

IN THE MATTER OF AN INDEPENDENT REVIEW PROCESS
BEFORE THE INTERNATIONAL CENTRE FOR DISPUTE RESOLUTION

AFILIAS DOMAINS NO. 3 LIMITED,

Claimant

v.

INTERNET CORPORATION FOR ASSIGNED NAMES AND NUMBERS,

Respondent

ICDR Case No. 01-18-0004-2702

---

CLAIMANT'S EXHIBITS

---

24 July 2020

DECHERT LLP
1900 K Street NW
Washington, DC 20006
Tel. 202-261-3300

CONSTANTINE CANNON LLP
335 Madison Avenue
New York, NY 10017
Tel. 212-350-2737

Counsel for Claimant

LIST OF EXHIBITS

Exhibit No.	Description
Exhibits submitted with Afiliias' Application for Leave to Add Exhibits C-125 through C-181 to the Record of this IRP (19 July 2020)
C-125	Letter from Deborah A. Garza (US Department of Justice, Antitrust Division) to Meredith A. Baker (US Department of Commerce) (3 Dec. 2008)
C-126	Dennis Carlton (Compass Lexecon), Comments on Michael Kende's Assessment of Preliminary Reports on Competition and Pricing (5 June 2009)
C-127	New gTLD Application submitted to ICANN by Ruby Glen, LLC, Application ID 1-1527-54849 (13 June 2012)
C-128	New gTLD Application submitted to ICANN by Schlund Technologies GmbH, Application ID 1-1013-77165 (13 June 2012)
C-129	ICANN, Assignment: Change of Control of Registry Operator (29 Jan. 2016), available at https://www.icann.org/resources/change-of-control (last accessed 13 July 2020)
C-130	Derek Vaughn, "Inside the High Stakes Auction for .WEB," InetServies (25 July 2016), available at https://www.inetservices.com/blog/inside-the-high-stakes-auction-for-web/ (last accessed 19 July 2020)
C-131	Email from Christine Willett (ICANN) to Patrick Kane (16 Sep. 2016) [ICANN-WEB_000930 - ICANN-WEB_000932]
C-132	Email from Brian Leventhal to Eric Enson (7 Oct. 2016) [ICANN-WEB_000972]
C-133	ICANN, Board of Governance Committee, Agenda (2 Nov. 2016), available at https://www.icann.org/resources/board-material/agenda-bgc-2016-11-02-en (last accessed 17 July 2020)
C-134	ICANN, Board of Governance Committee, Meeting Minutes (2 Nov. 2016), available at https://www.icann.org/resources/board-material/minutes-bgc-2016-11-02-en (last accessed 17 July 2020)
C-135	ICANN, Board Audit Committee, Meeting Minutes (2 Nov. 2016), available at https://www.icann.org/resources/board-material/minutes-audit-2016-11-02-en (last accessed 17 July 2020)
C-136	ICANN, Board Finance Committee, Meeting Minutes (2 Nov. 2016), available at https://www.icann.org/resources/board-material/minutes-bfc-2016-11-02-en (last accessed 17 July 2020)
C-137	ICANN, Organizational Effectiveness Committee, Meeting Minutes (3 Nov. 2016), available at https://www.icann.org/resources/board-material/minutes-oec-2016-11-03-en (last accessed 17 July 2020)
C-138	ICANN, Board Risk Committee, Meeting Minutes (4 Nov. 2016), available at https://www.icann.org/resources/board-material/minutes-brc-2016-11-04-en (last accessed 17 July 2020)

Exhibit No.	Description
C-139	Regular Meeting of the ICANN Board, Papers: Posting for Public Comment – Draft ICANN Community-Anti-Harassment Policy (Submission No. 2016.11.05.1a) (5 Nov. 2016)
C-140	Regular Meeting of the ICANN Board, Reference Materials: Posting for Public Comment – Draft ICANN Community-Anti-Harassment Policy (Draft: 31 October 2016) (Submission No. 2016.11.05.1a) (5 Nov. 2016)
C-141	ICANN, Regular Meeting of the ICANN Board, Agenda (5 Nov. 2016), available at https://www.icann.org/resources/board-material/agenda-2016-11-05-en (last accessed 17 July 2020)
C-142	ICANN, Regular Meeting of the ICANN Board, Minutes (5 Nov. 2016), available at https://www.icann.org/resources/board-material/agenda-2016-11-05-en (last accessed 17 July 2020)
C-143	ICANN, Regular Meeting of the ICANN Board, Approved Board Resolutions (5 Nov. 2016), available at https://www.icann.org/resources/board-material/resolutions-2016-11-05-en (last accessed 17 July 2020)
C-144	Organizational Meeting of the ICANN Board, Papers: AGENDA – 8 NOVEMBER 2016 ORGANIZATIONAL BOARD MEETING (8 Nov. 2016)
C-145	Organizational Meeting of the ICANN Board, Agenda (8 Nov. 2016), available at https://www.icann.org/resources/board-material/agenda-2-2016-11-08-en (last accessed 17 July 2020)
C-146	Organizational Meeting of the ICANN Board, Meeting Minutes (8 Nov. 2016), available at https://www.icann.org/resources/board-material/minutes-2-2016-11-08-en (last accessed 17 July 2020)
C-147	Organizational Meeting of the ICANN Board, Adopted Board Resolutions (8 Nov. 2016), available at https://www.icann.org/resources/board-material/resolutions-2-2016-11-08-en (last accessed 17 July 2020)
C-148	Regular Meeting of the ICANN Board, Papers: Consideration of the Corn Lake, LLC v. ICANN IRP Final Declaration (8 Nov. 2016)
C-149	Regular Meeting of the ICANN Board, Papers: Appointment of Jacques Latour and Tara Whalen to the Security and Stability Advisory Committee (8 Nov. 2016)
C-150	Regular Meeting of the ICANN Board, Reference Materials: Letter dated 18 Oct. 2016 from SSAC to ICANN Board (8 Nov. 2016)
C-151	Regular Meeting of the ICANN Board, Agenda (8 Nov. 2016), available at https://www.icann.org/resources/board-material/agenda-2016-11-08-en (last accessed 17 July 2020)
C-152	Regular Meeting of the ICANN Board, Meeting Minutes (8 Nov. 2016), available at https://www.icann.org/resources/board-material/agenda-2016-11-08-en (last accessed 17 July 2020)

Exhibit No.	Description
C-153	Regular Meeting of the ICANN Board, Adopted Board Resolutions (8 Nov. 2016), available at https://www.icann.org/resources/board-material/resolutions-2016-11-08-en (last accessed 17 July 2020)
C-154	ICANN, Board of Governance Committee, Agenda (5 Dec. 2016), available at https://www.icann.org/resources/board-material/agenda-bgc-2016-12-05-en (last accessed 17 July 2020)
C-155	ICANN, Board of Governance Committee, Meeting Minutes (5 Dec. 2016), available at https://www.icann.org/resources/board-material/minutes-bgc-2016-12-05-en (last accessed 17 July 2020)
C-156	Special Meeting of the ICANN Board, Papers: RSSAC Co-Chair Appointment (Submission No. 2016.12.13.1b) (13 Dec. 2016)
C-157	Special Meeting of the ICANN Board, Reference Materials: GAC Helsinki Communiqué Table of Advice (13 Dec. 2016)
C-158	Special Meeting of the ICANN Board, Agenda (13 Dec. 2016), available at https://www.icann.org/resources/board-material/agenda-2016-12-13-en (last accessed 17 July 2020)
C-159	Special Meeting of the ICANN Board, Minutes (13 Dec. 2016), available at https://www.icann.org/resources/board-material/minutes-2016-12-13-en (last accessed 17 July 2020)
C-160	Special Meeting of the ICANN Board, Adopted Board Resolutions (13 Dec. 2016), available at https://www.icann.org/resources/board-material/resolutions-2016-12-13-en (last accessed 17 July 2020)
C-161	ICANN, Board of Governance Committee, Agenda (16 Dec. 2016), available at https://www.icann.org/resources/board-material/agenda-bgc-2016-12-16-en (last accessed 17 July 2020)
C-162	ICANN, Board of Governance Committee, Meeting Minutes (16 Dec. 2016), available at https://www.icann.org/resources/board-material/minutes-bgc-2016-12-16-en (last accessed 17 July 2020)
C-163	Contact Information for Assignment - "Change of Control" (Oct. 2017)
C-164	ICANN, Change of Control Guide: How to Submit a Request for a Change of Control Assignment (13 Dec. 2017)
C-165	Letter from Steven Marenberg (Counsel for NDC) to John Jeffrey & Akram Atallah (ICANN) (28 Feb. 2018) [ICANN-WEB_000236 - ICANN-WEB_000237]
C-166	Email from Russ Weinstein (ICANN) to Lisa Carter et al. (6 June 2018) [ICANN-WEB_000458]
C-167	Email from Jared Erwin (ICANN) to Christopher Bare and Christine Willett (ICANN) (6 June 2018) [ICANN-WEB_000457]

Exhibit No.	Description
C-168	Email from Erika Randall (ICANN) to Russ Weinstein et al. (ICANN) (13 June 2018) [ICANN-WEB_000453]
C-169	Email from Grant Nakata (ICANN) to Christine Willett et al. (ICANN) (14 June 2018) [ICANN-WEB_00473]
C-170	Email from Grant Nakata to Christine Willett et al. (14 June 2018) [ICANN-WEB_000452 - ICANN-WEB_000453]
C-171	Email from Christine Willett (ICANN) to Correspondence (10 July 2018) [ICANN-WEB_000485]
C-172	Kevin Murphy, "Donuts Loses to ICANN in $135 million .web auction appeal," DomainIncite (16 Oct. 2018), available at http://domainincite.com/23581-donuts-loses-to-icann-in-135-million-web-auction-appeal (last accessed 7 Oct. 2019)
C-173	David Goldstein, "Donuts Loses Another Court Appeal Against ICANN Decision on .WEB," DomainPulse (17 Oct. 2018), available at https://www.domainpulse.com/2018/10/17/donuts-loses-another-court-appeal-against-icann-decision-on-web/ (last accessed on 7 Oct. 2019)
C-174	David Goldstein, "Neustar's Nicolai Bezsonoff Discusses the 'Vote of Confidence' In Being Awarded 10 More Years of .US," DomainPulse (21 July 2019), available at https://www.domainpulse.com/2019/07/21/neustars-nicolai-bezsonoff-awarded-us/ (last accessed 13 July 2020)
C-175	Dilantha De Silva, "VeriSign: An Overvalued Company With A Strong Moat," Seeking Alpha (23 Sep. 2019), available at https://seekingalpha.com/article/4293005-verisign-overvalued-company-strong-moat (last accessed 19 July 2020)
C-176	Ash Anderson, "VeriSign Is Immune From Coronavirus," Seeking Alpha (16 Mar. 2020), available at https://seekingalpha.com/article/4332180-verisign-is-immune-from-coronavirus (last accessed 19 July 2020)
C-177	Written Testimony of John W. Elias before the U.S. House Committee on the Judiciary (24 June 2020), available at https://judiciary.house.gov/uploadedfiles/elias_written_testimony_hjc.pdf?utm_campaign=4024-519 (last accessed 19 July 2020)
C-178	Delaware Department of State, Division of Corporations - Filings: Nu Dotco LLC (13 July 2020)
C-179	Comprehensive Business Report: Nu Dotco LLC (13 July 2020)
C-180	ICANN, Assignments: Change of Control of Registry Operator or Material Subcontracting Arrangement, available at https://www.icann.org/resources/assignments (last accessed 13 July 2020)
C-181	ICANN, New Generic Top-Level Domains: Frequently Asked Questions, available at https://newgtlds.icann.org/en/applicants/global-support/faqs/faqs-en (last accessed 13 July 2020)

Exhibit No.	Description
Exhibit submitted with Afiliias' Application for Leave to Add Exhibit C-182 to the Record of this IRP (21 July 2020)
C-182	Email from Jose Ignacio Rasco (NDC) to Peg Rettino (ICANN) (copy to John Jeffrey and Akram Atallah (ICANN)) (15 Dec. 2018) [ICANN-WEB_001061]
Authorities submitted with Afiliias' Response to the Amicus Curiae Briefs (24 July 2020)
CA-44	Pennell v. City of San Jose , 485 U.S. 1 (1988)
CA-45	In re Cho , 581 B.R. 452 (Bankr. D. Md. 2018)
CA-46	In re Spoverlook, LLC , 560 B.R. 358 (Bankr. D. N.M. 2016)
CA-47	In re Aslan , 65 B.R. 826 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 1986), rev'd in part on other grounds , 909 F.2d 367 (9th Cir. 1990)
CA-48	Vir2us, Inc. v. Sophos Inc. , No. 2:19CV18, 2019 WL 8886440 (E.D. Va. Aug. 14, 2019)
CA-49	In re Hat , 310 B.R. 752 (Bankr. E.D. Cal. 2004)
CA-50	U.S. v. Smithfield Foods, Inc. , Case 1:10-cv-00120 (D.D.C.), Complaint (21 Jan. 2010)
CA-51	U.S. Department of Justice, Smithfield Foods and Premium Standards Farms Charged with Illegal Premerger Coordination: Company Required to Pay $900,000 Civil Penalty (21 Jan. 2010), available at https://www.justice.gov/opa/pr/smithfield-foods-and-premium-standard-farms-charged-illegal-premerger-coordination (last accessed 23 July 2020)
CA-52	Principal Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Vars, Pave, McCord &amp; Freedman , 65 Cal. App. 4th 1469 (1998)
CA-53	Mountain of Fire &amp; Miracles Ministries v. Oyeyemi , No. B218591, 2012 WL 2373003 (Cal. Ct. App. June 25, 2012)
CA-54	In re O'Neill Enterprises, Inc. , 547 F.2d 812 (4th Cir. 1977)
CA-55	Merriam-Webster Dictionary (on-line version): inaccurate, available at https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/inaccurate (last accessed 21 July 2020)
CA-56	Merriam-Webster Dictionary (on-line version): untrue, available at https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/untrue (last accessed 21 July 2020)
CA-57	Merriam-Webster Dictionary (on-line version): subjugate, available at https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/subjugation (last accessed 21 July 2020)
CA-58	Boeing Co. v. March , 656 F. Supp. 2d 837 (N.D. Ill. 2009)
CA-59	U.S v. Cianci , 378 F.3d 71 (1st Cir. 2004)
CA-60	ICM Registry, LLC v. ICANN , ICDR Case No. 50-117-T-00224-08, Expert Report of Jack Goldsmith (22 Jan. 2009)
CA-61	ICM Registry, LLC v. ICANN , ICDR Case No. 50-117-T-00224-08, ICANN's Response to ICM's Memorial on the Merits (8 May 2009)

Exhibit No.	Description
CA-62	Georg Schwarzenberger and Edward Brown, A Manual of International Law (6th ed. 1976)
CA-63	Nuclear Tests (Australia v. France) , Judgment (20 Dec.), 1974 I.C.J. 253
CA-64	Land and Maritime Boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria (Cameroon v. Nigeria) , Judgment (11 June), 1998 I.C.J. 275
CA-65	Anthony D'Amato, "Good Faith" in Encyclopedia of Public International Law Vol. 2 (1995)
CA-66	The Gibraltar Football Association (GFA) v. Union des Associations Européennes de Football (UEFA) , CAS Case No. 2002/O/410, Award (7 Oct. 2003)
CA-67	A. v. Fédération Internationale de Lutttes Associées (FILA) , CAS Case No. 2001/A/317, Award (9 July 2001)
CA-68	G. v. Fédération Equestre Internationale (FEI) , CAS Case No. 1991/A/53, Award (15 Jan. 1992) in 1 Digest of CAS Awards Series Set 79 (1998)
CA-69	AEK Athens and SK Slavia Prague v. Union of European Football Associations (UEFA) , CAS Case No. 98/200, Award (20 Aug. 1999)
CA-70	Plama Consortium Ltd. v. Republic of Bulgaria , ICSID Case No. ARB/03/24, Award (27 Aug. 2008)
CA-71	AES Summit Generation Ltd. and AES-Tisza Erömu Kft. v. Republic of Hungary , ICSID Case No. ARB/07/22, Award (23 Sep. 2010)
CA-72	Ronald S. Lauder v. Czech Republic , UNCITRAL Arbitration, Final Award (3 Sep. 2001)
CA-73	Filippo Volandri v. International Tennis Federation (ITF) , CAS Case No. 2009/A/1782, Award (12 May 2009)
CA-74	Albert Ruckdeschel &amp; Co. and Hansa-Lagerhaus Ströh &amp; Co. v. Hauptzollamt Hamburg-St. Annen and Diamalt AG v. Hauptzollamt Itzenhoe , Joined Cases 117/76 and 16/77, Judgment (19 Oct. 1977), 1977 E.C.R. 1753
CA-75	Peter Überschär v. Bundesversicherungsanstalt für Angestellte , Case 810/79, Judgment (8 Oct.), 1980 E.C.R. 2747
CA-76	Bilka-Kaufhaus GmbH v. Karin Weber von Hartz , Case 170/84, Judgment (13 May), 1986 E.C.R. 1620
CA-77	Nykomb Synergetics Technology Holding AB v. Republic of Latvia , SCC Arbitration, Award (16 Dec. 2003)
CA-78	Saluka Inves. BV v. Czech Republic , UNCITRAL Arbitration, Partial Award (17 Mar. 2006)
CA-79	Kelly and Others v. United Kingdom , ECHR, Case No. 30054/96, Final Judgment (4 Aug. 2001)
CA-80	Advisory Opinion OC-18/03 of September 17, 2003, Inter-Am. Ct. H.R., Juridical Condition and Rights of the Undocumented Migrants
CA-81	S.D. Myers, Inc. v. Gov't of Canada , UNCITRAL Arbitration, Partial Award (13 Nov. 2000)

Exhibit No.	Description
CA-82	El Paso Energy Int'l Co. v. Argentine Republic , ICSID Case No. ARB/03/15, Award (31 Oct. 2011)
CA-83	LG&amp;E Energy Corp. et al. v. Argentine Republic , ICSID Case No. ARB/02/1, Decision on Liability (3 Oct. 2006)
CA-84	Joseph Charles Lemire v. Ukraine , ICSID Case No. ARB/06/18, Decision on Jurisdiction and Liability (14 Jan. 2010)
CA-85	United Nations Procurement Manual (30 June 2020)
CA-86	UNCITRAL Model Law on Public Procurement (2011)
CA-87	World Trade Organization, Revised Agreement on Government Procurement and WTO related Legal Instruments (in force 6 Apr. 2014)
CA-88	World Bank, Bank Policy: Procurement in IPF and Other Operational Procurement Matters (Nov. 2017)
CA-89	OECD, Methodology for Assessing Procurement Systems (MAPS) (2018)
CA-90	Siemens A.G. v. Argentine Republic , ICSID Case No. ARB/02/8, Award (17 Jan. 2007)
CA-91	Parkerings-Compagniet AS v. Republic of Lithuania , ICSID Case No. ARB/05/8, Award (11 Sep. 2007)
CA-92	Akira Kotera, "Regulatory Transparency" in The Oxford Handbook of International Investment Law 617 (Peter Muchlinski et al. eds., 2008)
CA-93	Case C-532/06, Emm G. Lianakis AE et al. v. Dimos Alexandroupolis et al. , Judgment (24 Jan. 2008)
CA-94	Sacha Prechal and Madeleine de Leeuw, "Dimensions of Transparency: The Building Blocks for a New Legal Principle?," Rev. Eur. Admin. L. Vol. O, No. 1 (2007)
CA-95	Bosh Int'l, Inc. and B &amp; P Ltd. Foreign Inves. Enter. v. Ukraine , ICSID Case No. ARB/08/11, Award (25 Oct. 2012)
CA-96	Spyridon Roussalis v. Romania , ICSID Case No. ARB/06/1, Award (7 Dec. 2011)
CA-97	Ioan Micula et al. v. Romania , ICSID Case No. ARB/05/20, Award (11 Dec. 2013)
CA-98	United States Olympic Committee (USOC) v. International Olympic Committee (IOC) and International Association of Athletics Federations (IAAF) , CAS Case No. 2004/A/725, Award (20 July 2005)
CA-99	Técnicas Medioambientales TECMED S.A. v. United Mexican States , ICSID Case No. ARB(AF)/00/2, Award (29 May 2003)
CA-100	United States - Sections 301-310 of the Trade Act of 1974 , WTO Case No. WT/DS152/R, Report of the Panel (22 Dec. 1999)
CA-101	World Bank Administrative Tribunal, Walter Prescott v. International Bank for Reconstruction and Development , Decision No. 253 (4 Dec. 2001)

Exhibit No.	Description
CA-102	Sullivan v. The Judo Federation of Australia Inc. , CAS Case No. 2000/A/284, Award (14 Aug. 2000)
CA-103	CME Czech Republic B.V. v. Czech Republic , UNCITRAL Arbitration, Partial Award (13 Sep. 2001)
CA-104	AlterG, Inc. v. Boost Treadmills LLC , 388 F.Supp.3d 1133 (N.D. Cal. 2019)
CA-105	Coley v. Eskaton , 2020 WL 3833018 (Cal. Ct. App. 2020)
CA-106	Palm Springs Villas II Homeowners Assn., Inc. v. Parth , 248 Cal.App.4th 268 (Cal. Ct. App. 2016)
CA-107	Ekstrom v. Marquesa at Monarch Beach Homeowners Assn. , 168 Cal.App.4th 1111 (Cal. Ct. App. 2008)
CA-108	Stuart Chemtob, U.S. Department of Justice, The Role of Competition Agencies in Regulated Sectors (5th International Symposium on Competition Policy and Law, Institute of Law, Chinese Academy of Social Science, Beijing, China, 11 May 2007), available at https://www.justice.gov/atr/speech/role-competition-agencies-regulated-sectors (last accessed 23 July 2020)
CA-109	In the Matter of Policies Regarding Mobile Spectrum Holdings , FCC, WT Docket No. 12-269, Ex Parte Submission of the United States Department of Justice (11 Apr. 2013)
CA-110	U.S. Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission, Horizontal Merger Guidelines (19 Aug. 2010)
CA-111	Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18 (1996)
CA-112	Steves and Sons, Inc. v. JELD-WEN, Inc. , 345 F.Supp.3d 614 (E.D. Va. 2018)
CA-113	Singh v. Singh , 114 Cal. App. 4th 1264 (2004)
CA-114	18A Am. Jur. 2d Corporations § 262 (2020)
CA-115	Merriam-Webster Dictionary (on-line version): accountability, available at https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/accountability (last accessed 23 July 2020)
CA-116	Oxford English Dictionary (on-line version): accountability, available at https://www.oed-com.nyli.idm.oclc.org/view/Entry/1197?redirectedFrom=accountability&amp;&amp;print (last accessed 24 July 2020)
CA-117	Dictionary.com: redress, available at http://dictionary.reference.com/browse/redress (last accessed 23 July 2020)
CA-118	Black's Law Dictionary (11th ed. 2019): redress
CA-119	Factory at Chorzów (Claim for Indemnity) (Merits) , Judgment (Sep. 13), 1928 P.C.I.J. (Ser. A) No. 17
CA-120	Lexico.com: resolve, available at https://www.lexico.com/en/definition/resolve (last accessed 23 July 2020)

Exhibit No.	Description
CA-121	Oxford English Dictionary (on-line version): resolve, available at https://www-oed-com.nyli.idm.oclc.org/view/Entry/163733?rkey=u3QyP2&amp;result=2&amp;isAdvanced=false&amp;print (last accessed 24 July 2020)
CA-122	Interpretation of Judgments Nos. 7 and 8 (The Chorzów Factory) , Judgment, 1927 P.C.I.J. (Ser. A) No. 13 (Dec. 16)
CA-123	Gary Born, International Commercial Arbitration (2d ed. 2014)
CA-124	Arbitration Act 1996 (Eng.)

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-44

KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment

Declined to Extend by Sullivan Properties, Inc. v. City of Winter Springs, M.D.Fla., September 25, 1995

108 S.Ct. 849

Supreme Court of the United States

Richard PENNELL and Tri-County Apartment House Owners Association, Appellants

v.

CITY OF SAN JOSE and City Council of San Jose.

No. 86-753.

|

Argued Nov. 10, 1987.

|

Decided Feb. 24, 1988.

Synopsis

Landlord and landlords' association brought action for declaratory and injunctive relief against city, attacking constitutionality of city rent control ordinance. The Superior Court, Santa Clara County, Bruce F. Allen, J., held that provision allowing hearing officer to consider "hardship to a tenant" when determining whether to approve rent increase proposed by landlord was unconstitutional, but upheld annual fee levied under ordinance on each rental unit, and both sides appealed. The Court of Appeal, 201 Cal.Rptr. 728, affirmed, and both sides appealed. The California Supreme Court, 42 Cal.3d 365, 228 Cal.Rptr. 726, 721 P.2d 1111, reversed in part, determining that tenant hardship provision was not facially unconstitutional, and landlord and landlords' association appealed. The Supreme Court, Chief Justice Rehnquist, held that: (1) landlords had standing to challenge ordinance's constitutionality; (2) contention that application of ordinance's tenant hardship provisions violated takings clause was premature; and (3) ordinance did not on its face violate due process clause or equal protection clause.

Affirmed.

Justice Scalia filed opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part in which Justice O'Connor joined.

Justice Kennedy took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

West Headnotes (19)

[1] Associations Suits on Behalf of Members; Associational or Representational Standing

"Associational or representational standing" requires actual injury redressable by court, that association's members would otherwise having standing to sue in their own right, that interests association seeks to protect are germane to association's purpose and that neither claim asserted nor relief requested requires participation of individual members in lawsuit. U.S.C.A. Const. Art. 3, § 1 et seq.

44 Cases that cite this headnote[2] Federal Civil Procedure In general; injury or interest

Application of constitutional standing requirement is not mechanical exercise. U.S.C.A. Const. Art. 3, § 1 et seq.

11 Cases that cite this headnote[3] Federal Civil Procedure Pleading

Upon challenge to standing on basis of pleadings, the Supreme Court of the United States accepts as true all material allegations of complaint and construes complaint in favor of complaining party. U.S.C.A. Const. Art. 3, § 1 et seq.

99 Cases that cite this headnote[4] Municipal Corporations Proceedings concerning construction and validity of ordinances

Landlord and landlords' association had standing to challenge constitutionality of city rent control ordinance allowing hearing officer to consider, among other factors "hardship to a tenant" when determining whether to approve rent increase proposed by landlord, even though complaint did not allege that landlords had "hardship tenants" who might trigger ordinance's hearing process or that they had been or would be aggrieved by hearing officer's determination that certain proposed rent increase was unreasonable on ground of tenant hardship; allegation that landlords' properties were subject to ordinance and statement at oral argument that association represented most of residential unit owners in city and had many hardship tenants raised likelihood of enforcement of ordinance, with concomitant probability that rent would be reduced below what landlord would otherwise be able to obtain, so as to sustain landlords' burden of demonstrating realistic danger of sustaining direct injury as result of ordinance's operation or enforcement. U.S.C.A. Const. Art. 3, § 1 et seq.

76 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Federal Courts 🔑 Presentation of Questions Below or on Review; Record; Waiver

Parties litigating in the Supreme Court of the United States should take pains to supplement record in any manner necessary to enable Court to address with as much precision as possible any question of standing that may be raised. U.S.C.A. Const. Art. 3, § 1 et seq.

9 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Eminent Domain 🔑 What Constitutes a Taking; Police and Other Powers Distinguished

Fifth Amendment's just compensation provision is designed to bar Government from forcing some people alone to bear public burdens which, in all fairness and justice, should be borne by public as a whole. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5.

8 Cases that cite this headnote

[7] Constitutional Law 🔑 Necessity of Determination

Constitutionality of statutes ought not be decided except in actual factual setting that makes such decision necessary, particularly in takings cases. U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 5, 14.

11 Cases that cite this headnote

[8] Municipal Corporations 🔑 Proceedings concerning construction and validity of ordinances

Landlords' contention that city rent control ordinance's tenant hardship provision violated takings clause, alleging that reducing, because of tenant hardship, what would otherwise be "reasonable" rent under other, objective factors specified in ordinance, relating to landlord's cost or rental market's condition, accomplished taking and transfer of landlord's property to individual hardship tenants, was premature, absent evidence that tenant hardship provision had in fact ever been relied upon by hearing officer to reduce rent as alleged, particularly where ordinance did not require that hearing officer in fact reduce proposed rent increase on grounds of tenant hardship, but rather, only required that tenant hardship be considered. U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 5, 14.

24 Cases that cite this headnote

[9] Constitutional Law 🔑 Charges and prices in general

State price-control regulation that is arbitrary, discriminatory, or demonstrably irrelevant to policy that legislature is free to adopt violates Due Process Clause. U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 5, 14.

30 Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Constitutional Law 🔑 Antitrust regulation in general

Government's intervention in marketplace to regulate rates or prices that are artificially inflated as result of monopoly or near monopoly does not violate Due Process Clause. U.S.C.A. Const.Amends. 5, 14.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Landlord and Tenant 🔑 Validity

City rent control ordinance's purpose of preventing unreasonable rent increases caused by city's housing shortage was legitimate exercise of city's police powers. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5, 14.

8 Cases that cite this headnote

[12] Eminent Domain ↔ Rent control; housing
Landlord and Tenant ↔ Power to regulate

States have broad power to regulate housing conditions in general and landlord-tenant relationship in particular without paying compensation for all economic injuries that such regulation entails. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5, 14.

15 Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Eminent Domain ↔ Rent control; housing
Statutes regulating economic relations of landlords and tenants are not per se takings. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5, 14.

10 Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Constitutional Law ↔ Charges and prices in general

For purposes of due process analysis, protection of consumer welfare is legitimate and rational goal of price or rate regulation. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5, 14.

12 Cases that cite this headnote

[15] Landlord and Tenant ↔ Purpose

Protection of tenants is primary purpose of rent control.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[16] Constitutional Law ↔ Rent control
Landlord and Tenant ↔ Validity

Provision in city rent control ordinance that hearing officer may consider tenant's hardship, among other factors, in finally fixing reasonable rent, did not render ordinance facially invalid under Fourteenth Amendment's due process clause; ordinance's scheme represented rational attempt to accommodate conflicting interests of protecting tenants from burdensome rent increases and from costs of dislocation while at same time ensuring that landlords were guaranteed fair return on their investment. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

38 Cases that cite this headnote

[17] Constitutional Law ↔ Rent control

In face of Equal Protection challenge to city rent control ordinance, city was only required to show that classification scheme embodied in ordinance was rationally related to legitimate state interest. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

54 Cases that cite this headnote

[18] Constitutional Law ↔ Statutes and other written regulations and rules

Statute that does not burden suspect class or fundamental interest will not be overturned on Equal Protection grounds unless varying treatment of different groups of persons is so unrelated to achievement of any combination of legitimate purposes as to compel conclusion that legislature's actions were irrational. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

86 Cases that cite this headnote

[19] Constitutional Law ↔ Rent control
Landlord and Tenant ↔ Validity

City rent control ordinance allowing hearing officer to consider, among other factors, "hardship to a tenant" when determining whether to approve rent increase proposed by landlord did not, on its face, violate Equal Protection Clause; treating landlords differently on basis of whether they had hardship tenants was rationally related to legitimate purpose of protecting tenants. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 14.

21 Cases that cite this headnote

**852 Syllabus ***

* The syllabus constitutes no part of the opinion of the Court but has been prepared by the Reporter of Decisions for the convenience of the reader. See United States v. Detroit Lumber Co., 200 U.S. 321, 337, 26 S.Ct. 282, 287, 50 L.Ed. 499.

*01 Under a San Jose, Cal., rent control ordinance (Ordinance), a landlord may automatically raise the annual rent of a tenant in possession by as much as eight percent, but if a tenant objects to a higher increase, a hearing is required to determine whether the landlord's proposed increase is "reasonable under the circumstances," and the hearing officer is directed to consider specified factors, including "the hardship to a tenant." Appellants, an individual landlord and Tri-County Apartment House Owners Association (Association), which represents owners and lessors of real property located in San Jose, filed a state-court action seeking a declaration that the Ordinance, particularly the "tenant hardship" provision, is facially invalid under the Federal Constitution. The court entered judgment on the pleadings in appellants' favor, and the California Court of Appeal affirmed. However, the California Supreme Court reversed, rejecting appellants' arguments under the Takings Clause of the Fifth Amendment and the Equal Protection and Due Process Clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment.

Held:

1. Appellants have standing to challenge the Ordinance's constitutionality, even though they did not allege that either the individual appellant or appellant Association's members have "hardship tenants" who might trigger the Ordinance's hearing process, or that they have been or will be aggrieved by a hearing officer's determination that a certain proposed rent increase is unreasonable on the ground of tenant hardship. When standing is challenged on the basis of the pleadings, all material allegations of the complaint must be taken as true, and the complaint must be *2 construed in favor of the complaining party. Appellants alleged that their properties are subject to the Ordinance, and stated at oral argument that the Association represents "most of the residential unit owners in the city and [has] many hardship tenants." Thus, the likelihood of enforcement of the Ordinance, with the concomitant probability that a rent will be reduced below what the landlord would otherwise be able to obtain, is a sufficient threat of actual injury to satisfy Art. III's requirement that a plaintiff who challenges a law must demonstrate a realistic danger of sustaining a direct injury as a result of the law's operation or enforcement. Pp. 854–855.

2. Appellants' contention that application of the Ordinance's tenant hardship provision violates the Takings Clause—since reducing, because of tenant hardship, what would otherwise be a "reasonable" rent under the other, objective factors specified in the Ordinance relating to the landlord's costs or the rental market's condition, accomplishes a taking and transfer of the landlord's property to individual hardship tenants—is premature. There is no evidence that the tenant hardship provision has in fact ever been relied upon by a hearing officer to reduce a rent below the figure it would have been set at on the basis of the other specified factors. In addition, the Ordinance does not require that a hearing officer in fact reduce a proposed rent increase on grounds of tenant hardship, but only makes it mandatory that tenant hardship be considered. In takings cases, the constitutionality of laws should not be decided except in an actual factual setting that makes such a decision necessary. Pp. 856–857.

3. The mere provision in the Ordinance that a hearing officer may consider the tenant's hardship in finally fixing a reasonable rent does not render the Ordinance facially invalid under the Due Process Clause. The Ordinance's purpose of preventing unreasonable rent increases **853 caused by the city's housing shortage is a legitimate exercise of appellees' police powers. Moreover, there is no merit to appellants' argument that it is arbitrary, discriminatory, or demonstrably irrelevant for appellees to attempt to accomplish the additional goal of reducing the burden of housing costs on low-income tenants by requiring that "hardship to a tenant" be considered in determining the amount of excess rent increase that is "reasonable under the circumstances." The protection of consumer welfare is a legitimate and rational goal of price or rate regulation. The Ordinance's scheme represents a rational attempt to accommodate the conflicting interests of protecting tenants from burdensome rent increases while at the same time ensuring that landlords are guaranteed a fair return on their investment. Pp. 857–859.

4. The Ordinance, on its face, does not violate the Equal Protection Clause. Its classification scheme is rationally related to the legitimate *3 purpose of protecting tenants. It is not irrational for the Ordinance to treat landlords differently on the basis of whether or not they have hardship tenants. Pp. 858–859.

42 Cal.3d 365, 228 Cal.Rptr. 726, 721 P.2d 1111 (1986), affirmed.

REHNQUIST, C.J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which BRENNAN, WHITE, MARSHALL, BLACKMUN, and STEVENS, JJ., joined. SCALIA, J., filed an opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part, in which O'CONNOR, J., joined, post, p. ——. KENNEDY, J., took no part in the consideration or decision of the case.

Attorneys and Law Firms

Harry D. Miller argued the cause for appellants. With him on the briefs were Burch Fitzpatrick and Gary E. Rosenberg.

Joan R. Gallo argued the cause for appellees. With her on the brief was George Rios.*

* Briefs of amici curiae urging reversal were filed for the California Association of Realtors by William M. Pfeiffer; for the National Apartment Association et al. by Jon D. Smock, Wilbur H. Haines III, and Jeffrey J. Gale; for the National Association of Realtors by William D. North; for the National Multi Housing Council by Lawrence B. Simons and Michael E. Fine; for the Rent Stabilization Association of New York City, Inc., et al. by Erwin N. Griswold; and for the Washington Legal Foundation by Daniel J. Popeo, Paul D. Kamenar, and Todd Natkin.

Briefs of amici curiae urging affirmance were filed for the American Civil Liberties Union et al. by John A. Powell, Steven R. Shapiro, Helen Hershkoff, Paul L. Hoffman, and Mark Rosenbaum; for the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations by Robert M. Weinberg and Laurence Gold; for the Asian Law Alliance et al. by Brenton Rogozen; for the Center for Constitutional Rights by Frank E. Deale; for the National Housing Law Project by David B. Bryson; for the National Institute of Municipal Law Officers by William I. Thornton, Jr., Roger F. Cutler, Roy D. Bates, and William H. Taube; and for the U.S. Conference of Mayors et al. by Benna Ruth Solomon and H. Bartow Farr III.

Briefs of amici curiae were filed for the city of Santa Monica et al. by Joseph Lawrence, Karl M. Manheim, Joel M. Levy, Hadassa K. Gilbert, Manuela Albuquerque, Raymond E. Ott, Mary Jo Levinger, Marc G. Hynes, Jayne W. Williams, K. Duane Lyders, Louise H. Renne, Roger T. Picquet, Steven A. Amerikaner, Mark G. Sellers, and John M. Powers; for the Competitive Enterprise Institute by Sam Kazman; and for the National Association of Home Builders et al. by Gus Bauman.

Opinion

*4 Chief Justice REHNQUIST delivered the opinion of the Court.

This case involves a challenge to a rent control ordinance enacted by the city of San Jose, California, that allows a hearing officer to consider, among other factors, the “hardship to a tenant” when determining whether to approve a rent increase proposed by a landlord. Appellants Richard Pennell and the Tri-County Apartment House Owners Association sued in the Superior Court of Santa Clara County seeking a declaration that the ordinance, in particular the “tenant hardship” provisions, are “facially unconstitutional and therefore ... illegal and void.” The Superior Court entered judgment on the pleadings in favor of appellants, sustaining their claim that the tenant hardship provisions violated the Takings Clause of the Fifth Amendment, as made applicable to the States by the Fourteenth Amendment. The California Court of Appeal affirmed this judgment, 154 Cal.App.3d 1019, 201 Cal.Rptr. 728 (1984), but the Supreme Court of California reversed, 42 Cal.3d 365, 228 Cal.Rptr. 726, 721 P.2d 1111 (1986), each by a divided vote. The majority of the Supreme Court rejected appellants' arguments under the Takings Clause and the Equal Protection and Due Process Clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment; the dissenters in that court thought that the tenant hardship provisions were a “forced subsidy imposed on the landlord” in violation of the Takings Clause. Id., at 377, 228 Cal.Rptr., at 734, 721 P.2d, at 1119. On appellants' appeal to this Court we postponed consideration of the question of jurisdiction, 480 U.S. 905, 107 S.Ct. 1346, 94 L.Ed.2d 517 (1987), and now having heard oral argument we affirm the judgment of the Supreme Court of California.

The city of San Jose enacted its rent control ordinance (Ordinance) in 1979 with the stated purpose of “alleviat[ing] some of the more immediate needs created by San Jose's housing situation. These needs include but are not limited to the prevention of excessive and unreasonable rent increases, the alleviation of undue hardships *5 upon individual tenants, and the assurance to landlords of a fair and reasonable return **854 on the value of their property.” San Jose Municipal Ordinance 19696, § 5701.2.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> In order to be consistent with the decisions below, we refer throughout this opinion to the sections of the Ordinance as originally designated. We note, however, that the San Jose Municipal Code has recently been recodified and the Ordinance now appears at Chapter 17.23 of the new Code.

At the heart of the Ordinance is a mechanism for determining the amount by which landlords subject to its provisions may increase the annual rent which they charge their tenants. A landlord is automatically entitled to raise the rent of a tenant in possession<sup>2</sup> by as much as eight percent; if a tenant objects to an increase greater than eight percent, a hearing is required before a “Mediation Hearing Officer” to determine whether the landlord’s proposed increase is “reasonable under the circumstances.” The Ordinance sets forth a number of factors to be considered by the hearing officer in making this determination, including “the hardship to a tenant.” § 5703.28(c)(7). Because appellants concentrate their attack on the consideration of this factor, we set forth the relevant provision of the Ordinance in full:

<sup>2</sup> Under § 5703.3, the Ordinance does not apply to rent or rent increases for new rental units first rented after the Ordinance takes effect, § 5703.3(a), to the rental of a unit that has been voluntarily vacated, § 5703.3(b)(1), or to the rental of a unit that is vacant as a result of eviction for certain specified acts, § 5703.3(b)(2).

“5703.29. Hardship to Tenants. In the case of a rent increase or any portion thereof which exceeds the standard set in Section 5703.28(a) or (b), then with respect to such excess and whether or not to allow same to be part of the increase allowed under this Chapter, the Hearing Officer shall consider the economic and financial hardship imposed on the present tenant or tenants of the unit or units to which such increases apply. If, on balance, the Hearing Officer determines that the proposed increase *6 constitutes an unreasonably severe financial or economic hardship on a particular tenant, he may order that the excess of the increase which is subject to consideration under subparagraph (c) of Section 5703.28, or any portion thereof, be disallowed. Any tenant whose household income and monthly housing expense meets [certain income requirements] shall be deemed to be suffering under financial and economic hardship which must be weighed in the Hearing Officer’s determination.

The burden of proof in establishing any other economic hardship shall be on the tenant.”

If either a tenant or a landlord is dissatisfied with the decision of the hearing officer, the Ordinance provides for binding arbitration. A landlord who attempts to charge or who receives rent in excess of the maximum rent established as provided in the Ordinance is subject to criminal and civil penalties.

[1] Before we turn to the merits of appellants’ contentions we consider the claim of appellees that appellants lack standing to challenge the constitutionality of the Ordinance. The original complaint in this action states that appellant Richard Pennell “is an owner and lessor of 109 rental units in the City of San Jose.” Appellant Tri-County Apartment House Owners Association (Association) is said to be “an unincorporated association organized for the purpose of representing the interests of the owners and lessors of real property located in the City of San Jose.” App. 2–3. The complaint also states that the real property owned by appellants is “subject to the terms of” the Ordinance. But, appellees point out, at no time did appellants allege that either Pennell or any member of the Association has “hardship tenants” who might trigger the Ordinance’s hearing process, nor did they specifically allege that they have been or will be aggrieved by the determination of a hearing officer that a certain proposed rent increase is unreasonable on the ground of tenant hardship. As appellees put it, “[a]t **855 this point in time, it is speculative” *7 whether any of the Association’s members will be injured in fact by the Ordinance’s tenant hardship provisions. Thus, appellees contend, appellants lack standing under either the test for individual standing, see, e.g., Valley Forge Christian College v. Americans United for Separation of Church & State, Inc., 454 U.S. 464, 472, 102 S.Ct. 752, 758, 70 L.Ed.2d 700 (1982) (individual standing requires an “ ‘actual injury redressable by the court’ ”), or the test for associational standing, see Hunt v. Washington Apple Advertising Comm’n, 432 U.S. 333, 343, 97 S.Ct. 2434, 2441, 53 L.Ed.2d 383 (1977) (an association has standing on behalf of its members only when “its members would otherwise have standing to sue in their own right”).<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Our cases also impose two additional requirements for associational or representational standing: the interests the organization seeks to protect must be “germane to the organization’s purpose,” Hunt, 432 U.S., at 343, 97 S.Ct., at 2441, and “neither the claim asserted nor the relief requested requires the participation of individual members in the lawsuit,” ibid. See also Automobile Workers v. Brock, 477

U.S. 274, 281–282, 106 S.Ct. 2523, 2529, 91 L.Ed.2d 228 (1986). Both of these requirements are satisfied here. The Association was “organized for the purpose of representing the interests of the owners and lessors of real property” in San Jose in this lawsuit, App. 3, and the facial challenge that the Association makes to the Ordinance does not require the participation of individual landlords.

