majority of the arbitrators (i.e., non-unanimous or majority awards). (231) Article 29 of the UNCITRAL Model Law is representative: "In arbitral proceedings with more than one arbitrator, any decision of the arbitral tribunal shall be made, unless otherwise agreed by the parties, by a majority of all of its members." (232) Arbitration legislation in other jurisdictions also provides that an award may be made by less than all the members of the arbitral tribunal. (233) If not all the arbitrators sign an award, national law generally requires that a statement of the reasons for the omitted signatures be included in or appended to the award. (234)

In most arbitration statutes, the principle permitting majority awards is subject to contrary agreement, although in practice this seldom occurs. (235) Similar provisions for P 3050 ● majority awards exist in many institutional rules. (236) As discussed above, the dynamics of an arbitral tribunal's decision-making are affected significantly by provisions granting the majority of the arbitrators (or, as discussed below, the chairman alone) the right to make an award, without the concurrence of a co-arbitrator (or both co-arbitrators). (237)

Institutional rules sometimes require that all members of the arbitral tribunal sign the award. (238) Where such a rule exists, an arbitrator is contractually required to sign the award even if he or she dissents from its conclusions. (239) A refusal to fulfill this obligation would subject the arbitrator to challenge and removal. (240)

[B] Awards by Presiding Arbitrator

There are instances in which all three arbitrators may have different views about the appropriate resolution of a dispute (for example, regarding quantum of monetary relief or where more than two claims or types of relief are sought). Where this occurs, there may be no majority at all, and instead only three different views. In this event, and as discussed above, some arbitration statutes (241) and institutional rules (242) provide for the decisive position to be that of the presiding arbitrator, with the presiding arbitrator being authorized to make an award alone. In contrast, other arbitration statutes (243) and institutional rules (244) do not provide for awards by the presiding arbitrator alone (instead either expressly or impliedly requiring a majority award).

P 3051 ● As discussed above, the existence of such a provision obviously also further affects the dynamics of the tribunal's decision-making and deliberations, by vesting the chairman with power to proceed alone, notwithstanding the disagreement of both co-arbitrators. (245) If no such provision exists, then deliberations must continue until a majority can be formed; until a majority exists for a particular position, there can be no award, which increases the co-arbitrators' influence materially vis-à-vis the presiding arbitrator. (246)

[C] Alleged Nonexistence of Majority Award

In legal regimes requiring a majority award, there have been instances in which awards have been challenged on the grounds that there was supposedly no "majority" award – even though two arbitrators signed a final award. This has occurred, for example, when one arbitrator in the "majority" has appended a separate or concurring opinion to the award, stating that he or she believed that the correct result should have been different from that of the final award (e.g., that more or different relief should have been granted or that an alternative ground should have been relied upon). (247) In one case, for example, a co-arbitrator joined the presiding arbitrator in making a majority award, while stating in a concurrence that he had agreed because deliberations were required P 3052 to continue "until a majority, and probably a compromise ● solution has been reached. ... I concur ... in order to form a majority so that an award can be rendered." (248)

A distinguished commentator commented on this practice, with grudging acceptance, as follows:

"so much of the judicial and arbitral process is characterized by judges and arbitrators voting to form a majority rather than voting to express what each of them may see as the optimum judgment. In a collective body, there is very frequently a process of accommodation of differing views, sometimes sharply differing views. The result may be consecration of the least common denominator. That may not be a noble result, but it is a practical result. It is better than no result." (249)

This conclusion is clearly correct. There is no requirement that an arbitrator agree with all, or even any, of the reasoning in an award; nor is there any requirement that the arbitrator be happy with the result he or she accepts, nor believe that it is the best or fairest outcome. All that is important, for these purposes, is that the arbitrator voluntarily sign the award. That is confirmed, in very clear terms by the possibility of arbitrators signing an award while appending a dissenting or concurring opinion or statement. (250)

Some arbitration legislation also deals expressly with circumstances where an arbitrator refuses to take part in a vote on a decision by the members of the tribunal (which is different from taking part in a vote, but then dissenting from the tribunal's decision). The German version of the Model Law provides that, in such instances, and with advance notice to the parties, the majority of the tribunal can make an award without the third arbitrator's participation. (251)

Even absent such express statutory authorization, a majority of a tribunal would generally be held to have the authority to make an award without the participation of the third arbitrator, provided that he or she had been given sufficient opportunities to deliberate and participate in a vote. (252) (The related subject of a “truncated tribunal,” where an arbitrator resigns, is discussed above. (253) )

P 3053 ● § 23.05 SEPARATE, CONCURRING AND DISSENTING OPINIONS (254)

An almost inevitable consequence of the possibility of majority awards is the possibility of “separate” or “dissenting” views by individual members of the arbitral tribunal. One mechanism for indicating disagreement or dissent is for the arbitrator simply to decline to sign the award in question. (255) Under most modern arbitration legislation, this will not prevent the award from being final, or from being an “award,” but will signify the arbitrator’s personal disagreement with his colleagues’ conclusions. (256)

Nevertheless, consistent with the tradition of requiring reasoned awards, and often for reasons of professional pride, some arbitrators wish to go further and explain the reasons for their dissent. This is sometimes expressed in the form of a separate or dissenting statement or opinion, which is often annexed to the tribunal’s award. (257)

Notably, a dissenting or concurring opinion is not part of the award, nor is it another or independent award; rather, it is merely a separate statement by the dissenting arbitrator, without any of the legal consequences of an award. (258) Separate, dissenting ● and concurring opinions are common in both litigation and arbitration in some legal systems; (259) they are somewhat less common in international commercial arbitration, particularly in civil law regimes.

Dissenting or separate opinions were historically customary in state-to-state practice. The 1899 Hague Convention for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes provided expressly for dissenting opinions, allowing “[t]hose members who are in the minority [to] record their dissent when signing” the award. (260) Nonetheless, dissenting opinions are unusual or forbidden in many domestic legal systems and, more recently, there have been reservations about such opinions in international arbitration. (261)

[A] Treatment of Separate, Concurring, or Dissenting Opinions Under National Law and Institutional Rules

Most arbitration legislation is silent on the subject of separate or dissenting opinions, although a few such statutes expressly permit dissenting opinions. (262) That is true of the UNCITRAL Model Law, whose provisions make no mention of dissenting, concurring, or other separate opinions. (263)

During the drafting of the UNCITRAL Model Law, proposals were made to specifically permit dissenting opinions, but insufficient need was seen to do so. (264) That is apparently because it was clear that dissenting opinions were permissible (absent contrary agreement), even without express statutory authorization, but not to be ● encouraged. In jurisdictions where local arbitration legislation does not expressly permit separate or dissenting opinions, judicial or academic authority often approves the practice. (265)

A number of institutional arbitration rules provide for dissenting or separate opinions, (266) although there are some notable exceptions, including the UNCITRAL Rules (267) and ICC Rules. (268) Even where institutional rules provide for the possibility of a dissenting or separate opinion, it is sometimes suggested, usually by civil law practitioners, that such an opinion may only be attached to an award or issued separately if the majority of the tribunal permits it. (269) In some instances, tribunals have refused to release a dissenting opinion, notwithstanding the dissenting arbitrator’s request that they do so. (270)

Even absent express authorization in national law or applicable institutional rules (or otherwise), the right to provide a dissenting or separate opinion is an appropriate concomitant of the arbitrator’s adjudicative function and the tribunal’s related obligation to make a reasoned award. (271) Although there are legal systems where dissenting or separate opinions are either not permitted or not customary, these domestic rules have little application in the context of party-nominated co-arbitrators and diverse tribunals. (272)

P 3056 ● Indeed, the right of an arbitrator to deliver a dissenting opinion is properly considered as an element of his or her adjudicative mandate, particularly in circumstances where a reasoned award is required. (273) Only clear and explicit prohibitions should preclude the making and publication to the parties of a dissenting opinion, which serves an important role in the deliberative process and can provide a valuable check on arbitrary or indefensible decision-making.

[B] Criticisms of Separate, Concurring and Dissenting Opinions

It has been suggested by some authors that the confidentiality of the arbitral tribunal’s deliberations (274) forbids any separate or dissenting opinion, because this would reveal that the tribunal was non-unanimous. (275) This view is generally rejected in more recent authority (276) and, in any event, is misconceived.

The confidentiality of the arbitral deliberations does not extend to a formal statement of an arbitrator’s views concerning the claims submitted to the tribunal; indeed, the same

P 3057 argument would prevent an arbitrator from refusing to do anything other than sign an award with which he or she disagrees, which is both unacceptable and not the law. (277) It would also be contrary to both historic practice (278) and the tradition of reasoned awards (279) for an arbitrator to be forbidden to express his or her views on the matters he or she has been mandated to consider and make a reasoned decision on.

The fact that arbitrators are permitted to issue dissenting or separate opinions does not mean that they should – or even are entitled to – issue any dissenting or separate opinion that they choose. In a substantial number of cases, an arbitrator will eventually “go along” with his or her colleagues on a tribunal, where on reflection his or her disagreements are equivocal, caveated, or not strongly-held. Doing so is not an abdication of the arbitrator’s responsibilities or independence, but an application of his or her obligations of collegiality and open-mindedness. (280)

Moreover, not unlike the making of arbitral awards, the making of a dissenting opinion is a serious act, that implicates the arbitrator’s personal duties of impartiality, confidentiality, collegiality and diligence. (281) These duties require that any separate or dissenting opinion respect the secrecy of the arbitral deliberations (i.e., not disclose or comment upon statements allegedly made during deliberations or prior drafts of awards), respect the collegiality of the arbitral tribunal (i.e., not make offensive or personal comments or accusations) and respect the arbitrator’s duties of impartiality (i.e., not adopt a partisan approach merely advocating one party’s position). (282) A failure to respect these obligations is a breach of the arbitrator’s obligations to the parties and his or her fellow arbitrators. (283)

P 3058 ● There have inevitably been instances where the foregoing principles were not observed (albeit often in politically-charged circumstances). Classic examples include various of the separate and/or dissenting opinions issued by members of the Iran-United States Claims Tribunal, (284) by members of bilateral investment treaty tribunals (285) and by members of state-to-state arbitral tribunals. (286) These opinions have sometimes included harsh personal accusations and overt efforts to undermine the validity and enforceability of the award. (287)

It has been correctly observed that it is very often party-nominated arbitrators who issue dissenting opinions of this nature. In the words of one practitioner:

“Certain arbitrators, so as not to lose the confidence of the company or the state which appointed them, will be tempted, if they have not put their point of view successfully in the course of the tribunal’s deliberations, systematically to draw up a dissenting opinion and to insist that it be communicated to the parties.” (288)

P 3059 ● Although there are exceptions to this general rule, in which a presiding arbitrator dissents from an award made by the two party-nominated co-arbitrators, (289) they are unusual. The substantial majority of all dissenting opinions are issued by party-nominated co-arbitrators, in favor of the position of the party that nominated them.

It is important to be clear about what is proper, and what is improper, for a separate or dissenting opinion to do. There should be nothing objectionable at all about an arbitrator “systematically drawing up a dissenting opinion and insisting that it be communicated to the parties.”

If an arbitrator believes that the tribunal is making a seriously wrong decision, which cannot fairly be reconciled with the law and the evidentiary record, then he or she may express that view. There is nothing wrong – and on the contrary, much that is right – with such a course as part of the adjudicatory process in which the tribunal’s conclusion is explained in a reasoned manner. And, if the arbitrator considers that the award’s conclusions require a “systematic” discussion, that is also entirely appropriate; indeed, it is implied in the adjudicative process and the requirement for a reasoned award.

Any experienced practitioner will also have seen cases where a decision-maker’s views changed – sometimes radically – in the course of deliberations, including after receiving a draft dissent. One of the reasons for requiring a written, reasoned award is precisely to force the tribunal to articulate its conclusions and reasoning in black-and-white.

In a surprising number of cases, views that were expressed confidently in oral discussions “just won’t write”: equally, views that are expressed in a draft award will, in some instances, not withstand the force of a careful dissenting opinion. For these reasons, a diligent co-arbitrator will not merely voice – but also write – his objections, in a respectful effort to persuade. Doing so is in no way inappropriate, but is a fundamental element of arriving at a reasoned – and correctly-reasoned – award.

It is sometimes said that, having expressed his or her views in writing, but failed to persuade his or her colleagues, an arbitrator should withdraw and not issue a dissenting opinion. That ignores the fact that the possible eventual publication of a dissenting opinion is one of the reasons that an arbitrator’s views are considered carefully and given respect by the other members of the tribunal.

At least as important, this view also ignores the fact that the very concept of a reasoned award by a multi-member tribunal permits a statement of different reasons – if different members of the tribunal in fact hold different views. This is an essential aspect of the process by which the parties have an opportunity to both present their case and hear the reasons for the tribunal's decision; not hearing the dissent deprives the parties of an important aspect of this process.

P 3060 At the same time, a process that includes dissenting views also enhances the quality of the tribunal's deliberations and ultimate award, resulting in more diligent and ● focused attention to difficult issues. In some cases, dissents or disagreements coupled with the possibility of a dissenting opinion result in more nuanced or qualified majority (or unanimous) awards that deal with the parties' dispute in a more careful or balanced manner. All of this materially enhances, rather than detracts from, the international arbitral process. (290)

Finally, dissenting and separate opinions must be directed only towards explaining the reasons for the arbitrator's conclusions, and not towards obstructing recognition and enforcement of the award. An arbitrator's duties of collegiality require that he or she accept the tribunal's award as such – even where he or she issues a dissenting opinion – and not seek to overturn or undermine it. (291) Accordingly, save in the most exceptional cases, a separate or dissenting opinion may not identify or comment on alleged biases of the tribunal, or purported procedural errors or similar matters. These are matters that a party seeking to annul an award may raise, but they should not be advocated by an arbitrator. (292)

Equally, an arbitrator who intends to issue a dissent has no right to delay notification of the tribunal's award to the parties. Instances sometimes arise in practice where an arbitrator (often the co-arbitrator appointed by the party whose claims or defenses are about to be rejected by the majority) seeks to delay the process of finalizing the award. This tactic was firmly rejected by a Swedish Court of Appeal decision:

“when two arbitrators are agreed upon the outcome of the dispute, the third arbitrator cannot prolong the deliberations by demanding continued discussions in an attempt to persuade the others as to the correctness of his opinion. The dissenting arbitrator is thus not afforded any opportunity to delay the writing of the award.” (293)

This language can be read as going too far, at least as literally formulated, by suggesting that there is little, if any, scope for an arbitrator ever objecting to inadequate deliberations. If two members of an arbitral tribunal prevented the third member from any meaningful opportunity to present his or her objections to their joint view, serious P 3061 questions would be raised about the regularity and fairness of the ● arbitral process and resulting award. (294) An arbitrator has no right unreasonably to delay the issuance of the award, and would breach his or her duties by attempting to do so, (295) but he or she does have the right to a meaningful opportunity to meet with, and attempt to persuade, the other members of the tribunal. (296)

Some commentators have suggested that the prevalence of dissenting opinions by party-nominated co-arbitrators, typically supporting the position of the party that nominated them, suggests bias and, more broadly, defects in the system of party-appointed arbitrators. (297) In fact, the vast majority of all international arbitrations do not involve dissenting (or separate) opinions, (298) and there are not insignificant numbers of cases where a presiding arbitrator dissents from an award by the two co-arbitrators. (299)

More fundamentally, it is in no way surprising that co-arbitrators, selected by each party independently, would have views about legal, commercial and cultural issues that made the co-arbitrators more likely to be responsive to his or her nominating party; that is one of the main objectives of parties in selecting co-arbitrators. (300) As discussed in greater detail elsewhere, there is nothing at all that is surprising or objectionable about this result. (301)

§ 23.06 TIME LIMITS, SERVICE AND PUBLICATION OF INTERNATIONAL ARBITRAL AWARDS

National law, institutional rules and/or arbitration agreements often prescribe requirements with regard to time limits for making an award, service and notification of an award and related matters. (302) Like formal requirements, these requirements are generally non-controversial and capable of being readily satisfied, but require attention and diligence by the tribunal.

P 3062 ● [A] Time Limits for Making Awards

As discussed above, most national arbitration statutes contains no provision regarding the time limits for making an award. (303) This leaves the timing of an award within the parties' procedural autonomy or, absent agreement, the arbitrators' general procedural discretion. (304)

In contrast, a few (usually older) arbitration statutes prescribe time limits within which an arbitral tribunal, seated within national territory, must make its final award. (305) For example, the French Code of Civil Procedure provides that a final award in a domestic arbitration must be made within six months of the constitution of the tribunal. (306) A limited number of other arbitration statutes are similar. (307) These legislative time limits are typically vestiges of historic statutory codes mandating the arbitral procedures.

Statutory time limits apply only to arbitrations seated within national territory, not to arbitrations seated abroad; that is virtually always true as a matter of straightforward statutory construction and, in any event, follows from the territorial limitations of national arbitration legislation. (308) A statutory time limit might also, exceptionally, apply to an arbitration seated abroad, if the parties had chosen the relevant jurisdiction's law as the procedural law of the arbitration. (309) In many instances, statutory time limits will apply, or be interpreted to apply, only to domestic, and not to international, arbitrations, even if they are locally-seated. (310)

Some institutional rules prescribe deadlines for the making of an award. (311) Less frequently, the parties' arbitration agreement may prescribe a time limit for making an award. (312)

P 3063 ● Most national arbitration legislation gives effect to such agreements, (313) as an element of the parties' more general procedural autonomy. (314) As one French decision explains:

“the principle that the time-limit fixed by the parties, either directly or by reference to arbitration rules, cannot be extended by the arbitrators themselves is a requirement of both domestic and international public policy, in that it is inherent in the contractual nature of arbitration.” (315)

Further, some jurisdictions also adopt statutory mechanisms for either the tribunal or local courts to extend a contractual time limit. That is the case in France, (316) England, (317) Belgium (318) and elsewhere. (319)

The consequences of violation of the parties' agreed time limit vary. In some jurisdictions, such violations may be excused (for example, on the theory that “time was not of the essence” (320) ), while in other jurisdictions the violation of a time limit will result in the invalidity and potential annulment of the award. (321)

P 3064 ● [B] Delivery, Service and Notification of Awards

Once an arbitral award has been made, it must be provided to the parties in some fashion: if this does not occur, it is impossible to see how the parties could be bound by or able to challenge the award's (unknown) terms.

Despite the practical importance of publication of an award, there are generally no provisions in international arbitration conventions regarding the delivery, service, or notification of awards to the parties. That is true for the New York Convention, (322) as well as the European and Inter-American Conventions.

In contrast, most national arbitration legislation prescribes some sort of requirement for delivery, notification and/or service of arbitral awards on the parties. In virtually all developed legal systems, the arbitrators are statutorily required to communicate the award to the parties.

Thus, the UNCITRAL Model Law provides “after the award is made, a copy signed by the arbitrators ... shall be delivered to each party.” (323) Many other arbitration statutes make similar provision, for awards to be “delivered,” (324) “transmitted,” (325) “communicated,” (326) or “notified” (327) to the parties.

Under the English Arbitration Act, 1996, the parties are “free to agree on the requirements as to notification of the award,” (328) failing which “the award shall be notified to the parties by service on them of copies of the award, which shall be done without delay after the award is made.” (329) Characteristically, the FAA is silent on the topic, although U.S. courts have generally held that in the absence of agreement by the parties, awards should be served on parties according to the applicable arbitration rules or other methods permitted by law. (330)

P 3065 ● It appears clear in most developed legal systems that a signed and dated award, complying with all relevant formalities, is still an “award” even if not yet communicated to the parties: most national arbitration statutes provide that the “award” shall be communicated or delivered, not that delivery is one of the formal requirements for an “award.” (331) (An arguable exception is Switzerland, where an award only becomes “final” upon communication to the parties. (332) ) As discussed below, however, it appears that an award may be altered by a tribunal up until the moment that it is communicated to the parties. (333)

The delivery or communication of an award to the parties often has significant procedural consequences under national arbitration legislation: in particular, it frequently triggers the time period for applying to correct or modify the award (334) and for filing an application to annul the award. (335) In the case of final awards, the delivery

P 3066 ● or communication of the award also defines when a tribunal becomes functus officio. (336)

Most arbitration legislation either requires or assumes that the arbitrators themselves will arrange for delivery or notification of the award to the parties. In practice, however, this duty is often delegated (without controversy) to either an arbitral institution in accordance with its institutional rules (337) or to another third party (e.g., a secretary, barrister's clerk, or delivery firm).

National arbitration statutes almost uniformly require that the award be delivered to both (or all) of the parties, and not to only one of them. (338) Even where not expressly provided by statute, this is an implied, but mandatory, requirement. It reflects the general equality of the parties, as well as specific concerns that the parties have equal opportunities to challenge or seek correction or modification of awards. (339) Arbitration legislation also generally provides that awards will be delivered only to the parties, and not to others, consistent with general expectations regarding the confidentiality of the arbitral process. (340)

National arbitration statutes sometimes also contain provisions regarding the mode of delivery of an award to the parties, including delivery by hand, mail, courier, or otherwise. (341) It is this type of delivery, however defined, that provides the starting point for calculating time periods (for applications to correct, modify, or annul an award).

Arbitral institutions or arbitral tribunals sometimes informally provide the parties with copies of the award (whether denominated as advance copies, courtesy copies, or otherwise) in a means other than the statutorily-defined manner. (342) Informal provision of awards to both parties in this manner is entirely proper, but generally does not suffice to trigger applicable statutory time periods for applications to annul or correct the award. (343)

P 3067 It is very common in international arbitration (indeed, almost the rule) that the award will need to be delivered to persons residing outside the country where the arbitral seat is located. That raises the question whether there is any requirement for "service abroad" of an award in accordance with national (344) or international (345) requirements for serving documents in national court litigation abroad. ●

Although there is surprisingly little authority on the issue, the correct view is clearly that there is no requirement that an award be served abroad pursuant to either national or international requirements of this nature. That is not because awards are not "extrajudicial" documents, to which instruments such as the Hague Service Convention apply, but instead because national arbitration legislation uniformly provides only that awards must be "delivered" or "communicated," and not "served," which are the topics regulated by such instruments. This is in keeping with the practical, commercially-oriented objectives of the arbitral process and should preclude arguments based upon alleged noncompliance with national or international service requirements. (346)

Institutional arbitration rules almost invariably address the question of delivery or notification of an award. Such rules typically provide that the arbitral institution itself, rather than the arbitrators, will notify the award to the parties. (347)

Most national laws do not expressly provide for the validity of these forms of notification, (348) although in practice they have not raised any questions. Given the central role of party autonomy in defining arbitral procedures, (349) there should be no question regarding the validity of delivery provisions established by institutional rules.

P 3068 ● [C] Registration of Awards

Some legal systems continue to require that an award made in a locally-seated arbitration be "registered" or "deposited" with a local court or notary. (350) This provision was more frequent under older arbitration legislation, and was related to the requirement for confirmation or exequatur of the award. (351) The decisive trend over the past half-century has been away from such requirements and instead towards simply notifying the parties of the making of the award. (352)

§ 23.07 RELIEF GRANTED IN ARBITRAL AWARDS (353)

The most critical aspect of any arbitral award is the relief that it grants. In many cases, this is a straightforward matter, which gives rise to few difficulties. If one party seeks amounts due in payment for goods or services, or satisfaction of a debt or guarantee, then there will typically be little basis for disagreement over the nature of the relief or the tribunal's power to grant it. In other cases, involving requests for injunctive or declaratory orders, some forms of monetary damages (e.g., punitive or double/treble damages), or interim measures, disputes can arise regarding the tribunal's power to award such relief and the appropriate standards for doing so.

[A] Arbitrators' Powers With Regard to Relief

The remedial powers of an international arbitral tribunal are defined in the first instance by the parties' arbitration agreement. This is an element of the parties' general autonomy, with respect to both the arbitrators' jurisdiction (354) and the arbitral procedures, (355) given effect by both the New York Convention and virtually all national arbitration legislation. (356)

P 3069 In principle, the parties should be free to confer authority on the arbitrators to grant any form of civil remedy calculated to resolve the parties' dispute. (357) It is of course, elementary that a tribunal may only order relief against the parties to the arbitration, ● consistent with the consensual status of the arbitral process. (358) There may also be exceptional limits on the arbitrators' remedial authority, arising from the nonarbitrability and public policy doctrines (discussed elsewhere), (359) but the general rule is that the arbitral tribunal's remedial powers are defined by the parties' arbitration agreement, given effect by the Convention and national law.

In a few jurisdictions, arbitration legislation affirmatively provides arbitral tribunals the same remedial authority as local courts, expressly incorporating the powers of national courts. (360) In principle, these statutory provisions should be regarded as non-mandatory (e.g., subject to limitations or extensions by the parties). Other legislation expressly permits parties to agree upon the arbitral tribunal's remedial authority, while providing default rules regarding remedial authority; the default provisions of these statutes again generally provide arbitral tribunals with the same authority with regard to monetary payments, declaratory relief, injunctive relief, specific performance and rectification as local courts. (361)

In contrast, most arbitration legislation is silent with regard to the arbitrators' remedial powers, generally treating this as a matter for the parties' agreement, which is held presumptively to grant the arbitrators very broad remedial authority. Moreover, in many jurisdictions, the arbitrators' remedial powers are treated as an aspect of the substantive dispute between the parties. As a consequence, there will generally be no proper basis for judicial review of an arbitral tribunal's exercise of its remedial authority, beyond the review applicable generally to the arbitrator's substantive decisions. (362)

P 3070 Thus, under most national arbitration regimes, it is well-settled that arbitrators have broad discretion in fashioning relief. Indeed, it is frequently said that "arbitrators have broad powers to grant relief that a court could not," (363) that "arbitrators have broad ● discretion in fashioning remedies and 'may grant equitable relief that a Court could not'" (364) and that "[i]n selecting appropriate measures, the arbitrators are not limited to the remedies known in the procedural law of the country of the seat." (365) Some authorities suggest that arbitral tribunals have broader authority with regard to remedies than with regard to resolution of the parties' substantive dispute regarding liability. (366)

Most authorities also hold that arbitrators possess broad inherent remedial authority. (367) In the words of one Canadian decision:

"the analysis of the powers granted to an arbitrator under an arbitration agreement should also be made through a generous and liberal vision which is more in line with the modern interpretation of conventional arbitration." (368)

P 3071 These views reflect in part judicial deference to the arbitrators' commercial expertise, which is considered peculiarly well-suited to fashioning workable and practical remedies, as well as the discretion accorded to first instance courts in remedial matters in many legal systems. These views also accord with commercial parties' presumptive intentions, being to grant the arbitrators broad powers to fully and ● satisfactorily resolve their dispute in a practical manner. There are occasional anomalous decisions to the contrary, suggesting that arbitrators' remedial authority is inherently narrow and limited, but these are aberrations. (369)

Some authorities recognize the arbitrators' authority to grant remedies not requested expressly by either party (subject to procedural protections against "surprise decisions"). In one court's words:

"judges are not limited to resolving disputes by simply choosing between two options presented by the parties. Rather, we are often required to use our judgment and to craft a different remedy. For example, a party might seek an injunction and provide specific terms to the court. The court, however, may decide to delete, amend, or add terms before issuing an order. Arbitrators generally have broader discretion in ruling on an issue submitted to them, since they are usually relieved of the procedural and substantive strictures placed upon courts by legislative enactments and binding precedent." (370)

Despite this, relief ordered by an arbitrator can potentially be challenged in either annulment or recognition proceedings on the grounds that it exceeds the arbitrator's authority (an "excess of authority"), particularly where a tribunal grants relief fundamentally different from that sought by either party (371) or where a tribunal exercises an authority that the parties' arbitration agreement clearly denies it. (372) Given the presumptive breadth of the arbitrator's remedial powers, such challenges are difficult to sustain: as discussed below, national courts have concluded that most purported "excess of authority" challenges to an arbitrator's remedial orders are nothing more than (groundless) substantive objections to the tribunal's decision on the merits. (373)

As discussed elsewhere, there are limited categories of relief that arbitral tribunals may not be permitted to award, on the grounds that it involves nonarbitrable matters. (374) These categories are, under most national laws and the New York Convention, very limited and exceptional, encompassing only matters such as criminal penalties (e.g., fines, imprisonment), regulatory approvals (e.g., merger approval, securities offerings), declarations of bankruptcy, grants of intellectual property rights and the like. (375)

P 3072 ● [B] Awards of Monetary Damages

Most arbitral awards involve determinations that a specified monetary sum is payable by one party to another. There is no question but that, unless agreed otherwise, arbitrators have the power to make an award of monetary damages. (376) That authority extends to practical aspects and logistics of payment (e.g., timing, means). (377)

Most national laws grant arbitral tribunals the power to denominate an award in any currency for which the parties' contract and/or the governing law provides. (378) Section 48 of the English Arbitration Act, 1996, is specific in this regard, providing that the arbitrators may "order the payment of a sum of money in any currency." (379) Other legal systems can be expected to adopt similar approaches, either by legislative or judicial solutions.

In general, the question of the currency of an award is a question of substantive law, governed by the terms of the parties' contract and the applicable law. (380) A tribunal's application of these authorities should be subject to the same deference in annulment and recognition actions as its other substantive decisions. (381)

[C] Awards of Injunctive and Declaratory Relief

International arbitration conventions and national arbitration statutes are generally silent on the arbitral tribunal's authority to order injunctive or declaratory relief; there are a few exceptions, but these are unusual. (382) Nonetheless, national courts have repeatedly upheld international arbitral awards that order injunctive or declaratory relief if the parties' agreement, or the institutional rules that it incorporates, supply a basis for such authority. (383) Indeed, arbitral institutions report that a substantial percentage of all disputes involve requests for specific performance or declaratory relief. (384)

Even absent an express agreement conferring such powers, courts have routinely upheld grants of injunctive relief, including specific performance of contractual obligations. (385) This conclusion has been reached under the UNCITRAL Model Law, (386) as well as by common law courts (where specific performance is an exception) (387) and civil law courts. (388) International arbitral awards affirm the same remedial power on the part of the arbitrators, both in the commercial (389) and investor-state (390) contexts.

Among other things, national courts have upheld awards that required: (i) a company to stop using its name and to transfer certain patents and other intellectual property rights; (391) (ii) specific performance of a contract to take delivery of coal; (392) (iii) specific performance of a contract to deliver cotton; (393) (iv) drawing on proceeds of a letter of credit; (394) (v) making staged payments of a damages award; (395) (vi) making an interim payment into an escrow account as security for a final award; (396) (vii) fixing prices for disputed products for one year and obtaining the tribunal's approval for future prices; (397) (viii) specific performance to complete a construction project; (398) (ix) ordering the transfer of property (including a business); (399) (x) ordering the reinstatement of corporate officers or other "formative" legal acts; (400) (xi) ordering the grant of a royalty-free license to intellectual property; (401) (xii) ordering an accounting; (402) and (xiii) ordering the extension of contractual time periods. (403) Similarly, awards frequently – even routinely – grant declaratory or injunctive relief. (404)

P 3076 ● It has been suggested that arbitrators should not be permitted to exercise the power to order specific performance, or other forms of injunctive relief, because they lack the authority to supervise compliance with their award. (405) This view has attracted no discernible judicial (or arbitral) support, although there is force to concerns about adequate oversight of long-term remedies.

Rather, the correct analysis is that, absent express language to the contrary, the parties' agreement to arbitrate contemplates that the arbitrators will have the authority to award injunctive and declaratory relief, including orders of specific performance. That authority is recognized as an essential and inherent (406) element of remedial authority in virtually all developed legal systems and materially enhances the efficacy of the arbitral process; absent clear agreement to the contrary, this remedial authority is an element of the parties' agreement to arbitrate and the tribunal's powers. (407) For the same reasons, arbitration agreements are interpreted broadly with respect to the arbitrators' authority to grant injunctive and declaratory relief. (408) (As discussed in detail elsewhere, both the New York Convention and national arbitration legislation require giving effect to the parties' agreements to arbitrate, which extends to agreements concerning the arbitrators' remedial powers. (409))

In some cases, it may be appropriate for an arbitral tribunal that orders some form of continuing injunctive relief to retain jurisdiction over the parties' dispute. Some national courts have held that there is in principle no obstacle to this and that the retention of jurisdiction is not contrary to the functus officio doctrine. (410) In other cases, disputes over compliance with declarative or injunctive relief granted in an award can be resolved in a new arbitration or in judicial enforcement proceedings. In virtually no case, however, is it appropriate for the possibility of difficulties in enforcement, against a party that might refuse to comply with its obligations under the award, to justify withholding otherwise appropriate relief.

P 3077 ● [D] Awards of Punitive, Exemplary, or Statutory Damages (411)

In some legal systems (generally in the common law world), punitive or exemplary damages have long been among the remedies available to a claimant in a civil litigation. In principle, punitive and exemplary damages are also available in international arbitral proceedings, although in practice awards of punitive damages are unusual. (412) Despite the infrequency with which they are awarded, punitive damages claims in international arbitration raise a number of difficult issues.

A leading U.S. authority describes punitive damages as “sums awarded, apart from any compensatory or nominal damages, usually ... because of particularly aggravated misconduct on the part of the defendant.” (413) The availability of punitive or exemplary damages has been well-settled at common law for centuries, (414) and remains a significant feature of tort remedies in many common law systems. (415) Punitive damages

P 3078 are most widely available in the United States, where such relief is awarded in ● commercial and contract cases, (416) as well as in defamation, assault and similar cases of aggravated torts.

Some legal systems have also enacted legislation providing for multiple or statutory damages in particular categories of cases, generally calculated as a multiple of the claimant’s actual damages. Such legislation is, again, most common in the United States, where double or treble damages are available for either violations of statutory protections or deliberate, willful misconduct. (417) Multiple damages are typically provided for by legislation regarding competition, fair trade and similar types of market conduct.

Punitive or exemplary damages have historically been much less common in civil law jurisdictions. The basic principle of civil relief in most such jurisdictions is to compensate the injured party for damage suffered, which is generally held to either implicitly or explicitly preclude punitive or exemplary damages. (418) In some civil law jurisdictions, the unavailability of punitive damages is said to rise to the level of public policy, and courts have refused to recognize and enforce foreign judgments granting punitive damages. (419)

On the other hand, some civil law regimes recognize the concept of “moral damages” which are available, among other things, to victims of personal injury, sexual harassment and violations of civil rights. (420) Moral damages are occasionally sought, particularly in cases involving state or state-related parties. (421) At the same time, there ● are recent indications that some civil law jurisdictions may be revising historic prohibitions and making provision for awards of punitive damages in at least some circumstances. (422)

P 3079

Even in jurisdictions where national courts may award punitive damages, there have been substantial doubts concerning the power of arbitrators to award such relief. In the United States, New York courts historically held, as a matter of New York state law, that arbitrators were precluded by considerations of public policy from awarding punitive damages, which were regarded as exclusively the province of state courts. (423) This rule was reflected, among other things, in a leading New York decision titled Garrity v. Lyle Stuart, Inc. (424)

The Garrity v. Lyle Stuart theory was a variation of the nonarbitrability doctrine, (425) which emphasized that punitive damages were intended to serve principally public, not private, interests:

“An arbitrator has no power to award punitive damages, even if agreed upon by the parties,” because the “freedom of contract does not embrace the freedom to punish, even by contract.” (426)

Other authorities relied on the confidentiality or privacy of most arbitral awards (reducing the deterrent effect of punitive damage awards), the asserted lack of judicial safeguards that would accompany arbitral consideration of punitive damages and the perceived anomaly of “private” arbitrators awarding “public” penalties. (427)

P 3080

These doubts as to the authority of arbitrators to award punitive damages, as a matter of U.S. law, were resolved decisively in favor of the arbitrability of punitive damage claims by the U.S. Supreme Court in Mastrobuono v. Shearson Lehman Hutton, Inc. (428) There, the Court held that the domestic FAA preempted New York’s state law public policy forbidding the arbitrability of punitive damages claims. (429)

The Supreme Court treated New York’s rule that arbitrators could not award punitive damages as an instance of a state law refusal to give effect to an agreement to arbitrate (specifically, an agreement to arbitrate punitive damage claims); according to the Supreme Court, that state law rule was preempted by the FAA’s requirement that arbitration agreements be recognized and enforced in accordance with their terms. (430) The Court also held that the general New York choice-of-law agreement in the parties’ contract did not have the effect of incorporating New York’s public policy against the arbitrability of punitive damage claims into the parties' arbitration agreement, relying on the "federal policy favoring arbitration [and requiring that] ambiguities as to the scope of the arbitration clause itself [must be] resolved in favor of arbitration." (431)

P 3081 Applying Mastrobuono, U.S. lower courts have repeatedly held that particular arbitration agreements (and institutional rules (432)) provide for the arbitration of punitive damages claims. (433) These decisions have not generally addressed the ● treatment of arbitration agreements incorporating institutional rules commonly used in the international commercial context, but the same results should apply. (434) For example, in Fahnestock & Co. v. Waltman, the appellate court held that the general language of the AAA Commercial Rules, which provided that arbitrators may award "any remedy which [is] just and equitable and within the scope of the agreement," evidenced an intention that punitive damages claims would be pursued in the arbitration. (435)

As noted above, punitive damages are arguably contrary to public policy in some civil law jurisdictions, (436) with the possible result that arbitral tribunals seated in those jurisdictions may not validly make awards of punitive damages (including when putatively authorized to do so by applicable substantive law and the arbitration agreement). This was the conclusion of an arbitral tribunal seated in Switzerland, applying New York law pursuant to a New York choice-of-law clause:

"Damages that go beyond compensatory damages to constitute a punishment of the wrongdoer (punitive or exemplary damages) are considered contrary to Swiss public policy, which must be respected by an arbitral tribunal sitting in Switzerland even if the arbitral tribunal must decide a dispute according to a law that may allow punitive or exemplary damages as such." (437)

P 3082 ● Similarly, a number of commentators have suggested that at least some civil law jurisdictions would not recognize arbitral awards of punitive damages, again on public policy grounds. (438)

The better view is that an arbitral tribunal may (and must) give effect to mandatory laws and public policies: (439) that extends to public policies forbidding punitive damages. As discussed above, however, the application of mandatory laws and public policies requires a conflict-of-laws analysis, (440) and not merely automatic application of the public policies of the arbitral seat.

In principle, it is difficult to see why the public policy of the arbitral seat should apply to a transaction having no connection to the place of arbitration: more appropriate is application of the public policy of the jurisdiction most closely connected to the parties' dispute. Where applicable conflicts rules provide for application of a public policy forbidding punitive damages, then an arbitral tribunal should refuse to award such damages. (441)

Similar analysis applies to the recognition of awards of punitive damages. As discussed below, applying Article V(2)(b) of the New York Convention, the courts of a Contracting State may exceptionally deny recognition to an award of punitive damages based on a local public policy; again, however, it is difficult to see why a recognition forum's public policy would by its own terms apply to a transaction having no material connection to the forum. Of course, non-recognition of an award of punitive damages in one state does not imply non-recognition in other states. (442)

[E] Awards Imposing Penalties or Sanctions

Arbitral tribunals sometimes attempt to impose "penalties" on parties to the arbitration, typically as sanctions for noncompliance with interim measures or procedural rulings of the tribunal. For example, if a party is ordered provisionally to provide security, for its counter-party's claims or costs, but refuses to do so, the tribunal may impose monetary sanctions (for example, daily or weekly fines, payable until security is posted). (443)

P 3083 ● As with punitive damages, there is controversy regarding arbitrators' authority to impose penalties. It is sometimes suggested that "private" arbitrators lack the power to impose "public" sanctions, which must be reserved to national courts. (444)

The better view is that this distinction misunderstands the arbitral function – which entails the arbitrators' authority to apply mandatory laws and public policies and to impose "public" sanctions. Provided that the parties' arbitration agreement grants the arbitral tribunal authority to impose penalties, there should be no mandatory prohibition against such authority. That is particularly true with regard to sanctions for noncompliance with a tribunal's procedural rulings or interim measures: there is no reason that arbitrators should not have the authority to ensure compliance with their rulings and the absence of such power would materially detract from the efficacy of the arbitral process.

Consistent with this view, most recent national court authority affirms the general authority of arbitral tribunals to impose penalties on parties to an arbitration. (445) In one U.S. court's words, "the authority to sanction inheres in the comprehensive arbitral authority": "the underlying purposes of arbitration, i.e., efficient and swift resolution of disputes without protracted litigation, could not be achieved but for good faith arbitration by the parties. Consequently, sanctions, including attorney's fees, are appropriately viewed as a remedy within an arbitrator's authority to effect the goals of arbitration." (446) Authorities from civil law jurisdictions also generally uphold arbitrators' authority to impose penalties. (447)

P 3084 Disputes sometimes arise as to whether, assuming that arbitrators may in principle impose penalties, a particular arbitration agreement grants the arbitrators the power to impose penalties or sanctions (or, alternatively, particular types of penalties or ● sanctions). Some courts have required that agreements granting arbitrators authority to impose sanctions must be express or particularly clear. (448) Even where a tribunal may be empowered to order sanctions in principle, it may not be permitted to order particular types or categories of sanctions or penalties. (449)

The better view is that, although it is essential that the parties' arbitration agreement authorize the imposition of penalties, that authority may be, and generally should be, implied. (450) The authority to impose penalties or sanctions contributes materially to an efficient and effective arbitral process and, absent contrary indications, reasonable commercial parties should be assumed to have intended that such authority be available.

[F] Choice of Law Governing Relief

As discussed above, the choice of law governing issues of relief and remedial authority has produced divergent approaches. In many civil law jurisdictions, the law governing issues of remedies and relief is the substantive law governing the parties' dispute. (451) In contrast, in some common law jurisdictions, remedies were historically governed by the law of the forum. (452) Arbitral awards take differing approaches to the subject of the law governing issues of remedies and relief, with the weight of authority applying the law governing the parties' substantive claims. (453)

P 3085 The better view is that issues concerning the arbitral tribunal's authority and jurisdiction are governed by the law of the arbitral seat (or, in the rare cases where a foreign procedural law is chosen, the procedural law of the arbitration (454)), while issues concerning the substantive standards for granting relief and the quantum and character of relief are governed by the substantive law applicable to the parties' underlying claims. This treatment of the law governing the arbitrators' remedial powers is consistent with the treatment of other issues concerning the arbitrators' ● authority (e.g., interim relief (455) and competence-competence (456)). It is also consistent with the treatment of choice-of-law analysis concerning awards of legal costs and interest. (457)

In all of these settings, the tribunal's authority is best regarded as governed by the law of the arbitral seat, because it is that law that has the closest connection to the arbitral process and questions concerning the arbitrators' powers. At the same time, the substantive standards governing relief are most appropriately governed by the law of the underlying dispute, because that law has the closest relationship to the parties' commercial relationship, the liability determination and the remedies for that determination.

In almost all cases, the law of the arbitral seat will generally give effect to the parties' agreement to arbitrate, providing the arbitral tribunal with the authority conferred upon them by the parties. If the law of the arbitral seat contained mandatory limitations on the arbitrators' authority, those restrictions would need to be considered in light of the New York Convention's requirement that Contracting States recognize and enforce all the material terms of the parties' arbitration agreement, including provisions regarding the arbitrators' authority. (458) In the absence of any express or implied agreement by the parties regarding the arbitrators' remedial authority, the law of the arbitral seat is the source of default rules which define the tribunal's powers. (459)

In contrast, the law governing the standards for granting relief and the quantum and character of relief are closely related to the substantive law governing the parties' underlying claims. That is consistent with contemporary choice-of-law rules in most developed jurisdictions (460) and with the weight of arbitral authority. (461) This analysis also ensures that issues of relief are governed by the same law as issues of liability, which are often related.

P 3086 ● § 23.08 AWARDS OF COSTS OF ARBITRATION AND LEGAL REPRESENTATION (462)

International arbitration can be expensive, in large part because of the fees of the parties' legal representatives. (463) As discussed below, international arbitral tribunals generally possess, and exercise, the authority to award the prevailing party in an arbitration the costs of the arbitration, including its legal costs. The standards for making awards of costs of legal representation and related expenses are of corresponding importance.

[A] Awards of Costs of Arbitration Under National Arbitration Legislation

P 3087 National arbitration legislation frequently contains provisions addressing the allocation of costs in the arbitral proceedings. These provisions generally grant the ● arbitrators authority to make an award of the costs of the arbitration, including legal costs, usually without specifying standards governing the exercise of such authority. (464)

As discussed below, virtually all developed legal regimes will give effect to the parties' agreement with regard to awards of legal costs in international arbitration. (465) That is true where the parties agree that the arbitrators shall have the power to make such awards, as well as where they agree to exclude the possibility of such awards. (466) This is simply an application of the broader principle of party autonomy in the context of international arbitration (467) and should raise no questions of enforceability. (One limited exception is England, where parties are precluded from agreeing, prior to the dispute arising, that one party pay "the whole or part of the costs of the arbitration in any event," regardless of the outcome. (468) )

In general, a decision by the arbitral tribunal ordering one party to pay the arbitration costs, including the costs of legal representation, is an "award" within the meaning of the New York Convention and national arbitration legislation, including the UNCITRAL Model Law. That is because the arbitrators' decision finally resolves a claim by one party against the other (specifically, that one party is entitled to repayment by the other party of amounts spent during the arbitration). This decision falls squarely within the definition of an "award," and "Awards on Costs" are routinely and properly treated as "awards" for purposes of annulment, recognition and enforcement. (469)

- P 3088 ● In contrast, a decision by an arbitral tribunal that the parties are jointly liable to the members of the tribunal for payment of its fees and expenses has been held not to constitute an "award," on the theory that it does not resolve claims between the parties and instead resolves a claim by the arbitrator(s) against the parties. (470) The same result has been reached with regard to an arbitral tribunal's decision regarding the amount of its own fees. (471)

[1] Costs of Legal Representation Under UNCITRAL Model Law

The UNCITRAL Model Law does not expressly address the question of the costs of legal representation. There were proposals during the drafting of the Model Law for a provision that would have authorized the arbitrators to request a deposit from the parties for the tribunal's fees and expenses, and to fix the amount of such fees and expenses. (472) Even these relatively limited proposals were not pursued, and the Model Law's final text, and the 2006 Revisions, are silent on the entire subject of the allocation of the costs of the arbitration.

Nonetheless, there is no question but that, absent contrary agreement, the Model Law permits arbitrators to make awards of the costs of the arbitration and legal costs. (473) A number of states that have adopted the Model Law have added provisions regarding awards of the costs of arbitration. (474)

- P 3089 ● [2] Costs of Arbitration Under English Arbitration Act

In England, the Arbitration Act, 1996, provides the tribunal with authority to award legal costs, (475) as well as (relatively unusual) standards for exercising such authority. (476) Specifically, §61(2) of the Act provides that, absent contrary agreement, "the tribunal shall award costs on the general principle that costs should follow the event except where it appears to the tribunal that in the circumstances this is not appropriate in relation to the whole or part of the costs." (477)

Unusually for national law on the subject, this provision is binding on arbitral tribunals seated in England (absent contrary agreement). (478) Arbitral tribunals are nonetheless able to vary the general principle that costs follow the event dependent on the facts of each arbitration and the conduct of the parties. (479)

[3] Costs of Arbitration Under Other National Arbitration Legislation

- Many arbitration statutes, including those in the United States, France and Switzerland, are silent on the topic of awards of legal costs in international arbitration. It is clear, however, that arbitral tribunals seated in most such jurisdictions – for example, France (480) and Switzerland (481) – are fully authorized to make awards of legal costs. (482) This ● reflects a general principle that, absent contrary indication in the parties' agreement, international arbitrators should be presumed to have the authority to make an award of the costs of legal representation as part of their overall remedial powers. It is also clear that the tribunal in an international arbitration need not apply local rules regarding awards of legal costs in domestic litigation. (483)

[4] Costs of Arbitration Under U.S. Federal Arbitration Act

Like the Model Law, the FAA is silent regarding the costs of the arbitration and the parties' legal representation. In contrast to most other jurisdictions, a number of U.S. courts have held that arbitrators lack the power in an arbitration seated in the United States under the FAA to award legal fees incurred in the arbitration unless the parties have expressly conferred this authority on the tribunal. (484) These decisions, rendered principally in domestic U.S. arbitrations, reflect the "American Rule" against fee-shifting in U.S. civil litigations. (485)

In contrast, and more recently, a number of U.S. courts have taken a broader view and

P 3091 concluded that arbitrators have implied authority to award attorneys' fees. (486) U.S. courts have reached this result even in states where local law provides that arbitrators ● have the authority to allocate responsibility for the arbitrators' fees, but not to award attorneys' fees. (487)

In international arbitrations seated in the United States, any relevant provisions of institutional arbitration rules or the parties' arbitration agreement should, and will, be given full effect. The "American rule" regarding costs of legal representation clearly does not rise to the level of U.S. public policy, so as to forbid a tribunal's exercise of its authority under the parties' arbitration agreement or applicable institutional rules to award legal costs. (488) Rather, the presumptive rule in international arbitrations seated in the United States should be that, absent contrary agreement, the tribunal will have the authority to award the costs of legal representation.

Moreover, the "American Rule" should generally have little influence on the standards adopted by international arbitral tribunals seated in the United States for awarding legal costs. That is particularly true under the UNCITRAL Rules and LCIA Rules, which provide generally for awards of at least some legal costs to the prevailing party. (489)

Even where institutional rules provide no express standards for awarding legal costs (as under the ICC Rules), the "American Rule" should have little effect on the relevant standards for awarding costs in an international arbitration. That is because the rule is designed specifically for domestic U.S. litigation, not international arbitration between commercial parties, where different expectations and considerations apply.

Even where the parties have agreed that their underlying contract or other commercial relations are governed by the substantive law of a U.S. state, whose domestic law includes the "American rule," an arbitral tribunal seated in the United States (or elsewhere) should not be bound by the American rule, and particularly not as a matter of jurisdiction or authority. Again, the American rule is meant specifically for domestic litigation and is not encompassed in general choice-of-law clauses, which should be interpreted to address the parties' underlying contract and commercial dealings. Nonetheless, although this is the better view, there is some contrary U.S. lower court authority. (490)

There is recent U.S. judicial authority holding that, notwithstanding provisions in an arbitration agreement generally excluding awards of costs for legal representation, ● P 3092 arbitrators have inherent authority to make such awards in cases of bad faith during the arbitral proceedings. (491) This analysis is well-reasoned: absent clear language to the contrary, arbitrators should be presumed to have been granted the authority to award costs and other appropriate sanctions for bad faith conduct during or associated with the arbitral process. However, where the parties have clearly and unequivocally excluded such authority, it is difficult under either the New York Convention or national arbitration legislation to justify overriding their agreement to authorize costs awards.

A U.S. court should also recognize and enforce foreign arbitral awards of legal costs, notwithstanding the "American rule." (492) As already noted, the "American rule" is not a principle of public policy, and therefore does not require or permit a U.S. court to deny recognition to a foreign costs award. If the arbitration agreement and the law applicable in the arbitration permit an award of the costs of legal representation, no excess of authority argument can be sustained; even if applicable law does not provide for costs to be awarded, a tribunal's award of costs should generally be considered a substantive error, not an excess of authority or jurisdiction. (493)

The costs of legal representation can also be awarded by U.S. courts with respect to costs incurred in actions to vacate or enforce arbitral awards. The general rule under the FAA appears to be that refusals to pay an award must be in bad faith before attorneys' fees ● P 3093 for confirmation or vacatur proceedings are awardable. (494) Provisions in an arbitration agreement regarding the costs of legal representation are generally not applicable to fees incurred in subsequent enforcement litigation, although this is an issue of interpretation. (495)

[B] Awards of Costs of Arbitration Under Institutional Rules

Most institutional rules expressly grant arbitral tribunals the power to award the costs of legal representation. (496) In addition, arbitration agreements sometimes specifically address the issue of the costs of legal representation. (497) Virtually all modern arbitration legislation gives effect to the provisions of institutional rules and the parties' arbitration agreement concerning the tribunal's power to make an award of legal costs and the amount of such award. (498)

The 2010 UNCITRAL Rules provide the arbitral tribunal with the authority, and duty, to "fix the costs of arbitration" in its award. (499) The costs of arbitration are defined to include the "legal and other costs incurred by the parties in relation to the arbitration," but only "to the extent that the tribunal determines that the amount of such costs is reasonable." (500) The UNCITRAL Rules also provide that "the costs of the arbitration shall in principle be borne by the unsuccessful party or parties," (501) except that, in fixing the costs of legal representation, "the arbitral tribunal may apportion each of such costs between the parties if it determines that apportionment is reasonable, taking into account the circumstances of the case.” (502) These provisions grant arbitrators broad discretion with regard to awards of legal costs, starting from the principle that the prevailing party will be entitled to its costs. (503)

P 3094 ● The 2012 ICC Rules provide that the final award “shall fix the costs of the arbitration and decide which of the parties shall bear them or in what proportion they shall be borne by the parties.” (504) The “costs of the arbitration” are defined to include the “reasonable legal and other costs incurred by the parties for the arbitration.” (505)

Unlike the UNCITRAL Rules, the 1998 ICC Rules did not further prescribe standards for awarding legal costs, (506) leaving this to the tribunal’s discretion and any relevant rules of national (or other) law. The 2012 ICC Rules provide somewhat more guidance, providing that, “[i]n making decisions as to costs, the arbitral tribunal may take into account such circumstances as it considers relevant, including the extent to which each party has conducted the arbitration in an expeditious and cost-effective manner.” (507) Under the ICC Rules, the arbitrators’ fees and expenses are fixed by the ICC Court (rather than the arbitrators), while the allocation of such fees and expenses between the parties is made by the arbitrators. (508)

The LCIA Rules provide for the arbitral tribunal to “determine the proportions in which the parties shall bear all or part of the arbitration costs” (509) (as fixed by the LCIA Court), as well as to “order in its award that all or part of the legal or other costs incurred by a party be paid by another party.” (510) The LCIA Rules prescribe a general standard that, absent contrary agreement, the tribunal shall “make its orders on both arbitration and legal costs on the general principle that costs should reflect the parties’ relative success and failure in the award or arbitration, except where it appears to [the tribunal] that in the particular circumstances this general approach is inappropriate.” (511) The LCIA Rules reflect the general English approach towards legal costs (e.g., the prevailing party is presumptively entitled to its costs (512)), while authorizing the tribunal to adopt a different standard if appropriate in particular circumstances.

The overriding theme of these, and other, (513) institutional rules is to grant the arbitral tribunal broad powers to award legal costs, according to standards established by the arbitrators; the exercise of these powers is left largely to the arbitrators, with general references to the degree of a party’s success on its claims and the ● reasonableness of a party’s legal expenses. (514) All leading institutional rules also expressly confirm the arbitrators’ authority to “apportion” legal costs, allowing awards of less than 100% of a party’s reasonable costs. (515)

Even where applicable institutional rules do not expressly grant the arbitral tribunal power to award legal costs, the parties’ arbitration agreement should be interpreted to impliedly grant such authority. (516) That follows from the overwhelming weight of authority in developed jurisdictions, (517) and from the basic principle that a commercial party’s right to compensation for wrongful damage in a business dispute must include the costs of righting that damage. (518) An implied agreement granting the arbitrators power to award the costs of the arbitration, including legal costs, is a natural and inherent aspect of the tribunal’s authority (absent contrary agreement).

[C] Awards of Costs of Arbitration in International Arbitral Practice

As a practical matter, arbitrators in international cases routinely award the costs of legal representation, usually without discussing questions of applicable law or detailed substantive analysis. Most arbitral awards either rely exclusively on grants of discretion (or other standards) pursuant to applicable institutional rules, (519) or simply award a ● “reasonable” or “appropriate” amount. (520) Given this general lack of analysis, some ● commentators have concluded that “[t]he awarding of arbitration costs and attorney’s fees in international arbitrations is often arbitrary and unpredictable.” (521)

Where the parties’ agreement addresses the subject of legal costs, tribunals will virtually always purport to give effect to its terms. (522) More frequently, however, the parties will not have addressed the subject of legal costs, or will have simply granted the tribunal discretion to make an award of legal costs.

In exercising their discretion, international arbitral tribunals have often made some award of the costs of legal representation to the “prevailing party.” (523) In doing so, arbitrators generally take into account the extent to which that party recovered what it initially claimed, the extent to which each party’s position was substantively reasonable, the extent to which a party’s conduct needlessly complicated the proceedings, and similar factors. (524) In the words of one award:

P 3097 ● “The [1998 ICC] Rules do not contain any rules or criteria for the decision that the Tribunal must take [regarding costs]. The decision is left to the discretion of the arbitrator. Nevertheless, the results of the arbitration play a predominant role in the exercise of this discretion by the arbitrator. A party who loses his case is, in principle, ordered to pay the costs of the arbitration. However, other criteria can be taken into account, and notably the manner in which the case was conducted and the costs caused by reckless or abusive requests or delaying tactics.” (525)

In general, arbitral tribunals do not require, and prefer for the parties not to present, detailed documentary or other evidence about their respective costs. Although tribunals may demand more extensive evidence, summary statements of the costs billed by and paid to legal representatives are ordinarily sufficient. (526)

Despite the tendency of tribunals to award at least a measure of legal costs to the prevailing party, some authorities question the existence of any “costs follow the event” or “loser pays” rule. (527) As one very experienced practitioner explains:

- P 3098 ● “Arbitrators may consider it too draconian to impose the burden of an opponent’s attorney fees on a losing party, and thereby create a system that could chill the assertion of claims unreasonably, without evidence of additional culpability in a particular case. Some claims are deservedly brought, even if they are largely unsuccessful for sound factual or legal reasons that emerge after an airing by adversarial process.” (528)

Despite these views, a study of ICC awards made between 1989 and 1991 reports that where claimants were largely successful, they were awarded a substantial portion of the arbitration costs in most cases (i.e., in 39 of 48 cases) and a substantial portion of their legal costs in about half of all cases (i.e., in 24 of 38 cases). (529) Where claimants were partially successful, or where both parties obtained relief, the arbitrators typically ordered the parties to bear their own legal costs and shares of the arbitration costs; (530) in some cases, however, claimants were awarded a proportion of their legal costs relative to the extent of their success vis-à-vis their claims. (531) Finally, in ICC cases where claimants obtained substantially less than half of the amounts claimed, or where the respondent recovered larger amounts than the claimant, tribunals generally have either left the arbitration and legal costs with the party that incurred them or ordered the unsuccessful claimant to pay some or all of the respondents’ costs. (532)

- P 3099 Where one of the parties was uncooperative or inefficient, it was less likely to recover its costs (or its full costs); (533) in some cases, a party that has adopted unnecessary ● litigation tactics has been held liable for costs. (534) On the other hand, where there was a good faith basis for the parties’ differing positions, ICC tribunals were more likely to leave the parties to bear their own costs. (535)

Awards of legal fees and costs may be different in specialized settings where particular expectations or considerations exist. For example, a study of investment arbitrations between 1990 and 2006 concluded that only 13 of 54 final awards required one party to contribute to a counter-party’s legal fees and costs. (536) It is unclear what justifies this approach, although it appears to be reflected in the weight of investment arbitration authority to date.

Some practitioners have proposed more principled and systematic approaches to the award of legal costs in international arbitration. One approach proposes a “loser pays” principle, adjusted to take account of numerous considerations, including efficiency of proceedings, difficulty of issues and the like. (537) Other approaches have suggested focusing only on degree of success and efficiency of proceedings, with the motto, “keep it simple.” (538) These proposals have substantial merit; it is unsatisfactory that awards of legal costs, which can entail millions or tens of millions of dollars or Euro in some cases, be unpredictable and based purely on discretion. (539) Even if the precise terms of these proposals are not adopted, the underlying concept of a more reasoned, principled approach to costs decisions is clearly to be favored.

[D] Choice of Law Governing Costs of Legal Representation

- P 3100 A potentially significant issue relating to awards of legal costs in international arbitration is the choice of the law governing the tribunal’s power to make a costs award and the standards governing the award of costs. There is little question that the arbitrators’ power ● to make a costs award is governed by the procedural law of the arbitration (typically, that of the seat of the arbitration). That is consistent with the treatment of the arbitrators’ power to order provisional measures, (540) disclosure (541) and other forms of relief, (542) and no other national legal system is a plausible candidate to govern this issue. (If a national law refused to give effect to the parties’ agreement granting the arbitrators power to award the costs of the arbitration, this would, for reasons discussed elsewhere, likely be inconsistent with Articles II and V(1)(d) of the New York Convention. (543) )

The law governing the substantive standards for awards of legal costs is not necessarily the same as that governing the tribunal’s authority to make a costs award. (544) In particular, a serious argument can be made that the substantive law governing the parties’ underlying contract (or dispute) should provide the standard for awards of legal costs. (545) This body of law arguably has the closest connection to the parties’ presentation of their respective claims, and could therefore appropriately be applied to determine their rights to reimbursement of the costs of such presentation; that would be particularly true where the parties had contractually selected the law governing their agreement. (546)

- P 3101 Despite this, the better view is that the standards governing awards of legal costs should be international standards, developed in light of the particular nature and ● needs of international arbitration. (547) That is because domestic rules regarding legal costs are designed with domestic litigation systems and legal professions in mind; these rules have little direct relevance to the international arbitral process, involving sui generis procedures, specialized objectives and lawyers from different jurisdictions. Rather, arbitral tribunals should develop international standards, appropriate to the commercial arbitration context, to ensure that parties are fully compensated for all reasonable costs of successfully vindicating their rights and that efficient, cooperative conduct in the dispute resolution process is rewarded.