[2] [3] [4] We must keep in mind, however, that “application of the constitutional standing requirement [is not] a mechanical exercise,” Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737, 751, 104 S.Ct. 3315, 3324, 82 L.Ed.2d 556 (1984), and that when standing is challenged on the basis of the pleadings, we “accept as true all material allegations of the complaint, and ... construe the complaint in favor of the complaining party,” Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 501, 95 S.Ct. 2197, 2206, 45 L.Ed.2d 343 (1975); see also Gladstone, Realtors v. Village of Bellwood, 441 U.S. 91, 109, 99 S.Ct. 1601, 1612, 60 L.Ed.2d 66 (1979). Here, appellants specifically alleged in their complaint that appellants' properties are “subject to the terms of” the Ordinance, and they stated at oral argument that the Association represents “most of the residential unit owners in the city and [has] many hardship tenants,” Tr. of Oral Arg. 42; see also id., at 7; Reply Brief for Appellants 2. *8 Accepting the truth of these statements, which appellees do not contest, it is not “unadorned speculation,” Simon v. Eastern Kentucky Welfare Rights Organization, 426 U.S. 26, 44, 96 S.Ct. 1917, 1927, 48 L.Ed.2d 450 (1976), to conclude that the Ordinance will be enforced against members of the Association. The likelihood of enforcement, with the concomitant probability that a landlord's rent will be reduced below what he or she would otherwise be able to obtain in the absence of the Ordinance, is a sufficient threat of actual injury to satisfy Art. III's requirement that “[a] plaintiff who challenges a statute must demonstrate a realistic danger of sustaining a direct injury as a result of the statute's operation or enforcement.” Babbitt v. Farm Workers, 442 U.S. 289, 298, 99 S.Ct. 2301, 2308, 60 L.Ed.2d 895 (1979).<sup>4</sup>

<sup>4</sup> Appellees also argue that Pennell lacks standing individually because in early 1987 he sold the properties he owned at the time the complaint in this action was filed. See Brief for Appellees 8. In a declaration submitted to the Court, Pennell admits that he sold these properties, but states that he recently repurchased and now owns one of the apartment buildings in San Jose that he formerly owned. Declaration of Richard Pennell ¶

7. That property was and still is “subject to the Ordinance.” Id., ¶ 8. Because we conclude that the Association has standing and that therefore we have jurisdiction over this appeal, we find it unnecessary to decide whether Pennell's sale and repurchase of the property affects his standing here.

[5] This said, we recognize that the record in this case leaves much to be desired in terms of specificity for purposes of determining the standing of appellants to challenge this Ordinance. Undoubtedly this is at least in part a reflection of the fact that the case originated in a state court where Art. III's proscription against **856 advisory opinions may not apply. We strongly suggest that in future cases parties litigating in this Court under circumstances similar to those here take pains to supplement the record in any manner necessary to enable us to address with as much precision as possible any question of standing that may be raised.

[6] Turning now to the merits, we first address appellants' contention that application of the Ordinance's tenant hardship provisions violates the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments' *9 prohibition against taking of private property for public use without just compensation. In essence, appellants' claim is as follows: § 5703.28 of the Ordinance establishes the seven factors that a hearing officer is to take into account in determining the reasonable rent increase. The first six of these factors are all objective, and are related either to the landlord's costs of providing an adequate rental unit, or to the condition of the rental market. Application of these six standards results in a rent that is “reasonable” by reference to what appellants contend is the only legitimate purpose of rent control: the elimination of “excessive” rents caused by San Jose's housing shortage. When the hearing officer then takes into account “hardship to a tenant” pursuant to § 5703.28(c)(7) and reduces the rent below the objectively “reasonable” amount established by the first six factors, this additional reduction in the rent increase constitutes a “taking.” This taking is impermissible because it does not serve the purpose of eliminating excessive rents—that objective has already been accomplished by considering the first six factors—instead, it serves only the purpose of providing assistance to “hardship tenants.” In short, appellants contend, the additional reduction of rent on grounds of hardship accomplishes a transfer of the landlord's property to individual hardship tenants; the Ordinance forces private individuals to shoulder the “public” burden of subsidizing their poor tenants' housing. As appellants point out, “[i]t is axiomatic that the Fifth Amendment's just compensation provision is ‘designed to bar Government from forcing some people alone to bear public burdens which, in all fairness and justice, should be borne by the public as a whole.’ ” First English Evangelical Lutheran Church of Glendale v. County of Los Angeles, 482 U.S. 304, 318–319, 107 S.Ct. 2378, 2388, 96 L.Ed.2d 250 (1987) (quoting Armstrong v. United States, 364 U.S. 40, 49, 80 S.Ct. 1563, 1569, 4 L.Ed.2d 1554 (1960)).

[7] [8] We think it would be premature to consider this contention on the present record. As things stand, there simply is no evidence that the “tenant hardship clause” has in fact ever *10 been relied upon by a hearing officer to reduce a rent below the figure it would have been set at on the basis of the other factors set forth in the Ordinance. In addition, there is nothing in the Ordinance requiring that a hearing officer in fact reduce a proposed rent increase on grounds of tenant hardship. Section 5703.29 does make it mandatory that hardship be considered—it states that “the Hearing Officer shall consider the economic hardship imposed on the present tenant”—but it then goes on to state that if “the proposed increase constitutes an unreasonably severe financial or economic hardship ... he may order that the excess of the increase” be disallowed. § 5703.29 (emphasis added). Given the “essentially ad hoc, factual inquir[y]” involved in the takings analysis, Kaiser Aetna v. United States, 444 U.S. 164, 175, 100 S.Ct. 383, 390, 62 L.Ed.2d 332 (1979), we have found it particularly important in takings cases to adhere to our admonition that “the constitutionality of statutes ought not be decided except in an actual factual setting that makes such a decision necessary.” Hodel v. Virginia Surface Mining & Reclamation Assn., Inc., 452 U.S. 264, 294–295, 101 S.Ct. 2352, 2369–2370, 69 L.Ed.2d 1 (1981). In Virginia Surface Mining, for example, we found that a challenge to the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977, 91 Stat. 447, 30 U.S.C. § 1201 et seq., was “premature,” **857 452 U.S., at 296, n. 37, 101 S.Ct., at 2370, n. 37, and “not ripe for judicial resolution,” id., at 297, 101 S.Ct., at 2371, because the property owners in that case had not identified any property that had allegedly been taken by the Act, nor had they sought administrative relief from the Act’s restrictions on surface mining. Similarly, in this case we find that the mere fact that a hearing officer is enjoined to consider hardship to the tenant in fixing a landlord’s rent, without any showing in a particular case as to the consequences of that injunction in the ultimate determination of the rent, does not present a sufficiently concrete factual setting for the adjudication of the takings claim appellants raise here. Cf. CIO v. McAdory, 325 U.S. 472, 475–476, 65 S.Ct. 1395, 1397, 89 L.Ed. 1741 (1945) (declining to consider the validity of a state statute when the record did not *11 show that the statute would ever be applied to any of the petitioner’s members).<sup>5</sup>

5 For this reason we also decline to address appellants’ contention that application of § 5703.28(c)(7) to reduce an otherwise reasonable rent increase on the basis of tenant hardship violates the Fourteenth Amendment’s due process and equal protection requirements. See Hodel v. Indiana, 452 U.S. 314, 335–336, 101 S.Ct. 2376, 2388–2389, 69 L.Ed.2d 40 (1981) (dismissing as “premature” a due process challenge to the civil penalty provision of the Surface Mining Act because “appellees have made no showing that they were ever assessed civil penalties under the Act, much less that the statutory prepayment requirement was ever applied to them or caused them any injury”). Appellants and several amici also argue that the Ordinance’s combination of lower rents for hardship tenants and restrictions on a landlord’s power to evict a tenant amounts to a physical taking of the landlord’s property. We decline to address this contention not only because it was raised for the first time in this Court, but also because it, too, is premised on a hearing officer’s actually granting a lower rent to a hardship tenant.

[9] [10] [11] [12] [13] [14] [15] [16] Appellants also urge that the mere provision in the Ordinance that a hearing officer may consider the hardship of the tenant in finally fixing a reasonable rent renders the Ordinance “facially invalid” under the Due Process and Equal Protection Clauses, even though no landlord ever has its rent diminished by as much as one dollar because of the application of this provision. The standard for determining whether a state price-control regulation is constitutional under the Due Process Clause is well established: “Price control is ‘unconstitutional ... if arbitrary, discriminatory, or demonstrably irrelevant to the policy the legislature is free to adopt....’ ” Permian Basin Area Rate Cases, 390 U.S. 747, 769–770, 88 S.Ct. 1344, 1361, 20 L.Ed.2d 312 (1968) (quoting Nebbia v. New York, 291 U.S. 502, 539, 54 S.Ct. 505, 517, 78 L.Ed. 940 (1934)). In other contexts we have recognized that the government may intervene in the marketplace to regulate rates or prices that are artificially inflated as a result of the existence of a monopoly or near monopoly, see, e.g., FCC v. Florida Power Corp., 480 U.S. 245, 250–254, 107 S.Ct. 1107, 1111–1113, 94 L.Ed.2d 282 (1987) (approving limits on rates charged to cable companies for access to telephone poles); FPC v. Texaco Inc., 417 U.S. 380, 397–398, 94 S.Ct. 2315, 2326–2327, 41 L.Ed.2d 141 (1974) (recognizing that federal regulation of the natural gas market was in response to the threat of monopoly pricing), or a discrepancy between supply and demand in the market for a certain product, see, e.g., Nebbia v. New York, supra, 291 U.S., at 530, 538, 54 S.Ct., at 513, 516 (allowing a minimum price for milk to offset a “flood of surplus milk”). Accordingly, appellants do not dispute that the Ordinance’s asserted purpose of “prevent[ing] excessive and unreasonable rent increases” caused by the “growing shortage of and increasing demand for housing in the City of San Jose,” § 5701.2, is a legitimate exercise of appellees’ police powers.<sup>6</sup> Cf. Block v. Hirsh, 256 U.S. 135, 156, 41 S.Ct. 458, 459, 65 L.Ed. 865 (1921) (approving rent control in Washington, D.C., on the basis of Congress’ finding that housing in the city was “monopolized”). They do argue, however, that it is “arbitrary, discriminatory, or demonstrably irrelevant,” Permian Basin Area Rate Cases, supra, 390 U.S., at 769–770, 88 S.Ct. at 1361, for appellees to attempt to accomplish the additional goal of reducing the burden of housing costs on low-income tenants by requiring that “hardship to a tenant” be considered in determining the amount of excess rent increase that is “reasonable under the circumstances” pursuant to § 5703.28.<sup>7</sup> As appellants put it, “[t]he objective of alleviating individual tenant hardship is ... not a ‘policy the legislature is free to adopt’ in a rent control ordinance.” Reply Brief for Appellants 16.

<sup>6</sup> Appellants do not claim, as do some amici, that rent control is per se a taking. We stated in Loretto v. Teleprompter Manhattan CATV Corp., 458 U.S. 419, 102 S.Ct. 3164, 73 L.Ed.2d 868 (1982), that we have “consistently affirmed that States have broad power to regulate housing conditions in general and the landlord-tenant relationship in particular without paying compensation for all economic injuries that such regulation entails.” Id., at 440, 102 S.Ct., at 3178 (citing, inter alia, Bowles v. Willingham, 321 U.S. 503, 517–518, 64 S.Ct. 641, 648–649, 88 L.Ed. 892 (1944)). And in FCC v. Florida Power Corp., 480 U.S. 245, 107 S.Ct. 1107, 94 L.Ed.2d 282 (1987), we stated that “statutes regulating the economic relations of landlords and tenants are not per se takings.” Id., at 252, 107 S.Ct., at 1112. Despite amici’s urgings, we see no need to reconsider the constitutionality of rent control per se.

<sup>7</sup> As we noted above, see n. 5, supra, to the extent that appellants’ due process argument is based on the claim that the Ordinance forces landlords to subsidize individual tenants, that claim is premature and not presented by the facts before us.

<sup>13</sup> We reject this contention, however, because we have long recognized that a legitimate and rational goal of price or rate regulation is the protection of consumer welfare. See, e.g., Permian Basin Area Rate Cases, supra, 390 U.S., at 770, 88 S.Ct., at 1361; FPC v. Hope Natural Gas Co., 320 U.S. 591, 610–612, 64 S.Ct. 281, 291–292, 88 L.Ed. 333 (1944) (“The primary aim of [the Natural Gas Act] was to protect consumers against exploitation at the hands of natural gas companies”). Indeed, a primary purpose of rent control is the protection of tenants. See, e.g., Bowles v. Willingham, 321 U.S. 503, 513, n. 9, 64 S.Ct. 641, 646, n. 9, 88 L.Ed. 892 (1944) (one purpose of rent control is “to protect persons with relatively fixed and limited incomes, consumers, wage earners ... from undue impairment of their standard of living”). Here, the Ordinance establishes a scheme in which a hearing officer considers a number of factors in determining the reasonableness of a proposed rent increase which exceeds eight percent and which exceeds the amount deemed reasonable under either § 5703.28(a) or § 5703.28(b). The first six factors of § 5703.28(c) focus on the individual landlord—the hearing officer examines the history of the premises, the landlord’s costs, and the market for comparable housing. Section 5703.28(c)(5) also allows the landlord to bring forth any other financial evidence—including presumably evidence regarding his own financial status—to be taken into account by the hearing officer. It is in only this context that the Ordinance allows tenant hardship to be considered and, under § 5703.29, “balance[d]” with the other factors set out in § 5703.28(c). Within this scheme, § 5703.28(c) represents a rational attempt to accommodate the conflicting interests of protecting tenants from burdensome rent increases while at the same time ensuring that landlords are guaranteed a fair return on their investment. Cf. Bowles v. Willingham, supra, at 517, 64 S.Ct., at 648 (considering, but rejecting, the contention that rent control must be established “landlord by landlord, as in the fashion of utility rates”). We accordingly find that the Ordinance, which so carefully considers both the individual circumstances of the landlord and <sup>14</sup> the tenant before determining whether to allow an additional increase in rent over and above certain amounts that are deemed reasonable, does not on its face violate the Fourteenth Amendment’s Due Process Clause.<sup>8</sup>

8 The consideration of tenant hardship also serves the additional purpose, not stated on the face of the Ordinance, of reducing the costs of dislocation that might otherwise result if landlords were to charge rents to tenants that they could not afford. Particularly during a housing shortage, the social costs of the dislocation of low-income tenants can be severe. By allowing tenant hardship to be considered under § 5703.28(c), the Ordinance enables appellees to “fine tune” their rent control to take into account the risk that a particular tenant will be forced to relocate as a result of a proposed rent increase.

**859 [17] [18] [19] We also find that the Ordinance does not violate the Amendment's Equal Protection Clause. Here again, the standard is deferential; appellees need only show that the classification scheme embodied in the Ordinance is “rationally related to a legitimate state interest.” New Orleans v. Dukes, 427 U.S. 297, 303, 96 S.Ct. 2513, 2517, 49 L.Ed.2d 511 (1976). As we stated in Vance v. Bradley, 440 U.S. 93, 99 S.Ct. 939, 59 L.Ed.2d 171 (1979), “we will not overturn [a statute that does not burden a suspect class or a fundamental interest] unless the varying treatment of different groups or persons is so unrelated to the achievement of any combination of legitimate purposes that we can only conclude that the legislature's actions were irrational.” Id., at 97, 99 S.Ct., at 943. In light of our conclusion above that the Ordinance's tenant hardship provisions are designed to serve the legitimate purpose of protecting tenants, we can hardly conclude that it is irrational for the Ordinance to treat certain landlords differently on the basis of whether or not they have hardship tenants. The Ordinance distinguishes between landlords because doing so furthers the purpose of ensuring that individual tenants do not suffer “unreasonable” hardship; it would be inconsistent to state that hardship is a legitimate factor to be considered but then hold that appellees could not tailor the Ordinance so that only legitimate hardship cases are redressed. Cf. Woods v. Cloyd W. Miller Co., 333 U.S. 138, 145, 68 S.Ct. 421, 425, 92 L.Ed. 596 (1948) *15 Congress “need not control all rents or none. It can select those areas or those classes of property where the need seems the greatest”). We recognize, as appellants point out, that in general it is difficult to say that the landlord “causes” the tenant's hardship. But this is beside the point—if a landlord does have a hardship tenant, regardless of the reason why, it is rational for appellees to take that fact into consideration under § 5703.28 of the Ordinance when establishing a rent that is “reasonable under the circumstances.”

For the foregoing reasons, we hold that it is premature to consider appellants' claim under the Takings Clause and we reject their facial challenge to the Ordinance under the Due Process and Equal Protection Clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment. The judgment of the Supreme Court of California is accordingly

Affirmed.

Justice KENNEDY took no part in the consideration or decision of this case.

Justice SCALIA, with whom Justice O'CONNOR joins, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

I agree that the tenant hardship provision of the Ordinance does not, on its face, violate either the Due Process Clause or the Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment. I disagree, however, with the Court's conclusion that appellants' takings claim is premature. I would decide that claim on the merits, and would hold that the tenant hardship provision of the Ordinance effects a taking of private property without just compensation in violation of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments.

I

Appellants contend that any application of the tenant hardship provision of the San Jose Ordinance would effect an uncompensated taking of private property because that provision does not substantially advance legitimate state interests and because it improperly imposes a public burden on individual *16 landlords. I can understand how such a claim—that a law applicable to the plaintiffs is, root and branch, invalid—can be readily rejected on the merits, **860 by merely noting that at least some of its applications may be lawful. But I do not understand how such a claim can possibly be avoided by considering it “premature.” Suppose, for example, that the feature of the rental ordinance under attack was a provision allowing a hearing officer to consider the race of the apartment owner in deciding whether to allow a rent increase. It is inconceivable that we would say judicial challenge must await demonstration that this provision has actually been applied to the detriment of one of the plaintiffs.

There is no difference, it seems to me, when the facial, root-and-branch challenge rests upon the Takings Clause rather than the Equal Protection Clause.

The Court confuses the issue by relying on cases, and portions of cases, in which the Takings Clause challenge was not (as here) that the law in all its applications took property without just compensation, but was rather that the law's application in regulating the use of particular property so severely reduced the value of that property as to constitute a taking. It is in that context, and not (as the Court suggests) generally, that takings analysis involves an “essentially ad hoc, factual inquir[y],” Kaiser Aetna v. United States, 444 U.S. 164, 175, 100 S.Ct. 383, 390, 62 L.Ed.2d 332 (1979). We said as much less than a year ago, and it is surprising that we have so soon forgotten:

“In addressing petitioners' claim we must not disregard the posture in which this case comes before us. The District Court granted summary judgment to respondents only on the facial challenge to the Subsidence Act. The court explained that ‘... the only question before this court is whether the mere enactment of the statutes and regulations constitutes a taking.’ ...

“The posture of the case is critical because we have recognized an important distinction between a claim that the mere enactment of a statute constitutes a taking and *17 a claim that the particular impact of government action on a specific piece of property requires the payment of just compensation. This point is illustrated by our decision in Hodel v. Virginia Surface Mining & Reclamation Assn., Inc., 452 U.S. 264 [101 S.Ct. 2352, 69 L.Ed.2d 1] (1981), in which we rejected a preenforcement challenge to the constitutionality of the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977.... The Court [there] explained:

“ ‘Because appellees’ taking claim arose in the context of a facial challenge, it presented no concrete controversy concerning either application of the Act to particular surface mining operations or its effect on specific parcels of land. Thus, the only issue properly before the District Court and, in turn, this Court, is whether the “mere enactment” of the Surface Mining Act constitutes a taking.... The test to be applied in considering this facial challenge is straightforward. A statute regulating the uses that can be made of property effects a taking if it “denies an owner economically viable use of his land.” ...’

“Petitioners thus face an uphill battle in making a facial attack on the Act as a taking.” Keystone Bituminous Coal Assn. v. DeBenedictis, 480 U.S. 470, 493–495, 107 S.Ct. 1232, 1246–1247, 94 L.Ed.2d 472 (1987).

While the battle was “uphill” in Keystone, we allowed it to be fought, and did not declare it “premature.”

The same was true of the facial takings challenge in Hodel v. Virginia Surface Mining & Reclamation Assn., Inc., supra. It is remarkable that the Court should point to that case in support of its position, describing the holding as follows:

“In Virginia Surface Mining, for example, we found that a challenge to the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act ... was ‘premature,’ ... and ‘not ripe for judicial *18 resolution,’ ... because the property owners in that case had not identified any property that had allegedly been taken by the Act, nor had they sought administrative relief from the **861 Act's restrictions on surface mining.” Ante, at 856–857.

But this holding in Virginia Surface Mining applied only to “the taking issue decided by the District Court,” 452 U.S., at 297, 101 S.Ct., at 2371, which was the issue of the statute's validity as applied. Having rejected that challenge as premature, the Court then continued (in the language we quoted in Keystone):

“Thus, the only issue properly before the District Court and, in turn, this Court, is whether the ‘mere enactment’ of the Surface Mining Act constitutes a taking.” 452 U.S., at 295, 101 S.Ct., at 2370.

That issue was not rejected as premature, but was decided on its merits, id., at 295–297, 101 S.Ct., at 2370–2371, just as it was in Keystone, and as it was before that in Agins v. Tiburon, 447 U.S. 255, 260–263, 100 S.Ct. 2138, 2141–2142, 65 L.Ed.2d 106 (1980).

In sum, it is entirely clear from our cases that a facial takings challenge is not premature even if it rests upon the ground that the ordinance deprives property owners of all economically viable use of their land—a ground that is, as we have said, easier to establish in an “as-applied” attack. It is, if possible, even more clear that the present facial challenge is not premature, because it does not rest upon a ground that would even profit from consideration in the context of particular application. As we said in Agins, a zoning law “effects a taking if the ordinance does not substantially advance legitimate state interests, ... or denies an owner economically viable use of his land.” Id., at 260, 100 S.Ct., at 2141. The present challenge is of the former sort. Appellants contend that providing financial assistance to impecunious renters is not a state interest that can legitimately be furthered by regulating the use of property. Knowing the nature and character of the *19 particular property in question, or the degree of its economic impairment, will in no way assist this inquiry. Such factors are as irrelevant to the present claim as we have said they are to the claim that a law effects a taking by authorizing a permanent physical invasion of property. See Loretto v. Teleprompter Manhattan CATV Corp., 458 U.S. 419, 102 S.Ct. 3164, 73 L.Ed.2d 868 (1982). So even if we were explicitly to overrule cases such as Agins, Virginia Surface Mining, and Keystone, and to hold that a facial challenge will not lie where the issue can be more forcefully presented in an “as-applied” attack, there would still be no reason why the present challenge should not proceed.

Today's holding has no more basis in equity than it does in precedent. Since the San Jose Ordinance does not require any specification of how much reduction in rent is attributable to each of the various factors that the hearing officer is allowed to take into account, it is quite possible that none of the many landlords affected by the Ordinance will ever be able to meet the Court's requirement of a “showing in a particular case as to the consequences of [the hardship factor] in the ultimate determination of the rent.” Ante, at 857. There is no reason thus to shield alleged constitutional injustice from judicial scrutiny. I would therefore consider appellants' takings claim on the merits.

II

The Fifth Amendment of the United States Constitution, made applicable to the States through the Fourteenth Amendment, Chicago, B. & Q.R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U.S. 226, 239, 17 S.Ct. 581, 585, 41 L.Ed. 979 (1897), provides that “private property [shall not] be taken for public use, without just compensation.” We have repeatedly observed that the purpose of this provision is “to bar Government from forcing some people alone to bear public burdens which, in all fairness and justice, should be borne by the public as a whole.” Armstrong v. United States, 364 U.S. 40, 49, 80 S.Ct. 1563, 1569, 4 L.Ed.2d 1554 (1960); see also *20 **862 First English Evangelical Lutheran Church of Glendale v. Los Angeles County, 482 U.S. 304, 318–319, 107 S.Ct. 2378, 2388, 96

L.Ed.2d 250 (1987); Webb's Fabulous Pharmacies, Inc. v. Beckwith, 449 U.S. 155, 163, 101 S.Ct. 446, 452, 66 L.Ed.2d 358 (1980); Agins v. Tiburon, supra, 447 U.S., at 260, 100 S.Ct. at 2141; Penn Central Transportation Co. v. New York City, 438 U.S. 104, 123, 98 S.Ct. 2646, 2658, 57 L.Ed.2d 631 (1978); Monongahela Navigation Co. v. United States, 148 U.S. 312, 325, 13 S.Ct. 622, 625, 37 L.Ed. 463 (1893).

Traditional land-use regulation (short of that which totally destroys the economic value of property) does not violate this principle because there is a cause-and-effect relationship between the property use restricted by the regulation and the social evil that the regulation seeks to remedy. Since the owner's use of the property is (or, but for the regulation, would be) the source of the social problem, it cannot be said that he has been singled out unfairly. Thus, the common zoning regulations requiring subdividers to observe lot-size and set-back restrictions, and to dedicate certain areas to public streets, are in accord with our constitutional traditions because the proposed property use would otherwise be the cause of excessive congestion. The same cause-and-effect relationship is popularly thought to justify emergency price regulation: When commodities have been priced at a level that produces exorbitant returns, the owners of those commodities can be viewed as responsible for the economic hardship that occurs. Whether or not that is an accurate perception of the way a free-market economy operates, it is at least true that the owners reap unique benefits from the situation that produces the economic hardship, and in that respect singling them out to relieve it may not be regarded as “unfair.” That justification might apply to the rent regulation in the present case, apart from the single feature under attack here.

Appellants do not contest the validity of rent regulation in general. They acknowledge that the city may constitutionally set a “reasonable rent” according to the statutory minimum and the six other factors that must be considered by the hearing officer (cost of debt servicing, rental history of the unit, physical condition of the unit, changes in housing services, other *21 financial information provided by the landlord, and market value rents for similar units). San Jose Municipal Ordinance 19696, § 5703.28(c) (1979). Appellants' only claim is that a reduction of a rent increase below what would otherwise be a “reasonable rent” under this scheme may not, consistently with the Constitution, be based on consideration of the seventh factor—the hardship to the tenant as defined in § 5703.29. I think they are right.

Once the other six factors of the Ordinance have been applied to a landlord's property, so that he is receiving only a reasonable return, he can no longer be regarded as a "cause" of exorbitantly priced housing; nor is he any longer reaping distinctively high profits from the housing shortage. The seventh factor, the "hardship" provision, is invoked to meet a quite different social problem: the existence of some renters who are too poor to afford even reasonably priced housing. But that problem is no more caused or exploited by landlords than it is by the grocers who sell needy renters their food, or the department stores that sell them their clothes, or the employers who pay them their wages, or the citizens of San Jose holding the higher paying jobs from which they are excluded. And even if the neediness of renters could be regarded as a problem distinctively attributable to landlords in general, it is not remotely attributable to the particular landlords that the Ordinance singles out—namely, those who happen to have a "hardship" tenant at the present time, or who may happen to rent to a "hardship" tenant in the future, or whose current or future affluent tenants may happen to decline into the "hardship" category.

The traditional manner in which American government has met the problem of those who cannot pay reasonable prices for **863 privately sold necessities—a problem caused by the society at large—has been the distribution to such persons of funds raised from the public at large through taxes, either in cash (welfare payments) or in goods (public housing, publicly subsidized housing, and food stamps). Unless we are to *22 abandon the guiding principle of the Takings Clause that "public burdens ... should be borne by the public as a whole," Armstrong, 364 U.S., at 49, 80 S.Ct., at 1569, this is the only manner that our Constitution permits. The fact that government acts through the landlord-tenant relationship does not magically transform general public welfare, which must be supported by all the public, into mere "economic regulation," which can disproportionately burden particular individuals. Here the city is not "regulating" rents in the relevant sense of preventing rents that are excessive; rather, it is using the occasion of rent regulation (accomplished by the rest of the Ordinance) to establish a welfare program privately funded by those landlords who happen to have "hardship" tenants.

Of course all economic regulation effects wealth transfer. When excessive rents are forbidden, for example, landlords as a class become poorer and tenants as a class (or at least incumbent tenants as a class) become richer. Singling out landlords to be the transferors may be within our traditional constitutional notions of fairness, because they can plausibly be regarded as the source or the beneficiary of the high-rent problem. Once such a connection is no longer required, however, there is no end to the social transformations that can be accomplished by so-called "regulation," at great expense to the democratic process.

The politically attractive feature of regulation is not that it permits wealth transfers to be achieved that could not be achieved otherwise; but rather that it permits them to be achieved "off budget," with relative invisibility and thus relative immunity from normal democratic processes. San Jose might, for example, have accomplished something like the result here by simply raising the real estate tax upon rental properties and using the additional revenues thus acquired to pay part of the rents of "hardship" tenants. It seems to me doubtful, however, whether the citizens of San Jose would allow funds in the municipal treasury, from wherever derived, to be distributed to a family of four with income as *23 high as $32,400 a year—the generous maximum necessary to qualify automatically as a "hardship" tenant under the rental Ordinance.* The voters might well see other, more pressing, social priorities. And of course what $32,400-a-year renters can acquire through spurious "regulation," other groups can acquire as well. Once the door is opened it is not unreasonable to expect price regulations requiring private businesses to give special discounts to senior citizens (no matter how affluent), or to students, the handicapped, or war veterans. Subsidies for these groups may well be a good idea, but because of the operation of the Takings Clause our governmental system has required them to be applied, in general, through the process of taxing and spending, where both economic effects and competing priorities are more evident.

* Under the San Jose Ordinance, "hardship" tenants include (though are not limited to) those whose "household income and monthly housing expense meets [sic] the criteria" for assistance under the existing housing provisions of § 8 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, 42 U.S.C. § 1437f (1982 ed. and Supp. III). The United States Department of Housing and Urban Development currently limits assistance under these provisions for families of four in the San Jose area to those who earn $32,400 or less per year. Memorandum from U.S. Dept. of Housing and Urban Development, Assistant Secretary for Housing-Federal Housing Comm'r, Income Limits for Lower Income and Very Low-Income Families

Under the Housing Act of 1937 (Jan. 15, 1988).

That fostering of an intelligent democratic process is one of the happy effects of the constitutional prescription—perhaps accidental, perhaps not. Its essence, however, is simply the unfairness of making one **864 citizen pay, in some fashion other than taxes, to remedy a social problem that is none of his creation. As the Supreme Court of New Jersey said in finding unconstitutional a scheme displaying, among other defects, the same vice I find dispositive here:

“A legislative category of economically needy senior citizens is sound, proper and sustainable as a rational classification. But compelled subsidization by landlords

*24 or by tenants who happen to live in an apartment building with senior citizens is an improper and unconstitutional method of solving the problem.” Property Owners Assn. v. North Bergen, 74 N.J. 327, 339, 378 A.2d 25, 31 (1977).

I would hold that the seventh factor in § 5703.28(c) of the San Jose Ordinance effects a taking of property without just compensation.

All Citations

485 U.S. 1, 108 S.Ct. 849, 99 L.Ed.2d 1, 56 USLW 4168

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-45

581 B.R. 452

United States Bankruptcy Court, D. Maryland, at Baltimore.

IN RE: Byung Mook CHO, Debtor.

In re The New Belvedere Cleaners, Inc., Debtor.

Case No. 17-22057-MMH,

Case No. 17-22058-MMH

|

Signed March 13, 2018

Synopsis

Background: Chapter 11 debtors that owned and operated dry cleaning business filed motion to reject executory contract, namely, a prepetition settlement agreement reached in state court suit brought by former owners of the business asserting claims against debtors for, inter alia, fraud and fraudulent conveyance, which debtors had refused to sign. Former owners objected.

Holdings: The Bankruptcy Court, Michelle M. Harner, J., held that:

[1] under Maryland law, state court's oral ruling requiring debtors to execute oral settlement agreement was not a final judgment for purposes of res judicata or issue preclusion;

[2] under Maryland law, parties' oral settlement agreement was a valid and enforceable contract; and

[3] agreement was an executory contract subject to rejection in the debtors' Chapter 11 cases.

Motion granted.

West Headnotes (14)

[1] Bankruptcy 🔑 Assumption, Rejection, or Assignment

Debtor may reject an executory contract if it is advantageous to the debtor to do so. 11 U.S.C.A. § 365(a).

[2] Bankruptcy 🔑 Grounds for and Objections to Assumption, Rejection, or Assignment

Debtor in possession or trustee must show that proposed rejection of executory contract or unexpired lease provides a benefit to, or eliminates burdensome obligations on, the estate. 11 U.S.C.A. § 365(a).

[3] Bankruptcy 🔑 "Business judgment" test in general

Courts generally refrain from second-guessing a debtor in possession's business judgment regarding a proposed assumption or rejection of an executory contract or unexpired lease. 11 U.S.C.A. § 365(a).

[4] Judgment 🔑 Nature and requisites of former recovery as bar in general

Under Maryland law, the elements of res judicata, or claim preclusion, are: (1) parties in the present litigation are the same or in privity with the parties to the earlier dispute; (2) claim presented in the current action is identical to the one determined in the prior adjudication; and (3) there has been a final judgment on the merits.

[5] Judgment 🔑 Finality of Determination

Judgment 🔑 Nature and elements of bar or estoppel by former adjudication

Under Maryland law, if a final judgment exists as to a controversy between parties, those parties and their privies are barred under doctrine of res judicata from relitigating any claim upon which the judgment is based.

[6] Judgment 🔑 Nature and requisites of former adjudication as ground of estoppel in general

Maryland law recognizes issue preclusion when an issue of fact or law is actually litigated and determined by a valid and final judgment, and the determination is essential to the judgment, the determination is conclusive in a subsequent action between the parties, whether on the same or a different claim.

[7] Judgment 🔑 Finality of determination

Under Maryland law, state court's oral ruling requiring Chapter 11 debtors that owned and operated dry cleaning business to execute oral settlement agreement reached with former owners of the business in suit brought by former owners asserting claims against debtors for, inter alia, fraud and fraudulent conveyance was not a final judgment for purposes of res judicata or issue preclusion.

[8] Compromise, Settlement, and Release 🔑 Finance, banking, and credit

Under Maryland law, oral settlement agreement reached between Chapter 11 debtors that owned and operated dry cleaning business and former owners in state court suit brought by former owners of the business asserting claims against debtors for, inter alia, fraud and fraudulent conveyance was a valid and enforceable contract; debtor acknowledged the agreement under oath in state court.

[9] Bankruptcy 🔑 Executory nature in general

Contract is executory that debtor may reject if the obligations of both debtor and the other party to the contract are so far unperformed that the failure of either to complete the performance would constitute a material breach excusing the performance of the other. 11 U.S.C.A. § 365.

[10] Contracts 🔑 Discharge of contract by breach

Under Maryland law, although any breach of contract may give rise to a cause of action for damages, only a material breach discharges the non-breaching party of its duty to perform.

[11] Contracts 🔑 Effect of breach in general

Under Maryland law, a breach of contract is material if it affects the purpose of the contract in an important or vital way.

[12] Bankruptcy 🔑 Executory nature in general

Oral settlement agreement reached between Chapter 11 debtors that owned and operated dry cleaning business and former owners in state court suit brought by former owners of the business asserting claims against debtors for, inter alia, fraud and fraudulent conveyance, which debtors had refused to sign, was an executory contract subject to rejection in the debtors' Chapter 11 cases; core purpose of the agreement was to resolve the pending legal disputes between the parties, providing certainty and finality to each affected party, and in exchange for the transfer of a certain business and a cash payment, the parties agreed to dismiss the litigation between them. 11 U.S.C.A. § 365(a).

[13] Bankruptcy 🔑 Protection Against Discrimination or Collection Efforts in General; "Fresh Start."

The protections of the Bankruptcy Code are reserved for the honest but unfortunate debtor.

[14] Bankruptcy 🔑 Protection Against Discrimination or Collection Efforts in General; "Fresh Start."

In administering bankruptcy cases, courts should be concerned with ensuring that perpetrators of fraud are not allowed to hide behind the skirts of the Bankruptcy Code.

Attorneys and Law Firms

*454 Michael Stephen Myers, Scarlett, Croll & Myers, P.A., Baltimore, MD, Christopher S. Young, Business & Technology Law Group, Columbia, MD, for Debtor.

MEMORANDUM OPINION

MICHELLE M. HARNER, U.S. BANKRUPTCY JUDGE

A debtor in possession may assume or reject an executory contract in a chapter 11 case.<sup>1</sup> The U.S. Bankruptcy Code<sup>2</sup> does not define the term “executory contract,” and courts often struggle to determine executoryness under applicable case law. The dispute before the Court is no exception—the primary issue concerns the characterization of a prepetition settlement agreement as an executory contract, and the parties vehemently disagree regarding its executoryness. Although the Debtors dispute in the first instance that they are bound by the settlement agreement, the record suggests otherwise, requiring the Court to determine whether the Debtors may reject the settlement agreement as an executory contract under section 365 of the Code.

<sup>1</sup> A debtor in possession, as the Plaintiff in this adversary proceeding, possesses powers similar to the bankruptcy trustee under section 1107 of the Bankruptcy Code. 11 U.S.C. § 1107.

<sup>2</sup> 11 U.S.C. §§ 101, et seq. (the “Code”).

Whether a contract is executory depends on the facts of the particular matter, the language of the subject agreement, and the consequences under applicable nonbankruptcy law of either party ceasing to perform any ongoing or remaining obligations under the contract. Here, the core purpose of the settlement agreement was to resolve the pending legal disputes between the parties, providing certainty and finality to each affected party. In exchange for the transfer of a certain business and a cash payment, the parties agreed to dismiss the litigation between them; the non-debtor parties agreed to dismiss, and to take certain other action in, related litigation involving a third party; and the parties agreed to refrain from disparaging each other and their respective businesses. *455 Considering the totality of the circumstances and the core purpose of the settlement agreement, the Court determines that the settlement agreement is an executory contract and subject to rejection in the Debtors' chapter 11 cases. Notably, because the Debtors are seeking rejection, which simply constitutes a prepetition breach of the settlement agreement under section 365(g) of the Code, the parties' respective rights may not differ significantly from those available if the Court had found the prepetition settlement agreement to be non-executory and the Debtors refused to perform. This question is not, however, currently before the Court. Accordingly, for the reasons set forth below, the Court will grant the Motion and reserve judgment on the consequences of the Debtors' rejection of the settlement agreement.

I. Relevant Background

Prior to the petition date in these chapter 11 cases, on or about December 28, 2015, Chong Ok Lim and Young Jun Jun (the “Plaintiffs”) filed a lawsuit against Byung Mook Cho and The New Belvedere Cleaners, Inc. (“New Belvedere” and collectively with Mr. Cho, the “Debtors”), the above-captioned debtors and debtors in possession, in the Circuit Court for Howard County, Maryland (the “State Court Action”). The State Court Action involved, among other things, allegations of fraud and fraudulent conveyance relating to the business of New Belvedere. November Hearing Transcript at 10, 14–16. On or about April 13, 2017, the Debtors and the Plaintiffs participated in a settlement conference before the Honorable Lynne Battaglia. That conference resulted in an oral settlement agreement that purported to resolve the pending disputes between the parties and that was subsequently memorialized in a written document (the “Settlement Agreement”). Pl. Ex. 8.

Mr. Cho would not sign the Settlement Agreement. Consequently, the Plaintiffs filed a Motion to Enforce Settlement Agreement (the “Motion to Enforce”) in the state court. Pl. Ex. 1. The Honorable Dennis Sweeney conducted a hearing on the Motion to Enforce on June 29, 2017 (the “State Court Hearing”). At the State Court Hearing, the Plaintiffs requested an order enforcing the Settlement Agreement, and the Defendants argued that they should not be bound by, or required to sign, the Settlement Agreement. The parties presented evidence to support their respective positions. Judge Sweeney ultimately determined to enforce the Settlement Agreement. Pl. Ex. 2 at 19.

Mr. Cho still did not sign the Settlement Agreement. Accordingly, on July 24, 2017, the Plaintiffs filed a Petition for Show Cause for Constructive Civil Contempt (“Show Cause Petition”). Pl. Ex. 3. A hearing on the Show Cause Petition was set for September 12, 2017. That hearing did not go forward; it was stayed as a result of the filing of the Debtors' chapter 11 petitions on September 8, 2017.

Shortly after filing these cases, on September 13, 2017, each of the Debtors filed a Motion Pursuant to 11 U.S.C. § 365 to Reject Executory Contract (collectively, the “Motion”) [ECF 15 in Case No. 17–22057; ECF 12 in Case No. 17–22058].

By the Motion, the Debtors seek to reject the Settlement Agreement. The Plaintiffs filed an Objection to the Motion in each of these cases (collectively, the “Objection”) [ECF 22 in Case No. 17–22057; ECF 14 in Case No. 17–22058].<sup>3</sup> The Court held a hearing on the Motion on November 21, 2017 (the *456 “November Hearing”). The parties then submitted post-hearing briefs in December 2017 [ECF 45, 46], and offered closing arguments at a hearing before the Court on January 18, 2018 (the “January Hearing”).

<sup>3</sup> Subsequent to these separate filings, the Court entered an Order Providing for Joint Administration of Cases 17–22057 and 17–22058 [ECF 16; amended at ECF 17].

II. Jurisdiction and Legal Standards

The Court has jurisdiction over this proceeding pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1334, 28 U.S.C. § 157(a), and Local Rule 402 of the United States District Court for the District of Maryland. This proceeding is a “core proceeding” under 28 U.S.C. § 157(b) (2).

[1] [2] Section 365(a) of the Code provides that a trustee or debtor in possession, “subject to the court’s approval, may assume or reject any executory contract or unexpired lease of the debtor.” 11 U.S.C. § 365(a). “A debtor may reject an executory contract if it is advantageous to the debtor to do so.” In re Auto Showcase of Laurel, LLC, 2011 WL 4054839, at *5 (Bankr. D. Md. Sept. 12, 2011) (citing Lubrizol Enters., Inc. v. Richmond Metal Finishers, Inc., 756 F.2d 1043, 1046 (4th Cir. 1985)). Thus, a debtor in possession or the trustee must show that the proposed rejection of the executory contract or unexpired lease provides a benefit to, or eliminates burdensome obligations on, the estate. See, e.g., In re Alpha Natural Resources, Inc., 555 B.R. 520, 530 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2016).

[3] A debtor in possession’s decision to assume or reject an executory contract or unexpired lease is subject to a business judgment standard, and “should be ‘accorded the deference mandated by the sound business judgment rule as generally applied by courts to discretionary actions or decisions of corporate directors.’” Alpha Natural Resources, 555 B.R. at 529–530 (quoting Lubrizol, 756 F.2d at 1046). Courts generally refrain from second-guessing a debtor in possession’s business judgment regarding a proposed assumption or rejection of an executory contract or unexpired lease. See, e.g., Alpha Natural Resources, 555 B.R. at 530 (noting deference by courts to a debtor in possession’s business judgment “unless there is a showing of bad faith or gross abuse of discretion”). The rejection of an executory contract or unexpired lease that was not previously assumed in the case “constitutes a breach of such contract or lease ... immediately before the date of the filing of the petition.” 11 U.S.C. § 365(g)(1).

III. Analysis

The Debtors argue that they never signed the Settlement Agreement and that, even if they are bound by it, the Settlement Agreement is “onerous and burdensome” on their estates. Motion at 2. They also allege that the terms of the agreement cannot be completed as drafted. Id. Accordingly, the Debtors seek a determination that the Settlement Agreement either is not a contract, or that it is an executory contract subject to rejection under section 365 of the Code. The Plaintiffs, on the other hand, assert that the Settlement Agreement is enforceable and is not an executory contract for purposes of the Code. The Court considers each of the parties’ respective arguments below.

A. The Existence of the Settlement Agreement

The Debtors and the Plaintiffs have been involved in litigation for several years. The genesis of this litigation appears to be a dry-cleaning business once owned by the Plaintiffs and now owned and operated by the Debtors. The Plaintiffs allege fraud and fraudulent conveyance claims against the Debtors with respect to the events leading up to the *457 Debtors’ ownership of the business. Specifically, the Plaintiffs allege that, after they obtained a judgment against Hee Sook Paik, Ms. Paik and Mr. Cho “conspired to fraudulently convey the business” to Mr. Cho. Pl. Post–Hearing Brief [ECF 45] at 16. Mr. Cho denies these allegations. The Settlement Agreement purports to resolve those claims and the related disputes among the parties concerning the dry-cleaning business. Settlement Agreement, Pl. Ex. 8 ¶ E.

At the State Court Hearing to enforce the Settlement Agreement, the issue before the state court was whether Mr. Cho should be compelled to execute the Settlement Agreement. Judge Sweeney accepted evidence on this issue. Mr. Cho did not deny the existence of the Settlement Agreement. Pl. Ex. 2 at 10. Rather, Mr. Cho testified that, at some point after the parties’ settlement conference, the Plaintiffs allegedly violated the non-disparagement provision of the Settlement Agreement, which upset Mr. Cho and caused him to change his mind as to the prudence of the Settlement Agreement. Id. at 11–14. As such, Mr. Cho did not execute the agreement or take any action under it. Id. Judge Sweeney ultimately concluded, based on the evidence presented, that “the settlement agreement should be enforced and that the testimony supports that this was the agreement that was reached.” Id. at 19. Judge Sweeney then stated, “The Court finds that to be the case and the Court will require the parties execute the agreement within seven days of today’s date.” Id.

[4] [5] [6] The parties dispute the impact of Judge Sweeney’s oral ruling during the State Court Hearing on this Court’s evaluation of the Settlement Agreement. The United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit has instructed that “the full faith and credit statute requires a federal court to apply state res judicata law in determining the preclusive effect of a state court judgment.” Meindl v. Genesys Pac. Tech., Inc. (In re Genesys Data Tech., Inc.), 204 F.3d 124, 129 (4th Cir. 2000) (citations omitted). See also Shirazi v. Peninsula Internal Medicine, LLC, 2010 WL 5173028, at *2 (citing Meindl for same proposition). The res judicata doctrine typically encompasses two separate, but related concepts—that of claim preclusion and issue preclusion. “Under Maryland law, the elements of res judicata, or claim preclusion, are: (1) that the parties in the present litigation are the same or in privity with the parties to the earlier dispute; (2) that the claim presented in the current action is identical to the one determined in the prior adjudication; and, (3) that there has been a final judgment on the merits. ... If a final judgment exists as to a controversy between parties, those parties and their privies are barred from relitigating any claim upon which the judgment is based.” Anne Arundel Cty. Bd. of Educ. v. Norville, 390 Md. 93, 887 A.2d 1029, 1037 (2005) (citations omitted). In addition, Maryland law recognizes issue preclusion “when an issue of fact or law is actually litigated and determined by a valid and final judgment, and the determination is essential to the judgment, the determination is conclusive in a subsequent action between the parties, whether on the same or a different claim.” Janes v. State, 350 Md. 284, 711 A.2d 1319, 1324 (1998).

[7] Judge Sweeney’s oral ruling concerning the existence of the Settlement Agreement and the Debtors’ obligation to execute that agreement constitutes a decision on an issue of fact that was actually litigated by the parties. Judge Sweeney held an evidentiary issue on that precise issue, he made factual determinations based on the evidence, and both parties had an opportunity to litigate fully on that *458 issue. The oral ruling was not, however, incorporated into a final judgment or otherwise noted as a judgment, final or otherwise, on the docket. Pl. Ex. 9. See also, e.g., Md. Rule 2–601; Scarborough v. Altstatt, 228 Md.App. 560, 140 A.3d 497, 501 (2016) (explaining requirements for final judgment under Maryland law). Thus, Judge Sweeney’s oral ruling does not technically satisfy all of the required elements of claim or issue preclusion under Maryland law. See, e.g., Snavely v. Miller (In re Miller), 397 F.3d 726, 729 (9th Cir. 2005) (holding that, under Washington law, a state court’s oral ruling that was not yet incorporated into final judgment was not a final judgment for purposes of res judicata and issue preclusion). The Court is unwilling, however, to ignore Judge Sweeney’s ruling on the precise issue before it. Accordingly, the Court considers Judge Sweeney’s ruling, which has been admitted into evidence in this matter, in the context of evaluating the Settlement Agreement under Maryland law.<sup>4</sup>

4 The transcript of the State Court Hearing was marked as Plaintiffs’ Exhibit 2 and admitted into evidence in its entirety during the November Hearing.

[8] The Court has reviewed the evidence submitted during the November Hearing and considered Mr. Cho’s testimony from the November Hearing and the State Court Hearing. Mr. Cho’s testimony during these two hearings was consistent on a few key points: (i) Mr. Shin represented Mr. Cho in the State Court Action and the settlement conference before Judge Battaglia;<sup>5</sup> (ii) Mr. Cho knew something about the agreement reached at that settlement conference, though his recollection of it was more precise during the State Court Hearing;<sup>6</sup> and (iii) Mr. Cho never notified Mr. Shin or any other party that Mr. Shin was not authorized to act on Mr. Cho’s behalf or to negotiate the Settlement Agreement.<sup>7</sup> The primary difference in Mr. Cho’s testimony surrounds his recollection of the content of the Settlement Agreement and his participation or role in the settlement conference and State Court Hearing. Although the Court understands Mr. Cho’s position concerning the Plaintiffs’ allegations, the Court is persuaded by Mr. Cho’s testimony before Judge Sweeney—a hearing in which Mr. Shin was present and represented (as well as questioned) Mr. Cho.<sup>8</sup>

5 State Court Hearing Transcript at 9–10; November Hearing Transcript at 33, 44–45.

6 For example, during the State Court Action, Mr. Cho testified that he recognized the Settlement Agreement, that it memorialized the agreement reached during the settlement conference, and that he refused to sign it. State Court Hearing Transcript at 9–10. At the November Hearing, Mr. Cho denied recognizing the Settlement Agreement, denied understanding its contents, and denied ever agreeing to its terms. November Hearing Transcript at 33–34, 39–40, 44–45. Mr. Cho's basic posture at the November Hearing was that he did nothing wrong and should not have to pay anything. Notably, the Settlement Agreement acknowledged no finding of wrongdoing or liability on any party's part; Mr. Cho's testimony in this respect at the November Hearing went more to the merits of the underlying allegations and less to the facts and circumstances surrounding the settlement itself.

7 November Hearing Transcript at 44–45.

8 As set forth herein in notes 6 and 9, there are distinct variances in Mr. Cho's testimony at the State Court Hearing and the November Hearing. The primary difference is Mr. Cho's insistence at the November Hearing that he did not want or agree to settle the State Court Action; his basic position was that he did nothing wrong. See infra note 9. Because Mr. Cho did acknowledge during the November Hearing that he was present with his attorney, Mr. Shin, at the settlement conference, and that he did not inform anyone that Mr. Shin was not authorized to settle the State Court Action, the Court does not need to rely on any of the controverted testimony to reach its conclusion. The Court also observes that Mr. Cho appeared to have trouble with translations during the November Hearing, as some of the testimony is confused and disjointed. Unfortunately, unlike during the State Court Action, the Court did not have another Korean speaking individual present at the November Hearing (at the State Court Hearing, both Mr. Shin and the translator spoke Korean). The Court notes, however, that Mr. Cho's testimony at both the State Court Hearing and the November Hearing are now part of the record in these chapter 11 cases.

*459 For example, at the State Court Hearing, Plaintiffs' counsel asked, “Mr. Cho, the settlement agreement [marked as an exhibit and shown to Mr. Cho] memorialized the terms of the settlement that you had agreed to on April 13th, correct?” State Court Hearing Transcript at 10. Mr. Cho responded, “Yes.” Id. Mr. Cho also testified that the non-disparagement provision was a material part of the agreement reached during the settlement conference. Mr. Shin specifically asked Mr. Cho, in reference to that provision, “[a]nd was this provision—or, was this agreement or understanding discussed in that settlement conference that we had with Judge Battaglia.” Id. at 13. Mr. Cho responded, “Yes.” Id.<sup>9</sup>

9 At the November Hearing, in response to a question from his attorney regarding whether the parties reached “a framework of a settlement” during the settlement conference, Mr. Cho testified, “[n]o, we didn't agree.” November Hearing Transcript at 33. When asked why he did not comply with Judge Sweeney's order, Mr. Cho responded, “[t]here—that is the side that is done—engaging in fraud, I didn't do anything that was fraudulent. That's the side that was calling for me to do things, and I did—I didn't do any fraud.” Id. at 34. In response to Plaintiffs' counsel then asking Mr. Cho if he remembered being present at the settlement conference, Mr. Cho responded, “[y]eah, but I don't want to remember that.” Id. at 43. Mr. Cho then testified that he did not remember the content of his testimony before Judge Sweeney. Id. at 44. Mr. Cho also did not directly answer the question concerning whether his counsel, Mr. Shin, lied when he told the Plaintiffs' counsel that Mr. Cho refused to attend the meeting with the landlord to facilitate aspects of the Settlement Agreement. Id. at 47.

In Barranco v. Barranco, the Maryland Court of Special Appeals determined that an oral settlement agreement was enforceable where the party acknowledged that his attorney was his agent and that a general agreement on settlement had been reached during telephone conversations that occurred over the course of a day. 91 Md.App. 415, 604 A.2d 931, 418–419 (Md. Ct. Spec. App. 1992). The party contesting the agreement argued that certain terms had not been discussed during those conversations and that the agreement was subject to being reduced to a formal writing. The Maryland Court of Special Appeals rejected those arguments, observing that “[t]he oral agreement here was not a tentative agreement. It was not contingent upon a written agreement. It did not contemplate a written agreement to finalize terms not already finalized.” Id. at 421. As that court explained, “[i]n this case, the Husband and Wife struck a deal. The Husband cannot admit the agreement under oath but disavow it because he had a change of heart.” Id. The Maryland Court of Special Appeals affirmed the Circuit Court's order enforcing the settlement agreement. Id.

In this matter, Mr. Cho acknowledged the parties' agreement under oath in the State Court Hearing. Although his recollection concerning that testimony and the Settlement Agreement itself was foggy during the November Hearing, he did acknowledge that Mr. Shin was his counsel in the negotiation of the Settlement Agreement. See, e.g., Hunt v. Schauerhamer, 2016 WL 715797, at *5–*7 (D. Utah Feb. 22, 2016) (analyzing, among other things, the agency doctrines of actual and apparent authority in holding party was bound *460 by attorney's agreement and enforcing settlement agreement) (applying Utah law). Based on the entirety of the record and the Court's observation of Mr. Cho's testimony during the November Hearing, the Court finds that the Plaintiffs and Mr. Cho did in fact reach an agreement, satisfying the required elements of mutual assent, for purposes on forming an enforceable contract under Maryland law. See, e.g., Cochran v. Norkunas, 398 Md. 1, 919 A.2d 700, 708 (2007) (“It is universally accepted that a manifestation of mutual assent is an essential prerequisite to the creation or formation of a contract.”) (citations omitted);<sup>10</sup> Goss v. Bank of Am., 917 F.Supp.2d 445, 451 (D. Md. 2013) (“Under Maryland law, implied contracts, like all contracts, require ‘mutual assent (offer and acceptance), an agreement definite in its terms, and sufficient consideration.’”) (citations omitted). The decision of the Maryland Court of Special Appeals in Barranco and Judge Sweeney's oral ruling during the State Court Hearing further support this conclusion.<sup>11</sup> This result also accords with notions of comity<sup>12</sup> and judicial economy, particularly considering that parties relied on the state court process and the settlement conference in subsequent actions with respect to the litigation, the leasehold interest addressed in the Settlement Agreement, and other matters.<sup>13</sup>

<sup>10</sup> The Maryland Court of Appeals in Cochran did state that “[i]f the parties do not intend to be bound until a final agreement is executed, there is no contract.” 919 A.2d at 708. The Court recognizes that the agreement reached between the parties was not read into the record during the settlement conference as there was no reporter present, and the Settlement Agreement as written does not address the status of the agreement pending execution by both parties. In light of this, the Court takes note that Mr. Shin—Mr. Cho's counsel in the State Court Action—did not argue that a formal written agreement was a contingency to the validity or enforceability of the Settlement Agreement. Rather, Mr. Shin's argument suggested that the agreement, specifically the non-disparagement provision, was in fact enforceable. Based on the record, the parties reached an agreement on the material terms of the Settlement Agreement during the settlement conference. See, e.g., Campbell v. Adkisson, Sherbert & Assocs., 546 Fed. Appx. 146, 152 (4th Cir. 2013) (“To enforce a settlement agreement under its inherent equity power, the district court ‘(1) must find that the parties reached a complete agreement and (2) must be able to determine its terms and conditions.’”) (citations omitted). The record contains no evidence of any contingency to the enforcement of the agreement.

<sup>11</sup> Indeed, similar to the circumstances of Barranco, the Court finds that Mr. Cho has had a change of heart. That change may be based on how strenuously he now denies liability, but it does not change the fact that Mr. Cho, through his authorized agent Mr. Shin, agreed to the terms of the Settlement Agreement. Offer was made and accepted during the settlement conference. The record considered as a whole supports that conclusion.

<sup>12</sup> For a discussion of related principles of comity, see, e.g., Levin v. Commerce Energy, Inc., 560 U.S. 413, 423, 130 S.Ct. 2323, 176 L.Ed.2d 1131 (2010) (discussing principles of comity); Jaffe v. Accredited Surety and Casualty Co., 294 F.3d 584, 591 (4th Cir. 2002) (same); Roberts v. Child, 956 F.Supp. 923, 924 (D. Kan. 1997) (same).

<sup>13</sup> See Pl. Ex. 6 (stating actions taken by the Plaintiffs after the settlement conference with respect to the lease discussed in the Settlement Agreement).

The Court thus finds that, for the foregoing reasons, the Settlement Agreement represents the agreement reached by the parties and should be recognized as a valid and enforceable contract.

B. The Executory Nature of the Settlement Agreement

Having determined that the Settlement Agreement is in fact a valid and enforceable contract, the Court must determine whether that agreement constitutes an executory contract for purposes of *461 section 365 of the Code. 11 U.S.C. § 365(g)(1). The Code does not define the term “executory contract,” and the issue of executory nature often plagues litigants and bankruptcy courts alike. See, e.g., In re Roomstore, Inc., 473 B.R. 107, 110 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2012) (“Commentators and courts have noted that the law of executory contracts is ‘hopelessly convoluted’ and a ‘bramble filled thicket.’”) (citations omitted). The underlying purpose of section 365 of the Code is to allow a debtor in possession, in its business judgment, to assume or reject contracts in order to aid the debtor's reorganization.<sup>14</sup> Consequently, the potential benefits and burdens of the subject contract should be the primary focus of any motion under section 365. Yet, the gating question of whether a contract is executory for purposes of that section appears, in many cases, to steal the spotlight and distract from the critical question of whether assumption or rejection benefits the estate and the debtor's reorganization efforts.<sup>15</sup> This matter is no different.

<sup>14</sup> See, e.g., Jay L. Westbrook and Kelsi Stayart White, The Demystification of Contracts in Bankruptcy, 91 AM. BANKR. L.J. 481, 491–495 (2017) (explaining history and purpose of section 365 of the Code).

<sup>15</sup> For thoughtful and comprehensive discussions on executory nature and the status of the related debate, see Westbrook and White, supra note 14, at 493–496 (discussing the tests articulated infra note 16); American Bankruptcy Institute Commission to Study the Reform of Chapter 11, Final Report and Recommendations, 23 AM. BANKR. INST. L. REV. 1, 121–125 (2015).

[9] Courts generally apply one of two tests to evaluate whether a contract is executory for purposes of section 365 of the Code—the Countryman test and the Functional test.<sup>16</sup> The Fourth Circuit has adopted the Countryman test. “By that test, a contract is executory if the ‘obligations of both the bankrupt and the other party to the contract are so far unperformed that the failure of either to complete the performance would constitute a material breach excusing the performance of the other.’” Lubrizol, 756 F.2d at 1045 (citations omitted). The Countryman test requires unperformed obligations on the part of both parties to the contract, and a breach of any those obligations must be material in the sense that it would allow the non-breaching party to rescind, or cease performing under, the contract under applicable nonbankruptcy law.

<sup>16</sup> The Countryman test focuses on the executory nature of the contract, whereas the Functional test foregoes that consideration. Under the Countryman test, courts evaluate whether both parties have unperformed obligations under the contract, which if not performed would result in a material breach of the contract. See Vern Countryman, Executory Contracts in Bankruptcy: Part I, 57 MINN. L. REV. 439, 460 (1973). Under the Functional test, courts do not consider whether the contract is executory, but simply ask whether assumption or rejection of the contract provides a benefit to the estate. See Jay L. Westbrook, A Functional Analysis of Executory Contracts, 74 MINN. L. REV. 227, 282–85 (1989). In addition, although not generally adopted by courts as an alternative to the Countryman test, several courts have relied on the “exclusionary approach” described by Professor Michael Andrew in his work on executory contracts. See Michael T. Andrew, Executory Contracts in Bankruptcy: Understanding “Rejection,” 59 U. COLO. L. REV. 845 (1988); Michael T. Andrew, Executory Contracts Revisited: A Reply to Professor Westbrook, 62 U. COLO. L. REV. 1 (1991). See also In re Alongi, 272 B.R. 148, 153–155 (Bankr. D. Md. 2001) (citing Professor Andrew's work).

What constitutes an unperformed obligation and whether a breach of that obligation is material or trivial are often contested by the parties and interposed as a barrier to the relief requested under section 365. For example, in this matter, the Plaintiffs assert that they have no remaining unperformed obligations under the *462 Settlement Agreement and that, to the extent any obligations do remain on their part, they are trivial or ministerial in nature. The Debtors dispute this characterization of the parties' respective obligations under the Settlement Agreement. Before the Court can consider the Debtors' request to reject the Settlement Agreement, it must first resolve the parties' disagreement concerning the nature of their unperformed obligations under the agreement.

[10] [11] Maryland law governs the Settlement Agreement. Settlement Agreement, Pl. Ex. 8 § 10(f). Maryland courts have observed that “[s]ettlement agreements are enforceable as independent contracts, subject to the same general rules of construction that apply to other contracts.” Maslow v. Vanguri, 168 Md.App. 298, 896 A.2d 408, 419 (Md. Ct. Spec. App. 2005). Under Maryland law, “[a]lthough any breach of contract may give rise to a cause of action for damages, only a material breach discharges the non-breaching party of its duty to perform.” CytImmune Scis., Inc. v. Paciotti, 2016 WL 3218726, at *3 (D. Md. June 10, 2016) (quoting Jay Dee/Mole Joint Venture v. Mayor and City Council of Baltimore, 725 F.Supp.2d 513, 526 (D.Md. 2010) (citing Restatement (Second) of Contracts § 236 cmt. a.; 23 Williston on Contracts § 63:3 (4th ed. ) ) (emphasis in original). Maryland law provides that “[a] breach is material ‘if it affects the purpose of the contract in an important or vital way.’” CytImmune Scis., 2016 WL 3218726, at *3 (citations omitted). See also Maslow, 896 A.2d at 423 (explaining material breach as occurring “when ‘the act failed to be performed [goes] to the root of the contract or ... render[s] the performance of the rest of the contract a thing different in substance from that which was contracted for.’”) (citing Traylor v. Grafton, 273 Md. 649, 332 A.2d 651, 674 (1975)).

[12] Neither party disputes that the Debtors have unperformed, material obligations under the Settlement Agreement. Indeed, the Debtors must, among other things, transfer the dry-cleaning business, make a cash payment, and not interfere in the Plaintiffs' operation of the business. Settlement Agreement, Pl. Ex. 8 §§ 2.1, 4.3. The parties do not agree on the nature of the Plaintiffs' unperformed obligations. These obligations include: (i) authorizing their counsel “to file a Stipulation of Dismissal with the Circuit Court for Howard County, dismissing the Lawsuit”; and (ii) dismissing “their action pending against [Ms. Paik] in the United States Bankruptcy Court for the District of Maryland, Case No. 16–10260–DER, Adversary No. 16–00362, and note the judgment held against [Ms. Paik] in the Circuit Court for Baltimore City, Case No. 24–C–14–004134, as satisfied.” Id. at §§ 2.2, 3.2. Both of the foregoing obligations are triggered once the Debtors have, among other things, transferred the business and made the cash payment, neither of which has been done. Id. In addition, the Plaintiffs and the Debtors have an ongoing obligation “not to make any public statements, whether written or oral, or any other statements which the Parties reasonably believe are likely to become public, which could reasonably be interpreted, under the circumstances, as embarrassing, disparaging, prejudicial, or in any way detrimental to the interests of the other” parties. Settlement Agreement § 4.1.

Both parties thus unquestionably have unperformed obligations under the Settlement Agreement. The question then becomes whether these obligations—particularly the Plaintiffs' unperformed obligations—are material under Maryland law. This question turns, in part, on the primary purpose of the contract. See, e.g., CytImmune Scis., 2016 WL 3218726, at *3; Maslow, 896 A.2d at 423. Here, the parties entered into the Settlement Agreement to resolve all of the outstanding disputes between them concerning the dry-cleaning business, including those involving Ms. Paik. Settlement Agreement, Pl. Ex. 8 ¶ E, § 3.2. Although the Plaintiffs are understandably focused on the Debtors' obligations under section 2.1 of the Settlement Agreement and the transfer of the business and cash, those actions were not the only or primary purpose of the agreement considering the interests of all affected parties. Rather, the Plaintiffs' obligations to dismiss the pending litigation against the Debtors, to dismiss the pending litigation against Ms. Paik, and to note satisfaction in full of the judgment they hold against Ms. Paik speak directly to the primary purpose of settling the litigation and providing finality and certainty for the parties. Likewise, the non-disparagement provision bolsters and serves this purpose.

At the January Hearing, the Plaintiffs emphasized the non-contingent nature of the releases granted by the parties under the Settlement Agreement and that the releases were performed simultaneously with the Settlement Agreement becoming effective. That argument does not, however, eliminate the parties' independent obligation to dismiss the State Court Action.<sup>17</sup> Perhaps more importantly, the releases in the Settlement Agreement speak only to the claims involving the Plaintiffs and the Debtors. The releases do not address the claims that the Plaintiffs assert against Ms. Paik. Those claims are addressed separately in section 3.2—a section that imposes on the Plaintiffs both an obligation to dismiss an action, and an obligation to acknowledge the satisfaction of certain claims, against Ms. Paik. If the Plaintiffs do not perform such obligations, the Plaintiffs' litigation and claims remain, they are not barred by any release provision, and the remedy is a claim for breach of the Settlement Agreement. As noted above, the purpose of the Settlement Agreement was to resolve these kinds of issues. The failure of the Plaintiffs to perform under section 3.2 of the Settlement Agreement is a material breach, and a breach that could be enforced by the Debtors as the direct parties to the agreement. See, e.g., Kaplan v. First Options of Chicago, Inc. (In re Kaplan), 143 F.3d 807, 813 (3d Cir. 1998) (explaining that “since [the debtor] is a direct party to the Agreement, he has standing to sue for the breach of First Options’ commitment to provide services to [the third-party beneficiary]”).

17 Although most courts characterize releases as material, courts differ in approaches to obligations relating to dismissal. Some suggest that such obligations might be ministerial, while other courts take a more holistic approach to analyzing the obligations at issue. See, e.g., Schultz v. Verizon Wireless Services, 833 F.3d 975, 979 (8th Cir. 2016) (“The form of the release and dismissal order is a material part of any settlement. Verizon considered the inclusion of a mutual non-disparagement clause to be an essential part of the release. Negotiations broke down when the Schultzes refused to agree to that term, conclusively establishing that it was a substantial matter.”) (emphasis in original).

Moreover, although some courts disagree, several courts have held that, in the settlement context, a non-disparagement provision is a material term of the settlement agreement.<sup>18</sup> *See, e.g., *464 Higbee v. Sentry Insurance Co.*, 253 F.3d 994, 998 (7th Cir. 2001) (finding no enforceable settlement agreement because “material” terms were not agreed upon, and explaining that “the wording of the confidentiality and nondisparagement clause was a material term, at least as far as Higbee was concerned”); Moreno v. Tringali, 2017 WL 2779746, at *4–*9 (D. N.J. June 27, 2017) (finding a material breach of a litigation settlement agreement where evidence established that party violated non-disparagement provision). See also Schultz, 833 F.3d at 979. This approach is consistent with the core purpose of most litigation settlement agreements—i.e., the agreements are intended to provide finality and allow the parties to walk away from the litigation without findings of liability or other adverse consequences, such as negative comments and connotations from the adverse party or the fact that litigation was pending. See, e.g., Moreno, 2017 WL 2779746, at *8 (“Under their Settlement Agreement, the parties exchanged material promises and received assurances not just to be free from what the law already protects them from—i.e., defamation—but for significantly broader relief from ‘any disparaging remarks’ and even ‘any’ remarks that ‘cast any such Party in a negative light.’ ”). Although the Court did not find any Maryland case law directly on point, and the parties did not cite any, the Court is persuaded that under the circumstances of these cases and considering the purpose of a litigation settlement agreement, the non-disparagement provision is material and serves the core purpose of the Settlement Agreement. See, e.g., Maslow, 896 A.2d at 423 (“[W]e agree with appellee that the ‘no appeals’ provision was a central element of the Agreement, and appellant’s appeal of the jury’s verdict constituted a material, ‘substantial breach tending to defeat the object of the contract.’ ”) (quoting Vincent v. Palmer, 179 Md. 365, 19 A.2d 183, 188 (1941)); Convenience Retailing, LLC v. Sunoco, Inc., 2006 WL 3797927, at *2 (4th Cir. Dec. 21, 2006) (per curiam) (holding that facilities allowance fee included in reseller agreement was material and explaining that “[i]t is only when ‘a covenant goes only to part of a contract, is incidental and subordinate to its main purpose and its breach may be compensated in damages’ that a breach ‘does not warrant rescission of the contract but compensation in damages.’ ”) (quoting Traylor, 332 A.2d at 674).<sup>19</sup>

18 Although the Debtor testified concerning the materiality of the non-disparagement provision during the State Court Hearing, the Court did not consider that testimony in the context of evaluating the materiality of the provision for purposes of the Code. Maryland courts follow the objective approach to interpreting contract, unless the contract is ambiguous. See, e.g., Maslow v. Vanguri, 168 Md.App. 298, 896 A.2d 408, 420 (Md. Ct. Spec. App. 2006) (“To ascertain the parties’ intent, courts in Maryland ‘have long adhered to the objective theory of contract interpretation, giving effect to the clear terms of agreements, regardless of the intent of the parties at the time of contract formation.’ ”) (citations omitted); Geoghegan v. Grant, 2011 WL 673779, at *6 (D. Md. Feb. 17, 2011). No party has argued that the Settlement Agreement is ambiguous. Accordingly, the Court considers only the plain language of the Settlement Agreement in making its determination. In addition, although the Debtors raised a violation of the nondisparagement provision during the State Court Hearing, Judge Sweeney was not asked to, and did not rule on, the materiality of, or a breach concerning, the non-disparagement provision.

19 See also McClain & Co. v. Carucci, 2011 WL 1706810, at *8 (W.D. Va. May 4, 2011) (suggesting that a noncompete covenant that was only part of a much larger agreement could constitute a material breach because “it ‘deprive[s] the injured party of the benefit that the party justifiably expected from the exchange’ ” (citations omitted).

In the bankruptcy context, several courts have held that negative obligations and obligations to refrain from taking certain actions are material and sufficient to render a contract executory when those obligations serve the underlying purpose of the contract at issue. Notably, some of these obligations to refrain are similar to *465 not only the non-disparagement provision in the Settlement Agreement, but also to the Plaintiffs' affirmative obligation to act on certain pending litigation. For example, the court in In re WorldCom, Inc. found an obligation to refrain from challenging a state court consent judgment in the context of a settlement agreement material under section 365 of the Code. 343 B.R. 486, 496 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2006). As that court explained, “[e]ach performance goes to the essence of what the other party sought and expected when he entered into the ... Agreement, and without it, the party will lose the benefit of the bargain that he thought he struck.” Id. at 496–497 (quoting In re Teligent, Inc., 268 B.R. 723, 730–731 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2001)). Likewise, in Alpha Natural Resources, the court determined that the agreement was executory because “the Debtors have a material obligation to tender the Payment Obligations” and “[b]oth parties also have a material obligation to refrain from bringing the underlying claims that the Agreement purported to resolve.” 555 B.R. at 525 n.8. See also, e.g., Lubrizol, 756 F.2d at 1045 (“The unperformed, continuing core obligations of notice and forbearance in licensing made the contract executory as to RMF.”); RCI Tech. Corp. v. Sunterra Corp. (In re Sunterra Corp.), 361 F.3d 257, 264 (4th Cir. 2004) (finding contract executory where each party “possessed an ongoing obligation to maintain the confidentiality of the source code of the software developed by the other”); Roomstore, 473 B.R. at 114 (explaining that “continuing duties of the parties” to a contract can make the contract executory); In re Spoverlook, LLC, 551 B.R. 481, 486–487 (Bankr. D.N.M. 2016) (finding contingent obligation to release claims to be material).<sup>20</sup>

<sup>20</sup> The parties discussed the Spoverlook case in their post-hearing briefs, given the factual similarities between that case and the matter before the Court. The two settlement agreements have similar terms, but the release provision in Spoverlook was contingent on the debtor's performance of certain obligations. 551 B.R. at 486. Under the Settlement Agreement, the release provision appears to have been operative upon execution of the agreement. Pl. Ex. 8. The court in Spoverlook found the release obligation (though self-executing) to be material under the facts of that case and, thus, did not address the other remaining obligation, which was an obligation to dismiss the underlying state court action. Id. at 487. The court did, however, suggest that “[i]f the HOA's only remaining obligation were to dismiss the state court action, then it might not be significant.” Id. The Court acknowledges this statement in Spoverlook, but reaches a different conclusion based on all of the provisions in the Settlement Agreement, the primary purpose of the parties entering into the Settlement Agreement, and the applicable nonbankruptcy law in this case.

The Court acknowledges that some courts have found negative covenants insufficient to render a contract executory for purposes of the Code. See, e.g., Ready Productions, Inc. v. Jarvis (In re Jarvis), 2005 WL 758805, at *4 (Bankr. D.N.H. Mar. 28, 2005) (discussing nondisparagement agreements); In re Schneeweiss, 233 B.R. 28, 31–32 (Bankr. N.D.N.Y. 1998) (discussing covenant not to compete). Although the Court appreciates the analysis included in these decisions, it respectfully declines to follow their guidance based on the facts and circumstances of this particular matter. In addition, as noted by the court in WorldCom, at least some of these decisions “base their ruling upon the argument that restrictive covenants create passive and not affirmative obligations on the part of the party being held to them, and that such passive obligations do not [ ] rise to the level of materiality necessary for an executory contract to exist.” 343 B.R. at 496. The court then observed that “applying these arguments to this case would inherently place form over substance.” Id. This Court agrees.

*466 Every decision concerning whether a contract is executory must be made on the facts of the particular case and the standards set forth in the applicable nonbankruptcy law. Having analyzed the terms of the Settlement Agreement, considered the testimony of Mr. Cho at the November Hearing and the State Court Hearing, and reviewed applicable Maryland law, the Court finds that the Settlement Agreement is an executory contract under the Countryman test. Both parties to the Settlement Agreement have unperformed and, in some instances, ongoing obligations that, if not performed, would eviscerate the benefit of the bargain for the non-breaching party. Accordingly, the Debtors may seek to reject the Settlement Agreement under section 365 of the Code.

C. The Rejection of the Settlement Agreement

As explained above, section 365\(a\) of the Code permits a debtor in possession, after notice and a hearing, to reject an executory contract, if such rejection is advantageous to the estate. “Courts addressing that question must start with the proposition that the bankrupt’s decision upon it is to be accorded the deference mandated by the sound business judgment rule as generally applied by courts to discretionary actions or decisions of corporate directors.” Lubrizol, 756 F.2d at 1046. In these cases, the Debtors have asserted that the Settlement Agreement is onerous and, actually, counterproductive to the Debtors’ reorganization efforts. The terms of the Settlement Agreement require, among other things, the transfer of a business operated by the Debtors and a cash payment from the Debtors to two specific creditors in these cases on account of alleged prepetition claims. The Court appreciates the frustration articulated by the Plaintiffs in that they believe they hold valid claims against the Debtors and that they had, in good faith, reached a settlement of those claims prior to the filing of the Debtors’ chapter 11 petitions. The Plaintiffs are not, however, the only creditors in these cases,<sup>21</sup> and the Court must consider the interests of the estates in the context of the Debtors’ request to reject the Settlement Agreement.

<sup>21</sup> Notably, these chapter 11 cases do not only involve a two-party dispute. The Debtors have at least three secured creditors, including secured claims asserted by Columbia Bank and PNC Bank, at least two general unsecured creditors (not including the Plaintiffs), and a landlord. [ECF 1 Case No. 17–22057; ECF 1 in Case No. 17–22058].

On balance, the Court finds that the record supports the Debtors’ business judgment and their request to reject the Settlement Agreement. The Plaintiffs made various references to the Debtors’ alleged fraudulent conduct and bad faith in filing these chapter 11 cases. They did not, however, present any evidence beyond the facial allegations asserted in the State Court Action and the fact the Debtors filed these cases shortly before the hearing on the Show Cause Petition. The filing of a bankruptcy petition stops most prepetition litigation. That fact alone does not establish bad faith, particularly where the debtor has, as here, articulated a valid purpose to be served by the bankruptcy filing.<sup>22</sup> See, e.g., Carolin Corp. v. Miller, 886 F.2d 693, 700 (4th Cir. 1989)

(setting forth test to evaluate alleged bad faith filings that places burden on party opposing bankruptcy and requires a showing of both objective futility and subjective bad faith); In re Greenwood Supply Co., 295 B.R. 787, 794 (Bankr. D. S.C. 2002) (explaining, among other things, that subjective bad faith is a *467 totality of circumstances test, of which a bankruptcy filing to stop state court litigation is only one factor). Moreover, the Plaintiffs did not suggest or provide any evidence to suggest fraud or bad faith in the Debtors’ request to reject the Settlement Agreement, other than it is an effort to get out from under a deal the Debtors now do not like. Such motivation, however, often underlies a debtor’s request to reject an executory contract or unexpired lease in a bankruptcy case.

<sup>22</sup> The Court’s findings regarding fraud and bad faith are limited to evaluating the Motion and the Debtors’ business judgment in that context.

[13] [14] That said, the Court does not condone fraudulent conduct or bad faith filings. The protections of the Code are reserved for the “ ‘honest but unfortunate’ ” debtor. See, e.g., Brown v. Felsen, 442 U.S. 127, 128, 99 S.Ct. 2205, 60 L.Ed.2d 767 (1979) (quoting Local Loan Co. v. Hunt, 292 U.S. 234, 244, 54 S.Ct. 695, 78 L.Ed. 1230 (1934)). And the Court is mindful that, in administering bankruptcy cases, “courts should be ‘equally concerned with ensuring that perpetrators of fraud are not allowed to hide behind the skirts of the Bankruptcy Code.’ ” Twin City Fire Ins. Co. v. Estrin (In re Estrin), 2016 WL 691506, at *7 (Bankr. D.S.C. Feb. 19, 2016) (quoting Taylor v. Davis (In re Davis), 494 B.R. 842, 867 (Bankr. D.S.C. 2013) and Foley & Lardner v. Biondo (In re Biondo), 180 F.3d 126, 130 (4th Cir. 1999)). Nevertheless, on the record before it, the Court finds no bad faith in connection with the Debtors’ request to reject the Settlement Agreement.

In addition, rejection of the Settlement Agreement simply means that Debtors are relieved of performing their obligations under that agreement. Rejection is a breach of the Settlement Agreement by the Debtors, deemed to occur immediately before the petition date. See, e.g., 11 U.S.C. § 365\(g\); Lubrizol, 756 F.2d at 1048. Rejection generally does not eviscerate the non-breaching party’s state law rights under the contract.

Although the non-breaching party may be limited to a damages claim against the estate under sections 365\(g\) and 502\(g\) of the Code,<sup>23</sup> the Court is not by this Order addressing the parties’ respective rights upon breach, the amount of any claim resulting from breach, or the treatment of the any claim in these chapter 11 cases.<sup>24</sup> Notably, any nonbankruptcy rights that the Plaintiffs may retain do not include the right to request specific performance of the Settlement Agreement.<sup>25</sup> See, e.g., *468 Newman Grill Sys., LLC v. Ducane Gas Grills, Inc., 320 B.R. 324, 337 (Bankr. D. S.C. 2004) (“Plaintiffs are not entitled to claim specific performance as a method of relief from Ducane’s rejection of executory contracts in light of 11 U.S.C. § 365(g) ...”). See also Lubrizol, 756 F.2d at 1048. Accordingly, the Court reserves judgment on these and related issues pending further action by the parties in these chapter 11 cases.

<sup>23</sup> See, e.g., Lubrizol, 756 F.2d 1043, 1048 (“Even though § 365(g) treats rejection as a breach, the legislative history of § 365(g) makes clear that the purpose of the provision is to provide only a damages remedy for the non-bankrupt party.”).

<sup>24</sup> For example, in the Spoverlook case cited above (551 B.R. 481), the bankruptcy case ultimately was dismissed and, in granting that dismissal, Judge Thuma explained, “Debtor’s rejection of the Agreement was a breach of contract, and will continue to be so after dismissal of the case. ... Dismissal of this case therefore leaves the HOA and Debtor much like they were before the bankruptcy case was filed. ... The HOA can seek to enforce the Agreement as before. The HOA’s specific performance and other remedies, which were potentially curtailed in bankruptcy, remain available in state court, the same as if the bankruptcy case had never been filed.” In re Spoverlook, 2017 WL 3084898, at *2 (Bankr. D. New Mexico Jan. 4, 2017).

<sup>25</sup> The issue of specific performance could be viewed as one difference between rejection of the Settlement Agreement as an executory contract or characterization of that agreement as non-executory and subject to breach by the Debtors.

In the latter instance, the Plaintiffs’ monetary claims would still constitute prepetition claims because the Settlement Agreement was agreed upon prepetition. See, e.g., Spoverlook, 551 B.R. at 487 (citing In re Hawker Beechcraft, 486 B.R. 264, 276–277 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2013) for the proposition that “rejection of an executory contract is the economic equivalent of the debtor’s refusal to perform a non-executory contract, giving rise to the same unsecured claim). The Plaintiffs may believe that, in the non-executory context, they could at least argue a claim for specific performance. The success of that claim is, however, speculative at best considering the broad definition of “claim” under section 101(5) of the Code, which includes equitable relief, and the fact that monetary damages could compensate the Plaintiffs for any losses. 11 U.S.C. § 101(5)(B). Indeed, under Maryland law, the remedy of specific performance is rare, often reserved for transfers of real property (which this is not), and only available where, among other things, the requesting party has performed all of its obligations under the agreement. See, e.g., Cattail Assoc., Inc. v. Sass, 170 Md.App. 474, 907 A.2d 828, 843 (Md. Ct. Spec. App. 2006); Geoghegan v. Grant, 2011 WL 673779, at *9 (D. Md. Feb. 17, 2011).

IV. Conclusion

For the reasons set forth above, the Court concludes that the parties agreed to the terms of the Settlement Agreement prior to the petition date, the Settlement Agreement is an executory contract for purposes of section 365 of the Code, and the Debtors may reject the Settlement Agreement under section 365(a) of the Code. The Court will enter a separate order consistent with, and granting the relief set forth in, this Memorandum Opinion.

All Citations

581 B.R. 452, 65 Bankr.Ct.Dec. 106

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-46

560 B.R. 358

United States Bankruptcy Court, D. New Mexico.

IN RE: SPOVERLOOK, LLC, Debtor.

Case No. 15-13018 t11

Signed October 7, 2016

Synopsis

Background: Debtor moved to reject executory settlement agreement in bankruptcy, after state court had previously granted homeowners' association's request to enforce agreement against debtor.

Holdings: The Bankruptcy Court, David T. Thuma, J., held that:

[1] homeowners' association could be forced to accept claim for money damages in bankruptcy as alternative to whatever right of specific performance it otherwise would have upon debtor's breach of executory contract to convey real property to homeowners' association by rejecting it;

[2] state court's prepetition grant of motion by homeowners' association to enforce settlement agreement against debtor was not in nature of final judgment on association's right to specific performance of this agreement, of kind sufficient to reduce settlement agreement to final judgment for specific performance and to prevent debtor from rejecting agreement; and

[3] debtor's motion to reject could not be denied as having been filed in bad faith.

Motion granted.

West Headnotes (9)

[1] Bankruptcy 🔑 "Business judgment" test in general

"Business judgment" test determines whether court should approve debtor's proposed assumption or rejection of executory contract. 11 U.S.C.A. § 365(a).

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Bankruptcy 🔑 "Business judgment" test in general

"Business judgment" test is not particularly strict, and in applying this test to determine whether debtor should be allowed to reject an executory contract, bankruptcy court should defer to debtor's decision, as long as debtor demonstrates that rejection of contract is likely to benefit estate. 11 U.S.C.A. § 365(a).

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Bankruptcy 🔑 Grounds for and Objections to Assumption, Rejection, or Assignment

Bankruptcy court will approve debtor's proposed assumption or rejection of executory contract unless it is manifestly unreasonable or derives from bad faith, whim, or caprice. 11 U.S.C.A. § 365(a).

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[4] Specific Performance 🔑 Contracts Relating to Real Property

Under New Mexico law, specific performance is an alternative to legal remedy of money damages for breach of contract involving real estate.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Bankruptcy 🔑 Effect of Acceptance or Rejection

Homeowners' association could be forced to accept claim for money damages in bankruptcy as alternative to whatever right of specific performance it otherwise would have upon debtor's breach of executory contract to convey real property to homeowners' association by rejecting it. 11 U.S.C.A. §§ 101(5)(B), 365(g)(1).

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Bankruptcy 🔑 Executory nature in general

State court's prepetition grant of motion by homeowners' association to enforce settlement agreement against debtor was not in nature of final judgment on association's right to specific performance of this agreement, of kind sufficient to prevent debtor from rejecting agreement upon its bankruptcy filing; state court's order was not entered after trial and presentation of evidence or after any election of remedies by homeowners' association, but after short hearing consisting entirely or oral argument. 11 U.S.C.A. § 365(a).

[7] Courts 🔑 Debtor and creditor; bankruptcy; mortgages, liens, and security interests

State court's prepetition grant of motion by homeowners' association to enforce settlement agreement against debtor was not in nature of final judgment on merits and did not prevent debtor, based on principles of issue preclusion or pursuant to Rooker-Feldman doctrine, from seeking to reject settlement agreement in bankruptcy and to thereby avoid its obligation to convey real property to homeowners' association. 11 U.S.C.A. § 365(a).

[8] Bankruptcy 🔑 Grounds for and Objections to Assumption, Rejection, or AssignmentBankruptcy 🔑 "Bad faith."

It was not bad faith for debtor, after state court granted motion by homeowners' association to enforce executory settlement agreement against debtor, to file for bankruptcy for specific purpose of rejecting this settlement agreement, and motion to reject could not be denied as having been filed in bad faith. 11 U.S.C.A. § 365(a).

[9] Bankruptcy 🔑 "Bad faith."

In general, it is not bad faith for debtor to file a bankruptcy case for the purpose of rejecting a lease or executory contract. 11 U.S.C.A. § 365(a).

Attorneys and Law Firms

*359 James T. Burns, Albuquerque Business Law, P.C., Albuquerque, NM, for Debtor.

OPINION

Hon. David T. Thuma, United States Bankruptcy Judge

Before the Court is Debtor's motion to reject a state court settlement agreement with a homeowner's association. The Court previously found the settlement agreement was an executory contract. The homeowner's association resists rejection, arguing that it can obtain specific performance of the agreement, rejection would improperly contravene a state court order, and the proposed rejection is in bad faith. The Court disagrees and will grant Debtor's motion.

I. FACTS

The Court finds:

Debtor is the developer of a 260-acre residential development called San Pedro *360 Overlook (the "Subdivision") in the "East Mountains" area northeast of Albuquerque. Debtor has completed the first of three phases (Phase I), which consists of about 50 residential lots, a community center, and a gatehouse. The Subdivision was built on a large plot of open space in a manner that maintains the character of New Mexico's natural surroundings.

The Subdivision is near another high-end development called San Pedro Creeks ("SPC"). SPC currently is the only development that can be seen from the Subdivision. There is a large open space between the Subdivision and SPC, which includes a certain parcel of undeveloped property called "Tract D." A portion of Tract D abuts a highway.

Around 2003, buyers started purchasing and building on the residential lots in Phase I. The properties were primarily marketed by Campbell Ranch Realty, an affiliate of the Debtor. Debtor advertised that the Subdivision is adjacent to 625 acres of open space. It is unclear whether that open space includes Tract D.

By 2013, Debtor had sold all of its residential lots in Phase I. Pursuant to the restrictive covenants encumbering the Subdivision,<sup>1</sup> Debtor was obligated to cede control of the Subdivision to the San Pedro Overlook Community Association (the “HOA”) and to convey certain common areas to the HOA.

<sup>1</sup> Declaration of Covenants, Conditions, Restrictions, and Easement for San Pedro Overlook, admitted as Exhibit 21 (the “Declaration”).

Debtor did not timely perform these obligations, possibly because it could not afford the required inspections and repairs. Debtor's development plans were severely affected by the “great recession” of 2008. Throughout 2013, the HOA demanded that Debtor perform its transition obligations.

In 2014, the HOA sued Debtor in New Mexico's Thirteenth Judicial District Court, commencing an action styled San Pedro Overlook Community Association v. SP Overlook, LLC, cause no. D-1329-CV-2014-01119. The suit sought to compel Debtor to, inter alia, convey the common areas to the HOA.

On March 30, 2015, the HOA and the Debtor signed a settlement agreement, under which Debtor agreed to convey the common areas to the HOA by April 30, 2015, in exchange for a mutual release of claims. Each party also agreed to pay a certain portion of property taxes and to submit a stipulated order dismissing the lawsuit.

Debtor and the HOA thought they had settled their differences. It turned out, however, that a dispute remained concerning Tract D. Paragraph 2 of the agreement defines “common areas” as the areas identified in the Declaration. It is not clear Tract D comes within this definition. Paragraph 2 goes on to state, however, that “the parties agree that the real property described in Exhibit A to this Agreement constitutes the common areas to be conveyed by [Debtor] in accordance with this [paragraph] 2....” The description in Exhibit A includes Tract D.