These objectives are largely reflected in leading institutional rules and arbitral authority applying these rules. In particular, as discussed below, these rules generally specify sui generis standards, without reference to national law. (548) These standards typically provide that (a) the prevailing party is presumptively entitled to a costs award; (b) only reasonable costs will be reimbursed; and (c) expenses that were inefficient or unnecessary will not be reimbursed, while costs resulting from the need to respond to unreasonable or uncooperative actions will be recoverable. (549) The application of these standards is discussed below.

[E] Costs of Legal Representation in Proceedings Resulting in Negative Jurisdictional Awards

The award of costs by an arbitral tribunal in or following an award denying jurisdiction over the claimant's claims presents conceptual challenges. (550) In such cases, the tribunal has determined that it lacks jurisdiction, thereby ruling for the respondent and rejecting the claimant's claims. (551) Ordinarily, under the general rule that the prevailing party is entitled to its legal costs, (552) the respondent would have the right to obtain an award of the reasonable expenses it incurred in procuring the negative jurisdictional award.

Nonetheless, it is sometimes argued that the tribunal's determination that it lacked jurisdiction disables it from making an award of costs in favor of either party. If the tribunal holds that there was no valid arbitration agreement between the parties, (553) P 3102 ● then there is uncertainty as to what empowers the tribunal to make an award that one party pay the other party's legal costs.

In some instances, the parties may have expressly accepted the tribunal's authority to make a jurisdictional determination (for example, by signing ICC Terms of Reference without reservation); in these cases, there should be no dispute regarding the arbitral tribunal's power to make an award of costs. (554) Even in other instances, however, there should be no true difficulty in ordering costs against an unsuccessful claimant. The claimant's submission of the parties' jurisdictional dispute to the arbitral tribunal constitutes a submission by the claimant to the tribunal's competence-competence to rule on its own jurisdiction and an incident of this competence-competence is the power to make a costs award in favor of the prevailing party. That makes both analytical and practical sense, and is the approach generally adopted in international arbitration practice. (555)

§ 23.09 AWARDS OF INTEREST (556)

Under most national laws, interest on sums awarded as damages may be recovered in civil actions. (557) The same is generally true in international arbitration, where interest is routinely requested and recovered.

P 3103 ● The availability and rate of interest in an international arbitration can have substantial practical importance. Major arbitrations can take a number of years to resolve, involving disputes arising some years earlier. With market rates of interest accruing, the ultimate interest award can exceed the principal amount in dispute. In one celebrated arbitration during the 1980s, the principal award was $83 million, to which $96 million in interest (in 1980s dollars) was added. (558)

[A] Awards of Interest Under National Arbitration Legislation

Many arbitration statutes are silent on the subject of awards of interest by arbitral tribunals. The UNCITRAL Model Law contains no provisions regarding interest, nor do the FAA, Swiss Law on Private International Law, or French Code of Civil Procedure.

A number of states that have adopted the Model Law have modified the statute, to include an express authorization for the arbitrators to award interest, but typically without specifying any standards governing such awards. The typical formulation in such legislation is "[u]nless otherwise agreed by the parties, the arbitral tribunal may award interest." (559) Some statutes address pre-award interest and post-award interest separately. (560)

Even in the absence of express statutory authority, there should be no doubt concerning the authority of an arbitral tribunal to award interest. (561) The authority to award interest is an inherent element of a tribunal's adjudicatory authority and is implicitly contained within the terms of agreements to arbitrate, at least absent contrary indication by the parties.

P 3104 Institutional rules do not ordinarily address the subject of interest, including the UNCITRAL and ICC Rules. One exception involves the LCIA Rules which provide ● that the tribunal may award compound interest. (562) Again, even absent express authorization in institutional rules, the parties' implied agreement ordinarily includes the power to award interest.

Interest is potentially awardable by an international arbitral tribunal on a variety of legal grounds. Applicable substantive law may permit the award of interest as an element of compensatory damages. (563) Alternatively, statutory provisions of national law concerning pre-judgment or post-judgment interest, typically designed for application in litigations in the arbitral seat, may be deemed applicable by an arbitral tribunal.

Most national legal systems have enacted statutory provisions regulating awards of interest in domestic litigations. These provisions typically establish statutory interest rates that are payable, either on "pre-judgment" liabilities or "post-judgment" awards of monetary damages. (564) These provisions are generally not, by their terms, applicable in international arbitral awards, although tribunals sometimes either apply them or look to them by analogy. (565) (As discussed below, statutory interest provisions may be applicable to judgments confirming arbitral awards, in which case they may have direct application to interest in connection with international arbitral awards. (566) )

The parties' arbitration agreement must, of course, encompass interest claims in order for the arbitrators to be able to make a valid award of interest. In virtually all cases, an arbitration agreement applicable to an underlying claim will be interpreted to encompass claims for interest in connection with that claim. The conclusion is almost always (correctly) assumed without discussion.

[B] Choice of Law Governing Awards of Interest

Requests for an award of interest raise choice-of-law issues. (567) In particular, as in other contexts, questions arise as to the tribunal's authority to award interest and the standards governing the exercise of such authority.

P 3105 As to the tribunal's authority or power to award interest, there is a substantial argument for applying the law governing the arbitration agreement, on the rationale ● that the arbitrators' authority derives from the agreement to arbitrate. (568) An alternative approach would be to apply the law of the arbitral seat – on the theory that most questions regarding the arbitrators' authority are governed by the law of the seat, including competence-competence, authority to grant provisional measures and authority to order disclosure. (569)

Although there is room for debate, the better view appears to be that, absent contrary agreement, questions concerning the arbitrators' authority to award interest are better regarded as subject to the law of the arbitral seat. It is that law which is generally regarded as having the closest connection to questions of the tribunal's powers and which should ordinarily be applicable to questions regarding the arbitrators' authority. (570)

It is correct that most questions regarding the arbitrators' authority to award interest will be resolved by reference to the parties' arbitration agreement, and the authority granted by that agreement to the tribunal. Nonetheless, given the general role of the arbitral seat in defining the tribunal's authority, the provisions of the parties' arbitration agreement dealing with the authority to award interest should be interpreted under the law of the arbitral seat. (571)

In almost all cases, the law of the arbitral seat will give full effect to the parties' agreement regarding the arbitrators' authority, including to award interest. Despite this, some national laws may contain mandatory prohibitions against interest awards (by either courts or arbitrators), (572) or mandatory rules concerning the availability or rate of any interest awards. (573) These sorts of prohibitions are arguably inconsistent with the New York Convention's requirement that Contracting States recognize and enforce the material provisions of agreements to arbitrate, including provisions concerning the arbitral tribunal's authority. (574)

P 3106 As to the standards governing awards of interest, several possibilities exist for the law governing a party's right to interest: (a) the substantive law governing the parties' ● underlying dispute; (b) the law of the arbitral seat (or, if different, the procedural law of the arbitration); (c) the law of the currency in which an award is sought; or (d) an "international" standard. (575) There is no consensus as to which of these options is preferred: "international tribunals ... furnish precedents for almost any decision one might wish to make in regard to interest." (576)

In many civil law jurisdictions, rules concerning interest are regarded as "substantive" for conflict-of-law purposes. (577) In other jurisdictions, including the United States, (578) rules governing interest may be deemed "procedural" or are governed by the law of the arbitral seat. The interplay between differing national laws dealing with interest, as well as national characterizations of interest rules and national choice-of-law rules, can be metaphysical in their theoretical complexity.

Notwithstanding these potential by-ways, arbitrators have in practice generally looked to the substantive law governing the parties' underlying claims for standards regarding interest. (579) At the same time, other approaches also exist, including application of a "reasonable" rate based on international practice, (580) the law of the arbitral seat (581) and the law of the jurisdiction in whose currency payment is due (i.e., if the payment obligation is in U.S. dollars, U.S. law should apply). (582)

Application of the arbitral seat's law is especially likely where that law contains mandatory prohibitions or requirements concerning interest. (583) Conversely, if the applicable substantive law governing the parties' contract forbids awards of interest, arbitrators also have often not awarded it. (584)

The better view is to apply, as discussed above, the law of the arbitral seat to the question of the arbitrators' authority to award interest, and not the law of the contract. (585) The better view is also, absent contrary agreement, to apply the law of the currency in which any award is made to determine the substantive standards, including the applicable interest rates, for any award of interest; this approach is particularly true where a tribunal applies a statutory interest rate (which is often fixed by reference to the currency in question (and the rate of inflation of that currency)). Whatever law is applied, however, it is essential to take into account the fact that statutory interest rates are almost always linked to a particular currency (that of the state whose law specifies the interest rate), and that it generally makes no sense to apply that interest rate to other currencies.

P 3108 ● In some jurisdictions, the confirmation of an award has the effect of merging the award into the local court judgment, with the consequence that local statutory interest rates applicable to local judgments may become applicable. (586) In these jurisdictions, "the law governing interest for the post-judgment period will most likely be the law of the enforcement jurisdiction." (587)

In the United States, for example, the confirmation of an award (foreign or domestic) will merge the award into the U.S. judgment, making the applicable U.S. statutory rate for judgments applicable. (588) Parties are able, by express agreement, to provide for alternative interest rates, but U.S. courts have been demanding in requiring clear agreement upon a different rate than the statutory rate generally-applicable to judgments. (589)

[C] Awards of Interest by International Arbitral Tribunals

In practice, international arbitral tribunals are generally inclined to grant interest and, less clearly, to do so at a rate approximating market rates of interest during the period in question for the relevant currency. (590) They do so, at the end of the day, because interest often represents an essential element of the damage suffered by the aggrieved party. As an early judicial decision held:

P 3109 "It is a dictate of natural justice, and the law of every civilized country, that a man is bound in equity, not only to perform his engagements, but also to repair all the damages that accrue naturally from their breach. ... Every one who contracts to pay money on a certain day knows that, if he fails to fulfill his contract, he must pay the established rate of interest as damages for his non-performance. Hence it may correctly be said that such is the implied contract of the parties." (591)

There is controversy whether simple interest or compound interest should be awarded by arbitral tribunals. Some national arbitration legislation specifically authorizes awards of compound interest. (592) Nonetheless, there is authority for the proposition that only simple interest should ordinarily be available. (593) The better view is that, in order to fully compensate a successful party for its loss, compound interest should ordinarily be permitted. Typically, the commercial loss suffered by a business will be compound interest, reflecting the fact that most businesses would be in a position to earn compound interest or to otherwise realize compound return on their investments.

International arbitral tribunals often award interest for both the period prior to their award and for periods after the award but prior to payment. A few older awards concluded that the tribunal lacked the power to grant post-award interest, on the theory that it was then functus officio. (594) The more general practice, however, is to award interest until the date of payment of the award or, less commonly, the date of a judgment confirming the award. (595) As noted above, in some jurisdictions, national law may prescribe a different (statutory) rate of interest for post-judgment interest than for pre-award or pre-judgment interest. (596)

[D] Enforcement of Awards of Interest in National Courts

P 3110 In general, national courts will enforce arbitrators' interest awards, even where the award is made under foreign law, and regardless whether the applicable rates exceed those under national law. (597) Awards of interest are subject to public policy prohibitions against "penal" or "usurious" interest, as well as to other generally-applicable grounds for challenging arbitral awards, but these ordinarily do not result in non-enforcement of awards of interest. (598) Arbitral decisions refusing to award interest will also generally be upheld, as with the arbitrators' general authority to resolve the parties' substantive dispute, even if applicable law generally requires awards of interest by local courts. (599) National courts have also upheld awards of interest even where the parties' contract and submissions did not specifically request it. (600)

[E] Awards of Interest in Connection With International Arbitrations by National Courts

National courts may themselves sometimes award additional interest, both for the post-award/pre-judgment period, the post-judgment period, and (less clearly) the pre-award period. In general, national courts have applied their own law, rather than the law of the seat of the arbitration or another national law, to determine the entitlement to interest on a foreign award. (601)

P 3111 ● Most national courts have rejected requests that they grant pre-award interest that the arbitrators have refused to award. (602) These decisions correctly conclude that a request for an award of interest generally falls within the scope of the parties' arbitration agreement and therefore may not be pursued in a national court. In contrast, one U.S. decision has granted pre-award interest, albeit in unusual circumstances where the tribunal arguably invited a judicial interest award. (603)

As described above, arbitrators sometimes render awards that establish an interest rate that applies until payment of the award, which can include post-judgment, as well as post-award/pre-judgment, interest. National courts have generally enforced such awards as to the post-award/pre-judgment interest provisions. (604)

As to post-judgment interest, some courts have refused to enforce awards of post-judgment interest by arbitrators, holding instead that post-judgment interest is provided for by statutory provisions in the enforcement forum; these decisions have sometimes ordered payment of interest for the post-judgment period at the statutory interest rate. P 3112 (605) Some authorities have declared broadly that, "under US law an ● arbitrator will not be recognised as having authority to award interest for the post-judgment period." (606) Where the parties' contract provides for a post-judgment interest rate, however, it is doubtful that this generalization should be accepted; in that case, the arbitrators' jurisdiction should ordinarily extend to interpretation and application of the parties' agreement, including for post-judgment periods. (607)

Post-award/pre-judgment interest has been awarded by some national courts when tribunals have not addressed the issue. (608) Similarly, some courts have ordered post-judgment interest when the arbitral tribunal has not done so. (609) ●

P 3112

References

- 1) For commentary, see Arroyo, *Dealing With Dissenting Opinions in the Award: Some Options for the Tribunal*, 26 ASA Bull. 437 \(2008\); Bingham, *Reasons and Reasons for Reasons*, 4 Arb. Int'l 141 (1988); Brower & Rosenberg, *The Death of the Two-Headed Nightingale: Why the Paulsson-van den Berg Presumption That Party-Appointed Arbitrators Are Untrustworthy Is Wrongheaded*, 29 Arb. Int'l 7 (2013); Carbonneau, *Rendering Arbitral Awards With Reasons: The Elaboration of A Common Law of International Transactions*, 23 Colum. J. Transnat'l L. 579 (1984-1985); Chiu, *Final, Interim, Interlocutory or Partial Award: Misnomers Apt to Mislead*, 13 Sing. Acad. L.J. 461 (2001); Cole, *Authority and International Arbitration*, 70 La. L. Rev. 801 (2010); Cuniberti, *The Law Governing the Modality of Arbitral Awards*, 25 Arb. Int'l 347 (2009); Delvolvé, *Essai sur la Motivation des Sentences Arbitrales*, 1989 Rev. arb. 149; Dunaud & Kostytska, *Declaratory Relief in International Arbitration*, 29 J. Int'l Arb. 1 (2012); E. Gaillard & J. Savage \(eds.\), *Fouchard Gaillard Goldman on International Commercial Arbitration* ¶¶1389-1412 (1999); Gaitis, *International and Domestic Arbitration Procedure: The Need for A Rule Providing A Limited Opportunity for Arbitral Reconsideration of Reasoned Awards*, 15 Am. Rev. Int'l Arb. 1 (2004); Grabundzija, *Partial Arbitral Awards in International Commercial Arbitration*, 8(2) Transnat'l Disp. Mgt (2011); Hunter, *Final Report on Interim and Partial Awards*, 1(2) ICC Ct. Bull. 26 (1990); ICC, *Final Report on Dissenting and Separate Opinion of the ICC Commission on International Arbitration*, 2(1) ICC Ct. Bull. 32 (1991); Jarvin, *Non-Pecuniary Remedies: The Practices of Declaratory Relief and Specific Performance in International Commercial Arbitration*, in A. Rovine (ed.), Contemporary Issues in International Arbitration and Mediation: The Fordham Papers 2006 167 (2007); Knoepfler & Schweizer, *Making of Awards and Termination of Proceedings*, in P. Sarcevic (ed.), Essays on International Commercial Arbitration 160 (1989); Lévy, *Dissenting Opinions in International Arbitration in Switzerland*, 5 Arb. Int'l 35 (1989); L. Lévy & F. De Ly \(eds.\), *Interest, Auxiliary and Alternative Remedies in International Arbitration* (2008); Malinvaud, *Non-Pecuniary Remedies in Investment Treaty and Commercial Arbitration*, in A. van den Berg (ed.), 50 Years of the New York Convention 209 (ICCA Congress Series No. 14 2009); Mosk & Ginsburg, *Dissenting Opinions in International Arbitration*, 15(4) Mealey's Int'l Arb. Rep. 26 (2000); Mourre, *Judicial Penalties and Specific Performance in International Arbitration*, in L. Lévy & F. De Ly (eds.), Interest, Auxiliary and Alternative Remedies in International Arbitration 53-73 (2008); Petsche, *Punitive Damages in International Commercial Arbitration: Much Ado About Nothing?*, 29 Arb. Int'l 89 (2013); Redfern, *Dissenting Opinions in International Commercial Arbitration: The Good, the Bad and the Ugly*, 20 Arb. Int'l 223 (2004); Rees & Rohn, *Dissenting Opinions: Can They Fulfil A Beneficial Role?*, 25 Arb. Int'l 329 (2009); Reichert & Murphy, *Enforceability of Foreign Arbitral Decisions*, 67 Arb. 369 (2001); M. Schneider & J. Knoll \(eds.\), *Performance as A Remedy: Non-Monetary Relief in International Arbitration* (ASA Spec. Series No. 30 2011); Schreuer, *Non-Pecuniary Remedies in ICSID Arbitration*, 20 Arb. Int'l 325 (2004); Schwebel, *May the Majority Vote of An International Arbitral Tribunal Be Impeached?*, 13 Arb. Int'l 145 (1997); Shore & Figueroa, *Dissents, Concurrences and A Necessary Divide Between Investment and Commercial Arbitration*, Global Arbitration Review (1 December 2008); Smit, *Judgments and Arbitral Awards in A Foreign Currency: A Means of Dealing With Currency Fluctuations in International Adjudication*, 7 Am. Rev. Int'l Arb. 21 (1996); Trittman, *When Should Arbitrators Issue Interim or Partial Awards and/or Procedural Orders?*, 20 J. Int'l Arb. 225 (2003); van den Berg, *Dissenting Opinions by Party-Appointed Arbitrators in Investment Arbitration*, in M. Arsanjani et al. (eds.), Looking to the Future: Essays on International Law in Honor of W. Michael Reisman 821 (2010); van Houtte, *The Delivery of Awards to the Parties*, 21 Arb. Int'l 177 (2005); Werner, *Dissenting Opinions – Beyond Fears*, 9(4) J. Int'l Arb. 23 (1992); Wong, *The Misapprehension of Moral Damages in Investor-State Arbitration*, in A. Rovine (ed.), Contemporary Issues in International Arbitration and Mediation: The Fordham Papers 2012 (2013).
- 2) See Chapters 25-27.
- 3) For commentary, see Hunter, *Final Report on Interim and Partial Awards*, 1(2) ICC Ct. Bull. 26 (1990); Knoepfler & Schweizer, *Making of Awards and Termination of Proceedings*, in P. Sarcevic (ed.), Essays on International Commercial Arbitration 160 (1989); Trittman, *When Should Arbitrators Issue Interim or Partial Awards and/or Procedural Orders?*, 20 J. Int'l Arb. 225 (2003).
- 4) As discussed above, arbitral “awards” must be distinguished from other categories of arbitral decisions, including “orders” or “directions.” See [§22.02\[B\]\[3\]\[d\]](#). Similarly, as also discussed above, “arbitral” awards must be distinguished from the results of other dispute resolution processes, including mediation, expert determination and conciliation. See [§22.02\[B\]](#).
- 5) See D. Caron & L. Caplan, The UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules: A Commentary 734 (2d ed. 2013) (“as the travaux préparatoires indicate, the terms ‘interim award,’ ‘interlocutory award,’ and ‘partial award,’ were meant to be used broadly and even interchangeably”); Gaitis, *International and Domestic Arbitration Procedure: The Need for A Rule Providing A Limited Opportunity for Arbitral Reconsideration of Reasoned Awards*, 15 Am. Rev. Int'l Arb. 1, 65-66 (2004).
- 6) See [§§22.02\[B\]\[3\]\[c\]-\[d\]](#).
- 7) See [§17.03\[A\]](#); [§22.02\[B\]\[3\]\[e\]](#).

- 8) See §22.02[B][3][c] & [e].
- 9) Some instruments that are denominated “awards,” but which only tentatively address particular issues without resolving the parties’ claims, are not properly regarded as arbitral awards. See §22.02[B][3][d].
- 10) See §26.05[C][7]. This is true with regard to the Geneva Convention and a number of bilateral arbitration treaties. See §1.01[C][2]; §26.03[A]; §26.05[C][7].
- 11) See §26.05[C][7].
- 12) See §26.03[B][4]; §26.05[C][7].
- 13) See §1.02[B][5]; §22.02[B][3][c]; §26.05[C][7].
- 14) Restatement (Third) U.S. Law of International Commercial Arbitration §1-1, comment n (Tentative Draft No. 2 2012) (“All awards by definition set forth a ‘final and binding’ determination on the merits of a claim, defense, or issue. There is, however, only one final award.”).
- 15) See UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 32(1) (“The arbitral proceedings are terminated by the final award or by an order of the arbitral tribunal in accordance with paragraph (2) of this article.”); §23.01[A]; §26.05[B].
- 16) See §23.01[B].
- 17) See, e.g., UNCITRAL Model Law, Arts. 32(1), 33-35; English Arbitration Act, 1996, §58(1); Belgian Judicial Code, Art. 1713; Japanese Arbitration Law, Arts. 39, 43, 45.
- 18) See, e.g., 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 34(1) (“The arbitral tribunal may make separate awards on different issues at different times.”), Art. 34(2) (“All awards ... shall be final and binding on the parties.”); 1976 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 32(1) (“In addition to making a final award, the arbitral tribunal shall be entitled to make interim, interlocutory or partial awards.”); 2012 ICC Rules, Art. 2(v) (defining award to include “an interim, partial or final Award”), Art. 34(6) (“Every Award shall be binding on the parties” and “the parties undertake to carry out any Award without delay”); LCIA Rules, Art. 26(7) (“The Arbitral Tribunal may make separate awards at different times. Such awards shall have the same status and effect as any other award made by the Arbitral Tribunal.”); 2013 HKIAC Rules, Arts. 34(1)-(3). See also §23.01[B].
- 19) See §24.02.
- 20) See §25.04[F][3][b]; §26.05[C][4][h].
- 21) See §24.05[A].
- 22) Restatement (Third) U.S. Law of International Commercial Arbitration §1-1(w) (Tentative Draft No. 2 2012) (“A ‘partial award’ is an arbitral award that disposes of some, but not all, of the claims, defenses, or issues before the arbitral tribunal. A partial award does not include an order addressing scheduling, procedural, or evidentiary matters.”).
- 23) See E. Gaillard & J. Savage (eds.), Fouchard Gaillard Goldman on International Commercial Arbitration ¶1357 (1999); Grabundzija, Partial Arbitral Awards in International Commercial Arbitration, 8(2) Transnat’l Disp. Mgt (2011); Kurkela, Partial “Milestone” Awards and Lost Future Profits: Would It Take Part of the Challenge Away?, 30 ASA Bull. 51 (2012); Pinna, L’annulation d’une sentence arbitrale partielle, 2008 Rev. arb. 615; Riegler, in S. Riegler et al. (eds.), Arbitration Law of Austria: Practice and Procedure §607, ¶5 (2007); Sanders, Commentary on the UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules, II Y.B. Comm. Arb. 172, 210 (1977) (“partial” award “related to part of a case which could be settled immediately”); Schlosser, in F. Stein & M. Jonas (eds.), Kommentar zur Zivilprozessordnung §1061, ¶12 (22d ed. 2002). Compare Judgment of 23 February 1999, Econerg Ltd v. Nat’l Elec. Co., XXV Y.B. Comm. Arb. 678 (Bulgarian S.Ct. App.) (2000) (apparently not regarding partial award as final).
- 24) See §23.01[B] & [D]; Sanders, Commentary on the UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules, II Y.B. Comm. Arb. 172, 210 (1977) (“interim” award is “to bring the case closer to a solution”; “partial” award “related to part of a case which could be settled immediately”; distinction is unimportant, because arbitrators are entitled to make “any kind of award they deem appropriate for the conduct of the arbitration”).
- 25) The UNCITRAL Model Law does not expressly provide for partial awards. It does, however, recognize that multiple awards are possible. See UNCITRAL Model Law, Arts. 33(3), (5). As discussed below, because the arbitral tribunal’s authority to make partial or interim awards is inherent, they may do so even without express authorization.
- 26) Swiss Law on Private International Law, Art. 188. See Wirth, in S. Berti et al. (eds.), International Arbitration in Switzerland Art. 188, ¶¶11 et seq. (2000).
- 27) See, e.g., English Arbitration Act, 1996, §47; German ZPO, §§301, 1042; Belgian Judicial Code, Art. 1713; Netherlands Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1049; Swedish Arbitration Act, §29; Chinese Arbitration Law, Art. 55; Indian Arbitration and Conciliation Act, Art. 31(6); Dominican Republic Arbitration Law, Art. 36(1); Peruvian Arbitration Law, Art. 54.

- 28) 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 34(1). The 1976 UNCITRAL Rules provided that, “in addition to making a final award, the arbitral tribunal shall be entitled to make interim, interlocutory or partial awards.” 1976 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 32(1).

The 2010 UNCITRAL Rules were drafted to avoid “qualifications regarding the nature of the award such as ‘final’, ‘interim’, or ‘interlocutory’”: Article 34(1) “clarifies that the arbitral tribunal may render awards on different issues during the course of the proceedings. It is based on Article 26.7 of the Rules of the London Court of International Arbitration.” Settlement of Commercial Disputes: Revision of the UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules, UNCITRAL Working Group II, Forty-Ninth Session, U.N. Doc. A/CN. 9/WG.II/WP.151/Add.1, 13, ¶23 (2008).

- 29) See, e.g., 2012 ICC Rules, Art. 2(v) (defining “award” as including “an interim, partial or final award”); LCIA Rules, Art. 26(7) (“The Arbitral Tribunal may make separate awards on different issues at different times.”); 2012 CIETAC Rules, Art. 48; 2010 NAI Rules, Art. 44; 2010 SCC Rules, Art. 38; WIPO Rules, Art. 62(a).
- 30) See §15.02[C].
- 31) See, e.g., Photopaint v. Smartlens, 335 F.3d 152 (2d Cir. 2003); Hart Surgical, Inc. v. UltraCision, 244 F.3d 231 (2d Cir. 2001); Halliburton Energy Servs., Inc. v. NL Indus., 553 F.Supp.2d 733, 775 (S.D. Tex. 2008); Gulf Petrol Trading Co. v. Nigerian Nat’l Petroleum Corp., 288 F.Supp.2d 783, 794 (N.D. Tex. 2003); Judgment of 8 March 1988, Sociétés Sofidif v. OIAETI, 1989 Rev. arb. 481 (French Cour de cassation civ. 1e); Judgment of 25 June 1992, XXII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 619 (Austrian Oberster Gerichtshof) (1997). Compare N. Blackaby et al. (eds.), Redfern and Hunter on International Arbitration ¶9.23 (5th ed. 2009).
- 32) See §15.02; §15.03.
- 33) See D. Caron & L. Caplan, The UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules: A Commentary 736 (2d ed. 2013) (Iran-US Claims Tribunal used partial awards on jurisdiction, liability, damages and costs); Y. Derains & E. Schwartz, A Guide to the ICC Rules of Arbitration 37 (2d ed. 2005).
- 34) See §15.07[D][1]; §15.08[N]; Brower, What I Tell You Three Times Is True: U.S. Courts and Pre-Award Interim Measures Under the New York Convention, 35 Va. J. Int’l L. 971 (1994-1995); I. Dore, The UNCITRAL Framework for Arbitration in Contemporary Perspective 36 (1993) (“The authorization for ‘partial’ awards suggests a lower degree of finality than separate final awards on different issues.”); Reichert, Provisional Remedies in the Context of International Commercial Arbitration, 3 Int’l Tax & Bus. L. 368, 369 (1986).
- 35) If the tribunal disregards that agreement, its award(s) will be subject to annulment and non-recognition (under Article V(1)(d) of the New York Convention). See §25.02[C][3][a]; §26.05[C][5][b]; Assoc’d Corset & Brassiere Mfrs v. Corset & Brassiere Workers, 16 N.Y.S.2d 736, 736 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1939) (“The award of the arbitrator was void in that he failed to pass on all the matters submitted to him for determination and there was no consent to a partial award.”); Judgment of 8 March 1988, Sociétés Sofidif v. OIAETI, 1989 Rev. arb. 481 (French Cour de cassation civ. 1e).
- 36) Only an express agreement excluding partial awards should suffice to produce this result. The almost universal approach of national arbitration legislation and institutional rules, permitting partial awards, reflects both the parties’ expectations and efficiency considerations. Only where an agreement explicitly requires a different result should this approach be abandoned. See Hart Surgical, Inc. v. UltraCision, Inc., 244 F.3d 231, 234 (2d Cir. 2001); Providence Journal Co. v. Providence Newspaper Guild, 271 F.3d 16 (1st Cir. 2001); Hyosung (Am.) Inc. v. Tranax Techs. Inc., 2010 WL 1853764, at *5 (N.D. Cal.); Mitsubishi Heavy Indus., Ltd v. Stone & Webster, Inc., 2009 WL 3169973, at *5 (S.D.N.Y.); Halliburton Energy Servs., Inc. v. NL Indus., 553 F.Supp.2d 733, 741 (S.D. Tex. 2008); Andrea Doreen, Ltd v. Bldg Material Local Union 282, 250 F.Supp.2d 107 (E.D.N.Y. 2003); K. Lionnet & A. Lionnet, Handbuch der internationalen und nationalen Schiedsgerichtsbarkeit ¶16 II 3(a)(2) (3d ed. 2005); Wirth, in S. Berti et al. (eds.), International Arbitration in Switzerland Art. 188, ¶13 (2000).
- 37) For example, a party might argue that its rights were prejudiced by being prevented from submitting certain evidence or seeking certain discovery at early stages of a proceeding, because of the tribunal’s decision to bifurcate; alternatively, a party might claim that a refusal to bifurcate proceedings imposed unnecessary expense on it. See W. Craig, W. Park & J. Paulsson, International Chamber of Commerce Arbitration ¶19.03 (3d ed. 2000) (“For the most part ... the arbitrator has discretion whether to make an intermediate decision by way of procedural decision, with the result to be incorporated in the final award as part of the tribunal’s ratio descendi, or to make an interim award which creates a definitive title.”).
- 38) See, e.g., 1976 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 21(4) (“In general, the arbitral tribunal should rule on a plea concerning its jurisdiction as a preliminary question ...”). The 2010 UNCITRAL Rules amended this article to provide that, “the arbitral tribunal may rule on a plea referred to in paragraph 2 either as a preliminary question or in an award on the merits. The arbitral tribunal may continue the arbitral proceedings and make an award, notwithstanding any pending challenge to its jurisdiction before a court.” 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 23(3). See also §§7.05[C] & [E].

- 39) See, e.g., U.S. FAA, 9 U.S.C. §16(a)(D) (referring to confirmation of “award or partial award”); English Arbitration Act, 1996, §§47, 66; Swiss Law on Private International Law, Arts. 188, 190; Trade & Transp., Inc. v. Natural Petroleum Charterers, Inc., 931 F.2d 191 (2d Cir. 1991) (partial award enforced); Metallgesellschaft AG v. M/V Capitan Constante, 790 F.2d 280 (2d Cir. 1986) (same); The Home Ins. Co. v. RHA/Pa. Nursing Homes, 127 F.Supp.2d 482 (S.D.N.Y. 2001) (same); Corporate Printing Co. v. N.Y. Typographical Union No. 6, 1994 WL 376093 (S.D.N.Y.) (same). Compare Kerr-McGee Refining Corp. v. M/T Triumph, 924 F.2d 467, 471 (2d Cir. 1991) (award determining some, but not all, damages claims not “final”). See J.-L. Delvolvé, J. Rouche & G. Pointon, French Arbitration Law and Practice ¶¶303, 558 (2003); Gaitis, The Federal Arbitration Act: Risks and Incongruities Relating to the Issuance of Interim and Partial Awards in Domestic and International Arbitrations, 16 Am. Rev. Int’l Arb. 1 (2005); Patocchi & Jermini, in S. Berti et al. (eds.), International Arbitration in Switzerland Art. 194, ¶8 (2000); Voit, in H.-J. Musielak (ed.), Kommentar zur Zivilprozessordnung §1061, ¶3 (5th ed. 2007).
- 40) See§23.01[B].
- 41) UNCITRAL, 2012 Digest of Case Law on the Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration 137 \(2012\).
- 42) VV v. VW, [2008] SLR 929 (Singapore High Ct.). See also Tang Boon Jek Jeffrey v. Tan Poh Leng Stanley, [2001] 3 SLR 237 (Singapore Ct. App.); Maruna v. Lopatka, [2002] BCSC 1084 (B.C. S.Ct.).
- 43) See§7.02; §7.03.
- 44) See§7.03[A][4]; §22.02[B][3][f].
- 45) See§7.03[A][4].
- 46) See§7.03[A][4]. See also Judgment of 12 November 2010, Case No. Ö 2301-09, ¶13 (Swedish S.Ct.) (“In the current case the arbitrators ruled on their jurisdiction in an ‘Award on Jurisdiction.’ This is not an arbitral award which can be challenged under Section 34 of the Arbitration Act. In the Swedish terminology it is a decision on jurisdiction during an ongoing arbitration (cf. Section 27(3) of the Act).”).
- 47) See§7.03[A][4]; §22.02[B][3][f].
- 48) See§22.02[B][3][f].
- 49) See§7.03[A][4][c].
- 50) See§23.01[D]; Netherlands Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1049 (“arbitral tribunal may render a final award, a partial final award, or an interim award”).
- 51) See Judgment of 25 June 1992, XXII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 619, 621 (Austrian Oberster Gerichtshof) (1997) (“Interim awards (Zwischenschiedssprüche) on the merits concerning partial requests for determination differ from such formal decisions, because they involve a settlement of the merits. ... It is irrelevant that it does not settle [Claimant’s] request for performance in a final manner. Further, the fact that no party requested this decision does not affect the decision’s nature as a decision on the merits.”); Peters & Koller, The Award and the Courts – The Nature of Arbitral Award: An Attempt to Overcome A Babylonian Confusion, 2010 Austrian Y.B. Int’l Arb. 161 (“In practice, two different applications of the terms ‘interim’ or ‘interlocutory’ awards can be distinguished: while the first one refers to the issue resolved by the decision, the second describes the nature of the decision itself.”). See also Tang Boon Jek Jeffrey v. Tan Poh Leng Stanley, [2001] 3 SLR 237 (Singapore Ct. App.); MCIS Ins. Bhd v. Assoc’d Cover Sdn Bhd, [2001] 2 MLJ 561 (Kuala Lumpur High Ct.); Chiu, Final, Interim, Interlocutory or Partial Award: Misnomers Apt to Mislead, 13 Sing. Acad. L.J. 461 (2001); Trittmann, When Should Arbitrators Issue Interim or Partial Awards and/or Procedural Orders?, 20 J. Int’l Arb. 225, 258-60 (2003).
- 52) N. Blackaby et al. (eds.), Redfern and Hunter on International Arbitration ¶9.19 (5th ed. 2009); Chiu, Final, Interim, Interlocutory or Partial Award: Misnomers Apt to Mislead, 13 Sing. Acad. L.J. 461 (2001); J. Lew, L. Mistelis & S. Kröll, Comparative International Commercial Arbitration ¶24-24 (2003); UNCITRAL, 2012 Digest of Case Law on the Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration 137 \(2012\) (“A controversial issue is whether setting aside proceedings are admissible against an award that merely determines preliminary questions of the claim. There is no uniform terminology for such awards. They are in practice often referred to as ‘interim awards’ or sometimes as ‘partial awards.’”).
- Arbitral tribunals and national courts are often inconsistent in their terminology, referring to arbitral decisions that decide some of the issues relevant to a claim (e.g., liability, choice of law) as “partial” awards, rather than “interim” awards. See, e.g., Mitsubishi Heavy Indus., Ltd v. Stone & Webster, Inc., 2009 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 91199, at *13-20 (S.D.N.Y.) (“partial” award on liability issues not “final”).
- 53) See§17.02[A]; §22.02[B][3][e]; Publicis Commc’n v. True N. Commc’ns, Inc., 206 F.3d 725, 729 (7th Cir. 2000); Yasuda Fire & Marine Ins. Co. of Europe v. Cont’l Cas. Co., 37 F.3d 345, 348 (7th Cir. 1994); Pac. Reins. v. Ohio Reins., 935 F.2d 1019, 1022-23 (9th Cir. 1991); Hyosung (Am.) Inc. v. Tranax Techs. Inc., 2010 WL 1853764, at *1 (N.D. Cal.); Wellpoint Health Networks, Inc. v. John Hancock Life Ins. Co., 547 F.Supp.2d 899, 908 (N.D. Ill. 2008); S. Seas Navigation Ltd v. Petroleos Mexicanos, 606 F.Supp. 692, 694 (S.D.N.Y. 1985); H. Holtzmann & J. Neuhaus, A Guide to the UNCITRAL Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration: Legislative History and Commentary 867 (1989).
- 54) See§17.02[G][4]; §17.03[A].

- 55) See Judgment of 14 June 2005, 2 Ob 136/05x (Austrian Oberster Gerichtshof) (due to its non-final character, interim award may not be challenged in absence of agreement to that effect); Judgment of 25 June 1992, XXII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 619, 627 (Austrian Oberster Gerichtshof) (1997) (“The first court correctly denied that this interim decision (Zwischenentscheid) could be challenged separately.”). Contra A. Reiner, Das neue Österreichische Schiedsrecht – SchiedsRÄG 2006 §611, ¶¶190-91 (2006); Riegler, in S. Riegler et al. (eds.), Arbitration Law of Austria: Practice and Procedure §611, ¶10 (2007).
- 56) Judgment of 10 May 2007, 2007 SchiedsVZ 278, 278 (Oberlandesgericht Frankfurt) (rejecting application to annul award finding liability but leaving issue of damages open: “An arbitral award for the purpose of this section [German ZPO, §1059] is a decision of the arbitral tribunal which disposes comprehensively and finally of a dispute or a separable portion of a dispute. So-called interim awards, which only deal with individual issues such as admissibility of the claim, preliminary substantive issues or the basis of a claim, at least in those cases where an arbitral tribunal still has to decide on the amount due, do not fall within this category.”).
- 57) Resort Condominiums Int’l Inc. v. Bolwell, XX Y.B. Comm. Arb. 628, 642 (Queensland S.Ct. 1993) (1995).
- 58) See §17.03[A].
- 59) See §22.02[B][3][e] & [g].
- 60) See §1.02[B][9].
- 61) Kreindler, Settlement Agreements and Arbitration in the Context of the ICC Rules, 9(2) ICC Ct. Bull. 22 (1998); Tchakoua, The Status of the Arbitral Award by Consent: The Limits of the Useful, 2002 RDAI/IBLJ 775.
- 62) See §23.07[B].
- 63) In some jurisdictions, settlement agreements enjoy special legal status and can be enforced reasonably expeditiously. See, e.g., French Civil Code, Art. 2052(1); German ZPO, §§796a, 1053; Costa Rican Arbitration Law, 2011, Art. 30(2); Dominican Arbitration Law, Art. 35(2); Peruvian Arbitration Law, Art. 50(1). Nevertheless, recording a settlement as an award grants it the protections of the New York Convention (and national arbitration legislation).
- 64) See N. Blackaby et al. (eds.), Redfern and Hunter on International Arbitration ¶9.34 (5th ed. 2009) (suggesting that consent award may be easier for state entity to pay than settlement agreement).
- 65) The New York Convention and other leading arbitration conventions are silent on the question of consent awards.
- 66) UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 30(1). See H. Holtzmann & J. Neuhaus, A Guide to the UNCITRAL Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration: Legislative History and Commentary 822-25 (1989).
- 67) See, e.g., English Arbitration Act, 1996, §51; German ZPO, §1053; Belgian Judicial Code, Art. 1712(1); Austrian ZPO, §605; Singapore International Arbitration Act, 2012, §18; Hong Kong Arbitration Ordinance, 2013, Art. 66; Chinese Arbitration Law, Art. 49; Japanese Arbitration Law, Art. 38(1); Korean Arbitration Act, Art. 31; Australian International Arbitration Act, 2011, Schedule 2, Art. 30; Indian Arbitration and Conciliation Act, Art. 30(2); Malaysian Arbitration Act, §32; Costa Rican Arbitration Law, 2011, Art. 30(1); Peruvian Arbitration Law, Art. 50(1).
- 68) See Mazza v. Dist. Council of N.Y., 2007 WL 2668116, at *1, 10 (E.D.N.Y.) (consent award by arbitral tribunal given same preclusive effect as consent judgment issued by court); Dawes v. Treasure & Son Ltd [2010] EWHC 3218 (TCC) (English High Ct.); Halifax Life Ltd v. Equitable Life Assur. Soc’y [2007] EWHC 503 (Comm) (English High Ct.); Benaim (U.K.) Ltd v. Davies Middleton & Davies Ltd [2004] EWHC 737 (TCC) (English High Ct.).
- 69) See, e.g., 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 36(1); 2012 ICC Rules, Art. 32; LCIA Rules, Art. 26(8); ICSID Rules, Rule 43(2); 2013 HKIAC Rules, Art. 36(1); 2010 SCC Rules, Art. 39(1); 2013 SIAC Rules, Art. 28(8); 2013 VIAC Rules, Art. 38.
- 70) UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 30(1); English Arbitration Act, 1996, §52(4).
- 71) 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 36(1) (“The arbitral tribunal is not obliged to give reasons for such an award.”); 1976 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 34(1); LCIA Rules, Art. 26(8); 2013 HKIAC Rules, Art. 36(1).
- 72) See, e.g., 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 36(1); 1976 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 34(1); 2012 ICC Rules, Art. 32; ICDR Rules, Art. 29(1); LCIA Rules, Art. 26(8).
- 73) See, e.g., English Arbitration Act, 1996, §51(2); Belgian Judicial Code, Art. 1712(1); Chinese Arbitration Law, Art. 49; Japanese Arbitration Law, Art. 38(1); Costa Rican Arbitration Law, 2011, Art. 30; Peruvian Arbitration Law, Art. 50(1).

- 74) UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 30(1) (“If, during arbitral proceedings, the parties settle the dispute, the arbitral tribunal shall terminate the proceedings and, if requested by the parties and not objected to by the arbitral tribunal, record the settlement in the form of an arbitral award on agreed terms.”). See also Summary Record of the 151st Meeting of the UNCITRAL, Eighth Session, U.N. Doc. A/CN.9/SR.167, 203 (1975) (“arbitrators should be left free to decide whether they agreed or refused to record a settlement in the form of an arbitral award [because otherwise] arbitrators [would be] at the mercy of possible abuses by the parties”). See also Draft on Arbitral Procedure Prepared by the International Law Commission at Its Fourth Session, U.N. Doc. A/CN.4/59, Art. 22, II Y.B. I.L.C. 60, 65, (1952) (“The tribunal may take note of the conclusion of a settlement reached by the parties. At the request of the parties, it may embody the settlement in an award.”).
- 75) That is clear under Article 30 of the Model Law, whose text addresses cases where “during arbitral proceedings, the parties settle the dispute.” See UNCITRAL, 2012 Digest of Case Law on the Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration 124 (2012) (“Article 30 only applies if arbitral proceedings have commenced and the final award has yet to be made. Where a full and final settlement of any claim has been reached before arbitral proceedings have commenced, a dispute no longer subsists to be referred to arbitration. It follows that such an agreed settlement may not be made in the form of an award under Article 30. ... In contrast, where the parties have commenced the arbitral proceedings and subsequently enter into a settlement agreement (prior to oral hearing), the dispute over the existence of a settlement agreement still falls under the jurisdiction of the arbitral tribunal.”)
- 76) Nathani Steels Ltd v. Assoc’d Constr., (1995) Supp 3 SCC 324 (Indian S.Ct.).
- 77) See, e.g., Indian Arbitration and Conciliation Act, Arts. 73, 74.
- 78) Ad Hoc Award in CRCICA Case No. 497/2006 of 17 February 2006, CLOUT Case 779, U.N. Doc. A/CN.9/SER.C/ABSTRACTS/75.
- 79) UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 30(2) (“An award on agreed terms shall be made in accordance with the provisions of Article 31 and shall state that it is an award.”).
- 80) Judgment of 14 March 2003, 20 Sch 01/02 (Oberlandesgericht Frankfurt) (formal requirements applicable to consent award not satisfied by settlement agreement); Judgment of 28 June 1999, 3 Sch 01/99 (Oberlandesgericht Frankfurt).
- 81) Report of the Secretary-General on the Analytical Commentary on Draft Text of A Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration, U.N. Doc. A/CN.9/264, Art. 30, ¶2 (1985) (consent award may be refused “in case of suspected fraud, illicit or utterly unfair terms”). See also Draft on Arbitral Procedure Prepared by the International Law Commission at Its Fourth Session, U.N. Doc. A/CN.4/59, Art. 22, comment (2), II Y.B. I.L.C. 60, 65 (1952) (“The use of the word ‘may’ in article 22 is important, as it leaves the tribunal free to embody the settlement reached in an award or not. It is, in fact, necessary that the tribunal should be able to verify the legality and effective scope of the agreement. It cannot be compelled, even by an agreement between the parties to give binding force to an illegal or a purely fictitious settlement.”).
- 82) See, e.g., Kiyue Co. v. Aquagen Int’l Pte Ltd, [2003] 3 SLR 130 (Singapore High Ct.) (controlling shareholder commenced arbitration against subsidiary and then influenced subsidiary to agree not to contest merits of claim: “It is manifestly wrong for a controlling shareholder to sue its subsidiary and then order it not to defend. On this fact alone, equity is against it. And that is not all. It appears that the company had received legal advice to the effect that the claim ought to be resisted.”).
- 83) If third parties are allegedly adversely affected by a consent award they will generally be free to challenge its effects, on the grounds that the award does not bind nonparties. Equally, awards that are contrary to public policy would be subject to non-recognition in subsequent national court proceedings. See §26.05[C][9]. Nonetheless, there can be cases of fraud or illegality where the existence of other potential remedies does not alter the desirability of refraining from making a consent award that involves or facilitates illegal or wrongful conduct. Tribunals should properly refuse to make a consent award only where there are serious and credible grounds for doing so.
- 84) See, e.g., Iran v. U.S.A., Decision No. DEC 8-A1-FT of 17 May 1982, 1 Iran-US C.T.R. 144, 152-53 (1981) (arbitrators “should not attempt to review the reasonableness of the settlement in the place of the arbitrating parties”); D. Caron & L. Caplan, The UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules: A Commentary 785 (2d ed. 2013) (“It is not the task of the arbitrators to investigate the parties’ reasons for settlement.”).
- 85) Other arbitration conventions are also silent on the subject.
- 86) See §22.02[B][3][c]; §23.01[E].
- 87) See §1.05[A]; §2.02[C][4]; §23.02[B]; §23.03[E].
- 88) See, e.g., Judgment of 2 November 2000, 2001 WM 104 (German Bundesgerichtshof). See also E. Gaillard & J. Savage (eds.), Fouchard Gaillard Goldman on International Commercial Arbitration ¶1366 (1999); Newmark & Hill, Can A Mediated Settlement Become An Enforceable Arbitration Award?, 16 Arb. Int’l 84 (2000).
- 89) This is confirmed by the terms of the UNCITRAL Model Law and other national arbitration legislation, as discussed above. See §23.01[E][1]. Indeed, the arbitrators’ duties arguably include the duty to propose settlement to the parties. See §13.04[D].
- 90) UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 30(2).

- 91) As a practical matter, there will ordinarily be no need for recognition and enforcement of consent awards (because the parties will have just concluded a settlement agreement, with which they are presumptively content).
- 92) See, e.g., Judgment of 2 November 2000, 2001 WM 104 (German Bundesgerichtshof) (applicant alleged that forged annual reports had been submitted to induce party to agree to settlement which formed basis of consent award). See also UNCITRAL, 2012 Digest of Case Law on the Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration 137 (2012) (“The mere fact that a party consented to an award on agreed terms pursuant to Article 30 does not prohibit it from applying for the setting aside of the award under Article 34.”).

Again, it is unlikely as a practical matter that parties will seek to annul a consent award, that they have just concluded. Moreover, given that the consent award is based on the parties’ agreement, it is unlikely that there will be substantive grounds for annulling the award. Challenge on grounds of fraud, public policy, or nonarbitrability would seem more plausible than other potential grounds for challenge. See Brekoulakis & Shore, UNCITRAL Model Law, Chapter VI, Article 30, in L. Mistelis (ed.), Concise International Arbitration 639 (2010) (“award on agreed terms should be open to challenge by either party on grounds that pertain to public policy, which parties cannot waive”). One court has held that the invalidity of the settlement agreement, on which a consent award is based, does not necessarily invalidate the award itself, which is subject only to annulment and non-recognition under Articles 34, 35 and 36 of the Model Law. See Judgment of 2 November 2000, 2001 WM 104 (German Bundesgerichtshof).

- 93) See §27.01[A].
- 94) See §15.08[HH].
- 95) See §15.08[HH]; UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 25; English Arbitration Act, 1996, §41. See also §25.04[B][4]; §26.05[C][4].
- 96) See, e.g., Comprehensive Accounting Corp. v. Rudell, 760 F.2d 138, 140-41 (7th Cir. 1985); Kentucky River Mills v. Jackson, 206 F.2d 111, 118 (6th Cir. 1953); Real Color Displays, Inc. v. Universal Applied Tech. Corp., 950 F.Supp. 714, 716-17 (E.D.N.C. 1997); Oh Young Indus. Co. v. E & J Textile Group, Inc., 2005 WL 2470824, at *3 (Cal. Ct. App.) (“if parties agree to arbitration before an entity whose rules permit proceedings in the absence of one of the parties ... arbitration may proceed at a party’s request without recourse to the courts for an order to compel arbitration, provided that the other party has adequate notice and an opportunity to participate”); Judgment of 13 September 2007, 2008 Rev. arb. 313 (Paris Cour d’appel); Judgment of 14 February 1985, 1987 Rev. arb. 325 (Paris Cour d’appel); Judgment of 8 June 1967, II Y.B. Comm. Arb. 234 (Landgericht Bremen) (1977); Judgment of 8 August 1990, XVII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 545 (Italian Corte di Cassazione) (1992) (enforcing default award and rejecting argument that domestic provisions regarding recognition of default judgments apply to arbitral awards); Hainan Mach. Imp. & Exp. Corp. v. Donald & McArthy Pte Ltd, XXII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 771 (Singapore High Ct. 1995) (1997).
- 97) See §25.04[B]; §26.05[C][3]. See also N. Blackaby et al. (eds.), Redfern and Hunter on International Arbitration ¶9.31 (5th ed. 2009) (“The importance of ensuring that the defaulting party is given, and is seen to have been given, a full and proper opportunity of presenting its case to the arbitral tribunal is clear.”).
- 98) See §15.08[HH]; 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 30; 2012 ICC Rules, Arts. 23(3), 26(2); 2013 AAA Rules, Rule 31; LCIA Rules, Art. 15(8); ICSID Rules, Rule 45.
- 99) See §15.08[HH].
- 100) See §15.08[HH]. See also N. Blackaby et al. (eds.), Redfern and Hunter on International Arbitration ¶9.30 (5th ed. 2009) (“In effect, the tribunal takes on itself the burden of testing the assertions made by the active party; and it must call for such evidence and legal argument as it may require to this end. The task of an arbitral tribunal is not to ‘rubber stamp’ claims that are presented to it. It must make a determination of these claims. If one of the parties is not there to help, the arbitral tribunal must make this determination on its own.”) (emphasis in original).
- 101) See §15.08[HH].
- 102) For a rare decision refusing to recognize a default award, see Victrix SS Co. v. Salen Dry Cargo AB, 825 F.2d 709, 713-14 (2d Cir. 1987) (refusing to enforce default award against bankrupt company, on grounds that payment of award would undermine foreign policy of equal distribution of assets from bankrupt estate); Style & Reid, The Challenge of Unopposed Arbitrations, 16 Arb. Int’l 219 (2000).
- 103) See §24.05.

- 104) UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 33(5) (“The provisions of Article 31 [concerning the form and contents of an award] shall apply to a correction or interpretation of the award or to an additional award.”); English Arbitration Act, 1996, §57(6) (“Any additional award shall be made within 56 days of the date of the original award or such longer period as the parties may agree.”); German ZPO, §1058(1) (“Any party may request the arbitral tribunal to make an additional award as to claims presented in the arbitral proceedings but omitted from the arbitral award. §1054 shall apply to a correction or interpretation of the award or to an additional award.”); Netherlands Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1061(4) (“An additional award shall be regarded as an arbitral award ...”); Austrian ZPO, §610; Singapore International Arbitration Act, 2012, §43; Costa Rican Arbitration Law, 2011, Art. 33(3); Ugandan Arbitration and Conciliation Act, §34 (“A party may, within thirty days after receipt of the arbitral award, request the arbitral tribunal to make an additional arbitral award as to claims presented in the arbitral proceedings but omitted from the arbitral award.”).
- 105) See§24.05[B]. See also Brekoulakis & Shore, UNCITRAL Model Law, Chapter VI, Article 33, in L. Mistelis (ed.), Concise International Arbitration 643, 643 (2010) (“additional awards are autonomous and therefore they can be challenged or enforced independently from the main award”).
- 106) See§24.03[B]-[C].
- 107) See, e.g., UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 33(5); English Arbitration Act, 1996, §57(7); German ZPO, §1058; Netherlands Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1060(5); Austrian ZPO, §610; Swedish Arbitration Act, §32; Costa Rican Arbitration Law, 2011, Art. 33(1), (2); Peruvian Arbitration Law, Art. 60(2).
- 108) See§24.03; §24.04.
- 109) UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 32(2). See also German ZPO, §1056(2); Austrian ZPO, §608(2); Danish Arbitration Act, §32(2); Japanese Arbitration Law, Art. 40; Costa Rican Arbitration Law, 2011, Art. 32(2); Peruvian Arbitration Law, Art. 60(2).
- 110) See§23.01[i][2].
- 111) That is true of the U.S. FAA and French Code of Civil Procedure.
- 112) German ZPO, §1056; Münch, in G. Lüke & P. Wax (eds.), Münchener Kommentar zur Zivilprozessordnung §1056, ¶9 (2d ed. 2001); J.-F. Poudret & S. Besson, Comparative Law of International Arbitration ¶455 (2d ed. 2007). See also§13.04[E].
- 113) SeeF. Schwarz & C. Konrad, The Vienna Rules: A Commentary on International Arbitration in Austria ¶25-009 (2009) (“order as such does not prevent the parties from reasserting their claim”); von Schlabrendorff & Sessler, Making of the Award and Termination of the Proceedings, in K. Böckstiegel et al. (eds.), Arbitration in Germany: The Model Law in Practice 412 (2007) (“parties are free to agree on the commencement of new arbitral proceedings”).
- 114) B. Berger & F. Kellerhals, International and Domestic Arbitration in Switzerland ¶1431 (2d ed. 2010) (“an order for the termination of the proceedings does not constitute a decision on the merits of dispute and is, thus, not final and binding on the parties”); Söderlund, A Comparative Overview of Arbitration Laws, 20 Arb. Int’l 73, 81 (2010) (“The English and the Russian Acts (in conformity with the general approach) reserve the award for any decision on a substantive issue, while any termination of the proceedings without any review of the merits will be described as a ‘termination order’ or the like.”).
- 115) 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 36(1); 1976 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 34(1).
- 116) 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 36(2); 1976 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 34(2).
- 117) LCIA Rules, Art. 26(8).
- 118) 2012 ICC Rules, Art. 32. SeeY. Derains & E. Schwartz, A Guide to the ICC Rules of Arbitration 311 (2d ed. 2005).
- 119) SeeN. Blackaby et al. (eds.), Redfern and Hunter on International Arbitration ¶9.01 (5th ed. 2009); W. Craig, W. Park & J. Paulsson, International Chamber of Commerce Arbitration ¶¶19.02, 25.06 (3d ed. 2000).
- 120) See§5.02.
- 121) See, e.g., UNCITRAL Model Law, Arts. 1(2), 31; English Arbitration Act, 1996, §§2, 3, 52; Netherlands Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1058; Hong Kong Arbitration Ordinance, 2013, Art. 67(1); Chinese Arbitration Law, Art. 54; Japanese Arbitration Law, Arts. 1, 3(1), 39; Korean Arbitration Act, Art. 32; Australian International Arbitration Act, 2011, Schedule 2, Art. 31; Malaysian Arbitration Act, §33; Costa Rican Arbitration Law, 2011, Arts. 1(2), 31; Peruvian Arbitration Law, Art. 55.
- 122) See§2.03[H]; §5.02[A][2].
- 123) See§22.02[B][3][b]. Article IV of the New York Convention also provides that a party seeking to enforce an award shall provide “the original agreement referred to in Article II or a duly certified copy thereof.” New York Convention, Art. IV. See§22.02[B][3][b]; §26.01[A][1].
- 124) See§22.02[B][3][b]; New York Convention, Art. IV(1)(a).

- 125) See Otto, in H. Kronke et al. (eds.), Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards: A Global Commentary on the New York Convention Art. IV, 152 (2010) (“An arbitration award not in written format would not be enforceable under the New York Convention, even if permitted under the applicable lex arbitri.”).
- Nonetheless, oral arbitral awards were historically valid at common law in England. R. Merkin, Arbitration Law ¶¶18.19 (1991 & Update August 2013) (citing Oates v. Bromhill [1794] 87 Eng. Rep. 931 (English K.B.); Cocks v. Macclesfield [1562] 2 Dyer 218 (English K.B.)).
- 126) For example, an oral (or, less clearly, unsigned) award would encounter objections in recognition proceedings in most jurisdictions.
- 127) See§23.02[B][1].
- 128) Nonetheless, if a Contracting State imposed discriminatory or idiosyncratic form requirements as a condition of confirmation or non-annulment of international arbitral awards made locally, the Convention should be interpreted as forbidding such a practice. This would parallel similar obligations of neutrality and non-discrimination under the Convention regarding arbitration agreements and arbitral procedures. See§4.04[A][1][b][v]; §4.04[A][2][j][v]; §4.05[A][2]; §4.07[B][3]; §4.08; §11.03[C][1][c][vi]; §12.01[B]; §12.01[B][2][a]; §12.04[B][7]; §12.04[E]; §15.04[A][1][a]. Moreover, if a Contracting State refused to give effect to the parties’ agreement with regard to the formal requirements for an award, this would likely be contrary to Articles II and V(1)(d) of the Convention. These provisions require giving effect to the material terms of the parties’ arbitration agreement. See§2.01[A][1][a]; §5.01[B][2]; §5.04[D][1][a]; §11.03[B]; §12.02[B] (especially §12.01[B][2][b]; §14.03[A]; §15.02[A]; §15.04[A][1][a]; §17.02[A][2]; §17.04[B][3]; §18.02[A]; §23.02[A]; §23.07[F]; §25.02[B]; §26.04[A].
- 129) See§26.03[B][5]; §26.05[A].
- 130) Formal requirements in national arbitration legislation have been applied in annulment actions to awards made locally, but not as grounds for non-recognition of awards made abroad. See§25.02[C]; §26.05[C][13].
- 131) See§23.03.
- 132) See§23.03[E].
- 133) UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 31(1).
- 134) UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 31(1).
- 135) UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 31(3).
- 136) UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 31(2).
- 137) H. Holtzmann & J. Neuhaus, A Guide to the UNCITRAL Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration: Legislative History and Commentary 837 et seq. (1989).
- 138) See, e.g., French Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1481 (“The arbitral award shall state: the full names of the parties, as well as their domicile or corporate headquarters; if applicable, the names of the counsel or other persons who represented or assisted the parties; the names of the arbitrators who made it; the date on which it was made; the place where the sentence was made.”), Art. 1482(2) (“The award shall state the reasons upon which it is based.”); Swiss Law on Private International Law, Art. 189 (award must be in writing, reasoned, signed and dated); German ZPO, §1054; Belgian Judicial Code, Art. 1713; Netherlands Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1057(4) (“In addition to the decision, the award shall contain in any case: (a) the names and addresses of the arbitrator or arbitrators; (b) the names and addresses of the parties; (c) the date on which the award is made; (d) the place where the award is made; (e) the reasons for the award, unless the award concerns merely the determination only of the quality or condition of goods ... or the recording of a settlement ...”); Austrian ZPO, §606; Hong Kong Arbitration Ordinance, 2013, Art. 67(1); Australian International Arbitration Act, 2011, Schedule 2, Art. 31; Chinese Arbitration Law, Art. 54; Japanese Arbitration Law, Art. 39; Korean Arbitration Act, Art. 32; Malaysian Arbitration Act, §33; Venezuelan Commercial Arbitration Law, Arts. 29, 30.
- 139) U.S. FAA, 9 U.S.C. §§9, 13(b) (requiring submission of copy of award). See also U.S. FAA, 9 U.S.C. §§10, 207 (not prescribing rules regarding form of award).
- As discussed elsewhere, a few U.S. courts have (relying on archaic language in §9) held that an award is not subject to confirmation unless the parties’ agreement to arbitrate provides that a judgment may be entered upon the arbitrators’ award (a so-called “entry-of-judgment” provision). See§25.10.
- 140) See, e.g., New Jersey Statutes Annotated 2A:24-7 (to obtain court confirmation, arbitral award must be in writing and verified).
- 141) English Arbitration Act, 1996, §52(1). See R. Merkin, Arbitration Law ¶¶18.21 (signature), ¶¶18.22 to 18.23 (date), ¶¶18.30 to 18.31 (seat) (1991 & Update August 2013).
- 142) English Arbitration Act, 1996, §52. See R. Merkin, Arbitration Law ¶¶18.17 to 18.32 (1991 & Update August 2013).
- 143) Nonetheless, as noted above, oral awards were historically valid and capable of enforcement in some jurisdictions (notably, England). See§23.02[B][2]. There was also no historical requirement in some jurisdictions (again, England) that arbitral awards be signed, although parties were entitled to demand that a signature be provided. R. Merkin, Arbitration Law ¶¶18.21 (1991 & Update August 2013) (citing Everard v. Paterson [1816] 6 Taunt. 625 (English Ct. Common Pleas); Columbel v. Columbel [1676] 2 Mod. Rep. 77 (English K.B.)).