Debtor maintains that Tract D is not and has never been part of the common areas, and that Debtor never intended to convey Tract D to the HOA. Accordingly, Debtor argues the settlement agreement is ambiguous, and/or that a mistake was made. The HOA, in contrast, argues that the agreement unambiguously obligates Debtor to convey Tract D to the HOA.

The disposition of Tract D is important to the parties. Debtor wants to realize the value of Tract D so it can begin development *361 on Phases II and III of the Subdivision. The HOA opposes any development of Tract D, and contends the Debtor represented that Tract D would remain undeveloped open space.

On July 22, 2015, the HOA filed a motion in state court to enforce the settlement agreement. The court held a short hearing on October 27, 2015. No witnesses testified, nor were any exhibits introduced into evidence. The hearing took about 33 minutes. The state court ruled for the HOA, stating:

I have reviewed this at some length, and I find that the settlement agreement is unambiguous, and should be ... enforced specifically by the Court. So the Court will decree that the defendant specifically perform and sign the deed. The issue concerning the tract—whichever one. ... I think the special warranty deed form is appropriate, in light of the fact that it calls out any and all easements of record. So the Court will order that defendant perform as indicated by the Court.

The parties agreed to submit an order memorializing the ruling within seven days. Counsel for the HOA prepared a form of order, but Debtor's counsel did not respond. On November 18, 2015, before the order was entered, Debtor filed this bankruptcy case. On the petition date, Debtor had not conveyed any property to the HOA, the HOA had not released any claims against the Debtor, and neither party had taken action to dismiss the lawsuit. At this Court's insistence, Debtor has since conveyed to the HOA all of the undisputed common areas, leaving only the disputed Tract D.

Debtor's interest in Tract D is its main asset. Debtor scheduled Tract D at $300,000; a lawsuit against Sonida, LLC at $250,000; and a potential malpractice suit against the lawyers who drafted the settlement agreement at $250,000. The value of the lawsuits is highly speculative. Sonida, LLC dissolved, and the malpractice suit may depend on, inter alia, the ultimate disposition of Tract D.

Debtor is not operating currently. Rejecting the settlement agreement and pursuing Tract D may be Debtor's main chance to reorganize.

By a memorandum opinion and order entered June 14, 2016, this Court determined the settlement agreement was an executory contract.

II. DISCUSSION

A. Rejecting Executory Contracts.

[1] A debtor-in-possession may assume or reject executory contracts, subject to bankruptcy court approval. 11 U.S.C. § 365(a).<sup>2</sup> The business judgment test determines whether the Court should approve a proposed assumption or rejection. In re Tilco, Inc., 558 F.2d 1369, 1373 (10th Cir. 1977); N.L.R.B. v. Bildisco and Bildisco, 465 U.S. 513, 104 S.Ct. 1188, 79 L.Ed.2d 482 (1984) (business judgment test applies to authorize rejection of an ordinary executory contract); In re Western Wood Products, Inc., 2013 WL 1386285, *21 (Bankr. D.N.M.) (citing Tilco and applying the business judgment test).

<sup>2</sup> All statutory references are to 11 U.S.C.

[2] The test is not particularly strict. In re Mile Hi Metal Systems, Inc., 899 F.2d 887, 896 n. 13 (10th Cir. 1990) (“We do not consider the ‘business judgment test’ to be a strict standard to meet.”) (quoting In re W. & L. Assoc., Inc., 71 B.R. 962, 966 (Bankr. E.D. Pa. 1987)). Deference is given to the debtor's decision, provided it demonstrates “that rejection of the contract will be likely to benefit the *362 estate.” Id. See also Lubrizol Enterprises, Inc. v. Richmond Metal Finishers, Inc., 756 F.2d 1043, 1046 (4th Cir. 1985) (articulating a deferential “benefit to the estate” standard); In re: Genco Shipping & Trading Limited, 509 B.R. 455, 463 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2014) (“A court should defer to a debtor's decision that rejection of a contract would be advantageous.”); In re Malden Mills Industries, Inc., 303 B.R. 688, 701 (1st Cir. BAP 2004) (“A court will generally not second-guess a debtor's business judgment regarding whether the assumption or rejection of a contract will benefit the debtor's estate.”).

[3] An alternative articulation of the test is that the Court will approve a proposed assumption or rejection unless it is manifestly unreasonable or derives from bad faith, whim, or caprice. Western Wood, 2013 WL 1386285, at *21 (Court will not interfere unless the decision is “so manifestly unreasonable that it could not be based on sound business judgment”) (quoting Lubrizol Enterprises, Inc., 756 F.2d at 1047); In re Sabine Oil & Gas Corp., 550 B.R. 59, 75 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 2016) (court will defer to debtor's decision to reject unless it is “the product of bad faith, whim, or caprice”); In re Cook, 2012 WL 5408905, *11 (Bankr. D.N.M. 2012) (same).

B. Specific Performance.

The HOA argues that rejection of the Settlement Agreement would be futile because the HOA would be entitled to specific performance in the event of a breach. The Court disagrees.

Rejection of an executory contract constitutes a breach of the contract as of the date immediately before the petition date. § 365(g)(1); In re Siggins, 2014 WL 1796685, at *5 (Bankr. D.N.M. 2014). The breach gives rise to a claim. § 502(g)(1). The non-debtor party's right to specific performance after rejection depends on whether the specific performance obligation qualifies as a “claim” that can be monetized and discharged.

A claim is defined to include a “right to an equitable remedy for breach of performance if such breach gives rise to a right to payment....” § 101(5)(B). As the Supreme Court noted:

Section [101(5)(B)] ... is intended to cause the liquidation or estimation of contingent rights of payment for which there may be an alternative equitable remedy with the result that the equitable remedy will be susceptible to being discharged in bankruptcy. For example, in some States, a judgment for specific performance may be satisfied by an alternative right to payment in the event performance is refused; in that event, the creditor entitled to specific performance would have a ‘claim’ for purposes of a proceeding under title 11.

Ohio v. Kovacs, 469 U.S. 274, 280, 105 S.Ct. 705, 83 L.Ed.2d 649 (1985) (quoting the sponsors of the 1978 Bankruptcy Reform Act, 124 Cong. Rec. 32393 (1978)).<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Specific performance is an equitable remedy. Kokoricha v. Estate of Keiner, 148 N.M. 322, 236 P.3d 41, 48 (2010); Westar Energy, Inc. v. Lake, 552 F.3d 1215, 1222 (10th Cir. 2009).

[4] In New Mexico cases involving real estate, specific performance is an alternative to the legal remedy of money damages. See Jones v. Lee, 126 N.M. 467, 971 P.2d 858, 862 (1999) (“Where a party elects to sue for damages resulting from a breach of land sale contract, the burden is on that party to present competent evidence to support such claim for damages”); Beaver v. Brumlow, 148 N.M. 172, 231 P.3d 628, 630 (2010) (“The trial court allowed Buyers a choice of remedy: money damages for the prima facie tort or specific performance *363 of the contract. Buyers chose specific performance.”); Buckingham v. Ryan, 124 N.M. 498, 953 P.2d 33, 38 (1997) (discussing the election of remedies on a land sale contract). Thus, a state law right to seek specific performance falls squarely within § 101(5)(B)'s definition of a claim.

[5] Consistent with the foregoing, the strong majority of courts addressing the issue have held that parties like the HOA can be forced to accept claims for money damages in bankruptcy. See Route 21 Associates v. MHC, Inc., 486 B.R. 75, 85–87 (S.D.N.Y. 2012) (purchaser was not entitled to specific performance post-rejection because its claim could be monetized under § 101(5)(B)); In re Young, 214 B.R. 905, 912 (Bankr. D. Idaho 1997) (both specific performance and monetary damages were available under Idaho law for breach of a contract to sell real property, so the buyer had a claim under § 101(5)); In re A.J. Lane & Co., Inc., 115 B.R. 738, 742 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1990) (debtor/seller's obligation under a real estate contract gives rise to a dischargeable claim if the buyer has the right to either damages or specific performance); In re Kilpatrick, 160 B.R. 560, 564–66 (Bankr. E.D. Mich. 1993); In re Ground Round, Inc., 335 B.R. 253, 261 (1st Cir. BAP 2005), aff'd, 482 F.3d 15 (1st Cir. 2007) (an equitable remedy will be deemed a claim when the payment of monetary damages is an alternative); In re Nickels Midway Pier, LLC, 341 B.R. 486, 500 (Bankr. D.N.J. 2006); In re Aslan, 65 B.R. 826, 830–31 (Bankr. D. Cal. 1986), rev'd in part on other grounds, 909 F.2d 367 (9th Cir.1990) (specific performance not available post-rejection based on legislative history of § 101(5)).<sup>4</sup>

<sup>4</sup> See also 3 Collier on Bankruptcy ¶ 365.10[1], p. 365–79 (16th ed. 2016) (“rejection deprives the nondebtor party of a specific performance remedy that it might otherwise have under applicable nonbankruptcy law”); Lubrizol Enterprises, 756 F.2d at 1048 (the purpose of § 365(g) is to limit remedies to money damages); In re Scott Desert Shadows, LLC, 2006 WL 1775828, *4 (Bankr. D. Ariz. 2006) (specific performance is no longer available once a contract is rejected); Moglia v. Pac. Employers Ins. Co. of North America, 547 F.3d 835, 837 (7th Cir. 2008) (noting in dicta that rejection does not avoid the debtor's obligations but replaces specific performance with damages); In re Ducane Gas Grills, Inc., 320 B.R. 341, 351 (Bankr. D.S.C. 2004) (“Plaintiffs are not entitled to the return of the Chuck Wagon as a specific performance remedy for Debtor's rejection of executory contracts ... and are limited to claiming a prepetition unsecured claim for damages from Debtor's bankruptcy estate pursuant to § 502(g)”); In re Roman Crest Fruit, Inc., 35 B.R. 939, 946 (Bankr. S.D.N.Y. 1983) (“it would make no sense to order the debtor to specifically perform a contract that can be avoided or rejected”); In re Sun Belt Elec. Constructors, Inc., 56 B.R. 686 (Bankr. N.D. Ga. 1986) (specific performance is not an appropriate remedy following rejection); In re Fleishman, 138 B.R. 641, 648 (Bankr. D. Mass. 1992) (same); In re Rega Properties, Ltd., 894 F.2d 1136, 1140 (9th Cir. 1990) (allowing the non-debtor to enforce the contract as written following rejection would defeat the purpose of § 365, which is to relieve the debtor of burdensome obligations).

The majority rule is consistent with the statutory construction maxim expression unius est exclusio alterius. Section 365 identifies two instances in which the non-debtor may demand specific performance following contract rejection: § 365(i) (a non-debtor already in possession of real property is entitled to complete a pending sale), and § 365(n) (rejection cannot terminate the intellectual property rights of a technology licensee). These sections imply that Congress considered the issue of specific performance and limited the remedy as specified. See A. Scalia & B. Garner, Reading Law: The

Interpretation of Legal Texts, Canon 10, p. 107 (2014) (the expression of one thing implies the exclusion of others).

*364 As the HOA points out, several courts have ruled the other way. See, e.g., In re Walnut Associates, 145 B.R. 489, 494 (Bankr. E.D. Penn. 1992) (“if state law ... authorize[s] specific performance under the rejected executory contract ... the non-debtor should be able to enforce the contract against the [d]ebtor”); In re West Chestnut Realty of Haverford, Inc., 177 B.R. 501, 506 (E.D. Penn. 1995) (same). The Court is unconvinced by these cases, which do not acknowledge § 101(5)(B) or the impact of the bankruptcy discharge on a creditor's ordinary state law equitable remedies.

Thus, if the settlement agreement is rejected and Debtor confirms a plan of reorganization, the HOA would not be able to enforce its state law specific performance rights, but would have to settle for a claim for money damages. At this stage, the Court cannot say that rejection would be futile.

C. Effect of the State Court Order.

[6] [7] The HOA next argues that the state court has already ordered specific performance, which cannot be defeated by Debtor's rejection of the settlement agreement. The Court agrees that, had the settlement agreement been reduced to a final specific performance judgment, it would no longer be an executory contract subject to rejection. See, e.g. In re Bassett, 74 B.R. 361, 363 (Bankr. D. Colo. 1987) (land-sale contract buttressed by a prepetition order of specific performance is not an executory contract that can be rejected under § 365); In re Pribonic, 70 B.R. 596 (Bankr. W.D. Pa. 1987) (contract was no longer executory after entry of state law specific performance decree, and in any event by electing its remedy, non-debtor could not have a “claim” that could be monetized); In re Sundial Asphalt Co., Inc., 147 B.R. 72, 80 (E.D.N.Y. 1992) (“[a] contract for the sale of land ceases to be executory, or rejectable in bankruptcy, at the instant a decree of specific performance is issued.”); Roxse Homes, Inc. v. Roxse Homes Ltd. Partnership, 83 B.R. 185, 187 (D. Mass. 1988) (same).

The Court has already ruled, however, that the settlement agreement is an executory contract, not a final judgment. While there is a state court order, it did not result from the full litigation of a land sale contract. There was no trial, virtually no evidence, and no election of remedies by the HOA. Instead, the state court conducted a short hearing consisting of oral argument and granted the HOA's motion to enforce the settlement agreement.<sup>5</sup> The issue of specific performance was not litigated or finally determined, so the settlement agreement was not converted into a final, non-executory judgment. For the same reasons, the Court need not deny Debtor's motion based on comity, the Rooker–Feldman doctrine, or other preclusion theories.

5 For purposes of this opinion, the Court treats the state court's oral order the same as if it had been memorialized in writing.

D. Bad Faith.

[8] [9] Finally, the HOA asserts that Debtor is acting in bad faith by filing the bankruptcy case for the sole purpose of rejecting the settlement agreement. The Court disagrees. In general, filing a bankruptcy case to reject a lease or executory contract is not bad faith. See, e.g., In re Balboa Street Beach Club, Inc., 319 B.R. 736, 740 (Bankr. S.D. Fla. 2005) (collecting cases and noting: “there is no such thing as ‘bad faith’ in bringing a bankruptcy case solely for the purposes of rejecting an overly burdensome executory contract”); *365 In re Chameleon Systems, Inc., 306 B.R. 666, 696 (Bankr. N.D. Cal. 2004) (“rejection and the capping of a landlord's claim is not per se bad faith”).<sup>6</sup> The power to reject burdensome leases or contracts under was granted to debtors by Congress. Law v. Siegel, — U.S. —, 134 S.Ct. 1188, 188 L.Ed.2d 146 (2014), teaches that bankruptcy courts should not alter the remedies specified in the Code to correct perceived unfairness. The Court therefore is unwilling to characterize Debtor's use of § 365 as bad faith.

6 But see, e.g., In re Silberkraus, 253 B.R. 890, 906 (Bankr. C.D. Cal. 2000) (“filing bankruptcy with the sole purpose of trying to reject an executory contract or lease is bad faith, and the rejection will be precluded”).

Furthermore, if filing a bankruptcy petition after entry of an adverse state court ruling automatically constitutes bad faith, many cases would have to be dismissed. Consumer debtors regularly file bankruptcy petitions after the entry of foreclosure judgments. Retailers and restaurateurs file petitions after litigation with vendors, landlords, franchisors, etc. By approving rejection, the Court is not disturbing or collaterally attacking a pre-petition state court judgment, nor is it modifying any of the HOA's rights that are independent of the rejected contract. For example, the HOA may still pursue Tract D if it has (as asserted) a right to the tract under the Declaration. The Court concludes Debtor is not acting in bad faith.

III. CONCLUSION

Debtor has exercised reasonable business judgment in electing to reject the settlement agreement, which is an executory contract. Upon rejection and subsequent plan confirmation, the HOA could be forced to settle for a money damages claim rather than specific performance. Debtor's efforts in this case may or may not succeed, ultimately, but are not taken in bad faith. The Court will approve Debtor's rejection of the settlement agreement. A separate order will be entered consistent with this opinion.

All Citations

560 B.R. 358, 63 Bankr.Ct.Dec. 63

---

End of Document

© 2020 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-47

 KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment

Declined to Follow by Crafts v. Pitts, Wash., July 19, 2007

65 B.R. 826

United States Bankruptcy Court,
C.D. California.

In re Moses N. ASLAN, Debtor.

Bankruptcy No. LA 86–03637–GM.

|
Sept. 5, 1986.

Synopsis

Chapter 11 debtor moved to reject executory contract for sale of real property. The Bankruptcy Court, Geraldine Mund, J., held that: (1) contract was still “executory contract,” such as could be assumed or rejected by trustee or debtor in possession; (2) purchaser's claim for specific performance was dischargeable in bankruptcy; and (3) debtor would be allowed to reject contract.

Motion granted.

West Headnotes (5)

[1] Bankruptcy  Executory Nature in General

Contract for sale of real property was “executory contract,” such as could be assumed or rejected by trustee or debtor-in-possession, where debtor had not yet conveyed title and escrow remained open. Bankr.Code, 11 U.S.C.A. § 365.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Bankruptcy  Claims Allowable; What Constitutes “Claim.”

Bankruptcy  Particular Debts or Liabilities

“Claim” included claim for specific performance of real estate sales agreement, for purpose of statutes providing that claim arising before plan is confirmed is dischargeable in bankruptcy, where purchaser had alternative state law remedy of suit for money damages. Bankr.Code, 11 U.S.C.A. §§ 101(4)(B), (11), 502(g), 1141(d).

17 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Bankruptcy  Grounds for and Objections to Assumption, Rejection, or Assignment

Trustee may be allowed to reject executory contract only where bankruptcy court has first considered harm to debtor and other parties to contract and weighed this against benefit or harm to other creditors. Bankr.Code, 11 U.S.C.A. § 365.

[4] Bankruptcy  Grounds for and Objections to Assumption, Rejection, or Assignment

Debtor's good faith is factor in whether he will be allowed to reject executory contract. Bankr.Code, 11 U.S.C.A. § 365.

[5] Bankruptcy  Grounds for and Objections to Assumption, Rejection, or Assignment

Debtor in possession would be allowed to reject executory contract for sale of real property, where debtor's Chapter 11 petition was not filed for sole purpose of preventing consummation of purchaser's specific performance action, property had potential value in excess of contract price, and funds generated from sale of property could be used to pay all creditors in plan. Bankr.Code, 11 U.S.C.A. § 365.

7 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

*827 Martin J. Brill, Leslie A. Cohen, Robinson, Wolas & Diamant, Los Angeles, Cal., for debtor.

Steven P. Tapia, Loeb & Loeb, Los Angeles, Cal., for creditor, Sycamore.

Jay S. Bulmash, Seal Beach, Cal., for creditor, Amana Corp., assignee of American Development.

Steven Snipper, Arak, Welter, Snipper & Greene, Los Angeles, Cal., as special counsel.

Edythe Bronston, Cox, Castle & Nicholson, Los Angeles, Cal., for creditor Siavoush Safaie-Kia.

Peter Bronson, Levy & Norminton, Los Angeles, Cal., for Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corp.

Roy Zuckerman, McKay & Zuckerman, Long Beach, Cal., for creditor Cent. Bank.

Barbara Dohrmann, Los Angeles, Cal., for creditors Jane C. Williams and Westwood Center Corp.

Patrick Smith, Los Angeles, Cal., for U.S. trustee.

MEMORANDUM OF OPINION RE MOTION TO REJECT EXECUTORY CONTRACT

GERALDINE MUND, Bankruptcy Judge.

On or about April 13, 1982, Moses Aslan and Sycamore Investment Company ("Sycamore") entered into a real estate purchase contract whereby Sycamore agreed to purchase the "Broadway Spring Arcade Buildings" (the "Arcade"). This agreement was amended a few days later to, among other things, increase the purchase price to $4,500,000.00.

The agreement between the parties called for Aslan to deliver to Sycamore copies of leases, verbal tenancies, warranties, etc. within 10 days after the opening of the escrow. The escrow was to have opened on or before April 27, 1982 and was to have closed contingent upon Sycamore's review of the documents that it received. The escrow opened as scheduled, but Aslan only delivered part of the required documents and the escrow never closed.

On September 19, 1983, Sycamore filed a complaint for breach of contract and specific *828 performance in the Superior Court of California, Case No. C 468496. In conjunction with that case, Sycamore filed a Notice of Action Pending, which is recorded with the County Recorder. This gave Sycamore a priority position on the building, should they prevail on their state court action for specific performance.

Aslan has vigorously defended this case in the state court, seeking to be relieved of any obligations under the purchase agreement. Prior to the filing of this bankruptcy, no resolution of the state court action had occurred.

The current case was filed on March 3, 1986, as a debtor-in-possession Chapter 11. Aslan sought to reject the purchase agreement. Thereafter, a trustee was appointed and the trustee has now joined the motion to reject the executory contract.

[1] There was dispute as to whether this contract is truly executory. The key case in issue is the Ninth Circuit decision of In re Alexander, 670 F.2d 885 (9th Cir.1982). The Alexander court held that the fact that the buyer had not yet paid the remainder of the purchase price for the real property and that title had not actually been conveyed by the seller left the contract sufficiently unperformed so that it remained executory.

Sycamore argues that no other courts (including later opinions of the Ninth Circuit) have followed Alexander. This does not appear to be the situation. While this Court also has trouble with the concepts expressed in Alexander, for it seems to say that unless the escrow has actually closed the contract is executory, it is the law of the Ninth Circuit and is binding upon the case before this Court. Therefore the Court finds that the contract in question is an executory contract and falls under the provisions of 11 U.S.C. § 365.

The Trustee argues that, since it appears that a higher price will be received for the building if it is now able to be sold, the "business judgment test" should allow him to reject the contract without further review by the Court. The Court believes that it first must determine the effect of rejection on the Specific Performance Action. If the rejection would transform the equitable remedy of specific performance into a monetary claim, it then must decide whether the business judgment test authorizes rejection.

Therefore the initial issue is whether rejection of an executory contract, where state law allows a remedy of specific performance, relieves the debtor/trustee from the requirement to specifically perform the contract. In other words, if the Court were to allow rejection of the contract, would the result be that Sycamore is left only with an unsecured pre-petition claim or would the result be that Sycamore (upon obtaining relief from the automatic stay) could go forward and obtain a state court judgment for specific performance and enforce that judgment against the estate?<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> The issue of rejection of executory contracts recently came before me in the case of In re Carrere, 64 B.R. 156 (Bankr.C.D.Cal.1986), in which I ruled that a personal services contract does not become property of the estate in Chapters 7 and 11 and therefore cannot be rejected. At the end of that opinion I questioned whether rejection of contracts would transform an equitable remedy for specific performance into a claim for money, which could then be discharged. The opinion in the instant case modifies any comments that I made concerning the effect of rejection on a non-personal services contract in which equitable relief is sought.

The present case requires the Court to determine the congressional intent concerning the effect of rejection of a contract when state law allows a breach of contract to be remedied by specific performance. To that end the Court has delved deeply into the legislative history of the Bankruptcy Code and its various provisions and has taken the following analytical path:

11 U.S.C. § 365(g) states that rejection of an executory contract constitutes a breach of that contract immediately before the date of filing of the petition. This provision does not deal with the remedies involved, but establishes the time that the breach is deemed to have occurred.

11 U.S.C. § 1141(d) states that in Chapter 11, confirmation discharges the debtor *829 from any “debt” that arose before the date of confirmation and from any “debt” of the kind specified in 11 U.S.C. §§ 502(g), 502(h), or 502(i). Therefore, if the breach described in § 365(g) creates a “debt” of the kind included in § 1141(d), that “debt” is discharged at time of confirmation.

11 U.S.C. § 502(g) specifies that a “claim” arising from rejection of an executory contract shall be determined and allowed under §§ 502(a), 502(b) or 502(c), or should be disallowed under §§ 502(d), or 502(e), as if such claim had arisen before the date of filing of the petition. So if the breach of an executory contract creates a “claim,” it is discharged under § 1141(d).

Up to this point there are two key words. Section 1141(d) talks about discharge of a “debt.” Section 502(g) talks about creation of a “claim.”

11 U.S.C. § 101(11) defines the term “debt” to mean a liability on a claim.

11 U.S.C. § 101(4)(B) defines a “claim” in the case of an equitable remedy to exist only if the breach of performance gives rise to a right of payment.<sup>2</sup> Nowhere in the definition of claim does it include an equitable remedy which does not give rise to a right of payment.

2 11 U.S.C. § 101(4) states:

(4) “claim” means—

(A) right to payment, whether or not such right is reduced to judgment, liquidated, unliquidated, fixed, contingent, matured, unmatured, disputed, undisputed, legal, equitable, secured, or unsecured; or

(B) right to an equitable remedy for breach of performance if such breach gives rise to a right to payment, whether or not such right to an equitable remedy is reduced to judgment, fixed, contingent, matured, unmatured, disputed, undisputed, secured, or unsecured.

Having followed this analytical path, the Court must interpret the phrase of § 101(4)(B) as being inclusive or exclusive. Does it mean to include or to exclude as a claim any cause of action which gives rise to a right to payment as an alternative remedy to equitable performance? The debtor and trustee take the position that § 101(4)(B) is inclusive of all causes of action which have an alternative right to payment, even if the choice of remedy would normally be in the control of the non-debtor. Sycamore argues the other position.

In support of its position that rejection of the contract relieves the debtor of any requirement to perform under state law, the debtor cites the case of Lubrizol Enterprises, Inc. v. Richmond Metal Finishers, Inc., 756 F.2d 1043 (4th Cir.1985). Although the facts in Lubrizol are very different, for they deal with using technology during the pendency of the lawsuit on breach, the issues are similar in that they require the Court to interpret the effect of an equitable remedy on the existence of a “claim.”

This Court agrees with the result in Lubrizol, for it holds that the equitable remedy is transformed into a monetary claim. However, the Court must respectfully disagree with the Lubrizol reasoning, for it is based upon H.R.Rep. 95–595, 95th Cong., 2nd Sess. 349 (1977), U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1978, pp. 5787, 6305 and does not take into account the later legislative history of the definition of “claim,” which is specifically on point.

A summary of the legislative history of the creation of this bankruptcy code is set forth in Collier on Bankruptcy (15th Ed. Appendix 2). The bill which came through the House was designated H.R. 8200, 95th Cong., 1st Sess. (1977). It was considered, amended, and reported out of the Committee on the Judiciary in September, 1977. That report was designated H.R.Rep. No. 95-595, and is the one cited by the Fourth Circuit in Lubrizol. The text of § 101\(4\), defining “claim,” in the House bill was as follows:

(4) “claim” means—

(A) right to payment, whether or not such right is reduced to judgment, liquidated, unliquidated, fixed, contingent, matured, unmatured, disputed, undisputed, legal, equitable, secured, or unsecured; or

(B) right to an equitable remedy for breach of performance if such breach does not give rise to a right to payment, *830 whether or not such right to an equitable remedy is reduced to judgment, fixed, contingent, matured, unmatured, disputed, undisputed, secured, or unsecured;

The discussion cited in Lubrizol is that the House intended a claim to include “an equitable right to performance that does not give rise to a right to payment.” (H.R.Rep. 95-595, p. 309, U.S.Code Cong. & Admin.News 1978, p. 6266).<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> The Fourth Circuit states that the legislative history “makes clear that the purpose of the provision is to provide only a damages remedy for the non-bankruptcy party.” The operative language that the Fourth Circuit is depending on in the House bill is “right to an equitable remedy for breach of performance if such breach does not give rise to a right to payment ...” The final version of the Code uses the phrase “right to an equitable remedy for breach of performance if such breach gives rise to a right to payment....” It is clear that the House intended that a claim would be all-inclusive and that if there was a right to payment, that would be included in § 101\(4\)\(A\) and that other equitable remedies would be included in § 101\(4\)\(B\). In this, the Fourth Circuit is correct that the House of Representatives intended there to be only a damages remedy for the non-debtor party. However, the operative language in the House bill was changed in the final version of the Code.

Some amendments were made to H.R. 8200 and it was passed by the House and sent to the Senate on February 8, 1978.

Meanwhile the Senate was working on its own bill, S. 2266, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. (1977) which was favorably reported on July 14, 1978 and was accompanied by its own comments. The bill passed by the Senate defines a “claim” as follows:

(4) “claim”—

(A) means right to payment, other than of an expense allowable under section 503, whether or not such right is reduced to judgment, liquidated, unliquidated, fixed, contingent, matured, unmatured, disputed, undisputed, legal, equitable, secured, or unsecured; and

(B) includes, except where specifically provided otherwise, interest thereon provided by law or contract.

The Senate version does not discuss equitable rights under the definition of claim and makes it clear that a claim must be a right to payment. The Senate passed its version on September 22, 1978.

Thereafter there were a series of conferences to work on the differences in the two bills that had been passed. A compromise was reached and the bill was passed by both Houses of Congress in October, 1978 and sent forward to the White House.

The compromises that were reached were reported in the Congressional Record. 124 Cong.Rec. H11090 (daily ed. Sept. 28, 1978) discusses the modification of § 101\(4\)\(B\). It states as follows:

Section 101\(4\)\(B\) represents a modification of the House-passed bill to include [in] the definition of “claim” a right to an equitable remedy for breach of performance if such breach gives rise to a right to payment. This is intended to cause the liquidation or estimation of contingent rights of payment for which there may be an alternative equitable remedy with the result that the equitable remedy will be susceptible to being discharged in bankruptcy. For example, in some States, a judgment for specific performance may be satisfied by an alternative right to payment, in the event performance is refused; in that event, the creditor entitled to specific performance would have a “claim” for purposes of proceeding under title 11.

On the other hand, rights to an equitable remedy for a breach of performance with respect to which such breach does not give rise to a right to payment are not “claims” and would therefore not be susceptible to discharge in bankruptcy.

The identical language was put forth in the Senate record, 124 Cong.Rec. S17406 (daily ed., Oct. 6, 1978).

[2] Therefore it is clear that the final version, as passed and signed into law, is intended to include as a claim a right to an equity remedy for breach of performance if the breach gives rise to an alternative right to payment. If the only remedy *831 allowed by law is non-monetary, the equitable remedy is not transformed into a claim and it survives the rejection of the executory contract.

The question to be dealt with is whether, as a matter of state law, the non-breaching party to the contract has a right to obtain a money judgment, even though he also has a right to obtain an equitable judgment. If so, the remedy becomes a contingent claim and can be discharged in the bankruptcy.

There are certain cases in which no money damages can be awarded. For example, if the plaintiff is seeking to enforce his right to vote on a Board of Trustees, no amount of money can take the place of that right and that right cannot be estimated by the Court in terms of dollars so as to create a contingent claim. Because this is not the type of judgment which can be converted into money, it is not a "claim" under the Bankruptcy Code and cannot be discharged upon rejection of the contract. Therefore rejection of such a contract would not be possible and the statutory scheme of § 365 would not apply.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>4</sup> The Court is also aware of a possible situation where rejection of the contract and discharge of the claim would be in contravention of a state statute that is meant to protect public health. In such a situation it is probable that the reasoning of Mid-Atlantic National Bank v. New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection, 474 U.S. 494, 106 S.Ct. 755, 88 L.Ed.2d 859 (1986) would apply and would at least require the Court to condition the rejection on certain acts that would help to accomplish the state purpose.

In the case of transfer of real property, specific performance is allowed because courts have felt that real property is unique and that a money judgment cannot fully equate to the property itself. However, the law does allow the creditor to choose between receiving money and receiving specific performance.

Damages for rejection of an executory contract become a claim dischargeable in the bankruptcy only if under state law the creditor would have the choice of more than one possible remedy, with one of the choices being a money claim. The filing of the bankruptcy and the rejection of the contract under the bankruptcy shifts the choice of remedy from one which is solely in the hands of the creditor to a choice by the debtor, upon approval of the Court. Thus, in California, an executory contract for sale of real property can be rejected and the potential action for specific performance will be transformed into a pre-petition claim, which may be discharged in the bankruptcy.

[3] [4] However, before rejection actually can occur, the Court must determine whether it should be allowed. The Court must look at the harm to this creditor, weigh it against the benefit or harm to other creditors, and look at the potential harm to the debtor. In re Huang, 23 B.R. 798 (Bankr. 9th Cir.1982). Good faith plays a part in this weighing, as is shown by the recent opinion of In re Chinichian, 784 F.2d 1440 (9th Cir.1986). In Chinichian the Court found that the bankruptcy was filed for the sole purpose of preventing consummation of the state court's specific performance judgment and that no one except the debtors would benefit from the rejection of the contract. Therefore rejection was not allowed.

[5] This is not the situation concerning the Arcade Building. There are consensual and judgment liens junior to Sycamore's interest, there is potential value of $8 Million for the property, and there are other properties. Some of the liens on the Arcade Building are cross-collateralized by other property. By selling the Arcade Building for $8 Million, liens would be removed from other properties of the estate which could then be sold to generate sufficient monies to pay all creditors in full, including the "claim" of Sycamore.

Therefore the Court finds that the trustee's application to reject meets the requirements of the business judgment test and approves rejection upon receipt of a minimum cash bid of $8 Million at a publicly noticed auction or some equivalent offer or refinance that values the property at $8 Million or more.

All Citations

65 B.R. 826, 15 Bankr.Ct.Dec. 136, Bankr. L. Rep. P 71,536

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-48

2019 WL 8886440

Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.

United States District Court, E.D. Virginia, Norfolk Division.

VIR2US, INC., Plaintiff,

v.

SOPHOS INC., et al., Defendants.

Civil Action No. 2:19cv18

|

Signed 08/12/2019

|

Filed 08/14/2019

Attorneys and Law Firms

Stephen Edward Noona, Kaufman & Canoles, P.C., Norfolk, VA, Alden Kwong Wei Lee, Pro Hac Vice, Jeffrey Daniel Chen, Pro Hac Vice, Joseph John Fraresso, Pro Hac Vice, Bartko Zankel Bunzel Miller, San Francisco, CA, Brian Alexander Eugen Smith, Pro Hac Vice, Jayne Laiprasert, Pro Hac Vice, William Paul Schuck, Pro Hac Vice, Bartko Zankel Bunzel Miller, for Plaintiff.

Robert Frederickson, III, Pro Hac Vice, Douglas John Kline, Pro Hac Vice, Khurram Naik, Pro Hac Vice, Lana Svetlana Shiferman, Pro Hac Vice, Sarah Jane Fischer, Pro Hac Vice, Goodwin Procter LLP, Boston, MA, Robert Martin Tata, Hunton Andrews Kurth LLP, Norfolk, VA, Arthur Eric Schmalz, Hunton Andrews Kurth LLP, Washington, DC, Cindy Chang, Pro Hac Vice, Goodwin Procter LLP, New York, NY, for Defendant.

ORDERHENRY COKE MORGAN, JR. SENIOR UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

*1 This matter is before the Court on Defendants Sophos, Inc., Sophos Limited, Sophos Group PLC, and Invincea, Inc.'s (collectively, "Defendants' ") Motion to Dismiss Vir2us' Complaint, Doc. 34. For the reasons stated herein, the Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss, IN PART, WITH LEAVE TO AMEND.

I. FACTUAL ALLEGATIONS<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> "In considering a motion to dismiss, [the Court] accept[s] as true all well-pleaded allegations and view[s] the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff." Venkatraman v. REI Sys., Inc., 417 F.3d 418, 420 (4th Cir. 2005) (citations omitted). The Court cautions, however, that the facts alleged by Plaintiff are recited here for the limited purpose of deciding the instant Motion to Dismiss. The recited facts are not factual findings upon which the parties may rely for any other issue in this proceeding.

This is an action brought by Plaintiff Vir2us, Inc. ("Plaintiff" or "Vir2us") to enforce the terms of a settlement agreement.

A. Parties

Plaintiff Vir2us is a California corporation that designs, markets, and sells computer security software and services. Compl. ¶ 17. It owns several patents that it has licensed to Defendants. Compl. ¶ 8. Defendant Invincea, Inc. ("Invincea") is a Delaware corporation that entered into a settlement agreement with Vir2us ("Patent License Agreement") in 2016. Id. ¶¶ 1, 12.

Defendant Sophos Inc. (hereinafter, "Sophos MA") is a Massachusetts corporation that owns one hundred percent (100%) of the shares of Invincea. Id. ¶¶ 9, 14. Sophos MA is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Defendant Sophos Ltd. ("Sophos UK"). Id. Sophos UK has its principal place of business in Oxford, U.K. Id. ¶ 10. Sophos UK, in turn, is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Sophos Group PLC ("Sophos Parent"), which is also located in Oxford, U.K. Id. ¶ 11.

B. Patent License Agreement

Vir2us filed a complaint for patent infringement against Invincea Inc. and Invincea Labs, LLC on April 15, 2015. Doc. 1 ("Compl.") ¶ 19. Vir2us alleged that Invincea infringed certain claims of U.S. Patent Nos. 7,392,541 and 7,536,598 ("asserted patents") "by making, using, selling and offering to sell certain Invincea products, including Invincea FreeSpace which Invincea later sold as Invincea X Endpoint - Spearfish Protection." Id. On July 15, 2016, Vir2us and Invincea settled the matter before this Court. Id. ¶ 20.

As part of the settlement, Vir2us and Invincea entered into the Patent License Agreement. Doc. 1 at Ex. A (“Agreement”).<sup>2</sup> Pursuant to this Agreement, this District is “[t]he exclusive venue for disputes arising out of” the Agreement. Compl. ¶ 1; Agreement § 8.5. The Patent License Agreement grants “Invincea and its Affiliates a fully paid, non-exclusive, assignable (only as permitted in [the] license agreement), worldwide license under the Licensed Patents<sup>3</sup> for the life of the Licensed Patents ....” Agreement § 2.1. The Agreement defines “Affiliate” as follows:

[I]n relation to a Party [i.e. Vir2us or Invincea], another legal entity that, directly or indirectly, owns or controls, or is owned or controlled by, or is under common control with, such Party during the Term of this License Agreement. For the purposes of this definition a first legal entity shall be deemed to own or control a second legal entity if (i) the first legal entity holds, directly or indirectly, more than fifty per cent [sic] (50%) of the voting stock of the second legal entity, ordinarily entitled to vote in the meetings of shareholders of that entity, or (ii) if there is no such stock, the first legal entity holds, directly or indirectly, more than fifty per cent (50%) of the ownership or control in the second legal entity, or (iii) the first legal entity has the power, directly or indirectly, to control the decision of the second legal entity.

*2 Agreement § 1.

<sup>2</sup> When evaluating a motion to dismiss, a court “may consider the facts alleged on the face of the complaint as well as matters of public record, orders, items appearing in the record of the case, and exhibits attached to the complaint... without converting a Rule 12(b)(6) motion into a Rule 56 motion for summary judgment.” Spirito v. Peninsula Airport Comm'n, 350 F. Supp. 3d 471, 480 (E.D. Va. 2018) (citing Pueschel v. United States, 369 F.3d 345, 353 n.3 (4th Cir. 2004)). The unsealed Agreement is located at Doc. 6, Ex. 1.

<sup>3</sup> The Agreement defines “Licensed Patents” as all patents and patent applications owned by Vir2us, including the asserted patents, “any divisions, continuations, continuations-in-part, reissues, re-examinations, and foreign counterparts of any of the foregoing and all related patents.” Agreement § 1.

In exchange for use of the Licensed Patents, the Patent License Agreement imposes royalty and reporting obligations on Invincea. It provides: “Invincea shall pay to Vir2us a royalty of one dollar ($1.00) for each Container Products and Services<sup>4</sup> Sold in the United States of America during the Term of this Agreement.” Agreement § 3.1. Invincea is responsible for the payment of “all Royalties due [under the Patent License Agreement] for each of Invincea and each Invincea Affiliate.” Id. ¶ 4.2 (hereinafter, “royalty obligations”). Invincea, “on behalf of itself and all Affiliates,” must also deliver to Vir2us, within forty-five (45) days following the end of each calendar quarter during the License Term, “a written report of the previous quarter’s transactions by Invincea and any Invincea Affiliate regarding all Licensed Products and Services” (hereinafter, “reporting obligations”). Id. ¶ 4.1.

<sup>4</sup> The Agreement defines “Container Products and Services” as “the accused container products currently called Invincea X Endpoint - Spearphish Protection and formerly known as Invincea FreeSpace, Invincea Enterprise, and Invincea Advanced Endpoint Protection, as well as natural evolutions and derivations of these products....” Agreement § 1.

The Patent License Agreement additionally provides a record-keeping requirement:

Each of Invincea and each Invincea Affiliate separately shall keep accurate and complete records and accounts pertaining to the identity and quantity of all Licensed Products and Services Sold.

Id. § 4.4.

C. Post-Agreement Compliance and Acquisition

Through Q1 2017, Invincea fulfilled the royalty and reporting obligations. Compl. ¶ 32. On approximately February 8, 2017, Sophos<sup>5</sup> announced via press release that it had entered into an agreement to acquire Invincea from its current shareholders “for a cash consideration of $100 million with a $20 million earn-out.” Compl. ¶ 25. Sophos allegedly completed its acquisition on or around March 22, 2017, with Sophos MA acquiring one hundred percent (100%) of the shares of Invincea. Id. ¶ 28.

<sup>5</sup> The Complaint generically refers to all Sophos entities named in the Complaint as “Sophos.”

Beginning in Q2 2017, Sophos began delivering Quarterly Reports to Vir2us “on behalf of Invincea, which Sophos stated was ‘now a Sophos company.’” Id. ¶ 33. Sophos also made the royalty payments for the reported sales of the Licensed Products and Services after its acquisition of Invincea. Id.

D. Alleged Breach

*3 Vir2us alleges that, “[o]n information and belief Sophos integrated technology from the Invincea products covered by the Patent License Agreement into the Sophos Intercept X products, including technology from the X by Invincea, Invincea X Endpoint - Spearfish Protection, Invincea FreeSpace, Invincea Enterprise, and Invincea Advanced Endpoint Protection line of products.” Compl. ¶ 29. It further claims that “Sophos has advertised and represented to the public that it has, in fact, integrated technology from the Invincea products covered by the Patent License Agreement into Sophos’ Intercept X product.” Id. ¶ 30. However, on April 16, 2018, Sophos announced “the immediate end of sale for all Invincea-related products and support.” Id. ¶ 31.

Since then, Sophos has continued to deliver Quarterly Reports and make royalty payments for the sales of the Licensed Products and Services. Id. ¶ 34. However, “[n]oticeably absent from the Quarterly Reports ... were any Sophos products, including Sophos’ Intercept X product, which, on information and belief, contains technology from Invincea’s products covered by the Patent License Agreement.” Id. ¶ 35. Likewise, Vir2us alleges that “Sophos has failed to make any Royalty payment for any Sophos product, including Sophos’ Intercept X product, containing technology from the Invincea products covered by the Patent License Agreement.” Id.

As a result of Defendants’ alleged failure to fully satisfy the terms of the Patent License Agreement, Vir2us brings two (2) counts for Breach of Contract. Count I alleges that Defendants have breached their obligation to deliver, from Q1 2017 onward, Quarterly Reports that include the “quantity and description of all products sold and/or services offered by Invincea and/or its Affiliates.” Id. ¶ 42. Count II alleges that Sophos sold products including “at least, Sophos’ Intercept X product,” that integrated “Invincea technology from the listed Invincea products specified in the Patent License Agreement.” Id. ¶ 48. Vir2us alleges that Defendants breached the Patent License Agreement by failing to pay royalties for these products. Id. ¶¶ 50-51.

II. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Vir2us filed its Complaint on January 9, 2019. Doc. 1. Defendants filed the instant Motion to Dismiss on March 15, 2019. The matter was fully briefed on April 4, 2019. Doc. 48.

III. MOTION TO DISMISS

A. Legal Standard

“To survive a motion to dismiss, a complaint must contain sufficient factual matter, accepted as true, to ‘state a claim to relief that is plausible on its face.’” Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 556 U.S. 662, 678 (2009) (citing Bell Atl. Corp. v. Twombly, 550 U.S. 544, 570 (2007)); see also Venkatraman v. REI Sys., Inc., 417 F.3d 418, 420 (4th Cir. 2005) (“In considering a motion to dismiss, we accept as true all well-pleaded allegations and view the complaint in the light most favorable to the plaintiff.”). A complaint establishes facial plausibility “once the factual content of a complaint allows the court to draw the reasonable inference that the defendant is liable for the misconduct alleged.” Nemet Chevrolet, Ltd. v. Consumeraffairs.com, Inc., 591 F.3d 250, 256 (4th Cir. 2009) (quoting Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678). Therefore, the complaint need not include “detailed factual allegations,” as long as it pleads “sufficient facts to allow a court, drawing on judicial experience and common sense, to infer more than the mere possibility of misconduct.” Id. Although a court must accept as true all well-pleaded factual allegations, the same is not true for legal conclusions. “Threadbare recitals of the elements of a cause of action, supported by mere conclusory statements, do not suffice.” Iqbal, 556 U.S. at 678.

B. Analysis

Defendants move to dismiss Sophos MA, Sophos UK, and Sophos Parent (“Sophos Defendants”) from this action, arguing that they are not parties to the Patent License Agreement and therefore cannot be held liable under the Agreement. Doc. 38 at 12. They further argue that the products alleged to be missing from the Quarterly Reports and royalty payments are not covered by the plain terms of the Patent License Agreement. Doc. 38 at 14.

i. Legal Obligation of Sophos Defendants

*4 To state a claim for breach of contract in Virginia, a plaintiff must allege facts to support: (1) a legally enforceable obligation of the defendant to the plaintiff; (2) defendant's breach of that obligation; and (3) damage to the plaintiff as a result of the breach. Navar, Inc. v. Fed. Bus. Council, 784 S.E.2d 296, 299 (Va. 2016). Defendants first argue that Vir2us fails to state a claim against Sophos Defendants because the Patent License Agreement imposes no legally enforceable obligation on them. Doc. 38 at 8. In response, Vir2us contends that Sophos Defendants are liable under a successor-in-interest theory, or as Affiliates under the terms of the Patent License Agreement. Doc. 47 at 6, 8.

a. Piercing the Corporate Veil

Defendants assert that as non-parties to the Patent License Agreement, they cannot be held liable under that agreement because Vir2us has failed to plead facts that would allow this Court to disregard corporate formalities between Invincea and Sophos Defendants. Doc. 38 at 14.

A corporation is a “legal entity separate and distinct from the stockholders or members who compose it.” Federico v. Lincoln Military Housing, LLC, 127 F. Supp. 3d 623, 647 (E.D. Va. 2015) (quoting Dana v. 313 Freeman, 587 S.E.2d 548, 553 (Va. 2003)). Therefore, “a parent corporation is not generally liable on the contracts of its subsidiary.” Rhodes v. Geeks on Call Holdings, Inc., No. 2:08CV575, 2009 WL 10688337, at *2 (E.D. Va. Feb. 6, 2009). A court may only disregard the corporate entity and place liability on corporate shareholders, known as “piercing the corporate veil,” under extraordinary circumstances. See Dana, 587 S.E.2d at 553. Although no single factor is determinative, Virginia courts generally require three (3) elements to be present to pierce the corporate veil: (1) undue dominion or control by the parent corporation over the subsidiary; (2) the use of such control to perpetrate a fraud or to gain an unfair advantage; and (3) unjust loss or injury from such dominance unless the parent corporation is held liable. Federico, 127 F. Supp. 3d at 647-48.

Defendants correctly argue, and Vir2us does not contest, that it has failed to plead the requisite elements to support veil piercing in the instant case. See Doc. 47 at 14. Namely, Vir2us makes no allegations that any of the Sophos Defendants have used the acquisition of Invincea to perpetrate a fraud or gain an unfair advantage, nor has it pleaded that it would suffer unjust loss if Sophos Defendants were dismissed from the case. Cf. Dana, 127 F. Supp. 3d at 554 (affirming trial court's decision to pierce the corporate veil in part because the formation of the corporation was to avoid personal liability of shareholders). Without such allegations, the Court cannot pierce the corporate veil to hold Sophos Defendants liable.

b. Affiliate Liability

Vir2us instead argues that Sophos Defendants are liable under the Patent License Agreement as Affiliates of Invincea. Doc. 47 at 12.

The Patent License Agreement defines an Affiliate as, inter alia, a legal entity that “holds, directly or indirectly, more than fifty per cent (50%) of the ownership or control in” Invincea. Agreement § 1. The Agreement is explicitly binding on Vir2us, Invincea, and Invincea's Affiliates. Agreement at 1. All Sophos Defendants are alleged to satisfy this definition by holding, directly or indirectly, one hundred percent (100%) of Invincea stock. See Compl. ¶ 28. However, status as an Affiliate is not sufficient to confer liability for Vir2us' breach of contract claims.

Here, Sophos Defendants cannot be held liable as Affiliates under the Patent License Agreement because Vir2us' breach of contract claims do not correspond to legal obligations imposed on Affiliates under the Agreement. Vir2us brings claims for: (1) failure to deliver Quarterly Reports, Compl. at 10; and (2) failure to pay royalties, Compl. at 11. However, the Agreement explicitly imposes these obligations on Invincea, on behalf of itself and its Affiliates. See Agreement § 4.2 (“Invincea shall pay to Vir2us all Royalties due hereunder for each of Invincea and each Invincea Affiliate.”); id. § 4.1 (“Invincea (on behalf of itself and all Affiliates) shall deliver to Vir2us a written report of the previous quarter's transactions by Invincea and any Invincea Affiliate regarding all Licensed Products and Services.”); see also id. § 2.4 (“Invincea unconditionally and irrevocably guarantees performance under this Agreement by all its Affiliates.”). In fact, it appears the Agreement requires few affirmative acts by Affiliates. Cf. id. § 4.4 (requiring Affiliates to maintain “accurate and complete records and accounts pertaining to the identity and quantity of all Licensed products and Services Sold”). Thus, although Sophos Defendants are clearly Affiliates within the meaning of the Patent License Agreement, this status cannot be the basis for their liability.

c. Successor-in-interest Liability

*5 Vir2us next insists that Sophos Defendants are bound by the Patent License Agreement as successors-in-interest to Invincea. Doc. 47 at 6.

“It is well settled that where one company sells or otherwise transfers all its assets to another company, the latter is not liable for the debts and liabilities of the transferor.” City of Richmond v. Madison Mgmt. Grp., Inc., 918 F.2d 438, 450 (4th Cir. 1990); see also La Bella Dona Skin Care, Inc. v. Belle Femme Enters., LLC, 805 S.E.2d 399, 406-07 (Va. 2017) (“The general rule in Virginia is that a company may acquire the assets of another company without assuming responsibility for its debts and liabilities.”). In Virginia, there are four (4) exceptions to this rule:

- (1) [T]he purchasing corporation expressly or impliedly agreed to assume such liabilities,
- (2) the circumstances surrounding the transaction warrant a finding that there was a consolidation or de facto merger of the two corporations,
- (3) the purchasing corporation is merely a continuation of the selling corporation,
- or (4) the transaction is fraudulent in fact.

Harris v. T.I., Inc., 413 S.E.2d 605, 609 (Va. 1992). To state a claim against any of the Sophos Defendants, Vir2us must allege facts to support at least one of these factors.

Vir2us avers that “Sophos” is a successor-in-interest because it “has complete control over Invincea and is merely a continuation of Invincea.” Doc. 47 at 5. However, the Virginia Supreme Court has clearly stated that “[w]hen ... the purchase of all the assets of a corporation is a bona fide, arm's-length transaction, the ‘mere continuation’ exception does not apply.” Harris, 413 S.E.2d at 609 (citations omitted); see also La Bella, 805 S.E.2d at 407 (noting that to establish the “mere continuation” exception of successor liability, a litigant “must ... establish that the asset transfer was not a bona fide, arm's-length transaction”); In re SunSport, Inc., 260 B.R. 88, 106 (Bankr. E.D. Va. 2000) (“[A] new corporation is not a mere continuation when the purchase of the seller's assets occurred in a bona fide, arm's length transaction.”) (emphasis in original).

Here, Vir2us has not alleged any facts to support a claim that Sophos MA's acquisition of Invincea was not a bona fide, arm's-length transaction.<sup>6</sup> There are no facts to suggest that Invincea and the Sophos Defendants had any relationship prior to the acquisition that would cause a conflict of interest. Moreover, Vir2us alleged that Sophos MA planned to acquire Invincea for valuable consideration. See Compl. ¶ 25 (“Sophos announced ... that it had entered into an agreement to acquire Invincea from its current shareholders for a cash consideration of $100 million with a $20 million earn-out.”). “[T]he acquisition of another company's assets for adequate consideration is evidence of an arm's-length transaction, and ... undermines any continuation claim.” Waterford Inv. Servs., Inc. v. Bosco, No. 3:10CV548-REP, 2011 WL 3820723, at *19 (E.D. Va. July 29, 2011), aff'd 682 F.3d 348 (4th Cir. 2012); see also Taylor v. Atlas Safety Equip. Co., 808 F. Supp. 1246, 1252 (E.D. Va. 1992) (finding no evidence that a transaction was not arm's-length when, inter alia, one party paid another valuable and adequate consideration). Accordingly, Vir2us has failed to plead that any of the Sophos Defendants were successors to Invincea pursuant to a continuation theory of liability.

<sup>6</sup> An “arm's-length transaction” is a “transaction between two parties, however closely related they may be, conducted as if the parties were strangers, so that no conflict of interest arises.” Fuisz v. Lynch, 147 F. App'x 319, 323 (4th Cir. 2005) (quoting Black's Law Dictionary 1535 (8th ed.2004)).

*6 Although not explicitly advanced by Vir2us, Sophos Defendants may be successors-in-interest to the Patent License Agreement under an alternative theory. “A successor corporation that expressly or impliedly agrees to assume the liabilities of its predecessor will be liable for such obligations.” Vianix Delaware v. Nuance Commc'ns, 637 F. Supp. 2d 356, 359 (E.D. Va. 2009) (citing Harris, 413 S.E.2d at 609); see also City of Richmond, 918 F.2d at

451; States Roofing Corp. v. Bush Const. Corp., 426 S.E.2d 124, 127 (Va. Ct. App. 1993). For example, in Vianix, this Court found that a plaintiff had sufficiently alleged successor liability to a software license of a defendant-parent company, even when the subsidiary continued to operate as an independent company. 637 F. Supp. 2d 356. In support, the Court observed that the parent company had: (1) added the subsidiary's software to its existing portfolio; (2) sold the software through its own website after the acquisition; and (3) provided customer support for the software after the acquisition. Id. at 360. Thus, by “adopting [the software] as its own product,” the parent company implicitly assumed responsibility for the software license. Id.

Vir2us has alleged sufficient facts to suggest that at least one Sophos entity implicitly assumed Invincea's royalty and reporting obligations under the Patent License Agreement. According to the Complaint, “Sophos” integrated “Invincea's products—including the Container Products and Services covered by the Patent License Agreement—into Sophos' flagship endpoint protection product (e.g., Sophos' Intercept X).” Compl. ¶ 5. Although Invincea survived the acquisition, on April 16, 2018, “Sophos announced the immediate end of sale for all Invincea related products.” Compl. at Ex. D. According to Sophos' website, “[s]upport and maintenance [for Invincea] will be available under existing contracts through December 31st, 2019.” Invincea, Sophos (July 29, 2019, 4:07 p.m.), <https://www.sophos.com/en-us/lp/invincea.aspx>. After December 2019, a Sophos press release “strongly encourage[s] customers to consider migrating from Invincea to Sophos Intercept X,” which “features an enhanced Invincea deep learning malware detection engine, Sophos anti-exploit technology, specific anti-ransomware functionality, and more.” Compl. at Ex. D. Most importantly, following Sophos' acquisition of Invincea, it began making royalty payments to Vir2us under the Patent License Agreement and “delivering the Quarterly Reports to Vir2us on behalf of Invincea, which Sophos stated was ‘now a Sophos company.’ ” Compl. ¶ 33. These allegations, if proven, suggest that one or more of the Sophos Defendants implicitly assumed certain responsibilities of the Patent License Agreement by incorporating Invincea's technology as its own, discontinuing Invincea's products, and taking steps to comply with the royalty and reporting terms of the Patent License Agreement. Accordingly, Vir2us has alleged facts to support successor liability for the claims at issue through an implied assumption theory for at least one Sophos Defendant.

d. Failure to Distinguish Sophos Defendants

Defendants finally argue that the Court should dismiss Sophos UK and Sophos Parent because “if any entity allegedly ‘succeeded’ Invincea, it would be Sophos [MA], not the parent entities.” Doc.51 at 13. The Court agrees.

Vir2us' failure to distinguish among the Sophos Defendants compels this result. A complaint must generally “identify specific acts or conduct taken by each defendant to state a claim.” Shinaberry v. Town of Murfreesboro, N.C., No. 2:17-CV-7-D, 2018 WL 1801417, at *5 (E.D.N.C. Apr. 16, 2018); Evans v. Chalmers, 703 F.3d 636, 661 (4th Cir. 2012). Moreover, the Court has an interest in respecting the corporate formalities of the Sophos Defendants. See Dana 587 S.E.2d at 553 (“Stockholder immunity is a basic provision of statutory and common law and supports a vital economic policy underlying the whole corporate concept.”) (quotations omitted). Vir2us addresses this concern in a single footnote that describes case law on piercing the corporate veil. Doc. 47 at 13 n.6. However, as discussed in Section III.B.i.a., supra, the Complaint includes no allegations that support a veil-piercing theory for any of the Sophos Defendants. Nevertheless, the allegation that Sophos MA directly acquired Invincea, in conjunction with the other allegations of the Complaint, sufficiently states a claim for successor liability against Sophos MA.

*7 The Court is cognizant that “dismissals prior to giving the plaintiff ample opportunity for discovery should be granted very sparingly.” Dickson v. Microsoft Corp., 309 F.3d 193, 220 (4th Cir. 2002) (quoting Hospital Bldg. Co. v. Trustees of Rex Hosp., 425 U.S. 738, 747 (1976)). At this stage, “discovery of information concerning successor liability is likely within the sole knowledge and control of [Defendants].” Azko Nobel Coatings Inc. v. Pearl Ave. USA, Ltd., No. 2:09CV540, 2010 WL 11564918, at *2 (E.D. Va. Feb. 23, 2010) (denying a motion to dismiss on this basis). Sophos' press releases and website represent Sophos Defendants as a single entity. See Sophos (July 29, 2019, 4:07 p.m.), <https://www.sophos.com/en-us.aspx>; Compl. at Exs. B-D. Prior to discovery, it is unlikely Vir2us would have the internal corporate information necessary to determine whether the remaining Sophos Defendants succeeded Invincea. Therefore, the Court GRANTS Defendant's Motion to Dismiss, IN PART, with respect to Sophos UK and Sophos Parent. However, the dismissal shall be WITHOUT PREJUDICE. Vir2us may, based on information obtained through discovery, request leave to amend the Complaint to include Sophos UK and/or Sophos Parent at any time through August 31, 2019.

ii. Existence of Breach

Defendants next move to dismiss Sophos Defendants from this matter because the alleged breach “is foreclosed by the express terms of the License Agreement.” Doc. 38 at 14.

a. General Contract Terms

Defendants argue that “Sophos products, such as Sophos's Intercept X,” are not covered by the Patent License Agreement. Doc. 38 at 14. This conclusion is contradicted by the plain terms of the Agreement.

As discussed in Section I.B., supra, the Agreement requires Invincea to pay Vir2us royalties for “each Container Products [sic] and Services Sold in the United States of America during the Term of this Agreement.” Agreement § 3.1. “Container Products and Services” are defined as “accused container products currently called Invincea X Endpoint – Spearfish Protection and formerly known as Invincea FreeSpace, Invincea Enterprise, and Invincea Advanced Endpoint Protection, as well as natural evolutions and derivations of these products ....” Id. § 1 (emphasis added). With respect the Agreement's reporting obligation, it provides that Invincea shall periodically “deliver to Vir2us a written report of the previous quarter's transactions by Invincea and any Invincea Affiliate regarding all Licensed Products and Services.” Id. § 4.2. “Licensed Products and Services,” in turn, are defined as “products Sold and/or services offered by Invincea or any of its Affiliates, with or without charge, during the Term of the License Agreement.” Id. § 1. In sum, the plain terms<sup>7</sup> of the Agreement require Invincea to periodically report the sales of all products by itself and its Affiliates during the term of the Agreement, and to pay royalties for the products, sold by itself and its Affiliates, that incorporate technology covered by the Agreement.

<sup>7</sup> “When the terms in a contract are clear and unambiguous, the contract is construed according to its plain meaning. Words that the parties used are normally given their usual, ordinary, and popular meaning.” RECP IV WG Land Inv'rs LLC v. Capital One Bank (USA) N.A., 811 S.E.2d 817, 825 (Va. 2018).

To state its claim for breach of contract, Vir2us alleges that Sophos MA acquired one hundred percent (100%) of the shares of Invincea. Compl. ¶ 14. Therefore, all Sophos Defendants are Affiliates pursuant to the Agreement. See Section III.B.i.b., supra; Agreement § 1. Vir2us next alleges that “Sophos” integrated “technology from Invincea's products—including the Container Products and Services covered by the Patent License Agreement—into Sophos' flagship endpoint protection product (e.g., Sophos' Intercept X).” Id. ¶ 5. It further alleges that the Quarterly Reports required under the Agreement omitted mention of any Sophos products, including Sophos' Intercept X product. Id. ¶ 35. Finally, it states that “Sophos has failed to make any Royalty payment for any Sophos product, including Sophos' Intercept X product, containing technology from the Invincea products covered by the Patent License Agreement.” Id.

*8 Based on the above facts, Vir2us clearly alleges: (1) the terms of the Patent License Agreement; (2) that Sophos Defendants are Affiliates covered by the Agreement; (3) that Sophos Defendants integrated technology covered by the Agreement into their own products, including Intercept X; and (4) that Invincea (or its successor-in-interest) did not fulfill the reporting or royalty obligations on behalf of Sophos Defendants for these products. If true, these allegations are sufficient to state a claim for breach of contract under the general terms of the Patent License Agreement. Whether Sophos products, including Intercept X, are “natural evolutions [or] derivations” of Vir2us technology presents a question of fact.

b. Assignment provision

Defendants insist that Section 5 of the Patent License Agreement creates a “carve-out” exception that applies to Sophos Defendants' products that existed prior to its acquisition of Invincea, including Intercept X. Doc. 38 at 14.

Section 5 is entitled “Assignment and Transferability.” Agreement § 5. The sections relevant to Defendants' argument are as follows:

§ 5.2. Except as set forth in Section 5.3 below, Invincea may not assign this Agreement or any or all of its rights and obligations under this License Agreement to a third party (“Acquiring Entity”) without prior notice to and express written consent of Vir2us.

§ 5.3. Notwithstanding Section 5.2, Vir2us' consent shall not be required and Invincea may assign this Agreement to a third party (“Acquiring Entity”), in connection with the assignment by Invincea of all its rights and duties under this License Agreement to an Acquiring Entity in connection with the acquisition by such Acquiring Entity of Invincea, of all, or substantially all of the assets relating to the Container Products and Services, and/or an Affiliate (collectively, “Acquired Entities”), provided such Acquiring Entity expressly agrees in writing prior to such acquisition and assignment to assume and perform all of Invincea's obligations under this Agreement, and to the additional conditions and limitations in Section 5.3.1.

§ 5.3.1. The rights acquired by an Acquiring Entity as permitted by this Section shall apply only to Licensed Products and Services<sup>8</sup> and natural evolutions of Licensed Products and Services that were in existence as of the consummation of the acquisition and shall not apply to any other pre-existing or future products or services of the Acquiring Entity or of any subsequent Acquiring Entity.

Id. (emphasis added).

<sup>8</sup> Again, the Agreement defines “Licensed Products and Services” as products sold and/or services offered by Invincea or any of its Affiliates, with or without charge, during the Term of this License Agreement.

Defendants argue that Sophos MA is an “Acquiring Entity” pursuant to Section 5. Doc. 38 at 8. They therefore aver that some of their products, like Intercept X, are “pre-existing” products that fall under the exception enumerated in Section 5.3.1. Id. However, the Agreement does not support Defendants' definition of Acquiring Entity. According to the terms of the Agreement, Invincea may not assign “any or all” of its rights or duties under the License Agreement to a third-party, “Acquiring Entity” without Vir2us' written consent. Agreement § 5.2. Vir2us does not allege that it gave such consent. Accordingly, the Court must turn to Section 5.3. Cf. TC MidAtlantic Dev., Inc. v. Comm., Dep't of Gen. Servs., 695 S.E.2d 543, 547 (Va. 2010) (granting the defendant's motion to dismiss because the plaintiff failed to allege a condition precedent necessary to trigger the provision giving rise to a cause of action).

Section 5.3 defines an “Acquiring Entity” as a third party to whom Invincea assigns the Patent License Agreement: 1) with express written consent of the Acquiring Entity; and 2) in connection with the assumption of all Invincea's rights and obligations under the Agreement. Id. § 5.3. The Court must afford these specifications meaning. See Condo. Servs., Inc. v. First Owners' Ass'n of Forty Six Hundred Condo.,

709 S.E.2d 163, 170 (Va. 2011) (“Contract language will not be treated as meaningless where it can be given a reasonable meaning.”) (quotations omitted); Hale v. Hale, 590 S.E.2d 66, 68 (Va. App. 2003) (“Where possible, meaning must be given to every clause [of a contract].”). Neither party suggests that these conditions have been satisfied. There is no allegation that Sophos MA gave written consent to assume the Patent License Agreement, nor does Vir2us allege that the Sophos MA acquired all of Invincea's obligations under the Agreement. Accordingly, the Complaint does not support a finding that Sophos MA is an Acquiring Entity within the meaning of Section 5.3, and Section 5.3.1. does not apply.<sup>9</sup>

<sup>9</sup> Likewise, the Court rejects Defendants' argument that Section 5 addresses an entity's acquisition of Invincea, while Section 2.1.1 addresses Invincea's acquisition of another entity. See Doc. 38 at 12 n.7. The text of the Patent License Agreement makes no such distinction.

<sup>*9</sup> Defendants contend that Section 5.3 provides specific conditions for Affiliates that acquire Invincea, and that it therefore governs over the more general terms of the Patent License Agreement concerning Affiliates. Doc. 38 at 15-16. However, Virginia law provides that a specific provision of a contract governs over one that is more general in nature only “where there are two clauses in any respect conflicting ....” Condo. Servs., 709 S.E.2d at 170 (citing Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hill, 193 U.S. 551, 558 (1904)). Here, Section 5 does not conflict with the remainder of the Patent License Agreement. First, “Acquiring Entity” and “Affiliate” are separately defined terms that contemplate distinct scenarios: an entity may purchase more than fifty percent (50%) ownership interest in Invincea, thereby becoming an Affiliate, without assuming all rights and obligations of the Patent License Agreement, as required to become an Acquiring Entity. See Agreement §§ 1, 5. Second, the title of Section 5, “Assignment and Transferability,” suggests the terms of that section are limited to circumstances in which Invincea is divested of its obligations under the Agreement. See Donnelly v. Donatelli & Klein, Inc., 519 S.E.2d 133, 138 (Va. 1999) (observing that contract labels, though not controlling, “may be helpful in determining contractual intent.”); see also Virginia Power Energy Mktg., Inc. v. EOT Energy, LLC, No. 3:11CV630, 2012 WL 2905110, at *6 (E.D. Va. July 16, 2012) (observing that the parties' choice to write a separate, distinct paragraph... entitled “Non-Binding Effect” “must have some meaning”). Third, the plain language of the “carve-out” in Section 5.3.1. limits only the “rights” offered by the Patent License Agreement to Licensed Products and Services obtained through acquisition. No obligations are imposed on an Acquiring Entity's pre-existing products, because no rights are afforded to those products. Construed with the Agreement as a whole, Section 5 logically imposes special limitations on a third-party's use of Vir2us technology when it replaces Invincea – the original party to the contract - under the Agreement.

The Court's holding that Sophos MA may be a successor-in-interest to Invincea's reporting and royalty obligations does not, at this stage in the litigation, trigger the complete assignment provision contemplated by Section 5. There is no allegation that any of the Defendants agreed in writing to a complete assignment of the Agreement. Moreover, Virginia law and the Agreement itself reveal that assignment of rights or obligations under the contract may be partial. See § 5.2 (“Invincea may not assign ... any or all of its rights and obligations under this License Agreement to a third party ... without prior notice to and express written consent of Vir2us.”);<sup>10</sup> Newton v. White, 80 S.E. 561, 563 (Va. 1914) (discussing partial assignments of contracts). While neither party has offered case law on partial contract succession, the divisibility of contract rights and obligations through assignment suggests that partial succession is also permissible. Accordingly, this Court's finding that the Complaint supports successor-in-interest liability for Sophos Defendants with respect to the reporting and royalty obligations does not compel a finding that they are Acquiring Entities under the Agreement.

<sup>10</sup> If Sophos Defendants partially succeeded Invincea, and such succession is deemed equivalent to an assignment. Invincea may have breached Section 5.2 of the Patent License Agreement. However, Vir2us does not state a claim for breach of contract based on this provision.

Because Vir2us has alleged a breach of contract under the general terms of the Patent License Agreement, and the assignment provision does not apply, the Court DENIES Defendants' Motion to Dismiss on this basis.

IV. PRETRIAL HEARING

The Court may hold a Markman-type hearing on the issue of whether there is sufficient evidence to determine if the accused products sold by Sophos MA utilize the patents that are the subject of the Patent License Agreement. If the Court determines such a hearing is necessary, it shall be scheduled for Wednesday, September 25, 2019, at 11:00 a.m.

V. CONCLUSION

For the reasons stated herein, the Court GRANTS Defendants' Motion to Dismiss, Doc. 34, IN PART, as to Sophos Limited and Sophos Group PLC. The dismissal is WITHOUT PREJUDICE, and Plaintiff may move to file an amended complaint prior to August 31, 2019.

The Clerk is REQUESTED to deliver electronically a copy of this Order to all counsel of record.

It is so ORDERED.

All Citations

Slip Copy, 2019 WL 8886440

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-49

 KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment

Distinguished by In re MSR Resort Golf Course LLC, S.D.N.Y., January 7, 2014

310 B.R. 752
United States Bankruptcy Court,
E.D. California,
Modesto Division.

In re Michael HAT, dba Michael Hat Farming Company, Debtor.
The Wine Group, Bank of the West and the Official Committee of Unsecured Creditors, Movants,
v.
Sharon Diamante and Phoenix
Bio Industries, Inc., Respondents.

No. 01-92886-A-11.
|
Feb. 6, 2004.

Synopsis

Background: Unsuccessful bidder at auction sale of Chapter 11 debtor's winery moved for reconsideration of order approving sale of winery to non-debtor spouse in exercise of her statutory right of first refusal.

Holdings: The Bankruptcy Court, Thomas C. Holman, J., held that:

[1] unsuccessful bidder had standing to challenge court order approving sale;

[2] sales order would be set aside, and new auction sale would be ordered, based on evidence of collusion between spouse and two potential bidders; and

[3] spouse would not be barred from participating in second sale.

Motion granted; sales order vacated.

West Headnotes (8)

[1] Bankruptcy  Right of Review and Persons Entitled; Parties; Waiver or Estoppel

Unsuccessful bidder, whose pecuniary loss is the speculative profit it might have made had it succeeded in purchasing property at auction, usually lacks standing to challenge bankruptcy court order approving sales transaction. Bankr.Code, 11 U.S.C.A. § 363.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Bankruptcy  Right of Review and Persons Entitled; Parties; Waiver or Estoppel

Unsuccessful bidder at auction sale of Chapter 11 debtor's winery had standing to challenge court order approving sale, where its challenge was based on equitable grounds related to intrinsic structure of sale, i.e., on alleged collusion among potential bidders and third party who held statutory right of first refusal, which allegedly tainted sale.

4 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Bankruptcy  Setting Aside

Three factors that bankruptcy court had to consider in deciding whether to set aside order approving sale of Chapter 11 debtor's winery based on alleged collusion among potential bidders and third party holding a statutory right of first refusal were as follows: integrity of sale, third party's statutory right to purchase property at price at which sale was consummated, and preservation of best interests of estate. Bankr.Code, 11 U.S.C.A. § 363(n).

[4] Bankruptcy  Setting Aside

Bankruptcy court order approving sale of Chapter 11 debtor's winery to non-debtor spouse, in exercise of her statutory right of first refusal, would be set aside, and new auction sale would be ordered, based on evidence of collusion between spouse and two other potential bidders to allow third bidder to set sales price without any competitive bidding on their part, on understanding that spouse would then exercise her right of first refusal and resell property to them. Bankr.Code, 11 U.S.C.A. § 363(n).

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[5] Bankruptcy 🔑 Manner and Terms

To come within terms of Bankruptcy Code provision prohibiting agreements among potential bidders that control price at which estate property is sold, it must be potential bidders' intention or objective in entering into agreement to influence sales price; parties' acts must cause more than an incidental or unintended impact on sales price. Bankr.Code, 11 U.S.C.A. § 363(n).

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[6] Bankruptcy 🔑 Manner and Terms

As general matter, bidding at sale of estate property is not improperly chilled merely because persons have associated for purposes of bidding; problem arises only when this association has purpose and effect of removing potential bidders from sales process. Bankr.Code, 11 U.S.C.A. § 363(n).

[7] Bankruptcy 🔑 Encumbered Property; Limited or Joint Interests

Bankruptcy 🔑 Manner and Terms

Purpose of Bankruptcy Code provision according non-debtor spouse or co-owner a statutory right of first refusal to purchase estate property at price at which sale would otherwise be consummated is to give non-debtor spouse the right to purchase property on same terms and conditions as winning bidder, after auction process has determined property's fair market value. Bankr.Code, 11 U.S.C.A. § 363(i).

[8] Bankruptcy 🔑 Encumbered Property; Limited or Joint Interests

Bankruptcy 🔑 Manner and Terms

While evidence of collusion among two potential bidders and spouse holding statutory right of first refusal, whereby these potential bidders would allow third bidder to set sales price without any competitive bidding on their part, on understanding that spouse would then exercise her right of first refusal and resell property to them, was such as to warrant setting sales order aside, such collusion did not warrant prohibition against spouse's participating in second sale, as long as spouse fully disclosed identities of all fellow investors and sources of financing, and as long as, upon spouse's exercise of first refusal right, high bidder be given opportunity to increase its bid. Bankr.Code, 11 U.S.C.A. § 363(n).

Attorneys and Law Firms

*753 William W. Nolan, Sacramento, CA, for Michael Hat, dba Michael Hat Farming Company.

Mary J. Martinelli, Sacramento, CA, Merle C. Meyers, San Francisco, CA, for John Van Curen.

MEMORANDUM DECISION

THOMAS C. HOLMAN, Bankruptcy Judge.

Moving parties ask the court to reconsider an order (the "Sale Order") entered October 1, 2003 (Docket No. 2099) approving the sale of property of the estate in Kern County, California, consisting of a grape crush and winery facility on approximately 20 acres of land, approximately 130 additional acres planted to vineyard, approximately 170 additional acres of open land and related personal property (collectively, the "Capello Winery"). Sharon Diamante ("Diamante"), the purchaser designated in the Sale Order, opposes the motion to reconsider. For the reasons stated herein, the court grants the motion, vacates the Sale Order and orders a new sale of the Capello Winery.

*754 The court held an evidentiary hearing in Modesto, California on January 22, 23, 29, and 30, and February 6, 2004. Appearances were noted on the record. At the conclusion of the evidentiary hearing, the matter was taken under advisement.

This is a core proceeding and the court has jurisdiction over this matter. 28 U.S.C. §§ 1334 and 157. Venue is proper in this court under 28 U.S.C. § 1409. There is no dispute concerning jurisdiction or venue.

The following constitutes the court's findings of fact and conclusions of law pursuant to Fed. R. Bankr.P. 7052.

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

On July 20, 2001, Michael Hat (“Hat”) commenced the above-captioned voluntary Chapter 11 case. Hat acted as debtor in possession until April 11, 2003, when John Van Curen, (the “Trustee”) was appointed Chapter 11 trustee.

On June 13, 2003, the Trustee filed Trustee's Motion For: Authority To Sell The Capello Winery Free And Clear Of Certain Interests In The Property With Contingent Lease, Approval Of Overbid Procedures, And Authorization To Pay A Breakup Fee In The Event Of Sale To Third Party, D.C. No. LRP-6, (the “Sale Motion”) to sell the Capello Winery to The Wine Group (“TWG”). A hearing on the Sale Motion was held on July 8, 2003. The court granted the Sale Motion in part, approving a requested one year lease of the Capello Winery to TWG. The court continued the balance of the Sale Motion to July 22, 2003 for further hearing. The court required the Trustee to file and serve an executed sale agreement by July 11, 2003. An order reflecting the July 8, 2003 rulings was entered July 14, 2003.

Another hearing on the Sale Motion was held on July 22, 2003. TWG increased its prior bid of $4.75 million by the amount of $142,500, for a proposed purchase price of $4,892,500. The break up fee requested in the Sale Motion was approved by the court. There were no other bids.

The Court approved the sale to TWG. Diamante, the former spouse of Hat, asserted that the Capello Winery was community property and that she had the right under 11 U.S.C. § 363(i)<sup>1</sup> to purchase the Capello Winery by matching the TWG purchase price.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Unless otherwise noted, all statutory references are to the Bankruptcy Code, 11 U.S.C. § 101 et seq.,

and all “Rule” references are to the Federal Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure.

<sup>2</sup> Whether or not Diamante possesses rights under Section 363(i) is the subject of an adversary proceeding currently pending in this court: 03–9178–A. However, the Trustee conceded the existence of Diamante's Section 363(i) rights for purposes of the Sale Motion at the initial hearing held July 8, 2003.

The Court approved the sale of the Capello Winery to Diamante, as purchaser, at the purchase price of $4,892,500.

On August 29, 2003, TWG filed the present motion to reconsider. The motion to reconsider included a request that the court delay the entry of the Sale Order pending a hearing on the motion to reconsider.

At a hearing on the motion to reconsider held September 30, 2003, the court denied the motion to reconsider in part, specifically the request for a delay in the entry of an order based on the ruling at the July 22, 2003 hearing. That request was denied without prejudice to a motion seeking a stay of the effect of the Sale Order. However, the effect of the Sale Order was temporarily stayed until October 28, 2003 to allow TWG to file and have its stay motion heard. The balance of the motion to *755 reconsider was set for evidentiary hearing. An interim order to the foregoing effect was entered October 6, 2003.

As noted above, the Sale Order approving the sale to Diamante was entered October 1, 2003. On October 10, 2003, TWG timely filed its motion for a stay of the effect of the Sale Order (the “Stay Motion”).

On October 28, 2003, the court heard the Stay Motion and stayed the effect of the Sale Order pursuant to Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 7062 incorporating Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 62(b), until such time as the court decided the motion for reconsideration. The court entered an order on the Stay Motion on November 5, 2003.

The Trustee withdrew his opposition to the motion for reconsideration on October 24, 2003, after obtaining a written offer from TWG to purchase the Capello Winery for $5,250,000 should the motion be granted and the prior sale vacated.

After a discovery period, a pre-trial conference was held December 18, 2004. Diamante's oral motion to exclude testimony on all issues other than whether Phoenix Bio Industries ("PBI") was a potential bidder at the sale was denied. The Trustee and Jerry Rava were dismissed as parties. The parties stipulated to a single list of exhibits and to their admission into evidence. There were also stipulations regarding allocation of time and to limiting the number of times that the same witness would be called to testify. The court set this matter for a four day trial on January 22, 23, 29, and 30, 2004.

The court heard from a total of twelve witnesses on the first three days of trial. When the matter recommenced on January 30, 2004, the parties notified the court that they had concluded presentation of their cases in chief. The trial was continued to February 6, 2004 for closing arguments after the conclusion of which, the matter was taken under submission.

FACTS

The Capello Winery consists of approximately 320 acres of land on which a grape crush and winery facility occupies 20 acres; approximately 130 acres are planted to vineyard; and 170 acres is open land. The crush and winery facility also houses a distillery. The facility contains one hundred seven (107) stainless steel storage tanks of various capacities ranging from 350,000 gallons to 2,500 gallons. The total tank capacity is approximately 8.97 million gallons.

In 2002, PBI was in the business of producing non-food grade grain alcohol. It believed that the stainless steel tanks on the winery portion of the Capello Winery could be converted into fermentation tanks for grain and that those tanks could produce enough grain mash to keep the distillery busy around the clock, seven days a week.

In May, 2002, while Hat was debtor in possession in this bankruptcy case, PBI and Hat entered into a lease of the Capello Winery; however, no bankruptcy court approval of the lease was sought or obtained. PBI invested approximately $514,574.00 in the Capello Winery in the belief that its lease was valid. In March 2003, prior to appointment of the Trustee, PBI submitted to Hat a written offer to purchase the Capello Winery for $2.5 million. That offer was rejected.

After his appointment on April 11, 2003, the Trustee began actively marketing the Capello Winery. The Trustee thought time was short because Yosemite Land Bank, the holder of the first deed of trust on the property, had not been paid for some time and was about to seek relief from the automatic stay to foreclose. The *756 Trustee's analysis indicated that the estate needed at least $4.5 million from the property to cover the Yosemite Land Bank lien, costs of sale, estate attorneys fees relating to a sale transaction, potential capital gains taxes and a return for other estate creditors.

PBI learned that its lease was potentially vulnerable because it had not been approved by the bankruptcy court.

On or around April 20, 2003, Richard Eastman ("Eastman") of PBI contacted the Trustee about acquiring the Capello Winery. PBI was motivated by the desire to protect its investment in the facility and by the desirability of the facility for its business. PBI made an oral offer to the Trustee to purchase the Capello Winery for $4.1 million. The Trustee told Eastman that a purchase offer would have to be more than $4.5 million.

PBI began the process of putting together a combination of financing and investors to acquire the Capello Winery. PBI got a commitment from Mark Wheeler, one of the principals of PBI, to invest up to $2.5 million for the acquisition. Wheeler's limit for the investment was $2.5 million. PBI also sought additional financing of between $3.0 million and $4.0 million from Wells Fargo Bank and other financial institutions. In a letter to Wells Fargo Bank, Eastman stated that he had offered the Trustee $4.1 million for the Capello Winery. PBI also sought investors for additional funds. PBI's efforts to find funds to acquire the Capello Winery continued until mid-June, 2003.

TWG entered the picture at the beginning of May 2003. Kenneth Ford ("Ford"), president of winery operations for TWG, had contacted the Trustee on May 5, 2003. Ford and the Trustee met in person on May 6, 2003 and, after some negotiation, agreed that TWG would purchase the Capello Winery for $4.75 million.

In the latter half of May 2003, PBI first learned that TWG was interested in the Capello Winery. On May 15, 2003, Ford and others from TWG toured the Capello Winery with the Trustee. During the tour, Eastman, who was on the property that day, introduced himself to Ford. Through general knowledge of the industry, PBI believed that TWG had far greater resources than PBI and that TWG could outbid PBI in a competitive sale.

On June 5, 2003, Eastman contacted Kenneth Ford of TWG for a meeting. PBI wanted to work out a deal with TWG to avoid competitive bidding. In preparation for the meeting, Eastman generated a proposed agenda. That document explicitly states in item A1: "Purchase price can be kept down by avoiding serious overbid situation." Ford initially agreed to meet with Eastman, but after consulting with counsel, he cancelled the meeting on June 9, 2003.

On or about June 10, 2003, Hat informed Eastman that Diamante had a right of first refusal under the Bankruptcy Code. Eastman followed up with Hat in a letter attaching the same agenda he had prepared for the cancelled TWG meeting. The meeting with Hat was successful. The parties agreed in principal to a deal whereby Diamante would exercise her rights under Section 363\(i\) in exchange for a three percent (3%) commission on the sale. Immediately after the sale closed, Diamante would assign her rights to the Capello Winery to PBI subject to a future right of her or her assignee to re-purchase a 50% interest in the property. However, the parties agreed that Diamante was serving as a middle person for a fee and would ultimately have no ownership of the property because any final agreement would require her to assign her rights to Hat.

*757 Upon reaching the foregoing agreement, PBI ceased its efforts to secure financing and investors to bid on the Capello Winery.

As ultimately drafted, the Memorandum of Understanding Concerning the Capello Winery ("MOU") provided that Diamante would be paid $72,500 from PBI and $72,500 from the Hat Group to exercise her Section 363\(i\) rights. PBI agreed to provide one-half of the funds for both the deposit and the final purchase price. The other half of the funding was to come through the so called Hat Group.

Diamante and Hat approached various relatives and business associates. They obtained an informal commitment from her and Hat's nephew, Lance Ioppini, to loan up to $2 million.<sup>3</sup> The Ravas, who had no interest whatsoever in running a winery, agreed to lend Hat (but not Diamante) $250,000 because Hat made it a condition of obtaining his help on another matter. They wished to purchase other estate property located in Monterey county, then involved in a pending foreclosure, and thought they needed Hat to sign off on the purchase. Hat first broached the idea of the loan the day before the July 22 hearing. The Ravas agreed to loan Hat the money for 45 days in exchange for him signing off on the Monterey county properties. The money would be non-refundable if Hat signed off on the purchase.

<sup>3</sup> The testimony is inconsistent as to which of Diamante or Hat actually spoke with Mr. Ioppini. Mr. Ioppini stated in his testimony that he spoke only with Diamante. Diamante, in her deposition testimony, answered "No" when asked whether she "had any idea at all of who these investors might be."

The remainder of the Hat group's portion of the funding was to come through either an assumption or refinancing of the debt owed to the first deed of trust holder, Yosemite Land Bank, FLCA. The court notes that an assumption of existing debt was outside the scope of the sale agreement between the Trustee and TWG.

The MOU was executed by PBI, Diamante, and Hat on July 22, 2003, immediately prior to the hearing on the proposed sale of the Capello Winery. At the same time, an assignment of rights between Hat and the Ravas was signed by Hat, Diamante, and PBI. Neither of the Ravas signed the document despite the fact that it contained lines for their signatures. No evidence was presented of an assignment between Diamante and Hat.

The method by which Diamante proposes to fund her purchase of the Capello Winery has changed significantly since the entry of the Sale Order on October 1, 2003. Neither PBI nor the Ravas are willing to finance or otherwise participate in the purchase. PBI is no longer operating and has no assets with which to fund the purchase. The Ravas allege they were defrauded by Hat and have demanded return of their $250,000.

Diamante testified that she proposed to form a limited liability company ("LLC") which would own the Capello Winery. Thirty percent (30%) of the LLC would be owned by a Dr. Paregian in exchange for a $1.5 million investment. Thirty Percent (30%) would be owned by a Mr. Pistoresi who would also invest $1.5 million. The final forty percent (40%) would be owned by Diamante. She proposes to fund her portion of the purchase through a $1.1 million loan from Hat's sister and the estate of Hat's mother as well as investing an undisclosed amount of crop proceeds from other properties owned by Diamante. The last $500,000 consists of the monies already placed in escrow by PBI and the Ravas.

*758 Analysis

The motion is granted to the extent set forth herein. The sale of the Capello Winery has been tainted by collusion between Diamante and potential bidders, and the order approving the sale of the Capello Winery to Diamante is vacated.

Standing

As an initial matter, Diamante raises the issue of TWG's standing to bring this motion. Diamante argues that this motion is really a motion under Section 363\(n\) and actions under that section may only be brought by a trustee. Diamante's argument is unpersuasive.

[1] [2] “[A]n unsuccessful bidder—whose pecuniary loss is the speculative profit it might have made had it succeeded in purchasing property at an auction—usually lacks standing to challenge a bankruptcy court's approval of a sale transaction.” Kabro Associates v. Colony Hill Associates (In re Colony Hill Associates), 111 F.3d 269, 273 (2nd Cir.1997) (citation omitted). However this rule is not absolute.

“Courts ... properly entertain suits challenging the equity of a bankruptcy sale transaction, on the assumption that sales tinged by fraud, mistake or unfairness would generally result in an accepted bid below that which might have been expected in a fair, free market situation. Thus, when an unsuccessful bidder attacks a bankruptcy sale on equitable grounds related to the intrinsic structure of the sale, he brings himself within the zone of interests which the Bankruptcy Act seeks to protect and to regulate.”

Id. at 274 citing In re Harwald Co., 497 F.2d 443, 444–45 (7th Cir.1974) (internal citations omitted). See also Ross v. Kirschenbaum (In re Beck Industries, Inc.), 605 F.2d 624, 634 n. 13 (2nd Cir.1979).

This is one such instance. TWG is attacking the sale not because it lost a bidding contest with another party but because it alleges that two potential bidders colluded with a third party who held a statutory right of first refusal thus tainting the sale. The court finds that TWG has standing to bring this motion for reconsideration.

Propriety of the Capello Winery Sale

Diamante correctly argues that she is not a bidder, holding (for purposes of the Sale Motion and this motion) a right of first refusal, but that does not exclude her from the scrutiny of the court. The very existence of her rights under Section 363\(i\) leads to certain chilling of the bid process. This fact was known and acknowledged by Congress at the time it enacted Section 363\(i\). By implication, it is therefore not grounds, in and of itself, for setting aside the sale. However, in this instance, the bidding has been further chilled by the agreement between Diamante and at least two potential bidders. The latter chilling is not inherent in the statute and is not permitted.