144) D. Caron & L. Caplan, The UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules: A Commentary 745 (2d ed. 2013) (“The requirement of a written award contained in Article 34(2) is an obvious necessity. No doubt the arbitrators will express the terms of the award and their underlying reasoning more clearly and precisely in written form, especially where the dispute involves complex issues. Likewise, the parties will better understand their rights and obligations under the award when they are memorialized in a written product. Moreover, a written award is a common prerequisite for enforcement of the award in court proceedings, where it can serve as the primary record of the arbitral proceedings.”).

145) Report of the UNCITRAL on the Work of Its Ninth Session, U.N. Doc. A/31/17, Annex II, ¶163, VII Y.B. UNCITRAL 66, 78 (1976) (“all the arbitrators, including an arbitrator who dissented from the award should be required to sign the award”); Report of the Secretary-General on the Revised Draft Set of Arbitration Rules, UNCITRAL, Ninth Session, U.N. Doc. A/CN.9/112/Add.1, VII Y.B. UNCITRAL 166, 178 (1976) (arbitrators must sign award “in order to make clear that all the arbitrators participated in the arbitral proceedings and in the making of the award”).

146) Report of the Secretary-General on the Revised Draft Set of Arbitration Rules, UNCITRAL, Ninth Session, U.N. Doc. A/CN.9/112/Add.1, VII Y.B. UNCITRAL 166, 178 (1976) (“In some jurisdictions the applicable arbitration law may require that an arbitral award be signed by all the arbitrators before it becomes valid and enforceable; in such a case the applicable national law would prevail over the provision” of the UNCITRAL Rules.).

National law that overrode the parties’ agreement would in turn be subject to the provisions of Articles II(3) and V(1)(d) of the New York Convention. See §11.03[C][1][c][ii]; §26.05[C][5][b][viii].

147) R. Merkin, Arbitration Law ¶18.21 (1991 & Update August 2013) (citing Little v. Newton [1841] 2 Man. & G. 351 (English Ct. Common Pleas); Thomas v. Harrop [1823] 1 Sim. & St. 524 (English Vice-Ch. Ct.)).

148) Euro’n Grain & Shipping Ltd v. Johnston [1982] 3 All ER 989 (English Ct. App.) (historic rule “unnecessary and undesirable”); Bank Mellat v. GAA Dev. Constr. Co. [1988] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 44 (QB) (English High Ct.).

149) Judgment of 30 March 2010, P & T Architects & Eng’rs Ltd v. Nakheel PJSC, DWT/0022/2010 (Dubai World Special Tribunal) (rejecting argument that, under Dubai law, every page of award must be individually signed by arbitrators; holding that pages of award were numbered sufficiently to satisfy signature requirement). Cf. Judgment of 8 May 2011, Case No. 2009/310, Cassation No. 156/2009 (Dubai Ct. Cassation) (“[I]f grounds are contained in papers separate from the paper in which the order is written, all of those papers must be signed by all of the arbitrators who issue the award, in addition to the final paper containing the order, otherwise the award will be void. Such voidness is a matter of public order.”).

150) As discussed above, an arbitrator may not delegate his adjudicative responsibilities. See §13.04[A][6].

151) See, e.g., UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 31(1); English Arbitration Act, 1996, §52(3); French Code of Civil Procedure, Arts. 1513(1)-(2) (“Unless the arbitration agreement provides otherwise the award shall be made by majority decision. It shall be signed by all the arbitrators.”; “However, if a minority among them refuses to sign, the others shall so state in the award.”); German ZPO, §1054(1); Netherlands Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1057(3); Austrian ZPO, §606; Hong Kong Arbitration Ordinance, 2013, Art. 67(1); Chinese Arbitration Law, Art. 54; Japanese Arbitration Law, Art. 39(1); Korean Arbitration Act, Art. 32(1); Australian International Arbitration Act, 2011, Schedule 2, Art. 31(1); Malaysian Arbitration Act, §33(2); Costa Rican Arbitration Law, 2011, Art. 31(1); Peruvian Arbitration Law, Art. 55(1); Venezuelan Commercial Arbitration Law, Art. 29.

As discussed below, the Model Law and other arbitration statutes make provision for the refusal of an arbitrator (in the case of tribunals with multiple members) to sign the award. In general, this refusal will not affect the award’s validity, although it must be noted and explained. See §23.05. Leading institutional rules are similar. See §23.05.

152) See, e.g., French Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1513(3); Swiss Law on Private International Law, Art. 189 (requiring only signature of chairman); ICDR Rules, Art. 27.

For an example of an award made following such a procedure, see Award in ICC Case No. 3881, 113 J.D.I. (Clunet) 1096 (1986); Award in ICC Case No. 1703, “RAKTA” v. Parsons & Whittemore Overseas Co., reprinted in J. Wetter (ed.), The International Arbitral Process: Public and Private Vol. V, 361 (1979). See also §23.04[B].

153) UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 32(4); D. Frampton & Co. v. Thibeault, [1988] F.C.J. No. 305 (Canadian Fed. Ct.).

154) See, e.g., D. Frampton & Co. v. Thibeault, [1988] F.C.J. No. 305 (Canadian Fed. Ct.).

- 155) See Judgment of 5 December 2008, Bursa Büyükşehir Belediyesi v. Güris Insaat VE Mühendislik AS, Case No. C07/166HR (Dutch Hoge Raad) (annulling award where one of three arbitrators did not participate in deliberations or drafting award, for medical reasons, but drafted dissent that was attached to award signed by other two arbitrators because signature of all three arbitrators was mandatory requirement and dissenting opinion did not form part of award). The decision is very likely wrong. The dissenting arbitrator's failure to attend the deliberations, putatively for medical reasons, but be able to review the award and prepare a dissent, strongly suggest that he had a full opportunity to take part in the tribunal's deliberations, but chose to express his views as a dissent; in these circumstances, the absence of the dissenting arbitrator's signature should not provide grounds for annulment or non-recognition.
- 156) D. Caron & L. Caplan, The UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules: A Commentary 749-50 (2d ed. 2013). See also id. at 826-34 (examples of statements of reasons for refusing to sign award).
- 157) See §11.01 (especially §11.01[B][2]); §11.03[D][1]; §22.04.
- 158) See §23.02[B][1].
- 159) See, e.g., UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 31(3); English Arbitration Act, 1996, §53; German ZPO, §1054(3); Hong Kong Arbitration Ordinance, 2013, Art. 67(1); Japanese Arbitration Law, Art. 39(4); Korean Arbitration Act, Art. 32(3); Australian International Arbitration Act, 2011, Schedule 2, Art. 31(3); Malaysian Arbitration Act, §33(2); Costa Rican Arbitration Law, 2011, Art. 31(3); Venezuelan Commercial Arbitration Law, Art. 30.
- Institutional rules are generally similar. See, e.g., 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Art.18(2); 2012 ICC Rules, Art. 31(3); ICDR Rules, Art. 27(3); LCIA Rules, Art. 26(1); 2013 HKIAC Rules, Art. 14(2), 34(5); 2010 SCC Rules, Art. 20(3); 2013 VIAC Rules, Art. 36(2). See also §11.03[B]; §11.03[D][2][j]; §22.02[E][1].
- 160) See §22.02[E][1][a]i, p. 2949.
- 161) Judgment of 30 March 2010, P & T Architects & Eng'rs Ltd v. Nakheel PJSC, DWT/0022/2010 (Dubai World Special Tribunal) (Article 212(5) of Dubai Law of Civil Procedure, requiring that award state "the place at which it was issued," refers to place where award was made available to parties, not place where award was made; Article 212(5) satisfied because arbitral institution was based in Dubai and institution's rules and correspondence made clear that award was issued in Dubai).
- 162) See §25.08; UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 34(3); U.S. FAA, 9 U.S.C. §§9, 10; English Arbitration Act, 1996, §70(3); French Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1519(2); Chinese Arbitration Law, Art. 59; Japanese Arbitration Law, Art. 44(2).
- Institutional rules are to the same effect. See, e.g., 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 34(4); ICDR Rules, Art. 27(3); LCIA Rules, Art. 26(1). See also 2012 ICC Rules, Art. 31(3) ("The Award shall be deemed to be made at the place of the arbitration and on the date stated therein.").
- 163) See §23.03.
- 164) See, e.g., English Arbitration Act, 1996, §68(2)(h); Belgian Judicial Code, Arts. 1713(5) (formal requirements), 1717 (annulment); Netherlands Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1065(1)(d); Brazilian Arbitration Law, Art. 32. Contra Judgment of 10 November 2005, 4P.154/2005, ¶3.1 (Swiss Federal Tribunal) (lack of signature of one arbitrator not per se ground for annulment but just indication that arbitrator has not participated in deliberations); §25.02[C]. Compare §26.05[C][13], pp. 3712-13.
- 165) See §23.01[H]; §24.03[B]-[C].
- 166) See, e.g., UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 34(2); U.S. FAA, 9 U.S.C. §10; French Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1483 (domestic arbitration), Art. 1520; Hong Kong Arbitration Ordinance, 2013, Art. 81(1); Chinese Arbitration Law, Art. 70; Japanese Arbitration Law, Art. 44; Korean Arbitration Act, Art. 36(3); Australian International Arbitration Act, 2011, Schedule 2, Art. 34(2); Malaysian Arbitration Act, §7(4).
- 167) Formal requirements in national arbitration legislation have been applied in annulment actions to awards made locally, but not as grounds for non-recognition of awards made abroad. See §25.05[C]; §26.05[C][13].
- 168) See §23.03.
- 169) See §23.03[E].
- 170) One exception concerns language, where the arbitration clause may provide the language of the arbitration and the award. See §1.04[E][6]; §12.04[D][3]. Arbitration agreements may also address the question of who must sign the award, whether a majority vote is acceptable, and how the award must be delivered to the parties.
- 171) 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 34; 1976 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 32(4). The Rules provide that if the award is not signed by all arbitrators then the award must state why any arbitrator has refused to sign it. They also permit the presiding arbitrator alone to sign the award where there is no majority.
- 172) See, e.g., ICDR Rules, Art. 27; LCIA Rules, Art. 26(1); 2013 AAA Rules, Rule 46; 2012 Swiss Rules, Art. 32; 2012 CIETAC Rules, Art. 47; DIS Rules, §34; 2013 HKIAC Rules, Art. 34; ICAC Rules, Art. 37; 2013 VIAC Rules, Art. 36; WIPO Rules, Art. 62.
- 173) ICSID Rules, Rule 47; 2012 CIETAC Rules, Art. 47(4).
- 174) See §25.04[C] (especially §25.04[C][4]); §26.05[C][5] (especially §26.05[C][5][b]).
- 175) See §1.04[E][6]; §12.04[D][3].
- 176) See §1.04[E][6]; §12.04[D][3].

- 177) See §25.05[C]; §26.05[C][13].
- 178) Van Houtte, Conduct of Arbitral Proceedings, in P. Sarcevic (ed.), Essays on International Commercial Arbitration 113, 117 (1989) (arbitral awards in various Middle Eastern jurisdictions must be rendered in official language of arbitral seat).
- 179) See §11.05[B][3]; §23.02[B][4].
- 180) For commentary, see Bingham, Reasons and Reasons for Reasons, 4 Arb. Int'l 141 (1988); Carbonneau, Rendering Arbitral Awards With Reasons: The Elaboration of A Common Law of International Transactions, 23 Colum. J. Transnat'l L. 579 (1984-1985); Delvolvé, Essai sur la Motivation des Sentences Arbitrales, 1989 Rev. arb. 149; Lalive, On the Reasoning of International Arbitral Awards, 1 J. Int'l Disp. Sett. 55 (2010); Schauer, Giving Reasons, 47 Stan. L. Rev. 633 (1995); Schlosser, Right and Remedy in Common Law Arbitration and in German Arbitration Law, 4(1) J. Int'l Arb. 27 (1987).
- 181) European Convention, Art. VIII. The ICSID Convention is to the same effect. ICSID Convention, Art. 48(3). In neither instance is the requirement for reasoned awards mandatory: parties are free to agree to an arbitral process culminating in an unreasoned award, but are presumed to have intended the contrary. Human rights conventions also arguably require that arbitrators state the reasons for their awards. See European Convention on Human Rights, Art. 6; Hiro Balani v. Spain, [1994] No. 18064/91 (E.C.H.R.); Van de Hurk v. Netherlands, [1994] No. 16034/90 (E.C.H.R.).
- 182) The requirement for reasoned awards is also common in state-to-state settings. See Statute of the International Court of Justice, Art. 56 (“The judgment shall state the reasons on which it is based.”); 1907 Convention for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes (“1907 Hague Convention”), Art. 79 (“The Award must give the reasons on which it is based.”). See also Gov't of Sudan v. Sudan People's Liberation Movement/Army, Final Award in PCA Case of 22 July 2009, ¶531 (“To meet the minimum requirement, an award should contain sufficient ratiocination to allow the reader to understand how the tribunal reached its binding conclusions (regardless of whether the ratiocination might persuade a disengaged third party that the award is substantively correct). As to the substantive issue, awards may be set aside for failure to state reasons where conclusions are not supported by any reasons at all, where the reasoning is incoherent or where the reasons provided are obviously contradictory or frivolous.”).
- 183) The requirement for reasoned awards appears to have had its principal origins in civil law systems. UNCITRAL, Report of the Secretary-General on the Revised Draft Set of Arbitration Rules, Ninth Session, U.N. Doc. A/CN.9/112/Add.1, VII Y.B. UNCITRAL 166, 178 (1976) (requirement for reasoned award “reflect[s] the law in many jurisdictions, particularly countries with a civil law system, to require that arbitral awards incorporate the reasons for the decision reached by the arbitrators”). Compare Draft on Arbitral Procedure Prepared by the International Law Commission at Its Fourth Session, U.N. Doc. A/CN.4/60, Art. 24(2), II Y.B. I.L.C. 60, 65 (1952) (“The award shall include a full statement of reasons.”).
- 184) See Bingham, Reasons and Reasons for Reasons, 4 Arb. Int'l 141, 145 (1988); R. Merkin, Arbitration Law ¶18.45 (1991 & Update August 2013). See also Carbonneau, Rendering Arbitral Awards With Reasons: The Elaboration of A Common Law of International Transactions, 23 Colum. J. Transnat'l L. 579 (1984-1985).
- 185) See, e.g., United Steelworkers of Am. v. Enter. Wheel Car Corp., 363 U.S. 593, 598 (U.S. S.Ct. 1960) (“Arbitrators have no obligation to the court to give their reasons for an award.”); Tame Shipping Ltd v. Easy Navigation Ltd, The “Easy Rider” [2004] EWHC 1862 (Comm) (English High Ct.) (“It is undoubtedly the case that by the time of the passing of the Arbitration Act, 1979 there was a well-established practice among arbitrators of publishing their reasons in ‘confidential’ form in those cases where the parties had not asked for the award to be stated in the form of a special case.”); Bingham, Reasons and Reasons for Reasons, 4 Arb. Int'l 141, 145 (1988); R. Morgan, The Arbitration Ordinance of Hong Kong: A Commentary 232 (1997).
- 186) See, e.g., UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 31(2); English Arbitration Act, 1979, §1(6); English Arbitration Act, 1996, §52(4); Québec Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 945(2); British Columbia International Commercial Arbitration Act, §31(3); Indian Arbitration and Conciliation Act, Art. 31(3); New Zealand Arbitration Act, Schedule 1, Art. 31(2). See generally Carbonneau, Rendering Arbitral Awards With Reasons: The Elaboration of A Common Law of International Transactions, 23 Colum. J. Transnat'l L. 579 (1984-1985); A. van den Berg, The New York Arbitration Convention of 1958 380-81 (1981).
- 187) UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 31(2). The provision excludes consent awards from the requirement that reasons be given for the award. Ibid. See §23.01[E][1].
- 188) See Report of the Secretary-General on the Analytical Commentary on Draft Text of A Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration, U.N. Doc. A/CN.9/264, Art. 31, ¶13 (1985); H. Holtzmann & J. Neuhaus, A Guide to the UNCITRAL Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration: Legislative History and Commentary 838 (1989).

- 189) See, e.g., English Arbitration Act, 1996, §52\(4\); Swiss Law on Private International Law, Art. 189\(2\); German ZPO, §1054; Netherlands Code of Civil Procedure, Arts. 1057\(e\), 1065\(1\)\(d\) (annulment of award if “award is not signed or does not contain reasons in accordance with the provision of Article 1057”); Austrian ZPO, §606\(2\); Norwegian Arbitration Act, §36; Hong Kong Arbitration Ordinance, 2013, Art. 67\(1\); Chinese Arbitration Law, Art. 54; Japanese Arbitration Law, Art. 39\(2\); Korean Arbitration Act, Art. 32\(2\); Australian International Arbitration Act, 2011, Schedule 2, Art. 31; Malaysian Arbitration Act, §33\(3\); Costa Rican Arbitration Law, 2011, Art. 31\(2\); Peruvian Arbitration Law, 2008, Art. 56\(1\); Venezuelan Commercial Arbitration Law, Art. 30; Egyptian Arbitration Law, Art. 43\(2\) (“The arbitral award shall state the reasons upon which it is based unless the parties to arbitration have agreed otherwise or the law applicable to the arbitral proceeding does not require the award to be supported by reasons ...”). See also French Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1506 (duty to give reasons in domestic awards (Art. 1482(2)) applies to international arbitration, “unless the parties have agreed otherwise”).
- 190) See, e.g., French Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1482; Belgian Judicial Code, Art. 1713\(4\); Russian Arbitration Law, Art. 31\(2\) (omitting Model Law phrase “unless otherwise agreed by the parties”); Ukrainian Arbitration Law, Art. 31\(2\); Brazilian Arbitration Law, Art. 26. See Delvolvé, *Essai sur la Motivation des Sentences Arbitrales*, 1989 Rev. arb. 149; M.-C. Rondeau-Rivier, *JurisClasseur Procédure Civile*, Fasc. 1042, ¶¶47-50 \(1996\).
- 191) See, e.g., 2012 ICC Rules, Art. 31\(2\); ICSID Rules, Rule 47\(1\)\(i\); 2012 CIETAC Rules, Art. 47\(3\); 2013 HKIAC, Art. 34\(4\); ICAC Rules, Art. 41\(1\); 2010 NAI Rules, Art. 49\(2\)\(e\).
- 192) See, e.g., 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 34\(3\); 1976 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 32\(3\); ICDR Rules, Art. 27\(2\); LCIA Rules, Art. 26\(1\); 2013 HKIAC Rules, Art. 34\(4\); 2013 VIAC Rules, Art. 36\(1\); WIPO Rules, Art. 62\(c\).

The United States and United Kingdom initially opposed the 1976 UNCITRAL Rules’ proposed requirement for reasoned awards. After debate, the Rules were drafted to require reasons, except where the parties agreed otherwise (either expressly or by implication). UNCITRAL, *Summary Record of the Tenth Meeting of the Committee of the Whole \(II\), Ninth Session*, U.N. Doc. A/CN.9/9/C.2/SR.10, 8, ¶¶62, 64, 65, 73-75 \(1976\).

- 193) Bingham, *Reasons and Reasons for Reasons*, 4 Arb. Int’l 141, 145 \(1988\). See also Fuller, *The Forms and Limits of Adjudication*, 92 Harv. L. Rev. 353, 366 \(1978\) (“Adjudication is ... a device which gives formal and institutional expression to the influence of reasoned argument in human affairs.”); Helfer & Slaughter, *Toward A Theory of Effective Supranational Adjudication*, 107 Yale L.J. 273, 320 \(1997\) (“Reasons should explain why and how a particular conclusion was reached. To reason in this context, means to give reasons for a particular result, regardless of the logic or mode of reasoning underlying those reasons.”); Shapiro, *The Giving Reasons Requirement*, 1992 U. Chi. Legal F. 179, 181 (“in the Western tradition, the very concept of political authority ... implies the capacity to give reasons”).
- 194) See [§1.05\[A\]](#); [§2.02\[C\]\[4\]](#); §13.04; [§23.03\[E\]](#).
- 195) D. Caron & L. Caplan, *The UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules: A Commentary* 801 \(2d ed. 2013\) (“Among the most important obligations that the arbitral tribunal owes the parties is the rendering of a coherent, accurate and complete award.”).
- 196) The requirement for a reasoned award arguably encourages principled decision-making, by making it more difficult to adopt unprincipled compromise decisions.
- 197) Compare M. Bühler & T. Webster, *Handbook of ICC Arbitration: Commentary, Precedents, Materials* 313 \(2d ed. 2008\) (“Providing legal reasons is often the most difficult part of drafting the Award, which often turns out to be the weakest part of the Award. ... Some view the weaknesses in legal reasoning as in part a result of the fact that most ICC Awards are not published and when they are published it is often without the names of the arbitrators who participated in drafting them.”).
- 198) Rau, *On Integrity in Private Judging*, 14 Arb. Int’l 115, 148 \(1998\).
- 199) For a sharply-critical view of lengthy awards, see Mohsen Asgari Nazari v. Islamic Repub. of Iran, *Dissenting and Concurring Opinion of Howard Holtzmann in Award in IUSCT Case No. 559-221-1 of 24 August 1994*, 30 Iran-US C.T.R. 163, 168-69 \(1994\) (“I also write separately to call attention to the Tribunal’s growing tendency to write Awards that are overly long and excessively detailed – a tendency that, regrettably, this Award exemplifies. ... A plea for brevity must, in principle, be brief. ... The issue is not a choice of literary style. At stake is the efficient use of the Tribunal’s limited time, funds and facilities – resources which are, in my view, endangered by the present practice in drafting awards.”).

- 200) See, e.g., Starrett Housing Corp. v. Islamic Repub. of Iran, Concurring Opinion of Howard H. Holtzmann in Interlocutory Award in IUSCT Case No. ITL 32-24-1 of 20 December 1983, 4 Iran-US C.T.R. 159, 179-80 (1983) (“That calls for an explanation of the Tribunal’s views, but it is not a requirement that an award regurgitate every unsupported allegation in every pleading and argument. The purpose of an award is to express and explain the decision of the Tribunal, not to serve as vehicle for polemics of any party.”); Bay Hotel & Resort Ltd v. Cavalier Constr. Co., [2001] UKPC 34 (Turks & Caicos Islands Privy Council) (rejecting claim that skeletal award was unreasoned); Navigation Sonamar Inc. v. Algoma Steamships Ltd, [1987] R.J.Q. 1346 (Québec S.Ct.); Trave Schiffahrtsgesellschaft mbH & Co. KG v. Ninemia Maritime Corp. [1986] QB 802, 807 (QB) (English High Ct.) (reasoned award is “one which states the reasons for the award in sufficient detail for the court to consider any question of law arising therefrom”); Knoepfler & Schweizer, Making of Awards and Termination of Proceedings, in P. Sarcevic (ed.), Essays on International Commercial Arbitration 160 (1989) (“Reasons should be comprehensible to the parties.”).
- 201) Bremer Handelsgesellschaft v. Westzucker [1981] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 130, 132-33 (English Ct. App.).
- 202) Gordian Runoff Ltd v. Westport Ins. Corp., [2010] NSWCA 57 (NSW Ct. App.) (rejecting requirement for reasons imposed in prior Australian authority (Oil Basins) and holding that arbitrators were not required to provide reasons equivalent to those of a court). Compare Oil Basins Ltd v. BHP Billiton Ltd, [2007] VSCA 255 (Vict. Ct. App.) (in domestic arbitration, arbitral tribunal was required to provide reasons equivalent to those of a domestic court).
- 203) See, e.g., Judgment of 16 December 2004, 2005 Rev. arb. 217 (Paris Cour d’appel) (tribunal has no obligation to list all evidence it considers).
- 204) Judgment of 3 April 2007, Case No. 123/119 (Cairo Ct. App.).
- 205) If an award reaches a badly wrong result, it may be exposed to annulment in states where judicial review of the substance of arbitrators’ decisions is available. See §§25.02[D][1]-[2]. In these instances, annulment results from the arbitral tribunal’s erroneous conclusions, rather than an absence of reasons in the award.
- 206) See §§25.05[B], pp. 3358-60.
- 207) This requirement is discussed in greater detail below. See §§25.04[D][5].
- 208) See §§23.03[B]; UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 31(2); English Arbitration Act, 1996, §52(4); Swiss Law on Private International Law, Art. 189(2); Netherlands Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1057(e); Norwegian Arbitration Act, §36; Hong Kong Arbitration Ordinance, 2013, Art. 67(1); Chinese Arbitration Law, Art. 54; Japanese Arbitration Law, Art. 39(2); Korean Arbitration Act, Art. 32(2); Australian International Arbitration Act, 2011, Schedule 2, Art. 31; Malaysian Arbitration Act, §33(3)(a).

In contrast, a few states impose a mandatory requirement for a reasoned award. See §§23.03[B]. Legislation in the arbitral seat overriding the parties’ agreement for an unreasoned award is likely not inconsistent with the New York Convention, but an unreasoned award would generally be recognized notwithstanding such mandatory requirements. See §12.02[B]; §14.03; §15.02[A]; §15.04[A][1][a]; §23.02[A]; New York Convention, Art. V(1)(d).

- 209) See §§11.03[B]; §15.02.
- 210) That is particularly true given the parties’ freedom to agree to amiable compositeur and arbitration ex aequo et bono. See §19.07. If parties are free to agree to resolution of their dispute without reference to strict legal principles, it is very difficult to see why they cannot waive a statement of the legal reasoning justifying the award.
- 211) See §§23.03[E], pp. 3046-48.
- 212) This is consistent with the approach of the European Convention. See §§23.02[B][2][c]; European Convention, Art. VIII.
- 213) See §§25.04[D][5].
- 214) See §§25.04[D][5], pp. 3046-48. Compare §§23.03[E]; French Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1520; Judgment of 22 November 1966, Gerstlé v. Merry Hull, 94 J.D.I. (Clunet) 631 (French Cour de cassation civ. 1e) (1967); Judgment of 21 August 1990, DFT 116 II 373, 375 (Swiss Federal Tribunal); Berti & Schnyder, in S. Berti et al. (eds.), International Arbitration in Switzerland Art. 190, ¶77 (2000).
- 215) See §§23.03[B].
- 216) United Steelworkers of Am. v. Enter. Wheel & Car Corp., 363 U.S. 593, 597 (U.S. S.Ct. 1960).

- 217) See, e.g., Bernhardt v. Polygraphic Co. of Am., 350 U.S. 198, 204 n.4 (U.S. S.Ct. 1956); Bosack v. Soward, 586 F.3d 1096, 1104 (9th Cir. 2009); D.H. Blair & Co. v. Gottdiener, 462 F.3d 95, 110 (2d Cir. 2006); Stark v. Sandberg, Phoenix & von Gontard, PC, 381 F.3d 793, 802 (8th Cir. 2004); Wallace v. Buttar, 378 F.3d 182, 190 (2d Cir. 2004); El Dorado Sch. Dist. v. Cont'l Cas. Co., 247 F.3d 843, 847 (8th Cir. 2001); Eljer Mfg Inc. v. Kowin Dev. Corp., 14 F.3d 1250, 1254 (7th Cir. 1994) (“an arbitrator is simply not required to state the reasons for his decision”); A.G. Edwards & Sons, Inc. v. McCullough, 967 F.2d 1401, 1403 (9th Cir. 1992); Antwine v. Prudential Bache Sec., Inc., 899 F.2d 410, 412 (5th Cir. 1990); Virgin Islands Nursing Ass’n’s Bargaining Unit v. Schneider, 668 F.2d 221, 223 (3d Cir. 1981) (rejecting argument that court should “exercise [its] supervisory power to enunciate a new requirement that arbitrators file written opinions, or, at least, findings of fact”); Repub. of Argentina v. BG Group plc, 715 F.Supp.2d 108, 124 (D.D.C. 2010) (“[The arbitrator’s] failure to provide an explanation for his decision is hardly evidence of nefarious intent on his part, especially given the well-settled principle that arbitrators have no obligation to disclose the basis upon which their awards are made.”), rev’d on other grounds, 665 F.3d 1363 (D.C. Cir. 2012); Vitarroz Corp. v. G. Willi Food Int’l Ltd, 637 F.Supp.2d 238, 247 (D.N.J. 2009); Dunhill Franchisees Trust v. Dunhill Staffing Sys., Inc., 513 F.Supp.2d 23, 32 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (“Arbitrators are not required to give reasoned analysis for their decisions, or any particular aspect of them.”). See also Rau, On Integrity in Private Judging, 14 Arb. Int’l 115, 149 (1998) (“It is striking that by contrast to the judicial forum, arbitration shares with other processes of private settlement two major characteristics: both a tendency to look for intermediate solutions – responsive to the uniqueness of each dispute – and the absence of any need to justify the outcome.”).
- 218) See §23.03[B].
- 219) See Long John Silver’s Rests., Inc. v. Cole, 514 F.3d 345, 349 (4th Cir. 2008) (arbitrator had “satisfied his obligation to render a reasoned award”); Choice Hotels Int’l, Inc. v. Patel, 2004 WL 57658, at *6 (D. Md.) (AAA Rules, which governed arbitration, provided that “the arbitrator need not render a reasoned award unless the parties request such an award in writing prior to the appointment of the arbitrator or unless the arbitrator determines that a reasoned award is appropriate”).
- 220) See §23.03[B].
- 221) See §23.03[B].
- 222) See §26.05[C][3][d]; Judgment of 29 January 1958, 1958 Rev. arb. 123, 125 (Nancy Cour d’appel) (1958) (“failure to give reasons, although contrary in principle to French procedure is not contrary to French international public policy, if it is permitted by the foreign law”); Judgment of 15 December 2009, I-4 Sch 10/09 (Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf) (refusing to deny recognition of unreasoned award; institutional rules agreed by parties did not require reasoned award); Inter-Arab Inv. Guar. Corp. v. Banque Arabe et Int’l d’Investissements, XXII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 643, 651-52 (Brussels Tribunal de Première Instance) (1997) (rejecting objections to recognition of allegedly unreasoned foreign award, on grounds that law of judicial enforcement forum (requiring reasoned awards) was not applicable to foreign awards and that requirement for reasoned award was not a principle of public policy), aff’d, Judgment of 24 January 1997, XXII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 643, 655 (Brussels Cour d’appel) (1997); Judgment of 24 November 1994, XXI Y.B. Comm. Arb. 635 (Rotterdam Rechtbank) (1996) (unreasoned award recognized where parties did not request reasons); Judgment of 2 May 1980, Efxinos Shipping Co. v. Rawi Shipping Lines Ltd, VIII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 381 (Genoa Corte d’Appello) (1983); Judgment of 8 October 1977, Bobbie Brooks, Inc. v. Lanificio Walter Banci, IV Y.B. Comm. Arb. 289, 292 (Florence Corte d’Appello) (1979) (“fact that the reasoning constitutes a principle of the Italian Constitution is not important because what is fundamental in Italian law of procedure may not be considered as such by foreign legislative and judicial authorities”).
- 223) If the parties have expressly agreed upon an unreasoned award, there is no basis for denying recognition of an award under Article V(1)(d) of the New York Convention. See §11.03[B]; §11.05[B][3]; §26.05[C][3][d]. Nor is there a basis for denying recognition of an unreasoned foreign award under Article V(2)(b), particularly in states where parties are free to agree upon an unreasoned award in locally-seated arbitrations. See §23.03[B]. Put simply, if parties are free to agree to unreasoned awards in a local arbitration, it is impossible to see why local public policy would forbid them from doing so in a foreign arbitration.
- 224) See §15.02[B]; §§15.06[A]-[B]; §26.03[B]; §26.05[C][3][d].

- 225) See, e.g., Judgment of 30 September 1999, XXXI Y.B. Comm. Arb. 640, 648 (Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht Bremen) (2006) (foreign arbitral award was scantily-reasoned (“would hardly meet the requirements of German domestic procedural public policy”), but not grounds for non-recognition under Article V(2) (b)); Judgment of 10 July 2002, XXVIII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 821, 825 (Vardo Enforcement Ct.) (2003) (“arbitral tribunals in some countries have different traditions for wording awards than Norwegian arbitral tribunals ... an award lacking a clear dispositive part, which is a characteristic of Norwegian awards, should be enforced in Norway if its conclusions are evident”); The Bay Hotel & Resort Ltd v. Cavalier Constr. Co., [2001] UKPC 34 (Turks & Caicos Islands Privy Council). See also Wells, French and American Judicial Opinions, 19 Yale J. Int’l L. 81, 92 (1994) (“Rather than a reasoned and candid essay, an opinion in the highest courts [in France] is a terse and opaque summary of the outcome and the reasons for it.”).
- 226) Judgment of 30 September 1999, XXXI Y.B. Comm. Arb. 640, 648 (Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht Bremen) (2006).
- 227) See, e.g., Mut. Shipping Corp. v. Bayshore Shipping Co., The Montan [1985] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 189 (English Ct. App.) (unreasoned award contrary to English public policy); Domotique Secant Inc. v. Smart Sys. Tech. Inc., [2005] Can. LII 36874 (Québec S.Ct.) (refusing to recognize unreasoned U.S. award); Judgment of 3 April 1987, XVII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 529 (Italian Corte di Cassazione) (1992) (public policy requires non-recognition of award with insufficient and illogical reasons). See Schlosser, Right and Remedy in Common Law Arbitration and in German Arbitration Law, 4(1) J. Int’l Arb. 27 (1987). But see Brekoulakis & Shore, UNCITRAL Model Law, Chapter VI, Article 31, in L. Mistelis (ed.), Concise International Arbitration 640, 640-41 (2010) (“Reasoning is part of the required form of an award. However, the reasoning of an award should not be considered a public policy requirement.”).
- 228) See §23.03[B].
- 229) See §25.04[C][1].
- 230) M. Bühler & T. Webster, Handbook of ICC Arbitration: Commentary, Precedents, Materials 308 (2d ed. 2008) (“Many, if not most Awards rendered in ICC arbitrations are rendered by unanimity.”). See also Brower & Rosenberg, The Death of the Two-Headed Nightingale: Why the Paulsson-van den Berg Presumption That Party-Appointed Arbitrators Are Untrustworthy Is Wrongheaded, 29 Arb. Int’l 7 (2013).
- 231) French Code of Civil Procedure, Arts. 1480, 1513; German ZPO, §1052(1); Chinese Arbitration Law, Arts. 53, 54; Indian Arbitration and Conciliation Act, Arts. 29(1), 31(2); New Zealand Arbitration Act, Schedule 1, Arts. 29, 31(1); Iranian International Commercial Arbitration Law, Arts. 29, 30(1). See also 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Arts. 33(1), 34(4); LCIA Rules, Arts. 26(3), (4).
- 232) UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 29. Article 31(2) provides that the award may be signed by only a majority of the arbitrators, provided that the reason for the omitted signature(s) is stated. UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 31(2). See §23.02[B][2][a].
- 233) Some arbitration legislation provides for majority decisions unless otherwise agreed by the parties. See French Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1513; Swiss Law on Private International Law, Art. 189(2); German ZPO, §1052(1); Belgian Judicial Code, Art. 1713(3); Netherlands Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1057(1); Austrian ZPO, §604; Italian Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 823; New Zealand Arbitration Act, Schedule 1, Art. 29.
- Other legislation simply provides for majority decisions, without reference to the parties’ agreement. See English Arbitration Act, 1996, §52(3); Chinese Arbitration Law, Art. 53; Japanese Arbitration Law, Art. 37(2). See also Hong Kong Arbitration Ordinance, 2013, Art. 65; Korean Arbitration Act, Art. 30; Australian International Arbitration Act, 2011, Schedule 2, Art. 29; Malaysian Arbitration Act, §31(1); Costa Rican Arbitration Law, 2011, Art. 29; Peruvian Arbitration Law, Art. 52(1); Iranian International Commercial Arbitration Law, Art. 29.
- 234) See, e.g., UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 31(2); German ZPO, §1054(1); Austrian ZPO, §606; Hong Kong Arbitration Ordinance, 2013, Art. 67(1); Chinese Arbitration Law, Art. 53; Japanese Arbitration Law, Art. 39(1); Korean Arbitration Act, Art. 32(1); Indian Arbitration and Conciliation Act, Art. 31(2); Australian International Arbitration Act, 2011, Schedule 2, Art. 31(1); New Zealand Arbitration Act, Schedule 1, Art. 31(1); Malaysian Arbitration Act, §33(2); Iranian International Commercial Arbitration Law, Art. 30(1); Costa Rican Arbitration Law, 2011, Art. 31(1); Venezuelan Commercial Arbitration Law, Art. 29. See also the institutional rules cited in §23.04[A].
- 235) See statutes cited in §23.04[A]. Agreements requiring unanimity among the arbitrators would obviously alter significantly the dynamics of decision-making by the tribunal. Such provisions are virtually never encountered.
- 236) See, e.g., 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 33(1); 2012 ICC Rules, Art. 31(1); ICDR Rules, Art. 26(1); LCIA Rules, Art. 26(3); 2012 CIETAC Rules, Arts. 47(5), (6); 2013 HKIAC Rules, Art. 32(1); 2010 SCC Rules, Art. 35(1); 2013 SIAC Rules, Art. 28(5); 2013 VIAC Rules, Art. 35(1).
- 237) See §13.07.
- 238) See, e.g., 2012 GAFTA Rules, Art. 9:1.
- 239) See, e.g., Cargill Int’l SA v. Sociedad Iberica de Molturacion SA [1998] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 489 (English Ct. App.).
- 240) See §12.06[C]; §12.07[B]; §13.04[E]; §13.05[D].

- 241) See §13.07[A][3]; English Arbitration Act, 1996, §20(4); French Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1513(3); Swiss Law on Private International Law, Art. 189(2); Belgian Judicial Code, Art. 1711(3); Chinese Arbitration Law, Art. 53.
- 242) See, e.g., 2012 ICC Rules, Art. 31(1); LCIA Rules, Art. 26(3); Euro-Arab Chambers of Commerce Rules of Conciliation, Arbitration and Expertise, Art. 24(2); 2013 HKIAC Rules, Art. 32(1); 2013 SIAC Rules, Art. 28(5).

Article 46 of the former International Arbitration Rules of the Zurich Chamber of Commerce adopts a similar approach, but restricted the chairman's discretion by providing that an award in favor of the prevailing party can be neither less than the lowest proposal made by the co-arbitrators, nor greater than the highest proposal.

- 243) See, e.g., German ZPO, §1052(1) ("In arbitral proceedings with more than one arbitrator, any decision of the arbitral tribunal shall be made, unless otherwise agreed by the parties, by a majority of all its members."); Japanese Arbitration Law, Art. 39(1).
- 244) See, e.g., 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 33(1); ICDR Rules, Art. 26(1). See also UNCITRAL, Report of the Secretary-General on the Revised Draft Set of Arbitration Rules, Ninth Session, U.N. Doc. A/CN.9/112/Add.1, VII Y.B. UNCITRAL 166, 178 (1976) ("If a majority of the arbitrators fail to agree on an award, the arbitral tribunal must resolve the deadlock in accordance with the relevant law and practice at the place of arbitration.").

While the UNCITRAL Working Group considered amending Article 31(1), as it appeared in the 1976 version of the UNCITRAL Rules, it ultimately retained paragraph (1) with the replacement of the word "three" by the words "more than one." Report of Working Group II (Arbitration and Conciliation), Fifty-First Session, U.N. Doc. A/CN.9/684, ¶¶52-62 (2009).

- 245) See §13.07[A][3]. See also §23.04[B]-[C].
- 246) See Schwebel, May the Majority Vote of An International Arbitral Tribunal Be Impeached?, 13 Arb. Int'l 145, 152-53 (1997).
- 247) For examples of cases where an arbitrator went along with the presiding arbitrator's views, in order to form a majority, see Starrett Housing Corp. v. Islamic Repub. of Iran, Concurring Opinion of Howard H. Holtzmann in Interlocutory Award in IUSCT Case No. ITL 32-24-1 of 19 December 1983, 4 Iran-US C.T.R. 159 (1983) ("I concur with reluctance in the Interlocutory Award in this case. I do so in order to form a majority for the key finding that the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran has expropriated property of the Claimants in Iran. ... In view of the many errors in the Interlocutory Award, it would be easier to dissent from it than to concur in it. ... My colleague, Judge Kashani having dissented, I am faced with the choice of joining the President in the present Interlocutory Award despite its faults, or accepting the prospect of an indefinite delay in progress towards a final decision of this case."); Am. Int'l Group, Inc. v. Islamic Repub. of Iran, Concurring Opinion of Richard M. Mosk in Award in IUSCT Case No. 93-2-3 of 19 December 1983, 4 Iran-US C.T.R. 111, 111-12 (1983) ("I concur in the Tribunal's Award in order that a majority can be formed. ... This Award represents a 'compromise solution' in which I have joined so that some award could be issued. Otherwise, this case heard almost a year ago, would remain undecided."); Economy Forms Corp. v. Islamic Repub. of Iran, Concurring Opinion of Howard H. Holtzmann in Award in IUSCT Case No. 55-165-1 of 14 June 1983, 3 Iran-US C.T.R. 42, 55 (1983) ("Why then do I concur in this inadequate Award, rather than dissenting from it? The answer is based on the realistic old saying that there are circumstances in which 'something is better than nothing.'"); RayGo Wagner Equip. Co. v. Iran Express Terminal Corp., Concurring and Dissenting Opinion of Richard M. Mosk in Award in IUSCT Case No. 30-16-3 of 18 March 1983, 2 Iran-US C.T.R. 141 (1983) (co-arbitrator attached concurring opinion indicating his personal views differed from majority); Granite State Mach. Co. v. Islamic Repub. of Iran, Award in IUSCT Case No. 18-30-3 of 15 December 1982, 1 Iran-US C.T.R. 442, 450-51 (1982). See also Ad Hoc Award of 31 July 1989 (I.C.J.), reprinted in Case Concerning the Arbitral Award of 31 July 1989, [1991] I.C.J. Rep. 53, 59-61 (chairman appended declaration stating his separate opinion, while also signing majority award).
- 248) Granite State Mach. Co. v. Islamic Repub. of Iran, Concurring Opinion of Richard M. Mosk in Award No. 18-30-3 of 15 December 1982, 1 Iran-US C.T.R. 442, 450-51 (1982).
- 249) Schwebel, May the Majority Vote of An International Arbitral Tribunal Be Impeached?, 13 Arb. Int'l 145, 153 (1997).
- 250) See §23.05. In some cases, an arbitrator will sign an award, notwithstanding also appending an opinion that dissents or concurs, in whole or in part; in other cases, an arbitrator may refuse entirely to sign the award.
- 251) German ZPO, §1052(2); Austrian ZPO, §604. The requirement for advance notice applies only to awards, not procedural orders.
- 252) See §13.04[B]; §15.03; §15.08[KK].
- 253) See §12.07.

- 254) For commentary, see Arroyo, *Dealing With Dissenting Opinions in the Award: Some Options for the Tribunal*, 26 ASA Bull. 437 (2008); ICC, Final Report on Dissenting and Separate Opinion of the ICC Commission on International Arbitration, 2(1) ICC Ct. Bull. 32 (1991); Lévy, Dissenting Opinions in International Arbitration in Switzerland, 5 Arb. Int'l 35 (1989); Luiso, In tema di ricasazione degli arbitri e di dissenting opinion, 2 Rivista dell' Arbitrato 496 (1992); Mosk & Ginsburg, Dissenting Opinions in International Arbitration, 15(4) Mealey's Int'l Arb. Rep. 26 (2000); Redfern, Dangerous Dissents, 71 Arb. 200 (2005); Redfern, Dissenting Opinions in International Commercial Arbitration: The Good, the Bad and the Ugly, 20 Arb. Int'l 223 (2004); Rees & Rohn, Dissenting Opinions: Can They Fulfil A Beneficial Role?, 25 Arb. Int'l 329 (2009); Smit, Dissenting Opinions in Arbitration, 15(1) ICC Ct. Bull. 37 (2004); Werner, Dissenting Opinions – Beyond Fears, 9(4) J. Int'l Arb. 23 (1992).
- 255) Compare UNCITRAL, *Summary Record of the Eleventh Meeting of the Committee of the Whole \(II\), Ninth Session*, U.N. Doc. A/CN.9/9/C.2/SR.11, ¶40 (1976) (“There was no reason for an arbitrator who disagreed with the majority decision not to sign the award; his signature would not signify his agreement with the majority decision, but would simply render the award valid. If, however, the arbitrator was physically unable to sign the award, his failure to sign should not invalidate the award.”).
- 256) See, e.g., UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 31\(1\) (“In arbitral proceedings with more than one arbitrator, the signatures of the majority of all the members of the tribunal shall suffice, provided that the reason for any omitted signature is stated.”); French Code of Civil Procedure, Arts. 1480\(3\), 1513\(2\); German ZPO, §1054\(1\); Netherlands Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1057\(3\); Austrian ZPO, §606\(1\); Hong Kong Arbitration Ordinance, 2013, Art. 67\(1\); Chinese Arbitration Law, Art. 54; Japanese Arbitration Law, Art. 39\(1\); Korean Arbitration Act, Art. 32\(1\); Indian Arbitration and Conciliation Act, Art. 31\(2\); Malaysian Arbitration Act, §33\(2\); Costa Rican Arbitration Law, 2011, Art. 31\(1\); Peruvian Arbitration Law, Art. 55\(1\); Iranian International Commercial Arbitration Law, Art. 30\(1\).
- 257) For examples of dissenting or separate opinions, see TME Int'l, Inc. v. Islamic Repub. of Iran, Award in IUSCT Case No. 473-357-1 of 12 March 1990, XVI Y.B. Comm. Arb. 349 (1991); Société d'Economie Mixte Guineo v. Martin Marietta Aluminium, Inc., Partial Ad Hoc Award of 12 September 1986 & Final Ad Hoc Award of 21 December 1988, XV Y.B. Comm. Arb. 11, 21, 29 (1990). See also Arroyo, *Dealing With Dissenting Opinions in the Award: Some Options for the Tribunal*, 26 ASA Bull. 437 (2008) (discussing possibilities as to how tribunal may proceed if arbitrator submits dissenting opinion).
- 258) See [B v. A \[2010\] 2 CLC 1, 11 \(QB\)](#) (English High Ct.) (“[the Dissenting Opinion] is not in my view formally part of the Award of the Tribunal”) (citing Final Report on Dissenting and Separate Opinions Prepared by A Working Party of the ICC Commission on International Arbitration); W. Craig, W. Park & J. Paulsson, *International Chamber of Commerce Arbitration* ¶19.06 (3d ed. 2000) (“A dissenting opinion is thus extraneous to the award.”) (emphasis in original); Rees & Rohn, *Dissenting Opinions: Can They Fulfil A Beneficial Role?*, 25 Arb. Int'l 329, 339 \(2009\) (“A dissenting opinion does not form part of the award itself; it is merely an independent opinion which remains foreign to the award and which neither affects the ruling nor the reasons.”).
- 259) See [§23.05\[A\]](#).
- 260) See 1899 Convention for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes (First Hague Conference), Art. 52(2); Statute of the International Court of Justice, Art. 57; ILC Model Rules on Arbitral Procedure, 1958, Art. 28(2) (“Unless otherwise provided in the compromis, any member of the tribunal may attach his separate or dissenting opinion to the award.”). See also ICSID Rules, Rule 47(3) (any member of tribunal “may attach his individual opinion to the award, whether he dissents from the majority or not, or a statement of his dissent”). Compare 1907 Hague Convention, Art. 79 (no reference to dissent); Appellate Body Report: United States-Subsidies on Upland Cotton, WTO Doc. WT/DS267/AB/R, ¶631 (2005) (first dissenting opinion in WTO proceedings).
- 261) See, e.g., Holtzmann & Donovan, *National Report for USA \(2005\)*, in J. Paulsson \(ed.\), *International Handbook on Commercial Arbitration* 1, 50 (1984 & Update 2005) (“In practice, arbitrators in US domestic arbitrations do not write opinions stating the reasons for their dissents, just as they do not write opinions stating the reasons for their awards.”); Lévy, Dissenting Opinions in International Arbitration in Switzerland, 5 Arb. Int'l 35 (1989); Redfern, Dissenting Opinions in International Commercial Arbitration: The Good, the Bad and the Ugly, 20 Arb. Int'l 223, 224 (2004) (“In Continental Europe, dissenting opinions were traditionally unknown.”). See also van den Berg, *Dissenting Opinions by Party-Appointed Arbitrators in Investment Arbitration*, in M. Arsanjani et al. \(eds.\), *Looking to the Future: Essays on International Law in Honor of W. Michael Reisman* 821, 824 (2010).
- 262) See, e.g., Québec Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 945; Spanish Arbitration Act, 2011, Art. 37\(3\); Chinese Arbitration Law, Art. 53; Bulgarian Law on International Commercial Arbitration, Art. 39\(1\); Brazilian Arbitration Law, Art. 24\(2\).
- 263) UNCITRAL, 2012 Digest of Case Law on the Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration 126 (2012) (“Model Law neither requires nor prohibits ‘dissenting opinions’”).
- 264) H. Holtzmann & J. Neuhaus, *A Guide to the UNCITRAL Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration: Legislative History and Commentary* 837, 856 (1989).

- 265) See, e.g., Blessing, The New International Arbitration Law in Switzerland: A Significant Step Towards Liberalism, 5(2) J. Int'l Arb. 9, 67 (1988); P. Sanders & A. van den Berg, The Netherlands Arbitration Act 1986 Art. 33 (1987).
- 266) See, e.g., ICSID Rules, Rule 47(3); 2012 CIETAC Rules, Art. 47(5).
- 267) 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Arts. 34(3), (4).

The drafters of the 1976 UNCITRAL Rules rejected a proposal to prohibit dissenting opinions. UNCITRAL, Report of the Secretary-General on the Revised Draft Set of Arbitration Rules, Ninth Session, U.N. Doc. A/CN.9/112/Add.1, VII Y.B. UNCITRAL 166, 178 (1976) (original draft of UNCITRAL Rules contained prohibition on dissenting opinions, which was deleted during drafting).

The Iran-United States Claims Tribunal adopted the UNCITRAL Rules with an amendment to expressly permit dissenting and separate opinions. Iran-US Claims Tribunal Rules of Procedure, Art. 32 ("any arbitrator may request that his dissenting vote and the reasons therefore be recorded").

- 268) The 2012 ICC Rules do not expressly address the question of dissenting opinions. A working group considered the subject, issuing a final report in 1988 that recognized the possibility (and practice) of dissenting opinions in ICC arbitrations. ICC, Final Report on Dissenting and Separate Opinion of the ICC Commission on International Arbitration, 2(1) ICC Ct. Bull. 32 (1991).
- 269) See, e.g., Hausmaninger, Rights and Obligations of the Arbitrator With Regard to the Parties and the Arbitral Institution – A Civil Law Viewpoint, in ICC, The Status of the Arbitrator 47 (ICC Ct. Bull. Spec. Supp. 1995); ICC, Final Report on Dissenting and Separate Opinion of the ICC Commission on International Arbitration, 2(1) ICC Ct. Bull. 32 (1991).
- 270) Noble China Inc. v. Lei, (1998) 42 O.R.3d 69 (Ontario Super. Ct.) (rejecting application to annul award, but ordering release of dissenting opinion; also refusing to admit into evidence in annulment proceeding dissenting arbitrator's affidavit regarding tribunal's deliberations and refusal to release dissenting opinion).
- 271) See §23.03; Interim Award in ICC Case No. 3879, XI Y.B. Comm. Arb. 127 (1986); Ad Hoc Award of 29 December 1993, 9(12) Mealey's Int'l Arb. Rep. A-1 (1994). The obligation of the arbitrators to provide a reasoned explanation for an adjudicative decision almost inevitably implies that members of the tribunal who are unable to agree with all or important parts of the decision have to state this in the award, together with their reasons for dissenting.
- 272) The process of constituting an international arbitral tribunal is discussed above. See §12.03[A]. One may also fairly question whether prohibitions on dissenting opinions are fully consistent with the model of an adjudicative process.
- 273) E. Gaillard & J. Savage (eds.), Fouchard Gaillard Goldman on International Commercial Arbitration ¶¶1399-1402 (1999); La Spada, in T. Zuberbühler, C. Müller & P. Habegger (eds.), Swiss Rules of International Arbitration: Commentary Art. 43, ¶18 (2005).

Some authorities have suggested that a dissenting opinion is permitted only where the parties have expressly authorized it. See Geimer, in R. Zöller (ed.), Zivilprozessordnung §1052, ¶5 (26th ed. 2007) ("A dissenting opinion is only admitted given express permission in the parties' arbitration agreement."); J.-P. Lachmann, Handbuch für die Schiedsgerichtspraxis ¶1018 (2d ed. 2002) ("It is necessary to require a corresponding agreement of the parties for a dissenting opinion to be admissible."). The correct approach is the converse, treating dissenting opinions as an inherent aspect of the adjudicative process unless affirmatively excluded.

- 274) Some French judicial decisions held that dissenting opinions were inconsistent with the confidentiality of the arbitrators' deliberations. Judgment of 15 October 1991, Affichage Giraudy v. Consorts Judlin, 1991 Rev. arb. 643, 647 (Paris Cour d'appel), Note, Jarrosson ("The secrecy of deliberation is not just a traditional legal rule."); Judgment of 9 November 1945, 1946:1 Gaz. Pal. 22 (French Cour de cassation civ. Soc.) (arbitrators required to maintain secrecy of deliberations and therefore are not allowed to reveal arbitrators' votes). See §13.04[C]; §15.08[J]; §20.06 for a discussion of the secrecy of the arbitrators' deliberations.
- 275) See Geimer, in R. Zöller (ed.), Zivilprozessordnung §1052, ¶5 (26th ed. 2007) ("Absent different agreement by the parties, the arbitrators have to keep the secrecy of deliberations (including the voting result). ... A dissenting opinion is only admitted given express permission in the parties' arbitration agreement."); J. Robert, L'arbitrage: Droit interne, Droit international privé ¶360 (5th ed. 1983) ("Although it is customary under a certain number of foreign laws, notably Anglo-Saxon, the dissenting opinion is prohibited in French domestic law since it violates the secrecy of the tribunal's deliberations."). For a comprehensive discussion, see Arroyo, Dealing With Dissenting Opinions in the Award: Some Options for the Tribunal, 26 ASA Bull. 437, 457-58 (2008).

- 276) Despite earlier French judicial authority questioning dissenting opinions, more recent French authority rejects this view. Judgment of 9 October 2008, 2009 Rev. arb. 352, Note, Betto & Canivet (Paris Cour d'appel) ("secrecy of the arbitrators' deliberations, which is not a cause of annulment of the award neither under international nor under domestic law, does not prevent the expression of dissenting or separate opinions"). See also Arroyo, Dealing With Dissenting Opinions in the Award: Some Options for the Tribunal, 26 ASA Bull. 437, 459 (2008) ("scientific debate [about dissenting opinions in international arbitration] has become stale and redundant").
- 277) See §23.04[A]. See also Rees & Rohn, Dissenting Opinions: Can They Fulfil A Beneficial Role?, 25 Arb. Int'l 329, 337-38 (2009) ("As long as the dissenting opinion is restricted to issues of evaluation of facts and /or interpretation of the applicable law, and as long as it does not reveal who said what and when and for what reason, there is no violation of confidentiality. Only when the real substance of the tribunal's deliberations is revealed, i.e., the views expressed individually by the arbitrators, their thought processes and the remarks made in the bargaining process through which they tried to reach unanimity or finally formed a majority, would it constitute a violation of the rule of secrecy.").
- 278) See §23.05[A].
- 279) See §23.03.
- 280) Kirby, With Arbitrators, Less Can Be More: Why the Conventional Wisdom on the Benefits of Having Three Arbitrators May Be Overrated, 26 J. Int'l Arb. 337, 346, n.37 (2009) ("Most unanimous decisions are unanimous because the arbitrators actually agree on the material points. However, a decision may be unanimous even though material differences of opinion exist within the tribunal. This is because some arbitrators are reluctant (usually for reasons of professional courtesy and a desire to protect the secrecy of deliberations) to issue dissenting opinions, or even highlight points of disagreement in the text of a decision. As a result, an arbitrator who disagrees with the majority will sometimes nevertheless agree to sign on to a decision once the issues are discussed and it becomes clear that his view will not carry the day.").
- 281) See §13.04; W. Craig, W. Park & J. Paulsson, International Chamber of Commerce Arbitration ¶19.06 (3d ed. 2000) ("The view of the present authors is that while dissenting opinion may exceptionally be justified, they are generally to be discouraged."). As discussed below, these duties are particularly weighty with respect to co-arbitrators, nominated by one of the parties. See §23.05[B], p. 3058 n. 288.
- 282) See §12.05[B]; §13.04[A][1].
- 283) See Redfern, Dangerous Dissents, 70 Arb. 200, 204 (2005) ("reprehensible" dissent "does not merely disagree with his or her colleagues on issues of fact or law, or on their reasoning, but instead takes the opportunity of issuing a dissenting opinion to attack the way in which the arbitration itself was conducted"); Schwartz, The Rights and Duties of ICC Arbitrators, in ICC, The Status of the Arbitrator 67, 84 (ICC Ct. Bull. Spec. Supp. 1995) ("Even if an arbitrator disagrees with the decisions of his or her co-arbitrators and ultimately with the award rendered, it is therefore not proper for the arbitrator to attempt to sabotage the decisions of the majority.").
- 284) For examples of dissenting opinions that have revealed the confidential aspects of the tribunal's deliberations, see Unidyne Corp. v. Islamic Repub. of Iran, Award in IUSCT Case No. 551-368-3 of 10 November 1993, 29 Iran-US C.T.R. 349, 355-56 (1993); Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Islamic Repub. of Iran, Award in IUSCT Case No. 425-39-2 of 29 June 1989, 21 Iran-US C.T.R. 256 (1989); Granger Assocs. v. Islamic Repub. of Iran, Award in IUSCT Case No. 320-184-1 of 20 October 1987, 16 Iran-US C.T.R. 317, 332 (1988) ("It is also wrong for my colleagues to confirm the improper actions of the Claimant in pestering the Chamber Clerk ..."; "It is completely unjustifiable to contend, as my colleagues do ..."; "My colleagues have gone a long way in their speculation ..."); RayGo Wagner Equip. Co. v. Star Line Iran Co., Award No. 20-17-3 of 15 December 1982, 1 Iran-US C.T.R. 424 (1981).
- 285) See, e.g., Eureko BV v. Repub. of Poland, Partial Ad Hoc Award of 19 August 2005, Dissenting Opinion ¶6, available at ita.law.uvic.ca ("This confusion is still visible throughout the Tribunal's reasons and probably contributed to a certain extent to its decision."; "both inaccurate and groundless"); CME Czech Repub. BV v. Czech Repub., Partial Ad Hoc Award of 13 September 2001, Dissenting Opinion ¶4 ("The mistakes and errors in the legal conclusions have been basically [produced] by the fact that the two arbitrators seem to have firstly agreed upon the final decision as it is expressed in the Award and only thereafter they looked for the arguments to the favor of the Claimant.").
- 286) See, e.g., Abyei Arbitration, Dissenting Opinion of Judge Al-Khasawneh in PCA Case No. GOS-SPLM 53,391 of 22 July 2009 ("The question therefore, and it is a disquieting one, is why does a Tribunal, provided with all the available evidence and guided through it by learned counsel on both sides, and moreover provided with the benefit of hindsight that all reviewing bodies have, and in a position to assess the evidence before it comprehensively, elect, instead, to look at reality not in a holistic manner but in a disconnected way, making wild flights of fancy on the basis of misinterpreted sentences taken out of context so as to make dead men say what they never said or intended?").