[3] [4] This court agrees with the bankruptcy court in In re Fehl, 19 B.R. 310, 311–12 (Bankr.N.D.Cal.1982) regarding the three factors to consider in circumstances such as this:

1. The integrity of the trustee's sale.
2. The 363(i) rights of the [spouse].
3. The preservation of the best interests of the estate.

The agreement between Diamante, PBI and Hat directly and negatively affects the first and third factors, and it goes beyond the legitimate interest acknowledged by the second factor.

Sale Integrity

The evidence shows that the sale of the Capello Winery was tainted. Bidding was *759 chilled through collusion between Diamante and two potential bidders: PBI and Hat. The conclusion that bidding has been impermissibly chilled dictates a new sale. Beck Industries, 605 F.2d at 637.

As conceded by all parties in pre-trial briefing, potential bidders are “all persons who are contemplating making an offer to purchase property of a bankrupt estate that the trustee seeks to sell, whether such sale be private or at public auction.” Ramsay v. Vogel, 970 F.2d 471, 473 (8th Cir.1992).

The court specifically notes that the definition is not limited to parties who believe they will necessarily be the successful bidder at the sale. PBI was not merely a potential bidder. The evidence shows that PBI actually made an offer of $2.5 million in March 2003 and an offer of $4.1 million in April 2003.<sup>4</sup> PBI continued to look for independent financing and investment totaling at least $5.5 million to $6.5 million through mid-June, 2003; ceasing its search only after it had entered into the agreement with Diamante and Hat. PBI was at least a potential bidder for the Capello Winery.

<sup>4</sup> Eastman's testimony at trial that PBI did not make the $4.1 million offer is not credible in light of the contemporaneous documents executed by him and sent to Wells Fargo Bank.

Likewise, the evidence shows that Hat was also a potential bidder. Hat was the driving force behind the non-PBI half of the purchase. While at first blush it might seem that Hat was serving as Diamante's agent in the transaction, a review of actions taken by Hat directly contrary to Diamante's interests shows that Hat was acting for himself. Hat sought to arrange the transaction so that Diamante would serve as a middle person whose sole function was to exercise her Section 363\(i\) rights for a fee. While that may not have been Diamante's intent, that was the structure of the agreement.

Hat made all contacts with potential investors. It was Hat who first contacted PBI. Hat first contacted the Ravas. He structured the financing in place at the time of trial, and while he allegedly would not hold an ownership interest, he would run the Capello Winery for a "hefty salary." There can be no doubt of Hat's interest in retaining control of the property. Other than being a party to the contract, there is no reason for Hat to sign the July 22, 2003 Memorandum of Understanding.

[5] There is no disputing that Diamante, PBI and Hat colluded. The evidence also shows that their collusion controlled the price at which the Capello Winery sold. "[T]he term 'control' implies more than acts causing an incidental or unintended impact on the price; it implies an intention or objective to influence the price." Lone Star Industries, Inc. v. Compania Naviera Perez Companc, et al. (In re New York Trap Rock Corp.), 42 F.3d 747, 752 (2nd Cir.1994). The June 10, 2003 meeting agenda is particularly damning in that it expressly sets forth an intent to minimize the price. Ultimately, TWG was the only actual bidder at the sale. Both Hat and PBI sat on the sidelines behind Diamante's right of first refusal. Their control results from their ability to utilize Diamante's rights to obtain the property without having to bid at all.

Diamante's Section 363\(i\) Rights

The Trustee conceded the existence of these rights as to the Capello Winery at the initial hearing on the Sale Motion. The court takes no issue with Diamante's desire to utilize her right of first refusal to purchase the Capello Winery, provided that her rights are properly exercised.

*760 [6] The holder of Section 363\(i\) rights may exercise those rights while obtaining financing from a lender that is not a potential bidder. Similarly, as a general matter, "bidding is not improperly chilled by the mere fact of an association of persons formed for the purpose of bidding at a sale since this may be not only unobjectionable but oftentimes meritorious, if not necessary to enable the persons associating themselves to participate in the bidding, rather than to shut out competition." Beck Industries, 605 F.2d at 635–36 (internal quotes and citation omitted).

A problem arises when, as here, the financing and/or association has the purpose and effect of removing potential bidders from the sale process.<sup>5</sup> In such circumstances, the Section 363\(i\) rights are not properly exercised.

<sup>5</sup> The court need not address either an improper purpose or an improper effect, standing alone, as both are clearly present here.

Preservation of the Best Interests of the Estate

[7] The best interests of the estate were directly and negatively impacted by Diamante's collusion with PBI and Hat and the way in which Diamante exercised her Section 363\(i\) rights in this instance. The purpose of Section 363\(i\) is to give a non-debtor spouse the right to purchase property under the same terms and conditions as the winning bidder after the auction process has determined the fair market value. If the procedure works correctly, the estate is not harmed because it still receives the highest price the market will bear. The non-debtor spouse benefits by being able to retain the community property.

Here, there were only three potential bidders for the Capello Winery. Diamante entered into an agreement with two of the three. As a direct result, there was no competitive bidding.<sup>6</sup> The auction was improperly restrained and therefore could not determine the fair market value for the Capello Winery. No one can state with certainty what the ultimate price would have been had competitive bidding taken place. However, the facts that PBI attempted to put together its own financial package in excess of $5.0 million before it learned of Diamante's rights, and that TWG is now willing to bid at least $5,250,000, $357,500 more than the present sale price, create a strong indication that an auction with true competitive bidding would produce a higher price. Diamante's agreement has harmed the estate.

<sup>6</sup> The court acknowledges that TWG did overbid itself but it is clear that the only purpose was to become eligible to receive the negotiated break-up fee. In essence, TWG was to be repaid the bid increase.

TWG's Request for Future Restrictions on Diamante's Exercise of Section 363(i) rights

[8] TWG requests that Diamante be barred from any exercise her Section 363(i) rights in any future sale of the Capello Winery. In connection with that request and assuming that it is granted, TWG seeks an order that no potential bidders (Diamante included) may collude or cooperate in bidding on the sale. Those requests are denied.

TWG has provided no authority for this court to strip Diamante of her Section 363(i) rights. Beck Industries is factually distinguishable. That case involved a right of first refusal ("ROFR") in an employment contract made during a bankruptcy case with court approval. The decision suggests that the court's actions regarding the ROFR holder's participation in the new sale were based on the court's supervisory role over the court approved contract. Beck Industries, *761 605 F.2d at 637. More importantly, the court in Beck Industries did not strip the holder of the ROFR of his rights. Rather, the court directed and suggested certain restrictions on the exercise of those rights. Id.

Beck Industries clearly stands for the proposition that the court may fashion equitable remedies for misconduct in connection with a sale that subjects the bankruptcy estate to expense and delay, the objective being to maximize bidding, not restrict it. Thus, the court in Beck Industries said:

We also direct that [the holder of the ROFR] shall not be allowed, after all that has here transpired, to interpose his [ROFR] on the [assets on which the ROFR was held] as a bar to the sale of the package [the assets on which the ROFR was held and other assets] and require a separation.

* * *

Any legitimate interest of [the ROFR holder] can be protected by the bankruptcy judge's giving him a reasonable opportunity to meet any bid for the package, with the bidder then having an opportunity to make a still higher bid.

Id.

This court is indifferent to the identity of the purchaser of the Capello Winery, whether it is TWG, Diamante, or some other third party, so long as the sale process remains within the boundaries set by the Bankruptcy Code and the estate receives the highest price possible. To those ends, the court orders two things. First, Diamante shall make full disclosure in writing at the commencement of the subsequent sale of the identities of all investors, co-owners and sources of financing in connection with any bid or exercise of Section 363(i) rights that she may make at the subsequent sale of the Capello Winery. The court has previously ordered similar disclosure by Diamante on other sale motions, and the disclosure allows the Trustee, the Creditors Committee and other parties in interest to examine any arrangements before confirmation of the sale. Second, the high bidder prior to Diamante's first exercise of her Section 363(i) rights may thereafter raise its bid, the process to continue until either the bidder fails to raise its bid or Diamante fails to exercise her Section 363(i) rights. These provisions will ensure the highest price for the estate while preserving Diamante's right to meet, but not exceed, the highest bid.

The court will not place any additional restrictions on potential bidders. Collusion between or among bidders and potential bidders to control the price at a sale is already proscribed. 11 U.S.C. § 363(n). The court need not duplicate that proscription.

Conclusion

Based on the forgoing, the motion for reconsideration pursuant to Federal Rule of Bankruptcy Procedure 9023 incorporating Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 59\(e\) is granted. The Sale Order is vacated and the Trustee shall conduct another sale of the Capello Winery in a manner consistent with this ruling.

The court will issue a separate order.

All Citations

310 B.R. 752, 43 Bankr.Ct.Dec. 65

---

End of Document

© 2020 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-50

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

---

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, ) United States Department of Justice ) Antitrust Division )
 450 Fifth Street, NW, Suite 8000 )
 Washington, DC 20530 )
 )
 Plaintiff, )
 )
 v. )
 )
SMITHFIELD FOODS, INC., ) 200 Commerce Street ) Smithfield, Virginia 23430 )
 )
 and )
 )
PREMIUM STANDARD FARMS, LLC, ) Highway 65 N ) c/o P.O. Box 194 ) Princeton, Missouri 64673 )
 )
 Defendants. )
 )

---

Civil Action No.

Case: 1:10-cv-00120
Assigned To : Huvelle, Ellen S.
Assign. Date : 1/21/2010
Description: Antitrust

COMPLAINT

The United States of America, by its attorneys, acting under the direction of the Attorney General of the United States, brings this civil antitrust action to obtain civil penalties against Smithfield Foods, Inc. (“Smithfield”) and Premium Standard Farms, LLC, the successor in interest to Premium Standard Farms, Inc., (collectively “Premium Standard”) and alleges as follows:

I. NATURE OF THE ACTION

1. The United States brings this action to recover civil penalties from the defendants for the violation of Section 7A of the Clayton Act, as amended, 15 U.S.C. § 18a, also commonly known as the Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Improvements Act of 1976 (“Section 7A” or the “HSR Act”). On May 7, 2007, Smithfield acquired Premium Standard, Inc. Prior to the expiration of the statutory waiting period applicable to Smithfield’s acquisition of Premium Standard, Smithfield exercised operational control over Premium Standard’s hog procurement and thereby acquired beneficial ownership of a significant segment of Premium Standard’s business. This conduct, called “gun jumping,” is prohibited by Section 7A.

II. JURISDICTION AND VENUE

2. This Court has jurisdiction over this action and the defendants under 15 U.S.C. § 18a(g), and 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331, 1337(a), 1345, and 1355(a).

3. Defendants Smithfield and Premium Standard are engaged in interstate commerce and in activity substantially affecting interstate commerce.

4. Defendant Smithfield is incorporated under the laws of the Commonwealth of Virginia, with its principal place of business in Smithfield, Virginia.

5. At all times relevant to this Complaint, Premium Standard Farms, Inc. was incorporated under the laws of Delaware, with its principal place of business in Kansas City, Missouri. On May 7, 2007, Smithfield acquired Premium Standard Farms, Inc. and Premium Standard Farms, Inc. became a wholly-owned subsidiary of Smithfield. On August, 2, 2007, Premium Standard Farms, Inc. was merged with and into PSF LLC, with the surviving entity being named Premium Standard Farms, LLC. Defendant Premium Standard Farms, LLC is the successor in interest to Premium Standard Farms, Inc. and is incorporated under the laws of Delaware, with its principal place of business in Princeton, Missouri.

6. Defendants waive any objection to venue and personal jurisdiction in this judicial district for the specific and limited purpose of this Complaint.

III. THE DEFENDANTS

7. Smithfield is the largest pork packer and processor and the largest hog producer in the United States. Prior to the merger, it had seven pork packing plants in the United States.

8. Premium Standard was the sixth-largest pork packer and processor, with two pork packing plants, and the second-largest hog producer in the United States.

9. At all times relevant to this Complaint, Smithfield and Premium Standard purchased and raised hogs for slaughter and sold fresh and processed pork throughout the United States, in competition with each other.

10. Until May 7, 2007, Smithfield and Premium Standard were each engaged in commerce or activity affecting commerce within the meaning of Section 1 of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 12, and Section 7A(a)(1) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18a(a)(1).

IV. WAITING PERIOD REQUIREMENTS OF SECTION 7A OF THE CLAYTON ACT

11. Section 7A establishes a waiting period that allows federal antitrust agencies to investigate certain mergers and to file suit to enjoin those acquisitions that violate the antitrust laws. When Section 7A applies, it requires parties to file premerger notifications with the Department of Justice and the Federal Trade Commission and to supply additional information and documents to the investigating agency upon request. Section 7A requires that the merging parties observe a designated waiting period before the acquiring person may hold, directly or indirectly, the voting securities or assets of the acquired person. A purpose of this waiting period is to preserve the acquired firm as an independent company in case the proposed acquisition is blocked or otherwise not consummated so that the competition that the antitrust laws protect does not suffer.

12. The notification and waiting period requirements of Section 7A apply to direct or indirect acquisitions that meet the HSR Act's thresholds. At all times relevant to this Complaint, the HSR Act's reporting and waiting period requirements applied to certain transactions that would have resulted in the acquiring person holding more than $56.7 million, and all transactions where the acquiring person would hold more than $226.8 million of the acquired person's voting securities and/or assets except for certain exempted transactions.

13. Section 801(c)(1) of the Premerger Notification Rules, 16 C.F.R. § 800 et seq., defines "hold" to mean to have "beneficial ownership." The Statement of Basis and Purpose that accompanied the issuance of Section 801(c)(1), 43 Fed. Reg. 33450, 33458 (July 31, 1978), states that "the existence of beneficial ownership is determined in the context of the particular case with reference to the person or persons that enjoy the indicia of beneficial ownership."

14. Section 7A(g)(1) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18a(g)(1), provides that any person, or any officer, director, or partner thereof, who fails to comply with any provision of the HSR Act is liable to the United States for a civil penalty for each day during which such person is in violation. For the time period relevant to the Complaint, the maximum amount of civil penalty is $11,000 per day, pursuant to the Debt Collection Improvement Act of 1996, Pub. L. 104-134, § 31001(s) (amending the Federal Civil Penalties Inflation Adjustment Act of 1990, 28 U.S.C. § 2461 note), and Federal Trade Commission Rule 1.98, 16 C.F.R. § 1.98, 61 Fed. Reg. 54548 (Oct. 21, 1996).

V. THE MERGER

15. The notification and waiting period requirements of Section 7A applied to Smithfield's acquisition of Premium Standard. On September 17, 2006, Smithfield and Premium Standard entered into an Agreement and Plan of Merger (the "Merger Agreement"). Under the Merger Agreement, Smithfield agreed to acquire Premium Standard for approximately $693 million in stock and cash and assume $117 million of Premium Standard's debt for a total purchase price of about $810 million. On October 6, 2006, Smithfield and Premium Standard filed premerger Notification and Report Forms required by Section 7A, marking the beginning of the Section 7A waiting period. The statutory 30-day waiting period was extended when the Antitrust Division issued requests for additional information on November 6, 2006. The waiting period expired on March 7, 2007, thirty days after both parties certified compliance with the requests. Smithfield completed its acquisition of Premium Standard on May 7, 2007.

16. The Merger Agreement contained certain customary interim "conduct of business" provisions limiting Premium Standard's operations during the Section 7A waiting period to protect Smithfield's legitimate interests in maintaining Premium Standard's value without impairing Premium Standard's independence. These included provisions regarding Premium Standard's rights to assume new debt or financing, issue new voting securities and sell assets, as well as requirements that Premium Standard "carry on its business in the ordinary course consistent with past practice." The Merger Agreement also conditioned the closing of the transaction on the absence of any material adverse effect, as such agreements customarily do.

VI. DEFENDANTS' CONDUCT

17. Prior to its acquisition, Premium Standard purchased hogs from independent hog suppliers pursuant to contracts that ranged in length from one to five years. Procurement of hogs from independent hog suppliers was a focus of the Antitrust Division's investigation and Request for Additional Information. For 2008, Premium Standard projected purchasing hogs from about eleven independent hog producers.

18. After executing the Merger Agreement, Premium Standard needed to continue to purchase hogs from independent hog producers in order to carry on its business in the ordinary course consistent with its past practice.

19. After executing the Merger Agreement, Premium Standard stopped exercising independent business judgment in its hog purchases. Instead, beginning on or about September 20, 2006, Premium Standard submitted for Smithfield's consent each of the three contracts for hog purchases from an independent hog producer that arose during the Section 7A waiting period, including one contract accounting for less than one percent of Premium Standard's annual slaughter capacity. Together, the three multi-year contracts obligated Premium Standard to purchase, on an annual basis, between 400,000 to 475,000 hogs at a total cost ranging from approximately $57 million to $67 million. These hog procurement contracts were necessary to Premium Standard's ongoing business and entered into in the ordinary course. Each time Premium Standard sought consent, it provided Smithfield with the proposed contract terms, including the price to be paid, quantity to be purchased, and length of the contract.

VII. VIOLATION OF SECTION 7A OF THE CLAYTON ACT

20. Through the conduct described in Paragraphs 17 through 19, Smithfield exercised operational control over a significant segment of Premium Standard's business prior to the expiration of the waiting period required by Section 7A. By controlling a significant segment of Premium Standard's business operations while having agreed to acquire Premium Standard, Smithfield acquired beneficial ownership of that significant segment of Premium Standard's business, and thus acquired and held those assets, valued in excess of the $56.7 million threshold then in effect, within the meaning of Section 7A on or about September 20, 2006.

21. Smithfield and Premium Standard were continuously in violation of Section 7A from on or about September 20, 2006, through the expiration of the statutory waiting period on March 7, 2007.

VIII. PRAYER FOR RELIEF

The United States requests:

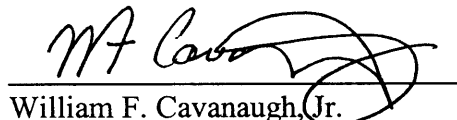

1. That the Court adjudge and decree that Smithfield and Premium Standard violated Section 7A of the HSR Act during the period beginning on September 20, 2006, and ending on March 7, 2007;
2. That each defendant pay to the United States an appropriate civil penalty as provided under Section 7A(g)(1) of the Clayton Act, 15 U.S.C. § 18a(g)(1), and 16 C.F.R. § 1.98(a);
3. That the United States have such other relief as the nature of the case may require and the Court may deem just and proper; and

4. That the United States recover its costs of this action.

Dated this 21st day of January 2010.

Christine A. Varney
Assistant Attorney General

Molly S. Boast
Deputy Assistant Attorney General

William F. Cavanaugh, Jr.
Deputy Assistant Attorney General

J. Robert Kramer II
Director of Operations

Donna N. Kooperstein
Chief
Transportation, Energy &
Agriculture Section

William H. Stallings
Assistant Chief
Transportation, Energy &
Agriculture Section

Respectfully Submitted,

Joseph Chandra Mazumdar
Angela L. Hughes (D.C. Bar # 303420)
C. Alexander Hewes, Jr. (D.C. Bar #150284)
Trial Attorneys

U.S. Department of Justice
Antitrust Division
Transportation, Energy &
Agriculture Section
450 Fifth Street, NW, Suite 8000
Washington, DC 20530
Telephone: (202) 353-1560
Facsimile: (202) 616-2441

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-51

Department of Justice

Office of Public Affairs

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

Thursday, January 21, 2010

Smithfield Foods and Premium Standard Farms Charged with Illegal Premerger Coordination

Companies Required to Pay $900,000 Civil Penalty

WASHINGTON – The Department of Justice today announced a settlement with Smithfield Foods Inc. and Premium Standard Farms LLC that requires the companies to pay a total of $900,000 in civil penalties for violating premerger waiting period requirements.

The Department's Antitrust Division today filed a civil antitrust lawsuit in U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia, along with the proposed settlement that, if approved by the court, would resolve the lawsuit.

According to the complaint, after Smithfield and Premium Standard announced their proposed merger in September 2006, Smithfield exercised operational control over a significant segment of Premium Standard's business without observing the premerger waiting period requirement in violation of federal antitrust law. Such conduct, commonly known as "gun jumping" violates the Hart-Scott-Rodino (HSR) Act of 1976.

After entering into the merger agreement, Premium Standard stopped exercising its independent business judgment with respect to hog procurement. Instead, Premium Standard sought Smithfield's consent for all of the hog procurement contracts that arose during the waiting period, providing Smithfield with the contract terms, including price, quantity and duration. The hog procurement contracts were necessary to Premium Standard's ongoing business and were entered into in the ordinary course. Requiring a buyer's approval of the seller's ordinary course contracts can prematurely transfer operational control, violating premerger notification requirements, the Department said.

"Merging companies must remain independent in their ordinary business operations, including purchasing decisions, until the end of the premerger waiting period," said Christine Varney, Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Department's Antitrust Division. "Observing the waiting period ensures that the marketplace remains competitive which ultimately benefits consumers."

The HSR Act requires companies planning mergers or acquisitions that meet certain threshold requirements to file premerger notifications with the Department of Justice and Federal Trade Commission. The Act gives the federal antitrust agencies an opportunity before the parties merge to investigate the proposed transactions and determine whether they would violate the antitrust laws. When the HSR Act applies, it requires that companies observe a waiting period before the acquisition occurs. A purpose of the waiting period is to preserve the companies as independent companies in case the proposed merger or acquisition is blocked so that the competition that the antitrust laws protect does not suffer.

Federal courts can assess civil penalties for premerger notification or waiting period violations under the HSR Act in lawsuits brought by the Department of Justice. During the time period relevant to this case, the maximum civil penalty for a party in violation of the HSR Act is $11,000 for each day it is in violation. The Department's complaint does not challenge the underlying merger, which the companies announced they had closed on May 7, 2007.

Smithfield is headquartered in Smithfield, Va. Premium Standard, now a subsidiary of Smithfield, maintains its principal offices in Princeton, Mo.

---

Component(s):
Antitrust Division

Press Release Number:
10-062

Updated September 15, 2014

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-52

65 Cal.App.4th 1469
 Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 5, California.

PRINCIPAL MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

VARS, PAVE, McCORD & FREEDMAN et al., Defendants and Appellants.

No. B108968.

|
 Aug. 12, 1998.

|
 Rehearing Denied Sept. 10, 1998.

|
 Review Denied Nov. 18, 1998. *

Synopsis

After mortgagee foreclosed deed of trust on leased premises, mortgagee sued tenant, which was a partnership, and guarantors for breach of commercial lease. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, No. LC026408, Stephen D. Petersen, J., entered judgment for mortgagee. Guarantors appealed. The Court of Appeal, Godoy Perez, J., held that: (1) foreclosure of deed of trust did not constitute rescission of junior lease, but instead extinguished the lease, and thus, mortgagee could enforce attornment provision in lease as third-party beneficiary of attornment provision; (2) attornment provision was not too vague or uncertain to be enforced; (3) mutuality of obligation doctrine did not preclude mortgagee from enforcing attornment provision; (4) guaranty was enforceable after lease was extinguished by foreclosure, as attornment renewed the lease and guaranty covered lease renewals; (5) breach of lease was chargeable to departing partner after partnership dissolution; and (6) partnership did not relieve departing partner of his lease obligations.

Affirmed.

Procedural Posture(s): On Appeal.

Attorneys and Law Firms

**481 *1474 Jerry L. Freedman and Gail V. Phillips for Defendant and Appellant Jerry L. Freedman.

Robert J. Vars, in pro. per., and James V. Jordan, Los Angeles, and Michael R. Hambly for Defendants and Appellants Robert J. Vars and Robert J. Vars, PC.

Peterson & Ross and Karl W. Kime, Los Angeles, for Defendants and Appellants James W. McCord, Robert M. Pave, Robert M. Pave, PC, and J. Patrick Jacobs.

Allen, Matkins, Leck, Gamble & Mallory, Patrick E. Breen and Rebecca Gilbert Gundzik, Los Angeles, for Plaintiff and Respondent.

Opinion

GODOY PEREZ, Associate Justice.

Defendants Jerry L. Freedman and Robert J. Vars appeal from the judgment entered on behalf of plaintiff Principal Mutual *1475 Life Insurance Company in its action for breach of a commercial lease. For the reasons set forth below, we affirm the judgment.

FACTS AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY <sup>1</sup>

In May 1985 the law firm of Vars, Pave, McCord & Freedman (VPMF) signed a lease **482 for office space (the lease) in an Encino office building owned by 16030 Associates (the landlord). VPMF was a general partnership formed by lawyers Robert J. Vars, Robert Pave, James W. McCord and Jerry L. Freedman. The lease, which each partner personally guaranteed, ran for five years, starting August 1, 1985. The lease included an option to be renewed for another five years.

Relevant to this appeal are the following lease terms: Paragraph 31a, which stated that the lease would be deemed subordinate to all existing and future liens and mortgages on the landlord's property; and paragraph 31c, which stated that if the landlord sold the building or lost it in foreclosure, the tenant would attorn to the landlord's successor in interest upon request, and be bound by a new lease on the same terms as the old one. <sup>2</sup>

*1476 On June 11, 1986, plaintiff and respondent Principal Mutual Life Insurance Company (Principal) recorded a trust deed to secure a loan which it made to the landlord. In May 1990, VPMF exercised its option to renew the lease for another five years through February 1996. In February 1992, at the instigation of Freedman, Vars was asked to leave the firm. The VPMF partnership dissolved and carried on as Freedman, Pave, McCord & Jacobs. Vars moved his practice to a new location. In February 1993, Freedman voluntarily left the new partnership, which dissolved and carried on as Pave McCord & Jacobs.<sup>3</sup> Freedman also moved his practice to a different location. Neither Freedman nor Vars paid any rent after their respective departures from the firm.

On April 7, 1993, Principal recorded a document styled as a "Subordination Agreement" by which it purported to subordinate its trust deed to the leases of various tenants at the landlord's property, including VPMF. The stated purpose of the document was to prevent a foreclosure of the property from extinguishing those leases. The so-called subordination agreement was signed only by officers of Principal, not by any of the tenants. Principal acquired legal title to the building by way of foreclosure on August 13, 1993.

On September 15, 1993, Principal sent a letter to the firm stating that it had acquired the property, that pursuant to the terms of the lease Principal had assumed all of the landlord's lease obligations, and that it was "pleased to have you as a continuing tenant ... under the terms of the Lease." McCord **483 wrote back on behalf of the firm in a letter dated September 29, 1993, taking the position that Principal's foreclosure of its senior encumbrance extinguished the lease, leaving the firm as a month-to-month tenant. Principal responded in an October 15, 1993, letter, pointing out that it had subordinated its trust deed to the lease before the foreclosure. Principal also contended that the firm was obligated by paragraph 31c of the lease to enter upon request a new lease under the same terms as the old one and asked that the firm do so.

The firm paid rent from August 1993 to December 1, 1993, then stopped. On March 22, 1994, the firm notified Principal it was vacating the office *1477 space and moved out on April 16, 1994. Principal then sued the firm and the individual partners—Vars, Pave, McCord and Freedman—for breach of the lease and to enforce the partners' personal lease guarantees.

After a bench trial in July 1996, the trial court found that the lease and guarantees were enforceable for two reasons: First, because Principal had subordinated its trust deed to the lease before the foreclosure; and second, because the attornment clause in paragraph 31c of the lease obligated the firm to recognize Principal as its landlord under the terms of the original lease. The court also found that the landlord had not agreed to release Vars or Freedman from their lease and guarantee obligations.<sup>4</sup> Principal was awarded more than $460,000, plus attorney's fees and costs of approximately $99,000.

The main issue on appeal is whether the firm was required to attorn to Principal and recognize it as the new landlord, or whether Principal's foreclosure of the landlord's property extinguished the lease, including the obligation to attorn. Vars and Freedman also contend that the attornment provision was unenforceable because it was vague, because it vested full control over whether the lease would continue with Principal and therefore lacked mutuality of obligation, and because Principal was a stranger to the lease with no right to enforce the guarantee. Freedman also contends that he was released from his lease and guarantee obligations by the conduct of the landlord and Principal.<sup>5</sup>

STANDARD OF REVIEW

Interpretation of a lease presents a question of law which we independently review using principles of contract law. (Miscione v. Barton *1478 Development Co. (1997) 52 Cal.App.4th 1320, 1325–1326, 61 Cal.Rptr.2d 280, hereafter Miscione.) In doing so, we apply certain well known rules of contract interpretation. A contract must be interpreted to give effect to the mutual intention of the parties at the time the contract was made. (Civ.Code, § 1636.) Courts will not adopt a strained or absurd interpretation to create an ambiguity where none exists. A contract extends only to those things concerning which it appears the parties intended to contract. Our function is to determine what, in terms and substance, is contained in the contract, not to insert what has been omitted. We do not have the power to create for the parties a contract which they did not make and cannot insert language which one party now wishes were there. Finally, words used in a certain sense in one part of a contract are deemed to have been used in the **484 same sense elsewhere. (Levi Strauss & Co. v. Aetna Casualty & Surety Co. (1986) 184 Cal.App.3d 1479, 1485–1486, 237 Cal.Rptr. 473.)

DISCUSSION

1. Attornment, Subordination And Nondisturbance Clauses

Title to real property which is conveyed after foreclosure by a trustee's deed relates back to the date the trust deed was executed. The title passed is that held by the trustor at the time of execution. Liens which attached after the foreclosed trust deed was executed are extinguished and the purchaser takes title free of those junior or subordinate liens. (Dover Mobile Estates v. Fiber Form Products, Inc. (1990) 220 Cal.App.3d 1494, 1498, 270 Cal.Rptr. 183, hereafter Dover.)

This rule applies to tenants who have leased property which is later sold through foreclosure. A lease made before the foreclosed trust deed was executed survives the foreclosure and the purchaser takes the property subject to the lease. A subordinate lease, which was made after a trust deed was executed, is wiped out by the foreclosure of that deed, along with the tenant's rights and obligations under the lease. (Dover, supra, 220 Cal.App.3d at p. 1498, 270 Cal.Rptr. 183.) If the tenant remains, he does so only as a holdover tenant. If the purchaser of the foreclosed property accepts rent from the tenant, a month-to-month tenancy is created. (Id. at p. 1501, 270 Cal.Rptr. 183.)

Commercial landlords, their tenants and their lenders sometimes attempt to adjust their respective rights in the event of foreclosure by three types of lease clauses—subordination, nondisturbance and attornment (SNDA). All three are at issue here.

The parties to a real estate transaction may contractually agree to alter the priorities of encumbrances otherwise fixed by law. *1479 (Miscione, supra, 52 Cal.App.4th at p. 1326, 61 Cal.Rptr.2d 280.) A lease may be deemed subordinate to an otherwise junior trust deed through a subordination agreement, which is “ ‘often used to adjust the priorities between commercial tenants and the mortgagee of the real estate ... Absent such an adjustment, priorities will be governed by the recording acts and related common law principles.’ [Citation.]” (Dover, supra, 220 Cal.App.3d at p. 1498, 270 Cal.Rptr. 183.) Some leases include so-called “automatic subordination” clauses, by which the tenant agrees that its lease will become subordinate to any liens or encumbrances on the landlord's property which attach after the lease is executed. (6 Matthew Bender, Cal. Real Estate Law & Practice (1998) Creation of Tenancies, § 153.50, pp. 153–92–153–93.) The firm's lease included such an automatic subordination clause.

In order to protect itself from the loss of its lease through foreclosure of the landlord's property, a tenant asked to subordinate its lease to any future encumbrances may negotiate with the landlord to obtain a nondisturbance agreement from any future lenders. Such an agreement provides that a foreclosing lender with a superior lien will not disturb the tenant's possession so long as the tenant has not defaulted on the lease. (6 Matthew Bender, Cal. Real Estate Law & Practice (1998) Creation of Tenancies, § 153.50 [2], p. 153–94; Miscione, supra, 52 Cal.App.4th at p. 1327, 61 Cal.Rptr.2d 280.) McCord, who negotiated the lease on behalf of the firm in 1985, testified that: he wanted a nondisturbance clause; he was told it was not negotiable; and that such a provision was not so important that he was unwilling to sign the lease without it.

Attornment is a real property concept as old as the law itself. As originally practiced it was “ ‘the act of feudatory, vassal, or tenant by which he consents upon the alienation of the estate to receive a new lord or superior and transfers to him his homage and service.’ ” (Fisher & Goldman, The Ritual Dance Between Lessee and Lender—Subordination, Nondisturbance, and Attornment (Fall 1995) 30 Real Property, Prob. and Trust J. 355, 361–362, fn. omitted.) Attornment is not a fossilized concept, however, or one preserved in amber. Instead, it continues to have vitality in the commercial leasing **485 area as “ ‘a corollary agreement addressing foreclosure.’ [Citation.]” (Miscione, supra, 52 Cal.App.4th at p. 1327, 61 Cal.Rptr.2d 280.) In its present form, it simply means that the tenant has agreed, or will agree, to recognize its landlord's successor in interest as its new landlord. (Id. at pp. 1327–1328, 61 Cal.Rptr.2d 280.)

While few reported decisions have considered the operation and effect of SNDA's, they have attracted more attention in recent years. Critical to our decision are two of these—Dover and Miscione.

*1480 2. The Dover And Miscione Decisions

In Dover, supra, 220 Cal.App.3d 1494, 270 Cal.Rptr. 183, tenant Fiber Form entered a five-year lease which contained an automatic subordination clause. That clause stated the lease would be subordinate to any trust deeds or mortgages encumbering the property unless the lender elected to have the lease be superior. After Fiber Form entered the lease, a second trust deed was placed on the property. That lender later foreclosed and the property was bought by Dover at the foreclosure sale. The lender never elected to have the lease be superior to its second trust deed. When Fiber Form moved out, Dover sued for breach of the lease.

Citing the general rule that foreclosure by a senior encumbrancer extinguishes the lease, the appellate court held that Fiber Form's lease had been extinguished, leaving it free to vacate the property. (Dover, supra, 220 Cal.App.3d at pp. 1499–1500, 270 Cal.Rptr. 183.) This holding comports with basic notions of priorities and notice, the court said. If a trust deed is recorded before the lease, the tenant enters the lease with notice that the lease will be subordinate. If the tenant and landlord agree that the lease should be subordinate, then the tenant is aware that its lease could be extinguished by foreclosure. Since Fiber Form expressly agreed to take that risk, it made no difference that Fiber Form, not Dover, wanted the lease extinguished after the foreclosure. (Id. at p. 1500, 270 Cal.Rptr. 183.)

The court rejected Dover's argument that instead of terminating the lease, foreclosure gave the buyer the option of doing so. Such a rule would let the buyer do whatever was most profitable, depending on whether rental values had gone up or down since the lease was executed. Even though the lease had been extinguished, however, "the tenant and purchaser are not precluded from entering into a new lease agreement." (Dover, supra, 220 Cal.App.3d at p. 1500, 270 Cal.Rptr. 183.) Finally, the court noted that the tenant under a subordinate lease could gain some protection by requiring a nondisturbance clause. In addition, the tenant could bargain with its landlord for the right to cure the landlord's default. (Ibid.)

In Miscione, tenant Barton Development (Barton) entered a lease of commercial property which contained both attornment and subordination clauses. The attornment clause stated that in the event of foreclosure, the tenant shall attorn to the new owner and recognize it as landlord under the lease, provided that the new owner acquires and accepts the property subject to the lease. The subordination clause provided that any first trust deed holder had the right to request that the tenant subordinate its lease, so long as *1481 the tenant could first require the lender to sign a nondisturbance agreement and also provided that the holder of any security interest in the property could, upon written notice to the tenant, elect that the lease be superior to its security interest.

The property was eventually foreclosed upon by the holder of a first trust deed which predated the lease. While the foreclosing lender and its successor-in-interest each sought to enforce the lease against Barton, Barton took the position that the lease had been extinguished by the foreclosure pursuant to the rule in Dover. The trial court granted Barton summary judgment, in part on the basis that the foreclosing first trust deed holder failed to elect under the lease to have the lease become senior to the trust deed.

The Miscione court reversed, distinguishing Dover in several respects. It first noted that the subordination clause had no effect because the foreclosing lender's first trust deed predated and was therefore senior to the lease by operation of law. Since the **486 lender had no reason to insist on subordination of the lease, and since the tenant could only demand a nondisturbance clause if it were asked to subordinate under the lease terms, then the nondisturbance clause was also of no effect, the court reasoned. (Miscione, supra, 52 Cal.App.4th at p. 1328, 61 Cal.Rptr.2d 280.) The only potentially operative portion of the subordination provisions was the one which permitted the lender to elect that its lien become junior to the lease. That did not happen and the seniority of the lender's trust deed was therefore fixed by law. (Ibid.) This left the attornment clause, an issue not discussed or considered in Dover; and the determinative issue for the Miscione court. (Id. at p. 1329, 61 Cal.Rptr.2d 280.)

Barton contended that the foreclosing lender failed to satisfy a condition precedent to invoking the attornment provision—the lease provision which required it to acquire and accept the property subject to the lease. Barton interpreted this provision to include the exercise of the lender's option to subordinate its deed to Barton's lease, an option which was part of the lease's subordination clause.

The court rejected this contention, in part because the subordination and attornment clauses were separate from and independent of each other. The subordination clause could have applied to several different parties, the court noted, and could have been used to alter the priorities of the parties with respect to insurance awards and condemnation proceeds as well as competing encumbrances. (Miscione, supra, 52 Cal.App.4th at p. 1330, 61 Cal.Rptr.2d 280.) "However, the creation of an obligation for the tenant to attorn to a new landlord is quite different. The tenant presumably negotiated the lease with the landlord, and, *1482 for consideration, contracted to attorn to a new landlord under the described conditions. A landlord could want such a provision in the lease for a number of reasons, not the least of which is that the landlord could show the lease to others with whom it deals to demonstrate that its tenants are bound to new landlords. Such a provision could be a persuasive argument to a lender who was considering the financial condition of the landlord or the landlord's position vis-à-vis other parties involved with the real property. Thus, an attornment clause is not just gratuitously given in a vacuum, but has a meaning that can impact upon the rights and obligations of parties other than the immediate parties to the lease.” (Id. at p. 1330, 61 Cal.Rptr.2d 280, italics added.)

The court gave an additional reason for rejecting Barton's contention that the foreclosing first trust deed holder had to exercise its option to subordinate its deed to Barton's lease as a condition precedent to invocation of the attornment clause: Requiring the foreclosing lender to subordinate its senior encumbrance to the lease before the foreclosure occurs would simply make no sense. “As noted above, prior to the trustee's sale, [the lender] could not know whether it would be the successful bidder. It is illogical to expect [a lender], as a prospective purchaser at the foreclosure sale, to exercise some option provided in a separate clause of the lease. It is common to have all three parts of SNDA clauses included in leases. If we were to support the rule proposed by defendant, all lenders similarly situated ... would have to ‘exercise their option’ to subordinate their position to that of the tenant before they bid in at a foreclosure sale. There is neither logic nor fairness in such a rule, and we will not promulgate it here.” (Miscione, supra, 52 Cal.App.4th at p. 1331, 61 Cal.Rptr.2d 280.)

Instead, all the foreclosing lender had to do was acquire and accept the premises subject to the lease, which it did on the day of acquisition by notifying Barton that it was the new owner and directed that all future rent payments be made to it. (Miscione, supra, 52 Cal.App.4th at pp. 1331–1332, 61 Cal.Rptr.2d 280.) The court concluded that the attornment clause was an agreement by the tenant to alter the priorities between its lease and the first trust deed, making the lease a senior encumbrance which was not extinguished by the foreclosure. (Id. at pp. 1328, 1330–1332, 61 Cal.Rptr.2d 280.)<sup>6</sup>

**487 Appellants contend that Dover governs and that their duty to attorn was extinguished along with the lease upon foreclosure. Principal asks that we follow Miscione and hold that the attornment clause was enforceable after it obtained the landlord's building through foreclosure.

*1483 3. The Attornment Clause Was Enforceable

A. The Attornment Clause Survived Extinguishment Of The Lease

We begin by noting the utility of attornment clauses. They “assist[ ] the mortgagee and tenant in clarifying their rights and responsibilities in the event of foreclosure. By preserving the economic terms of the lease, attornment boosts and fosters certainty. And certainty is vitally important, not only to tenant entrepreneurs, but to portfolio-balancing mortgagees as well.” (Feinstein & Keyles, Foreclosure: Subordination, Non-Disturbance and Attornment Agreements (Aug.1989) 3 Prob. & Property 38, 39, hereafter, Foreclosure; accord, Miscione, supra, 52 Cal.App.4th at p. 1330, 61 Cal.Rptr.2d 280.) As the Miscione court observed, such clauses are “not just gratuitously given in a vacuum, but [have] a meaning that can impact upon the rights and obligations of parties other than the immediate parties to the lease.” (Miscione, supra, 52 Cal.App.4th at p. 1330, 61 Cal.Rptr.2d 280.)

The attornment provision at issue here was part of the bargain struck between the firm and the landlord which, by its terms, was specifically intended to come into play after (and in the event) the property was obtained by another through foreclosure. To hold that Principal's foreclosure extinguished the firm's duty to attorn would render that clause meaningless, a violation of long-established rules of contract interpretation. (Civ.Code, § 1641; Miscione, supra, 52 Cal.App.4th at pp. 1329–1330, 61 Cal.Rptr.2d 280.)

Appellants contend that under Dover it would be unfair to give Principal or any other foreclosing lender the unfettered option of either holding a tenant to its lease or forcing it to move out. While the Dover court held that strict application of the rule of automatic extinguishment would avoid such an inequitable result, we agree with the Miscione court that Dover's failure to discuss and consider the effect of an attornment clause on the status of a subordinate lease after foreclosure by a senior encumbrancer renders Dover inapplicable here.

Dover focused on the terms of the lease and the tenant's reasonable expectations in the event of foreclosure. Since the automatic subordination clause meant the tenant in Dover agreed that its lease would be extinguished upon foreclosure, the court held the purchaser after foreclosure to the bargain struck between landlord and tenant. (Dover, supra, 220 Cal.App.3d at p. 1500, 270 Cal.Rptr. 183.) Nor did Dover hold, as appellants suggest, that a nondisturbance clause is essential to the validity of an attornment provision. The court merely noted that the tenant could “obtain some protection by requiring the landlord to obtain from its lender a nondisturbance agreement.” (Ibid.) The *1484 authority cited for this proposition (Johnson & Moskovitz, Cal. Real Estate Law & Practice, § 153.50, p. 153–94) makes clear that a nondisturbance provision should be negotiated at the inception of the lease. (Ibid.) As noted earlier, while the firm wanted such a provision, it did not believe the clause so important that it would not agree to enter the lease without one.

We part company, however, with Miscione's blanket pronouncement that an attornment clause alters the priorities between lease and trust deed and therefore prevents the lease from being extinguished.

The apparent authority for this holding is a passage from Foreclosure cited in Miscione: “Under an attornment clause, a ‘tenant covenants with the mortgagee that, in the event of foreclosure, the lease will not be extinguished but will continue as a lease between the mortgagee (or any successor to it) and the tenant. The tenant, in other words, agrees to recognize that another party who **488 would not otherwise have privity may enforce the lease agreement as though the third party were originally a beneficiary of the agreement.’ ” (Miscione, supra, 52 Cal.App.4th at p. 1328, 61 Cal.Rptr.2d 280, quoting Foreclosure, supra, at p. 39.)

Foreclosure was not a comprehensive law review article which was supported by underlying case authority. Instead, it was an overview of SNDA practice which set forth general principles applicable to all 50 states regardless of whether they followed the automatic extinguishment rule of California or the so-called “pick-and-choose” rule followed in some states, where the mortgagee must take certain actions during foreclosure in order to wipe out a subordinate lease.<sup>7</sup> (Foreclosure, supra, at p. 39.) When viewed in this context, the statement that a lease containing an attornment clause will not be extinguished cannot be considered a rule of general application, particularly in California where the law has long since been that foreclosure by a senior encumbrancer extinguishes a subordinate lease. (See, e.g., McDermott v. Burke (1860) 16 Cal. 580, 589–590.)

We think the better definition of attornment is one cited by both the majority and the dissent in Miscione: That attornment is the act of a tenant by which he agrees to become the tenant of the property's new owner. (Miscione, supra, 52 Cal.App.4th at pp. 1327–1328, and at p. 1335, 61 Cal.Rptr.2d 280 (dis. opn. of Hollenhorst, Acting P.J.), both quoting Black's Law Dict. (6th ed.1990) p. 130, col. 1.) When a lease obligates a tenant to attorn to a new *1485 landlord in the event of a foreclosure by a senior encumbrancer, the terms of the attornment provision will govern how that is to occur and its effect on the existing lease.