- 287) See, e.g., A v. B [2010] EWHC 1626, ¶13 (Comm) (English High Ct.) (“The dissenting arbitrator issued a Dissenting Opinion of some 19 pages. It is expressed in unusually trenchant terms. ... The dissenting arbitrator was highly critical of her colleagues. They had, she said, decided to ignore the parties’ agreement to submit the SPA to Spanish law and had in an arbitrary fashion proceeded to decide the dispute “ex aequo et bono.”).
- 288) M. de Boissésou, Le droit français de l’arbitrage interne et international ¶781 (2d ed. 1990). See also Rees & Rohn, Dissenting Opinions: Can They Fulfil A Beneficial Role?, 25 Arb. Int’l 329, 336 (2009) (“possibility of issuing a dissenting opinion provides the minority arbitrator with an easy way out of the deliberations as soon as he suspects that he cannot prevail with his opinion, and some arbitrators might even feel pressure to please and support the party that appointed them and to disclose that support”); van den Berg, Dissenting Opinions by Party-Appointed Arbitrators in Investment Arbitration, in M. Arsanjani et al. (eds.), Looking to the Future: Essays on International Law in Honor of W. Michael Reisman 821, 825 (2010).
- 289) Tokios Tokelés v. Ukraine, Dissenting Opinion by Chairman Prosper Weil in Decision on Jurisdiction in ICSID Case No. ARB/02/18 of 29 April 2004, 20 ICSID Rev. Foreign Inv. L.J. 205, 245 (2005) (“The chairman of an arbitral tribunal dissenting from a decision drafted by his two colleagues: this is not a frequent occurrence.”).
- 290) Brower & Rosenberg, The Death of the Two-Headed Nightingale: Why the Paulsson-van den Berg Presumption That Party-Appointed Arbitrators Are Untrustworthy Is Wrongheaded, 29 Arb. Int’l 7, 27 (2013) (“dissenting opinions play a critical role in fostering the legitimacy of international arbitration”).
- 291) See also van den Berg, Dissenting Opinions by Party-Appointed Arbitrators in Investment Arbitration, in M. Arsanjani et al. (eds.), Looking to the Future: Essays on International Law in Honor of W. Michael Reisman 821, 828 (2010) (“a dissent should not be a platform for preparing for annulment”).
- 292) It is theoretically possible that an arbitrator will witness improprieties in the course of the arbitral proceedings, which go to the integrity of the proceeding. In that event, the arbitrator might properly raise these matters in a dissenting or separate opinion. Doing so would be an exceptional action, restricted to extraordinary circumstances with any such comments being accordingly limited.
- 293) Judgment of 15 May 2003, Czech Repub. v. CME Czech Repub. BV, Case No. T 8735-01 (Svea Ct. App.), reprinted in S. Jarvin & A. Magnusson (eds.), International Arbitration Court Decisions 663, 678-79 (2006). The court also discussed the process of deliberations, emphasizing the need for flexibility, cost-effectiveness and freedom to fix deadlines for presenting views. See also §15.08[J]; §25.04[B][4]; §26.05[C][3][d].
- 294) See, e.g., Bank Mellat v. GAA Dev. & Constr. Co. [1988] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 44 (QB) (English High Ct.) (obligation to deliberate with dissenting arbitrator is dispensed with only where it would be futile); Re Pering & Keymer [1835] 3 Ad. & El. 245 (English K.B.) (annulling award because dissenting arbitrator was not given opportunity to present views to other arbitrators).
- 295) See §25.04[B][4]; §26.05[C][3][d].
- 296) See §13.07[A][2] and §15.08[J] for a discussion of the arbitrators’ rights and duties during deliberations and the role of the presiding arbitrator in deliberations.
- 297) Paulsson, Moral Hazard in International Dispute Resolution, 8(2) Transnat’l Disp. Mgt 12 (2011); van den Berg, Dissenting Opinions by Party-Appointed Arbitrators in Investment Arbitration, in M. Arsanjani et al. (eds.), Looking to the Future: Essays on International Law in Honor of W. Michael Reisman 821, 825 (2010) (“That nearly 100 percent of the dissents [in investment arbitration] favour the party that appointed the dissenter raises concerns about neutrality.”).
- 298) See Brower & Rosenberg, The Death of the Two-Headed Nightingale: Why the Paulsson-van den Berg Presumption That Party-Appointed Arbitrators Are Untrustworthy Is Wrongheaded, 29 Arb. Int’l 7 (2013); C. Rogers, Ethics in International Arbitration (2014).
- 299) See Brower & Rosenberg, The Death of the Two-Headed Nightingale: Why the Paulsson-van den Berg Presumption That Party-Appointed Arbitrators Are Untrustworthy Is Wrongheaded, 29 Arb. Int’l 7 (2013).
- 300) See §12.03[A][2].
- 301) See §12.03[A][2].
- 302) International arbitration conventions do not address the issue of time limits for awards.
- 303) See, e.g., UNCITRAL Model Law; U.S. FAA; English Arbitration Act, 1996; Swiss Law on Private International Law.
- 304) See §15.02[B]. Some legislation expressly confirms this discretion. See, e.g., Netherlands Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1048 (“The arbitral tribunal is free to determine the time when the award shall be made.”); Peruvian Arbitration Law, Art. 53 (“The controversy must be notified and decided according to the time established by the parties, by the arbitral rules, or in default, by the arbitral tribunal.”).
- 305) See §15.08[O]; §25.04[D][3]; §26.05[C][5][c].

306) French Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1463\(1\). This time limit may be extended by agreement or by a French court. French Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1463\(2\). The limit does not apply in international arbitration. French Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1506.

Historically, English arbitration legislation imposed a three-month limit for the making of an award. English Arbitration Act, 1950, §13. The English Arbitration Act, 1996, abrogated this limitation.

307) See, e.g., Belgian Judicial Code, Art. 1713\(2\) (six months); Italian Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 820 (domestic arbitration) (time limit of 240 days unless otherwise agreed); Brazilian Arbitration Law, Art. 23 (time limit of six months unless otherwise agreed).

308) See [§11.03\[C\]\[2\]](#); [§11.03\[D\]\[2\]\[b\]](#).

309) See [§11.05\[B\]\[2\]](#); E. Gaillard & J. Savage (eds.), Fouchard Gaillard Goldman on International Commercial Arbitration ¶1382 (1999).

310) That is the case in France. Article 1463 of the French Code of Civil Procedure only applies to domestic arbitrations and not to international arbitration (see Art. 1506). See also Judgment of 15 June 1994, Sonidep v. Sigmoil, 1995 Rev. arb. 88 (French Cour de cassation civ. 1e) (under earlier French legislation); E. Gaillard & J. Savage (eds.), Fouchard Gaillard Goldman on International Commercial Arbitration ¶1384 (1999) (same). Compare Belgian Judicial Code, Art. 1680\(3\).

311) See, e.g., 2012 ICC Rules, Art. 30(1) (six months, subject to extensions); 2012 LMAA Terms, Art. 20 (six weeks); 2010 SCC Rules, Art. 37; 2013 SIAC Rules, Art. 5(2)(d) (expedited procedure).

Most institutional rules are to the contrary, containing no time limits (including the UNCITRAL, ICDR and LCIA Rules). See also [§15.08\[O\]](#); [§25.04\[C\]\[5\]](#); [§26.05\[C\]\[5\]](#).

312) See [§15.08\[O\]](#); G. Born, International Arbitration and Forum Selection Agreements: Drafting and Enforcing 104-05 (4th ed. 2013).

313) See, e.g., Art & Sound Ltd v. W. End Litho Ltd [1992] 1 EG 110 (Ch) (English High Ct.); Bradley & Sons v. Telefusion Ltd [1981] 259 EG 337 (Ch) (English High Ct.); Judgment of 16 June 1976, Dame Krebs v. Milton Stern, 1977 Rev. arb. 269 (French Cour de cassation civ. 1e); Judgment of 22 January 1982, Appareils Dragon v. Construiport, 1982 Rev. arb. 91 (Paris Cour d'appel).

314) See [§15.02\[B\]](#).

315) Judgment of 15 June 1994, Communauté urbaine de Casablanca v. Degrémont, 1995 Rev. arb. 88, 88 (French Cour de cassation civ. 1e).

316) French Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1463\(2\) (applicable in both domestic and international arbitration); E. Gaillard & J. Savage (eds.), Fouchard Gaillard Goldman on International Commercial Arbitration ¶1387 (1999).

As discussed above, under French law, the extension of time limits must result from judicial action or the parties' agreement. See, e.g., Judgment of 18 October 2001, 2002 Rev. arb. 899 (French Cour de cassation civ. 2e), Note, Betto (allowing a tacit extension).

317) English Arbitration Act, 1996, §50. The possibility of judicial extension can be excluded by agreement.

318) Belgian Judicial Code, Art. 1680\(3\).

319) See, e.g., Italian Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 820 (arbitral tribunal may extend deadline once).

320) Art & Sound Ltd v. W. End Litho Ltd [1992] 1 EG 110 (Ch) (English High Ct.); Bradley & Sons v. Telefusion Ltd [1981] 259 EG 337 (Ch) (English High Ct.).

321) For decisions under Article 1484 (domestic arbitration) and Article 1502 (international arbitration) of the former French New Code of Civil Procedure, see Judgment of 19 November 2009, 2011 Rev. arb. 152 (Paris Cour d'appel); Judgment of 22 September 1995, Dubois et Vanderwalle v. Boots Frites BV, 1996 Rev. arb. 101 (Paris Cour d'appel); Judgment of 17 January 1984, Bloch et Fils v. Delatrae Mockfjaerd, 1984 Rev. arb. 498 (Paris Cour d'appel); E. Gaillard & J. Savage (eds.), Fouchard Gaillard Goldman on International Commercial Arbitration ¶1388 (1999).

The revised French arbitration statute does not explicitly provide that an award shall be set aside if it was rendered outside the statutory time limit. Instead, the new provisions state that "an award may ... be set aside where: (1) the arbitral tribunal wrongly upheld or declined jurisdiction" or where "(3) the arbitral tribunal ruled without complying with the mandate conferred upon it." French Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1492 (domestic), Art. 1520 (international). See Derains & Kiffer, National Report for France (2013), in J. Paulsson (ed.), International Handbook on Commercial Arbitration 1 (1984 & Update 2013). See also [§25.04\[C\]\[5\]](#), pp. 3267-68.

322) Judgment of 21 February 1978, X Y.B. Comm. Arb. 418 (Austrian Oberster Gerichtshof) (1985) ("Proof of notification of the claim and of the arbitral award to the respondent is, according to Art. IV of the Convention, not a requirement for an application for enforcement."). See van Houtte, The Delivery of Awards to the Parties, 21 Arb. Int'l 177 (2005).

- 323) UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 31\(4\). See H. Holtzmann & J. Neuhaus, A Guide to the UNCITRAL Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration: Legislative History and Commentary 856 (1989); P. Sanders, The Work of UNCITRAL on Arbitration and Conciliation 123 (2d ed. 2004).
- 324) See, e.g., Finnish Arbitration Act, §37; Italian Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 825; Indian Arbitration and Conciliation Act, Art. 31\(5\); New Zealand Arbitration Act, Schedule 1, Art. 31\(4\); Brazilian Arbitration Law, Art. 29; Iranian International Commercial Arbitration Law, Art. 30\(4\).
- 325) See, e.g., German ZPO, §1054\(4\); Netherlands Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1058\(1\)\(a\); Austrian ZPO, §606\(4\).
- 326) Swiss Law on Private International Law, Art. 190 (“The award is final from the time when it is communicated.”).
- 327) Belgian Judicial Code, Art. 1713\(8\); Costa Rican Arbitration Law, 2011, Art. 31\(4\); Venezuelan Commercial Arbitration Law, Art. 31.
- 328) English Arbitration Act, 1996, §55\(1\). In practice, this permits the parties to agree that an arbitrator may inform the parties that the award is available to be collected or that such a procedure can be impliedly agreed from common practice.
- 329) English Arbitration Act, 1996, §55\(2\); R. Merkin, Arbitration Law ¶18.32 (1991 & Update August 2013).
- 330) See Dist. Council 1707 v. Hope Day Nursery, Inc., 2006 WL 17791, at *3 (S.D.N.Y.) (applying AAA Labor Arbitration Rule 40 that “[p]arties shall accept as legal delivery of the award the placing of the award or a true copy thereof in the mail by the AAA, addressed to the party at its last known address or to its representative; personal service of the award; or the filing of the award in any other manner that is permitted by law”); Skaarup Shipping Corp. v. Sea Marshall Navigation, Ltd., 1995 WL 110371, at *1-2 (S.D.N.Y.) (applying service of award provision in Society of Maritime Arbitrators arbitration rules as agreed by parties, such that “[p]arties shall accept as legal delivery of the award (a) the placing of the award or a true copy thereof in the mail by the arbitrator(s), addressed to such party at his last known address or to his attorney, or (b) personal service of the award”).

U.S. courts generally construe “notice” in contracts according to its ordinary meaning. Detroit Coil Co. v. Int’l Ass’n of Machinists & Aerospace Workers, 594 F.2d 575, 580 (6th Cir. 1979) (“The term ‘notified,’ as used in the Agreement, must be given its ordinary meaning in the absence of evidence indicating that the parties to this contract intended to expand or otherwise deviate from that meaning. The word ‘notified,’ in its ordinary usage, means the completed act of bringing information to the attention of another.”). Where issues of service or notification raise due process concerns, courts apply “the forum state’s standards of due process,” which requires notice “reasonably calculated, under all the circumstances, to apprise interested persons of the pendency of the action and afford them an opportunity to present their objections.” Compagnie des Bauxites de Guinee v. Hammermills, Inc., 1992 WL 122712, at *4 (D.D.C.) (quoting Mullane v. Cent. Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306, 314 (U.S. S.Ct. 1950)). See also Geotech Lizenz AG v. Evergreen Sys., Inc., 697 F.Supp. 1248, 1263 (E.D.N.Y. 1988).

- 331) Indeed, as noted above, the Model Law provides “[a]fter an award is made,” it shall be delivered to the parties. UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 31\(4\).

Different national arbitration statutes deal differently with the question whether an “original” or a signed “copy” of the award is to be delivered to the parties. Compare German ZPO, §1054\(4\) (originals of award delivered to parties) and Belgian Judicial Code, Art. 1713\(8\) (same) and Austrian ZPO, §606\(4\) (same) and Italian Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 825 (same) with English Arbitration Act, 1996, §55 (one original with signed copies) and Netherlands Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1058\(1\) (same) and Swedish Arbitration Act, §31\(3\) (same). There is no apparent substantive difference between these approaches, save arguably in the extremely unlikely case of differences in different versions of signed originals.

- 332) Swiss Law on Private International Law, Art. 190. See Berti & Schnyder, in S. Berti et al. (eds.), International Arbitration in Switzerland Art. 190, ¶¶6 et seq. (2000).
- 333) See §24.02.
- 334) See, e.g., UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 33\(1\) (“Within thirty days of receipt of the award ...”); French Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1486\(1\); Netherlands Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1060\(1\); Japanese Arbitration Law, Art. 41\(2\); §§24.03[A]-[B].

- 335) See, e.g., UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 34\(3\) (“three months from the date on which the party making that application had received the award”); French Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1494\(2\), 1519; Swiss Law on Private International Law, Art. 190\(3\) (“time-limit runs from the communication of the decision”); Hong Kong Arbitration Ordinance, 2013, Art. 81\(1\); Chinese Arbitration Law, Art. 59; Japanese Arbitration Law, Art. 44\(2\) (“from the date on which the party making the application had received the notice by the sending of a copy of the arbitral award”); Korean Arbitration Act, Art. 36\(3\); Australian International Arbitration Act, 2011, Schedule 2, Art. 34\(3\); Malaysian Arbitration Act, §7\(4\); Peruvian Arbitration Law, Art. 64 (“twenty days from the notification of the award”); Venezuelan Commercial Arbitration Law, Art. 43 (“five working days following the notification of the award or of the decision that corrects, clarifies or completes it”). See also [§24.02\[B\]](#). Compare English Arbitration Act, 1996, §70\(3\) (date award was rendered).
- 336) UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 32\(1\); French Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1485; Hong Kong Arbitration Ordinance, 2013, Art. 68; Japanese Arbitration Law, Art. 40\(1\); Korean Arbitration Act, Art. 33\(1\); Australian International Arbitration Act, 2011, Schedule 2, Art. 32\(1\); Malaysian Arbitration Act, §34\(1\).
- 337) See, e.g., 2012 ICC Rules, Art. 34; ICDR Rules, Art. 27; LCIA Rules, Art. 26; DIS Rules, §36; 2013 VIAC Rules, Art. 36(5). Compare 2012 Swiss Rules, Art. 32(6).
- 338) See, e.g., UNCITRAL Model Law, Art. 31\(4\); English Arbitration Act, 1996, §55\(2\); German ZPO, §1054\(4\); Netherlands Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1058\(1\)\(a\); Austrian ZPO, §606\(4\); Hong Kong Arbitration Ordinance, 2013, Art. 67\(1\); Japanese Arbitration Law, Art. 39\(5\); Korean Arbitration Act, Art. 32\(4\); Australian International Arbitration Act, 2011, Schedule 2, Art. 31\(4\); Malaysian Arbitration Act, §33\(5\); Venezuelan Commercial Arbitration Law, Art. 31.
- 339) See [§15.04\[B\]\[2\]](#); [§25.04\[B\]\[1\]](#); [§26.05\[C\]\[3\]\[a\]](#).
- 340) See Chapter 20 (especially [§20.03\[D\]](#)).
- 341) French Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1484\(3\) (domestic arbitration), Art. 1519\(3\) (international arbitration); Finnish Arbitration Act, §37.
- 342) This is increasingly common with the widespread usage of emails and fax transmissions.
- 343) See, e.g., Belgian Judicial Code, Arts. 1678\(1\), 1716. See also van Houtte, The Delivery of Awards to the Parties, 21 Arb. Int’l 177, 180-81 (2005).
- 344) These requirements can be complex and highly-formalistic. For the U.S. position, see G. Born & P. Rutledge, International Civil Litigation in United States Courts 871-81 (5th ed. 2011).
- Equally complex and formalistic are European requirements. EC Regulation 1348/2000. As discussed above, similar issues are sometimes raised in connection with other formal written instruments in the arbitral process (e.g., service of the Request for Arbitration). See [§15.08\[KK\]](#).
- 345) The Hague Convention on the Service Abroad of Judicial and Extrajudicial Documents is the principal example of an international treaty regulating cross-border service of process in national court proceedings. See G. Born & P. Rutledge, International Civil Litigation in United States Courts 875-77 (5th ed. 2011). The Convention provides for service via a Central Authority mechanism, with alternative means where Member States have not objected. Id. at 876-77. In general, the formalities and delays that attend service under the Hague Service Convention make it unsuitable for international arbitration. See also [§15.08\[B\]](#).
- 346) Compare van Houtte, The Delivery of Awards to the Parties, 21 Arb. Int’l 177, 184-85 (2005).
- 347) See, e.g., 2012 ICC Rules, Art. 34(1) (“The Secretariat shall notify to the parties the text signed by the Arbitral Tribunal.”); ICDR Rules, Art. 27(5) (“Copies of the award shall be communicated to the parties by the administrator.”); LCIA Rules, Art. 26(5) (“The sole arbitrator or chairman shall be responsible for delivering the award to the LCIA Court, which shall transmit certified copies to the parties.”); 2013 VIAC Rules, Art. 36(5) (“The award shall be served on the parties by the Secretary General.”).
- 348) One exception is the English Arbitration Act, 1996, §55\(1\), which recognizes the parties’ autonomy to agree upon modes of notification of the award. This express recognition reflects the implied understanding that exists under other national legal systems.
- 349) See §15.02.
- 350) Belgian Judicial Code, Art. 1713\(8\); Netherlands Code of Civil Procedure, Art. 1060; Korean Arbitration Act, Art 32\(4\).
- 351) See [§1.01\[C\]\[2\]](#); [§1.04\[A\]\[1\]](#).
- 352) For example, the revised Spanish Arbitration Act abandoned the historic requirement that the award be deposited with a notary, which had resulted in awards being set aside when not complied with. See Mullerat, Spain Joins the Model Law, 20 Arb. Int’l 139, 146 (2004).

- 353) For commentary, see Y. Derains & R. Kreindler, in ICC Dossiers, Evaluation of Damages in International Arbitration (2006); Jarvin, Non-Pecuniary Remedies: The Practices of Declaratory Relief and Specific Performance in International Commercial Arbitration, in A. Rovine (ed.), Contemporary Issues in International Arbitration and Mediation: The Fordham Papers 2006 167 (2007); L. Lévy & F. De Ly (eds.), Interest, Auxiliary and Alternative Remedies in International Arbitration (2008); M. Schneider & J. Knoll (eds.), Performance as A Remedy: Non-Monetary Relief in International Arbitration (ASA Spec. Series No. 30 2011); Schreuer, Non-Pecuniary Remedies in ICSID Arbitration, 20 Arb. Int'l 325 (2004).
- 354) See §1.02[B][6].
- 355) See §15.02.
- 356) See §11.03[B]; §12.01; §12.02[A]; §12.04[D]; §12.05[C]; §15.02; §17.02[C]; §17.04[D]; §18.02[B][2]. A Contracting State's refusal to give effect to the parties' agreement regarding an arbitral tribunal's remedial authority would potentially be contrary to Articles II and V(1)(d) of the New York Convention.
- 357) Requests for certain forms of relief (e.g., criminal sanctions, purported declarations of bankruptcy) would be considered nonarbitrable in most jurisdictions. See §6.01.
- 358) See Part I; §2.02; §10.01[A]; §16.02[D]; §17.02[A][5][a].
- 359) See §6.04; §23.07[D]; §25.04[G]; §26.05[C][10].
- 360) See, e.g., Singapore International Arbitration Act, 2012, §12(5) (providing arbitrators power to award any remedy or relief that could be ordered by Singapore court if dispute had been subject of civil proceedings in such court and power to award interest).
- 361) See, e.g., English Arbitration Act, 1996, §48 (permitting parties to agree upon tribunal's remedial authority, but prescribing default powers). Section 48 provides that an arbitral tribunal may, absent contrary agreement: (a) order payment of money; (b) grant declaratory relief; (c) grant the same relief as an English court with regard to injunctive relief and rectification; and (d) grant specific performance (except for contracts relating to land). See R. Merkin, Arbitration Law ¶18.55 (1991 & Update August 2013). See also Hong Kong Arbitration Ordinance, 2013, Art. 70 (similar to England but denying arbitrators power to order specific performance of contracts relating to land or any interest in land).
- 362) See §19.03; §26.05[C][12].
- 363) Avraham v. Shigur Express, Ltd, 1991 WL 177633, at *4 (S.D.N.Y.). See also United Steelworkers of Am. v. Enter. Wheel & Car Corp., 363 U.S. 593, 597 (U.S. S.Ct. 1960); Reliastar Life Ins. Co. of N.Y. v. EMC Nat'l Life Co., 564 F.3d 81, 86 (2d Cir. 2009) ("Where an arbitration clause is broad, arbitrators have the discretion to order such remedies as they deem appropriate."); Todd Shipyards Corp. v. Cunard Line Ltd, 943 F.2d 1056, 1064 (9th Cir. 1991) ("Federal law takes an expansive view of arbitrator authority to decide disputes and fashion remedies."); Chameleon Dental Prods., Inc. v. Jackson, 925 F.2d 223, 226 (7th Cir. 1991); Anderman/Smith Operating Co. v. Tenn. Gas Pipeline Co., 918 F.2d 1215, 1219 (5th Cir. 1990); Resilient Floor v. Welco Mfg Co., 542 F.2d 1029, 1032 (8th Cir. 1976); David Co. v. Jim Miller Constr., Inc., 444 N.W.2d 836, 842 (Minn. 1989) (broad remedial authority).
- 364) Konkar Maritime Enters., SA v. Compagnie Belge d'Affretement, 668 F.Supp. 267, 271 (S.D.N.Y. 1987). See also Advanced Micro Devices, Inc. v. Intel Corp., 885 P.2d 994, 1002 (Cal. 1994) ("The principle of arbitral finality [and] the practical demands of deciding on an appropriate remedy for breach ... dictate that arbitrators, unless expressly restricted by the agreement or the submission to arbitration, have substantial discretion to determine the scope of their contractual authority to fashion remedies, and that judicial review of their awards must be correspondingly narrow and deferential."); Revised Uniform Arbitration Act, §21, comment 3 (2000) ("traditional, broad right of arbitrators to fashion remedies ... generally, their authority to structure relief is defined and circumscribed not by legal principle or precedent but by broad concepts of equity and justice").
- 365) K. Berger, International Economic Arbitration 339 (1993). See also Munoz, The Power of Arbitrators to Make Pro Futuro Orders, in M. Schneider & J. Knoll (eds.), Performance as A Remedy: Non-Monetary Relief in International Arbitration 118 (ASA Spec. Series No. 30 2011) ("arbitrators have the broadest autonomy to frame non-pecuniary orders, the criteria of substantive law notwithstanding"); Nossia, Punitive Damages in Arbitration: Panacea or Curse?, in M. Moser & D. Hascher (eds.), 27 J. Int'l Arb. 277, 283 (2010) ("arbitral tribunal may in certain respects have wider powers than those of a judge, because the tribunal's powers flow from, inter alia, the arbitration agreement"); Platte, in S. Riegler et al. (eds.), Arbitration Law of Austria: Practice and Procedure §593, ¶11 (2007) ("An arbitral tribunal with its seat within Austria may issue those types of interim measures known to Austrian law. The arbitral tribunal is not however limited to these types of measures. It may also grant interim measures of a type unknown to Austrian law.").

- 366) See, e.g., Harper Ins. Ltd v. Century Indem. Co., 819 F.Supp.2d 270, 277 (S.D.N.Y. 2011) (“Petitioners conflate the question of whether an issue was presented to the arbitrators with the question of whether a potential remedy was presented to the arbitrators. It is indisputable that arbitrators have no authority to rule on an issue not submitted to them. However, there is no parallel per se rule that it is beyond the authority of the arbitrators to issue a remedy directed to an issue squarely before them unless it was requested by one of the parties. The case law presented by petitioners only supports the former, uncontested, rule of law.”) (emphasis in original).
- 367) See, e.g., Reliastar Life Ins. Co. v. EMC Nat’l Life Co., 564 F.3d 81, 86 (2d Cir. 2009) (“Where an arbitration clause is broad, arbitrators have the discretion to order such remedies as they deem appropriate.”); Banco de Seguros del Estado v. Mut. Marine Office, Inc., 344 F.3d 255 (2d Cir. 2003); Serv. Employees Int’l Union v. Local 1199 N.E., 70 F.3d 647 (1st Cir. 1995) (arbitral tribunal has inherent remedial authority); United Elec. Radio & Mach. Workers of Am. v. Honeywell, Inc., 522 F.2d 1221 (7th Cir. 1975) (arbitral tribunal has inherent remedial authority); Vogel v. Simon, 201 N.Y.S.2d 877 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1960) (arbitral tribunal has inherent remedial authority).
- 368) Nearctic Nickel Mines Inc. v. Canadian Royalties Inc., [2012] QCCA 385 (Québec Ct. App.).
- 369) See, e.g., Shoprite Checkers (Pty) Ltd v. Comm’n for Conciliation Mediation & Arbitration, [2006] ZALC 56, ¶8 (South African Labour Ct.) (“The commissioner is required to ‘establish picketing rules’ and not issue an award with brief reasons. Arbitration lacks the flexibility that is required for determining picketing rules.”).
- 370) Harper Ins. Ltd v. Century Indem. Co., 819 F.Supp.2d 270, 277 (S.D.N.Y. 2011) (“LMCs’ position essentially asks us to ... find that the arbitrators necessarily exceeded the scope of their authority by fashioning relief not specifically requested, even though the relief was ordered to remedy an issue they concede was submitted to the Panel. Such a holding is fundamentally at odds with the role of the courts in reviewing arbitration awards. ... [A] reviewing court simply asks whether the award ‘draws its essence from the agreement to arbitrate’ or has a ‘barely colorable justification.’”) (quoting Banco de Seguros, 344 F.3d at 260).
- 371) See §25.04[F][3][a]; §26.05[C][4][c][i].
- 372) See §25.04[F][3][c]; §26.05[C][4][c][ii].
- 373) See §25.04[F][3][h]; §26.05[C][12].
- 374) See §6.02; §23.07[A].
- 375) See §6.02; §§23.07[D]-[E].
- 376) See, e.g., English Arbitration Act, 1996, §48; Singapore International Arbitration Act, 2012, §12\(5\); Hong Kong Arbitration Ordinance, 2013, Art. 70.
- 377) R. Merkin, Arbitration Law ¶¶18.57 to 18.60 (1991 & Update August 2013).
- 378) Smit, Judgments and Arbitral Awards in A Foreign Currency: A Means of Dealing With Currency Fluctuations in International Adjudication, 7 Am. Rev. Int’l Arb. 21 (1996).
- 379) English Arbitration Act, 1996, §48\(4\); Kinetics Tech. Int’l v. Cross Seas Shipping Corp. [2001] 2 Lloyd’s Rep. 313, 313 (Comm) (English High Ct.) (award is to be made in “currency which most justly expressed the loss which has been sustained by the claimants”); R. Merkin, Arbitration Law ¶18.60 (1991 & Update August 2013).
- At common law, English courts held that arbitral awards made in London (or abroad) could be expressed in currencies other than pounds sterling and that such awards could be enforced in England; this was true even at a time when English courts were only able to issue judgments in pounds sterling. Jugoslavenska Oceanska Plovidba v. Castle Inv. Co. [1974] QB 292 (English Ct. App.) (award made in USD in London enforced; USD amount converted to sterling as of date of award).
- 380) See, e.g., Lesotho Highlands Dev. Auth. v. Impregilo SpA [2006] 1 AC 221 (House of Lords).
- In some legal systems, an award may in some circumstances be required to be converted into local currency for enforcement purposes. See Judgment of 30 May 2006, 3 Ob 98/06t \(Austrian Oberster Gerichtshof\) \(forced sale of real property\).
- 381) Lesotho Highlands Dev. Auth. v. Impregilo SpA [2006] 1 AC 221 (House of Lords); Miliangos v. George Frank (Textiles) Ltd [1976] AC 443 (House of Lords); Jugoslavenska Oceanska Plovidba v. Castle Inv. Co. [1974] QB 292 (English Ct. App.).
- 382) The English Arbitration Act, 1996, provides that an arbitral tribunal has the power to grant declaratory and injunctive relief (in the latter case, generally to the same extent as an English court). English Arbitration Act, 1996, §48\(5\) (relief arbitral tribunal may order is generally identical to remedies available in English courts (with exception of contracts concerning land)); Irish Arbitration Act, §26 (“Unless a contrary intention is expressed therein, every arbitration agreement shall, where such a provision is applicable to the reference, be deemed to contain a provision that the arbitrator or umpire shall have the same power as the Court to order specific performance of any contract other than a contract relating to land or any interest in land.”); Singapore International Arbitration Act, 2012, §12\(1\); Hong Kong Arbitration Ordinance, 2013, Art. 70. See R. Merkin, Arbitration Law ¶¶18.55, 18.71 to 18.72 (1991 & Update August 2013).

- 383) See [§25.04\[F\]\[3\]\[h\]](#); [§26.05\[C\]\[4\]](#); Bowen v. Amoco Pipeline Co., 254 F.3d 925, 937 (10th Cir. 2001) (“The arbitrators’ power to award equitable relief is also well established.”); Brown v. Coleman Co., 220 F.3d 1180, 1183–84 (10th Cir. 2000) (same); Island Creek Coal Sales Co. v. City of Gainesville, 729 F.2d 1046, 1049 (6th Cir. 1984) (“The Agreement here does not provide any specific limitations on the power of arbitrators under Rule 43 [of the AAA Rules, granting that power to award ‘any remedy or relief which the arbitrator deems just and equitable’], and we are required to give deference to the arbitrators’ interpretation of the Rule and Agreement unless they have clearly exceeded their authority.”); Sperry Int’l Trade, Inc. v. Gov’t of Israel, 689 F.2d 301, 306 (2d Cir. 1982); Eyewonder, Inc. v. Abraham, 2010 WL 3528882 (S.D.N.Y.) (arbitrator’s award of injunctive relief was not excess of authority; parties’ agreement authorized such relief); Staklinski v. Pyramid Elec. Co., 160 N.E.2d 78, 79 (N.Y. 1959) (“The power of an arbitrator to order specific performance in an appropriate case has been recognized from early times.”); Nearctic Nickel Mines Inc. v. Canadian Royalties Inc., [2012] QCCA 385 (Québec Ct. App.) (“an order of specific performance within a commercial dispute can legally be issued by an arbitrator”). See also Dunaud & Kostytska, Declaratory Relief in International Arbitration, 29 J. Int’l Arb. 1 (2012); E. Gaillard & J. Savage \(eds.\), Fouchard Gaillard Goldman on International Commercial Arbitration ¶¶1305 et seq. (1999); Geimer, in R. Zöller (ed.), Zivilprozessordnung §1041, ¶16 (26th ed. 2007); K.-H. Schwab & G. Walter, Schiedsgerichtsbarkeit 312 (6th ed. 2000).
- 384) LCIA, Registrar’s Report (2012) (29% of LCIA arbitrations in 2012 and 31% in 2011 sought declaratory relief or specific performance).
- 385) A number of courts have held that the New York Convention applies to awards granting declaratory or injunctive relief (as well as to monetary awards). See Adamas Mgt & Servs. Inc. v. Aurado Energy Inc., XXX Y.B. Comm. Arb. 479 (New Brunswick Q.B. 2004) (2005); IPOC Int’l Growth Fund Ltd v. LV Fin. Group Ltd, XXXIII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 408, ¶150 (B.V.I. Ct. App. 2008) (2008) (nothing in Convention or implementing legislation “that indicates that purely declaratory Convention awards are excluded” from Convention’s recognition provisions); LV Fin. Group Ltd v. IPOC Int’l Growth Fund Ltd, [2006] Bda LR 69 (Bermuda Comm. Ct.). See also [§25.04\[F\]\[3\]\[h\]](#).
- 386) See, e.g., Judgment of 28 September 2004, 4 Ob 142/04t (Austrian Oberster Gerichtshof); NSW Racing v. TAB, [2002] NSWSC 742, ¶126 (N.S.W. S.Ct.) (“The words used to confer power to resolve the dispute confer almost unlimited flexibility in the method of its resolution. For this reason, I think that the arbitrator has been given power to grant an injunction.”); AED Oil Ltd v. Puffin Fpso Ltd, [2010] VSCA 37, ¶120 (Victoria Ct. App.) (“We think the Model Law gives an arbitrator appointed under that law power to make an order in the nature of an injunction and if necessary, a declaration.”) (quoting Electra Air Conditioning BV v Seeley Int’l Pty Ltd, [2008] FCAFC 169, ¶144 (Australian Fed. Ct.)).
- 387) See, e.g., Restatement (Second) Contracts §366, comment a (1981); McNeil v. Magee, 16 F.Cas. 326, 330 (D. Mass. 1829); Grossman v. Ilowitz, 898 N.Y.S.2d 621, 623 (N.Y. App. Div. 2010); Greenspan v. Ladit, LLC, 111 Cal.Rptr.3d 468, 496 (Cal. Ct. App. 2010); 950 Corbindale, LP v. Kotts Capital Holdings Ltd P’ship, 316 S.W.3d 191, 196 (Tex. Ct. App. 2010) (“provision giving the arbitrator authority to ‘award compensatory damages only’ does not foreclose an arbitrator’s ability to grant declaratory relief”); McFin. Ltd v. City Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass’n, 279 N.W.2d 507 (Wis. Ct. App. 1979); In re Staklinski/Pyramid Elec. Co., 180 N.Y.S.2d 20, 26 (N.Y. App. Div. 1958), aff’d, 160 N.E.2d 78 (N.Y. 1959); Freydberg Bros. Inc. v. Corey, 31 N.Y.S.2d 10, 11 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1941), aff’d mem., 32 N.Y.S.2d 129 (N.Y. App. Div. 1941); Ethiopian Oilseeds & Pulses Exp. Corp. v. Rio del Mar Foods Inc. [1990] 1 Lloyd’s Rep. 86 (QB) (English High Ct.).
- 388) Judgment of 7 April 1994, Lechevalier v. Société Croisière Loisir et Commc’ns Internationale, 1996 Rev. arb. 61 (Paris Cour d’appel) (ordering rescission of yacht sale contract against partial refund of purchase price); K.-H. Schwab & G. Walter, Schiedsgerichtsbarkeit 209 (6th ed. 2000).

In the words of one commentator, “specific performance is so widely available in legal systems that it can be considered a general principle of law.” Schneider, Non-Monetary Relief in International Arbitration: Principles and Practice, in M. Schneider & J. Knoll (eds.), Performance as A Remedy: Non-Monetary Relief in International Arbitration 6 (ASA Spec. Series No. 30 2011). See also Dunaud & Kostytska, Declaratory Relief in International Arbitration, 29 J. Int’l Arb. 1 (2012); Malinvaud, Non-Pecuniary Remedies in Investment Treaty and Commercial Arbitration, in A. van den Berg \(ed.\), 50 Years of the New York Convention 210 (ICCA Congress Series No. 14 2009) (discussing non-pecuniary remedies available in commercial arbitration, including judicial penalties and specific performance); Schreuer, Non-Pecuniary Remedies in ICSID Arbitration, 20 Arb. Int’l 325 (2004).

- 389) See, e.g., Texaco Overseas Petroleum Co. v. Libyan Arab Repub., Ad Hoc Award of 19 January 1977, IV Y.B. Comm. Arb. 177, 184-86 (1979) (“restitutio in integrum is ... the normal sanction for non-performance of contractual obligations and ... is inapplicable only to the extent that restoration of the status quo ante is impossible”); Libyan Am. Oil Co. (LIAMCO) v. Gov’t of the Libyan Arab Repub., Ad Hoc Award of 12 April 1977, VI Y.B. Comm. Arb. 89, 105 (1981) (recognizing power to order specific performance, but declining to do so); BP Exploration Co. v. Gov’t of the Libyan Arab Repub., Ad Hoc Award on Merits of 10 October 1973, V Y.B. Comm. Arb. 143, 150 et seq. (1980) (same). See also Malinvaud, Non-Pecuniary Remedies in Investment Treaty and Commercial Arbitration, in A. van den Berg (ed.), 50 Years of the New York Convention 210-16 (ICCA Congress Series No. 14 2009) (discussing non-pecuniary remedies available in commercial arbitration, including judicial specific performance); Schneider, Non-Monetary Relief in International Arbitration: Principles and Practice, in M. Schneider & J. Knoll (eds.), Performance as A Remedy: Non-Monetary Relief in International Arbitration 16 (ASA Spec. Series No. 30 2011) (concluding, based on review of reports from leading arbitral institutions, that “international arbitral tribunals first of all accept that, as a matter of principle, they have the power to grant [non-monetary relief] and that, in the right circumstances, they are prepared to exercise these powers”), 127-207 (summaries of awards of non-monetary relief by Chamber of Arbitration of Milan, Geneva Chamber of Commerce, German Institution of Arbitration, VIAC, ICC, ICDR/AAA, Kuala Lumpur Regional Centre for Arbitration and LCIA).
- 390) See, e.g., Case Concerning the Factory at Chorzów, PCIJ Series A, No. 13, 20 (P.C.I.J. 1928) (“The Court’s Judgment No. 7 is in the nature of a declaratory judgment, the intention of which is to ensure recognition of a situation of law, once and for all and with binding force as between the parties; so that the legal position thus established cannot again be called in question in so far as the legal effects ensuing therefrom are concerned.”; “The essential principle contained in the actual notion of an illegal act ... is that reparation must, as far as possible, wipe out all the consequences of the illegal act and re-establish the situation which would, in all probability, have existed if that act had not been committed.”); ILC, Memorandum on Arbitral Procedure, Prepared by the Secretariat, U.N. Doc. A/CN.4/35, II Y.B. I.L.C. 157, 167 (1950); Malinvaud, Non-Pecuniary Remedies in Investment Treaty and Commercial Arbitration, in A. van den Berg (ed.), 50 Years of the New York Convention 217-28 (ICCA Congress Series No. 14 2009) (restitution and satisfaction in investment arbitration).
- 391) Engis Corp. v. Engis Ltd, 800 F.Supp. 627, 631 (N.D. Ill. 1992); Young v. Deschler, 110 N.Y.S.2d 220 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1952) (order of specific performance of non-competition clause). See also Chappuis, A Comparative Overview on Performance as A Remedy: A Key to Divergent Approaches, in M. Schneider & J. Knoll (eds.), Performance as A Remedy: Non-Monetary Relief in International Arbitration 51 (ASA Spec. Series No. 30 2011) (collecting awards granting injunctions prohibiting certain conduct).
- 392) Island Creek Coal Sales Co. v. City of Gainesville, 729 F.2d 1046, 1049 (6th Cir. 1984) (relying on Rule 43 of AAA Rules).
- 393) Marion Mfg Co. v. Long, 588 F.2d 538, 541 (6th Cir. 1978).
- 394) Sperry Int’l Trade, Inc. v. Gov’t of Israel, 689 F.2d 301, 306 (2d Cir. 1982).
- 395) Carte Blanche (Singapore) Pte Ltd v. Carte Blanche Int’l, Ltd, 888 F.2d 260, 266 (2d Cir. 1989).
- 396) See, e.g., Pac. Reins. Mgt Corp. v. Ohio Reins. Corp., 935 F.2d 1019, 1023-24 (9th Cir. 1991); Blue Sympathy Shipping Co. v. Serviocean Int’l SA, 1994 WL 597144, at *1 (S.D.N.Y.). Contra Swift Indus., Inc. v. Botany Indus., Inc., 466 F.2d 1125, 1134 (3d Cir. 1972).
- 397) Anderman/Smith Operating Co. v. Tenn. Gas Pipeline Co., 918 F.2d 1215, 1219-20 (5th Cir. 1990).
- 398) Grayson-Robinson Stores, Inc. v. Iris Constr. Co., 168 N.E.2d 377 (N.Y. 1960) (order of specific performance to finish construction of mall).
- 399) Gen. Fuse Co. v. Sightmaster Corp., 162 N.Y.S.2d 630 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1957) (order of specific performance to transfer business). See also Schneider, Non-Monetary Relief in International Arbitration: Principles and Practice, in M. Schneider & J. Knoll (eds.), Performance as A Remedy: Non-Monetary Relief in International Arbitration 18-19 (ASA Spec. Series No. 30 2011) (collecting awards ordering transfers of property and other affirmative conduct).
- 400) Staklinski v. Pyramid Elec. Co., 6 N.Y.2d 159 (N.Y. 1959) (order of specific performance to reinstate managing director of company). See also Schneider, Non-Monetary Relief in International Arbitration: Principles and Practice, in M. Schneider & J. Knoll (eds.), Performance as A Remedy: Non-Monetary Relief in International Arbitration 25 (ASA Spec. Series No. 30 2011) (collecting awards granting “formative actions,” such as creation, transformation, or termination of legal relationship).
- 401) Advanced Micro Devices v. Intel Corp., 885 P.2d 994 (Cal. 1994) (upholding award ordering granting free license to use product (despite absence of such license in parties’ contract)).
- 402) Puerto Rico Maritime Shipping Auth. v. Star Lines Ltd, 454 F.Supp. 368, 375 (S.D.N.Y. 1978) (confirming award requiring an accounting).

- 403) Brown v. Coleman Co., 220 F.3d 1180, 1182 (10th Cir. 2000) (tribunal did not exceed power by granting equitable relief of extending time in which wrongfully terminated employee's stock options could be exercised).
- 404) Watkins-Johnson v. Bank Saderat Iran, Award in IUSCT Case No. 429-370-1 of 28 July 1989, 22 Iran-US C.T.R. 218 (1989). For ICSID arbitrations, see Enron Corp. & Ponderosa Assets, LP v. Argentine Repub., Decision on Jurisdiction in ICSID Case No. ARB/01/3 of 14 January 2004, ¶81 ("in addition to declaratory powers, [the Tribunal] has the power to order measures involving performance or injunction of certain acts"); Saudi Arabia v. Arabian Am. Oil Co. (Aramco), Ad Hoc Award of 23 August 1958, 27 I.L.R. 117, 145 (1963). See also Mourre, Judicial Penalties and Specific Performance in International Arbitration, in L. Lévy & F. De Ly (eds.), Interest, Auxiliary and Alternative Remedies in International Arbitration 53-73 (2008); Schneider, Non-Monetary Relief in International Arbitration: Principles and Practice, in M. Schneider & J. Knoll (eds.), Performance as A Remedy: Non-Monetary Relief in International Arbitration 24 (ASA Spec. Series No. 30 2011) (collecting awards granting declaratory relief).
- 405) Elder, The Case Against Arbitral Awards of Specific Performance in Transnational Commercial Disputes, 13 Arb. Int'l 1 (1997). Contra Munoz, The Power of Arbitrators to Make Pro Futuro Orders, in M. Schneider & J. Knoll (eds.), Performance as A Remedy: Non-Monetary Relief in International Arbitration 91 (ASA Spec. Series No. 30 2011).
- 406) See §9.02[1]; §15.02.
- 407) See Schneider, Non-Monetary Relief in International Arbitration: Principles and Practice, in M. Schneider & J. Knoll (eds.), Performance as A Remedy: Non-Monetary Relief in International Arbitration 4 (ASA Spec. Series No. 30 2011) ("Why specific performance as a remedy in arbitration? The answer is simple: this is what the parties have agreed.").
- 408) See, e.g., Freydberg Bros., Inc. v. Lewis Corey, 31 N.Y.S.2d 10, 11 (N.Y. Sup. Ct. 1941) (relying on broad arbitration clause to hold arbitrators had authority to grant specific performance); Telia Sonera AB v. Hilcourt Docklands Ltd [2003] EWHC 3353 (English High Ct.) (limitations on remedial authority of arbitrators interpreted narrowly). See also Munoz, The Power of Arbitrators to Make Pro Futuro Orders, in M. Schneider & J. Knoll (eds.), Performance as A Remedy: Non-Monetary Relief in International Arbitration 118 (ASA Spec. Series No. 30 2011) ("arbitrators enjoy a wide power to make non-pecuniary orders, committing the parties' future activities").
- 409) See §2.01[A]; §5.01[D]; §9.02[1]; §23.07[A].
- 410) See, e.g., Dreis & Krump Mfg Co. v. Int'l Ass'n of Machinists & Aerospace Workers, 802 F.2d 247, 250 (7th Cir. 1986); Engis Corp. v. Engis Ltd, 800 F.Supp. 627, 632 (N.D. Ill. 1992).
- 411) For commentary, see Davis, A Proposed Framework for Reviewing Punitive Damage Awards of Commercial Arbitrators, 58 Alb. L. Rev. 55 (1994); Derains, Intérêts moratoires, dommages-intérêts compensatoires et dommages punitifs devant l'arbitre international, in Etudes offertes à Pierre Bellet 100 (1991); Donahy, Punitive Damages in International Commercial Arbitration, 10(3) J. Int'l Arb. 67 (1995); Farnsworth, Punitive Damages in Arbitration, 7 Arb. Int'l 3 (1991); Gotanda, The Unpredictability Paradox: Punitive Damages and Interest in International Arbitration, 7(1) Transnat'l Disp. Mgt 3 (2010); Gotanda, Awarding Punitive Damages in International Commercial Arbitrations in the Wake of Mastrobucchi v. Shearson Lehman Hutton, Inc., 38 Harv. Int'l L.J. 59 (1997); Gotanda, Charting Developments Concerning Punitive Damages: Is the Tide Changing?, 45 Colum. J. Transnat'l L. 508 (2007); Jones, Punitive Damages as An Arbitration Remedy, 4(2) J. Int'l Arb. 35 (1987); Larsen, Punitive Damages in International Commercial Arbitration: Adapting U.S. Policy to International Norms, in R. Lillich & C. Brower (eds.), International Arbitration in the 21st Century: Towards "Judicialization" and Uniformity? 245 (1994); Mourre, Arbitration and Criminal Law: Reflections on the Duties of the Arbitrator, 22 Arb. Int'l 95, 105-09 (2006); Noussia, Punitive Damages in Arbitration: Panacea or Curse?, 27 J. Int'l Arb. 277 (2010); Petsche, Punitive Damages in International Commercial Arbitration: Much Ado About Nothing?, 29 Arb. Int'l 89 (2013); Stipanowich, Punitive Damages in Arbitration: Garrity v. Lyle Stuart, Inc. Reconsidered, 66 B.U. L. Rev. 953 (1986); Ware, Punitive Damages in Arbitration: Contracting Out of Government's Role in Punishment and Federal Preemption of State Law, 63 Ford. L. Rev. 529 (1994).
- 412) Petsche, Punitive Damages in International Commercial Arbitration: Much Ado About Nothing?, 29 Arb. Int'l 89, 103 (2013) ("punitive arbitral awards are either inexistent or extremely rare").
- 413) D. Dobbs, Handbook on the Law of Remedies 204 (1973). See Noussia, Punitive Damages in Arbitration: Panacea or Curse?, 27 J. Int'l Arb. 277 (2010) ("Punitive damages are awarded in addition to compensatory damages. Because of their role to punish and deter a tortfeasor whose conduct is grossly negligent, willfully malicious, criminally indifferent or in reckless disregard for the rights of others from similar actions, they are action-oriented, tortfeasor-oriented and mostly prospective"); L. Schlueter & K. Redden, Punitive Damages §2.2(A)(1) (1995).
- 414) H. McGregor, McGregor on Damages §§309-11 (1980); L. Schlueter & K. Redden, Punitive Damages §22.1 (1995).

- 415) Gotanda, Awarding Punitive Damages in International Commercial Arbitrations in the Wake of Mastrobuono v. Shearson Lehman Hutton, Inc., 38 Harv. Int'l L.J. 59, Appendix III (1997) (punitive damages available in Australia, Canada, England, New Zealand, Northern Ireland, Ireland and United States).
- 416) J. Ghiardi et al., Punitive Damages Law and Practice §4.01 (1996); Noussia, Punitive Damages in Arbitration: Panacea or Curse?, 27 J. Int'l Arb. 277 (2010); L. Schlueter & K. Redden, Punitive Damages 369 et seq. (1995).
- 417) See, e.g., 15 U.S.C. §15(a) (treble damages for antitrust violations); 18 U.S.C. §1964(c) (treble damages for RICO violations).
- 418) See generally Gotanda, Awarding Punitive Damages in International Commercial Arbitrations in the Wake of Mastrobuono v. Shearson Lehman Hutton, Inc., 38 Harv. Int'l L.J. 59, Appendix II (1997) (in most civil law jurisdictions, no punitive damages except only for limited, aggravated torts); Noussia, Punitive Damages in Arbitration: Panacea or Curse?, 27 J. Int'l Arb. 277, 282-83 (2010) ("In civil law countries, the concept of punitive damages is scarcely known.").
- 419) Judgment of 4 June 1992, 1992 WM 1451 (German Bundesgerichtshof); Judgment of 19 January 2007, P.J. v. Fimez, Case No. 1183 (Italian Corte di Cassazione); Judgment of 15 October 2001, 37 Riv. Dir. Int'l Priv. Proc. 1021 (Venice Corte d'Appello) (2002). Compare Judgment of 1 February 1989, 1991 BJM 31 (Basel-Stadt Zivilgericht) (recognizing judgment for punitive damages), appeal dismissed, Judgment of 12 July 1990, DFT 116 II 376 (Swiss Federal Tribunal); Mourre, Arbitration and Criminal Law: Reflections on the Duties of the Arbitrator, 22 Arb. Int'l 95, 108 (2006). See also Final Award in ICC Case No. 5946, XVI Y.B. Comm. Arb. 97 (1991).
- 420) See, e.g., French Civil Code, Art. 1382; German BGB, §253; Austrian Civil Code, §§1325 et seq.
- 421) See, e.g., Tadonki v. Secretary Gen. of the United Nations, Award in UNDT Case No. UNDT/NBI/2009/36 of 26 February 2013 (awarding $50,000 in moral damages); Joseph Charles Lemire v. Ukraine, Award in ICSID Case No. ARB/06/18 of 28 March 2011 ("as a general rule, moral damages are not available to a party injured by the wrongful acts of a State, but ... moral damages can be awarded in exceptional cases, provided that [1] the State's actions imply physical threat, illegal detention or other analogous situations in which the ill-treatment contravenes the norms according to which civilized nations are expected to act; [2] the State's actions cause a deterioration of health, stress, anxiety, other mental suffering such as humiliation, shame and degradation, or loss of reputation, credit and social position; and [3] both cause and effect are grave or substantial."); Award in ICSID Case No. ARB/05/17 of 6 February 2008, Desert Line Projects LLC v. Repub. of Yemen, 1(2) Int'l J. Arab Arb. 350 (2009) (tribunal awarded $1,000,000 for moral damages: "It is generally accepted in most legal systems that moral damages may also be recovered besides pure economic damages. There are indeed no reasons to exclude them."); Award in ICSID Case No. ARB/77/2 of 8 August 1980, Benvenuti & Bonfant v. People's Repub. of the Congo, VIII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 144, 151 (1983) ("the measures to which Claimant has been subject and the suit that was the consequence thereof [made it] equitable to award it the amount of CFA 5,000,000 for moral damages"). See also Wong, The Misapprehension of Moral Damages in Investor-State Arbitration, in A. Rovine (ed.), Contemporary Issues in International Arbitration and Mediation: The Fordham Papers 2012 (2013).
- 422) A preliminary draft law revising the French law on civil liability, the so-called "Catala Project," was submitted to the French Minister of Justice on 22 September 2005. The revised Article 1371 intends to introduce the concept of punitive damages into French law: "One whose fault is manifestly premeditated, particularly when aiming for monetary gain, may be ordered to pay punitive damages besides compensatory damages." See Gotanda, The Unpredictability Paradox: Punitive Damages and Interest in International Arbitration, 7(1) Transnat'l Disp. Mgt 3 (2010). See also Judgment of 13 November 2001, Miller Imp. Corp. v. Alabastres Alfredo, SL, in Jablonski, Translation and Comment: Enforcing U.S. Punitive Damages Awards in Foreign Courts – A Recent Case in the Supreme Court of Spain, 24 J. L. & Comm. 225, 231-43 (2005) (enforcing U.S. punitive damages judgment); Gotanda, Charting Developments Concerning Punitive Damages: Is the Tide Changing?, 45 Colum. J. Transnat'l L. 508 (2007).
- 423) Garrity v. Lyle Stuart, Inc., 353 N.E.2d 793, 794 (N.Y. 1976). See Stipanowich, Punitive Damages in Arbitration: Garrity v. Lyle Stuart, Inc. Reconsidered, 66 B.U. L. Rev. 953 (1986); Ware, Punitive Damages in Arbitration: Contracting Out of Government's Role in Punishment and Federal Preemption of State Law, 63 Ford. L. Rev. 529 (1994).
- 424) Garrity, 353 N.E.2d at 797.
- 425) See Chapter 6 (especially §6.02.).
- 426) Garrity, 353 N.E.2d at 797 ("The law does not and should not permit private persons to submit themselves to punitive sanction of the order reserved to the State.").
- 427) Davis, A Proposed Framework for Reviewing Punitive Damage Awards of Commercial Arbitrators, 58 Alb. L. Rev. 55 (1994).
- 428) Mastrobuono v. Shearson Lehman Hutton, Inc., 514 U.S. 52, 59 (U.S. S.Ct. 1995).
- 429) Mastrobuono, 514 U.S. at 52.

- 430) Mastrobuono, 514 U.S. at 58. The Court reasoned: “we think our decisions in Allied-Bruce, Southland and Perry make clear that if contracting parties agree to include claims for punitive damages within the issue to be arbitrated, the FAA ensures that their agreement will be enforced according to its terms even if a rule of state law would otherwise exclude such claims from arbitration.” Id. at 58. See also §6.03[C][4].
- 431) Mastrobuono, 514 U.S. at 61, 68-69. The Court also relied on the parties’ agreement upon the NASD Code, which provided generally that the arbitrators could include damages and other relief, without qualifications.
- 432) Some institutional rules exclude awards of punitive or exemplary damages. See, e.g., ICDR Rules, Art. 28(5); ARIAS-UK Rules, Art. 14(2)(2).
- 433) See Lagstein v. Certain Underwriters at Lloyd’s London, 607 F.3d 634 (9th Cir. 2010) (district court erred in concluding that amount of punitive damages awarded demonstrated manifest disregard of law); OurLink, LLC v. Goldberg, 2011 WL 9076, at *3 (N.D. Tex.) (“arbitrators presumptively enjoy the power to award [punitive damages] unless the arbitration contract unequivocally excludes punitive damage claims”); Sanders v. Gardner, 7 F.Supp.2d 151, 170-79 (E.D.N.Y. 1998) (analyzing and applying Mastrobuono in confirming $10,000,000 punitive damages award); Tucker v. Scott, 1997 WL 151509, at *4 (S.D.N.Y.) (allowing punitive damages claims to go forward); Prudential Sec. Inc. v. Laurita, 1997 WL 109438, at *5 (S.D.N.Y.) (denying petition for stay to prevent arbitrator from awarding punitive damages in light of Mastrobuono); Kidder, Peabody & Co. v. Marriner, 961 F.Supp. 50, 54 (S.D.N.Y. 1997) (finding Mastrobuono does not bar arbitrators from awarding punitive damages and denying stay of arbitration); Cowen & Co. v. Tecnoconsult Holdings Ltd, 1996 WL 391884, at *5 (S.D.N.Y.) (denying application to prevent arbitrators from awarding punitive damages in light of Mastrobuono); A.S. Goldmen & Co. v. Bochner, M.D., 1996 WL 413676, at *1 (S.D.N.Y.) (denying petition to stay arbitration pending claims for punitive damages, based on Mastrobuono); PaineWebber, Inc. v. Richardson, 1995 WL 236722, at *2-3 (S.D.N.Y.) (denying stay of arbitration as it relates to punitive damages in light of Mastrobuono); Americorp Sec., Inc. v. Sager, 656 N.Y.S.2d 762, 764 (N.Y. App. Div. 1997) (reversing stay of arbitration because arbitration clause did not unequivocally exclude punitive damages claim); Mulder v. Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette, 648 N.Y.S.2d 535, 538 (N.Y. App. Div. 1996) (“In sum, the decision of the Supreme Court in Mastrobuono makes it unmistakably clear that, with respect to arbitration proceeding governed by the FAA which preempts the Garrity rule, the arbitration of punitive damage claims is required except where the parties have unequivocally agreed otherwise.”); Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. v. Adler, 651 N.Y.S.2d 38, 39 (N.Y. App. Div. 1996) (reversing lower court stay of arbitration of punitive damages claim because choice-of-law provision was ambiguous, as in Mastrobuono, and therefore strong federal policy favoring arbitration included deciding punitive damages award); Prudential Sec. Inc. v. Pesce, 642 N.Y.S.2d 466, 468 (N.Y. Sup. 1996) (leaving punitive damages issue to arbitrators because Mastrobuono preempts Garrity rule). See also Lee v. Chica, 983 F.2d 883, 887 (8th Cir. 1993) (“when the choice of law provision in an arbitral clause incorporates the rules of the AAA, some circuits have held, and we agree, that AAA arbitrators may grant any remedy or relief including punitive damages”); Raytheon Co. v. Automated Bus. Sys., Inc., 882 F.2d 6, 10 (1st Cir. 1989) (“it would seem sensible to interpret the ‘all disputes’ and ‘any remedy or relief’ phrases to indicate, at a minimum, an intention to resolve through arbitration any dispute that would otherwise be settled in a court, and to allow the chosen dispute resolvers to award the same varieties and forms of damages or relief as a court would be empowered to award”).
- 434) See, e.g., 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 34(1); 2012 ICC Rules, Arts. 21(1), 23(c); LCIA Rules, Art. 16.

For an argument that these rules should not be interpreted as authorizing consideration of punitive damage claims (because of the atypical character of punitive damages internationally), even under Mastrobuono’s rule that arbitration agreements should be construed in favor of extending to claims of punitive damages, see Gotanda, Awarding Punitive Damages in International Commercial Arbitrations in the Wake of Mastrobuono v. Shearson Lehman Hutton, Inc., 38 Harv. Int’l L.J. 59, 78-81 (1997).

- 435) Fahnestock & Co. v. Waltman, 935 F.2d 512, 519 (2d Cir. 1991).
- 436) See §23.07[D], pp. 3078-79.