In Miscione, the tenant agreed to attorn to the new owner and recognize that party “under this Lease” so long as the new owner acquired and accepted the property “subject to this Lease.” The bargain struck between landlord and tenant therefore contemplated the continued existence of their lease even after foreclosure. Based on this, the Miscione court correctly reasoned that the original lease was intended to survive the foreclosure sale.<sup>8</sup>

The attornment clause at issue here is far different. Instead of providing for the continued existence of the current lease even after foreclosure by a senior encumbrancer, the firm agreed with the landlord that the tenant would, upon request, “enter into a new lease, containing all of the terms and provisions of this Lease ... or at the election of such successor in interest, this Lease shall automatically become a new lease ... upon all of the terms and conditions hereof...” (Italics added.) This language is significant. Reading paragraph 31 of the lease as a whole, even though the firm agreed to enter a new lease with the landlord's successor in interest, the firm and the landlord also agreed that the firm's lease would be automatically subordinated to any future encumbrances, including Principal's trust deed. Unlike the lease in Miscione, there was no intent that the current lease survive. By operation of law, therefore, the lease would be extinguished in the event of foreclosure. How then could the firm be required to attorn to Principal? We hold that the answer lies in the contract law doctrine of third-party beneficiaries.

B. Principal Was A Third Party Beneficiary Of The Lease's Attornment Provision

California law permits third-party beneficiaries to enforce the terms of a contract made for their benefit. Civil Code section 1559 states: “A contract, made expressly for the benefit of a third person, may be enforced by him at any time before the parties thereto rescind it.” The third party need not be identified by name. It is sufficient **489 if the claimant belongs to a class of persons for whose benefit it was made. *1486 (Marina Tenants Assn. v. Deauville Marina Development Co. (1986) 181 Cal.App.3d 122, 128, 226 Cal.Rptr. 321.) A third party may qualify as a contract beneficiary where the contracting parties must have intended to benefit that individual, an intent which must appear in the terms of the agreement. (Harper v. Wausau Ins. Co. (1997) 56 Cal.App.4th 1079, 1087, 66 Cal.Rptr.2d 64.)

Appellants raise only one challenge to the applicability of third-party beneficiary law. In order for a third-party beneficiary to enforce an agreement made by others, there must be a “valid and subsisting obligation between the promisor and the promisee.” (1 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (9th ed. 1987) § 662, p. 601.) Since the lease was extinguished by the foreclosure, appellants contend that Principal's rights under the attornment clause vanished along with it. This argument misapprehends the circumstances under which a third-party beneficiary may lose its right to enforce an agreement.

Civil Code section 1559 provides that a third-party beneficiary may enforce a contract at any time before it is rescinded. The principles governing rescission of third-party beneficiary contracts are those applicable to the rescission of contracts generally. (R.J. Cardinal Co. v. Ritchie (1963) 218 Cal.App.2d 124, 149, 32 Cal.Rptr. 545.) Civil Code section 1689 governs the rescission of contracts. Under subdivision (a), both parties may consent to a rescission. (Civ.Code, § 1689, subd. (a).) Under subdivision (b), one party may unilaterally rescind based on a variety of grounds, including fraud, mistake or duress, if there has been a failure of consideration, if the contract is unlawful, or if the public interest will be prejudiced by leaving the contract intact. (See Civ.Code, § 1689, subd. (b)(1)-(7).)

If rescission has not occurred according to the statutory procedures, but the contract is instead terminated for some other reason, a third-party beneficiary may still enforce the agreement. In Pearsall v. Townsend (1935) 7 Cal.App.2d 162, 45 P.2d 824 (hereafter Pearsall), a real estate broker entered into a real estate development agreement with Parkford and the broker hired Pearsall to do the surveying work. When a dispute arose between the broker and Parkford, the broker assigned all his interest in the subdivision to Parkford, by which Parkford agreed to pay the broker's outstanding expenses incurred for work done on the project. The broker later sued Parkford for fraud and Parkford raised the broker's fraud as an affirmative defense. The trial court found that Parkford properly terminated its contracts with the broker due to fraud and ordered the broker to pay damages. Pearsall then sued Parkford to recover for the cost of his surveying services, contending he was a third-party beneficiary of the broker's assignment agreement.

*1487 The appellate court affirmed the judgment for the surveyor, rejecting Parkford's contention that the assignment had been rescinded and was therefore unenforceable. Instead of being rescinded, the contract was “merely terminated.” (Pearsall, supra, 7 Cal.App.2d at p. 166, 45 P.2d 824.)

In Mannon v. Pesula (1943) 59 Cal.App.2d 597, 139 P.2d 336, hereafter Mannon, the conditional buyers of certain sawmill equipment promised to pay the sellers' creditor instead of the sellers. The contract impliedly provided that in the event the buyers defaulted, the sellers and their creditor would have a security interest in the items sold. When the buyers defaulted, the creditor claimed it was entitled to the proceeds from the later sale of the equipment. The appellate court confirmed that the creditor was a third-party beneficiary of the sales agreement. The court rejected the buyers' contention that their default effected a rescission which terminated the contract, along with the creditor's third-party rights. First, the court held, termination by way of the buyer's default was not a rescission. Second, the contract provided that in the event of default, the creditor would have a security interest in the repossessed property. “The default by [the buyers] was the very event which brought this implied term of the contract into operation. Even a formal rescission would not affect that provision.” (Mannon, **490 supra, 59 Cal.App.2d at pp. 608–609, 139 P.2d 336, italics added.)

We find Mannon and Pearsall highly analogous. The firm's lease was not rescinded. There was no attempt by either party to restore the consideration obtained under the lease. (Civ.Code, § 1691, subd. (b).) Instead, the lease was extinguished by operation of law when Principal foreclosed. Much as in Mannon, however, the lease contained a provision which was specifically designed to take effect upon its extinguishment by foreclosure: the attornment provision which obligated the firm to enter a new lease with Principal on the same terms as the preexisting lease with the landlord. As discussed ante, a contrary holding would violate well-established rules of contract interpretation by rendering the attornment clause meaningless. (Civ.Code, § 1641; Miscione, supra, 52 Cal.App.4th at pp. 1329–1330, 61 Cal.Rptr.2d 280.)<sup>9</sup>

After Principal acquired the property at foreclosure, it was therefore entitled to enforce its rights as a third-party beneficiary of the attornment clause and require that the firm enter a new lease on the same terms as the *1488 original lease. The firm's failure to do so and concomitant departure from the premises were a breach of this obligation.

C. Other Contract Defenses Are Not Applicable

Appellants also challenge the attornment provision on the following grounds: (1) because it does not specify who is to enforce the provision or the manner in which it shall be invoked, the clause is fatally vague and uncertain; (2) because Principal was free to pick and choose when or whether it invoked the attornment clause, the provision lacked mutuality of obligation and therefore failed for a lack of consideration; and (3) even if the attornment clause were enforceable by Principal, the partners' personal guarantees were not.

Paragraph 31c of the lease states if the property is sold or acquired by foreclosure, the tenant "shall, upon request, attorn to such successor in interest and, upon request, enter into a new lease, containing all of the terms and provisions of this Lease, with such successor in interest ... or at the election of such successor in interest, this Lease shall automatically become a new lease between Tenant and such successor in interest..." This provision is designed to give the new owner the choice whether to have the tenant attorn. While it could have been made more explicit, when viewed in this context it seems clear to us that the landlord's successor in interest would be the party to make that request. Though the provision is silent as to how that request must be made, appellants do not contend that a written request in the form of a letter, as occurred here, is insufficient.

As to the failure to specify a deadline for such a request, a reasonable time will be implied. (Civ.Code, § 1657.) What constitutes a reasonable time presents a question of fact which depends on the circumstances of the particular case. (Eidsmore v. RBB, Inc. (1994) 25 Cal.App.4th 189, 198, 30 Cal.Rptr.2d 357.) Appellants have not addressed this issue at all and we therefore deem it waived. (Unilogic, Inc. v. Burroughs Corp. (1992) 10 Cal.App.4th 612, 624, 12 Cal.Rptr.2d 741.)<sup>10</sup>

Next, mutuality of obligation is necessary only in bilateral contracts where there are mutual promises. The doctrine states that the promises on both sides must be binding obligations in order to be consideration for each other. Problems arise in two instances: illusory agreements where no obligation at all is assumed; and where the promise states a definite obligation, but the *1489 promisor has an election to perform or withdraw at his pleasure. (1 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (9th ed. 1987) § 228, pp. **491 236–237.) Appellants contend the doctrine applies because Principal was free to choose for itself whether to require that the firm attorn. This contention fails to recognize that Principal was a third-party beneficiary of the lease between the firm and the landlord, not a party to the lease. A third-party beneficiary need not supply any consideration to enforce an agreement made for its benefit. (Macaulay v. Norlander (1992) 12 Cal.App.4th 1, 8, fn. 3, 15 Cal.Rptr.2d 204.) There is no dispute that the lease was supported by ample consideration, consisting of, among others, the landlord's promise to place the firm in possession of the premises and the firm's promise to pay rent. Where sufficient consideration is present, mutuality is not essential. (Brawley v. Crosby etc. Foundation, Inc. (1946) 73 Cal.App.2d 103, 113, 166 P.2d 392.)

Finally, the partners' personal guarantee was made an exhibit to the lease and specifically provided that it would apply to the landlord's successors in interest and continue during the term of the lease or any renewals of the lease. It also provided that: the guarantee would not be affected by any modifications, alterations or extensions of the lease; and that the lease provisions could be changed by agreement or course of conduct between the landlord or its successors and the tenants and that the guarantee "shall guarantee the performance of the Lease as changed." We believe this encompassed a new lease on the same terms as the previous one which would result from an attornment. On these facts, we conclude that the partners' personal guarantee of the lease obligations was enforceable by Principal.

4. Freedman Was Not Relieved Of Liability

Freedman contends that he was not liable for the firm's breach of the lease because it was not an act necessary to wind up the affairs of the dissolved partnership or to complete unfinished partnership transactions. (Corp.Code, §§ 15029, 15030, 15033.) Instead, he contends, the firm could only bind him to its breach of the lease under Corporations Code section 15035, which states, in relevant part: "(1) After dissolution a partner can bind the partnership except as provided in paragraph three, [¶] (a) By any act appropriate for winding up partnership affairs or completing transactions unfinished at dissolution; [¶] (b) By any transaction which would bind the partnership if dissolution had not taken place, provided, the other party to the transaction: [¶] I. Had extended credit to the partnership prior to dissolution and had no knowledge or notice of the dissolution; or [¶] II. Though he had not so extended credit, had nevertheless known of the partnership *1490 prior to dissolution, and, having no knowledge or notice of dissolution, the fact of dissolution had not been advertised in a newspaper of general circulation...." Freedman then points to evidence that the landlord knew the original partnership had dissolved after he and Vars left and accepted rent from the successor firms, thus relieving him of further liability under the lease.

This argument must fail because the firm's conduct in breaching the lease is chargeable to Freedman as an act within the scope of winding up the firm's affairs. "In general a dissolution operates only with respect to future transactions; as to everything past the partnership continues until all pre-existing matters are terminated. [Citations.] The dissolution does not destroy the authority of a partner to act for his former associates in matters in which they still have a common interest and are under a common liability. [Citations.]" (Cotten v. Perishable Air Conditioners (1941) 18 Cal.2d 575, 577, 116 P.2d 603, italics added.) The lease was a partnership obligation which came into being before dissolution and was a matter in which all the partners had a common interest and were under a common liability. Accordingly, Freedman is bound by the firm's breach of the lease.<sup>11</sup>

Finally, Freedman contends that his partners, the landlord and Principal released him from his lease obligations by operation **492 of Corporations Code section 15036, which states, in relevant part: "(1) Effect of dissolution alone. The dissolution of the partnership does not of itself discharge the existing liability of any partner. [¶] (2) Agreement to discharge. A partner is discharged from any existing liability upon dissolution of the partnership by an agreement to that effect between himself, the partnership creditor and the person or partnership continuing the business; and such agreement may be inferred from the course of dealing between the creditor having knowledge of the dissolution and the person or partnership continuing the business."

While Freedman again points to evidence which he contends shows an agreement to release him from his lease obligations, the evidence on this point was highly conflicting. Freedman testified that at some point after he left the firm, McCord offered to assume his lease obligations in exchange for a $50,000 reduction of the firm's debt to Freedman, an offer which Freedman rejected. This alone is substantial evidence that the firm never agreed to release Freedman from his lease obligations under Corporations Code section 15036, subdivision \(2\).

*1491 5. The Lender Could Not Unilaterally Subordinate Its Trust Deed

One alternative ground for the trial court's judgment was Principal's unilateral recordation of a "subordination agreement" purporting to alter the priority of its trust deed and thereby make it junior to the firm's lease. The priority rights fixed by a subordination agreement are strictly limited by the terms of that agreement. (Miller v. Citizens Sav. & Loan Assn. (1967) 248 Cal.App.2d 655, 663, 56 Cal.Rptr. 844; Bank of America v. Hirsch Merc. Co. (1944) 64 Cal.App.2d 175, 182-183, 148 P.2d 110.) While the lease at issue in Miscione contained a provision by which a lender could elect to undo the automatic subordination of a tenant's lease to the lender's trust deed, the lease at issue here did not. Instead, it is silent on that topic. Because the firm's lease provides only that it was automatically subordinated to Principal's trust deed, Principal could not unilaterally reverse those priorities.

DISPOSITION

For the reasons set forth above, the judgment for Principal is affirmed. Respondent to recover its costs on appeal.

TURNER, P.J., and ARMSTRONG, J., concur.

All Citations

65 Cal.App.4th 1469, 77 Cal.Rptr.2d 479, 98 Cal. Daily Op. Serv. 6334, 98 Daily Journal D.A.R. 8723

Footnotes

* Kennard, J., dissented.

1 The parties stipulated at trial to most of the essential facts. As to the remaining facts, to the extent resolution of this matter turns on the existence of substantial evidence to support the judgment, we state them in the manner most favorable to the judgment, resolving all conflicts and drawing all inferences in favor of respondent. (Aceves v. Regal Pale Brewing Co. (1979) 24 Cal.3d 502, 507, 156 Cal.Rptr. 41, 595 P.2d 619.)

- 2 Paragraph 31a states: "This Lease is, and at all times hereafter shall be, subject and subordinate (i) to any and all ground and underlying leases which now exist or may hereafter be executed affecting the Building or the land upon which the Building is situated or both, and (ii) to the lien of any mortgages or deeds of trust in any amount or amounts whatsoever now or hereafter placed on or against said land and Building or either of them or on Landlord's interest or estate therein, or on or against any ground or underlying lease, and to all renewals, consolidations, replacements and extensions thereof, and to all loans or advances heretofore or hereafter made upon the security thereof, all without the necessity of the execution and delivery of any further instruments on the part of Tenant to effectuate said subordination. Notwithstanding the foregoing, Tenant shall execute and deliver to Landlord such further instrument or instruments evidencing such subordination of this Lease as Landlord or its successors in interest may from time to time request."
- Paragraph 31c states: "In the event that Landlord at any time sells or conveys its estate in the Building and/or the related land and real property, or any part thereof, to any other party, or in the event Landlord's estate therein is at any time acquired by any other party upon the foreclosure of any mortgage or deed of trust, or upon any termination of any ground or underlying lease to which this Lease is subordinated as provided in Section 31a hereof, or by reason of any merger or consolidation or otherwise by operation of law, (i) Tenant shall, upon request, attorn to such successor in interest and, upon request, enter into a new lease, containing all of the terms and provisions of this Lease, with such successor in interest for the remainder of the term hereof, or at the election of such successor in interest, this Lease shall automatically become a new Lease between Tenant and such successor in interest, upon all of the terms and conditions hereof, for the remainder of the term hereof, and (ii) Landlord shall be relieved of any further obligations hereunder, provided that such successor in interest assumes all of such obligations of Landlord, but such successor in interest shall not become liable for any default hereunder theretofore committed by Landlord."
- 3 Because the distinctions between these reconstituted versions of the original VPMF are irrelevant to our decision, for ease of reference we will hereafter refer to all of them as "the firm."
- 4 At the close of the trial on the lease obligations, the court suggested that the individual partners file cross-complaints for indemnity and contribution in order to sort out their respective liabilities. The parties did so, and the cross-complaints of the firm and Freedman included causes of action for an accounting of all the partnership assets and liabilities. The trial court then separated the trial of the lease indemnification issue from the trial of the other causes of action in those cross-complaints with the intent of rendering an appealable judgment on only that portion of the cross-complaints. The court found that Vars was entitled to total indemnity from his former partners and determined the liability percentages of the remaining partners. Freedman also appealed from that portion of the judgment, contending that he was entitled to total indemnity as well and that the partners' indemnification obligations needed to be otherwise adjusted. By order dated August 12, 1998, we dismissed that portion of the appeal because there was not yet one final and appealable judgment on the various cross-complaints. (Morehart v. County of Santa Barbara \(1994\) 7 Cal.4th 725, 736-744, 29 Cal.Rptr.2d 804, 872 P.2d 143.)
- 5 Only Vars and Freedman appealed from the judgment. We will sometimes refer to them collectively as "appellants."
- 6 Justice Hollenhorst filed a strong dissent from the majority decision, believing that under Dover the lease and its concomitant obligation to attorn were extinguished by the foreclosure. (Miscione, supra, 52 Cal.App.4th at pp. 1332-1340, 61 Cal.Rptr.2d 280 (dis. opn. of Hollenhorst, Acting P.J.).)
- 7 We found Foreclosure a helpful guide to understanding the interplay between the various components of SNDAs and intend no slight to the article or its authors. Instead, we merely believe that the passage relied on by the Miscione court was not reliable precedential authority for the blanket proposition stated.
- 8 We therefore disagree with the Miscione court's conclusion that the attornment clause altered the priorities between Barton's lease and the first trust deed. Instead, it appears to us the parties simply contracted that the lease would not be extinguished by the foreclosure.
- 9 Also, rescission may not be allowed if a third party beneficiary has acted in reliance on the promises made for his benefit. (Dick v. Woolson \(1951\) 106 Cal.App.2d 415, 419, 235 P.2d 119.) While there is no evidence that Principal's trust deed was made in reliance on the attornment provision, if that were the case, then rescission could not have occurred.

- 10 The better practice, however, would be to set forth a more detailed mechanism and timetable for attornment.
- 11 Our holding does not consider whether the firm's breach was wrongful as to Freedman or Vars, an issue which bears only on the previously dismissed portion of the appeal from the partners' various cross-complaints for indemnity and an accounting.

---

End of Document

© 2020 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-53

2012 WL 2373003

 KeyCite Red Flag - Severe Negative Treatment
Unpublished/noncitable

2012 WL 2373003

Not Officially Published

(Cal. Rules of Court, Rules 8.1105 and 8.1110, 8.1115)

Only the Westlaw citation is currently available.

California Rules of Court, rule 8.1115, restricts citation of unpublished opinions in California courts.

Court of Appeal,
Second District, Division 4, California.

MOUNTAIN OF FIRE AND MIRACLES MINISTRIES, Hayward
Branch, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Ade OYEYEMI, Defendant and Appellant.

B218591

Filed June 25, 2012

APPEAL from a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles, Rex Heeseman, Judge. Reversed and remanded, with directions. (Los Angeles County Super. Ct. No. BC 352398).

Attorneys and Law Firms

Law Office of Jeanne Collachia and Jeanne Collachia for Defendant and Appellant.

The Garcia Law Firm and Gilbert A. Garcia for Plaintiff and Respondent.

Opinion

MANELLA, J.

*1 Appellant Ade Oyeyemi (Pastor Oyeyemi) challenges a judgment for conversion and negligent interference with prospective economic relations in favor of respondent Mountain of Fire and Miracles Ministries, Hayward Branch. He contends that respondent lacked standing to assert claims against him, and that it had no property interest in the assets underlying the claims; in addition, he maintains that respondent did not establish certain elements of the claims. We conclude that the interference claim fails as a matter of law on the evidence presented at trial, and that the conversion claim is similarly defective insofar as it targeted assets in which respondent had no property interests. We thus reverse the judgment, and remand for a new trial on the conversion claim.

FACTS

A. Background

Mountain of Fire and Miracles Ministries (MFMM) is an international ministry founded by Dr. Daniel K. Olukoya. Its headquarters is in Lagos, Nigeria, where Dr. Olukoya holds the position of General Overseer. Pastor Oyeyemi participated in MFMM and had a personal relationship with Dr. Olukoya.

In the early 2000's, using the business name, "Mountain of Fire and Miracles Ministries," Pastor Oyeyemi founded a church in Los Angeles and acted as its pastor. Following the creation of Pastor Oyeyemi's church in Los Angeles, respondent was established in Hayward. Respondent's pastor was Grace Ugeh.

On November 28, 2002, Pastor Oyeyemi executed a form agreement with MFMM that provided in part: "I hold this church in trust for and on behalf of Mountain of Fire and Miracles Ministries." On September 19, 2003, Pastor Oyeyemi filed articles of incorporation for a California nonprofit corporation named, "Mountain of Fire and Miracles Ministries, Inc." (Mountain). Pastor Oyeyemi was initially identified as Mountain's agent for service of process; in addition, he served as its first chief executive officer.

In late 2004 and early 2005, MFMM begin implementing an organizational plan that divided the United States into regions. Region 4, which contained both Mountain and respondent, was placed under the oversight of Pastor Paul Campbell, whose headquarters was in Houston, Texas. A dispute soon arose between Pastor Oyeyemi and Pastor Campbell regarding Mountain's compliance with MFMM's financial reporting requirements.

In November 1, 2005, Pastor Campbell sent Pastor Oyeyemi a notice requiring him to meet with Dr. Olukoya in Lagos within 72 hours. The notice further stated that Pastor Oyeyemi's failure to attend the meeting would be deemed his termination from MFMM. On November 6, 2005, Pastor Oyeyemi agreed to return MFMM's property to a designated agent. He became pastor of a new church named "Blood of Jesus Prayer and Deliverance" (Blood of Jesus).

B. Underlying Action

1. Initial Proceedings

The underlying action against Pastor Oyeyemi commenced in May 2006. The original and first amended complaints identified Mountain as the plaintiff, and alleged that Pastor Oyeyemi had engaged in misconduct while acting as a fiduciary of Mountain, including diverting its members and assets to a new church. Pastor Oyeyemi demurred to the first amended complaint, contending that Mountain lacked standing to act as plaintiff in the action. The trial court overruled the demurrer.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> In October 2006, Pastor Oyeyemi filed a cross-complaint for libel against MFMM, Pastor Campbell, and Dr. Olukoya. Pastor Oyeyemi abandoned his cross-claims during the trial on respondent's second amended complaint.

*2 In August 2008, a trial began on the first amended complaint. Following an initial bifurcated bench trial on the issue of Mountain's standing, the court concluded that Mountain lacked standing to pursue the action. The court continued the trial to permit respondent to substitute in as plaintiff and file an amended complaint.

Prior to the filing of respondent's amended complaint, Pastor Oyeyemi challenged respondent's standing to assert claims against him. Respondent replied that MFMM's November 2002 agreement with Pastor Oyeyemi impressed a trust on the assets of his church in favor of MFMM, and that respondent was the assignee of MFMM's right to collect its property from Pastor Oyeyemi. Following a hearing, the trial court rejected Pastor Oyeyemi's objection to respondent's standing.

On February 17, 2009, respondent filed a second amended complaint for conversion and interference with economic relations.<sup>2</sup> The complaint alleged that beginning May 25, 2005, Pastor Oyeyemi converted respondent's property for use in his new church, Blood of Jesus, and that in establishing the new church, he had improperly diverted respondent's members and their donations to the new church.

<sup>2</sup> The complaint also contained a claim for defamation and requested injunctive relief. Respondent abandoned its defamation claim during the trial on its second amended complaint.

2. Trial

The three-day jury trial on respondent's claims began on April 20, 2009. Pastor Oyeyemi testified that the church he established in Los Angeles in the early 2000's, although independent of MFMM, was "loosely affiliated" with MFMM in view of his personal relationship with Dr. Olukoya and longstanding participation in MFMM. After starting the Los Angeles church, he used some of MFMM's religious materials and paid ten percent of the offerings he received from churchgoers to the division of MFMM located in the United States.

In April 2002, Pastor Oyeyemi filed a fictitious business name statement that listed himself and Dr. Olukoya as doing business as "Mountain of Fire and Miracles Ministries." Later, in November 28, 2002, Pastor Oyeyemi executed an agreement with MFMM that provided: "I ... [ ] hereby affirm my loyalty to the Mountain of Fire & Miracles Ministries worldwide. [¶] 1. I will not do anything that would jeopardize the unity of the church, Mountain of Fire & Miracles Ministries in Los Angeles, California. [¶] 2. I hold this church in trust for and on behalf of Mountain of Fire & Miracles Ministries and it is not a personal property. [¶] 3. I will not take any action that would split the church, seize its assets or change the name of the Church. [¶] 4. Any action taken in that direction shall make it haste [sic] to prosecutions."

In connection with Mountain's incorporation in September 2003, Pastor Oyeyemi filed articles identifying the corporation's "specific purpose" as "organiz [ing] a Christian fellowship and a church congregation[ ] to develop mental health programs for the public and to provide social services to the poor and the needy." The bylaws also provided that "[t]he Senior Pastor of the Church shall operate under the guidance of the General Overseer of [MFMM] and the Board of Directors." After Mountain's incorporation, Pastor Oyeyemi reported frequently to Dr. Olukoya. When Mountain purchased a building for use as a church, Pastor Oyeyemi invited Dr. Olukoya to the dedication ceremony.

*3 In January 2005, Pastor Oyeyemi attended the first MFMM Region 4 conference in Houston. At the conference, he signed the following declaration: "I undertake to be bound by the rules and regulations governing [MFMM] and subsequent rules and regulations which may, thereafter, from time to time, be made by the council of the church." MFMM's new organizational plan was announced during the conference. According to Pastor Oyeyemi, when Mountain's board of directors learned that Mountain and other California churches were to be supervised by a regional supervisor in Houston, the board decided to complain to Dr. Olukoya. Pastor Oyeyemi also believed that Mountain should not be placed under Pastor Campbell's supervision.<sup>3</sup> <sup>3</sup> In addition, Pastor Oyeyemi testified that he was offered a supervisory position regarding the California churches, but he refused the offer.

When Pastor Campbell introduced a new financial reporting system, Pastor Oyeyemi—who had worked as an accountant—concluded that the required forms were defective under United States tax law. Although Dr. Olukoya urged Pastor Oyeyemi to use the forms, Pastor Oyeyemi refused to do so, but offered to draft adequate forms. Despite the dispute, Pastor Oyeyemi attended the second Region 4 conference in April 2005.

In May 2005, Pastor Campbell asked Pastor Oyeyemi to provide copies of Mountain's financial records. After Pastor Oyeyemi forwarded some financial documents, Pastor Campbell informed him that the showing was inadequate. In October 2005, at Pastor Campbell's request, Pastor Oyeyemi substituted Dr. Olukoya for himself as Mountain's agent for purposes of service of process.

On October 30, 2005, a group of pastors, including Pastors Campbell and Ugeh, appeared at Mountain's church to discuss Pastor Oyeyemi's financial showing with him. According to Pastor Oyeyemi, all but one member of the group left when churchgoers became angry at them; the remaining member engaged in a prayer service with Pastor Oyeyemi. On November 2, 2005, Pastor Oyeyemi received the notice from Pastor Campbell, dated November 1, 2005, requiring him to appear in Lagos, Nigeria, within 72 hours of the date of the notice.

According to Pastor Oyeyemi, on November 5, 2005, he and Mountain's board of directors decided to establish a new church. The board devised a plan to pay off Mountain's existing debts and transfer its assets—including the proceeds from a sale of the church building—to the new church.<sup>4</sup> On November 6, 2005, Pastor Oyeyemi responded to the notice by a letter to Dr. Olukoya, which stated: "In reference to [the notice], which instructed me with [an] ultimatum to be in Lagos ... within 72 hours (November 3, 2005), or consider myself terminated effective immediately as pastor of Mountain of Fire and Miracles [,] Los Angeles chapter[,] [¶] ... [¶] and arrange for the handover of all church properties to a designated coordinator[,] [¶] ... [¶] I hereby inform you that the church's properties under my care are ready to be handed over to the designated coordinator." Pastor Oyeyemi testified that the only MFMM property in his or Mountain's possession were approximately 100 books that had been sent from Houston.

<sup>4</sup> The church building had been purchased shortly before Mountain's board decided to establish a new church. Although Pastor Oyeyemi acknowledged that he held title to Mountain's church building in his own name, he testified that he did so because Mountain lacked the credit to obtain a loan. According to Pastor Oyeyemi, Mountain's board approved his holding title to the building, Mountain's members provided the funds for the building's purchase, and the proceeds from the sale of the building were used to buy a new building for Blood of Jesus.

*<sup>4</sup> Pastor Oyeyemi denied that he misappropriated any assets belonging to Mountain. According to Pastor Oyeyemi, Mountain's board of directors transferred its assets to a nonprofit corporation established for Blood of Jesus. On March 26, 2007, a certificate of dissolution was filed for Mountain.

Pastor Ugeh testified that Pastor Oyeyemi was her senior pastor within California.<sup>5</sup> According to Pastor Ugeh, Pastor Oyeyemi viewed Pastor Campbell as unfit to act as regional overseer; in addition, he viewed Pastor Ugeh as incompetent to act as a pastor because she was a woman. Pastor Oyeyemi also refused to comply with Pastor Campbell's financial reporting requirements.

<sup>5</sup> Pastor Ugeh further testified that Pastor Oyeyemi opened a bank account for her church using Mountain's tax identification number, and that donations from her churchgoers were deposited in it. In view of Pastor Oyeyemi's conduct, she believed that respondent was included within Mountain until Mountain was dissolved as a corporation in 2007.

On October 30, 2005, at Dr. Olukoya's request, Pastors Ugeh and Campbell, along with three other ministers, appeared at Mountain's church to resolve Pastor Oyeyemi's noncompliance with the requirements. When the group of pastors spoke with Pastor Oyeyemi and Mountain's board of directors, angry churchgoers entered the meeting room and “chased” them off the church property. Later, at Dr. Olukoya's request, Pastor Campbell asked Pastor Ugeh to recover MFMM's assets from Pastor Oyeyemi's church. As all but three of Mountain's churchgoers had become members of Pastor Oyeyemi's new church, Pastor Ugeh also established a new MFMM church in Los Angeles.

Pastor Campbell testified that his conflict with Pastor Oyeyemi arose when Pastor Campbell found what he regarded as serious deficiencies in Pastor Oyeyemi's financial records. After the events in early November 2005, he designated Pastor Ugeh to recover MFMM property because she was the most senior pastor in California after Pastor Oyeyemi.

Michael Rosen, an accounting expert, testified that he had examined the records for two bank accounts used in connection with Pastor Oyeyemi's church beginning in 2002. He estimated that from 2002 through November 2005, there had been withdrawals from the accounts totaling $546,610 for which there was no adequate documentation. He also calculated that absent the disruptive events in November 2005, Mountain would have collected a total of $283,786 in offerings from November 2005 to the end of 2007. As the new MFMM church in Los Angeles had collected only $72,872 during that period, he estimated that its shortfall in collections amounted to $210,913.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>6</sup> At our request, respondent has provided us with copies of exhibits A and B, which summarized Rosen's testimony and were admitted at trial. We hereby augment the record to include the exhibits. (Cal. Rules of Court, rules 8.122(a)(3), 8.155(a)(1) (A).)

3. Judgment

The jury found that Pastor Oyeyemi had engaged in conversion and negligent interference with prospective economic relations, and awarded respondent $99,786.78 in damages.<sup>7</sup> On May 20, 2009, judgment was entered in favor of respondent and against Pastor Oyeyemi in accordance with the jury's special verdicts. Later, the trial court denied Pastor Oyeyemi's post-trial motions for a new trial and judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

<sup>7</sup> Although the parties refer to the latter tort as “negligent interference with an economic relationship,” the jury was instructed with former CACI No. 2204, which defines the elements of a tort called “negligent interference with prospective economic relations” or “negligent interference with prospective economic advantage.” (Venhaus v. Shultz (2007) 155 Cal.App.4th 1072, 1077.) For clarity, we use the name found in the CACI instruction.

DISCUSSION

*5 Pastor Oyeyemi contends that respondent's claims against him fail because respondent had no standing to assert the claims and no property interest in Mountain's assets, which respondent sought to recover at trial. In addition, he contends that respondent never sufficiently specified the funds he allegedly converted or the independently wrongful conduct required for negligent interference with prospective economic relations.

As explained below, we reject Pastor Oyeyemi's contention that respondent lacked standing to assert claims against him. We nonetheless agree that respondent's claims, as elaborated at trial, were defective insofar as they were predicated on Mountain's assets and income. Although the crux of respondent's claims was that Pastor Oyeyemi, in establishing Blood of Jesus, wrongfully converted Mountain's assets and diverted Mountain's prospective income to Blood of Jesus, respondent failed to show that MFMM had any property interest in Mountain's assets and prospective income.

A. Standing

We begin by examining whether respondent established its standing to assert claims for conversion and negligent interference with prospective economic relations against Pastor Oyeyemi. Generally, standing presents a “threshold question of law” when the material facts are undisputed. (People v. Superior Court (Plascencia) (2002) 103 Cal.App.4th 409, 424.) Lack of standing is a jurisdictional defect to an action that mandates dismissal (Cummings v. Stanley (2009) 177 Cal.App.4th 493, 501), unless the complaint can be amended to substitute the proper plaintiff (Cloud v. Northrop Grumman Corp. (1998) 67 Cal.App.4th 995, 1004–1011 (Cloud)). Because the defect is not forfeited by a failure to object, it may be raised at any time in an action, including on appeal. (Common Cause v. Board of Supervisors (1989) 49 Cal.3d 432, 438–439.)

The demand for standing is founded on Code of Civil Procedure section 367, which requires that “[e]very action must be prosecuted in the name of the real party in interest, except as provided by statute.” Under this statute, “[a] real party in interest is one who has ‘an actual and substantial interest in the subject matter of the action and who would be benefited or injured by the judgment in the action.’” (Martin v. Bridgeport Community Assn., Inc. (2009) 173 Cal.App.4th 1024, 1031–1032, quoting Friendly Village Community Assn., Inc. v. Silva & Hill Constr. Co. (1973) 31 Cal.App.3d 220, 225.) For this reason, “a complaint by a party lacking standing fails to state a cause of action by the particular named plaintiff, inasmuch as the claim belongs to somebody else. [Citation.] A more accurately stated rationale would be that there is a defect in the parties, since the party named as plaintiff is not the real party in interest.” (Cloud, supra, 67 Cal.App.4th at p. 1004.)

In rejecting Pastor Oyeyemi's objections to respondent's standing, the trial court accepted respondent's theory of standing, which relied on two premises. The first premise is that Pastor Oyeyemi held at least some of his church's assets in trust for MFMM. Before the trial court and on appeal, respondent has placed special emphasis on Pastor Oyeyemi's November 2002 agreement, in which he stated, “I hold this church in trust for and on behalf of [MFMM].” The second premise is that Pastor Campbell designated respondent “under the pastorate of Grace Ugeh” to recover MFMM's assets from Pastor Oyeyemi. Before the trial court and on appeal, respondent has maintained that Pastor Campbell's designation assigned to respondent MFMM's right to recover its assets from Pastor Oyeyemi.

*6 We conclude that respondent demonstrated its standing to assert claims for conversion and interference with prospective economic relations. Regarding the first premise, the parties do not dispute that as early as April 2002, Pastor Oyeyemi operated his church under a registered fictitious business name or “d.b.a.,” and that in November 2002, while he used the d.b.a., he entered into an agreement with MFMM to hold the assets of his church in trust for MFMM. These facts were sufficient to show that after November 2002, Pastor Oyeyemi personally held the assets of his church in trust for MMFA, to the extent the assets fell within the scope of the November 2002 agreement.<sup>8</sup> Furthermore, as the beneficiary of the trust, MFMM was entitled to assert claims that Pastor Oyeyemi had misappropriated or diverted the assets that he held in trust for MFMM. (McElroy v. McElroy (1948) 32 Cal.2d 828, 831.)

8 Generally, courts have concluded that the designation “d.b.a.” in connection with an individual indicates that the individual operates a business and is liable for its obligations. (See Providence Washington Ins. Co. v. Valley Forge Ins. Co. (1996) 42 Cal.App.4th 1194, 1200; Pinkerton's, Inc. v. Superior Court (1996) 49 Cal.App.4th 1342, 1348–1349 and the cases cited therein.)

Regarding the second premise, respondent established that it had been assigned MFMM's claims for conversion and interference with prospective economic relations. To begin, we observe that claims of this type are assignable. Generally, the assignment of a cause of action passes title to it from one person to another. (McDermott, Will & Emery v. Superior Court (2000) 83 Cal.App.4th 378, 382.) Claims arising out of “an obligation, breach of contract, violation of a right of property, or damage to personal or real property” are ordinarily assignable, unlike claims arising “from a wrong done to the person, the reputation, or the feelings of the injured party, and from breaches of contracts of a purely personal nature ( [such as] promises of marriage).” (Curtis v. Kellogg & Andelson (1999) 73 Cal.App.4th 492, 504.) Under these principles, a claim for conversion is assignable. (Staley v. McClurken (1939) 35 Cal.App.2d 622, 625.) We reach the same conclusion regarding a claim for negligent interference with prospective economic relations, as determinable interests in future earnings and profits are subject to assignment (Bank of California v. Connolly (1973) 36 Cal.App.3d 350, 367–368; H.S. Mann Corp. v. Moody (1956) 144 Cal.App.2d 310, 318; see Superior Gunitite v. Ralph Mitzel, Inc. (2004) 117 Cal.App.4th 301, 305–306, 316 [affirming damages awarded in connection with assigned claims for negligence and negligent interference with an economic relationship] ).

Furthermore, respondent established that MFMM had assigned its claims to respondent. “[A]n assignment, to be effective, must include manifestation to another person by the owner of his intention to transfer the right, without further action, to such other person or to a third person. [Citation.] It is the substance and not the form of a transaction which determines whether an assignment was intended. [Citations.] If[,] from the entire transaction and the conduct of the parties it clearly appears that the intent of the parties was to pass title to the [cause of action], then an assignment will be held to have taken place. [Citations.]” (McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 Cal.App.3d 216, 225.) Here, Pastors Ugeh and Campbell each testified that MFMM had authorized Pastor Ugeh to recover its assets from Pastor Oyeyemi.

Pastor Oyeyemi suggests that this testimony showed no assignment of MFMM's claims to respondent. We disagree. As noted above, the existence of an assignment must be discerned on the basis of all the circumstances, including the parties' conduct; moreover, the assignee of a cause of action may assign it to another party (see Miller v. Bank of America (1942) 52 Cal.App.2d 512, 515–516). As both Pastors Campbell and Ugeh voiced no objection to respondent's status as plaintiff during the trial, their conduct unequivocally showed that respondent had been assigned MFMM's claim through a direct assignment by MFMM or a subsequent reassignment by Pastor Ugeh. In sum, respondent had standing to assert its claims for conversion and negligent interference with prospective economic relations.

B. No Property Interest in Mountain's Assets

*7 We turn to Pastor Oyeyemi's contention that respondent's claims, as elaborated at trial, were defective as a matter of law because respondent established no property interest in Mountain's assets. We agree. Although respondent had standing as MFMM's assignee to assert claims for conversion and negligent interference with prospective economic advantage against Pastor Oyeyemi (see pt. A., ante), the primary damages respondent sought at trial were related to Mountain's assets, which respondent maintained Pastor Oyeyemi held in trust for MFMM. However, absent a showing that MFMM had a property interest in Mountain's assets, MFMM's assignment of its claims against Pastor Oyeyemi to respondent did not authorize respondent's claims regarding Mountain's assets. (See Judelson v. American Metal Bearing Co. (1948) 89 Cal.App.2d 256, 261–266, [assignment of claims against incorporator does not, by itself, entitle assignee to assert claims against pertinent corporation].) As explained below, respondent failed to show that MFMM had any such interest in Mountain's assets.

1. Governing Principles

There is no dispute that Mountain was a nonprofit religious corporation (Corp.Code, § 9111 et seq.).<sup>9</sup> As such, it was a charitable trust required to use its assets for the purpose stated in its articles of incorporation. (In re Metropolitan Baptist Church of Richmond, Inc. (1975) 48 Cal.App.3d 850, 856–857; 9 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (10th ed. 2005) Corporations, §§ 252, 383, pp. 1016–1017, 1120–1121.) As is typical for such corporations, the evidence at trial established that its assets “consisted of gifts, or the proceeds and increment of gifts.” (In re Metropolitan Baptist Church of Richmond, Inc., supra, 48 Cal.App.3d at p. 857.) Mountain obtained funds from churchgoers, which were placed in bank accounts and withdrawn for various reasons, including the purchase of a church building. Mountain's articles of incorporation specified its purpose as “organiz[ing] a Christian fellowship and a church congregation [ ] to develop mental health programs for the public and to provide social services to the poor and the needy.” In addition, Mountain's bylaws identified its purpose as “organiz[ing] a Teaching and a Praying Church and ... provid[ing] Social and Charitable Services to the public.”

<sup>9</sup> All further statutory citations are to the Corporations Code.

In asserting that Pastor Oyeyemi misappropriated or wrongfully diverted assets belonging to MFMM after Mountain's incorporation, respondent necessarily maintained that Mountain held its assets for MFMM. In Episcopal Church Cases (2009) 45 Cal.4th 467, 478–485, our Supreme Court elaborated how California courts should resolve “internal church disputes” of this type regarding the ownership of church property. There, a local church that operated as a religious corporation disaffiliated itself from the national church, resulting in a property dispute regarding the ownership of the local church's building. (Id. at pp. 474–476.)

As explained in Episcopal Church Cases, the United States Supreme Court has held that state courts may resolve church property disputes in accordance with state law, provided the method of resolution does not contravene the First Amendment to the United States Constitution. (Episcopal Church Cases, supra, 45 Cal.4th at p. 478.) The United States Supreme Court has approved two such methods. (Id. at p. 480.) Under the first method, which is often called the “‘principle of government’” approach, a court examines whether the general church manifested a hierarchical organization in which the local church subordinated itself to higher church authorities on questions of faith, discipline, or other matters; if so, the court, in resolving the property dispute, places special emphasis on the decisions of the higher church authorities. (Id. at p. 480.) In contrast, if the general church does not display a hierarchical organization, the court resolves the dispute in accordance with ordinary principles applicable to voluntary associations. (Ibid.) Under the second method, which our Supreme Court called the “neutral principles of law” approach, a court resolves the dispute by examining the constitutions, articles of incorporation, and other governing rules of the local and general churches, viewed in light of relevant state statutes, including suitably “neutral” laws concerning religious property. (Id. at pp. 480–485.)

*8 California courts have long applied the neutral principles approach. (Episcopal Church Cases, supra, 45 Cal.4th 467.) In Episcopal Church Cases, our Supreme Court dispelled residual doubts regarding this matter, holding that to the extent property disputes involve no point of religious doctrine, California courts must apply neutral principles of law. (Id. at p. 485.) Under this approach, “[t]he court should consider sources such as the deeds to the property in dispute, the local church’s articles of incorporation, the general church’s constitution, canons, and rules, and relevant statutes, including statutes specifically concerning religious property, such as ... section 9142.” (Ibid.)

Regarding religious property, subdivision (c) of section 9142 provides: “No assets of a religious corporation are or shall be deemed to be impressed with any trust, express or implied, statutory or at common law unless one of the following applies:

“(1) Unless, and only to the extent that, the assets were received by the corporation with an express commitment by resolution of its board of directors to so hold those assets in trust.

“(2) Unless, and only to the extent that, the articles or bylaws of the corporation, or the governing instruments of a superior religious body or general church of which the corporation is a member, so expressly provide.

“(3) Unless, and only to the extent that, the donor expressly imposed a trust, in writing, at the time of the gift or donation.”

The neutral principles approach, insofar as it relies on section 9142, overlaps in some measure with the principle of government approach. (Episcopal Church Cases, supra, 45 Cal.4th at pp. 484, 492.) Thus, in Episcopal Church Cases, the court concluded that under subdivision (c)(2) of section 9142, a hierarchically organized general church can unilaterally impress a trust upon the assets of a subordinated local religious corporation when the general church’s governing instruments expressly provide for a trust. (Episcopal Church Cases, supra, at pp. 491–492.) Nonetheless, under the neutral principles approach, the mere existence of a hierarchical organization is insufficient to create such a trust, absent provisions regarding the disposition of local church property in the governing documents of the general or local church. (Iglesia Evangelica Latina, Inc. v. Southern Pacific Latin American Dist. of the Assemblies of God (2009) 173 Cal.App.4th 420, 443.)

In resolving issues arising under the neutral principles approach, we apply two standards of review. To the extent our inquiry hinges on the interpretation of the articles of incorporation, bylaws, and other governing documents of MFMM and Mountain, we apply neutral principles of law de novo. (Concord Christian Center v. Open Bible Standard Churches (2005) 132 Cal.App.4th 1396, 1408–1409.) However, to the extent the application of the governing documents hinges on factual questions regarding the underlying circumstances, we examine the record for substantial evidence favorable to the judgment. (Ibid.) Under this standard, “we must consider all the evidence in the light most favorable to the prevailing part[y], giving [it] the benefit of every reasonable inference, and resolving conflicts in support of the judgment.” (Ibid.)