- 437) Final Award in ICC Case No. 5946, XVI Y.B. Comm. Arb. 97, 113 (1991). This award has been criticized on the grounds that, while punitive damages are against Swiss (national) public policy, the grounds for setting aside under Article 190\(2\)\(c\) of the Swiss Law on Private International Law relate only to transnational public policy. If the parties chose a law which provides for punitive damages, an arbitral tribunal sitting in Switzerland should be entitled to award such damages. See B. Berger & F. Kellerhals, Internationale und interne Schiedsgerichtsbarkeit in der Schweiz ¶1604 (2006); Schlosser, Right and Remedy in Common Law Arbitration and in German Arbitration Law, 4(1) J. Int'l Arb. 27, 32-33 (1987). Compare Donahay, Punitive Damages in International Commercial Arbitration, 10(3) J. Int'l Arb. 67 (1995) ("Generally, the principle of party autonomy would be thought to apply where the parties have, by their agreement, expressly empowered the arbitral tribunal to award punitive damages."); Larsen, Punitive Damages in International Commercial Arbitration: Adapting U.S. Policy to International Norms, in R. Lillich & C. Brower (eds.), International Arbitration in the 21st Century: Towards "Judicialization" and Uniformity? 245, 274 (1994).
- 438) See Rostock-Jensen & Mikkelsen, Denmark, in L. Garb & J. Lew (eds.), Enforcement of Foreign Judgments 1, 6-7 (2013); Yamauchi & Kobayashi, Japan, in L. Garb & J. Lew (eds.), Enforcement of Foreign Judgments 1, 4 (2013). See also [§26.05\[C\]\[9\]\[h\]\[viii\]](#).
- 439) See [§19.03\[B\]\[1\]](#).
- 440) See [§19.03\[D\]\[3\]\[e\]](#); [§19.04\[B\]\[5\]\[b\]](#).
- 441) Ordinarily, the tribunal's decision will be a substantive one, not a jurisdictional determination. For reasons analogous to those identified by the U.S. Supreme Court in Mastrobuono, claims for punitive damages falling within the scope of the parties' arbitration agreement should be subject to arbitration. See [§9.02\[I\]](#); [§23.07\[D\]](#).
- 442) See §25.11, p. 3390.
- 443) See, e.g., Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's v. Argonaut, 264 F.Supp.2d 926, 943 (C.D. Cal. 2003) (tribunal order: "Petitioners, jointly and severally, are ordered to pay Respondent, in addition to the amount set forth in Interim Order No. 2, the additional sum of $10,000.00 for every day that they [Certain Underwriters] are not in compliance with that Order, commencing on January 17, 2003, the first day following the date on which payment was to have been made or letter or credit established."). See also Superadio LP v. Winstar Radio Prods. LLC, 844 N.E.2d 246, 254 (Mass. 2006) (party sanctioned for failing to comply with discovery orders).
- 444) Pac. Reins. Mgt Corp. v. Ohio Reins. Corp., 935 F.2d 1019, 1023 (9th Cir. 1991) ("Arbitrators have no power to enforce their decisions. Only courts have that power.").
- 445) See, e.g., Reliastar Life Ins. Co. v. EMC Nat'l Life Co., 564 F.3d 81, 86 (2d Cir. 2009); Synergy Gas Co. v. Sasso, 853 F.2d 59 (2d Cir. 1988); Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's v. Argonaut, 264 F.Supp.2d 926, 943 (C.D. Cal. 2003) ("there is no categorical ban to an arbitrator's imposition of sanctions for non-compliance with his or her orders"; "in light of the strong public policy favoring expeditious arbitration the parties should not be barred from consensually conferring such power on the arbitrator; enforcement via sanctions by the arbitrator is likely to be more efficient than mandating judicial review and enforcement in every instance"); Polin v. Kellwood Co., 103 F.Supp.2d 238 (S.D.N.Y. 2000) (upholding award of legal costs as sanction for outrageous conduct and refusal to respond to panel's questions by claimant's counsel); Konkar Maritime Enters., SA v. Compagnie Belge D'Affretement, 668 F.Supp. 267, 274 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) ("it was not improper for the Panel to consider respondent's failure to comply with its interim order" in assessing 85% of costs against party that ignored tribunal's order to provide security). Compare Grynberg v. BP Exploration Operating Ltd, 92 A.D.3d 547, 548 (N.Y. App. Div. 2012) (affirming lower court's ruling vacating award of $3 million in sanctions because it was punitive in nature and thus violation of New York public policy).
- 446) Reliastar Life Ins. Co. v. EMC Nat'l Life Co., 564 F.3d 81, 86 n.2 (2d Cir. 2009).
- 447) See, e.g., Malinvaud, Non-Pecuniary Remedies in Investment Treaty and Commercial Arbitration, in A. van den Berg (ed.), 50 Years of the New York Convention 210 (ICCA Congress Series No. 14 2009) (judicial penalties available in commercial arbitration); Mourre, Judicial Penalties and Specific Performance in International Arbitration, in L. Lévy & F. De Ly (eds.), Interest, Auxiliary and Alternative Remedies in International Arbitration 60 (2008) ("[T]here is no reason to consider that an arbitral tribunal should be deprived of jurisdiction to liquidate the penalty it has ordered. As a matter of fact ... this is not a matter that relates to the enforcement of the penalty but rather to the determination of the final amount in respect to which the creditor will be entitled to seek enforcement.").
- 448) Inter-Chem Asia 2000 Pte Ltd v. Oceana Petrochem., 373 F.Supp.2d 340, 356-58 (S.D.N.Y. 2005) ("[T]he parties' agreement did not explicitly grant the Arbitrator power to afford any remedy available in courts. ... [I]f the Arbitrator had inherent authority to sanction DiDonna [it] would directly contradict the principle that an arbitrator's authority is circumscribed by the agreement of the parties."); Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's v. Argonaut, 264 F.Supp.2d 926, 944 (C.D. Cal. 2003) ("potential for conflict with FAA policy counsels in favor of requiring that any intent of the parties to afford contempt-like power on the arbitrator must be clearly evident").

- 449) Inter-Chem Asia 2000 Pte Ltd v. Oceana Petrochem., 373 F.Supp.2d 340, 356-58 (S.D.N.Y. 2005).
- 450) Reliastar Life Ins. Co. v. EMC Nat'l Life Co., 564 F.3d 81, 86 (2d Cir. 2009) (“broad arbitration clause ... confers inherent authority on arbitrators to sanction a party that participates in the arbitration in bad faith and ... such a sanction may include an award of attorney’s fees or arbitrator’s fees”).
- 451) Schneider, Non-Monetary Relief in International Arbitration: Principles and Practice, in M. Schneider & J. Knoll (eds.), Performance as A Remedy: Non-Monetary Relief in International Arbitration 43 (ASA Spec. Series No. 30 2011) (“In civil law countries, the rights and the remedies that flow from them, as a matter of principle, are regulated in the substantive law.”).
- 452) L. Collins (ed.), Dicey, Morris and Collins on The Conflict of Laws ¶7-011 (15th ed. 2012); D. Dobbs, Law of Remedies §§1.1, 1.6 (2d ed. 1993).
- 453) Y. Derains & R. Kreindler, in ICC Dossiers, Evaluation of Damages in International Arbitration 87 (2006).
- 454) N. Blackaby et al. (eds.), Redfern and Hunter on International Arbitration ¶9.100 (5th ed. 2009).
- 455) See §17.02[F].
- 456) See §7.04.
- 457) See §23.08[D]; §23.09[B].
- 458) See §5.01[B]; §15.02[A]; §15.04[B].
- 459) See, e.g., Irish Arbitration Act, §26 (“Unless a contrary intention is expressed therein, every arbitration agreement shall, where such a provision is applicable to the reference, be deemed to contain a provision that the arbitrator or umpire shall have the same power as the Court to order specific performance of any contract other than a contract relating to land or any interest in land.”).
- 460) See §17.02[F]; §19.03[H][3], p. 2670 n. 297; Restatement (Second) Conflict of Laws §207 (1971) (“measure of recovery for a breach of contract is determined by the local law of the state selected [by the parties to govern the contract]”).
- 461) See §19.03[H][3].
- 462) For commentary, see Carter, A Kiss For Arbitration Costs Allocation, 23 Am. Rev. Int’l Arb. 475 (2013); Chartered Institute of Arbitrators, Costs of International Arbitration Survey (2011); Frank, Rationalizing Cost Awards in Investment Treaty Arbitration, 88 Wash. U. L. Rev. 769 (2011); Goldstein, Some Thoughts About Costs in International Arbitration, 3 Int’l Arb. News 16 (2003); Gotanda, Attorneys’ Fees Agonistes: The Implications of Inconsistency in the Awarding of Fees and Costs in International Arbitrations, in M. Fernández-Ballesteros & D. Arias (eds.), Liber Amicorum Bernardo Cremades 539-55 (2010); Gotanda, Awarding Costs and Attorney’s Fees in International Commercial Arbitration, 21 Mich. J. Int’l L. 1 (1999); Gurry, Fees & Costs, 6 World Arb. & Med. Rep. 227 (1995); Hanotiau, The Parties’ Costs of Arbitration, in ICC Dossiers, Evaluation of Damages in International Arbitration 213 (2006); Hanotiau, The Parties’ Costs of Arbitration, 7(1) Transnat’l Disp. Mgt (2010); Kreindler, Final Rulings on Costs: Loser Pays All?, 7(1) Transnat’l Disp. Mgt 1 (2010); Kreindler, Die Kostenentscheidung im Schiedsgerichtsverfahren aus US-amerikanischer Sicht, 7(1) Transnat’l Disp. Mgt (2010); O’Reilly, Rethinking Costs in Commercial Arbitration, 69(2) Arb. 122 (2003); Power & Konrad, Costs in International Commercial Arbitration – A Comparative Overview of Civil and Common Law Doctrines, 2007 Austrian Arb. Y.B. 261; Rosell, Arbitration Costs as Relief and/or Damages, 28 J. Int’l Arb. 115 (2011); Rubino Sammartano, Costs Awards in Arbitration, 28 J. Int’l Arb. 113 (2011); Schwartz, The Costs of ICC Arbitration, 4(1) ICC Ct. Bull. 8 (1993); Smit & Robinson, Cost Awards in International Arbitration: Proposed Guidelines for Promoting Time and Cost Efficiency, 20 Am. Rev. Int’l Arb. 267 (2009); Smith, Shifting Sands: Cost-and-Fee Allocation in International Investment Arbitration, 51 Va. J. Int’l L. 749 (2011); Wetter & Priem, Costs and Their Allocation, 2 Am. Rev. Int’l Arb. 249 (1991).
- 463) See Carter, A Kiss For Arbitration Costs Allocation, 23 Am. Rev. Int’l Arb. 475 (2013) (“Attorney fees in significant commercial arbitrations, on the other hand, regularly run into the millions of dollars on each side.”); Gotanda, Attorneys’ Fees Agonistes: The Implications of Inconsistency in the Awarding of Fees and Costs in International Arbitrations, in M. Fernández-Ballesteros & D. Arias (eds.), Liber Amicorum Bernardo Cremades 541 (2010) (“The costs of international arbitration are two-fold and consist of the costs of the proceeding and the costs of the parties. The proceeding’s costs generally include administrative fees, tribunal fees, and costs associated with the tribunal. The parties’ costs are principally comprised of legal costs: attorneys’ fees, expert fees and related expenses.”); Gotanda, Awarding Costs and Attorney’s Fees in International Commercial Arbitration, 21 Mich. J. Int’l L. 1, 3 (1999); Rosell, Arbitration Costs as Relief and/or Damages, 28 J. Int’l Arb. 115, 115 (2011) (“costs of proceeding in the dispute resolution process ... include not only the amount that a party will have to pay at the end of the arbitration but also, for example, the litigation costs which would be generated if procedural issues had to be resolved prior to the arbitration or if parallel arbitration and/or litigation were engaged during the arbitration proceedings”).

- 464) Some national courts have held that arbitral tribunals have an obligation to consider costs claims before terminating their mandate and the arbitration. See, e.g., Casata Ltd v. Gen. Distributions Ltd, [2006] NZSC 8, ¶110 (N.Z. S.Ct.) (“[O]n the true meaning of cl 6(1)(a) of the Second Schedule an arbitral tribunal which is bound by that provision may not end its jurisdiction until after it has addressed the parties’ costs in the arbitration. ... [T]he tribunal in general should first determine those issues in an interim award, reserving the final determination on costs until it has given the parties an opportunity to be heard. If a party seeks costs, the tribunal must determine that question, either making an award of costs or deciding not to do so. In the latter case, or if no party seeks costs, the statutory default provision in cl 6(1)(b) will apply.”).
- 465) See E. Gaillard & J. Savage (eds.), Fouchard Gaillard Goldman on International Commercial Arbitration ¶¶1162, 1255 (1999); J. Lew, L. Mistelis & S. Kröll, Comparative International Commercial Arbitration ¶¶24-78 (2003); R. Merkin, Arbitration Law ¶18.77 (1991 & Update August 2013).
- 466) See, e.g., Severtson v. Williams Constr. Co., 220 Cal.Rptr. 400, 406 (Cal. Ct. App. 1985); Judgment of 19 December 1996, Société Qualiconsult v. Groupe Lincoln, 1998 Rev. arb. 121, 124 (Paris Cour d’appel) (“arbitrators have ... the power to decide on the costs except where otherwise stipulated in the arbitration agreement”); Judgment of 16 February 1993, Brega Oil Mktg Co. v. Techint Compagnie et Tecnica Internazionale SpA, 13 ASA Bull. 57, 61-62 (Vaud Ct. App.) (1995) (ICC tribunal seated in Switzerland not required to apply Swiss law to issue of costs of arbitration); G. Keutgen & G. Dal, L’arbitrage en droit belge et international Tome I: Le droit belge ¶¶510 et seq. (2d ed. 2006); Voit, in H.-J. Musielak (ed.), Kommentar zur Zivilprozessordnung §1057, ¶¶1, 2, 4, 6 (5th ed. 2007); Wirth, in S. Berti et al. (eds.), International Arbitration in Switzerland Art. 189, ¶¶53-55, 60 (2001).
- 467) See §15.02.
- 468) English Arbitration Act, 1996, §60; R. Merkin, Arbitration Law ¶18.77 (1991 & Update August 2013). See also Virdee v. Viridi [2003] EWCA Civ 41 (English Ct. App.) (agreement excluded costs of legal representation); Shashoua v. Sharma [2009] EWHC 957 (Comm) (English High Ct.) (§60 is mandatory); Mansfield v. Robinson [1928] All ER 69, 71-73 (QB) (English High Ct.).
- 469) See, e.g., Judgment of 16 October 2012, DFT 4A_314/2012 (Swiss Federal Tribunal); B. Berger & F. Kellerhals, International and Domestic Arbitration in Switzerland ¶1492 (2d ed. 2010).
- 470) Judgment of 10 November 2010, DFT 136 III 597, 603 (Swiss Federal Tribunal) (rejecting argument that arbitral tribunal’s “Interim Award,” holding parties jointly liable for tribunal’s fees, was not an award: “[A]ccording to the majority of legal writing the arbitral tribunal has no authority to issue an enforceable decision as to the fees it may derive from the arbitration agreement (receptum arbitri). This is because claims resulting from the relationship between the arbitral tribunal and the parties do not fall within the arbitration clause; also because this would be an unacceptable decision in one’s own case. The decision on costs in an arbitral award is therefore nothing else as a rendering of account which does not bind the parties or a circumscription of the arbitrators’ private law claim based on the arbitration agreement on which in case of dispute the State Court will have to decide.”).
- 471) Judgment of 24 October 2008, XXXIV Y.B. Comm. Arb. 533 (Oberlandesgericht Frankfurt) (2009) (denying recognition of portion of award regarding costs of arbitration, as arbitrators are prohibited from determining their own costs and fees, except when agreed between parties and arbitrators).
- 472) H. Holtzmann & J. Neuhaus, A Guide to the UNCITRAL Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration: Legislative History and Commentary 1118-19 (1989) (“Commentary on Matters Not Addressed in the Final Text”).
- 473) Böhler, Awarding Costs in International Commercial Arbitration: An Overview, 22 ASA Bull. 249, 252-53 (2004); H. Holtzmann & J. Neuhaus, A Guide to the UNCITRAL Model Law on International Commercial Arbitration: Legislative History and Commentary 1119 (1989).

- 474) See, e.g., English Arbitration Act, 1996, §61\(1\); German ZPO, §1057(1) (unless agreed otherwise, tribunal shall allocate costs, including those incurred by parties necessary for pursuit of claims); Austrian ZPO, §§609(1), (4) (unless agreed otherwise, tribunal shall decide on allocation of costs, taking into account circumstances of case, including particularly outcome of proceedings); British Columbia International Commercial Arbitration Act, §31 (same); Singapore International Arbitration Act, 2012, §12 (unless award otherwise directs, costs directed by award to be paid shall be taxable by Registrar); Hong Kong Arbitration Ordinance, 2013, Art. 57 (“Unless otherwise agreed to by the parties, an arbitral tribunal may direct that the recoverable costs ... are limited to a specific amount”), Art. 74 (tribunal may award costs that are “reasonable,” including costs incurred in preparation prior to the commencement of the proceeding, unless otherwise agreed to by the parties); Australian International Arbitration Act, 2011, §27 (parties authorized to agree that tribunal may make award of legal costs, including fixing its own fees and expenses); Russian Arbitration Law, Art. 31(2) (award shall contain amount of arbitrators’ fee and its apportionment); Bermuda International Conciliation and Arbitration Act, §32 (tribunal may make award of legal costs, including fixing its own fees and expenses); Mexican Commercial Code, Arts. 1454-1456; Nigerian Arbitration and Conciliation Decree, §§49, 50.
- 475) English Arbitration Act, 1996, §61\(1\) (“The tribunal may make an award allocating the costs of the arbitration as between the parties, subject to any agreement of the parties.”); R. Merkin, Arbitration Law ¶18.75 (1991 & Update August 2013).
- 476) English Arbitration Act, 1996, §61\(2\); R. Merkin, Arbitration Law ¶18.75 (1991 & Update August 2013).
- 477) English Arbitration Act, 1996, §61\(2\). See Newfield Constr. Ltd v. John Lawton Tomlinson [2004] EWHC 3051 (TCC) (English High Ct.) (annulling costs award because it ignored which party genuinely prevailed); Chartered Institute of Arbitrators, Guidelines for Arbitrators on Making Orders Relating to the Costs of Arbitration, 69 Arb. 130, 132 (2003) (“If a Claimant recovers a monetary award, he is normally regarded as successful since he had to bring the arbitration in order to recover the sum in question. The ‘event’ is the recovery of money. It is normally no ground for depriving the Claimant of his costs that the amount recovered is less than that claimed unless the recovery is so small that it can be regarded as nominal or derisory.”).
- 478) See, e.g., Newfield Constr. Ltd v. John Lawton Tomlinson [2004] EWHC 3051, ¶¶28, 34, 36 (TCC) (English High Ct.); Fence Gate Ltd v. NEL Constr. Ltd [2001] 82 ConLR 41(TCC) (English High Ct.); R. Merkin, Arbitration Law ¶¶18.80 to 18.82 (1991 & Update August 2013).
- 479) Fence Gate Ltd v. NEL Constr. Ltd [2001] 82 ConLR 41(TCC) (English High Ct.); N. Blackaby et al., Redfern and Hunter on International Arbitration ¶9.99 (5th ed. 2009); R. Merkin, Arbitration Law ¶¶18.80 to 18.82 (1991 & Update August 2013).
- 480) Y. Derains & L. Kiffer, National Report for France (2013), in J. Paulsson (ed.), International Handbook on Commercial Arbitration 1, 64 (1984 & Update 2013); E. Gaillard & J. Savage (eds.), Fouchard Gaillard Goldman on International Commercial Arbitration ¶1255 (1999).
- 481) B. Berger & F. Kellerhals, Internationale und interne Schiedsgerichtsbarkeit in der Schweiz ¶1477 (2006); Wirth, in S. Berti et al. (eds.), International Arbitration in Switzerland Art. 189, ¶¶51-61 (2001).
- 482) Austrian ZPO, §609 (arbitral tribunals authorized to make awards of legal costs); Swedish Arbitration Act, §37\(2\); Finnish Arbitration Act, §49; Singapore International Arbitration Act, 2012, §21; Hong Kong Arbitration Ordinance, 2013, Art. 74.
- 483) Judgment of 16 February 1993, Brega Oil Mktg Co. v. Techint Compagnie et Tecnica Internazionale SpA, 13 ASA Bull. 57, 61-62 (Vaud Ct. App.) (1995).
- 484) See, e.g., McNabb v. Riley, 29 F.3d 1303, 1306-07 (8th Cir. 1994); Bacardi Corp. v. Congreso de Uniones Industriales de Puerto Rico, 692 F.2d 210, 214 (1st Cir. 1982) (vacating award of attorneys’ fees); Irving v. Ebix, Inc., 2010 WL 3168429, at *4 (S.D. Cal.); Prudential-Bache Sec., Inc. v. Depew, 814 F.Supp. 1081, 1082-84 (M.D. Fla. 1993); C.T. Shipping, Ltd v. DMI (U.S.A.) Ltd, 774 F.Supp. 146, 152-53 (S.D.N.Y. 1991); Sammi Line Co. v. Altamar Navigation SA, 605 F.Supp. 72, 73-74 (S.D.N.Y. 1985) (relying on “traditional American rule” to conclude that agreement not addressing power to award attorneys’ fees did not permit such award); Transvenezuelan Shipping Co. v. Czarnikow-Rionda Co., 1981 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10059, at *2 (S.D.N.Y.) (vacating award of attorneys’ fees as exceeding arbitrators’ authority where parties’ agreement provided for discretion to apportion “expenses and costs of the arbitration,” but was silent as to attorneys’ fees); Koenigsberg v. Zinn, 381 N.Y.S.2d 248 (N.Y. App. Div. 1976). See also Revised Uniform Arbitration Act, §21(b) (2000) (“An arbitrator may award reasonable attorney’s fees and other reasonable expenses of arbitration if such an award is authorized by law in a civil action involving the same claim or by the agreement of the parties to the arbitration proceeding.”).

- 485) See Alyeska Pipeline Serv. Co. v. Wilderness Soc’y, 421 U.S. 240, 247 (U.S. S.Ct. 1975); Prudential-Bache Sec, Inc. v. Tanner, 72 F.3d 234, 242-43 (1st Cir. 1995); Prudential-Bache Sec., Inc. v. Depew, 814 F.Supp. 1081, 1082 (M.D. Fla. 1993) (in context of arbitration, observing that “[l]itigants in the United States must follow the so-called ‘American rule’ for attorneys’ fees,” and that “[a] litigant cannot collect attorneys’ fees from the losing party unless a statute or contract provides for the award, or the losing party willfully disobeyed a court order or brought suit in bad faith”).
- 486) See, e.g., Wells Fargo Bank v. WMR e-Pin LLC, 653 F.3d 702, 713-14 (8th Cir. 2011); Gen. Sec. Nat’l. Ins. Co. v. Aequicap Program Administrators, 785 F.Supp.2d 411, 418 (S.D.N.Y. 2011) (broad scope of arbitration agreement provided tribunal “inherent authority” to award attorney’s fees); Zimmer v. Scott, 771 F.Supp.2d 905, 908 (N.D. Ill. 2011); Eyewonder, Inc. v. Abraham, 2010 WL 3528882 (S.D.N.Y.) (arbitrator’s award of attorneys’ fees was not excess of authority; parties’ agreement authorized such award); MCT Shipping Corp. v. Sabet, 497 F.Supp. 1078, 1083 (S.D.N.Y. 1980) (confirming award of attorneys’ fees); Commercial Metals Co. v. Int’l Union Marine Corp., 1973 A.M.C. 515 (S.D.N.Y. 1972); J.R. Snyder Co. v. Soble, 226 N.W.2d 276, 278 (Mich. App. 1975).
- 487) See New York Civil Practice Law and Rules, §7513 (arbitrator fees, but not attorneys’ fees, may be allocated in the final award); Gen. Sec. Nat’l Ins. Co. v. Aequicap Program Admin., 785 F.Supp.2d 411, 423 (S.D.N.Y. 2011) (despite New York C.P.L.R. §7513, permitting only awards of arbitrators’ fees, arbitral tribunal had authority to award attorneys’ fees incurred by prevailing party in arbitration; award of fees not vacated).
- 488) Contra authorities cited [§23.08\[A\]\[4\]](#), p. 3091 n. 490.
- 489) See [§23.08\[B\]](#).
- 490) See, e.g., Asturiana de Zinc Mktg Inc. v. LaSalle Rolling Mills, Inc., 20 F.Supp. 670, 674-75 (S.D.N.Y. 1998) (arbitrator is not authorized to award costs of legal representation in AAA arbitration seated in New York, under contract governed by New York law); CIT Project Fin., LLC v. Credit Suisse First Boston, LLC, 2004 WL 2941331, at *4 (N.Y. Sup. Ct.) (arbitrators lack authority to award attorneys’ fees notwithstanding incorporation of AAA International Rules).
- 491) Reliastar Life Ins. Co. of N.Y. v. EMC Nat’l Life Co., 564 F.3d 81, 87 (2d Cir. 2009) (“recognizing a bad faith exception to the general ‘American Rule’ that each party bears its own attorney’s fees”; interpreting clause providing that each party will bear own attorney’s fees as not precluding arbitrators’ award of attorney’s fees as sanction for bad faith conduct); Chase Bank USA, NA v. Hale, 859 N.Y.S.2d 342, 346 (2008) (“where arbitrators find a claim to have been brought in bad faith, they may, in the exercise of their broad powers to fashion remedies, award attorneys’ fees”).
- 492) Aasma v. Am. SS Owners Mut. Protection & Indem., 238 F.Supp.2d 918, 921-22 (N.D. Ohio 2003) (rejecting argument that foreign award should not be recognized because it awarded legal costs: “[T]he parties’ agreement established that the arbitration was to be conducted in accordance with the [English] Arbitration Act 1996. Sections 59-64 of the Act specifically provide for the awarding of costs and set forth default provisions in the absence of an agreement between the parties as to costs.”); Employers Ins. Warsaw v. Banco Seguros del Estado, 34 F.Supp.2d 1115, 1122 (E.D. Wis. 1999); Compagnie des Bauxites de Guinee v. Hammermills Inc., 1992 WL 122712, at *7 (D.D.C.).
- 493) If the substantive and procedural law differ, difficulties may arise. Suppose the arbitration is conducted in England, with English law as the procedural law, but the parties’ underlying dispute is governed by New York law. English law permits (arguably requires) awards of legal costs; New York law arguably does not. If the tribunal awards the costs of legal representation, would a U.S. court enforce the award? As a matter of principle, the arbitrators’ award rests on a choice-of-law decision concerning the respective scope and priority of the curial and substantive laws, and that conflicts decision should not be reviewable in a recognition action in U.S. courts. See [§19.03\[H\]\[3\]](#).
- 494) See, e.g., Sun Ship, Inc. v. Matson Navigation Co., 785 F.2d 59, 64 (3d Cir. 1986); Gelco Corp. v. Baker Indus., Inc., 779 F.2d 26, 28 (8th Cir. 1985); Rhonda Enters. SA v. Projector SA, 2009 WL 290537 (S.D.N.Y.) (awarding sanctions for fees and costs for non-meritorious attempts to vacate arbitral award); Nitron Int’l Corp. v. Golden Panagia Maritime, Inc., 1999 WL 223155, at *3 (S.D.N.Y.) (awarding attorney’s fees for cost of recognition proceedings; fees available, despite American rule, where award debtor “refused to abide by the arbitrator’s decision without justification”); C.T. Shipping, Ltd v. DMI (U.S.A.) Ltd, 774 F.Supp. 146, 155 (S.D.N.Y. 1991); Hunt v. Commodity Haulage Corp., 647 F.Supp. 797, 799 (E.D.N.Y. 1986) (awarding attorney’s fees because party refused to comply with award without justification); Supermkts Gen. Corp. v. Local 919, 645 F.Supp. 831, 836 (D. Conn. 1986) (refusing to award attorneys’ fees for party’s action to vacate award because challenge was not in bad faith); Jarrell v. Wilson Warehouse Co., 490 F.Supp. 412, 417 (M.D. La. 1980) (same); Shearson Hayden Stone, Inc. v. Liang, 493 F.Supp. 104, 110 (N.D. Ill. 1980) (refusing to award fees because defendant’s opposition was not “without justification”).
- 495) Sun Ship, Inc. v. Matson Navigation Co., 785 F.2d 59, 64 (3d Cir. 1986).

- 496) See§23.08[B]. Some institutional rules contain limits on the amount of costs for legal representation that may be awarded. The Rules of the Court of Arbitration of the Polish Chamber of Commerce limit recovery of legal costs (to the costs of the arbitration proceedings and fees for one legal representative) to 100,000 Polish zloty [approximately USD 30,000]. Polish Chamber of Commerce Court of Arbitration Rules, Art. 43(4). These sorts of provisions are unusual and most institutional rules contain no such limits.
- 497) See*Final Award in ICC Cases Nos. 7385 and 7402*, XVIII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 68, 78 (1993); Koch Shipping, Inc. v. Antco Shipping Ltd, Award in SMA Case No. 2219 of 4 March 1986, XII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 169, 172 (1987); Ad Hoc Award of 27 May 1991, XVII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 11, 26-27 (1992); G. Born, International Arbitration and Forum Selection Agreements: Drafting and Enforcing 91-93 (4th ed. 2013).
- 498) See§23.08[A].
- 499) 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 40(1); 1976 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 38.
- 500) 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 40(2)(e). See also 1976 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 38(2)(e).
- 501) 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 42(1). See also 1976 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 40(1).
- 502) 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 42(1). See 1976 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 40(2). See also D. Caron & L. Caplan, The UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules: A Commentary 870 (2d ed. 2013) (“neither the [UNCITRAL] Rules nor the travaux préparatoires provide any guidance on the meaning of [Article 42(1)]”); UNCITRAL, Summary Record of the Thirteenth Meeting of the Committee of the Whole (II), Ninth Session, U.N. Doc. A/CN.9/9/C.2/SR.13, ¶20 (1976) (for legal costs, “no principle of compensation would be laid down”).
- 503) The tribunal’s discretion with regard to other costs of arbitration (e.g., the arbitrators’ expenses and fees) is more limited, with Article 42(1) providing only that these costs “shall in principle be borne by the unsuccessful party.” See also D. Caron & L. Caplan, The UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules: A Commentary 846 (2d ed. 2013) (“Legal and other costs are considered under Article 40 only if the arbitral tribunal determines that the amount of such costs is ‘reasonable.’”); UNCITRAL, Report of the Secretary-General on the Preliminary Draft Set of Arbitration Rules for Optional Use in Ad Hoc Arbitration Relating to International Trade, Eighth Session, U.N. Doc. A/CN.9/97, VI UNCITRAL Y.B. 163, 180 (1975) (initial proposal allowing legal costs only where “arbitrators deem that legal assistance was necessary under the circumstances of the case” was deleted as unnecessarily restrictive).
- 504) 2012 ICC Rules, Art. 37(4). See also 1998 ICC Rules, Art. 31(3).
- 505) 2012 ICC Rules, Art. 37(4). See also 1998 ICC Rules, Art. 31(3).
- 506) W. Craig, W. Park & J. Paulsson, International Chamber of Commerce Arbitration ¶21.04 (3d ed. 2000); Y. Derains & E. Schwartz, A Guide to the ICC Rules of Arbitration 366 (2d ed. 2005) (“This wording is intended to permit the arbitrators the greatest possible discretion.”).
- 507) 2012 ICC Rules, Art. 31(5).
- 508) 2012 ICC Rules, Art. 37(1); Y. Derains & E. Schwartz, A Guide to the ICC Rules of Arbitration 357-58 (2d ed. 2005). See also 1998 ICC Rules, Art. 31(1).
- 509) LCIA Rules, Art. 28(2).
- 510) LCIA Rules, Art. 28(3).
- 511) LCIA Rules, Art. 28(4).
- 512) See§23.08[A][2]; R. Merkin, Arbitration Law ¶18.79 (1991 & Update August 2013).
- 513) See, e.g., ICDR Rules, Art. 31; 2013 HKIAC Rules, Art. 33; 2013 VIAC Rules, Art. 37; WIPO Rules, Art. 72.
- 514) See, e.g., 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 40(2)(e); 1976 UNCITRAL Rules, Art. 38(1)(e); 2012 ICC Rules, Art. 37(1); LCIA Rules, Art. 28(3); DIS Rules, §35(1) (“costs incurred by the parties and which were necessary for the proper pursuit of their claim or defence”); 2013 VIAC Rules, Art. 7 (“determine the amount of the appropriate costs of the parties”). SeeRosell, Arbitration Costs as Relief and/or Damages, 28 J. Int’l Arb. 115, 116 (2011) (“[T]he arbitrators must determine the items that form part of the recoverable party costs and fix the resulting amounts on the basis of their discretion. The costs must have been incurred by a party for the purpose of the arbitration, and they must be ‘reasonable’ or ‘necessary.’ The test of reasonableness requires the arbitrators to determine whether the activities for which the costs were incurred were necessary in light of the complexity of the case, and, in the case of an affirmative answer, if the amounts claimed were reasonable.”).
- 515) See, e.g., 2010 UNCITRAL Rules, Arts. 40(1), 42(1); 2012 ICC Rules, Art. 37(3); LCIA Rules, Art. 28(2).
- 516) M. Bühler & T. Webster, Handbook of ICC Arbitration: Commentary, Precedents, Materials 361 (2d ed. 2008) (“In opting out of national courts with international arbitration, the parties are agreeing to pay the costs associated with international arbitration.”).
- 517) See§23.08[A].
- 518) See§23.08[C].

- 519) See, e.g., Final Award in ICC Case No. 7006, XVIII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 58 (1993); Beckman Instruments, Inc. v. Overseas Private Inv. Corp., Award in AAA Case No. 16 199 00209 87G of 20 February 1988, XIV Y.B. Comm. Arb. 73, 81 (1989); Final Award in NAI Case No. 1930 of 12 October 1999, XXVI Y.B. Comm. Arb. 181, 196-97 (2001); Econet Wireless Ltd v. First Bank of Nigeria, Ad Hoc Award of 2 June 2005, XXXI Y.B. Comm. Arb. 49, 64-65 (2006); Himpurna Cal. Energy Ltd v. PT (Persero) Perusahaan Listrik Negara, Final Ad Hoc Award of 4 May 1999, XXV Y.B. Comm. Arb. 13, 106-07 (2000). See also Rosell, Arbitration Costs as Relief and/or Damages, 28 J. Int'l Arb. 115, 115 (2011) ("While the institutional rules can provide general directions on the apportionment of costs, they usually do not provide much guidance as to how costs should be assessed or allocated.").
- 520) See, e.g., Final Award in ICC Case No. 11670, 22 ASA Bull. 333, 341-42 (2004); Final Award in ICC Case No. 6752, XVIII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 54, 57 (1993); Final Award in ICC Case No. 6527, XVIII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 44, 53 (1993); Final Award in ICC Case No. 5460, XIII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 104 (1988); Award in CRCICA Case No. 20/1990 of 22 April 1992, in M. Alam Eldin (ed.), Arbitral Awards of the Cairo Regional Centre for International Commercial Arbitration 29, 38, 41 (2000); William J. Levitt v. Islamic Repub. of Iran, Award in IUSCT Case No. 520-210-3 of 29 August 1991, 28 Iran-US C.T.R. 145, ¶¶ 125-27 (1991); Himpurna Cal. Energy Ltd v. PT (Persero) Perusahaan Listrik Negara, Final Ad Hoc Award of 4 May 1999, XXV Y.B. Comm. Arb. 13, 106-07 (2000).
- 521) Gotanda, Attorneys' Fees Agonistes: The Implications of Inconsistency in the Awarding of Fees and Costs in International Arbitrations, in M. Fernández-Ballesteros & D. Arias (eds.), Liber Amicorum for Bernado Cremades 539 (2010); Gotanda, Awarding Costs and Attorney's Fees in International Commercial Arbitrations, 21 Mich. J. Int'l L. 1, 2 (1999). See also Carter, A Kiss For Arbitration Costs Allocation, 23 Am. Rev. Int'l Arb. 475 (2013) ("Arbitrators may and regularly do either (1) apportion costs, including attorney fees, based on some version of their perception of the extent of success on the merits ... ; (2) determine which is the 'prevailing' party, without much regard for the degree of its success, and award that party all or substantially all of the costs; or (3) leave each party to bear its own attorney fees and split the other costs of arbitration (sometimes called the purely 'procedural' costs) more or less evenly between the parties. But there are no rules or general principles by which to determine when a tribunal should or will apply one or another of these approaches."); Smith, Shifting Sands: Cost-and-Fee Allocation in International Investment Arbitration, 51 Va. J. Int'l L. 749, 750 (2011) ("[I]n recent years, ICSID and UNCITRAL tribunals have reached widely divergent results that are inconsistent with the application of a steady costs-application regime. Rather, these outcomes result from the variable application of multiple factors. The result is a regime in which victorious claimants are substantially more likely to recover some measure of legal fees or arbitral costs than victorious respondents. However, this outcome is nothing more than a tendency. Depending on the other circumstances of the case – particularly excessive filings, wholly unmeritorious claims, or fraud – respondents can and do recover large amounts of expenses from losing claimants.").
- 522) Final Award in ICC Case No. 6320, XX Y.B. Comm. Arb. 62, 108-09 (1995); Banque Arabe et Int'l d'Inv. v. Inter-Arab Inv. Guarantee Corp., Ad Hoc Award of 17 November 1994, XXI Y.B. Comm. Arb. 13, 38 (1996).
- 523) See §23.08[C]; S.D. Myers, Inc. v. Gov't of Canada, Final Award on Costs in NAFTA Case of 30 December 2002, available at www.naftaclaims.com (successful claimant, who has been "forced to go through the process in order to achieve success, ... should not be penalised by having to pay for the process itself"); Smit & Robinson, Cost Awards in International Arbitration: Proposed Guidelines for Promoting Time and Cost Efficiency, 20 Am. Rev. Int'l Arb. 267 (2009) ("loser pays [principle]" is "well suited to international commercial arbitration"). Compare UNCITRAL, Summary Record of the Thirteenth Meeting of the Committee of the Whole (II), Ninth Session, U.N. Doc. A/CN.9/9/C.2/SR.13, 2-4 (1976) (noting opposition to rule that legal costs can be recovered by prevailing party, as contrary to state practice and disfavoring less affluent).
- 524) See, e.g., Award in ICC Case No. 8486, XXIVa Y.B. Comm. Arb. 162, 172 (1999) ("According to general principles, the costs of the arbitration must be borne by the party which loses the arbitration"; "the arbitral tribunal must take into account for its decision on costs not only the result of the proceedings but also the behaviour of the parties during the proceedings"); Final Award in ICC Case No. 7006, XVIII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 58, 67 (1993) (listing factors; awarding all fees because of respondent's procedural misconduct); Final Award in ICC Case No. 6527, XVIII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 44, 53 (1993) (no award of fees, because prevailing party claimed "excessive" damages); Final Award in ICC Case No. 6363, XVII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 186, 211 (1992) (awarding all fees because claimant prevailed "in substance"); Final Award in ICC Case No. 5759, XVIII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 34, 43 (1993) (percentage corresponding to success); Final Award in ICC Case No. 4629, XVIII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 11 (1993) (awarding 90% of all fees because of respondent's delaying tactics); Rosell, Arbitration Costs as Relief and/or Damages, 28 J. Int'l Arb. 115, 117-18 (2011).

- 525) Final Award in ICC Case No. 11670, 22 ASA Bull. 333 (2004). See also M. Bühler & T. Webster, Handbook of ICC Arbitration: Commentary, Precedents, Materials 373-81 (2d ed. 2008) (relevant considerations in awarding legal costs); D. Caron & L. Caplan, The UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules: A Commentary 870-75 (2d ed. 2013) (factors relevant to costs awards).

As discussed above, the 2012 ICC Rules identify the same criteria in Article 31(5): “In making decisions as to costs, the arbitral tribunal may take into account such circumstances as it considers relevant, including the extent to which each party has conducted the arbitration in an expeditious and cost-effective manner.”

- 526) M. Bühler & T. Webster, Handbook of ICC Arbitration: Commentary, Precedents, Materials 377 (2d ed. 2008) (“Tribunals are reluctant to review in detail the time spent by lawyers in preparing the case.”); J. Waincymer, Procedure and Evidence in International Arbitration 1294 (2012) (“Many arbitrators would appear to simply accept a general fee note from counsel.”); Wehrli, Contingency Fees/Pactum de Talnario “Civil Law Approach”, 26 ASA Bull. 241, 254 (2008) (“[P]arties do not have to give full evidence on the parties’ costs and therefore have only a limited duty to substantiate. In practice, the proceedings relating to the parties’ costs are a kind of ‘summary proceeding’ and the decision is based on prima facie evidence.”) (emphasis in original). Summaries detailing monthly charges, broken down by individual lawyers’ rates and time spent, plus expenses, is ordinarily sufficiently detailed.
- 527) Carter, A Kiss For Arbitration Costs Allocation, 23 Am. Rev. Int’l Arb. 475, 479 (2013) (“in practice, many American arbitrators tend to apply ‘loser pays’ only to the procedural costs and not to attorney fees”); Frank, Rationalizing Cost Awards in Investment Treaty Arbitration, 88 Wash. U. L. Rev. 769, 777-78 (2011) (“When tribunals did make decisions, they did not regularly cite to any legal authority (i.e., citing less than one authority on average) to justify the result. Where tribunals offered reasons, justifications diverged across categories. Although the literature suggests cost decisions are often based on a pure ‘loser-pays’ approach or a desire to punish inappropriate behavior, these were not the most frequent rationales. ... Tribunals were most likely to rationalize their decisions using the parties’ relative success and equitable considerations. They were unlikely to base their decisions expressly on concerns related to the public interest, party equality, stare decisis, or settlement efforts.”).
- 528) Carter, A Kiss For Arbitration Costs Allocation, 23 Am. Rev. Int’l Arb. 475, 479 (2013).
- 529) See, e.g., Final Award in ICC Case No. 10188, XXVIII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 68 (2003) (75/25% allocation of arbitration costs and legal costs, based upon relative success); Final Award in ICC Case No. 8528, XXV Y.B. Comm. Arb. 341, 348 (2000) (claimant prevailed, holding that respondent bears 80% of arbitration costs and 60% of claimant’s legal costs); Final Award in ICC Case No. 8445, XXVI Y.B. Comm. Arb. 153 (2001) (awarding 75% of arbitration costs and legal costs, based on substantial success on merits of claimant’s claims); Interim Award in ICC Case No. 7645, XXVI Y.B. Comm. Arb. 130 (2001) (awarding costs of arbitration in proportion to percentage of success on amounts claimed (96/4%); reducing costs of legal representation “if only a modest proportion” because prevailing party was represented by two firms); ICC, Statistics Concerning Awards of Legal Costs, 4 ICC Ct. Bull. 43 (1993). See also Y. Derains & E. Schwartz, A Guide to the ICC Rules of Arbitration 371-73 (2d ed. 2005).
- 530) Y. Derains & E. Schwartz, A Guide to the ICC Rules of Arbitration 371-73 (2d ed. 2005); J. Fry, S. Greenberg & F. Mazza, Secretariat’s Guide to ICC Arbitration 407 (2012).
- 531) Y. Derains & E. Schwartz, A Guide to the ICC Rules of Arbitration 371-73 (2d ed. 2005); J. Fry, S. Greenberg & F. Mazza, Secretariat’s Guide to ICC Arbitration 407 (2012).
- 532) See, e.g., Final Award in ICC Case No. 9466, XXVII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 170, 180 (2002) (given relative success of each party, “costs of the arbitration [shall] be borne by the parties in equal proportions (50/50) and ... each party shall bear its own legal costs”); Final Award in NAI Case No. 1930 of 12 October 1999, XXVI Y.B. Comm. Arb. 181, 196 (2001) (“The practice of international arbitral tribunals vary widely. ... [T]here are no rigid rules. ... [C]laimant succeeded only in relation to a small proportion of its total claims. ... [T]he Tribunal awards that each party shall bear its own costs of legal assistance.”). See also Y. Derains & E. Schwartz, A Guide to the ICC Rules of Arbitration 371-73 (2d ed. 2005); J. Fry, S. Greenberg & F. Mazza, Secretariat’s Guide to ICC Arbitration 407 (2012).
- 533) See, e.g., Final Award in ICC Case Nos. 6515 and 6516, XXIV Y.B. Comm. Arb. 80, 139 (1999) (“The tribunal is reluctant to award costs in favor of either party. Not only has the claimant ... not fully succeeded, but the dispute in this instance is one that could have been handled in a more commercially effective manner. ... Neither party has contributed in any way to lessening the number or complexity of the issues to be resolved by the tribunal[;] on the contrary, each has contributed to inflate this arbitration in particular by raising numerous procedural issues. Therefore, the tribunal has no difficulty in deciding that each party shall bear an equal share of the costs of the arbitration ... and bear the legal costs ... that it has incurred.”); UNCITRAL, Summary Record of the Thirteenth Meeting of the Committee of the Whole (II), Ninth Session, U.N. Doc. A/CN.9/9/C.2/SR.13, ¶4 (1976) (delaying tactics would justify award of legal costs).

- 534) D. Caron & L. Caplan, The UNCITRAL Arbitration Rules: A Commentary 871-72 (2d ed. 2013).
- 535) Y. Derains & E. Schwartz, A Guide to the ICC Rules of Arbitration 371-73 (2d ed. 2005).
- 536) Franck, Empirically Evaluating Claims About Investment Treaty Arbitration, 86 N.C.L. Rev. 1, 69 (2007). See also C. Schreuer et al., The ICSID Convention: A Commentary 1229 (2d ed. 2009) (“practice of ICSID tribunals in apportioning costs is neither clear nor uniform”); Smith, Shifting Sands: Cost-and-Fee Allocation in International Investment Arbitration, 51 Va. J. Int’l L. 749, 779 (2011) (“When respondents recovered costs, it was frequently in cases of abuse of process, fraud, or other such misconduct by claimants.”).
- 537) Smit & Robinson, Cost Awards in International Arbitration: Proposed Guidelines for Promoting Time and Cost Efficiency, 20 Am. Rev. Int’l Arb. 267 (2009).
- 538) Carter, A Kiss For Arbitration Costs Allocation, 23 Am. Rev. Int’l Arb. 475 (2013) (“One could call what now tends to be the norm the ‘Keep It Simple Solution’ (hereinafter, ‘KISS’) for cost allocation problems, and I see no convincing reason to change it. ... There are no multi-factor analyses to be conducted, just a pair of questions to be answered: does degree of success or inefficiencies merit shifting procedural costs, and does party/attorney conduct call for a shifting of attorney fees?”).
- 539) Some practitioners have also usefully suggested that arbitral tribunals discuss allocation of costs at the outset of arbitral proceedings. Smit & Robinson, Cost Awards in International Arbitration: Proposed Guidelines for Promoting Time and Cost Efficiency, 20 Am. Rev. Int’l Arb. 267 (2009) (recommending that arbitrators discuss cost allocation with counsel at beginning of arbitration).
- 540) See §11.03[D][2][i]; §17.02[A].
- 541) See §11.03[D][2][c]; §16.02[A].
- 542) See §11.03[D][2][h]; §23.07[F].
- 543) See §11.03[C][1][c][v]; §16.02[A]; §17.02[A][5]. Thus, annulment of an award of legal costs in the arbitral seat should not, where the parties’ agreement provided for such awards, prevent recognition of the award elsewhere. See §11.03[C][1][c]; §25.04[D][6].
- 544) The same distinction is drawn with regard to a tribunal’s power to order disclosure and provisional measures, on the one hand, and the standards governing such relief, on the other hand. See §16.02[A]; §17.02[A][5]; §17.02[G][2].
- 545) Nucor Corp. v. Gen. Bearing Corp., 423 S.E.2d 747, 748-49 (N.C. 1992) (where agreement included North Carolina choice-of-law clause, court applied North Carolina statute that “specifically prohibits arbitrators from awarding attorneys’ fees unless ‘the agreement to arbitrate’ which compelled the parties to arbitration says otherwise”); Grynberg v. BP Exploration Operating Ltd, 2010 WL 5137912 (N.Y. Sup.) (substantive law governing contract also governed whether to award attorney’s fees: “[w]here an arbitration agreement expressly invokes state rules, those rules govern the arbitration”), rev’d on other grounds, 938 N.Y.S.2d 439 (N.Y. App. Div. 2012); P. Schlosser, Das Recht der internationalen privaten Schiedsgerichtsbarkeit ¶1701 (2d ed. 1989) (law applicable to arbitration agreement determines allocation of costs). But cf. PaineWebber, Inc. v. Bybyk, 81 F.3d 1193, 1202 (2d Cir. 1996) (“[A] choice of law provision will not be construed to impose substantive restrictions on the parties’ rights under the Federal Arbitration Act, including the right to arbitrate claims for attorneys’ fees. Therefore, [the appellant] cannot rely on the New York choice-of-law provision to prevent [the appellee] from seeking in arbitration a remedy that is not foreclosed by the Agreement.”); Nat’l Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, PA v. Odyssey Am. Reins. Corp., 2009 WL 4059183, at *1, 8 (S.D.N.Y.) (agreement for New York-seated arbitration provided: “The arbitrators and umpire are relieved from all judicial formality and may abstain from the strict rules of the law; however, punitive damages shall not be awarded. They shall settle any dispute under the Contract according to an equitable rather than a strict legal interpretation of its terms”; court held that “New York law prohibiting an arbitral award of attorneys’ fees is not applicable in the instant case”).
- 546) See §19.04[A][6].
- 547) Relatively few awards appear to have adopted this analysis. For one example, see Award in Paris Chamber of Arbitration of 8 March 1996, XXII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 28 (1997) (applying “lex mercatoria”).
- 548) See §23.08[B].
- 549) For example, if a party rejects a settlement offer of X and goes on to obtain an award of X (or less than X), it generally should not be entitled to amounts expended after rejecting the settlement offer, and should instead be liable for the other party’s costs for that period.
- 550) Aeberli, Jurisdictional Disputes Under the Arbitration Act 1996: A Procedural Route Map, 21 Arb. Int’l 253, 271-72 (2005); Kröll, Recourse Against Negative Decisions on Jurisdiction, 20 Arb. Int’l 55, 69-70 (2004).
- 551) See §7.03[A][5][b]; §7.03[F]. By definition, the respondent will have contested the tribunal’s jurisdiction. If not, then there will have been a waiver of jurisdictional objections. See §7.05[A][5].
- 552) See §23.08[C].

- 553) Where the tribunal decides that there was a valid arbitration agreement (or this is not contested), but that the dispute is outside the scope of that agreement, then the difficulties concerning the tribunal's power to make a costs award should not exist. In these cases, generally-applicable standards regarding the tribunal's power to award costs apply without controversy.
- 554) See, e.g., Final Award in ICC Case No. 9302, XXVIII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 54, 67 (2003) (dismissing arbitration on jurisdictional grounds, but ordering costs split: "The issue of jurisdiction was a complex one, the outcome of which was difficult to predict. ... [B]oth parties operated in good faith in the genuine belief that different rules governed their relationship. ... [B]oth parties have fully cooperated in the arbitration, and acted, through their counsel, in a highly professional manner, which the tribunal appreciated."); Montague v. Commonwealth Dev. Corp., XXVI Y.B. Comm. Arb. 744, 749 (Queensland S.Ct. 1999) (2001) (rejecting argument that tribunal lacked power, after concluding that there was no valid arbitration agreement, to award costs against unsuccessful claimant: "there was clearly an agreement ... that the preliminary jurisdictional point ... should be determined in the arbitration and ... that the arbitrator should make a decision with respect to the cost of the arbitration on this issue").
- 555) Bühler, Awarding Costs in International Commercial Arbitration: An Overview, 22 ASA Bull. 249, 258-59 (2004); Y. Derains & E. Schwartz, A Guide to the ICC Rules of Arbitration 108-09 (2d ed. 2005). See also Austrian ZPO, §609(2) ("Upon application of respondent, the arbitral tribunal may also decide upon the obligation of the claimant to reimburse the costs of the proceedings, if it has declared itself as not competent on the grounds that there is no arbitration agreement.").
- 556) For commentary, see Branson & Wallace, Awarding Interest in International Commercial Arbitration: Establishing A Uniform Approach, 28 Va. J. Int'l L. 919 (1988); Gotanda, Awarding Interest in International Arbitration, 90 Am. J. Int'l L. 40 (1996); Gotanda, A Study of Interest, in L. Lévy & F. De Ly (eds.), Interest, Auxiliary and Alternative Remedies in International Arbitration 170 (2008); Gotanda, Compound Interest in International Disputes, 2004 Oxford U. Comp. L. Forum; Gotanda, The Unpredictability Paradox: Punitive Damages and Interest in International Arbitration, 7(1) Transnat'l Disp. Mgt 1 (2010); Gotanda, When Recessions Create Windfalls: The Problems of Using Domestic Law to Fix Interest Rates Under Article 78 CISG, 13 Vindobona J. Int'l Comm. Law & Arb. 229 (2009); Hammoud & Secomb, Interest in ICC Arbitral Awards, 15(1) ICC Ct. Bull. 53 (2004); Hunter & Triebel, Awarding Interest in International Arbitration: Some Observations Based on A Comparative Study of the Laws of England and Germany, 6(1) J. Int'l Arb. 7 (1989); Note, The Provision of Compound Interest Under International Law, 95 Am. J. Int'l L. 633 (2001); Reisberg & Pauley, An Arbitrator's Authority to Award Interest on An Award Until "Date of Payment": Problems and Limitations, 2013 Int'l Arb. L. Rev. 25; Wetter, Interest as An Element of Damages in the Arbitral Process, 5 Int'l Fin. L. Rev. 20 (1986).
- 557) F. Mann, The Legal Aspect of Money 70-71 (5th ed. 1992).
- 558) Kuwait v. Am. Independent Oil Co., Ad Hoc Award of 24 March 1982, 21 Int'l Legal Mat. 976, 1042 (1982).
- 559) British Columbia International Commercial Arbitration Act, §31(7). See also English Arbitration Act, 1996, §§49(3), (4) (authority to award simple or compound interest (i) "in respect of any period up to the date of the award" and (ii) "from the date of the award (or any later date) until payment"); Singapore International Arbitration Act, 2012, §12(4) ("may award interest (including interest on a compound basis)"); Hong Kong Arbitration Ordinance, 2013, Arts. 79, 80 ("Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, an arbitral tribunal may, in the arbitral proceedings before it, award simple or compound interest from the dates, at the rates, and with the rests that the tribunal considers appropriate. ... Interest is payable on the judgment rate, except when the award otherwise provides."); Australian International Arbitration Act, 2011, §§25, 26 (tribunal may award simple interest until date of award and interest at reasonable rate from date of award until specified later date); Malaysian Arbitration Act, §33(6) ("Unless otherwise provided in the arbitration agreement, the arbitral tribunal may award interest on any sum of money ordered to be paid by the award from the date of the award to the date of realization; and determine the rate of interest."); Bermuda International Conciliation and Arbitration Act, §31 (same).
- 560) See §23.09[A].
- 561) Berger, General Principles of Law in International Commercial Arbitration: How to Find Them – How to Apply Them, 5 World Arb. & Med. Rev. 97, 130-36 (2011) (practice of international tribunals "to award interest goes back to the famous 'Alabama' Award of 1872").
- 562) LCIA Rules Art. 26(6). See also Westminster Constr. Corp. v. PPG Indus., Inc., 376 A.2d 708, 711 (R.I. 1977); Matter of Burke, 191 N.Y. 437, 440 (N.Y. 1908); Gotanda, Compound Interest in International Disputes, 2004 Oxford U. Comp. L. Forum; Note, The Provision of Compound Interest Under International Law, 95 Am. J. Int'l L. 633 (2001).
- 563) See, e.g., Branson & Wallace, Awarding Interest in International Commercial Arbitration: Establishing A Uniform Approach, 28 Va. J. Int'l L. 919 (1988); D. Dobbs, Remedies 164-81 (1973).

- 564) Statutory rates of interest vary, of course, from nation to nation. In the United States, 28 U.S.C. §1961 provides for a market rate of interest. In other jurisdictions, a fixed rate is established, which may bear little relation to market rates. See, e.g., New York Civil Practice Law and Rules §§5001, 5004 (6%). In other nations, a rate calculated by reference to some specified premium above market rates is established to deter delays in payment. See Wetter, Interest as An Element of Damages in the Arbitral Process, 5 Int'l Fin. L. Rev. 20, 22 (1986).
- 565) See§23.09[C].
- 566) See§23.09[E].
- 567) See Giardina, Issues of Applicable Law and Uniform Law on Interest: Basic Distinctions in National and International Practice, in L. Lévy & F. De Ly (eds.), Interest, Auxiliary and Alternative Remedies in International Arbitration 131 (2008).
- 568) SeeN. Blackaby et al. (eds.), Redfern and Hunter on International Arbitration ¶9.75 (5th ed. 2009) (referring to German conflict of law rules as an example).
- 569) See§16.02[A]; §17.02[E]; §23.07[F]; §23.08[D]; Judgment of 30 June 2004, 2004 Rev. arb. 738 (French Cour de cassation civ. 1e) (law governing default interest was procedural law of arbitration); Chabot, Intérêts moratoires dus sur la condamnation prononcée par une sentence arbitrale, 2004 JCP E 1860. CompareDr. Horst Reiniccus v. Bank for Int'l Settlements, Final Award in PCA Case of 19 September 2003, XXVIII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 100, 151-52 (2003) (law governing rates of interest was law of state with closest contacts to case); Guinea v. Maritime Int'l Nominees Establishment – MINE (Liechtenstein), Decision on Application for Annulment in ICSID Case No. ARB/84/4 of 14 December 1989, XVI Y.B. Comm. Arb. 40, 45, 51 (1991) (law governing rates of interest was law designated in contractual choice-of-law provision).
- 570) See§11.03[D].
- 571) This is a specialized application of the principle of depeçage, discussed above. See§11.05[A][2].
- 572) That is the case in some Middle Eastern states, where neither local courts nor arbitrators may award interest. See Saleh, Interest and Public Policy From Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards in the Arab Middle East, in J. Lew (ed.), Contemporary Problems in International Arbitration 348, 349 (1986). The consistency of such provisions with Articles II and V(1)(d) of the New York Convention is open to debate.
- 573) French Civil Code, Art. 1153(1) (interest at statutory rate).
- 574) See§15.02[A].
- 575) As discussed above, differing laws potentially apply to the tribunal's power to order disclosure, provisional measures and costs, on the one hand, and the standards for granting such relief, on the other. See§16.02[A]; §17.02[E]; §23.07[F]; §23.08[D]; §23.09[B], p. 3107 n. 580.
- 576) McCullough & Co. v. Ministry of Post, Tel. & Tel., Award in IUSCT Case No. 225-89-3 of 22 April 1986, XII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 316, 328 (1987) (Brower, J., dissenting).
- 577) See Hunter & Triebel, Awarding Interest in International Arbitration: Some Observations Based on A Comparative Study of the Laws of England and Germany, 6(1) J. Int'l Arb. 7 (1989); Wetter, Interest as An Element of Damages in the Arbitral Process, 5 Int'l Fin. L. Rev. 20, 22 (1986).
- 578) Compare Restatement (Second) Conflict of Laws §207, comment e (1971) with Klaxon Co. v. Stentor Elec. Mfg Co., 313 U.S. 487 (U.S. S.Ct. 1941). See also J. Story, Commentaries on the Conflict of Laws 395, 405-06 (8th ed. 1883) ("as a general rule ... the lex loci contractus will, in all cases, govern as to the rule of interest").

- 579) See, e.g., Final Award in ICC Case No. 6531, XVII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 221, 223-34 (1992) (applying French statutory rates of interest because French law governed agreement; French arbitral seat); Award in ICC Case No. 6281, XV Y.B. Comm. Arb. 96 (1990) (applying Yugoslav statutory interest rules where Yugoslav law governed contract; rates apparently based on historical market rates, with 7.25% to accrue from date of award until payment); Final Award in ICC Case No. 6230, XVII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 164, 175-76 (1992) (applying Swiss statutory interest rules, which looked to official discount rates at place of payment, because Swiss law governed contract; Swiss arbitral seat); Final Award in ICC Case No. 6162, XVII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 153, 162 (1992) (applying 5% statutory Egyptian rate of interest because contract was governed by Egyptian law, notwithstanding higher market rates; Swiss arbitral seat); Final Award in ICC Case No. 5485, XIV Y.B. Comm. Arb. 156, 173 (1989) (applying Spanish statutory rates of interest because Spanish law governed agreement; French arbitral seat); Award in ICC Case No. 4237, X Y.B. Comm. Arb. 52, 59-60 (1985) (applying English law, granting arbitrator discretion regarding interest, because English law governed contract; French arbitral seat); Award in ICC Case No. 2637, II Y.B. Comm. Arb. 153 (1977) (applying statutory French interest rate where French law governed contract; Swiss arbitral seat); AGIP SpA v. People's Repub. of the Congo, Award in ICSID Case No. ARB/77/1 of 30 November 1979, 21 Int'l Legal Mat. 726, 731, 739 (1982); RJ Reynolds Tobacco Co. v. Islamic Repub. of Iran, Award in IUSCT Case No. 145-35-3 of 6 August 1984, 7 Iran-US C.T.R. 181, 191-92 (1984) (applying law governing contract to availability of interest); Rexnord Inc. v. Islamic Repub. of Iran, Award in IUSCT Case No. 21-132-3 of 10 January 1983, 2 Iran-US C.T.R. 6, 12 (1983) (applying substantive law of contract to interest rate); Ad Hoc Award of 27 May 1991, XVII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 11, 26-27 (1992) (applying 5% statutory Swiss rate of interest because contract was governed by Swiss law; New York arbitral seat); Libyan Am. Oil Co. (LIAMCO) v. Gov't of the Libyan Arab Repub., Ad Hoc Award of 12 April 1977, VI Y.B. Comm. Arb. 89, 115-16 (1981) (applying Libyan interest rates). See also Reisberg & Pauley, An Arbitrator's Authority to Award Interest on An Award Until "Date of Payment": Problems and Limitations, 2013 Int'l Arb. L. Rev. 25, 25 ("As to the pre-award time period, it is now generally accepted that arbitrators usually apply the substantive law of the contract.").
- 580) Asian Agric. Prods. Ltd v. Democratic Socialist Repub. of Sri Lanka, Award in ICSID Case No. ARB/87/3 of 27 June 1990, 30 Int'l Legal Mat. 577, 625 (1991) (applying "long established rule of international law" that "it is just and reasonable to allow interest at a reasonable rate"); McCullough & Co. v. Ministry of Post, Tel. & Tel., Award in IUSCT Case No. 225-89-3 of 22 April 1986, XII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 316, 321-22 (1987).
- 581) Hunter & Triebel, Awarding Interest in International Arbitration: Some Observations Based on A Comparative Study of the Laws of England and Germany, 6(1) J. Int'l Arb. 7 (1989).
- 582) See, e.g., Final Award in ICC Case No. 5460, XIII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 104, 109 (1988) (applying statutory rate of interest prescribed by Austrian law to debt in Austrian currency, notwithstanding applicability of English law to contract and English arbitral seat); Award in ICC Case No. 2930, IX Y.B. Comm. Arb. 105, 107-08 (1984) (awarding interest at Swiss statutory rate because payment was due in Swiss currency, notwithstanding fact that law governing contract was Yugoslav); Giardina, Issues of Applicable Law and Uniform Law on Interest: Basic Distinctions in National and International Practice, in L. Lévy & F. De Ly (eds.), Interest, Auxiliary and Alternative Remedies in International Arbitration 131, 141 (2008); Kleiner, Money in Private International Law: What Are the Problems? What Are the Solutions?, 2009 Y.B. Private Int'l L. 595, 595-96 (2009) ("[A]pplication of the law applicable to the obligation for the determination of the rate of interest is a blind solution and disregards the connection that should be respected between interest and the currency in which the interest must be paid. Accordingly, the application of the lex monetæ should be applied in order to assess the rate of interest.").
- 583) See §23.09[A].
- 584) See, e.g., Second Interim Award in ICC Case No. 5277, XIII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 80, 89-90 (1988) (refusing to award interest, notwithstanding contractual provision for such, because parties' chosen law had been Islamized and forbids interest awards); Award in ICC Case No. 4606, Parker Drilling Co. v. Sonatrach, described in Branson & Wallace, Awarding Interest in International Commercial Arbitration: Establishing A Uniform Approach, 28 Va. J. Int'l L. 919, 937 et seq. (1988) (denying interest because applicable (Algerian) substantive law contained no provision for interest); Final Ad Hoc Award of 20 November 1987, XIV Y.B. Comm. Arb. 47, 51, 68 (1989) (refusing to award interest under contract governed by Saudi law).
- 585) See §23.09[B], p. 3105.
- 586) Reisberg & Pauley, An Arbitrator's Authority to Award Interest on An Award Until "Date of Payment": Problems and Limitations, 2013 Int'l Arb. L. Rev. 25, 25 ("[A]n arbitration award upon court confirmation is considered to be 'merged' into and superseded by the judgment. As a result, the post-judgment interest rate will be the same as that applicable to court judgments.").
- 587) Reisberg & Pauley, An Arbitrator's Authority to Award Interest on An Award Until "Date of Payment": Problems and Limitations, 2013 Int'l Arb. L. Rev. 25, 25.

- 588) Parsons & Whittemore Alabama Mach. & Servs. Corp. v. Yeargin Constr. Co., 744 F.2d 1482, 1484 (11th Cir. 1984); Banque Nat'l De Paris v. 1567 Broadway Ownership Assocs., 248 A.D.2d 154 (N.Y. App. Div. 1998); Marine Mgt, Inc. v. Seco Mgt, Inc., 176 A.D.2d 252, 253 (N.Y. App. Div. 1991), aff'd, 600 N.E.2d 627 (1992). See J. Gotanda, Supplemental Damages in Private International Law §3.4 (1988) (“an arbitral award is enforced in a country as a court judgment, interest then accrues at the domestic rate applicable to civil judgments in that country, instead of at the rate set forth in the original award”); Reisberg & Pauley, An Arbitrator’s Authority to Award Interest on An Award Until “Date of Payment”: Problems and Limitations, 2013 Int’l Arb. L. Rev. 25, 25 (“law governing interest for the post-judgment period will most likely be the law of the enforcement jurisdiction”).
- 589) Retirement Accounts, Inc. v. Pacst Realty LLC, 49 A.D.3d 846, 847 (N.Y. App. Div. 2008) (“Where there is a clear, unambiguous, and unequivocal expression to pay an interest rate higher than the statutory interest rate until the judgment is satisfied, the contractual interest rate is the proper rate to be applied.”); T. Oehmke, Commercial Arbitration §124:2 (2003 & Update 2013) (“Parties may ‘contract out’ of statutory interest rates if their agreement expresses the parties’ intent to deviate from a post-judgment interest rate set by statute.”).
- 590) See generally the awards cited in §23.09[C]. See also N. Blackaby et al. (eds.), Redfern and Hunter on International Arbitration ¶9.81 (5th ed. 2009); Branson & Wallace, Awarding Interest in International Commercial Arbitration: Establishing A Uniform Approach, 28 Va. J. Int’l L. 919, 920, 924 (1988); J. Ralston, International Arbitral Law and Procedure 82-83 (1910); Senechal & Gotanda, Interest as Damages, 47 Colum. J. Transnat’l L. 491 (2009) (arguing that tribunals fail to adequately compensate for loss because risk-free U.S. Treasury bills and LIBOR rates fail to account for greater risk and return that investors would usually seek in their investments).
- 591) Spalding v. Mason, 161 U.S. 375, 396 (U.S. S.Ct. 1896) (quoting Curtis v. Innerarity, 47 U.S. 146, 154 (U.S. S.Ct. 1848)). See also Senechal, Present-Day Valuation in International Arbitration: A Conceptual Framework for Awarding Interest, in L. Lévy & F. De Ly (eds.), Interest, Auxiliary and Alternative Remedies in International Arbitration 219 et seq. (2008) (“award of interest should be a significant element in full compensation to reflect the lapse of time between the original injury and the decision of the arbitral tribunal”).
- 592) English Arbitration Act, 1996, §§49(3), (4) (“The Tribunal may award simple or compound interest.”); Singapore International Arbitration Act, 2012, §12(4) (“may award interest (including interest on a compound basis)”; Hong Kong Arbitration Ordinance, 2013, Arts. 79, 80 (“Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, an arbitral tribunal may, in the arbitral proceedings before it, award simple or compound interest from the dates, at the rates, and with the rests that the tribunal considers appropriate. ... Interest is payable on the judgment rate, except when the award otherwise provides.”). Compare Australian International Arbitration Act, 2011, §§25, 26 (tribunal may award simple interest until date of award and interest at reasonable rate from date of award until specified later date).
- 593) RJ Reynolds Tobacco Co. v. Islamic Repub. of Iran, Award in IUSCT Case No. 145-35-3 of 6 August 1984, 7 Iran-US C.T.R. 181, 191-92 (1984) (“The Tribunal ... does not find that there are any special reasons for departing from international precedents which normally do not allow the awarding of compound interest.”). See also Gotanda, Compound Interest in International Disputes, 2004 Oxford U. Comp. L. Forum; Note, The Provision of Compound Interest Under International Law, 95 Am. J. Int’l L. 633 (2001). But see LCIA Rules, Art. 26(6).
- 594) Lillich, Interest in the Law of International Claims in Essays in Honor of Voitto Saario and Toivo Sainio 51, 57 (1983).
- 595) See §23.09[C], p.3109 n. 592.
- 596) See §23.09[A].
- 597) See Waterside Ocean Navigation Co. v. Int’l Navigation Ltd, 737 F.2d 150, 153-54 (2d Cir. 1984) (“we do not see why pre-judgment interest should not be available in actions brought under the Convention”); Int’l Standard Elec. Corp. v. Bidas Sociedad Anonima Petrolera, 745 F.Supp. 172, 182 (S.D.N.Y. 1990); Am. Constr. Mach. & Equip. Corp. v. Mechanised Constr. of Pakistan Ltd, 659 F.Supp. 426, 429 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) (confirming award made in Geneva under Swiss procedural law), aff’d, 828 F.2d 117 (2d Cir. 1987); Brandeis Intsel, Ltd v. Calabrian Chem. Corp., 656 F.Supp. 160, 170 (S.D.N.Y. 1987); Al-Haddad Bros. Enter., Inc. v. M/S Agapi, 635 F.Supp. 205, 210 (D. Del. 1986) (enforcing foreign award, which included 15% pre-award interest per annum); Judgment of 9 January 1995, Inter Maritime Mgt SA v. Russian & Vecchi, XXII Y.B. Comm. Arb. 789, 797-98 (Swiss Federal Tribunal) (1997) (compound interest not violation of public policy).

- 598) For rare exceptions, see Laminoirs-Trefileries-Cableries de Lens, SA v. Southwire Co., 484 F.Supp. 1063, 1069 (N.D. Ga. 1980) (vacating award of “penal” interest); Judgment of 26 January 2005, XXX Y.B. Comm. Arb. 421 (Austrian Oberster Gerichtshof) (2005) (denying recognition to portion of award granting interest, on grounds that annual interest rate of 73% violates Austrian public policy). See §26.05[C][9][h][vii]. Compare Int’l Standard Elec. Corp. v. Bidas Sociedad Anonima Petrolera Indus. y Comercial, 745 F.Supp. 172, 182 (S.D.N.Y. 1990) (“We find no merits in ISEC’s claim that the interest component of the Award is penal in nature.”); Brandeis Intsel Ltd v. Calabrian Chem. Corp., 656 F.Supp. 160, 170 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) (absent showing that interest award was, under English law, “penal only and relate[d] to the punishing of public wrongs as contradistinguished from the redressing of private injuries,” award was not contrary to U.S. public policy); Am. Constr. Mach. & Equip. Corp., Ltd v. Mech. Constr. of Pakistan Ltd, 659 F.Supp. 426, 428 (S.D.N.Y. 1987) (giving effect to interest rate of 17%).
- 599) See, e.g., Millmaker v. Bruso, 2008 WL 4560624 (S.D. Tex.) (although pre-judgment interest is mandatory in breach of contract cases under New York law, arbitrators had discretion to award or not award interest); Coastal Caisson Corp. v. E.E. Cruz/NAB/Frontier-Kemper, 2007 WL 2285936 (S.D.N.Y.) (same).
- 600) Gordon Sel-Way, Inc. v. Spence Bros., Inc., 475 N.W.2d 704, 711 (Mich. 1991) (arbitrators committed no substantial or material error in including pre-award interest in their award, even though parties’ contract was silent concerning right to interest); Westminster Constr. Corp. v. PPG Indus., Inc., 376 A.2d 708, 711 (R.I. 1977) (“arbitrators may award interest, even if not claimed, unless otherwise specifically provided by the parties’ in the agreement”).
- 601) See, e.g., Sarhank Group v. Oracle Corp., 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 2493 (S.D.N.Y.) (U.S. law governs availability of post-award, pre-judgment interest on foreign award; law of arbitral seat irrelevant); Suraleb, Inc. v. Prod. Ass’n Minsk Tractor Works, 1996 WL 3523747 (N.D. Ill.) (U.S. federal common law governs availability of post-award, pre-judgment interest on foreign award); Judgment of 30 June 2004, Inter-Arab Inv. Guarantee Corp. v. Bail Recouvrement, 2005 Rev. arb. 645, 646 (French Cour de cassation civ. 1e) (French law governs right to interest on awards made in Jordan when enforcement is sought in France: “when the dispute has arisen out of the enforcement in France of an arbitral award declared enforceable, when the arbitral tribunal did not rule on the issue and can no longer be petitioned, the law governing post-award interest, which flows automatically from the order to pay, is the law of enforcement, here French law”).
- 602) See, e.g., Schlobohm v. Pepperidge Farm, Inc., 806 F.2d 578, 581 (5th Cir. 1986) (“where the parties made an agreement intended to avoid court litigation by resolving the entire dispute through arbitration, intervention by the court to award additional relief would be inconsistent with the language and policy of the [FAA]”); Dealer Computer Servs., Inc. v. Johnson Ford Lincoln Mercury Nissan, Inc., 2010 WL 2991064, at *4 (S.D. Tex.); Millmaker v. Bruso, 2008 WL 4560624 (S.D. Tex.); Diaz v. Cruz, 926 N.E.2d 1182, 1184 (Mass. App. Ct. 2010); Levin & Glasser, PC v. Kenmore Prop., LLC, 896 N.Y.S.2d 311, 313 (N.Y. App. Div. 2010); Levin & Glasser, PC v. Kenmore Prop., LLC, 70 A.D.3d 443, 445-46 (N.Y. App. Div. 2010) (court lacked authority to add pre-award interest in connection with confirming award “[g]iven that arbitrators had authority to award pre-award interest and made no such award”); Sansone v. Metro. Prop. & Liability Ins. Co., 572 N.E.2d 588, 589-90 (Mass. App. Ct. 1991); Creative Builders, Inc. v. Avenue Dev. Inc., 715 P.2d 308, 312 (Ariz. App. 1986) (“trial judge may not modify an award so as to grant pre-award interest”); Kermacy v. First Unitarian Church, 361 S.W.2d 734, 735 (Tex. Civ. App. 1962) (“appellant’s claim for interest prior to the date of the award of the arbitrators was merged in the award”); Penco Fabrics Inc. v. Louis Bogopulsky, Inc., 146 N.Y.S.2d 514 (N.Y. App. Div. 1955). Compare Finger Lakes Bottling Co. v. Coors Brewing Co., 2010 WL 4104690, at *4 (S.D.N.Y.) (granting pre-award interest because arbitrator concluded that issue was “beyond the scope of the arbitration”).
- 603) Schlobohm v. Pepperidge Farm, Inc., 806 F.2d 578, 581 (5th Cir. 1986).
- 604) See, e.g., Newmont USA Ltd v. Ins. Co. of N. Am., 615 F.3d 1268, 1277 (10th Cir. 2010); IHX (U.K.) Ltd v. Ashapura Minechem Ltd, 2009 WL 3169541, at *3 (S.D.N.Y.); Int’l Standard Elec. Corp. v. Bidas Sociedad Anonima Petrolera, 745 F.Supp. 172, 181 (S.D.N.Y. 1990); Am. Constr. Mach. & Equip. Corp. v. Mech. Constr. of Pakistan Ltd, 659 F.Supp. 426 (S.D.N.Y. 1987), aff’d, 828 F.2d 117 (2d Cir. 1987). See also Foley Co. v. Grindsted Prods., Inc., 662 P.2d 1254, 1263 (Kan. 1983).
- One court has said, however, that an arbitral tribunal would have “lacked authority to decide the ... question of prejudgment interest on the amount confirmed by the district court judgment,” by which the court meant post-award/pre-judgment interest. Sun Ship, Inc. v. Matson Navigation Co., 785 F.2d 59, 63 (3d Cir. 1986).
- 605) See, e.g., Carte Blanche (Singapore) Pte Ltd v. Carte Blanche Int’l, Ltd, 888 F.2d 260, 268 et seq. (2d Cir. 1989). Contra French v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 784 F.2d 902, 907 (9th Cir. 1986).
- 606) Reisberg & Pauley, An Arbitrator’s Authority to Award Interest on An Award Until “Date of Payment”: Problems and Limitations, 2013 Int’l Arb. L. Rev. 25, 25.

- 607) Newmont USA Ltd v. Ins. Co. of N. Am., 615 F.3d 1268, 1274 (10th Cir. 2010) (“no reason why an arbitration panel with authority to decide a contractual dispute cannot also determine whether the contract in question includes language stating the parties’ intent to bypass §1961”).
- 608) See Bhd of Locomotive Eng’rs & Trainmen v. Long Island R.R. Co., 340 F.Appx 727, 730 (2d Cir. 2009) (“it was within the District Court’s authority in enforcing the action to require the payment of postaward prejudgment interest”); Waterside Ocean Navigation Co. v. Int’l Navigation Ltd, 737 F.2d 150, 153-54 (2d Cir. 1984); Parsons & Whittemore Alabama Mach. & Serv. Corp. v. Yeargin Constr. Co., 744 F.2d 1482, 1485 (11th Cir. 1984); Abondolo v. H. & M.S. Meat Corp., 2008 WL 2047612, at *3 (S.D.N.Y.); P.M.I. Trading v. Farstad Oil, 2001 WL 38282, at *3 (S.D.N.Y.) (“Absent persuasive argument to the contrary, post-award, prejudgment interest is available for judgments rendered under the Convention and is presumed to be appropriate.”); Creative Builders, Inc. v. Ave. Dev., Inc., 715 P.2d 308, 313-14 (Ariz. App. 1986). See also McCabe Hamilton & Renny Co., Ltd v. Int’l Longshore & Warehouse Union, Local 142, AFL-CIO, 557 F.Supp.2d 1171, 1178 (D. Haw. 2008) (“This court concludes that the circumstances of this case do not warrant an award of prejudgment interest.”); Trustees of Lawrence Academy v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 821 F.Supp. 59, 63 (D.N.H. 1993) (court has power to award post-award interest); Bergesen v. Joseph Muller Corp., 548 F.Supp. 650, 651 (S.D.N.Y. 1982), aff’d, 710 F.2d 928 (2d Cir. 1983); Laminoirs-Trefileries-Cableries de Lens, SA v. Southwire Co., 484 F.Supp. 1063, 1069 (N.D. Ga. 1980).
- 609) See, e.g., Indus. Risk Insurers v. M.A.N. Gutehoffnungshütte GmbH, 141 F.3d 1434, 1447 (11th Cir. 1998) (post-award interest “should normally be awarded when damages have been liquidated by an international arbitration award”); Waterside Ocean Navigation Co. v. Int’l Navigation Ltd, 737 F.2d 150, 155-55 (2d Cir. 1984) (confirming English award and granting post-award, pre-judgment interest); P.M.I. Trading Ltd v. Farstad Oil, Inc., 2001 WL 38382, at *3 (S.D.N.Y.) (“post-award, prejudgment interest is available for judgments rendered under the Convention and is presumed to be appropriate”); Al-Haddad Bros. Enter., Inc. v. M/S Agapi, 635 F.Supp. 205, 210 (D. Del. 1986) (“Federal courts have the power to grant such post-award, pre-judgment interest when enforcement of foreign arbitral awards is sought.”). See also Reisberg & Pauley, An Arbitrator’s Authority to Award Interest on An Award Until “Date of Payment”: Problems and Limitations, 2013 Int’l Arb. L. Rev. 25, 28 (“United States courts have long held that the courts in confirming international arbitration awards may add an award of interest for the post-award, pre-judgment time period under federal law at rates set by the court as a matter within its discretion.”).

© 2020 Kluwer Law International, a Wolters Kluwer Company. All rights reserved.

Kluwer Arbitration is made available for personal use only. All content is protected by copyright and other intellectual property laws. No part of this service or the information contained herein may be reproduced or transmitted in any form or by any means, or used for advertising or promotional purposes, general distribution, creating new collective works, or for resale, without prior written permission of the publisher.

If you would like to know more about this service, visit www.kluwarbitration.com or contact our Sales staff at lrs-sales@wolterskluwer.com or call +31 (0)172 64 1562.

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-124

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

Arbitration Act 1996

1996 CHAPTER 23

An Act to restate and improve the law relating to arbitration pursuant to an arbitration agreement; to make other provision relating to arbitration and arbitration awards; and for connected purposes. [17th June 1996]

Be it enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:—

Annotations:

Extent Information

E1 This Act extends to England, Wales and Northern Ireland; for exceptions see s.108

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

- C1 Act modified (11.11.1999) by 1999 c. 31, s. 8(1)(2) (with application as mentioned in s. 10(2)(3))
- C2 Act excluded (31.1.1997) by 1966 c. 41, s. 3 (as substituted by 1996 c. 23, s. 107(1), Sch. 3 para. 24 (with s. 81(2)); S.I. 1996/3146, art. 3 (with transitional provisions in art. 4, Sch. 2)
Act excluded (1.8.1998) by 1992 c. 52, s. 212A(6) (as inserted (1.8.1998) by 1998 c. 8, s. 7; S.I. 1998/1658, art. 2(1), Sch. 1)
Act excluded (N.I.) (1.3.1999) by S.I. 1998/3162 (N.I. 21), art. 89(6); S.R. 1999/81, art. 3
Act excluded (31.3.2002) by The Dairy Produce Quotas Regulations 2002 (S.I. 2002/457), regs. 2, 9(b), 10(1)(b)(4)(b), 11(2), 33(5)(b)(iii), Sch. 1 para. 34
Act excluded (31.3.2002) by The Dairy Produce Quotas (Wales) Regulations 2002 (S.I. 2002/897), regs. 2, 9(b), 10(1)(b)(4)(b), 11(2), 33(5)(b)(iii), Sch. 1 para. 34
- C3 Power to apply conferred (11.9.1996 for certain purposes and otherwise 1.5.1998) by 1996 c. 53, s. 108(6); S.I. 1996/2352, art. 2(2); S. I. 1998/650, art. 2
- C4 Act applied (E.) (4.7.2002) by Vehicular Access Across Common and Other Land (England) Regulations 2002 (S.I. 2002/1711), regs. 1, 12(3)(b)
- C5 Act applied (W.) (9.2.2004) by The Vehicular Access Across Common and Other Land (Wales) Regulations 2004 (S.I. 2004/248), regs. 1, 12(3)(b)
- C6 Act excluded (31.3.2005) by The Dairy Produce Quotas Regulations 2005 (S.I. 2005/465), regs. 10(2), 11, 12(3), 39(4), Sch. 1 para. 34

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

- C7 Act excluded (W.) (31.3.2005) by The Dairy Produce Quotas (Wales) Regulations 2005 (S.I. 2005/537), regs. 10(2), 11, 12(3), 39(4), Sch. 1 para. 34
- C8 Act applied (W.) (13.1.2006) by The Tir Cynnal (Wales) Regulations 2006 (S.I. 2006/41), reg. 13(3)
- C9 Act applied (E.W.) (10.11.2008) by The Land Registration Rules 2003 (S.I. 2003/1417), rule 194A(4) (b) (as inserted by The Land Registration (Amendment) Rules 2008 (S.I. 2008/1919), rule 4(1), Sch. 1 para. 61)
- C10 Act applied (E.W.) (10.11.2008) by The Land Registration Rules 2003 (S.I. 2003/1417), rule 194C(3) (b) (as inserted by The Land Registration (Amendment) Rules 2008 (S.I. 2008/1919), rule 4(1), Sch. 1 para. 61)
- C11 Act: functions transferred (N.I.) (12.4.2010) by virtue of The Northern Ireland Act 1998 (Devolution of Policing and Justice Functions) Order 2010 (S.I. 2010/976), art. 15(1), Sch. 17 para. 13 (with arts. 28-31)
- C12 Act applied (N.I.) (14.2.2016) by The Animal Feed (Hygiene, Sampling etc. and Enforcement) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2016 (S.R. 2016/5), reg. 28(7)
- C13 Act applied (E.W.) (10.8.2016) by The York Potash Harbour Facilities Order 2016 (S.I. 2016/772), Sch. 10 para. 21(7) (with arts. 35, 36)
- C14 Act applied (20.5.2018) by The Motorcycles (Type-Approval) Regulations 2018 (S.I. 2018/235), Sch. 1 para. 13(2)(a) (with reg. 1(c), Sch. 1 paras. 16, 17)
- C15 Act applied (20.5.2018) by The Agricultural and Forestry Vehicles (Type-Approval) Regulations 2018 (S.I. 2018/236), Sch. 1 para. 13(2)(a) (with reg. 1(c), Sch. 1 paras. 16, 17)
- C16 Act applied (21.9.2018) by The Non-Road Mobile Machinery (Type-Approval and Emission of Gaseous and Particulate Pollutants) Regulations 2018 (S.I. 2018/764), Sch. 1 para. 13(2)(a) (with reg. 1(c))

PART I

ARBITRATION PURSUANT TO AN ARBITRATION AGREEMENT

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

- C17 Pt. I excluded (E.W.) (1.11.1996) by 1996 c. 56, s. 336(4), 476(4), 582(4), Sch. 40, para. 4 (with s. 1(4))
 Pt. I excluded (31.1.1997) by 1988 c. 8, s. 6 (as substituted (31.1.1997) by 1996 c. 23, s. 107(1), Sch. 3 para. 49; S.I. 1996/3146, art. 3 (with art. 4, Sch. 2))
 Pt. I excluded (N.I.) (1.3.1999) by S.I. 1998/3162 (N.I. 21), art. 89(6); S.R. 1999/81, art. 3
- C18 Pt. I (ss. 1-84) excluded (E.W.) by 1998 c. 14, s. 16(9) (which is in force: at 4.3.1999 for specified purposes by S.I. 1999/528, art. 2(a), Sch.; at 5.7.1999 for specified purposes by S.I. 1999/1958, art. 2(1)(b), Sch. 1 (with transitional provisions in Sch. 12, and as amended by S.I. 1999/3178, art. 3(20), Sch. 20); at 6.9.1999 for specified purposes by S.I. 1999/2422, art. 2(c), Sch. 1 (subject to transitional provisions in Sch. 14, and as amended by S.I. 1999/3178, art. 3(20), Sch. 20); at 5.10.1999 for specified purposes by S.I. 1999/2739, art. 2, Sch. 1 (subject to transitional provisions in Sch. 2); at 18.10.1999 for specified purposes by S.I. 1999/2860, art. 2(c), Sch. 1 (subject to transitional provisions in Schs. 16-18, and as amended by S.I. 1999/3178, art. 3(20), Sch. 20); 29.11.1999 for specified purposes by S.I. 1999/3178, art. 2(1), Sch. 1 (subject to transitional provisions in s. 5 and Schs. 21-23)
- C19 Pt. I (ss. 1-84) excluded by S.I. 1998/1506 (N.I. 10), art. 16(9) (which is in force: at 10.3.1999 for specified purposes by S.R. 1999/102, art. 2(a), Sch. Pt. I; at 5.7.1999 for specified purposes by S.R. 1999/310, art. 2(1)(b), Sch. 1; at 6.9.1999 for specified purposes by S.R. 1999/371, art. 2(b), Sch. 1; at 5.10.1999 for specified purposes by S.R. 1999/407, art. 2(b), Sch.; at 18.10.1999 for specified purposes by S.R. 1999/428, art. 2(b), Sch. 1; at 29.11.1999 for specified purposes by S.R. 1999/472, art. 2(1), Sch. 1)

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

- C20 Pt. I excluded (E.W.) (1.9.2000) by 1999 c. 14, s. 9(4); S.I. 2000/2337, art. 2(1)(e)
Pt. I excluded (prosp.) by 1999 c. 14, ss. 9(4), 14(2)
Pt. I excluded (N.I.) (22.11.2000 for specified purposes and otherwise 2.7.2001) by 2000 c. 4, ss. 59, 68, Sch. 7 para. 10 (with s. 66(6)); S.R. 2000/358, art. 2, Sch. Pt. II; S.R. 2001/141, art 2(1)(c), Sch.
Pt. I excluded (E.W.) (2.7.2001) by 2000 c. 19, s. 68, Sch. 7 para. 10(8) (with s. 83(6)); S.I. 2001/1252, art. 2(2)(a)(i)
- C21 Pt. I: specified provisions applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (28.4.2002) by Labour Relations Agency Arbitration Scheme Order (Northern Ireland) 2002 (S.R. 2002/120), art. 3, Sch.
- C22 Pt. I excluded (22.2.2005 for specified purposes and otherwise 6.4.2005) by Pensions Appeal Tribunals Act 1943 (c. 39), s. 6D(8) (as inserted by Armed Forces (Pensions and Compensation) Act 2004 (c. 32), ss. 5, 8, Sch. 1 para. 4); S.I. 2005/356, art. 2, {Sch. 1, 2}
- C23 Pt. I excluded (N.I.) (1.3.2005 for specified purposes and otherwise 1.4.2005) by Health and Personal Social Services (Quality, Improvement and Regulation) (Northern Ireland) Order 2003 (S.I. 2003/431 (N.I. 9)), art. 44(4); S.R. 2005/44, arts. 2, 3, Schs. 1, 2 (subject to arts. 4-13)
- C24 Pt. I excluded (N.I.) (1.9.2005) by The Special Educational Needs and Disability (Northern Ireland) Order 2005 (S.I. 2005/1117 (N.I. 6)), art. 23(5) (with arts. 46, 47); S.R. 2005/336, art. 2, Sch.
- C25 Pt. I excluded (N.I.) (1.9.2005) by The Education (Northern Ireland) Order 1996 (S.I. 1996/274 (N.I. 1)), art. 23(4) (as substituted by The Special Educational Needs and Disability (Northern Ireland) Order 2005 (S.I. 2005/1117 (N.I. 6)), Sch. 5 para. 7(4); S.R. 2005/336, art. 2, Sch.)
- C26 Pt. I: power to exclude or restrict conferred (19.9.2007) by virtue of Tribunals, Courts and Enforcement Act 2007 (c. 15), ss. 22, 148, Sch. 5 para. 14; S.I. 2007/2709, art. 2(i)
- C27 Pt. I excluded (3.11.2008) by The Tribunal Procedure (First-tier Tribunal) (Social Entitlement Chamber) Rules 2008 (S.I. 2008/2685), rule 3(2)
- C28 Pt. I excluded (3.11.2008) by The Tribunal Procedure (First-tier Tribunal) (War Pensions and Armed Forces Compensation Chamber) Rules 2008 (S.I. 2008/2686), rule 3(2)
- C29 Pt. I excluded (3.11.2008) by The Tribunal Procedure (Upper Tribunal) Rules 2008 (S.I. 2008/2698), rule 3(2)
- C30 Pt. I excluded (3.11.2008) by The Tribunal Procedure (First-tier Tribunal) (Health, Education and Social Care Chamber) Rules 2008 (S.I. 2008/2699), rule 3(2)
- C31 Pt. I excluded (1.4.2009) by The Tribunal Procedure (First-tier Tribunal) (Tax Chamber) Rules 2009 (S.I. 2009/273), rule 3(2)
- C32 Pt. I excluded (1.9.2009) by The Tribunal Procedure (First-tier Tribunal) (General Regulatory Chamber) Rules 2009 (S.I. 2009/1976), rule 3(2)
- C33 Pt. I excluded (4.8.2010 for specified purposes and otherwise 1.10.2010) by Equality Act 2010 (c. 15), ss. 116(3), 216(3), Sch. 17 para. 6(6); S.I. 2010/1736, art. 2, Sch.; S.I. 2010/1966, art. 2; S.I. 2010/2317, art. 2(9)(k)(i) (with art. 15)
- C34 Pt. I excluded (1.7.2013) by The Tribunal Procedure (First-tier Tribunal) (Property Chamber) Rules 2013 (S.I. 2013/1169), art. 1(1) rule 4(2) (with art. 2)

Introductory

1 General principles.

The provisions of this Part are founded on the following principles, and shall be construed accordingly—

- (a) the object of arbitration is to obtain the fair resolution of disputes by an impartial tribunal without unnecessary delay or expense;
- (b) the parties should be free to agree how their disputes are resolved, subject only to such safeguards as are necessary in the public interest;
- (c) in matters governed by this Part the court should not intervene except as provided by this Part.

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

2 Scope of application of provisions.

- (1) The provisions of this Part apply where the seat of the arbitration is in England and Wales or Northern Ireland.
- (2) The following sections apply even if the seat of the arbitration is outside England and Wales or Northern Ireland or no seat has been designated or determined—
  - (a) sections 9 to 11 (stay of legal proceedings, &c.), and
  - (b) section 66 (enforcement of arbitral awards).
- (3) The powers conferred by the following sections apply even if the seat of the arbitration is outside England and Wales or Northern Ireland or no seat has been designated or determined—
  - (a) section 43 (securing the attendance of witnesses), and
  - (b) section 44 (court powers exercisable in support of arbitral proceedings);
 but the court may refuse to exercise any such power if, in the opinion of the court, the fact that the seat of the arbitration is outside England and Wales or Northern Ireland, or that when designated or determined the seat is likely to be outside England and Wales or Northern Ireland, makes it inappropriate to do so.
- (4) The court may exercise a power conferred by any provision of this Part not mentioned in subsection (2) or (3) for the purpose of supporting the arbitral process where—
  - (a) no seat of the arbitration has been designated or determined, and
  - (b) by reason of a connection with England and Wales or Northern Ireland the court is satisfied that it is appropriate to do so.
- (5) Section 7 (separability of arbitration agreement) and section 8 (death of a party) apply where the law applicable to the arbitration agreement is the law of England and Wales or Northern Ireland even if the seat of the arbitration is outside England and Wales or Northern Ireland or has not been designated or determined.

3 The seat of the arbitration.

In this Part “the seat of the arbitration” means the juridical seat of the arbitration designated—

- (a) by the parties to the arbitration agreement, or
  - (b) by any arbitral or other institution or person vested by the parties with powers in that regard, or
  - (c) by the arbitral tribunal if so authorised by the parties,
- or determined, in the absence of any such designation, having regard to the parties’ agreement and all the relevant circumstances.

4 Mandatory and non-mandatory provisions.

- (1) The mandatory provisions of this Part are listed in Schedule 1 and have effect notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary.
- (2) The other provisions of this Part (the “non-mandatory provisions”) allow the parties to make their own arrangements by agreement but provide rules which apply in the absence of such agreement.
- (3) The parties may make such arrangements by agreeing to the application of institutional rules or providing any other means by which a matter may be decided.

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

- (4) It is immaterial whether or not the law applicable to the parties' agreement is the law of England and Wales or, as the case may be, Northern Ireland.
- (5) The choice of a law other than the law of England and Wales or Northern Ireland as the applicable law in respect of a matter provided for by a non-mandatory provision of this Part is equivalent to an agreement making provision about that matter.

For this purpose an applicable law determined in accordance with the parties' agreement, or which is objectively determined in the absence of any express or implied choice, shall be treated as chosen by the parties.

5 Agreements to be in writing.

- (1) The provisions of this Part apply only where the arbitration agreement is in writing, and any other agreement between the parties as to any matter is effective for the purposes of this Part only if in writing.

The expressions "agreement", "agree" and "agreed" shall be construed accordingly.

- (2) There is an agreement in writing—
  - (a) if the agreement is made in writing (whether or not it is signed by the parties),
  - (b) if the agreement is made by exchange of communications in writing, or
  - (c) if the agreement is evidenced in writing.
- (3) Where parties agree otherwise than in writing by reference to terms which are in writing, they make an agreement in writing.
- (4) An agreement is evidenced in writing if an agreement made otherwise than in writing is recorded by one of the parties, or by a third party, with the authority of the parties to the agreement.
- (5) An exchange of written submissions in arbitral or legal proceedings in which the existence of an agreement otherwise than in writing is alleged by one party against another party and not denied by the other party in his response constitutes as between those parties an agreement in writing to the effect alleged.
- (6) References in this Part to anything being written or in writing include its being recorded by any means.

The arbitration agreement

6 Definition of arbitration agreement.

- (1) In this Part an "arbitration agreement" means an agreement to submit to arbitration present or future disputes (whether they are contractual or not).
- (2) The reference in an agreement to a written form of arbitration clause or to a document containing an arbitration clause constitutes an arbitration agreement if the reference is such as to make that clause part of the agreement.

7 Separability of arbitration agreement.

Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, an arbitration agreement which forms or was intended to form part of another agreement (whether or not in writing) shall not be regarded as invalid, non-existent or ineffective because that other agreement is invalid, or did not come into existence or has become ineffective, and it shall for that purpose be treated as a distinct agreement.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

8 Whether agreement discharged by death of a party.

- (1) Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, an arbitration agreement is not discharged by the death of a party and may be enforced by or against the personal representatives of that party.
- (2) Subsection (1) does not affect the operation of any enactment or rule of law by virtue of which a substantive right or obligation is extinguished by death.

Stay of legal proceedings

9 Stay of legal proceedings.

- (1) A party to an arbitration agreement against whom legal proceedings are brought (whether by way of claim or counterclaim) in respect of a matter which under the agreement is to be referred to arbitration may (upon notice to the other parties to the proceedings) apply to the court in which the proceedings have been brought to stay the proceedings so far as they concern that matter.
- (2) An application may be made notwithstanding that the matter is to be referred to arbitration only after the exhaustion of other dispute resolution procedures.
- (3) An application may not be made by a person before taking the appropriate procedural step (if any) to acknowledge the legal proceedings against him or after he has taken any step in those proceedings to answer the substantive claim.
- (4) On an application under this section the court shall grant a stay unless satisfied that the arbitration agreement is null and void, inoperative, or incapable of being performed.
- (5) If the court refuses to stay the legal proceedings, any provision that an award is a condition precedent to the bringing of legal proceedings in respect of any matter is of no effect in relation to those proceedings.

10 Reference of interpleader issue to arbitration.

- (1) Where in legal proceedings relief by way of interpleader is granted and any issue between the claimants is one in respect of which there is an arbitration agreement between them, the court granting the relief shall direct that the issue be determined in accordance with the agreement unless the circumstances are such that proceedings brought by a claimant in respect of the matter would not be stayed.
- (2) Where subsection (1) applies but the court does not direct that the issue be determined in accordance with the arbitration agreement, any provision that an award is a condition precedent to the bringing of legal proceedings in respect of any matter shall not affect the determination of that issue by the court.

11 Retention of security where Admiralty proceedings stayed.

- (1) Where Admiralty proceedings are stayed on the ground that the dispute in question should be submitted to arbitration, the court granting the stay may, if in those

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

proceedings property has been arrested or bail or other security has been given to prevent or obtain release from arrest—

- (a) order that the property arrested be retained as security for the satisfaction of any award given in the arbitration in respect of that dispute, or
  - (b) order that the stay of those proceedings be conditional on the provision of equivalent security for the satisfaction of any such award.
- (2) Subject to any provision made by rules of court and to any necessary modifications, the same law and practice shall apply in relation to property retained in pursuance of an order as would apply if it were held for the purposes of proceedings in the court making the order.

Commencement of arbitral proceedings

12 Power of court to extend time for beginning arbitral proceedings, &c.

- (1) Where an arbitration agreement to refer future disputes to arbitration provides that a claim shall be barred, or the claimant's right extinguished, unless the claimant takes within a time fixed by the agreement some step—
  - (a) to begin arbitral proceedings, or
  - (b) to begin other dispute resolution procedures which must be exhausted before arbitral proceedings can be begun,the court may by order extend the time for taking that step.
- (2) Any party to the arbitration agreement may apply for such an order (upon notice to the other parties), but only after a claim has arisen and after exhausting any available arbitral process for obtaining an extension of time.
- (3) The court shall make an order only if satisfied—
  - (a) that the circumstances are such as were outside the reasonable contemplation of the parties when they agreed the provision in question, and that it would be just to extend the time, or
  - (b) that the conduct of one party makes it unjust to hold the other party to the strict terms of the provision in question.
- (4) The court may extend the time for such period and on such terms as it thinks fit, and may do so whether or not the time previously fixed (by agreement or by a previous order) has expired.
- (5) An order under this section does not affect the operation of the Limitation Acts (see section 13).
- (6) The leave of the court is required for any appeal from a decision of the court under this section.

13 Application of Limitation Acts.

- (1) The Limitation Acts apply to arbitral proceedings as they apply to legal proceedings.
- (2) The court may order that in computing the time prescribed by the Limitation Acts for the commencement of proceedings (including arbitral proceedings) in respect of a dispute which was the subject matter—

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

- (a) of an award which the court orders to be set aside or declares to be of no effect, or
  - (b) of the affected part of an award which the court orders to be set aside in part, or declares to be in part of no effect,
- the period between the commencement of the arbitration and the date of the order referred to in paragraph (a) or (b) shall be excluded.
- (3) In determining for the purposes of the Limitation Acts when a cause of action accrued, any provision that an award is a condition precedent to the bringing of legal proceedings in respect of a matter to which an arbitration agreement applies shall be disregarded.
- (4) In this Part “the Limitation Acts” means—
- (a) in England and Wales, the <sup>M1</sup>Limitation Act 1980, the <sup>M2</sup>Foreign Limitation Periods Act 1984 and any other enactment (whenever passed) relating to the limitation of actions;
  - (b) in Northern Ireland, the <sup>M3</sup>Limitation (Northern Ireland) Order 1989, the <sup>M4</sup>Foreign Limitation Periods (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 and any other enactment (whenever passed) relating to the limitation of actions.

Annotations:

Marginal Citations

- M1 1980 c. 58.
- M2 1984 c. 16.
- M3 S.I. 1989/1339 (N.I. 11).
- M4 S.I. 1985/754 (N.I. 5).

14 Commencement of arbitral proceedings.

- (1) The parties are free to agree when arbitral proceedings are to be regarded as commenced for the purposes of this Part and for the purposes of the Limitation Acts.
- (2) If there is no such agreement the following provisions apply.
- (3) Where the arbitrator is named or designated in the arbitration agreement, arbitral proceedings are commenced in respect of a matter when one party serves on the other party or parties a notice in writing requiring him or them to submit that matter to the person so named or designated.
- (4) Where the arbitrator or arbitrators are to be appointed by the parties, arbitral proceedings are commenced in respect of a matter when one party serves on the other party or parties notice in writing requiring him or them to appoint an arbitrator or to agree to the appointment of an arbitrator in respect of that matter.
- (5) Where the arbitrator or arbitrators are to be appointed by a person other than a party to the proceedings, arbitral proceedings are commenced in respect of a matter when one party gives notice in writing to that person requesting him to make the appointment in respect of that matter.

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.
Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

C35 S. 14 applied (31.1.1997) by 1894 c. 60, s. 496(5) (as inserted by 1996 c. 23, s. 107(1), Sch. 3 para. 1) (with s. 81(2)); S.I. 1996/3146, art. 3 (with art. 4, Sch. 2)

The arbitral tribunal

15 The arbitral tribunal.

- (1) The parties are free to agree on the number of arbitrators to form the tribunal and whether there is to be a chairman or umpire.
- (2) Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, an agreement that the number of arbitrators shall be two or any other even number shall be understood as requiring the appointment of an additional arbitrator as chairman of the tribunal.
- (3) If there is no agreement as to the number of arbitrators, the tribunal shall consist of a sole arbitrator.

16 Procedure for appointment of arbitrators.

- (1) The parties are free to agree on the procedure for appointing the arbitrator or arbitrators, including the procedure for appointing any chairman or umpire.
- (2) If or to the extent that there is no such agreement, the following provisions apply.
- (3) If the tribunal is to consist of a sole arbitrator, the parties shall jointly appoint the arbitrator not later than 28 days after service of a request in writing by either party to do so.
- (4) If the tribunal is to consist of two arbitrators, each party shall appoint one arbitrator not later than 14 days after service of a request in writing by either party to do so.
- (5) If the tribunal is to consist of three arbitrators—
  - (a) each party shall appoint one arbitrator not later than 14 days after service of a request in writing by either party to do so, and
  - (b) the two so appointed shall forthwith appoint a third arbitrator as the chairman of the tribunal.
- (6) If the tribunal is to consist of two arbitrators and an umpire—
  - (a) each party shall appoint one arbitrator not later than 14 days after service of a request in writing by either party to do so, and
  - (b) the two so appointed may appoint an umpire at any time after they themselves are appointed and shall do so before any substantive hearing or forthwith if they cannot agree on a matter relating to the arbitration.
- (7) In any other case (in particular, if there are more than two parties) section 18 applies as in the case of a failure of the agreed appointment procedure.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

17 Power in case of default to appoint sole arbitrator.

- (1) Unless the parties otherwise agree, where each of two parties to an arbitration agreement is to appoint an arbitrator and one party (“the party in default”) refuses to do so, or fails to do so within the time specified, the other party, having duly appointed his arbitrator, may give notice in writing to the party in default that he proposes to appoint his arbitrator to act as sole arbitrator.
- (2) If the party in default does not within 7 clear days of that notice being given—
  - (a) make the required appointment, and
  - (b) notify the other party that he has done so, the other party may appoint his arbitrator as sole arbitrator whose award shall be binding on both parties as if he had been so appointed by agreement.
- (3) Where a sole arbitrator has been appointed under subsection (2), the party in default may (upon notice to the appointing party) apply to the court which may set aside the appointment.
- (4) The leave of the court is required for any appeal from a decision of the court under this section.

18 Failure of appointment procedure.

- (1) The parties are free to agree what is to happen in the event of a failure of the procedure for the appointment of the arbitral tribunal.

 There is no failure if an appointment is duly made under section 17 (power in case of default to appoint sole arbitrator), unless that appointment is set aside.
- (2) If or to the extent that there is no such agreement any party to the arbitration agreement may (upon notice to the other parties) apply to the court to exercise its powers under this section.
- (3) Those powers are—
  - (a) to give directions as to the making of any necessary appointments;
  - (b) to direct that the tribunal shall be constituted by such appointments (or any one or more of them) as have been made;
  - (c) to revoke any appointments already made;
  - (d) to make any necessary appointments itself.
- (4) An appointment made by the court under this section has effect as if made with the agreement of the parties.
- (5) The leave of the court is required for any appeal from a decision of the court under this section.

19 Court to have regard to agreed qualifications.

In deciding whether to exercise, and in considering how to exercise, any of its powers under section 16 (procedure for appointment of arbitrators) or section 18 (failure of appointment procedure), the court shall have due regard to any agreement of the parties as to the qualifications required of the arbitrators.

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

20 Chairman.

- (1) Where the parties have agreed that there is to be a chairman, they are free to agree what the functions of the chairman are to be in relation to the making of decisions, orders and awards.
- (2) If or to the extent that there is no such agreement, the following provisions apply.
- (3) Decisions, orders and awards shall be made by all or a majority of the arbitrators (including the chairman).
- (4) The view of the chairman shall prevail in relation to a decision, order or award in respect of which there is neither unanimity nor a majority under subsection (3).

21 Umpire.

- (1) Where the parties have agreed that there is to be an umpire, they are free to agree what the functions of the umpire are to be, and in particular—
  - (a) whether he is to attend the proceedings, and
  - (b) when he is to replace the other arbitrators as the tribunal with power to make decisions, orders and awards.

- (2) If or to the extent that there is no such agreement, the following provisions apply.
- (3) The umpire shall attend the proceedings and be supplied with the same documents and other materials as are supplied to the other arbitrators.
- (4) Decisions, orders and awards shall be made by the other arbitrators unless and until they cannot agree on a matter relating to the arbitration.

In that event they shall forthwith give notice in writing to the parties and the umpire, whereupon the umpire shall replace them as the tribunal with power to make decisions, orders and awards as if he were sole arbitrator.

- (5) If the arbitrators cannot agree but fail to give notice of that fact, or if any of them fails to join in the giving of notice, any party to the arbitral proceedings may (upon notice to the other parties and to the tribunal) apply to the court which may order that the umpire shall replace the other arbitrators as the tribunal with power to make decisions, orders and awards as if he were sole arbitrator.
- (6) The leave of the court is required for any appeal from a decision of the court under this section.

22 Decision-making where no chairman or umpire.

- (1) Where the parties agree that there shall be two or more arbitrators with no chairman or umpire, the parties are free to agree how the tribunal is to make decisions, orders and awards.
- (2) If there is no such agreement, decisions, orders and awards shall be made by all or a majority of the arbitrators.

23 Revocation of arbitrator's authority.

- (1) The parties are free to agree in what circumstances the authority of an arbitrator may be revoked.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

- (2) If or to the extent that there is no such agreement the following provisions apply.
- (3) The authority of an arbitrator may not be revoked except—
  - (a) by the parties acting jointly, or
  - (b) by an arbitral or other institution or person vested by the parties with powers in that regard.
- (4) Revocation of the authority of an arbitrator by the parties acting jointly must be agreed in writing unless the parties also agree (whether or not in writing) to terminate the arbitration agreement.
- (5) Nothing in this section affects the power of the court—
  - (a) to revoke an appointment under section 18 (powers exercisable in case of failure of appointment procedure), or
  - (b) to remove an arbitrator on the grounds specified in section 24.

24 Power of court to remove arbitrator.

- (1) A party to arbitral proceedings may (upon notice to the other parties, to the arbitrator concerned and to any other arbitrator) apply to the court to remove an arbitrator on any of the following grounds—
  - (a) that circumstances exist that give rise to justifiable doubts as to his impartiality;
  - (b) that he does not possess the qualifications required by the arbitration agreement;
  - (c) that he is physically or mentally incapable of conducting the proceedings or there are justifiable doubts as to his capacity to do so;
  - (d) that he has refused or failed—
    - (i) properly to conduct the proceedings, or
    - (ii) to use all reasonable despatch in conducting the proceedings or making an award, and that substantial injustice has been or will be caused to the applicant.
- (2) If there is an arbitral or other institution or person vested by the parties with power to remove an arbitrator, the court shall not exercise its power of removal unless satisfied that the applicant has first exhausted any available recourse to that institution or person.
- (3) The arbitral tribunal may continue the arbitral proceedings and make an award while an application to the court under this section is pending.
- (4) Where the court removes an arbitrator, it may make such order as it thinks fit with respect to his entitlement (if any) to fees or expenses, or the repayment of any fees or expenses already paid.
- (5) The arbitrator concerned is entitled to appear and be heard by the court before it makes any order under this section.
- (6) The leave of the court is required for any appeal from a decision of the court under this section.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

- C36 S. 24(1)(a)(c)(2)(3)(5)(6) applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (21.5.2001) by S.I. 2001/1185, arts. 2, 3, Sch. para. 43(1) (which amending S.I. was revoked (6.4.2004) by S.I. 2004/753, art. 3 (subject to art. 8))
- C37 S. 24(1)(a)(c)(2)(3)(5)(6) applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2003) by The ACAS (Flexible Working) Arbitration Scheme (England and Wales) Order 2003 (S.I. 2003/694), art. 2, Sch. para. 43 (which amending S.I. was revoked (1.10.2004) by S.I. 2004/2333, art. 3 (subject to art. 6))
- C38 S. 24(1)(a)(c)(2)(3)(5)(6) applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2004) by The ACAS Arbitration Scheme (Great Britain) Order 2004 (S.I. 2004/753), art. 1, Sch. para. 52EW
- C39 S. 24(1)(a)(c)(2)(3)(5)(6) applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (1.10.2004) by The ACAS (Flexible Working) Arbitration Scheme (Great Britain) Order 2004 (S.I. 2004/2333), art. 4, Sch. para. 52EW (with art. 6)
- C40 S. 24(1)(a)(c)(2)(3)(5)(6) applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (21.5.2006) by The Labour Relations Agency (Flexible Working) Arbitration Scheme Order (Northern Ireland) 2006 (S.R. 2006/206), arts. 2, 3, Sch. para. 43
- C41 S. 24(1)(a) applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (27.9.2012) by The Labour Relations Agency Arbitration Scheme Order (Northern Ireland) 2012 (S.R. 2012/301), art. 1, Sch. para. 40
- C42 S. 24(1)(c) applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (27.9.2012) by The Labour Relations Agency Arbitration Scheme Order (Northern Ireland) 2012 (S.R. 2012/301), art. 1, Sch. para. 40
- C43 S. 24(2) applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (27.9.2012) by The Labour Relations Agency Arbitration Scheme Order (Northern Ireland) 2012 (S.R. 2012/301), art. 1, Sch. para. 40
- C44 S. 24(3) applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (27.9.2012) by The Labour Relations Agency Arbitration Scheme Order (Northern Ireland) 2012 (S.R. 2012/301), art. 1, Sch. para. 40
- C45 S. 24(5) applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (27.9.2012) by The Labour Relations Agency Arbitration Scheme Order (Northern Ireland) 2012 (S.R. 2012/301), art. 1, Sch. para. 40
- C46 S. 24(6) applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (27.9.2012) by The Labour Relations Agency Arbitration Scheme Order (Northern Ireland) 2012 (S.R. 2012/301), art. 1, Sch. para. 40

25 Resignation of arbitrator.

- (1) The parties are free to agree with an arbitrator as to the consequences of his resignation as regards—
  - (a) his entitlement (if any) to fees or expenses, and
  - (b) any liability thereby incurred by him.
- (2) If or to the extent that there is no such agreement the following provisions apply.
- (3) An arbitrator who resigns his appointment may (upon notice to the parties) apply to the court—
  - (a) to grant him relief from any liability thereby incurred by him, and
  - (b) to make such order as it thinks fit with respect to his entitlement (if any) to fees or expenses or the repayment of any fees or expenses already paid.
- (4) If the court is satisfied that in all the circumstances it was reasonable for the arbitrator to resign, it may grant such relief as is mentioned in subsection (3)(a) on such terms as it thinks fit.
- (5) The leave of the court is required for any appeal from a decision of the court under this section.

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

26 Death of arbitrator or person appointing him.

- (1) The authority of an arbitrator is personal and ceases on his death.
- (2) Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, the death of the person by whom an arbitrator was appointed does not revoke the arbitrator's authority.

27 Filling of vacancy, &c.

- (1) Where an arbitrator ceases to hold office, the parties are free to agree—
  - (a) whether and if so how the vacancy is to be filled,
  - (b) whether and if so to what extent the previous proceedings should stand, and
  - (c) what effect (if any) his ceasing to hold office has on any appointment made by him (alone or jointly).
- (2) If or to the extent that there is no such agreement, the following provisions apply.
- (3) The provisions of sections 16 (procedure for appointment of arbitrators) and 18 (failure of appointment procedure) apply in relation to the filling of the vacancy as in relation to an original appointment.
- (4) The tribunal (when reconstituted) shall determine whether and if so to what extent the previous proceedings should stand.

This does not affect any right of a party to challenge those proceedings on any ground which had arisen before the arbitrator ceased to hold office.
- (5) His ceasing to hold office does not affect any appointment by him (alone or jointly) of another arbitrator, in particular any appointment of a chairman or umpire.

28 Joint and several liability of parties to arbitrators for fees and expenses.

- (1) The parties are jointly and severally liable to pay to the arbitrators such reasonable fees and expenses (if any) as are appropriate in the circumstances.
- (2) Any party may apply to the court (upon notice to the other parties and to the arbitrators) which may order that the amount of the arbitrators' fees and expenses shall be considered and adjusted by such means and upon such terms as it may direct.
- (3) If the application is made after any amount has been paid to the arbitrators by way of fees or expenses, the court may order the repayment of such amount (if any) as is shown to be excessive, but shall not do so unless it is shown that it is reasonable in the circumstances to order repayment.
- (4) The above provisions have effect subject to any order of the court under section 24(4) or 25(3)(b) (order as to entitlement to fees or expenses in case of removal or resignation of arbitrator).
- (5) Nothing in this section affects any liability of a party to any other party to pay all or any of the costs of the arbitration (see sections 59 to 65) or any contractual right of an arbitrator to payment of his fees and expenses.
- (6) In this section references to arbitrators include an arbitrator who has ceased to act and an umpire who has not replaced the other arbitrators.

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

29 Immunity of arbitrator.

- (1) An arbitrator is not liable for anything done or omitted in the discharge or purported discharge of his functions as arbitrator unless the act or omission is shown to have been in bad faith.
- (2) Subsection (1) applies to an employee or agent of an arbitrator as it applies to the arbitrator himself.
- (3) This section does not affect any liability incurred by an arbitrator by reason of his resigning (but see section 25).

Jurisdiction of the arbitral tribunal

30 Competence of tribunal to rule on its own jurisdiction.

- (1) Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, the arbitral tribunal may rule on its own substantive jurisdiction, that is, as to—
  - (a) whether there is a valid arbitration agreement,
  - (b) whether the tribunal is properly constituted, and
  - (c) what matters have been submitted to arbitration in accordance with the arbitration agreement.
- (2) Any such ruling may be challenged by any available arbitral process of appeal or review or in accordance with the provisions of this Part.

31 Objection to substantive jurisdiction of tribunal.

- (1) An objection that the arbitral tribunal lacks substantive jurisdiction at the outset of the proceedings must be raised by a party not later than the time he takes the first step in the proceedings to contest the merits of any matter in relation to which he challenges the tribunal's jurisdiction.

A party is not precluded from raising such an objection by the fact that he has appointed or participated in the appointment of an arbitrator.

- (2) Any objection during the course of the arbitral proceedings that the arbitral tribunal is exceeding its substantive jurisdiction must be made as soon as possible after the matter alleged to be beyond its jurisdiction is raised.
- (3) The arbitral tribunal may admit an objection later than the time specified in subsection (1) or (2) if it considers the delay justified.
- (4) Where an objection is duly taken to the tribunal's substantive jurisdiction and the tribunal has power to rule on its own jurisdiction, it may—
  - (a) rule on the matter in an award as to jurisdiction, or
  - (b) deal with the objection in its award on the merits.

If the parties agree which of these courses the tribunal should take, the tribunal shall proceed accordingly.

- (5) The tribunal may in any case, and shall if the parties so agree, stay proceedings whilst an application is made to the court under section 32 (determination of preliminary point of jurisdiction).

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

32 Determination of preliminary point of jurisdiction.

- (1) The court may, on the application of a party to arbitral proceedings (upon notice to the other parties), determine any question as to the substantive jurisdiction of the tribunal.

A party may lose the right to object (see section 73).

- (2) An application under this section shall not be considered unless—
- (a) it is made with the agreement in writing of all the other parties to the proceedings, or
  - (b) it is made with the permission of the tribunal and the court is satisfied—
    - (i) that the determination of the question is likely to produce substantial savings in costs,
    - (ii) that the application was made without delay, and
    - (iii) that there is good reason why the matter should be decided by the court.
- (3) An application under this section, unless made with the agreement of all the other parties to the proceedings, shall state the grounds on which it is said that the matter should be decided by the court.
- (4) Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, the arbitral tribunal may continue the arbitral proceedings and make an award while an application to the court under this section is pending.
- (5) Unless the court gives leave, no appeal lies from a decision of the court whether the conditions specified in subsection (2) are met.
- (6) The decision of the court on the question of jurisdiction shall be treated as a judgment of the court for the purposes of an appeal.

But no appeal lies without the leave of the court which shall not be given unless the court considers that the question involves a point of law which is one of general importance or is one which for some other special reason should be considered by the Court of Appeal.

The arbitral proceedings

33 General duty of the tribunal.

- (1) The tribunal shall—
- (a) act fairly and impartially as between the parties, giving each party a reasonable opportunity of putting his case and dealing with that of his opponent, and
  - (b) adopt procedures suitable to the circumstances of the particular case, avoiding unnecessary delay or expense, so as to provide a fair means for the resolution of the matters falling to be determined.
- (2) The tribunal shall comply with that general duty in conducting the arbitral proceedings, in its decisions on matters of procedure and evidence and in the exercise of all other powers conferred on it.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

34 Procedural and evidential matters.

- (1) It shall be for the tribunal to decide all procedural and evidential matters, subject to the right of the parties to agree any matter.
- (2) Procedural and evidential matters include—
  - (a) when and where any part of the proceedings is to be held;
  - (b) the language or languages to be used in the proceedings and whether translations of any relevant documents are to be supplied;
  - (c) whether any and if so what form of written statements of claim and defence are to be used, when these should be supplied and the extent to which such statements can be later amended;
  - (d) whether any and if so which documents or classes of documents should be disclosed between and produced by the parties and at what stage;
  - (e) whether any and if so what questions should be put to and answered by the respective parties and when and in what form this should be done;
  - (f) whether to apply strict rules of evidence (or any other rules) as to the admissibility, relevance or weight of any material (oral, written or other) sought to be tendered on any matters of fact or opinion, and the time, manner and form in which such material should be exchanged and presented;
  - (g) whether and to what extent the tribunal should itself take the initiative in ascertaining the facts and the law;
  - (h) whether and to what extent there should be oral or written evidence or submissions.
- (3) The tribunal may fix the time within which any directions given by it are to be complied with, and may if it thinks fit extend the time so fixed (whether or not it has expired).

35 Consolidation of proceedings and concurrent hearings.

- (1) The parties are free to agree—
  - (a) that the arbitral proceedings shall be consolidated with other arbitral proceedings, or
  - (b) that concurrent hearings shall be held,on such terms as may be agreed.
- (2) Unless the parties agree to confer such power on the tribunal, the tribunal has no power to order consolidation of proceedings or concurrent hearings.

36 Legal or other representation.

Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, a party to arbitral proceedings may be represented in the proceedings by a lawyer or other person chosen by him.

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

C47 Power to apply conferred (31.1.1997) by 1966 c. 41, s. 3 (as substituted by 1996 c. 23, s. 107(1), Sch. 3 para. 24) (with s. 81(2)); S.I. 1996/3146, art. 3

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.
Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

C48 Power to apply conferred (31.1.1997) by 1988 c. 8, s. 6(1)(as substituted by 1996 c. 23, s. 107(1), Sch. 3 para. 49) (with s. 81(2)); S.I. 1996/3146, art. 3 (with art. 4, Sch. 2)

37 Power to appoint experts, legal advisers or assessors.

- (1) Unless otherwise agreed by the parties—
  - (a) the tribunal may—
    - (i) appoint experts or legal advisers to report to it and the parties, or
    - (ii) appoint assessors to assist it on technical matters, and may allow any such expert, legal adviser or assessor to attend the proceedings; and
  - (b) the parties shall be given a reasonable opportunity to comment on any information, opinion or advice offered by any such person.
- (2) The fees and expenses of an expert, legal adviser or assessor appointed by the tribunal for which the arbitrators are liable are expenses of the arbitrators for the purposes of this Part.

38 General powers exercisable by the tribunal.

- (1) The parties are free to agree on the powers exercisable by the arbitral tribunal for the purposes of and in relation to the proceedings.
- (2) Unless otherwise agreed by the parties the tribunal has the following powers.
- (3) The tribunal may order a claimant to provide security for the costs of the arbitration.
 This power shall not be exercised on the ground that the claimant is—
  - (a) an individual ordinarily resident outside the United Kingdom, or
  - (b) a corporation or association incorporated or formed under the law of a country outside the United Kingdom, or whose central management and control is exercised outside the United Kingdom.
- (4) The tribunal may give directions in relation to any property which is the subject of the proceedings or as to which any question arises in the proceedings, and which is owned by or is in the possession of a party to the proceedings—
  - (a) for the inspection, photographing, preservation, custody or detention of the property by the tribunal, an expert or a party, or
  - (b) ordering that samples be taken from, or any observation be made of or experiment conducted upon, the property.
- (5) The tribunal may direct that a party or witness shall be examined on oath or affirmation, and may for that purpose administer any necessary oath or take any necessary affirmation.
- (6) The tribunal may give directions to a party for the preservation for the purposes of the proceedings of any evidence in his custody or control.

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.
Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

- C49 Power to apply conferred (31.1.1997) by 1966 c. 41, s. 3 (as substituted by 1996 c. 23, s. 107(1), Sch. 3 para. 24) (with s. 81(2)); S.I. 1996/3146, art. 3 (with art. 4, Sch. 2)
- C50 Power to apply conferred (31.1.1997) by 1988 c. 8, s. 6(1) (as substituted by 1996 c. 23, s. 107(1), Sch. 3 para. 49) (with S. 81(2)); S.I. 1996/3146, art. 3 (with art. 4, Sch. 2)

39 Power to make provisional awards.

- (1) The parties are free to agree that the tribunal shall have power to order on a provisional basis any relief which it would have power to grant in a final award.
- (2) This includes, for instance, making—
  - (a) a provisional order for the payment of money or the disposition of property as between the parties, or
  - (b) an order to make an interim payment on account of the costs of the arbitration.
- (3) Any such order shall be subject to the tribunal's final adjudication; and the tribunal's final award, on the merits or as to costs, shall take account of any such order.
- (4) Unless the parties agree to confer such power on the tribunal, the tribunal has no such power.

This does not affect its powers under section 47 (awards on different issues, &c.).

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

- C51 Power to apply conferred (31.1.1997) by 1966 c. 41, s. 3 (as substituted by 1996 c. 23, s. 107(1), Sch. 3 para. 24) (with s. 81(2)); S.I. 1996/3146, art. 3 (with art. 4, Sch. 2)
- C52 Power to apply conferred (31.1.1997) by 1988 c. 8, s. 6(1) (as substituted by 1996 c. 23, s. 107(1), Sch. 3 para. 49) (with s. 81(2)); S.I. 1996/3146, art. 3 (with art. 4, Sch. 2)

40 General duty of parties.

- (1) The parties shall do all things necessary for the proper and expeditious conduct of the arbitral proceedings.
- (2) This includes—
  - (a) complying without delay with any determination of the tribunal as to procedural or evidential matters, or with any order or directions of the tribunal, and
  - (b) where appropriate, taking without delay any necessary steps to obtain a decision of the court on a preliminary question of jurisdiction or law (see sections 32 and 45).

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.
Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

- C53 Power to apply conferred (31.1.1997) by 1966 c. 41, s. 3 (as substituted by 1996 c. 23, s. 107(1), Sch. 3, para. 24) (with s. 81(2)); S. I. 1996/3146, art. 3 (with art. 4, Sch. 2)
- C54 Power to apply conferred (31.1.1997) by 1988 c. 8, s. 6(1) (as substituted by 1996 c. 23, s. 107(1), Sch. 3 para. 49) (with s. 81(2)); S.I. 1996/3146, art. 3 (with art. 4, Sch. 2)

41 Powers of tribunal in case of party's default.

- (1) The parties are free to agree on the powers of the tribunal in case of a party's failure to do something necessary for the proper and expeditious conduct of the arbitration.
- (2) Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, the following provisions apply.
- (3) If the tribunal is satisfied that there has been inordinate and inexcusable delay on the part of the claimant in pursuing his claim and that the delay—
  - (a) gives rise, or is likely to give rise, to a substantial risk that it is not possible to have a fair resolution of the issues in that claim, or
  - (b) has caused, or is likely to cause, serious prejudice to the respondent, the tribunal may make an award dismissing the claim.
- (4) If without showing sufficient cause a party—
  - (a) fails to attend or be represented at an oral hearing of which due notice was given, or
  - (b) where matters are to be dealt with in writing, fails after due notice to submit written evidence or make written submissions, the tribunal may continue the proceedings in the absence of that party or, as the case may be, without any written evidence or submissions on his behalf, and may make an award on the basis of the evidence before it.
- (5) If without showing sufficient cause a party fails to comply with any order or directions of the tribunal, the tribunal may make a peremptory order to the same effect, prescribing such time for compliance with it as the tribunal considers appropriate.
- (6) If a claimant fails to comply with a peremptory order of the tribunal to provide security for costs, the tribunal may make an award dismissing his claim.
- (7) If a party fails to comply with any other kind of peremptory order, then, without prejudice to section 42 (enforcement by court of tribunal's peremptory orders), the tribunal may do any of the following—
  - (a) direct that the party in default shall not be entitled to rely upon any allegation or material which was the subject matter of the order;
  - (b) draw such adverse inferences from the act of non-compliance as the circumstances justify;
  - (c) proceed to an award on the basis of such materials as have been properly provided to it;
  - (d) make such order as it thinks fit as to the payment of costs of the arbitration incurred in consequence of the non-compliance.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

- C55 Power to apply conferred (31.1.1997) by 1966 c. 41, s. 3 (as substituted by 1996 c. 23, s. 107(1), Sch. 3, para. 24) (with s. 81(2)); S. I. 1996/3146, art. 3 (with art. 4, Sch. 2)
- C56 Power to apply conferred (31.1.1997) by 1988 c. 8, s. 6(1) (as substituted by 1996 c. 23, s. 107(1), Sch. 3 para. 49) (with s. 81(2)); S.I. 1996/3146, art. 3 (with art. 4, Sch. 2)

Powers of court in relation to arbitral proceedings

42 Enforcement of peremptory orders of tribunal.

- (1) Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, the court may make an order requiring a party to comply with a peremptory order made by the tribunal.
- (2) An application for an order under this section may be made—
  - (a) by the tribunal (upon notice to the parties),
  - (b) by a party to the arbitral proceedings with the permission of the tribunal (and upon notice to the other parties), or
  - (c) where the parties have agreed that the powers of the court under this section shall be available.
- (3) The court shall not act unless it is satisfied that the applicant has exhausted any available arbitral process in respect of failure to comply with the tribunal's order.
- (4) No order shall be made under this section unless the court is satisfied that the person to whom the tribunal's order was directed has failed to comply with it within the time prescribed in the order or, if no time was prescribed, within a reasonable time.
- (5) The leave of the court is required for any appeal from a decision of the court under this section.

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

- C57 Power to apply conferred (31.1.1997) by 1966 c. 41, s. 3 (as substituted by 1996 c. 23, s. 107(1), Sch. 3 para. 24) (with s. 81(2)); S.I. 1996/3146, art. 3 (with art. 4, Sch. 2)
- C58 S. 42 applied (with modifications)(E.W.)(1.5.1998) by S.I. 1998/649, art. 2, Sch. Pt. I para.24
- C59 Power to apply conferred (31.1.1997) by 1988 c. 8, s. 6(1)(as substituted by 1996 c. 23, s. 107(1), Sch. 3 para. 49) (with s. 81(2)); S.I. 1996/3146, art. 3 (with art. 4, Sch. 2)

43 Securing the attendance of witnesses.

- (1) A party to arbitral proceedings may use the same court procedures as are available in relation to legal proceedings to secure the attendance before the tribunal of a witness in order to give oral testimony or to produce documents or other material evidence.
- (2) This may only be done with the permission of the tribunal or the agreement of the other parties.
- (3) The court procedures may only be used if—

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

- (a) the witness is in the United Kingdom, and
  - (b) the arbitral proceedings are being conducted in England and Wales or, as the case may be, Northern Ireland.
- (4) A person shall not be compelled by virtue of this section to produce any document or other material evidence which he could not be compelled to produce in legal proceedings.

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

- C60 Power to apply conferred (31.1.1997) by 1966 c. 41, s. 3 (as substituted by 1996 c. 23, s. 107(1), Sch. 3, para. 24) (with s. 81(2)); S.I. 1996/3146 art. 3 (with art. 4, Sch. 2)
- C61 Power to apply conferred (31.1.1997) by 1988 c. 8, s. 6(1) (as substituted by 1996 c. 23, s. 107(1), Sch. 3 para. 49) (with s. 81(2)); S.I. 1996/3146, art. 3 (with art. 4, Sch. 2)

44 Court powers exercisable in support of arbitral proceedings.

- (1) Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, the court has for the purposes of and in relation to arbitral proceedings the same power of making orders about the matters listed below as it has for the purposes of and in relation to legal proceedings.
- (2) Those matters are—
- (a) the taking of the evidence of witnesses;
  - (b) the preservation of evidence;
  - (c) making orders relating to property which is the subject of the proceedings or as to which any question arises in the proceedings—
    - (i) for the inspection, photographing, preservation, custody or detention of the property, or
    - (ii) ordering that samples be taken from, or any observation be made of or experiment conducted upon, the property; and for that purpose authorising any person to enter any premises in the possession or control of a party to the arbitration;
  - (d) the sale of any goods the subject of the proceedings;
  - (e) the granting of an interim injunction or the appointment of a receiver.
- (3) If the case is one of urgency, the court may, on the application of a party or proposed party to the arbitral proceedings, make such orders as it thinks necessary for the purpose of preserving evidence or assets.
- (4) If the case is not one of urgency, the court shall act only on the application of a party to the arbitral proceedings (upon notice to the other parties and to the tribunal) made with the permission of the tribunal or the agreement in writing of the other parties.
- (5) In any case the court shall act only if or to the extent that the arbitral tribunal, and any arbitral or other institution or person vested by the parties with power in that regard, has no power or is unable for the time being to act effectively.
- (6) If the court so orders, an order made by it under this section shall cease to have effect in whole or in part on the order of the tribunal or of any such arbitral or other institution or person having power to act in relation to the subject-matter of the order.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

- (7) The leave of the court is required for any appeal from a decision of the court under this section.

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

- C62 Power to apply conferred (31.1.1997) by 1966 c. 41, s. 3 (as substituted by 1996 c. 23, s. 107(1), Sch. 3 para. 24) (with s. 81(2)); S.I. 1996/3146, art. 3 (with art. 4, Sch. 2)
- C63 Power to apply conferred (31.1.1997) by 1988 c. 8, s. 6(1) (as substituted by 1996 c. 23, Sch. 3 para. 49) (with s. 81(2)); S.I. 1996/3146, art. 3

45 Determination of preliminary point of law.

- (1) Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, the court may on the application of a party to arbitral proceedings (upon notice to the other parties) determine any question of law arising in the course of the proceedings which the court is satisfied substantially affects the rights of one or more of the parties.

An agreement to dispense with reasons for the tribunal's award shall be considered an agreement to exclude the court's jurisdiction under this section.

- (2) An application under this section shall not be considered unless—
- it is made with the agreement of all the other parties to the proceedings, or
  - it is made with the permission of the tribunal and the court is satisfied—
    - that the determination of the question is likely to produce substantial savings in costs, and
    - that the application was made without delay.
- (3) The application shall identify the question of law to be determined and, unless made with the agreement of all the other parties to the proceedings, shall state the grounds on which it is said that the question should be decided by the court.
- (4) Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, the arbitral tribunal may continue the arbitral proceedings and make an award while an application to the court under this section is pending.
- (5) Unless the court gives leave, no appeal lies from a decision of the court whether the conditions specified in subsection (2) are met.
- (6) The decision of the court on the question of law shall be treated as a judgment of the court for the purposes of an appeal.

But no appeal lies without the leave of the court which shall not be given unless the court considers that the question is one of general importance, or is one which for some other special reason should be considered by the Court of Appeal.

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

- C64 S. 45 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (21.5.2001) by S.I. 2001/1185, arts. 2, 3, Sch. para. 94(1) (which amending S.I. was revoked (6.4.2004) by S.I. 2004/753, art. 3 (subject to art. 8))

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

- C65 S. 45 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2003) by The ACAS \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme \(England and Wales\) Order 2003 \(S.I. 2003/694\), art. 2, Sch. para. 93 (which amending S.I. was revoked (1.10.2004) by S.I. 2004/2333, art. 3 (subject to art. 6))
- C66 S. 45 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2004) by The ACAS Arbitration Scheme \(Great Britain\) Order 2004 \(S.I. 2004/753\), art. 1, Sch. para. 110EW
- C67 S. 45 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (1.10.2004) by The ACAS \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme \(Great Britain\) Order 2004 \(S.I. 2004/2333\), art. 4, Sch. para. 108EW (with art. 6)
- C68 S. 45 applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (21.5.2006) by The Labour Relations Agency \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2006 \(S.R. 2006/206\), arts. 2, 3, Sch. para. 93
- C69 S. 45 applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (27.9.2012) by The Labour Relations Agency Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2012 \(S.R. 2012/301\), art. 1, Sch. para. 89

The award

46 Rules applicable to substance of dispute.

- (1) The arbitral tribunal shall decide the dispute—
- (a) in accordance with the law chosen by the parties as applicable to the substance of the dispute, or
  - (b) if the parties so agree, in accordance with such other considerations as are agreed by them or determined by the tribunal.
- (2) For this purpose the choice of the laws of a country shall be understood to refer to the substantive laws of that country and not its conflict of laws rules.
- (3) If or to the extent that there is no such choice or agreement, the tribunal shall apply the law determined by the conflict of laws rules which it considers applicable.

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

- C70 S. 46(1)(b) applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (21.5.2001) by S.I. 2001/1185, art. 4\(1\) (which amending S.I. was revoked (6.4.2004) by S.I. 2004/753, art. 3 (subject to art. 8))
 S. 46(1)(b) applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (28.4.2002) by Labour Relations Agency Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2002 \(S.R. 2002/120\), art. 4
- C71 S. 46(1)(b) applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2003) by The ACAS \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme \(England and Wales\) Order 2003 \(S.I. 2003/694\), art. 4 (which amending S.I. was revoked (1.10.2004) by S.I. 2004/2333, art. 3 (subject to art. 6))
- C72 S. 46(1)(b) applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2004) by The ACAS Arbitration Scheme \(Great Britain\) Order 2004 \(S.I. 2004/753\), art. 5\(1\)
- C73 S. 46(1)(b) applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (1.10.2004) by The ACAS \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme \(Great Britain\) Order 2004 \(S.I. 2004/2333\), art. 5 (with art. 6)
- C74 S. 46(1)(b) applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (21.5.2006) by The Labour Relations Agency \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2006 \(S.R. 2006/206\), art. 4
- C75 S. 46(1)(b) applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (27.9.2012) by The Labour Relations Agency Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2012 \(S.R. 2012/301\), arts. 1, 6

47 Awards on different issues, &c.

- (1) Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, the tribunal may make more than one award at different times on different aspects of the matters to be determined.

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

- (2) The tribunal may, in particular, make an award relating—
  - (a) to an issue affecting the whole claim, or
  - (b) to a part only of the claims or cross-claims submitted to it for decision.
- (3) If the tribunal does so, it shall specify in its award the issue, or the claim or part of a claim, which is the subject matter of the award.

48 Remedies.

- (1) The parties are free to agree on the powers exercisable by the arbitral tribunal as regards remedies.
- (2) Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, the tribunal has the following powers.
- (3) The tribunal may make a declaration as to any matter to be determined in the proceedings.
- (4) The tribunal may order the payment of a sum of money, in any currency.
- (5) The tribunal has the same powers as the court—
  - (a) to order a party to do or refrain from doing anything;
  - (b) to order specific performance of a contract (other than a contract relating to land);
  - (c) to order the rectification, setting aside or cancellation of a deed or other document.

49 Interest.

- (1) The parties are free to agree on the powers of the tribunal as regards the award of interest.
- (2) Unless otherwise agreed by the parties the following provisions apply.
- (3) The tribunal may award simple or compound interest from such dates, at such rates and with such rests as it considers meets the justice of the case—
  - (a) on the whole or part of any amount awarded by the tribunal, in respect of any period up to the date of the award;
  - (b) on the whole or part of any amount claimed in the arbitration and outstanding at the commencement of the arbitral proceedings but paid before the award was made, in respect of any period up to the date of payment.
- (4) The tribunal may award simple or compound interest from the date of the award (or any later date) until payment, at such rates and with such rests as it considers meets the justice of the case, on the outstanding amount of any award (including any award of interest under subsection (3) and any award as to costs).
- (5) References in this section to an amount awarded by the tribunal include an amount payable in consequence of a declaratory award by the tribunal.
- (6) The above provisions do not affect any other power of the tribunal to award interest.

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

50 Extension of time for making award.

- (1) Where the time for making an award is limited by or in pursuance of the arbitration agreement, then, unless otherwise agreed by the parties, the court may in accordance with the following provisions by order extend that time.
- (2) An application for an order under this section may be made—
  - (a) by the tribunal (upon notice to the parties), or
  - (b) by any party to the proceedings (upon notice to the tribunal and the other parties),but only after exhausting any available arbitral process for obtaining an extension of time.
- (3) The court shall only make an order if satisfied that a substantial injustice would otherwise be done.
- (4) The court may extend the time for such period and on such terms as it thinks fit, and may do so whether or not the time previously fixed (by or under the agreement or by a previous order) has expired.
- (5) The leave of the court is required for any appeal from a decision of the court under this section.

51 Settlement.

- (1) If during arbitral proceedings the parties settle the dispute, the following provisions apply unless otherwise agreed by the parties.
- (2) The tribunal shall terminate the substantive proceedings and, if so requested by the parties and not objected to by the tribunal, shall record the settlement in the form of an agreed award.
- (3) An agreed award shall state that it is an award of the tribunal and shall have the same status and effect as any other award on the merits of the case.
- (4) The following provisions of this Part relating to awards (sections 52 to 58) apply to an agreed award.
- (5) Unless the parties have also settled the matter of the payment of the costs of the arbitration, the provisions of this Part relating to costs (sections 59 to 65) continue to apply.

52 Form of award.

- (1) The parties are free to agree on the form of an award.
- (2) If or to the extent that there is no such agreement, the following provisions apply.
- (3) The award shall be in writing signed by all the arbitrators or all those assenting to the award.
- (4) The award shall contain the reasons for the award unless it is an agreed award or the parties have agreed to dispense with reasons.
- (5) The award shall state the seat of the arbitration and the date when the award is made.

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

53 Place where award treated as made.

Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, where the seat of the arbitration is in England and Wales or Northern Ireland, any award in the proceedings shall be treated as made there, regardless of where it was signed, despatched or delivered to any of the parties.

54 Date of award.

- (1) Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, the tribunal may decide what is to be taken to be the date on which the award was made.
- (2) In the absence of any such decision, the date of the award shall be taken to be the date on which it is signed by the arbitrator or, where more than one arbitrator signs the award, by the last of them.

55 Notification of award.

- (1) The parties are free to agree on the requirements as to notification of the award to the parties.
- (2) If there is no such agreement, the award shall be notified to the parties by service on them of copies of the award, which shall be done without delay after the award is made.
- (3) Nothing in this section affects section 56 (power to withhold award in case of non-payment).

56 Power to withhold award in case of non-payment.

- (1) The tribunal may refuse to deliver an award to the parties except upon full payment of the fees and expenses of the arbitrators.
- (2) If the tribunal refuses on that ground to deliver an award, a party to the arbitral proceedings may (upon notice to the other parties and the tribunal) apply to the court, which may order that—
  - (a) the tribunal shall deliver the award on the payment into court by the applicant of the fees and expenses demanded, or such lesser amount as the court may specify,
  - (b) the amount of the fees and expenses properly payable shall be determined by such means and upon such terms as the court may direct, and
  - (c) out of the money paid into court there shall be paid out such fees and expenses as may be found to be properly payable and the balance of the money (if any) shall be paid out to the applicant.
- (3) For this purpose the amount of fees and expenses properly payable is the amount the applicant is liable to pay under section 28 or any agreement relating to the payment of the arbitrators.
- (4) No application to the court may be made where there is any available arbitral process for appeal or review of the amount of the fees or expenses demanded.
- (5) References in this section to arbitrators include an arbitrator who has ceased to act and an umpire who has not replaced the other arbitrators.

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

- (6) The above provisions of this section also apply in relation to any arbitral or other institution or person vested by the parties with powers in relation to the delivery of the tribunal's award.

As they so apply, the references to the fees and expenses of the arbitrators shall be construed as including the fees and expenses of that institution or person.

- (7) The leave of the court is required for any appeal from a decision of the court under this section.
- (8) Nothing in this section shall be construed as excluding an application under section 28 where payment has been made to the arbitrators in order to obtain the award.

57 Correction of award or additional award.

- (1) The parties are free to agree on the powers of the tribunal to correct an award or make an additional award.
- (2) If or to the extent there is no such agreement, the following provisions apply.
- (3) The tribunal may on its own initiative or on the application of a party—
- (a) correct an award so as to remove any clerical mistake or error arising from an accidental slip or omission or clarify or remove any ambiguity in the award, or
  - (b) make an additional award in respect of any claim (including a claim for interest or costs) which was presented to the tribunal but was not dealt with in the award.

These powers shall not be exercised without first affording the other parties a reasonable opportunity to make representations to the tribunal.

- (4) Any application for the exercise of those powers must be made within 28 days of the date of the award or such longer period as the parties may agree.
- (5) Any correction of an award shall be made within 28 days of the date the application was received by the tribunal or, where the correction is made by the tribunal on its own initiative, within 28 days of the date of the award or, in either case, such longer period as the parties may agree.
- (6) Any additional award shall be made within 56 days of the date of the original award or such longer period as the parties may agree.
- (7) Any correction of an award shall form part of the award.

58 Effect of award.

- (1) Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, an award made by the tribunal pursuant to an arbitration agreement is final and binding both on the parties and on any persons claiming through or under them.
- (2) This does not affect the right of a person to challenge the award by any available arbitral process of appeal or review or in accordance with the provisions of this Part.

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

Costs of the arbitration

59 Costs of the arbitration.

- (1) References in this Part to the costs of the arbitration are to—
  - (a) the arbitrators' fees and expenses,
  - (b) the fees and expenses of any arbitral institution concerned, and
  - (c) the legal or other costs of the parties.
- (2) Any such reference includes the costs of or incidental to any proceedings to determine the amount of the recoverable costs of the arbitration (see section 63).

60 Agreement to pay costs in any event.

An agreement which has the effect that a party is to pay the whole or part of the costs of the arbitration in any event is only valid if made after the dispute in question has arisen.

61 Award of costs.

- (1) The tribunal may make an award allocating the costs of the arbitration as between the parties, subject to any agreement of the parties.
- (2) Unless the parties otherwise agree, the tribunal shall award costs on the general principle that costs should follow the event except where it appears to the tribunal that in the circumstances this is not appropriate in relation to the whole or part of the costs.

62 Effect of agreement or award about costs.

Unless the parties otherwise agree, any obligation under an agreement between them as to how the costs of the arbitration are to be borne, or under an award allocating the costs of the arbitration, extends only to such costs as are recoverable.

63 The recoverable costs of the arbitration.

- (1) The parties are free to agree what costs of the arbitration are recoverable.
- (2) If or to the extent there is no such agreement, the following provisions apply.
- (3) The tribunal may determine by award the recoverable costs of the arbitration on such basis as it thinks fit.

If it does so, it shall specify—

- (a) the basis on which it has acted, and
  - (b) the items of recoverable costs and the amount referable to each.
- (4) If the tribunal does not determine the recoverable costs of the arbitration, any party to the arbitral proceedings may apply to the court (upon notice to the other parties) which may—
    - (a) determine the recoverable costs of the arbitration on such basis as it thinks fit, or
    - (b) order that they shall be determined by such means and upon such terms as it may specify.

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

- (5) Unless the tribunal or the court determines otherwise—
  - (a) the recoverable costs of the arbitration shall be determined on the basis that there shall be allowed a reasonable amount in respect of all costs reasonably incurred, and
  - (b) any doubt as to whether costs were reasonably incurred or were reasonable in amount shall be resolved in favour of the paying party.
- (6) The above provisions have effect subject to section 64 (recoverable fees and expenses of arbitrators).
- (7) Nothing in this section affects any right of the arbitrators, any expert, legal adviser or assessor appointed by the tribunal, or any arbitral institution, to payment of their fees and expenses.

64 Recoverable fees and expenses of arbitrators.

- (1) Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, the recoverable costs of the arbitration shall include in respect of the fees and expenses of the arbitrators only such reasonable fees and expenses as are appropriate in the circumstances.
- (2) If there is any question as to what reasonable fees and expenses are appropriate in the circumstances, and the matter is not already before the court on an application under section 63(4), the court may on the application of any party (upon notice to the other parties)—
  - (a) determine the matter, or
  - (b) order that it be determined by such means and upon such terms as the court may specify.
- (3) Subsection (1) has effect subject to any order of the court under section 24(4) or 25(3)
  - (b) (order as to entitlement to fees or expenses in case of removal or resignation of arbitrator).
- (4) Nothing in this section affects any right of the arbitrator to payment of his fees and expenses.

65 Power to limit recoverable costs.

- (1) Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, the tribunal may direct that the recoverable costs of the arbitration, or of any part of the arbitral proceedings, shall be limited to a specified amount.
- (2) Any direction may be made or varied at any stage, but this must be done sufficiently in advance of the incurring of costs to which it relates, or the taking of any steps in the proceedings which may be affected by it, for the limit to be taken into account.

Powers of the court in relation to award

66 Enforcement of the award.

- (1) An award made by the tribunal pursuant to an arbitration agreement may, by leave of the court, be enforced in the same manner as a judgment or order of the court to the same effect.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

- (2) Where leave is so given, judgment may be entered in terms of the award.
- (3) Leave to enforce an award shall not be given where, or to the extent that, the person against whom it is sought to be enforced shows that the tribunal lacked substantive jurisdiction to make the award.

The right to raise such an objection may have been lost (see section 73).

- (4) Nothing in this section affects the recognition or enforcement of an award under any other enactment or rule of law, in particular under Part II of the<sup>M5</sup> Arbitration Act 1950 (enforcement of awards under Geneva Convention) or the provisions of Part III of this Act relating to the recognition and enforcement of awards under the New York Convention or by an action on the award.

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

- C76 S. 66 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (21.5.2001) by S.I. 2001/1185, arts. 2, 3 Sch. para. 159(1) (which amending S.I. was revoked (6.4.2004) by S.I. 2004/753, art. 3 (subject to art. 8))
- C77 S. 66 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2003) by The ACAS \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme \(England and Wales\) Order 2003 \(S.I. 2003/694\), art. 2, Sch. para. 111 (which amending S.I. was revoked (1.10.2004) by S.I. 2004/2333, art. 3 (subject to art. 6))
- C78 S. 66 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2004) by The ACAS Arbitration Scheme \(Great Britain\) Order 2004 \(S.I. 2004/753\), art. 1, Sch. para. 183EW
- C79 S. 66 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (1.10.2004) by The ACAS \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme \(Great Britain\) Order 2004 \(S.I. 2004/2333\), art. 4, Sch. para. 135EW (with art. 6)
- C80 S. 66 applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (21.5.2006) by The Labour Relations Agency \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2006 \(S.R. 2006/206\), arts. 2, 3, Sch. para. 111
- C81 S. 66 applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (27.9.2012) by The Labour Relations Agency Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2012 \(S.R. 2012/301\), art. 1, Sch. para. 108

Marginal Citations

- M5 1950 c. 27.

67 Challenging the award: substantive jurisdiction.

- (1) A party to arbitral proceedings may (upon notice to the other parties and to the tribunal) apply to the court—
  - (a) challenging any award of the arbitral tribunal as to its substantive jurisdiction; or
  - (b) for an order declaring an award made by the tribunal on the merits to be of no effect, in whole or in part, because the tribunal did not have substantive jurisdiction.

A party may lose the right to object (see section 73) and the right to apply is subject to the restrictions in section 70(2) and (3).

- (2) The arbitral tribunal may continue the arbitral proceedings and make a further award while an application to the court under this section is pending in relation to an award as to jurisdiction.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

- (3) On an application under this section challenging an award of the arbitral tribunal as to its substantive jurisdiction, the court may by order—
- (a) confirm the award,
  - (b) vary the award, or
  - (c) set aside the award in whole or in part.
- (4) The leave of the court is required for any appeal from a decision of the court under this section.

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

- C82 S. 67 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (21.5.2001) by S.I. 2001/1185, arts. 2, 3, Sch. para. 162(1) (which amending S.I. was revoked (6.4.2004) by S.I. 2004/753, art. 3 (subject to art. 8))
- C83 S. 67 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2003) by The ACAS \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme \(England and Wales\) Order 2003 \(S.I. 2003/694\), art. 2, Sch. para. 113 (which amending S.I. was revoked (1.10.2004) by S.I. 2004/2333, art. 3 (subject to art. 6))
- C84 S. 67 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2004) by The ACAS Arbitration Scheme \(Great Britain\) Order 2004 \(S.I. 2004/753\), art. 1, Sch. para. 187EW
- C85 S. 67 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (1.10.2004) by The ACAS \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme \(Great Britain\) Order 2004 \(S.I. 2004/2333\), art. 4, Sch. para. 138EW (with art. 6)
- C86 S. 67 applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (21.5.2006) by The Labour Relations Agency \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2006 \(S.R. 2006/206\), arts. 2, 3, Sch. para. 113
- C87 S. 67 applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (27.9.2012) by The Labour Relations Agency Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2012 \(S.R. 2012/301\), art. 1, Sch. para. 110

68 Challenging the award: serious irregularity.

- (1) A party to arbitral proceedings may (upon notice to the other parties and to the tribunal) apply to the court challenging an award in the proceedings on the ground of serious irregularity affecting the tribunal, the proceedings or the award.

A party may lose the right to object (see section 73) and the right to apply is subject to the restrictions in section 70(2) and (3).

- (2) Serious irregularity means an irregularity of one or more of the following kinds which the court considers has caused or will cause substantial injustice to the applicant—
- (a) failure by the tribunal to comply with section 33 (general duty of tribunal);
  - (b) the tribunal exceeding its powers (otherwise than by exceeding its substantive jurisdiction: see section 67);
  - (c) failure by the tribunal to conduct the proceedings in accordance with the procedure agreed by the parties;
  - (d) failure by the tribunal to deal with all the issues that were put to it;
  - (e) any arbitral or other institution or person vested by the parties with powers in relation to the proceedings or the award exceeding its powers;
  - (f) uncertainty or ambiguity as to the effect of the award;
  - (g) the award being obtained by fraud or the award or the way in which it was procured being contrary to public policy;
  - (h) failure to comply with the requirements as to the form of the award; or

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

- (i) any irregularity in the conduct of the proceedings or in the award which is admitted by the tribunal or by any arbitral or other institution or person vested by the parties with powers in relation to the proceedings or the award.
- (3) If there is shown to be serious irregularity affecting the tribunal, the proceedings or the award, the court may—
- (a) remit the award to the tribunal, in whole or in part, for reconsideration,
  - (b) set the award aside in whole or in part, or
  - (c) declare the award to be of no effect, in whole or in part.
- The court shall not exercise its power to set aside or to declare an award to be of no effect, in whole or in part, unless it is satisfied that it would be inappropriate to remit the matters in question to the tribunal for reconsideration.
- (4) The leave of the court is required for any appeal from a decision of the court under this section.

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

- C88 S. 68 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (21.5.2001) by S.I. 2001/1185, arts. 2, 3, Sch. para. 163(1) (which amending S.I. was revoked (6.4.2004) by S.I. 2004/753, art. 3 (subject to art. 8))
- C89 S. 68 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2003) by The ACAS \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme \(England and Wales\) Order 2003 \(S.I. 2003/694\), art. 2, Sch. para. 114 (which amending S.I. was revoked (1.10.2004) by S.I. 2004/2333, art. 3 (subject to art. 6))
- C90 S. 68 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2004) by The ACAS Arbitration Scheme \(Great Britain\) Order 2004 \(S.I. 2004/753\), art. 1, Sch. para. 194EW
- C91 S. 68 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (1.10.2004) by The ACAS \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme \(Great Britain\) Order 2004 \(S.I. 2004/2333\), art. 4, Sch. para. 145EW (with art. 6)
- C92 S. 68 applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (21.5.2006) by The Labour Relations Agency \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2006 \(S.R. 2006/206\), arts. 2, 3, Sch. para. 114
- C93 S. 68 applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (27.9.2012) by The Labour Relations Agency Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2012 \(S.R. 2012/301\), art. 1, Sch. para. 111

69 Appeal on point of law.

- (1) Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, a party to arbitral proceedings may (upon notice to the other parties and to the tribunal) appeal to the court on a question of law arising out of an award made in the proceedings.

An agreement to dispense with reasons for the tribunal's award shall be considered an agreement to exclude the court's jurisdiction under this section.

- (2) An appeal shall not be brought under this section except—
- (a) with the agreement of all the other parties to the proceedings, or
  - (b) with the leave of the court.

The right to appeal is also subject to the restrictions in section 70(2) and (3).

- (3) Leave to appeal shall be given only if the court is satisfied—
- (a) that the determination of the question will substantially affect the rights of one or more of the parties,

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

- (b) that the question is one which the tribunal was asked to determine,
  - (c) that, on the basis of the findings of fact in the award—
    - (i) the decision of the tribunal on the question is obviously wrong, or
    - (ii) the question is one of general public importance and the decision of the tribunal is at least open to serious doubt, and
  - (d) that, despite the agreement of the parties to resolve the matter by arbitration, it is just and proper in all the circumstances for the court to determine the question.
- (4) An application for leave to appeal under this section shall identify the question of law to be determined and state the grounds on which it is alleged that leave to appeal should be granted.
- (5) The court shall determine an application for leave to appeal under this section without a hearing unless it appears to the court that a hearing is required.
- (6) The leave of the court is required for any appeal from a decision of the court under this section to grant or refuse leave to appeal.
- (7) On an appeal under this section the court may by order—
- (a) confirm the award,
  - (b) vary the award,
  - (c) remit the award to the tribunal, in whole or in part, for reconsideration in the light of the court's determination, or
  - (d) set aside the award in whole or in part.

The court shall not exercise its power to set aside an award, in whole or in part, unless it is satisfied that it would be inappropriate to remit the matters in question to the tribunal for reconsideration.

- (8) The decision of the court on an appeal under this section shall be treated as a judgment of the court for the purposes of a further appeal.

But no such appeal lies without the leave of the court which shall not be given unless the court considers that the question is one of general importance or is one which for some other special reason should be considered by the Court of Appeal.

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

- C94 S. 69 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (21.5.2001) by S.I. 2001/1185, arts. 2, 3, Sch. para. 164(1) (which amending S.I. was revoked (6.4.2004) by S.I. 2004/753, art. 3 (subject to art. 8))
- C95 S. 69 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2003) by The ACAS \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme \(England and Wales\) Order 2003 \(S.I. 2003/694\), art. 2, Sch. para. 115 (which amending S.I. was revoked (1.10.2004) by S.I. 2004/2333, art. 3 (subject to art. 6))
- C96 S. 69 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2004) by The ACAS Arbitration Scheme \(Great Britain\) Order 2004 \(S.I. 2004/753\), art. 1, Sch. para. 200EW
- C97 S. 69 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (1.10.2004) by The ACAS \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme \(Great Britain\) Order 2004 \(S.I. 2004/2333\), art. 4, Sch. para. 151EW (with art. 6)
- C98 S. 69 applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (21.5.2006) by The Labour Relations Agency \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2006 \(S.R. 2006/206\), arts. 2, 3, Sch. para. 115

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

C99 S. 69 applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (27.9.2012) by The Labour Relations Agency Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2012 \(S.R. 2012/301\), art. 1, Sch. para. 112

70 Challenge or appeal: supplementary provisions.

- (1) The following provisions apply to an application or appeal under section 67, 68 or 69.
- (2) An application or appeal may not be brought if the applicant or appellant has not first exhausted—
  - (a) any available arbitral process of appeal or review, and
  - (b) any available recourse under section 57 (correction of award or additional award).
- (3) Any application or appeal must be brought within 28 days of the date of the award or, if there has been any arbitral process of appeal or review, of the date when the applicant or appellant was notified of the result of that process.
- (4) If on an application or appeal it appears to the court that the award—
  - (a) does not contain the tribunal’s reasons, or
  - (b) does not set out the tribunal’s reasons in sufficient detail to enable the court properly to consider the application or appeal,the court may order the tribunal to state the reasons for its award in sufficient detail for that purpose.
- (5) Where the court makes an order under subsection (4), it may make such further order as it thinks fit with respect to any additional costs of the arbitration resulting from its order.
- (6) The court may order the applicant or appellant to provide security for the costs of the application or appeal, and may direct that the application or appeal be dismissed if the order is not complied with.

The power to order security for costs shall not be exercised on the ground that the applicant or appellant is—

- (a) an individual ordinarily resident outside the United Kingdom, or
  - (b) a corporation or association incorporated or formed under the law of a country outside the United Kingdom, or whose central management and control is exercised outside the United Kingdom.
- (7) The court may order that any money payable under the award shall be brought into court or otherwise secured pending the determination of the application or appeal, and may direct that the application or appeal be dismissed if the order is not complied with.
  - (8) The court may grant leave to appeal subject to conditions to the same or similar effect as an order under subsection (6) or (7).

This does not affect the general discretion of the court to grant leave subject to conditions.

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

C100 S. 70 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (21.5.2001) by S.I. 2001/1185, arts. 2, 3, Sch. para. 165\(1\) (which amending S.I. was revoked (6.4.2004) by S.I. 2004/753, art. 3 (subject to art. 8))

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

- C101 S. 70 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2003) by The ACAS \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme \(England and Wales\) Order 2003 \(S.I. 2003/694\), art. 2, Sch. para. 116 (which amending S.I. was revoked (1.10.2004) by S.I. 2004/2333, art. 3 (subject to art. 6))
- C102 S. 70 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2004) by The ACAS Arbitration Scheme \(Great Britain\) Order 2004 \(S.I. 2004/753\), art. 1, Sch. para. 205EW
- C103 S. 70 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (1.10.2004) by The ACAS \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme \(Great Britain\) Order 2004 \(S.I. 2004/2333\), art. 4, Sch. para. 156EW (with art. 6)
- C104 S. 70 applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (27.9.2012) by The Labour Relations Agency Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2012 \(S.R. 2012/301\), art. 1, Sch. para. 113
- C105 s. 70(3) modified (E.W.) (25.3.2002) by S.I. 2001/4015, Rule 29, Sch. Rule 62.9

71 Challenge or appeal: effect of order of court.

- (1) The following provisions have effect where the court makes an order under section 67, 68 or 69 with respect to an award.
- (2) Where the award is varied, the variation has effect as part of the tribunal's award.
- (3) Where the award is remitted to the tribunal, in whole or in part, for reconsideration, the tribunal shall make a fresh award in respect of the matters remitted within three months of the date of the order for remission or such longer or shorter period as the court may direct.
- (4) Where the award is set aside or declared to be of no effect, in whole or in part, the court may also order that any provision that an award is a condition precedent to the bringing of legal proceedings in respect of a matter to which the arbitration agreement applies, is of no effect as regards the subject matter of the award or, as the case may be, the relevant part of the award.

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

- C106 S. 71 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (21.5.2001) by S.I. 2001/1185, arts. 2, 3, Sch. para. 167(1) (which amending S.I. was revoked (6.4.2004) by S.I. 2004/753, art. 3 (subject to art. 8))
- C107 S. 71 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2003) by The ACAS \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme \(England and Wales\) Order 2003 \(S.I. 2003/694\), art. 2, Sch. para. 118 (which amending S.I. was revoked (1.10.2004) by S.I. 2004/2333, art. 3 (subject to art. 6))
- C108 S. 71 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2004) by The ACAS Arbitration Scheme \(Great Britain\) Order 2004 \(S.I. 2004/753\), art. 1, Sch. para. 212EW
- C109 S. 71 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (1.10.2004) by The ACAS \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme \(Great Britain\) Order 2004 \(S.I. 2004/2333\), art. 4, Sch. para. 163EW (with art. 6)
- C110 S. 71 applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (21.5.2006) by The Labour Relations Agency \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2006 \(S.R. 2006/206\), arts. 2, 3, Sch. para. 118
- C111 S. 71 applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (27.9.2012) by The Labour Relations Agency Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2012 \(S.R. 2012/301\), art. 1, Sch. para. 115

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

Miscellaneous

72 Saving for rights of person who takes no part in proceedings.

- (1) A person alleged to be a party to arbitral proceedings but who takes no part in the proceedings may question—
- (a) whether there is a valid arbitration agreement,
  - (b) whether the tribunal is properly constituted, or
  - (c) what matters have been submitted to arbitration in accordance with the arbitration agreement,
- by proceedings in the court for a declaration or injunction or other appropriate relief.
- (2) He also has the same right as a party to the arbitral proceedings to challenge an award—
- (a) by an application under section 67 on the ground of lack of substantive jurisdiction in relation to him, or
  - (b) by an application under section 68 on the ground of serious irregularity (within the meaning of that section) affecting him;
- and section 70(2) (duty to exhaust arbitral procedures) does not apply in his case.

73 Loss of right to object.

- (1) If a party to arbitral proceedings takes part, or continues to take part, in the proceedings without making, either forthwith or within such time as is allowed by the arbitration agreement or the tribunal or by any provision of this Part, any objection—
- (a) that the tribunal lacks substantive jurisdiction,
  - (b) that the proceedings have been improperly conducted,
  - (c) that there has been a failure to comply with the arbitration agreement or with any provision of this Part, or
  - (d) that there has been any other irregularity affecting the tribunal or the proceedings,
- he may not raise that objection later, before the tribunal or the court, unless he shows that, at the time he took part or continued to take part in the proceedings, he did not know and could not with reasonable diligence have discovered the grounds for the objection.
- (2) Where the arbitral tribunal rules that it has substantive jurisdiction and a party to arbitral proceedings who could have questioned that ruling—
- (a) by any available arbitral process of appeal or review, or
  - (b) by challenging the award,
- does not do so, or does not do so within the time allowed by the arbitration agreement or any provision of this Part, he may not object later to the tribunal's substantive jurisdiction on any ground which was the subject of that ruling.

74 Immunity of arbitral institutions, &c.

- (1) An arbitral or other institution or person designated or requested by the parties to appoint or nominate an arbitrator is not liable for anything done or omitted in the discharge or purported discharge of that function unless the act or omission is shown to have been in bad faith.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

- (2) An arbitral or other institution or person by whom an arbitrator is appointed or nominated is not liable, by reason of having appointed or nominated him, for anything done or omitted by the arbitrator (or his employees or agents) in the discharge or purported discharge of his functions as arbitrator.
- (3) The above provisions apply to an employee or agent of an arbitral or other institution or person as they apply to the institution or person himself.

75 Charge to secure payment of solicitors' costs.

The powers of the court to make declarations and orders under section 73 of the <sup>M6</sup>Solicitors Act 1974 or Article 71H of the <sup>M7</sup>Solicitors (Northern Ireland) Order 1976 (power to charge property recovered in the proceedings with the payment of solicitors' costs) may be exercised in relation to arbitral proceedings as if those proceedings were proceedings in the court.

Annotations:

Marginal Citations

- M6 1974 c. 47.
M7 S.I. 1976/582 (N.I. 12).

Supplementary

76 Service of notices, &c.

- (1) The parties are free to agree on the manner of service of any notice or other document required or authorised to be given or served in pursuance of the arbitration agreement or for the purposes of the arbitral proceedings.
- (2) If or to the extent that there is no such agreement the following provisions apply.
- (3) A notice or other document may be served on a person by any effective means.
- (4) If a notice or other document is addressed, pre-paid and delivered by post—
  - (a) to the addressee's last known principal residence or, if he is or has been carrying on a trade, profession or business, his last known principal business address, or
  - (b) where the addressee is a body corporate, to the body's registered or principal office, it shall be treated as effectively served.
- (5) This section does not apply to the service of documents for the purposes of legal proceedings, for which provision is made by rules of court.
- (6) References in this Part to a notice or other document include any form of communication in writing and references to giving or serving a notice or other document shall be construed accordingly.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

77 Powers of court in relation to service of documents.

- (1) This section applies where service of a document on a person in the manner agreed by the parties, or in accordance with provisions of section 76 having effect in default of agreement, is not reasonably practicable.
- (2) Unless otherwise agreed by the parties, the court may make such order as it thinks fit—
  - (a) for service in such manner as the court may direct, or
  - (b) dispensing with service of the document.
- (3) Any party to the arbitration agreement may apply for an order, but only after exhausting any available arbitral process for resolving the matter.
- (4) The leave of the court is required for any appeal from a decision of the court under this section.

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

- C112 s. 77 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (21.5.2001) by S.I. 2001/1185, arts. 2, 3, Sch. para. 177(1)
- C113 S. 77 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2003) by The ACAS \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme \(England and Wales\) Order 2003 \(S.I. 2003/694\), art. 2, Sch. para. 128 (which amending S.I. was revoked (1.10.2004) by S.I. 2004/2333, art. 3 (subject to art. 8))
- C114 S. 77 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2004) by The ACAS Arbitration Scheme \(Great Britain\) Order 2004 \(S.I. 2004/753\), art. 1, Sch. para. 223EW
- C115 S. 77 applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (1.10.2004) by The ACAS \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme \(Great Britain\) Order 2004 \(S.I. 2004/2333\), art. 4, Sch. para. 174EW (with art. 6)
- C116 S. 77 applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (21.5.2006) by The Labour Relations Agency \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2006 \(S.R. 2006/206\), arts. 2, 3, Sch. Para. 128
- C117 S. 77 applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (27.9.2012) by The Labour Relations Agency Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2012 \(S.R. 2012/301\), art. 1, Sch. para. 123

78 Reckoning periods of time.

- (1) The parties are free to agree on the method of reckoning periods of time for the purposes of any provision agreed by them or any provision of this Part having effect in default of such agreement.
- (2) If or to the extent there is no such agreement, periods of time shall be reckoned in accordance with the following provisions.
- (3) Where the act is required to be done within a specified period after or from a specified date, the period begins immediately after that date.
- (4) Where the act is required to be done a specified number of clear days after a specified date, at least that number of days must intervene between the day on which the act is done and that date.
- (5) Where the period is a period of seven days or less which would include a Saturday, Sunday or a public holiday in the place where anything which has to be done within the period falls to be done, that day shall be excluded.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

In relation to England and Wales or Northern Ireland, a “public holiday” means Christmas Day, Good Friday or a day which under the <sup>M8</sup>Banking and Financial Dealings Act 1971 is a bank holiday.

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

- C118 S. 78(2)(3)(4)(5) applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (21.5.2001) by S.I. 2001/1185, arts. 2, 3, Sch. para. 178(1) (which amending S.I. was revoked (6.4.2004) by S.I. 2004/753, art. 3 (subject to art. 8))
- C119 S. 78(2)(3)(4)(5) applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2003) by The ACAS (Flexible Working) Arbitration Scheme (England and Wales) Order 2003 (S.I. 2003/694), art. 2, Sch. para. 129 (which amending S.I. was revoked (1.10.2004) by S.I. 2004/2333, art. 3 (subject to art. 6))
- C120 S. 78(2)(3)(4)(5) applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2004) by The ACAS Arbitration Scheme (Great Britain) Order 2004 (S.I. 2004/753), art. 1, Sch. para. 224EW
- C121 S. 78(2)(3)(4)(5) applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (1.10.2004) by The ACAS (Flexible Working) Arbitration Scheme (Great Britain) Order 2004 (S.I. 2004/2333), art. 4, Sch. para. 175EW (with art. 6)
- C122 S. 78(2)(3)(4)(5) applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (21.5.2006) by The Labour Relations Agency (Flexible Working) Arbitration Scheme Order (Northern Ireland) 2006 (S.R. 2006/206), arts. 2, 3, Sch. Para. 129
- C123 S. 78(2)-(5) applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (27.9.2012) by The Labour Relations Agency Arbitration Scheme Order (Northern Ireland) 2012 (S.R. 2012/301), art. 1, Sch. para. 124

Marginal Citations

M8 1971 c. 80.

79 Power of court to extend time limits relating to arbitral proceedings.

- (1) Unless the parties otherwise agree, the court may by order extend any time limit agreed by them in relation to any matter relating to the arbitral proceedings or specified in any provision of this Part having effect in default of such agreement.

This section does not apply to a time limit to which section 12 applies (power of court to extend time for beginning arbitral proceedings, &c.).

- (2) An application for an order may be made—
- (a) by any party to the arbitral proceedings (upon notice to the other parties and to the tribunal), or
  - (b) by the arbitral tribunal (upon notice to the parties).
- (3) The court shall not exercise its power to extend a time limit unless it is satisfied—
- (a) that any available recourse to the tribunal, or to any arbitral or other institution or person vested by the parties with power in that regard, has first been exhausted, and
  - (b) that a substantial injustice would otherwise be done.
- (4) The court’s power under this section may be exercised whether or not the time has already expired.
- (5) An order under this section may be made on such terms as the court thinks fit.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

- (6) The leave of the court is required for any appeal from a decision of the court under this section.

80 Notice and other requirements in connection with legal proceedings.

- (1) References in this Part to an application, appeal or other step in relation to legal proceedings being taken “upon notice” to the other parties to the arbitral proceedings, or to the tribunal, are to such notice of the originating process as is required by rules of court and do not impose any separate requirement.
- (2) Rules of court shall be made—
- requiring such notice to be given as indicated by any provision of this Part, and
  - as to the manner, form and content of any such notice.
- (3) Subject to any provision made by rules of court, a requirement to give notice to the tribunal of legal proceedings shall be construed—
- if there is more than one arbitrator, as a requirement to give notice to each of them; and
  - if the tribunal is not fully constituted, as a requirement to give notice to any arbitrator who has been appointed.
- (4) References in this Part to making an application or appeal to the court within a specified period are to the issue within that period of the appropriate originating process in accordance with rules of court.
- (5) Where any provision of this Part requires an application or appeal to be made to the court within a specified time, the rules of court relating to the reckoning of periods, the extending or abridging of periods, and the consequences of not taking a step within the period prescribed by the rules, apply in relation to that requirement.
- (6) Provision may be made by rules of court amending the provisions of this Part—
- with respect to the time within which any application or appeal to the court must be made,
  - so as to keep any provision made by this Part in relation to arbitral proceedings in step with the corresponding provision of rules of court applying in relation to proceedings in the court, or
  - so as to keep any provision made by this Part in relation to legal proceedings in step with the corresponding provision of rules of court applying generally in relation to proceedings in the court.
- (7) Nothing in this section affects the generality of the power to make rules of court.

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

C124 S. 80(1)(2)(4)(5)(6)(7) applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (21.5.2001) by S.I. 2001/1185, arts. 2, 3, Sch. para. 171\(1\) (which amending S.I. was revoked (6.4.2004) by S.I. 2004/753, art. 3 (subject to art. 8))

C125 S. 80(1)(2)(4)(5)(6)(7) applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2003) by The ACAS \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme \(England and Wales\) Order 2003 (S.I. 2003/694), art. 2, Sch. para. 122 (which amending S.I. was revoked (1.10.2004) by S.I. 2004/2333, art. 3 (subject to art. 6))

C126 S. 80(1)(2)(4)(5)(6)(7) applied (with modifications) (E.W.) (6.4.2004) by The ACAS Arbitration Scheme \(Great Britain\) Order 2004 (S.I. 2004/753), art. 1, Sch. para. 217EW

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.
Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

- C127 S. 80(1)(2)(4)(5)(6)(7) applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (21.5.2006) by The Labour Relations Agency \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2006 \(S.R. 2006/206\), arts. 2, 3, Sch. para. 122
- C128 S. 80(1)(2) applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (27.9.2012) by The Labour Relations Agency Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2012 \(S.R. 2012/301\), art. 1, Sch. para. 119
- C129 S. 80(4)-(7) applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (27.9.2012) by The Labour Relations Agency Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2012 \(S.R. 2012/301\), art. 1, Sch. para. 119

81 Saving for certain matters governed by common law.

- (1) Nothing in this Part shall be construed as excluding the operation of any rule of law consistent with the provisions of this Part, in particular, any rule of law as to—
- (a) matters which are not capable of settlement by arbitration;
  - (b) the effect of an oral arbitration agreement; or
  - (c) the refusal of recognition or enforcement of an arbitral award on grounds of public policy.
- (2) Nothing in this Act shall be construed as reviving any jurisdiction of the court to set aside or remit an award on the ground of errors of fact or law on the face of the award.

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

- C130 S. 81(1)(c)(2) applied (E.W.) (21.5.2001) by S.I. 2001/1185, arts. 2, 3, Sch. para. 166 (which amending S.I. was revoked (6.4.2004) by S.I. 2004/753, art. 3 (subject to art. 8))
- C131 S. 81(1)(c)(2) applied (E.W.) (6.4.2003) by The ACAS \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme \(England and Wales\) Order 2003 \(S.I. 2003/694\), art. 2, Sch. para. 117 (which amending S.I. was revoked (1.10.2004) by S.I. 2004/2333, art. 3 (subject to art. 6))
- C132 S. 81(1)(c)(2) applied (E.W.) (6.4.2004) by The ACAS Arbitration Scheme \(Great Britain\) Order 2004 \(S.I. 2004/753\), art. 1, Sch. para. 209EW
- C133 S. 81(1)(c)(2) applied (E.W.) (1.10.2004) by The ACAS \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme \(Great Britain\) Order 2004 \(S.I. 2004/2333\), art. 4, Sch. para. 160EW (with art. 6)
- C134 S. 81(1)(c)(2) applied (N.I.) (21.5.2006) by The Labour Relations Agency \(Flexible Working\) Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2006 \(S.R. 2006/206\), arts. 2, 3, Sch. para. 117
- C135 S. 81(1)(c) applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (27.9.2012) by The Labour Relations Agency Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2012 \(S.R. 2012/301\), art. 1, Sch. para. 114
- C136 S. 81(2) applied (with modifications) (N.I.) (27.9.2012) by The Labour Relations Agency Arbitration Scheme Order \(Northern Ireland\) 2012 \(S.R. 2012/301\), art. 1, Sch. para. 114

82 Minor definitions.

- (1) In this Part—
- “arbitrator”, unless the context otherwise requires, includes an umpire;
- “available arbitral process”, in relation to any matter, includes any process of appeal to or review by an arbitral or other institution or person vested by the parties with powers in relation to that matter;
- “claimant”, unless the context otherwise requires, includes a counterclaimant, and related expressions shall be construed accordingly;
- “dispute” includes any difference;

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

“enactment” includes an enactment contained in Northern Ireland legislation;

“legal proceedings” means civil proceedings [<sup>F1</sup> in England and Wales in the High Court or the county court or in Northern Ireland ] in the High Court or a county court;

“peremptory order” means an order made under section 41(5) or made in exercise of any corresponding power conferred by the parties;

“premises” includes land, buildings, moveable structures, vehicles, vessels, aircraft and hovercraft;

“question of law” means—

(a) for a court in England and Wales, a question of the law of England and Wales, and

(b) for a court in Northern Ireland, a question of the law of Northern Ireland;

“substantive jurisdiction”, in relation to an arbitral tribunal, refers to the matters specified in section 30(1)(a) to (c), and references to the tribunal exceeding its substantive jurisdiction shall be construed accordingly.

(2) References in this Part to a party to an arbitration agreement include any person claiming under or through a party to the agreement.

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

F1 Words in s. 82(1) inserted (22.4.2014) by Crime and Courts Act 2013 \(c. 22\), s. 61\(3\), Sch. 9 para. 60\(1\); S.I. 2014/954, art. 2\(c\) (with art. 3) (with transitional provisions and savings in S.I. 2014/956, arts. 3-11)

83 Index of defined expressions: Part I.

In this Part the expressions listed below are defined or otherwise explained by the provisions indicated—agreement, agree and agreed	section 5(1)

agreement in writing	section 5(2) to (5) arbitration agreement	sections 6 and 5(1)
arbitrator	section 82(1)
available arbitral process	section 82(1)
claimant	section 82(1)
commencement (in relation to arbitral proceedings)	section 14 costs of the arbitration	section 59
the court	section 105
dispute	section 82(1)
enactment	section 82(1)
legal proceedings	section 82(1)

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

Limitation Acts	section 13(4)
notice (or other document)	section 76(6) party—
—in relation to an arbitration agreement	section 82(2)
—where section 106(2) or (3) applies	section 106(4)
peremptory order	section 82(1) (and see section 41(5)) premises	section 82(1)
question of law	section 82(1)
recoverable costs	sections 63 and 64
seat of the arbitration	section 3
serve and service (of notice or other document)	section 76(6)
substantive jurisdiction (in relation to an arbitral tribunal)	section 82(1) (and see section 30(1)(a) to (c))
upon notice (to the parties or the tribunal)	section 80
written and in writing	section 5(6)

84 Transitional provisions.

- (1) The provisions of this Part do not apply to arbitral proceedings commenced before the date on which this Part comes into force.
- (2) They apply to arbitral proceedings commenced on or after that date under an arbitration agreement whenever made.
- (3) The above provisions have effect subject to any transitional provision made by an order under section 109(2) (power to include transitional provisions in commencement order).

PART II

OTHER PROVISIONS RELATING TO ARBITRATION

Domestic arbitration agreements

PROSPECTIVE

85 Modification of Part I in relation to domestic arbitration agreement.

- (1) In the case of a domestic arbitration agreement the provisions of Part I are modified in accordance with the following sections.
- (2) For this purpose a “domestic arbitration agreement” means an arbitration agreement to which none of the parties is—

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

- (a) an individual who is a national of, or habitually resident in, a state other than the United Kingdom, or
  - (b) a body corporate which is incorporated in, or whose central control and management is exercised in, a state other than the United Kingdom, and under which the seat of the arbitration (if the seat has been designated or determined) is in the United Kingdom.
- (3) In subsection (2) “arbitration agreement” and “seat of the arbitration” have the same meaning as in Part I (see sections 3, 5(1) and 6).

PROSPECTIVE

86 Staying of legal proceedings.

- (1) In section 9 (stay of legal proceedings), subsection (4) (stay unless the arbitration agreement is null and void, inoperative, or incapable of being performed) does not apply to a domestic arbitration agreement.
- (2) On an application under that section in relation to a domestic arbitration agreement the court shall grant a stay unless satisfied—
  - (a) that the arbitration agreement is null and void, inoperative, or incapable of being performed, or
  - (b) that there are other sufficient grounds for not requiring the parties to abide by the arbitration agreement.
- (3) The court may treat as a sufficient ground under subsection (2)(b) the fact that the applicant is or was at any material time not ready and willing to do all things necessary for the proper conduct of the arbitration or of any other dispute resolution procedures required to be exhausted before resorting to arbitration.
- (4) For the purposes of this section the question whether an arbitration agreement is a domestic arbitration agreement shall be determined by reference to the facts at the time the legal proceedings are commenced.

PROSPECTIVE

87 Effectiveness of agreement to exclude court’s jurisdiction.

- (1) In the case of a domestic arbitration agreement any agreement to exclude the jurisdiction of the court under—
  - (a) section 45 (determination of preliminary point of law), or
  - (b) section 69 (challenging the award: appeal on point of law),is not effective unless entered into after the commencement of the arbitral proceedings in which the question arises or the award is made.
- (2) For this purpose the commencement of the arbitral proceedings has the same meaning as in Part I (see section 14).

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

- (3) For the purposes of this section the question whether an arbitration agreement is a domestic arbitration agreement shall be determined by reference to the facts at the time the agreement is entered into.

88 Power to repeal or amend sections 85 to 87.

- (1) The Secretary of State may by order repeal or amend the provisions of sections 85 to 87.
- (2) An order under this section may contain such supplementary, incidental and transitional provisions as appear to the Secretary of State to be appropriate.
- (3) An order under this section shall be made by statutory instrument and no such order shall be made unless a draft of it has been laid before and approved by a resolution of each House of Parliament.

Consumer arbitration agreements

89 Application of unfair terms regulations to consumer arbitration agreements.

- (1) The following sections extend the application of [F<sup>2</sup>Part 2 (unfair terms) of the Consumer Rights Act 2015] in relation to a term which constitutes an arbitration agreement.

For this purpose “arbitration agreement” means an agreement to submit to arbitration present or future disputes or differences (whether or not contractual).

- [F<sup>3</sup>(2) In those sections “the Part” means Part 2 (unfair terms) of the Consumer Rights Act 2015.]

- (3) Those sections apply whatever the law applicable to the arbitration agreement.

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

- F2 Words in s. 89(1) substituted (1.10.2015) by Consumer Rights Act 2015 \(c. 15\), s. 100(5), Sch. 4 para. 31\(2\); S.I. 2015/1630, art. 3(g) (with art. 6(1))
- F3 S. 89(2) substituted (1.10.2015) by Consumer Rights Act 2015 \(c. 15\), s. 100(5), Sch. 4 para. 31\(3\); S.I. 2015/1630, art. 3(g) (with art. 6(1))

[F<sup>4</sup>90 Part applies where consumer is a legal person

The Part applies where the consumer is a legal person as it applies where the consumer is an individual.]

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

- F4 S. 90 substituted (1.10.2015) by Consumer Rights Act 2015 \(c. 15\), s. 100(5), Sch. 4 para. 32; S.I. 2015/1630, art. 3(g) (with art. 6(1))

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

91 Arbitration agreement unfair where modest amount sought.

- (1) A term which constitutes an arbitration agreement is unfair for the purposes of the <sup>F5</sup>Part] so far as it relates to a claim for a pecuniary remedy which does not exceed the amount specified by order for the purposes of this section.
- (2) Orders under this section may make different provision for different cases and for different purposes.
- (3) The power to make orders under this section is exercisable—
  - (a) for England and Wales, by the Secretary of State with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor,
  - (b) for Scotland, by the Secretary of State <sup>F6</sup> . . . , and
  - (c) for Northern Ireland, by the Department of Economic Development for Northern Ireland with the concurrence of the Lord Chancellor.
- (4) Any such order for England and Wales or Scotland shall be made by statutory instrument which shall be subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of either House of Parliament.
- (5) Any such order for Northern Ireland shall be a statutory rule for the purposes of the <sup>M9</sup>Statutory Rules (Northern Ireland) Order 1979 and shall be subject to negative resolution, within the meaning of section 41(6) of the <sup>M10</sup>Interpretation Act (Northern Ireland) 1954.

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

F5 Word in s. 91(1) substituted (1.10.2015) by Consumer Rights Act 2015 \(c. 15\), s. 100(5), Sch. 4 para. 33; S.I. 2015/1630, art. 3(g) (with art. 6(1))

F6 Words in s. 91(3)(b) repealed (19.5.1999) by S.I. 1999/678, art. 6

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

C137 S. 91(3): functions of the Lord Advocate transferred (19.5.1999) to the Secretary of State by virtue of S.I. 1999/678, arts. 2(1), Sch. (with art. 7)

Commencement Information

II S. 91 wholly in force 31.1.1997: S. 91 not in force at Royal Assent see s. 109(1); S. 91 in force for certain purposes only at 17.12.1996 otherwise in force at 31.1.1997 by S.I.1996/3146, arts. 2, 3, Sch. 1;

Marginal Citations

M9 S.I. 1979/1573 \(N.I. 12\).

M10 1954 c. 33 \(N.I.\).

Small claims arbitration in the county court

92 Exclusion of Part I in relation to small claims arbitration in the county court.

Nothing in Part I of this Act applies to arbitration under section 64 of the <sup>M11</sup>County Courts Act 1984.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

Annotations:

Marginal Citations

M11 1984 c. 28.

Appointment of judges as arbitrators

93 Appointment of judges as arbitrators.

- (1) [<sup>F7</sup>An eligible High Court judge] or an official referee may, if in all the circumstances he thinks fit, accept appointment as a sole arbitrator or as umpire by or by virtue of an arbitration agreement.
  - (2) [<sup>F8</sup>An eligible High Court judge] shall not do so unless the Lord Chief Justice has informed him that, having regard to the state of business in the High Court and the Crown Court, he can be made available.
  - (3) An official referee shall not do so unless the Lord Chief Justice has informed him that, having regard to the state of official referees' business, he can be made available.
  - (4) The fees payable for the services of [<sup>F9</sup>an eligible High Court judge] or official referee as arbitrator or umpire shall be taken in the High Court.
- [<sup>F10</sup>(4A) The Lord Chief Justice may nominate a senior judge (as defined in section 109(5) of the Constitutional Reform Act 2005) to exercise functions of the Lord Chief Justice under this section.]
- (5) In this section—
    - “arbitration agreement” has the same meaning as in Part I; <sup>F11</sup> ...
    - [<sup>F12</sup>“eligible High Court judge” means—
    - (a) a puisne judge of the High Court, or
    - (b) a person acting as a judge of the High Court under or by virtue of section 9(1) of the Senior Courts Act 1981;]
    - “official referee” means a person nominated under section 68(1)(a) of the <sup>M12</sup>[<sup>F13</sup>Senior Courts Act 1981]<sup>F13</sup> to deal with official referees' business.
  - (6) The provisions of Part I of this Act apply to arbitration before a person appointed under this section with the modifications specified in Schedule 2.

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

- F7 Words in s. 93(1) substituted (20.2.2019) by Courts and Tribunals \(Judiciary and Functions of Staff\) Act 2018 \(c. 33\), ss. 1\(6\)\(a\), 4(2)
- F8 Words in s. 93(2) substituted (20.2.2019) by Courts and Tribunals \(Judiciary and Functions of Staff\) Act 2018 \(c. 33\), ss. 1\(6\)\(a\), 4(2)
- F9 Words in s. 93(4) substituted (20.2.2019) by Courts and Tribunals \(Judiciary and Functions of Staff\) Act 2018 \(c. 33\), ss. 1\(6\)\(b\), 4(2)
- F10 S. 93(4A) inserted (20.2.2019) by Courts and Tribunals \(Judiciary and Functions of Staff\) Act 2018 \(c. 33\), ss. 1\(6\)\(c\), 4(2)
- F11 Word in s. 93(5) omitted (20.2.2019) by virtue of Courts and Tribunals \(Judiciary and Functions of Staff\) Act 2018 \(c. 33\), ss. 1\(6\)\(d\)\(i\), 4(2)

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

F12 Words in s. 93(5) inserted (20.2.2019) by Courts and Tribunals \(Judiciary and Functions of Staff\) Act 2018 \(c. 33\), ss. 1(6)(d)(ii), 4(2)

F13 Words in s. 93(5) substituted (1.10.2009) by Constitutional Reform Act 2005 \(c. 4\), ss. 59(5), 148(1), Sch. 11 para. 1(2); S.I. 2009/1604, art. 2(d)

Marginal Citations

M12 1981 c. 54.

Statutory arbitrations

94 Application of Part I to statutory arbitrations.

- (1) The provisions of Part I apply to every arbitration under an enactment (a “statutory arbitration”), whether the enactment was passed or made before or after the commencement of this Act, subject to the adaptations and exclusions specified in sections 95 to 98.
- (2) The provisions of Part I do not apply to a statutory arbitration if or to the extent that their application—
  - (a) is inconsistent with the provisions of the enactment concerned, with any rules or procedure authorised or recognised by it, or
  - (b) is excluded by any other enactment.
- (3) In this section and the following provisions of this Part “enactment”—
  - (a) in England and Wales, includes an enactment contained in subordinate legislation within the meaning of the <sup>M13</sup>Interpretation Act 1978;
  - (b) in Northern Ireland, means a statutory provision within the meaning of section 1(f) of the <sup>M14</sup>Interpretation Act (Northern Ireland) 1954.

Annotations:

Modifications etc. (not altering text)

C138 S. 94 modified (W.) (15.2.2006) by The Valuation Tribunals \(Wales\) Regulations 2005 \(S.I. 2005/3364\), regs. 1(4), 42(2)

Marginal Citations

M13 1978 c. 30.

M14 1954 c. 33 (N.I.).

95 General adaptation of provisions in relation to statutory arbitrations.

- (1) The provisions of Part I apply to a statutory arbitration—
  - (a) as if the arbitration were pursuant to an arbitration agreement and as if the enactment were that agreement, and
  - (b) as if the persons by and against whom a claim subject to arbitration in pursuance of the enactment may be or has been made were parties to that agreement.
- (2) Every statutory arbitration shall be taken to have its seat in England and Wales or, as the case may be, in Northern Ireland.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

96 Specific adaptations of provisions in relation to statutory arbitrations.

- (1) The following provisions of Part I apply to a statutory arbitration with the following adaptations.
- (2) In section 30(1) (competence of tribunal to rule on its own jurisdiction), the reference in paragraph (a) to whether there is a valid arbitration agreement shall be construed as a reference to whether the enactment applies to the dispute or difference in question.
- (3) Section 35 (consolidation of proceedings and concurrent hearings) applies only so as to authorise the consolidation of proceedings, or concurrent hearings in proceedings, under the same enactment.
- (4) Section 46 (rules applicable to substance of dispute) applies with the omission of subsection (1)(b) (determination in accordance with considerations agreed by parties).

97 Provisions excluded from applying to statutory arbitrations.

The following provisions of Part I do not apply in relation to a statutory arbitration—

- (a) section 8 (whether agreement discharged by death of a party);
- (b) section 12 (power of court to extend agreed time limits);
- (c) sections 9(5), 10(2) and 71(4) (restrictions on effect of provision that award condition precedent to right to bring legal proceedings).

98 Power to make further provision by regulations.

- (1) The Secretary of State may make provision by regulations for adapting or excluding any provision of Part I in relation to statutory arbitrations in general or statutory arbitrations of any particular description.
- (2) The power is exercisable whether the enactment concerned is passed or made before or after the commencement of this Act.
- (3) Regulations under this section shall be made by statutory instrument which shall be subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of either House of Parliament.

PART III

RECOGNITION AND ENFORCEMENT OF CERTAIN FOREIGN AWARDS

Enforcement of Geneva Convention awards

99 Continuation of Part II of the Arbitration Act 1950.

Part II of the <sup>M15</sup>Arbitration Act 1950 (enforcement of certain foreign awards) continues to apply in relation to foreign awards within the meaning of that Part which are not also New York Convention awards.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

Annotations:

Marginal Citations

M15 1950 c. 27.

Recognition and enforcement of New York Convention awards

100 New York Convention awards.

- (1) In this Part a “New York Convention award” means an award made, in pursuance of an arbitration agreement, in the territory of a state (other than the United Kingdom) which is a party to the New York Convention.
- (2) For the purposes of subsection (1) and of the provisions of this Part relating to such awards—
  - (a) “arbitration agreement” means an arbitration agreement in writing, and
  - (b) an award shall be treated as made at the seat of the arbitration, regardless of where it was signed, despatched or delivered to any of the parties.

In this subsection “agreement in writing” and “seat of the arbitration” have the same meaning as in Part I.

- (3) If Her Majesty by Order in Council declares that a state specified in the Order is a party to the New York Convention, or is a party in respect of any territory so specified, the Order shall, while in force, be conclusive evidence of that fact.
- (4) In this section “the New York Convention” means the Convention on the Recognition and Enforcement of Foreign Arbitral Awards adopted by the United Nations Conference on International Commercial Arbitration on 10th June 1958.

101 Recognition and enforcement of awards.

- (1) A New York Convention award shall be recognised as binding on the persons as between whom it was made, and may accordingly be relied on by those persons by way of defence, set-off or otherwise in any legal proceedings in England and Wales or Northern Ireland.
- (2) A New York Convention award may, by leave of the court, be enforced in the same manner as a judgment or order of the court to the same effect.

As to the meaning of “the court” see section 105.

- (3) Where leave is so given, judgment may be entered in terms of the award.

102 Evidence to be produced by party seeking recognition or enforcement.

- (1) A party seeking the recognition or enforcement of a New York Convention award must produce—
  - (a) the duly authenticated original award or a duly certified copy of it, and
  - (b) the original arbitration agreement or a duly certified copy of it.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

- (2) If the award or agreement is in a foreign language, the party must also produce a translation of it certified by an official or sworn translator or by a diplomatic or consular agent.

103 Refusal of recognition or enforcement.

- (1) Recognition or enforcement of a New York Convention award shall not be refused except in the following cases.
- (2) Recognition or enforcement of the award may be refused if the person against whom it is invoked proves—
- (a) that a party to the arbitration agreement was (under the law applicable to him) under some incapacity;
  - (b) that the arbitration agreement was not valid under the law to which the parties subjected it or, failing any indication thereon, under the law of the country where the award was made;
  - (c) that he was not given proper notice of the appointment of the arbitrator or of the arbitration proceedings or was otherwise unable to present his case;
  - (d) that the award deals with a difference not contemplated by or not falling within the terms of the submission to arbitration or contains decisions on matters beyond the scope of the submission to arbitration (but see subsection (4));
  - (e) that the composition of the arbitral tribunal or the arbitral procedure was not in accordance with the agreement of the parties or, failing such agreement, with the law of the country in which the arbitration took place;
  - (f) that the award has not yet become binding on the parties, or has been set aside or suspended by a competent authority of the country in which, or under the law of which, it was made.
- (3) Recognition or enforcement of the award may also be refused if the award is in respect of a matter which is not capable of settlement by arbitration, or if it would be contrary to public policy to recognise or enforce the award.
- (4) An award which contains decisions on matters not submitted to arbitration may be recognised or enforced to the extent that it contains decisions on matters submitted to arbitration which can be separated from those on matters not so submitted.
- (5) Where an application for the setting aside or suspension of the award has been made to such a competent authority as is mentioned in subsection (2)(f), the court before which the award is sought to be relied upon may, if it considers it proper, adjourn the decision on the recognition or enforcement of the award.

It may also on the application of the party claiming recognition or enforcement of the award order the other party to give suitable security.

104 Saving for other bases of recognition or enforcement.

Nothing in the preceding provisions of this Part affects any right to rely upon or enforce a New York Convention award at common law or under section 66.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

PART IV

GENERAL PROVISIONS

105 Meaning of “the court”: jurisdiction of High Court and county court.

- (1) In this Act “the court” [<sup>F14</sup> in relation to England and Wales means the High Court or the county court and in relation to Northern Ireland ] means the High Court or a county court, subject to the following provisions.
- (2) The Lord Chancellor may by order make provision—
  - [<sup>F15</sup>(za) allocating proceedings under this Act in England and Wales to the High Court or the county court;]
  - (a) allocating proceedings under this Act [<sup>F16</sup> in Northern Ireland ] to the High Court or to county courts; or
  - (b) specifying proceedings under this Act which may be commenced or taken only in the High Court or in [<sup>F17</sup> the county court or (as the case may be) ] a county court.
- (3) The Lord Chancellor may by order make provision requiring proceedings of any specified description under this Act in relation to which a county court [<sup>F18</sup> in Northern Ireland ] has jurisdiction to be commenced or taken in one or more specified county courts.

Any jurisdiction so exercisable by a specified county court is exercisable throughout [<sup>F19</sup> ... Northern Ireland.

- [<sup>F20</sup>(3A) The Lord Chancellor must consult the Lord Chief Justice of England and Wales or the Lord Chief Justice of Northern Ireland (as the case may be) before making an order under this section.
- (3B) The Lord Chief Justice of England and Wales may nominate a judicial office holder (as defined in section 109(4) of the Constitutional Reform Act 2005) to exercise his functions under this section.
- (3C) The Lord Chief Justice of Northern Ireland may nominate any of the following to exercise his functions under this section—
  - (a) the holder of one of the offices listed in Schedule 1 to the Justice (Northern Ireland) Act 2002;
  - (b) a Lord Justice of Appeal (as defined in section 88 of that Act).]
- [<sup>F20</sup>(4) An order under this section—
  - (a) may differentiate between categories of proceedings by reference to such criteria as the Lord Chancellor sees fit to specify, and
  - (b) may make such incidental or transitional provision as the Lord Chancellor considers necessary or expedient.
- (5) An order under this section for England and Wales shall be made by statutory instrument which shall be subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of either House of Parliament.
- (6) An order under this section for Northern Ireland shall be a statutory rule for the purposes of the [<sup>M16</sup>Statutory Rules (Northern Ireland) Order 1979 which shall be subject to <sup>F21</sup>negative resolution (within the meaning of section 41(6) of the Interpretation Act (Northern Ireland) 1954)].

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.
Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

- F14 Words in s. 105(1) inserted (22.4.2014) by Crime and Courts Act 2013 \(c. 22\), s. 61(3), Sch. 9 para. 60\(2\)\(a\); S.I. 2014/954, art. 2(c) (with art. 3) (with transitional provisions and savings in S.I. 2014/956, arts. 3-11)
- F15 S. 105(2)(za) inserted (22.4.2014) by Crime and Courts Act 2013 \(c. 22\), s. 61(3), Sch. 9 para. 60\(2\)\(b\); S.I. 2014/954, art. 2(c) (with art. 3) (with transitional provisions and savings in S.I. 2014/956, arts. 3-11)
- F16 Words in s. 105(2)(a) inserted (22.4.2014) by Crime and Courts Act 2013 \(c. 22\), s. 61(3), Sch. 9 para. 60\(2\)\(c\); S.I. 2014/954, art. 2(c) (with art. 3) (with transitional provisions and savings in S.I. 2014/956, arts. 3-11)
- F17 Words in s. 105(2)(b) inserted (22.4.2014) by Crime and Courts Act 2013 \(c. 22\), s. 61(3), Sch. 9 para. 60\(2\)\(d\); S.I. 2014/954, art. 2(c) (with art. 3) (with transitional provisions and savings in S.I. 2014/956, arts. 3-11)
- F18 Words in s. 105(3) inserted (22.4.2014) by Crime and Courts Act 2013 \(c. 22\), s. 61(3), Sch. 9 para. 60\(2\)\(e\); S.I. 2014/954, art. 2(c) (with art. 3) (with transitional provisions and savings in S.I. 2014/956, arts. 3-11)
- F19 Words in s. 105(3) omitted (22.4.2014) by virtue of Crime and Courts Act 2013 \(c. 22\), s. 61(3), Sch. 9 para. 60\(2\)\(f\); S.I. 2014/954, art. 2(c) (with art. 3) (with transitional provisions and savings in S.I. 2014/956, arts. 3-11)
- F20 S. 105(3A)-(3C) inserted (3.4.2006) by Constitutional Reform Act 2005 \(c. 4\), ss. 15(1), 148, Sch. 4 para. 250; S.I. 2006/1014, art. 2(a), Sch. 1 para. 11(v)
- F21 Words in s. 105(6) substituted (12.4.2010) by The Northern Ireland Act 1998 \(Devolution of Policing and Justice Functions\) Order 2010 \(S.I. 2010/976\), art. 15(5), Sch. 18 para. 50\(2\) (with arts. 28-31)

Marginal Citations

- M16 S.I. 1979/1573 \(N.I. 12\).

106 Crown application.

- (1) Part I of this Act applies to any arbitration agreement to which Her Majesty, either in right of the Crown or of the Duchy of Lancaster or otherwise, or the Duke of Cornwall, is a party.
- (2) Where Her Majesty is party to an arbitration agreement otherwise than in right of the Crown, Her Majesty shall be represented for the purposes of any arbitral proceedings
  - (a) where the agreement was entered into by Her Majesty in right of the Duchy of Lancaster, by the Chancellor of the Duchy or such person as he may appoint, and
  - (b) in any other case, by such person as Her Majesty may appoint in writing under the Royal Sign Manual.
- (3) Where the Duke of Cornwall is party to an arbitration agreement, he shall be represented for the purposes of any arbitral proceedings by such person as he may appoint.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

- (4) References in Part I to a party or the parties to the arbitration agreement or to arbitral proceedings shall be construed, where subsection (2) or (3) applies, as references to the person representing Her Majesty or the Duke of Cornwall.

107 Consequential amendments and repeals.

- (1) The enactments specified in Schedule 3 are amended in accordance with that Schedule, the amendments being consequential on the provisions of this Act.
- (2) The enactments specified in Schedule 4 are repealed to the extent specified.

Annotations:

Commencement Information

- I2 S. 107 wholly in force 31.1.1997; S. 107 not in force at Royal Assent see s. 109(1); S. 107 in force for certain purposes at 17.12.1996 and otherwise in force at 31.1.1997 by S.I. 1996/3146, arts. 2, 3, Sch. 1

108 Extent.

- (1) The provisions of this Act extend to England and Wales and, except as mentioned below, to Northern Ireland.
- (2) The following provisions of Part II do not extend to Northern Ireland—section 92 (exclusion of Part I in relation to small claims arbitration in the county court), and section 93 and Schedule 2 (appointment of judges as arbitrators).
- (3) Sections 89, 90 and 91 (consumer arbitration agreements) extend to Scotland and the provisions of Schedules 3 and 4 (consequential amendments and repeals) extend to Scotland so far as they relate to enactments which so extend, subject as follows.
- (4) The repeal of the <sup>M17</sup>Arbitration Act 1975 extends only to England and Wales and Northern Ireland.

Annotations:

Marginal Citations

- M17 1975 c. 3.

109 Commencement.

- (1) The provisions of this Act come into force on such day as the Secretary of State may appoint by order made by statutory instrument, and different days may be appointed for different purposes.
- (2) An order under subsection (1) may contain such transitional provisions as appear to the Secretary of State to be appropriate.

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

Annotations:

---

Subordinate Legislation Made

- P1 S. 109 power partly exercised (16.12.1996): 17.12.1996 and 31.1.1997 appointed for specified provisions by S.I. 1996/3146, arts. 2, 3 (with transitional provisions in art. 4, Sch. 2)

110 Short title.

This Act may be cited as the Arbitration Act 1996.

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

SCHEDULES

SCHEDULE 1

Section 4(1).

MANDATORY PROVISIONS OF PART I

sections 9 to 11 (stay of legal proceedings); section 12 (power of court to extend agreed time limits);
section 13 (application of Limitation Acts);
section 24 (power of court to remove arbitrator);
section 26(1) (effect of death of arbitrator);
section 28 (liability of parties for fees and expenses of arbitrators);
section 29 (immunity of arbitrator);
section 31 (objection to substantive jurisdiction of tribunal);
section 32 (determination of preliminary point of jurisdiction);
section 33 (general duty of tribunal);
section 37(2) (items to be treated as expenses of arbitrators);
section 40 (general duty of parties);
section 43 (securing the attendance of witnesses);
section 56 (power to withhold award in case of non-payment);
section 60 (effectiveness of agreement for payment of costs in any event);
section 66 (enforcement of award);
sections 67 and 68 (challenging the award: substantive jurisdiction and serious irregularity), and sections 70 and 71 (supplementary provisions; effect of order of court) so far as relating to those sections;
section 72 (saving for rights of person who takes no part in proceedings);
section 73 (loss of right to object);
section 74 (immunity of arbitral institutions, &c.);
section 75 (charge to secure payment of solicitors' costs).

SCHEDULE 2

Section 93(6).

MODIFICATIONS OF PART I IN RELATION TO JUDGE-ARBITRATORS

Introductory

- 1 In this Schedule “judge-arbitrator” means [<sup>F22</sup>an eligible High Court judge] or official referee appointed as arbitrator or umpire under section 93.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

- F22 Words in Sch. 2 para. 1 substituted (20.2.2019) by Courts and Tribunals \(Judiciary and Functions of Staff\) Act 2018 \(c. 33\), ss. 1\(7\), 4\(2\)

General

- 2 (1) Subject to the following provisions of this Schedule, references in Part I to the court shall be construed in relation to a judge-arbitrator, or in relation to the appointment of a judge-arbitrator, as references to the Court of Appeal.
- (2) The references in sections 32(6), 45(6) and 69(8) to the Court of Appeal shall in such a case be construed as references to the [<sup>F23</sup>Supreme Court]<sup>F23</sup>.

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

- F23 Words in Sch. 2 para. 2\(2\) substituted (1.10.2009) by Constitutional Reform Act 2005 \(c. 4\), ss. 40\(4\), 148, Sch. 9 para. 60; S.I. 2009/1604, art. 2\(d\)

Arbitrator's fees

- 3 (1) The power of the court in section 28(2) to order consideration and adjustment of the liability of a party for the fees of an arbitrator may be exercised by a judge-arbitrator.
- (2) Any such exercise of the power is subject to the powers of the Court of Appeal under sections 24(4) and 25(3)(b) (directions as to entitlement to fees or expenses in case of removal or resignation).

Exercise of court powers in support of arbitration

- 4 (1) Where the arbitral tribunal consists of or includes a judge-arbitrator the powers of the court under sections 42 to 44 (enforcement of peremptory orders, summoning witnesses, and other court powers) are exercisable by the High Court and also by the judge-arbitrator himself.
- (2) Anything done by a judge-arbitrator in the exercise of those powers shall be regarded as done by him in his capacity as judge of the High Court and have effect as if done by that court.

Nothing in this sub-paragraph prejudices any power vested in him as arbitrator or umpire.

Extension of time for making award

- 5 (1) The power conferred by section 50 (extension of time for making award) is exercisable by the judge-arbitrator himself.
- (2) Any appeal from a decision of a judge-arbitrator under that section lies to the Court of Appeal with the leave of that court.

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

Withholding award in case of non-payment

- 6 (1) The provisions of paragraph 7 apply in place of the provisions of section 56 (power to withhold award in the case of non-payment) in relation to the withholding of an award for non-payment of the fees and expenses of a judge-arbitrator.
- (2) This does not affect the application of section 56 in relation to the delivery of such an award by an arbitral or other institution or person vested by the parties with powers in relation to the delivery of the award.
- 7 (1) A judge-arbitrator may refuse to deliver an award except upon payment of the fees and expenses mentioned in section 56(1).
- (2) The judge-arbitrator may, on an application by a party to the arbitral proceedings, order that if he pays into the High Court the fees and expenses demanded, or such lesser amount as the judge-arbitrator may specify—
- (a) the award shall be delivered,
  - (b) the amount of the fees and expenses properly payable shall be determined by such means and upon such terms as he may direct, and
  - (c) out of the money paid into court there shall be paid out such fees and expenses as may be found to be properly payable and the balance of the money (if any) shall be paid out to the applicant.
- (3) For this purpose the amount of fees and expenses properly payable is the amount the applicant is liable to pay under section 28 or any agreement relating to the payment of the arbitrator.
- (4) No application to the judge-arbitrator under this paragraph may be made where there is any available arbitral process for appeal or review of the amount of the fees or expenses demanded.
- (5) Any appeal from a decision of a judge-arbitrator under this paragraph lies to the Court of Appeal with the leave of that court.
- (6) Where a party to arbitral proceedings appeals under sub-paragraph (5), an arbitrator is entitled to appear and be heard.

Correction of award or additional award

- 8 Subsections (4) to (6) of section 57 (correction of award or additional award: time limit for application or exercise of power) do not apply to a judge-arbitrator.

Costs

- 9 Where the arbitral tribunal consists of or includes a judge-arbitrator the powers of the court under section 63(4) (determination of recoverable costs) shall be exercised by the High Court.
- 10 (1) The power of the court under section 64 to determine an arbitrator's reasonable fees and expenses may be exercised by a judge-arbitrator.
- (2) Any such exercise of the power is subject to the powers of the Court of Appeal under sections 24(4) and 25(3)(b) (directions as to entitlement to fees or expenses in case of removal or resignation).

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

Enforcement of award

- 11 The leave of the court required by section 66 (enforcement of award) may in the case of an award of a judge-arbitrator be given by the judge-arbitrator himself.

Solicitors' costs

- 12 The powers of the court to make declarations and orders under the provisions applied by section 75 (power to charge property recovered in arbitral proceedings with the payment of solicitors' costs) may be exercised by the judge-arbitrator.

Powers of court in relation to service of documents

- 13 (1) The power of the court under section 77(2) (powers of court in relation to service of documents) is exercisable by the judge-arbitrator.
- (2) Any appeal from a decision of a judge-arbitrator under that section lies to the Court of Appeal with the leave of that court.

Powers of court to extend time limits relating to arbitral proceedings

- 14 (1) The power conferred by section 79 (power of court to extend time limits relating to arbitral proceedings) is exercisable by the judge-arbitrator himself.
- (2) Any appeal from a decision of a judge-arbitrator under that section lies to the Court of Appeal with the leave of that court.

SCHEDULE 3

Section 107(1).

CONSEQUENTIAL AMENDMENTS

Merchant Shipping Act 1894 (c. 60)

- 1 In section 496 of the Merchant Shipping Act 1894 (provisions as to deposits by owners of goods), after subsection (4) insert—

“(5) In subsection (3) the expression “legal proceedings” includes arbitral proceedings and as respects England and Wales and Northern Ireland the provisions of section 14 of the Arbitration Act 1996 apply to determine when such proceedings are commenced.”.

Stannaries Court (Abolition) Act 1896 (c. 45)

- 2 In section 4(1) of the Stannaries Court (Abolition) Act 1896 (references of certain disputes to arbitration), for the words from “tried before” to “any such reference” substitute “referred to arbitration before himself or before an arbitrator agreed on by the parties or an officer of the court”.

Tithe Act 1936 (c. 43)

- 3 F24 .....

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

F24 Sch. 3 para. 3 repealed (22.7.2004) by Statute Law (Repeals) Act 2004 (c. 14), s. 1(1), {Sch. 1 Pt. 6 Group 3}

Education Act 1944 (c.31)

F25 4 .....

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

F25 Sch. 3 para. 4 repealed (1.11.1996) by 1996 c. 56, ss. 582(2)(3), 583(2), Sch. 38 Pt. I, Sch. 39 (with s. 1(4))

Commonwealth Telegraphs Act 1949 (c.39)

5 In section 8(2) of the Commonwealth Telegraphs Act 1949 (proceedings of referees under the Act) for “the Arbitration Acts 1889 to 1934, or the Arbitration Act (Northern Ireland) 1937,” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.

Lands Tribunal Act 1949 (c.42)

6 F26 .....

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

F26 Sch. 3 para. 6 repealed (1.6.2009) by The Transfer of Tribunal Functions (Lands Tribunal and Miscellaneous Amendments) Order 2009 (S.I. 2009/1307), art. 5(5), Sch. 4 (with Sch. 5)

Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949 (c.54)

7 F27 .....

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

F27 Sch. 3 para. 7 repealed (25.7.2003) by Communications Act 2003 (c. 21), ss. 406, 411(2)(3), Sch. 19(1) (with Schs. 18, 19(1) Note 1); S.I. 2003/1900, art. 2(1), Sch. 1 (with arts. 3-6)

Patents Act 1949 (c.87)

8 In section 67 of the Patents Act 1949 (proceedings as to infringement of pre-1978 patents referred to comptroller), for “The Arbitration Acts 1889 to 1934” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

National Health Service (Amendment) Act 1949 (c.93)

- 9 In section 7(8) of the <sup>M18</sup>National Health Service (Amendment) Act 1949 (arbitration in relation to hardship arising from the National Health Service Act 1946 or the Act), for “the Arbitration Acts 1889 to 1934” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ” and for “the said Acts” substitute “ Part I of that Act ”.

Annotations:

Marginal Citations

M18 1946 c. 81.

Arbitration Act 1950 (c.27)

- 10 In section 36(1) of the Arbitration Act 1950 (effect of foreign awards enforceable under Part II of that Act) for “section 26 of this Act” substitute “ section 66 of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.

Interpretation Act (Northern Ireland) 1954 (c.33 (N.I.))

- 11 In section 46(2) of the Interpretation Act (Northern Ireland) 1954 (miscellaneous definitions), for the definition of “arbitrator” substitute—““arbitrator” has the same meaning as in Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996;”.

Agricultural Marketing Act 1958 (c.47)

- 12 In section 12(1) of the Agricultural Marketing Act 1958 (application of provisions of Arbitration Act 1950)—
- (a) for the words from the beginning to “shall apply” substitute “ Sections 45 and 69 of the Arbitration Act 1996 (which relate to the determination by the court of questions of law) and section 66 of that Act (enforcement of awards) apply ”; and
  - (b) for “an arbitration” substitute “ arbitral proceedings ”.

Carriage by Air Act 1961 (c.27)

- 13 (1) The Carriage by Air Act 1961 is amended as follows.
- (2) In section 5(3) (time for bringing proceedings)—
- (a) for “an arbitration” in the first place where it occurs substitute “ arbitral proceedings ”; and
  - (b) for the words from “and subsections (3) and (4)” to the end substitute “ and the provisions of section 14 of the Arbitration Act 1996 apply to determine when such proceedings are commenced. ”.
- (3) In section 11(c) (application of section 5 to Scotland)—
- (a) for “subsections (3) and (4)” substitute “ the provisions of section 14 of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”; and
  - (b) for “an arbitration” substitute “ arbitral proceedings ”.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

Factories Act 1961 (c.34)

- 14 In the Factories Act 1961, for section 171 (application of Arbitration Act 1950), substitute—

“171 Application of the Arbitration Act 1996.

Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 does not apply to proceedings under this Act except in so far as it may be applied by regulations made under this Act.”.

Clergy Pensions Measure 1961 (No. 3)

- 15 In the Clergy Pensions Measure 1961, section 38(4) (determination of questions), for the words “The Arbitration Act 1950” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.

Transport Act 1962 (c.46)

- 16 (1) The Transport Act 1962 is amended as follows.
- (2) In section 74(6)(f) (proceedings before referees in pension disputes), for the words “the Arbitration Act 1950” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.
- (3) In section 81(7) (proceedings before referees in compensation disputes), for the words “the Arbitration Act 1950” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.
- (4) In Schedule 7, Part IV (pensions), in paragraph 17(5) for the words “the Arbitration Act 1950” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.

Corn Rents Act 1963 (c.14)

- 17 In the Corn Rents Act 1963, section 1(5) (schemes for apportioning corn rents, &c.), for the words “the Arbitration Act 1950” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.

Plant Varieties and Seeds Act 1964 (c.14)

- F28 18 .....

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

F28 Sch. 3 para. 18 repealed (8.5.1998) by 1997 c. 66, s. 52, Sch. 4; S.I. 1998/1028, art. 2

Lands Tribunal and Compensation Act (Northern Ireland) 1964 (c.29 (N.I.))

- 19 In section 9 of the Lands Tribunal and Compensation Act (Northern Ireland) 1964 (proceedings of Lands Tribunal), in subsection (3) (where Tribunal acts as arbitrator) for “the Arbitration Act (Northern Ireland) 1937” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

Industrial and Provident Societies Act 1965 (c.12)

F29 20 .....

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

F29 Sch. 3 para. 20 repealed (1.8.2014) by Co-operative and Community Benefit Societies Act 2014 \(c. 14\), s. 154, Sch. 7 (with Sch. 5)

Carriage of Goods by Road Act 1965 (c.37)

- 21 In section 7(2) of the Carriage of Goods by Road Act 1965 (arbitrations: time at which deemed to commence), for paragraphs (a) and (b) substitute—
- “(a) as respects England and Wales and Northern Ireland, the provisions of section 14(3) to (5) of the Arbitration Act 1996 (which determine the time at which an arbitration is commenced) apply;”.

Factories Act (Northern Ireland) 1965 (c.20 (N.I.))

- 22 In section 171 of the Factories Act (Northern Ireland) 1965 (application of Arbitration Act), for “The Arbitration Act (Northern Ireland) 1937” substitute “Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996”.

Commonwealth Secretariat Act 1966 (c.10)

23 F30 .....

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

F30 Sch. 3 para. 23 omitted (7.6.2005) by virtue of International Organisations Act 2005 \(c. 20\), ss. 1\(2\), 11(with s. 1(3)); S.I. 2005/1870, art. 2 and said provision repealed (prosp.) by International Organisations Act 2005 \(c. 20\), s. 9, Sch.

Arbitration (International Investment Disputes) Act 1966 (c.41)

- 24 In the Arbitration (International Investment Disputes) Act 1966, for section 3 (application of Arbitration Act 1950 and other enactments) substitute—

“3 Application of provisions of Arbitration Act 1996.

- (1) The Lord Chancellor may by order direct that any of the provisions contained in sections 36 and 38 to 44 of the Arbitration Act 1996 (provisions concerning the conduct of arbitral proceedings, &c.) shall apply to such proceedings pursuant to the Convention as are specified in the order with or without any modifications or exceptions specified in the order.
- (2) Subject to subsection (1), the Arbitration Act 1996 shall not apply to proceedings pursuant to the Convention, but this subsection shall not be

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details) taken as affecting section 9 of that Act (stay of legal proceedings in respect of matter subject to arbitration).

---

- (3) An order made under this section—
- (a) may be varied or revoked by a subsequent order so made, and
  - (b) shall be contained in a statutory instrument.”.

Poultry Improvement Act (Northern Ireland) 1968 (c.12 (N.I.))

- 25 In paragraph 10(4) of the Schedule to the Poultry Improvement Act (Northern Ireland) 1968 (reference of disputes), for “The Arbitration Act (Northern Ireland) 1937” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.

Industrial and Provident Societies Act (Northern Ireland) 1969 (c.24 (N.I.))

- 26 (1) Section 69 of the Industrial and Provident Societies Act (Northern Ireland) 1969 (decision of disputes) is amended as follows.

- (2) In subsection (7) (decision of disputes)—
- (a) in the opening words, omit the words from “and without prejudice” to “1937”;
  - (b) at the beginning of paragraph (a) insert “ without prejudice to any powers exercisable by virtue of Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996, ”; and
  - (c) in paragraph (b) omit “the registrar or” and “registrar or” and for the words from “as might have been granted by the High Court” to the end substitute “ as might be granted by the registrar ”.

- (3) For subsection (8) substitute—

“(8) The court or registrar to whom any dispute is referred under subsections (2) to (6) may at the request of either party state a case on any question of law arising in the dispute for the opinion of the High Court.”.

Health and Personal Social Services (Northern Ireland) Order 1972 (N.I.14)

- 27 In Article 105(6) of the Health and Personal Social Services (Northern Ireland) Order 1972 (arbitrations under the Order), for “the Arbitration Act (Northern Ireland) 1937” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.

Consumer Credit Act 1974 (c.39)

- 28 (1) Section 146 of the Consumer Credit Act 1974 is amended as follows.
- (2) In subsection (2) (solicitor engaged in contentious business), for “section 86(1) of the Solicitors Act 1957” substitute “ section 87(1) of the Solicitors Act 1974 ”.
- (3) In subsection (4) (solicitor in Northern Ireland engaged in contentious business), for the words from “business done” to “Administration of Estates (Northern Ireland) Order 1979” substitute “ contentious business (as defined in Article 3(2) of the Solicitors (Northern Ireland) Order 1976. ”.

Friendly Societies Act 1974 (c.46)

- 29 (1) The Friendly Societies Act 1974 is amended as follows.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

(2) For section 78(1) (statement of case) substitute—

“(1) Any arbitrator, arbiter or umpire to whom a dispute falling within section 76 above is referred under the rules of a registered society or branch may at the request of either party state a case on any question of law arising in the dispute for the opinion of the High Court or, as the case may be, the Court of Session.”.

(3) In section 83(3) (procedure on objections to amalgamations &c. of friendly societies), for “the Arbitration Act 1950 or, in Northern Ireland, the Arbitration Act (Northern Ireland) 1937” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.

Industry Act 1975 (c.68)

30 In Schedule 3 to the Industry Act (arbitration of disputes relating to vesting and compensation orders), in paragraph 14 (application of certain provisions of Arbitration Acts)—

- (a) for “the Arbitration Act 1950 or, in Northern Ireland, the Arbitration Act (Northern Ireland) 1937” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”, and
 (b) for “that Act” substitute “ that Part ”.

Industrial Relations (Northern Ireland) Order 1976 (N.I.16)

<sup>F31</sup>31 .....

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

F31 Sch. 3 para. 31 repealed (24.9.1996) by S.I. 1996/1921 (N.I. 18), art. 28, Sch. 3

Aircraft and Shipbuilding Industries Act 1977 (c.3)

<sup>F32</sup>32 .....

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

F32 Sch. 3 para. 32 repealed (22.3.2013) by The Public Bodies (Abolition of the Aircraft and Shipbuilding Industries Arbitration Tribunal) Order 2013 (S.I. 2013/686), art. 1(2), Sch. 1 para. 7

Patents Act 1977 (c.37)

33 In section 130 of the Patents Act 1977 (interpretation), in subsection (8) (exclusion of Arbitration Act) for “The Arbitration Act 1950” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.

Judicature (Northern Ireland) Act 1978 (c.23)

34 (1) The Judicature (Northern Ireland) Act 1978 is amended as follows.

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

(2) In section 35(2) (restrictions on appeals to the Court of Appeal), after paragraph (f) insert—

“(fa) except as provided by Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996, from any decision of the High Court under that Part;”.

(3) In section 55(2) (rules of court) after paragraph (c) insert—

“(cc) providing for any prescribed part of the jurisdiction of the High Court in relation to the trial of any action involving matters of account to be exercised in the prescribed manner by a person agreed by the parties and for the remuneration of any such person;”.

Health and Safety at Work (Northern Ireland) Order 1978 (N.I.9)

35 In Schedule 4 to the Health and Safety at Work (Northern Ireland) Order 1978 (licensing provisions), in paragraph 3, for “The Arbitration Act (Northern Ireland) 1937” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.

County Courts (Northern Ireland) Order 1980 (N.I.3)

36 (1) The County Courts (Northern Ireland) Order 1980 is amended as follows.

(2) In Article 30 (civil jurisdiction exercisable by district judge)—

(a) for paragraph (2) substitute—

“(2) Any order, decision or determination made by a district judge under this Article (other than one made in dealing with a claim by way of arbitration under paragraph (3)) shall be embodied in a decree which for all purposes (including the right of appeal under Part VI) shall have the like effect as a decree pronounced by a county court judge.”;

(b) for paragraphs (4) and (5) substitute—

“(4) Where in any action to which paragraph (1) applies the claim is dealt with by way of arbitration under paragraph (3)—

- (a) any award made by the district judge in dealing with the claim shall be embodied in a decree which for all purposes (except the right of appeal under Part VI) shall have the like effect as a decree pronounced by a county court judge;
- (b) the district judge may, and shall if so required by the High Court, state for the determination of the High Court any question of law arising out of an award so made;
- (c) except as provided by sub-paragraph (b), any award so made shall be final; and
- (d) except as otherwise provided by county court rules, no costs shall be awarded in connection with the action.

(5) Subject to paragraph (4), county court rules may—

- (a) apply any of the provisions of Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 to arbitrations under paragraph (3) with such modifications as may be prescribed;
- (b) prescribe the rules of evidence to be followed on any arbitration under paragraph (3) and, in particular, make

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details) provision with respect to the manner of taking and questioning evidence.

(5A) Except as provided by virtue of paragraph (5)(a), Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 shall not apply to an arbitration under paragraph (3).”.

(3) After Article 61 insert—

“ Appeals from decisions under Part I of Arbitration Act 1996

61A(1) Article 61 does not apply to a decision of a county court judge made in the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred by Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996.

(2) Any party dissatisfied with a decision of the county court made in the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred by any of the following provisions of Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996, namely—

- (a) section 32 (question as to substantive jurisdiction of arbitral tribunal);
- (b) section 45 (question of law arising in course of arbitral proceedings);
- (c) section 67 (challenging award of arbitral tribunal: substantive jurisdiction);
- (d) section 68 (challenging award of arbitral tribunal: serious irregularity);
- (e) section 69 (appeal on point of law), may, subject to the provisions of that Part, appeal from that decision to the Court of Appeal.

(3) Any party dissatisfied with any decision of a county court made in the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred by any other provision of Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 may, subject to the provisions of that Part, appeal from that decision to the High Court.

(4) The decision of the Court of Appeal on an appeal under paragraph (2) shall be final.”.

Annotations:

Commencement Information

I3 Sch. 3 para. 36 wholly in force 31.1.1997: Sch. 3 para. 36 not in force at Royal Assent see s. 109\(1\); Sch. 3 para. 36 in force for certain purposes only at 17.12.1996 otherwise in force at 31.1.1997 by S.I. 1996/3146, arts. 2, 3, Sch. 1

Supreme Court Act 1981 (c.54)

37 (1) The Supreme Court Act 1981 is amended as follows.

(2) In section 18(1) (restrictions on appeals to the Court of Appeal), for paragraph (g) substitute—

“(g) except as provided by Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996, from any decision of the High Court under that Part;”.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

- (3) In section 151 (interpretation, &c.), in the definition of “arbitration agreement”, for “the Arbitration Act 1950 by virtue of section 32 of that Act;” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996; ”.

Merchant Shipping (Liner Conferences) Act 1982 (c.37)

- 38 In section 7(5) of the Merchant Shipping (Liner Conferences) Act 1982 (stay of legal proceedings), for the words from “section 4(1)” to the end substitute “ section 9 of the Arbitration Act 1996 (which also provides for the staying of legal proceedings). ”.

Agricultural Marketing (Northern Ireland) Order 1982 (N.I.12)

- 39 In Article 14 of the Agricultural Marketing (Northern Ireland) Order 1982 (application of provisions of Arbitration Act (Northern Ireland) 1937)—
- (a) for the words from the beginning to “shall apply” substitute “ Section 45 and 69 of the Arbitration Act 1996 (which relate to the determination by the court of questions of law) and section 66 of that Act (enforcement of awards) ” apply; and
  - (b) for “an arbitration” substitute “ arbitral proceedings ”.

Mental Health Act 1983 (c.20)

- 40 In section 78 of the Mental Health Act 1983 (procedure of Mental Health Review Tribunals), in subsection (9) for “The Arbitration Act 1950” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.

Registered Homes Act 1984 (c.23)

- [<sup>F33</sup>41 In section 43 of the Registered Homes Act 1984 (procedure of Registered Homes Tribunals), in subsection (3) for “The Arbitration Act 1950” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.]

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

F33 Sch. 3 para. 41 repealed (1.4.2002 for E.W.) by 2000 c. 14, ss. 117(2), 122, Sch. 6; S.I. 2001/4150, art. 3(3)(c)(xi) (subject to art. 4 and to S.I. 2002/1493, art. 4) (as amended by S.I. 2002/1493, art. 6); S.I. 2002/920, art. 3(3)(g)(ix) (subject to art. 3(4)(5), Schs. 1-3 and with art. 3(6)-(10))

Housing Act 1985 (c.68)

- 42 In section 47(3) of the Housing Act 1985 (agreement as to determination of matters relating to service charges) for “section 32 of the Arbitration Act 1950” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.

Landlord and Tenant Act 1985 (c.70)

- <sup>F34</sup>43 .....

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

F34 Sch. 3 para. 43 repealed (1.9.1997) by 1996 c. 52, s. 227, Sch. 19, Pt. III; S.I. 1997/1851, art. 1, 2

Credit Unions (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 (N.I.12)

- 44 (1) Article 72 of the Credit Unions (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 (decision of disputes) is amended as follows.
- (2) In paragraph (7)—
- (a) in the opening words, omit the words from “and without prejudice” to “1937”;
  - (b) at the beginning of sub-paragraph (a) insert “ without prejudice to any powers exercisable by virtue of Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996, ”; and
  - (c) in sub-paragraph (b) omit “the registrar or” and “registrar or” and for the words from “as might have been granted by the High Court” to the end substitute “ as might be granted by the registrar ”.
- (3) For paragraph (8) substitute—
- “(8) The court or registrar to whom any dispute is referred under paragraphs (2) to (6) may at the request of either party state a case on any question of law arising in the dispute for the opinion of the High Court.”.

Agricultural Holdings Act 1986 (c.5)

45 <sup>F35</sup> .....

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

F35 Sch. 3 para. 45 repealed (19.10.2006) by The Regulatory Reform (Agricultural Tenancies) (England and Wales) Order 2006 (S.I. 2006/2805), arts. 1(1), 18, Sch. 2 (with art. 10)

Insolvency Act 1986 (c.45)

46 In the Insolvency Act 1986, after section 349 insert—

“349A Arbitration agreements to which bankrupt is party.

- (1) This section applies where a bankrupt had become party to a contract containing an arbitration agreement before the commencement of his bankruptcy.
- (2) If the trustee in bankruptcy adopts the contract, the arbitration agreement is enforceable by or against the trustee in relation to matters arising from or connected with the contract.
- (3) If the trustee in bankruptcy does not adopt the contract and a matter to which the arbitration agreement applies requires to be determined in connection with or for the purposes of the bankruptcy proceedings—

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

- (a) the trustee with the consent of the creditors' committee, or
- (b) any other party to the agreement,

may apply to the court which may, if it thinks fit in all the circumstances of the case, order that the matter be referred to arbitration in accordance with the arbitration agreement.

(4) In this section—

“arbitration agreement” has the same meaning as in Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996; and

“the court” means the court which has jurisdiction in the bankruptcy proceedings.”.

Building Societies Act 1986 (c.53)

- 47 In Part II of Schedule 14 to the Building Societies Act 1986 (settlement of disputes: arbitration), in paragraph 5(6) for “the Arbitration Act 1950 and the Arbitration Act 1979 or, in Northern Ireland, the Arbitration Act (Northern Ireland) 1937” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.

Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986 (N.I.4)

- 48 In Article 83 of the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986 (procedure of Mental Health Review Tribunal), in paragraph (8) for “The Arbitration Act (Northern Ireland) 1937” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.

Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency Act 1988 (c.8)

- 49 For section 6 of the Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency Act 1988 (application of Arbitration Act) substitute—

“6 Application of Arbitration Act.

(1) The Lord Chancellor may by order made by statutory instrument direct that any of the provisions of sections 36 and 38 to 44 of the Arbitration Act 1996 (provisions in relation to the conduct of the arbitral proceedings, &c.) apply, with such modifications or exceptions as are specified in the order, to such arbitration proceedings pursuant to Annex II to the Convention as are specified in the order.

(2) Except as provided by an order under subsection (1) above, no provision of Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 other than section 9 (stay of legal proceedings) applies to any such proceedings.”.

Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988 (c.48)

- 50 In section 150 of the Copyright, Designs and Patents Act 1988 (Lord Chancellor's power to make rules for Copyright Tribunal), for subsection (2) substitute—

“(2) The rules may apply in relation to the Tribunal, as respects proceedings in England and Wales or Northern Ireland, any of the provisions of Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996.”.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

Fair Employment (Northern Ireland) Act 1989 (c.32)

F36 51 .....

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

F36 Sch. 3 para. 51 repealed (1.3.1999) by S.I. 1998/3162, art. 105(4), Sch. 5; S.R. 1999/81, art. 3

Limitation (Northern Ireland) Order 1989 (N.I.11)

52 In Article 2(2) of the Limitation (Northern Ireland) Order 1989 (interpretation), in the definition of “arbitration agreement”, for “the Arbitration Act (Northern Ireland) 1937” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.

Insolvency (Northern Ireland) Order 1989 (N.I.19)

53 In the Insolvency (Northern Ireland) Order 1989, after Article 320 insert—

“ Arbitration agreements to which bankrupt is party.

320A(1) This Article applies where a bankrupt had become party to a contract containing an arbitration agreement before the commencement of his bankruptcy.

(2) If the trustee in bankruptcy adopts the contract, the arbitration agreement is enforceable by or against the trustee in relation to matters arising from or connected with the contract.

(3) If the trustee in bankruptcy does not adopt the contract and a matter to which the arbitration agreement applies requires to be determined in connection with or for the purposes of the bankruptcy proceedings—

(a) the trustee with the consent of the creditors’ committee, or

(b) any other party to the agreement,

may apply to the court which may, if it thinks fit in all the circumstances of the case, order that the matter be referred to arbitration in accordance with the arbitration agreement.

(4) In this Article—

“arbitration agreement” has the same meaning as in Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996; and

“the court” means the court which has jurisdiction in the bankruptcy proceedings.”.

Social Security Administration Act 1992 (c.5)

54 In section 59 of the Social Security Administration Act 1992 (procedure for inquiries, &c.), in subsection (7), for “The Arbitration Act 1950” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

Social Security Administration (Northern Ireland) Act 1992 (c.8)

<sup>F37</sup>55 .....

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

F37 Sch. 3 para. 55 repealed (29.11.1999) by S.I. 1998/1506, art. 78(2), Sch. 7; S.R. 1999/472, art. 2(2)(1) (a), Sch. I

Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 (c.52)

56 In sections 212(5) and 263(6) of the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 (application of Arbitration Act) for “the Arbitration Act 1950” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.

Industrial Relations (Northern Ireland) Order 1992 (N.I.5)

57 In Articles 84(9) and 92(5) of the Industrial Relations (Northern Ireland) Order 1992 (application of Arbitration Act) for “The Arbitration Act (Northern Ireland) 1937” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.

Registered Homes (Northern Ireland) Order 1992 (N.I.20)

58 [<sup>F38</sup>In Article 33(3) of the Registered Homes (Northern Ireland) Order 1992 (procedure of Registered Homes Tribunal) for “The Arbitration Act (Northern Ireland) 1937” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.<sup>F38</sup>]

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

F38 Sch. 3 para. 58 repealed (N.I.) (1.4.2005) by The Health and Personal Social Services (Quality, Improvement and Regulation) (Northern Ireland) Order 2003 (S.I. 2003/431 (N.I. 9)), arts. 1, 50(2), Sch. 5; S.R. 2005/44, art. 3, Sch. 1 (with arts. 4-13)

Education Act 1993 (c.35)

<sup>F39</sup>59 .....

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

F39 Sch. 3 para. 59 repealed (1.11.1996) by 1996 c. 56, ss. 582(2)(3), 583(2), Sch. 38 Pt. I, Sch. 39 (with s. 1(4))

Roads (Northern Ireland) Order 1993 (N.I.15)

60 (1) The Roads (Northern Ireland) Order 1993 is amended as follows.

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

- (2) In Article 131 (application of Arbitration Act) for “the Arbitration Act (Northern Ireland) 1937” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.
- (3) In Schedule 4 (disputes), in paragraph 3(2) for “the Arbitration Act (Northern Ireland) 1937” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.

Merchant Shipping Act 1995 (c.21)

- 61 In Part II of Schedule 6 to the Merchant Shipping Act 1995 (provisions having effect in connection with Convention Relating to the Carriage of Passengers and Their Luggage by Sea), for paragraph 7 substitute—

“7 Article 16 shall apply to arbitral proceedings as it applies to an action; and, as respects England and Wales and Northern Ireland, the provisions of section 14 of the Arbitration Act 1996 apply to determine for the purposes of that Article when an arbitration is commenced.”.

[<sup>F40</sup>Employment Tribunals Act 1996] (c.17)

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

F40 Words in crossheading to Sch. 3 para. 62 substituted (E.W.S.) (1.8.1998) by virtue of 1998 c. 8, s. 1(2)(c) (with s. 16(2)); S.I. 1998/1658, art. 2(1), Sch. 1

- 62 In section 6(2) of [<sup>F41</sup>the Employment Tribunals Act 1996] (procedure of [<sup>F41</sup>employment tribunals]), for “The Arbitration Act 1950” substitute “ Part I of the Arbitration Act 1996 ”.

Annotations:

Amendments (Textual)

F41 Words in Sch. 3 para. 62 substituted (E.W.S.) (1.8.1998) by 1998 c. 8, s. 1(2)(b)(c) (with s. 16(2)); S.I. 1998/1658, art. 2(1), Sch. 1

SCHEDULE 4

Section 107(2).

REPEALS

Annotations:

Commencement Information

I4 Sch. 4 wholly in force 31.1.1997: Sch. 4 not in force at Royal Assent see s. 109(1); Sch. 4 in force for certain purposes only at 17.12.1996 otherwise in force at 31.1.1997 by S.I. 1996/3146, arts. 2, 3, Sch. 1

Chapter	Short title	Extent of repeal
---------	-------------	------------------

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

1892 c. 43.	Military Lands Act 1892.	In section 21(b), the words “under the Arbitration Act 1889”.
1922 c. 51.	Allotments Act 1922.	In section 21(3), the words “under the Arbitration Act 1889”.
1937 c. 8 (N.I.).	Arbitration Act (Northern Ireland) 1937.	The whole Act.
1949 c. 54.	Wireless Telegraphy Act 1949.	In Schedule 2, paragraph 3(3).
1949 c. 97.	National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949.	In section 18(4), the words from “Without prejudice” to “England or Wales”.
1950 c. 27.	Arbitration Act 1950.	Part I. Section 42(3).
1958 c. 47.	Agricultural Marketing Act 1958.	Section 53(8).
1962 c. 46.	Transport Act 1962.	In Schedule 11, Part II, paragraph 7.
1964 c. 14.	Plant Varieties and Seeds Act 1964.	In section 10(4) the words from “or in section 9” to “three arbitrators”. Section 39(3)(b)(i).
1964 c. 29 (N.I.).	Lands Tribunal and Compensation Act (Northern Ireland) 1964.	In section 9(3) the words from “so, however, that” to the end.
1965 c. 12.	Industrial and Provident Societies Act 1965.	In section 60(8)(b), the words “by virtue of section 12 of the said Act of 1950”.
1965 c. 37.	Carriage of Goods by Road Act 1965.	Section 7(2)(b).
1965 c. 13 (N.I.).	New Towns Act (Northern Ireland) 1965.	In section 27(2), the words from “under and in accordance with” to the end.
1969 c. 24 (N.I.).	Industrial and Provident Societies Act (Northern Ireland) 1969.	In section 69(7)— (a) in the opening words, the words from “and without prejudice” to “1937”; (b) in paragraph (b), the words “the registrar or” and “registrar or”.
1970 c. 31.	Administration of Justice Act 1970.	Section 4. Schedule 3.
1973 c. 41.	Fair Trading Act 1973.	Section 33(2)(d).

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

1973 N.I. 1.	Drainage (Northern Ireland) Order 1973.	In Article 15(4), the words from “under and in accordance” to the end. Article 40(4). In Schedule 7, in paragraph 9(2), the words from “under and in accordance” to the end.
1974 c. 47.	Solicitors Act 1974.	In section 87(1), in the definition of “contentious business”, the words “appointed under the Arbitration Act 1950”.
1975 c. 3.	Arbitration Act 1975.	The whole Act.
1975 c. 74.	Petroleum and Submarine Pipe-Lines Act 1975.	In Part II of Schedule 2— (a) in model clause 40(2), the words “in accordance with the Arbitration Act 1950”; (b) in model clause 40(2B), the words “in accordance with the Arbitration Act (Northern Ireland) 1937”. In Part II of Schedule 3, in model clause 38(2), the words “in accordance with the Arbitration Act 1950”.
1976 N.I. 12.	Solicitors (Northern Ireland) Order 1976.	In Article 3(2), in the entry “contentious business”, the words “appointed under the Arbitration Act (Northern Ireland) 1937”. Article 71H(3).
1977 c. 37.	Patents Act 1977.	In section 52(4) the words “section 21 of the Arbitration Act 1950 or, as the case may be, section 22 of the Arbitration Act (Northern Ireland) 1937 (statement of cases by arbitrators); but”. Section 131(e).
1977 c. 38.	Administration of Justice Act 1977.	Section 17(2).
1978 c. 23.	Judicature (Northern Ireland) Act 1978.	In section 35(2), paragraph (g)(v). In Schedule 5, the amendment to the Arbitration Act 1950.
1979 c. 42.	Arbitration Act 1979.	The whole Act.

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

1980 c. 58.	Limitation Act 1980.	Section 34.
1980 N.I. 3.	County Courts (Northern Ireland) Order 1980.	Article 31(3).
1981 c. 54.	Supreme Court Act 1981.	Section 148.
1982 c. 27.	Civil Jurisdiction and Judgments Act 1982.	Section 25(3)(c) and (5).  In section 26— (a) in subsection (1), the words “to arbitration or”; (b) in subsection (1)(a)(i), the words “arbitration or”; (c) in subsection (2), the words “arbitration or”.
1982 c. 53.	Administration of Justice Act 1982.	Section 15(6). In Schedule 1, Part IV.
1984 c. 5.	Merchant Shipping Act 1984.	Section 4(8).
1984 c. 12.	Telecommunications Act 1984.	Schedule 2, paragraph 13(8).
1984 c. 16.	Foreign Limitation Periods Act 1984.	Section 5.
1984 c. 28.	County Courts Act 1984.	In Schedule 2, paragraph 70.
1985 c. 61.	Administration of Justice Act 1985.	Section 58. In Schedule 9, paragraph 15.
1985 c. 68.	Housing Act 1985.	In Schedule 18, in paragraph 6(2) the words from “and the Arbitration Act 1950” to the end.
1985 N.I. 12.	Credit Unions (Northern Ireland) Order 1985.	In Article 72(7)— (a) in the opening words, the words from “and without prejudice” to “1937”; (b) in sub-paragraph (b), the words “the registrar or” and “registrar or”.
1986 c. 45.	Insolvency Act 1986.	In Schedule 14, the entry relating to the Arbitration Act 1950.
1988 c. 8.	Multilateral Investment Guarantee Agency Act 1988.	Section 8(3).
1988 c. 21.	Consumer Arbitration Agreements Act 1988.	The whole Act.
1989 N.I. 11.	Limitation (Northern Ireland) Order 1989.	Article 72. In Schedule 3, paragraph 1.

---

Status: This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation: Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations. (See end of Document for details)

---

1989 N.I. 19.	Insolvency (Northern Ireland) Order 1989.	In Part II of Schedule 9, paragraph 66.
1990 c. 41.	Courts and Legal Services Act 1990.	Sections 99 and 101 to 103.
1991 N.I. 7.	Food Safety (Northern Ireland) Order 1991.	In Articles 8(8) and 11(10), the words from “and the provisions” to the end.
1992 c. 40.	Friendly Societies Act 1992.	In Schedule 16, paragraph 30(1).
1995 c. 8.	Agricultural Tenancies Act 1995.	Section 28(4).
1995 c. 21.	Merchant Shipping Act 1995.	Section 96(10). Section 264(9).
1995 c. 42.	Private International Law (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1995.	Section 3.

---

Status:

This version of this Act contains provisions that are prospective.

Changes to legislation:

Arbitration Act 1996 is up to date with all changes known to be in force on or before 15 April 2019. There are changes that may be brought into force at a future date. Changes that have been made appear in the content and are referenced with annotations.

Changes and effects yet to be applied to :

- Pt. 1 excluded by 2018 anaw 2 s. 75\(4\)