2. Analysis

We conclude that respondent failed to show that a trust had been impressed in MFMM’s favor on Mountain’s assets. As explained above (see pt. B.1, ante), Mountain’s assets were not subject to any trust—whether “express or implied, statutory or at common law”—unless respondent demonstrated that at least one of the provisions of section 9142, subdivision (c), had been satisfied. This respondent did not do.<sup>10</sup>

<sup>10</sup> We note that Pastor Oyeyemi never expressly directed the trial court’s attention to the neutral principles approach during the underlying proceedings. Nonetheless, we conclude that he has not forfeited his contention, as he challenged respondent’s standing on the ground that respondent had not shown that a trust had been impressed on Mountain’s assets under section 9142, subdivision (c).

*9 At trial, respondent presented evidence that MFMM is a hierarchical church. Pastor Campbell testified that MFMM imposed requirements on its pastors regarding conduct and salaries, and financial reporting requirements on its local branches to ensure that MFMM was “seen ... by the public to be accountable.” In addition, Pastor Ugeh testified that Dr. Olukoya had ordered local churches that incorporated to provide in its articles and bylaws that pastors and their relations could not be members of the board of directors.

There was also evidence that Mountain and Pastor Oyeyemi had subordinated themselves to MFMM's authority in various respects. Mountain's bylaws provided that “[t]he Senior Pastor of the Church shall operate under the guidance of the General Overseer of [MFMM] [¶] ... [¶] and the Board of Directors.” In addition, Mountain paid ten percent of its churchgoers' offerings to the division of MFMM located in the United States. There was also evidence that Pastor Oyeyemi had personally subordinated himself on certain matters, as his November 2002 agreement required him to remain loyal to MFMM and hold the assets of his church in trust for MFMM, and his January 2005 agreement subjected him to MFMM's directives.

Although this evidence shows that Mountain was a local religious corporation within a hierarchical church, it fails to establish the existence of a trust on Mountain's assets under any of the three provisions of section 9142, subdivision (c). The record discloses no resolution by Mountain's board of directors expressly placing its assets in trust for MFMM, for purposes of section 9142, subdivision (c)(1). Nor is there evidence that Mountain's articles and bylaws or MFMM's “governing documents” expressly provided for a trust on Mountain's assets, for purposes of section 9142, subdivision (c)(2). Finally, nothing in the record suggests that MFMM was the “donor” of the assets it sought to recover or that it imposed a trust on any such assets “at the time of the gift or donation,” for purposes of section 9142, subdivision (c)(3).

Respondent contends that Pastor Oyeyemi's November 2002 agreement operated to impose a trust in MFMM's favor on Mountain's assets. Pointing to Episcopal Church Cases, respondent argues that the November 2002 agreement, coupled with MFMM's hierarchical organization, was sufficient to create a trust. We disagree. As explained in Episcopal Church Cases, under section 9142, subdivision (c)(2), a general church with a hierarchical organization can unilaterally impress a trust only when its governing instruments “‘so provide.’” (Episcopal Church Cases, supra, 45 Cal.4th at p. 492.)

The November 2002 agreement cannot be regarded as an MFMM “governing instrument” that impressed a trust on Mountain's assets, as it was executed nearly a year before Mountain was created, and was signed by Pastor Oyeyemi as an individual while he operated his church under a “d.b.a.”

Generally, a corporation is not bound by contracts executed by its incorporator prior to the corporation's creation absent ratification or adoption by the corporation itself. (Chapman v. Sky L'Onda etc. Water Co. (1945) 69 Cal.App.2d 667, 675.) As noted above, once incorporated, Mountain never ratified or adopted Pastor Oyeyemi's personal trust obligations. For this reason, the November 2002 agreement encompassed only those assets held by Pastor Oyeyemi while he operated his church under a “d.b.a.,” but not the assets that accrued to Mountain after its creation. To hold otherwise would be to disregard the neutral principles of law central to the method for resolving property disputes mandated in Episcopal Church Cases.<sup>11</sup>

11 In a related contention, respondent maintains that the November 2002 agreement between MFMM and Pastor Oyeyemi rendered Mountain an agent of MFMM. This contention also fails, as Mountain never ratified or adopted the November 2002 agreement.

*10 Furthermore, MFMM had considerable opportunity to impose a trust unilaterally on Mountain's assets before the critical events in November 2005, but failed to do so. Under the doctrine of estoppel, when a corporation takes over its incorporator's business, a third party's claims against the incorporator may attach to the corporation when the third party was denied notice of the incorporation. (Judelson v. American Metal Bearing Co., supra, 89 Cal.App.2d at pp. 263–264.) However, no evidence at trial suggested that Pastor Oyeyemi hid Mountain's incorporation from MFMM or that MFMM was unaware of it. On the contrary, the evidence showed that Pastor Oyeyemi communicated frequently with Dr. Olukoya, that Pastors Campbell and Ugeh knew that Mountain had been incorporated, that several churches in Region 4 had been incorporated, and that MFMM propounded some general requirements for incorporated churches. Nonetheless, after Mountain's incorporation in September 2003, MFMM took no action to ensure that Mountain held its assets in trust for MFMM.<sup>12</sup>

12 For similar reasons, we reject any contention that the November 2002 agreement imposed a trust on Mountain's assets under section 9142, subdivision (c)(3). Respondent never showed that any assets held in trust by Pastor Oyeyemi under the November 2002 agreement were given or donated to Mountain. However, assuming—without deciding—that this occurred, the November 2002 agreement was executed over a year before Mountain was incorporated, and thus the agreement was not executed “at the time of the gift or donation” (§ 9142, subd. (c)(3)); furthermore, MFMM never executed any other written document expressly impressing a trust on any such assets, despite ample opportunity to do so.

Respondent also contends that the provision in Mountain's bylaws that “[t]he Senior Pastor of the Church shall operate under the guidance of the General Overseer of [MFMM] [¶] ... [¶] and the Board of Directors,” coupled with the other facts regarding Mountain's subordination to MFMM, operated to create a trust in MFMM's favor on Mountain's assets. We find guidance on this contention from Protestant Episcopal Church v. Barker (1981) 115 Cal.App.3d 599 (Protestant Episcopal Church), a leading case in the application of the neutral principle approach to church property disputes. There, four local religious corporations affiliated with a national church fell into property disputes with the national church when they severed their relationship with it. (Id. at pp. 604–605.) The articles of incorporation for each local corporation stated that it was a “constituent part” of the national church or an organizational subunit (diocese) of the national church, but only one corporation operated under articles expressly providing that its assets would be surrendered to the national church upon disaffiliation. (Id. at pp. 606–611, 625.) The appellate court concluded that only the latter held its assets in trust for the national church, even though the other three corporations had declared themselves to be “constituent parts” of the national church or its subunits and had voluntarily submitted to the national church's financial reporting requirements. (Id. at pp. 625–626.) In view of Protestant Episcopal Church, we conclude that Mountain's articles of incorporation did not impose an express trust on Mountain's assets, as they merely obliged its pastor to find guidance from Dr. Olukoya. In sum, respondent established no ownership interest in Mountain's assets as MFMM's assignee.

3. Prejudice

The remaining issues concern whether respondent's failure to establish MFMM's interest in Mountain's assets was prejudicial to Pastor Oyeyemi, and, if so, what remedy is appropriate. As explained below, the effect of the failure was to permit respondent to litigate its claims on the incorrect theory that Mountain's corporate existence was irrelevant to Pastor Oyeyemi's liability for conversion and negligent interference with prospective economic relations. As a result, the failure cannot be regarded as harmless.<sup>13</sup>

<sup>13</sup> Generally, an error or defect at trial “is usually deemed harmless ... unless there is a ‘reasonabl[e] probab[ility]’ that it affected the verdict.” (College Hospital, Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 8 Cal.4th 704, 715, quoting People v. Watson (1956) 46 Cal.2d 818, 836.) In this context, “a ‘probability’ ... does not mean more likely than not, but merely a reasonable chance, more than an abstract possibility. [Citations.]” (College Hospital, Inc. v. Superior Court, supra, at p. 715, italics omitted.)

*<sup>11</sup> Here, the special verdict form asked the jury to make specific findings with respect to the elements of each tort, with the exception of damages. Regarding damages, the special verdict form requested the jury to render only a consolidated finding regarding the total amount of damages arising from the torts. After determining that the elements of each tort had been established, the jury found the total amount of damages to be $99,786.78.

Respondent's interference claim is incapable of supporting the award of damages: because the claim relied entirely on Mountain's assets, the claim is fatally defective. To establish this tort, respondent was obliged to show that “an economic relationship existed between [MFMM] and [Mountain] which contained a reasonably probable future economic benefit or advantage to [MFMM],” and that Pastor Oyeyemi had wrongfully disrupted the relationship. (Venhaus v. Shultz, supra, 155 Cal.App.4th at p. 1077.) In an effort to carry this burden, respondent maintained that the creation of Blood of Jesus improperly diverted churchgoers' contributions from Mountain to Blood of Jesus. Because MFMM had no ownership interest in these contributions to Mountain, respondent did not establish the requisite economic relationship between MFMM and Mountain.

We also conclude that the award of damages cannot be affirmed on the basis of respondent's conversion claim. Generally, conversion is “ ‘any act of dominion wrongfully exerted over another's personal property in denial of or inconsistent with his rights therein.’ ” (Messerall v. Fulwider (1988) 199 Cal.App.3d 1324, 1329.)<sup>14</sup> To establish conversion, respondent maintained that Pastor Oyeyemi had withdrawn funds in his church's bank accounts without adequate documentation. Respondent relied on its accounting expert, Michael Rosen, who testified that he had examined the records for two bank accounts used in connection with Pastor Oyeyemi's church beginning in 2002. The first account was opened in early 2002, and the second was opened in January 2005. Some of the suspect withdrawals from the first account may have occurred before Mountain came into existence; however, Rosen was not asked to differentiate between withdrawals occurring before and after Mountain's incorporation.<sup>15</sup>

<sup>14</sup> The remedies for conversion include specific recovery of the property, damages, and a quieting of title. (5 Witkin, Summary of Cal. Law (10th ed. 2005) Torts, § 700, pp. 1024–1205.) Respondents' claim sought damages and “other and further relief as the [c]ourt ... deem[ed] proper.”

<sup>15</sup> Although respondent has suggested that its conversion claim against Pastor Oyeyemi involved items of property other than the bank accounts, the record establishes that the conversion claim hinged on Rosen's testimony. During the closing arguments at trial, respondent's counsel maintained that Pastor Oyeyemi engaged in conversion with respect to his church's building, which was purchased shortly before the disruptive events in October 2005. However, respondent's counsel identified no specific damages from this misconduct other than a $139,786 withdrawal in October 2005 from the church's accounts to pay for the building's purchase, which Rosen had included among the suspect withdrawals from the accounts. On appeal, respondent argues that its conversion claim was also predicated on chairs, books, and other tangible items that were transferred to Blood of Jesus. This contention finds no support in the record. Aside from the monetary damages respondent asserted at trial, the only evidence that Pastor Oyeyemi or Mountain held items of property belonging to MFMM came from Pastor Oyeyemi, who testified that he and Mountain possessed approximately 100 books from MFMM that he had offered to return. Although respondent's counsel briefly referred to these books during his closing argument, respondent never included the restoration of these items or their monetary value within the remedies it sought. Respondent did not request the recovery of any specific items of property, and the special verdict form asked the jury solely to assess monetary damages for conversion. During a conference on jury instructions, respondent's counsel acknowledged that no evidence had been admitted regarding the fair market value of items of property, for purposes of a conversion claim.

*12 The remaining issue concerns the appropriate remedy. Because the conversion claim was tried on an incorrect legal theory that impaired full development of the evidence relevant to conversion, we remand the matter for a new trial on respondent's conversion claim, limited to whether Pastor Oyeyemi converted bank account funds entrusted to him by MFMM under the November 2002 agreement prior to Mountain's incorporation. (See Toscano v. Greene Music (2004) 124 Cal.App.4th 685, 695–697.)

C. Pastor Oyeyemi's Contention of Instructional Error

For the guidance of trial court upon remand, we address Pastor Oyeyemi's remaining contention regarding respondent's conversion claim. He maintains that during the underlying trial, the court improperly rejected a special instruction that he requested. As explained below, we see no error in the ruling.

Generally, “[a] party is entitled upon request to correct, nonargumentative instructions on every theory of the case advanced by him which is supported by substantial evidence.” (Soule v. General Motors Corp. (1994) 8 Cal.4th 548, 572.) However, “[i]n order to complain of failure to instruct on a particular issue the aggrieved party must request the specific proper instructions. [Citations.] ... [T]he court has no duty to modify erroneous instructions submitted to it, and there is no error if it simply rejects such instructions. [Citation.] ... [¶] Furthermore, the duty of the court is fully discharged if the instructions given by the court embrace all the points of the law arising in the case. [Citations.]” (Hyatt v. Sierra Boat Co. (1978) 79 Cal.App.3d 325, 335.)

Pastor Oyeyemi contends that although the jury was instructed with a modified version of CACI No. 2100, which sets forth the general elements of conversion, an additional instruction was needed to guide the jury regarding respondent's conversion claim, which focused on the funds in the two bank accounts. Generally, “[a] cause of action for conversion of money can be stated only where a defendant interferes with plaintiff's possessory interest in a specific, identifiable sum, such as when a trustee or agent misappropriates the money entrusted to him.” (Kim v. Westmoore Partners, Inc. (2011) 201 Cal.App.4th 267, 284, italics omitted.) Nonetheless, although “a specific sum capable of identification” must be involved, “it is not necessary that each coin or bill be earmarked.” (Haigler v. Donnelly (1941) 18 Cal.2d 674, 681.) Thus, in Fischer v. Machado (1996) 50 Cal.App.4th 1069, 1072–1074, the appellate court affirmed the plaintiffs' judgment for conversion against the plaintiff's agents, reasoning that the plaintiffs had sufficiently identified the amount of money due them, even though the agents had commingled the funds they received on the plaintiffs' behalf with other money in a bank account.

Here, Pastor Oyeyemi's proposed instruction stated: “Where the relationship of debtor and creditor only exists[,] conversion of the funds representing the indebtedness is not actionable against the debtor unless the debtor is required to return to the owner the identical money. In other words, dollars which are deposited in a general bank account with other dollars are not the subject of an action for conversion.” This instruction was derived from Watson v. Stockton Morris Plan Co. (1939) 34 Cal.App.2d 393, 403, in which the appellate court explained that a creditor cannot assert a conversion claim based on an amount of money against a debtor unless the debtor holds the funds in a fiduciary capacity.

*13 Under the principles regarding instructions described above, the trial court properly rejected the proposed instruction, as the record was devoid of evidence that Pastor Oyeyemi's relationship with MFMM was merely that of a debtor to a creditor. On the contrary, the undisputed evidence at trial established that he became a trustee for MFMM under the November 2002 agreement. Nor did the CACI instruction, viewed in context, fail to “embrace all the points of the law arising in the case” (Hyatt v. Sierra Boat Co., supra, 79 Cal.App.3d at p. 335), as respondent apprised the jury that it sought specific sums in bank accounts that Pastor Oyeyemi purportedly held for MFMM under the November 2002 agreement. In sum, there was no instructional error.

DISPOSITION

The judgment is reversed, and the matter is remanded to the trial court for a new trial on respondent's claim for conversion in accordance with this opinion, limited to whether Pastor Oyeyemi converted bank account funds entrusted to him by MFMM under the November 2002 agreement prior to Mountain's incorporation. Pastor Oyeyemi is awarded his costs on appeal.

We concur:

EPSTEIN, P.J.

SUZUKAWA, J.

All Citations

Not Reported in Cal.Rptr.3d, 2012 WL 2373003

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-54

547 F.2d 812
 United States Court of Appeals,
 Fourth Circuit.

In re O'NEILL ENTERPRISES, INC., Bankrupt.
 JACKSON PARK REALTY COMPANY, INC., et al., Appellants,
 v.
 Gray WILLIAMS, Trustee of O'Neill Enterprises, Inc., Appellee.

No. 76-1301.

|
 Argued Nov. 8, 1976.

|
 Decided Jan. 18, 1977.

Synopsis

The United States District Court for the Western District of Virginia, James C. Turk, Chief Judge, affirmed bankruptcy judge's order that trustee in bankruptcy was entitled to cash surrender value of policy on life of president and sole stockholder of bankrupt, and appeal was taken. The Court of Appeals, K. K. Hall, Circuit Judge, held that lenders' security interest in policy, which was intended to serve merely as secondary security to be drawn upon only in event of deficiency after applying proceeds from real estate, was discharged when real estate was sold at foreclosure at price in excess of first lien debt, that policy, although validly assigned to lenders, was nevertheless asset of bankrupt, and that trustee, who was not aware of insurance fund or its amount at time of abandonment, did not intend to abandon anything other than bankrupt's equity in land and building.

Affirmed.

West Headnotes (3)

[1] Insurance 🔑 Rights of Creditors

Where policy on life of bankrupt's president and sole stockholder was intended to serve merely as secondary security for construction loan and was to be drawn upon only in event of deficiency after applying proceeds from real estate, and lenders elected not to foreclose under deed of trust but instead allowed holder of subordinated deed of trust to foreclose and assume first lien indebtedness, there was no deficiency and consequently no right in lenders to policy proceeds in view of discharge of their security interest as result of sale of real estate at foreclosure at price in excess of their lien debt.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Bankruptcy 🔑 Insurance Policies and Liabilities Thereon

While insurance policy on life of president and sole stockholder of bankrupt was validly assigned to lenders as security for construction loan to bankrupt, policy was nevertheless an asset of bankrupt and, following filing of involuntary petition and adjudication of bankruptcy, title to such asset vested in trustee of bankrupt subject to interest of lenders. Bankr.Act, § 70, 11 U.S.C.A. § 110.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[3] Bankruptcy 🔑 Concealed or Undiscovered Assets

Trustee, who was not aware at time of abandonment of value and amount of policy on life of bankrupt's president and sole stockholder that had been assigned to lenders as additional security for construction loan, did not surrender his title to policy, which constituted separate asset of bankrupt estate, as part of his abandonment of bankrupt's real estate and thus, since lenders' security interest was discharged when real estate was sold at foreclosure to realty company for price in excess of their lien debt and since realty company's subordinate deed of trust, which was foreclosed, was not secured by policy, neither lenders nor realty company had present interest in policy proceeds.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

Attorneys and Law Firms

*813 John K. Taggart, III, Charlottesville, Va. (Lloyd T. Smith, Jr., Tremblay & Smith, Charlottesville, Va., on brief), for appellants.

T. Munford Boyd, Charlottesville, Va. (Paxson, Smith, Boyd, Gilliam & Gouldman, Charlottesville, Va., on brief), for appellee.

Before BRYAN, Senior Circuit Judge, and WIDENER and HALL, Circuit Judges.

Opinion

K. K. HALL, Circuit Judge:

This is an appeal by Jackson Park Realty Company, Inc. (hereinafter Jackson Park), Fidelity Bankers Life Insurance Company (hereinafter Fidelity) and Philadelphia Life Insurance Company (hereinafter Philadelphia) from an adverse ruling in a bankruptcy case. The district judge affirmed an order entered by the bankruptcy judge in the bankruptcy of O'Neill Enterprises, Inc. The case involves conflicting claims to the cash surrender value of a life insurance policy on the life of Mr. Frank A. O'Neill. It was held below that the trustee in bankruptcy for O'Neill Enterprises, Inc., was entitled to the fund. This appeal was filed pursuant to the Bankruptcy Act. Title 11 U.S.C. s 47 specifically gives jurisdiction to this court.

For purposes of securing financing for an office building it planned to construct at 2007 Earhart Street in the City of Charlottesville, Virginia, O'Neill Enterprises entered into a loan agreement in January 1967 with Philadelphia and Fidelity whereby the two insurance companies agreed to make a $750,000 loan to O'Neill Enterprises. Pursuant to that loan, two notes of $375,000 each were executed by O'Neill Enterprises on June 15, 1967. Security for these notes included a first deed of trust on the property at 2007 Earhart Street. As additional collateral security for the loan, the bankrupt O'Neill Enterprises was required to furnish an assignment of rents effective upon any default and six life insurance policies with a total face value of $1,000,000. The policy which is subject of this appeal is a $250,000 policy on the life of Frank A. O'Neill, the president and sole stockholder of O'Neill Enterprises.<sup>1</sup> This policy has a cash surrender value of $25,715.70.

<sup>1</sup> The other five insurance policies insured the lives of Mr. O'Neill's wife and children. The bankruptcy judge denied Jackson Park's claim to these policies on grounds that they had been issued to a party not having an insurable interest in the lives of the insured for the mere purpose of assignment which was in violation of Virginia law. Cash surrender value of these five policies is approximately $3,000; however, their appeal was abandoned during appeal to the district court.

In January of 1968, O'Neill Enterprises executed a subordinate deed of trust on the same property to secure a $100,000 loan by Jackson Park. The insurance policies which served the first lien debt were not involved in any way as security for this loan.

O'Neill Enterprises was adjudicated bankrupt on January 5, 1972, following a filing of an involuntary petition in bankruptcy. A receiver, and subsequently a trustee, took over the estate of the bankrupt. In the schedules filed by the trustee in behalf of the bankrupt, the six insurance policies were listed in Schedule B-3, Choses in Action, with the notation that the policies were believed to have no cash value.<sup>2</sup> This information was garnered from Mr. O'Neill. After institution of the bankruptcy *814 proceeding the two insurance companies surrendered the six life insurance policies for their cash value. The policies had lapsed for nonpayment of premiums, but while their worth was unbeknown to the trustee or bankrupt, they were surrendered for their cash value of $28,789.66.<sup>3</sup> The trustee was not informed of this figure until October 4, 1972.

<sup>2</sup> Title 11 U.S.C. s 25(a)(8) requires the bankrupt to file such a schedule of property and its money value.

<sup>3</sup> Of this amount, $25,715.70 was the cash surrender value of the only policy in question in this appeal, i. e. the policy on the life of Mr. O'Neill.

The trustee continued to hold and operate the Earhart Street building until June 9, 1972, when the property was ordered abandoned by the bankruptcy judge. An attempted sale failed to produce a bid which appeared sufficient to produce any equity for the estate and general creditors. Thus abandonment seemed proper. The order of abandonment referred only to the real estate at 2007 Earhart Street; it did not refer to the additional security (insurance policies). The trustee was not then aware of the intention to abandon anything but the real estate. Had the trustee known of the $28,789.66 credit to the first lien indebtedness, all indications are that there would not have been an abandonment and a bid for the property would have been accepted.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>4</sup> By letter of July 13, 1972, sent to O'Neill Enterprises, it was disclosed that the insurance policies were worth something and Philadelphia and Fidelity intended to surrender the policies for their cash value and hold the proceeds as security for the debt. The trustee sent a reply letter within a week, indicating that the bankrupt had no interest in "maintaining" the insurance policies, and the trustee inquired as to the "amount of the cash value of each such policy which has been paid on the indebtedness for which the policies constituted security."

By letter dated October 4, 1972, four months after abandonment of the Earhart property, Philadelphia responded to the trustee's inquiry and disclosed the cash surrender value of the six policies.

Following abandonment, Philadelphia and Fidelity entered into an agreement with Jackson Park whereby Jackson Park would be allowed to foreclose under its second deed of trust, and if it were the successful bidder at the foreclosure sale, it would purchase the property subject to assumption of the first lien debt and certain other incidental expenses. In exchange for Jackson Park's promise to bring the first lien debt current and to assume the debt, Philadelphia and Fidelity agreed to transfer to Jackson Park, along with their interest in the rentals collected during the bankruptcy administration, their rights in the six insurance policies once they were satisfied that the first lien debt was otherwise adequately secured. Therefore, the two insurance companies, Philadelphia and Fidelity, refused to devote the insurance proceeds to reduction of the debt, but instead continued to hold the fund as further security for Jackson Park's performance of its obligation to them.

These negotiations and the final arrangement between the insurance companies and Jackson Park were carried out entirely without the knowledge or notice to the trustee or the bankruptcy court.

At a foreclosure sale on July 10, 1972, Jackson Park purchased the property, subject to the first deed of trust for $84,000.<sup>5</sup> Thereafter, on June 4, 1973, the trustee filed a petition in the bankruptcy court to recover the cash value of the insurance policies which were still held by Philadelphia and Fidelity. Following a hearing, the bankruptcy judge entered a decision in favor of the trustee, which was affirmed by the district court. We are in agreement.

<sup>5</sup> This was the approximate amount of indebtedness then due Jackson Park from the secondary loan to O'Neill Enterprises.

[1] The life insurance policies securing the first lien debt were initially intended by O'Neill Enterprises and the first lien noteholders to serve merely as secondary security "to be drawn upon only in the event of a deficiency after applying proceeds from the real estate." Philadelphia and Fidelity elected not to foreclose under their deed of trust, but instead allowed Jackson Park to foreclose under the second deed of trust and assume the first lien indebtedness. There was no deficiency and consequently no right in Philadelphia or Fidelity to proceed *815 against the insurance policies. Their security interest in the insurance policies was discharged when the real estate was sold, by virtue of their agreement, at foreclosure for a price in excess of the first lien debt.

[2] [3] While the insurance policy on the life of Mr. O'Neill was validly assigned to Philadelphia and Fidelity, it was nevertheless an asset of the bankrupt. By operation of law under s 70 of the Bankruptcy Act, title to this asset vested in the trustee of the bankrupt, subject to the interest of Philadelphia and Fidelity. The trustee was not a party to the agreement between the two insurance companies and Jackson Park regarding this insurance fund, nor did the trustee acquiesce in that agreement. Although he abandoned the real estate, there was no abandonment of the insurance fund, which remains an asset of the bankrupt estate. The agreement between Philadelphia and Fidelity and Jackson Park regarding the insurance fund cannot be given effect. Jackson Park, by its agreement aforementioned, assumed the position of the bankrupt with regard to the primary indebtedness on the property by virtue of the property having been abandoned by the trustee. However, there can be no claim by Jackson Park to the insurance fund as additional security because it remains a separate asset of the bankrupt estate.

Appellants' primary contention in this appeal is that when the trustee abandoned the real property, the insurance fund as additional security was abandoned also, leaving it to be freely assigned by Philadelphia and Fidelity. We find this claim to be totally without merit.

In petitions for abandonment of the real estate filed by the insurance companies, they made no mention of the insurance. Nor did the abandonment order of the bankruptcy court contain any provision relating to the policies of any other collateral security. When the real property was ultimately sold on foreclosure of Jackson Park's second lien deed of trust, its bid was exclusively for real estate, and only real estate was sold.

It is clear that the trustee did not intend to abandon anything other than the equity in the land and building at 2007 Earhart Street when he moved to abandon the property. He was not aware of the insurance fund or its amount at that time. Although the trustee had inquired of the policies' worth, it was four months after abandonment that the cash surrender value was disclosed.<sup>6</sup> Without possessing full knowledge of all the facts regarding the value and amount of the insurance proceeds and without ever intending to abandon that property, the trustee may not properly be deemed to have surrendered his title to the insurance as a part of his abandonment of the real estate. In re Humeston, 83 F.2d 187 (2nd Cir. 1936).<sup>7</sup>

<sup>6</sup> See n. 3, supra.

<sup>7</sup> In the Humeston case, a mortgagee had appealed a bankruptcy referee's order forbidding abandonment of real estate. The mortgagee asserted that if the property had been abandoned, the abandonment would have carried with it the rents which the trustee had collected from the property. In affirming the action of the referee, and denying the mortgagee's contention, Judge Learned Hand said, "In the first place the trustee never meant to abandon the rents and as abandonment is always a matter of intent, he should not have been forced to abandon them in invitum when he was mistaken in the consequences of his act. Moreover, even if the trustee did abandon the equity, he did not include the rents; the two were not inseparably linked."

In furtherance of the lack of abandonment, this court enunciated in Textile Banking Company v. Widener, 265 F.2d 446 (4th Cir. 1959), that a decision of abandonment by the trustee in bankruptcy "is to be made in the exercise of a sound judgment under the approval of the Court." The bankruptcy judge in the instant case neither approved of abandonment of the insurance fund, nor did he have any knowledge of its existence.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>8</sup> Rule 608 of the Rules of Bankruptcy Procedure requires that, generally, abandonment of property by the trustee of the bankrupt must be with approval of the bankruptcy court, preferably by express order.

*816 Therefore, we agree that neither of the insurance companies nor Jackson Park have any present claim to this insurance fund. The fund no longer exists for the purpose of additional security for the first lien indebtedness.

The decision of the district court is accordingly affirmed.

AFFIRMED.

All Citations

547 F.2d 812

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-55

SINCE 1828

inaccurate

adjective

in·ac·cu·rate | \ (,)i-'na-kyə-rət , -k(ə-)rət \

Definition of inaccurate

: not accurate : faulty inaccurate information

 Other Words from *inaccurate*  Synonyms & Antonyms  More Example Sentences  Learn More about *inaccurate*

Keep scrolling for more

Other Words from inaccurate

inaccurately \ (,)i-'na-kyə-rət-lē , -k(ə-)rət- , -kyərt- \ adverb

Synonyms & Antonyms for inaccurate

Synonyms

- erroneous,
- false,
- incorrect,
- inexact,
- invalid,
- off,
- unsound,
- untrue,
- untruthful,
- wrong

Antonyms

- accurate,
- correct,
- errorless,
- exact,
- factual,
- precise,
- proper,
- right,
- sound,
- true,
- valid,
- veracious

Visit the Thesaurus for More

Examples of inaccurate in a Sentence

he claimed that the TV ratings were inaccurate because they didn't take into account all those viewers in health clubs the estimate is inaccurate, but will do for our purposes

Recent Examples on the Web The handful of point-of-care devices now on the market are frequently inaccurate.—
BostonGlobe.com, "Confirmed coronavirus cases in US hit 3 million and climbing." 9 July 2020 Regardless of the future trajectory of the COVID-19 pandemic, the post's primary claim is historically inaccurate.— Matthew Brown,

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-56

SINCE 1828

untrue

Definition of *untrue

1 : not faithful : disloyal

2 : not according with a standard of correctness : not level or exact

3 : not according with the facts : false

↓ Other Words from untrue ↓ Synonyms & Antonyms ↓ Example Sentences ↓ Learn More about untrue

Keep scrolling for more

Other Words from untrue

untruly \ ,ən-ˈtrü-lē  \ adverb

Synonyms & Antonyms for untrue

Synonyms

- erroneous,
- false,
- inaccurate,
- incorrect,
- inexact,
- invalid,
- off,
- unsound,
- untruthful,
- wrong

Antonyms

- accurate,
- correct,
- errorless,
- exact,
- factual,
- precise,
- proper,
- right,
- sound,
- true,
- valid,
- veracious

Visit the Thesaurus for More

Examples of untrue in a Sentence

He made untrue statements to the press. Her lover had been untrue.

Recent Examples on the Web The most glaring difference between the two posts is that Phariss does not disclose that the legend is untrue.— Devon Link, USA TODAY, "Fact check: No, Freddy Krueger was not a real 19th century serial killer," 12 July 2020 Defense Minister Ismail Sabri Yaakob has demanded that Al Jazeera apologize to Malaysians for untrue claims of discrimination and mistreatment of migrants.— Washington Post, "Malaysian police grill Al Jazeera over report on immigrants," 10 July 2020 Now a source tells People that Markle was frustrated by her inability to deny the untrue stories being written about her.— Abby Gardner, Glamour, "Meghan Markle Was Reportedly 'Actively Prevented' From Responding to Rumors," 8 July 2020 One, that's very likely untrue and two, ignorance is not an excuse.— Paul Daugherty, The Enquirer, "Doc's Morning Line: This MLB season will purely be about entertainment," 29 June 2020 Trump allies claimed protesters outside the event were preventing more supporters from coming inside, but reporters at the scene said that was untrue.— Caitlin Yilek, *Washington Examiner*, "Biggest mistake you can make in politics': Corey Lewandowski takes shot at Trump campaign over Tulsa turnout," 22 June 2020 This legal argument would be impossible to make if the Administration was claiming that Bolton's allegations are simply untrue.— Susan B. Glasser, *The New Yorker*, "John Bolton's Epic Score-Settling," 18 June 2020 We are supposed to feel bad for conservatives who complain that white people can't even get a job anymore because of affirmative action—clearly untrue—or that political correctness is stifling their freedom of thought and expression.— Libby Watson, *The New Republic*, "The Police Can't Shake Their Persecution Complex," 17 June 2020 The claim, which experts say is also often politically motivated, is untrue.— Matthew Brown, *USA TODAY*, "Fact check: The Irish were indentured servants, not slaves," 17 Mar. 2015

These example sentences are selected automatically from various online news sources to reflect current usage of the word 'untrue.' Views expressed in the examples do not represent the opinion of Merriam-Webster or its editors. Send us feedback.

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-57

SINCE 1828

subjugate

verb

Definition of subjugate

transitive verb

1 : to bring under control and governance as a subject : conquer

2 : to make submissive : subdue

↓ Other Words from *subjugate*
↓ Synonyms
↓ Did You Know?
↓ Example Sentences
↓ Learn More about *subjugate*

Keep scrolling for more

Other Words from subjugate

subjugation \ ,səb-ji-'gā-shən  \ noun subjugator \ 'səb-ji-,gā-tər  \ noun

Synonyms for subjugate

Synonyms

- conquer,
- dominate,
- overpower,
- pacify,
- subdue,
- subject,
- subordinate,
- vanquish

Visit the Thesaurus for More

Did You Know?

Since jugus means "yoke" in Latin, subjugate means literally "bring under the yoke". Farmers control oxen by means of a heavy wooden yoke over their shoulders. In ancient Rome, conquered soldiers, stripped of their uniforms, might actually be forced to pass under an ox yoke as a sign of submission to the Roman victors. Even without an actual yoke, what happens to a population that has come under the control of another can be every bit as humiliating. In dozens of countries throughout the world, ethnic minorities are denied basic rights and view themselves as subjugated by their country's government, army, and police.

Examples of subjugate in a Sentence

The emperor's armies subjugated the surrounding lands. a people subjugated by invaders
 Recent Examples on the Web It's time to stop local tyrants from massive government reach and subjugating us.—Lauren Mcgaughy, Dallas News, "The politics of protest: Organizers of anti-shutdown rallies in North Texas say efforts are homegrown," 24 Apr. 2020 But only one group of people is essentially subjugated by this kind of gratuitous violence.—Frank B. Wilderson Iii, Harper's Magazine, "Color Theory," 30 Mar. 2020 Harriot saw that they could not be effortlessly subjugated.—Stephen Greenblatt, The New Yorker, "Invisible Bullets: What Lucretius Taught Us About Pandemics," 16 Mar. 2020 Though Franz remains far from the frontlines, conscientious objection is its own sort of battle, one between the human spirit and outside forces that seek to subjugate it.—Barbara Vandenburgh, azcentral, "'A Hidden Life' a sublime moral meditation from Terrence Malick," 19 Dec. 2019 Had the unprecedented news media coverage of the events that transpired so influenced and subjugated the minds of prospective jurors that a fair trial could not have been accorded Nixon for a year, for two years—three years?—Matt

Ford, *The New Republic*, "Ex-President Trump on Trial," 18 June 2019 The United States has split into two tribes, and one of them must always feel itself to be subjugated and humiliated while the other's chief occupies the highest office in the land.— Kevin D. Williamson, *National Review*, "A Host of Squalid Oligarchs," 3 Oct. 2019 With the farming left to the second class or the subjugated, full citizens were free to participate in a unique military culture that made Sparta the most formidable polis in Hellas.— Steele Brand, *Time*, "What Ancient Rome and Greece Can Teach Us About the Modern American Military," 20 Sep. 2019 The West resolved to become a model liberal democracy, atoning for Nazi crimes and subjugating national interests to those of a post-nationalist Europe.— Katrin Bennhold, *New York Times*, "Germany Has Been Unified for 30 Years. Its Identity Still Is Not.," 9 Nov. 2019

These example sentences are selected automatically from various online news sources to reflect current usage of the word 'subjugate.' Views expressed in the examples do not represent the opinion of Merriam-Webster or its editors. Send us feedback.

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-58

656 F.Supp.2d 837
 United States District Court,
 N.D. Illinois,
 Eastern Division.

The BOEING COMPANY and the Boeing Company
 Retiree Health and Welfare Plan, Plaintiffs,

v.

Lori M. MARCH, William G. Takacs, and the International Union, United Automobile,
 Aerospace and Agricultural Implement Workers of America, UAW, Defendants.
 John R. Mayfield, Robert Mecleary, and Thomas J. Sheridan, on behalf of themselves and a similarly situated class, Plaintiffs,

v.

The Boeing Company and the Boeing Company
 Retiree Health and Welfare Plan, Defendants.

The Boeing Company and the Boeing Company Retiree Health and Welfare Plan, Counter-Claimants,

v.

John R. Mayfield, Robert Mecleary, and Thomas J. Sheridan, on behalf of themselves and a similarly situated class, Counter-Defendants.

Nos. 06 CV 4997 (lead), 07
 CV 3555 (closed member).

|
 Sept. 9, 2009.

Synopsis

Background: Participants in retiree health plan filed class action complaint against employer seeking, under the Labor Management Relations Act (LMRA) and the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (ERISA), a declaratory judgment that employer was obligated to provide health benefits to the class for the lives of the retirees and their surviving spouses, preliminary and permanent injunctive relief requiring employer to maintain the level of benefits established in applicable collective bargaining agreements (CBAs), and damages for any losses incurred as a result of benefit changes. Employer filed complaint against participants and union seeking a declaration that CBAs negotiated by employer and union did not vest lifetime health benefits for the class and that it had the right to modify, amend, or terminate class members' health benefits. Actions were consolidated, and the parties moved for summary judgment.

Holdings: The District Court, David H. Coar, J., held that:

Court had federal-question jurisdiction over employer's ERISA claims against participants; employer lacked standing to bring ERISA claims against union;

Court had subject-matter jurisdiction over employer's LMRA claims against union as an entity; employer lacked standing to bring claims for declaratory relief under LMRA against union as a representative of or in behalf of class of participants;

current CBA did not prohibit employer from making unilateral changes to benefits for participants that simply brought their benefits in line with those of active employees; and CBAs and plan documents did not provide for vesting of retiree health benefits.

Ordered accordingly.

Procedural Posture(s): Motion for Summary Judgment.

Attorneys and Law Firms

*840 Gregory Lee Curtner, Robert J. Wierenga, Miller, Canfield, Paddock and Stone, PLC, Ann Arbor, MI, Carrie Alice Herschman, Penny Nathan Kahan & Associates, Ltd., Chicago, IL, Richard W. Warren, Miller, Canfield, Paddock & Stone, PLC, Detroit, MI, for Plaintiffs.

Laurie Marie Burgess, Burgess Law Offices, P.C., Chicago, IL, for Defendants.

Robert A. Seltzer, Cornfield & Feldman, George Jackson, III, Mary Margaret Moore, Bryan Cave LLP, Chicago, IL, for Plaintiffs/Counter-Defendants.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

DAVID H. COAR, District Judge.

These two cases, which involve claims under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 and the Labor–Management Relations Act, were consolidated for all purposes. In both matters, the Boeing Company seeks a declaration that a series of collective bargaining agreements negotiated by Boeing with the UAW and Local 1069 (collectively, “the Union”) did not vest lifetime health benefits for the following class:

All former employees of Boeing who retired from Boeing Rotorcraft before March 18, 2006; who, as employees, were represented by the Union in collective bargaining; and who are participants in the Retiree Health Plan (i.e., those currently participating in The Boeing Company Retiree Health and Welfare Benefit Plan (Plan 502) and receiving pension benefits under the Local 1069 Non–Contributory Retirement Plan (Plan 005)); and their spouses, same-gender domestic partners, and eligible dependents, and surviving spouses and eligible dependents, who are participants *841 in the Retiree Health Plan, as described above.

Boeing also seeks a declaration that it has the right to modify, amend, or terminate class members' health benefits. On September 30, 2008, 2008 WL 4450309, this court certified the class for all pending claims in the consolidated litigation.

Represented by lead plaintiffs John R. Mayfield, Robert Meclary, and Thomas J. Sheridan, the class argues that Boeing does not have a unilateral right to modify class members' health benefits under the current collective bargaining agreement (CBA). Specifically, they protest the changes Boeing made to those benefits in September 2006 and July 2009. The UAW, for its part, also considers these changes to be a breach of the CBA and a violation of Boeing's obligation to provide lifetime benefits to retirees. It contends, however, that the court lacks subject-matter jurisdiction over Boeing's claims against the Union.

The UAW, the class, and Boeing each have filed motions for summary judgment. This opinion resolves the three motions.

I. JURISDICTION

Before delving into the substantive dispute, the court considers its jurisdiction over each claim in the consolidated litigation. The court begins this analysis by briefly identifying the parties and recounting the litigation's history.

A. Background

On one side of the dispute is the Boeing Company (“Boeing”) and the Boeing Company Retiree Health and Welfare Plan (“Retiree Health Plan”). Boeing is a Delaware corporation with its corporate headquarters and principal place of business in Chicago, Illinois. One of its divisions, Boeing Rotorcraft (which went by other names in the past) has manufacturing facilities in Ridley Township, Pennsylvania (“the Ridley plant”), and at the Wilmington Airport in New Castle County, Delaware (“the Wilmington Airport facility”). At all relevant times, Boeing has been an “employer” within the meaning of Section 3(5) of ERISA, 29 U.S.C. § 1002(5), and the “plan sponsor” of the Retiree Health Plan within the meaning of Section 3(16)(B) of ERISA, 29 U.S.C. § 1002(16)(B). The Retiree Health Plan, meanwhile, is an “employee welfare benefit plan” within the meaning of ERISA § 3(1), 29 U.S.C. § 1002(1), and it is administered primarily in Chicago, Illinois.

On the other side are the named plaintiffs in the Mayfield complaint, John Mayfield, Robert Meclary, and Thomas Sheridan (“Mayfield plaintiffs”); the named defendants in the March complaint, Lori March and William Takacs (“March defendants”); and the International Union, United Automobile, Aerospace & Agricultural Implement Workers (“UAW”) and UAW Local 1069 (collectively, the “Union”). The Mayfield plaintiffs all retired from Boeing Rotorcraft before March 6, 2006, and the court has ruled that they adequately represent the class certified for this consolidated litigation. The March defendants were served on September 23 and September 21, 2006, respectively; they have not participated further in the litigation.

The class representatives and members are “participants” in the Retiree Health Plan, within the meaning of Section 3(7) of ERISA, 29 U.S.C. § 1002(7). Mayfield retired in 1988;

Mecleary retired in 1999; and Sheridan retired in 2003. While employed at Boeing, Mayfield, Sheridan, and Mecleary were represented in collective bargaining by the UAW and UAW Local 1069, which are labor organizations as defined in Section 2(5) of the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C. § 152(5).

*842 On August 21, 2006, the UAW and four retirees filed a class action-complaint in the Eastern District of Michigan (the “Wood complaint”). They voluntarily dismissed that complaint on September 13, 2006—the day the Mayfield plaintiffs filed suit in the Middle District of Tennessee. Two days later, Boeing and the Retiree Health Plan filed its declaratory complaint against the retirees and the Union in the Northern District of Illinois. The Mayfield complaint was subsequently transferred to this court, and the two actions were consolidated.

Both the Wood and Mayfield complaints contained an allegation that Boeing's changes to the retirees' health benefits breach its contractual obligation to provide vested, lifetime health benefits to the class. And both complaints included an allegation that the changes breach Boeing's obligations under the Retiree Health Plan. Finally, both complaints sought, under the LMRA and ERISA, a declaratory judgment that Boeing is obligated to provide health benefits to the class for the lives of the retirees and their surviving spouses; preliminary and permanent injunctive relief requiring Boeing to maintain the level of benefits established in the applicable collective bargaining agreements; and damages plus interest for any losses incurred as a result of the benefit changes.

B. Analysis

There is no dispute that the court's jurisdiction over the class's amended complaint (formerly known as the Mayfield plaintiffs' amended complaint) is secure under section 301 of the LMRA, 29 U.S.C. § 185 and 28 U.S.C. § 1331, which empowers the court to resolve the class's claim for injunctive relief and damages for breach of a collective bargaining agreement. And the court has jurisdiction under sections 502(a)(1)(B), 502(a)(3), 502(e), and 502(f) of ERISA, 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(1)(B), 1132(a)(3), 1132(e) & 1132(f), and 28 U.S.C. § 1331, to resolve the class's claims for benefits due, to clarify the class's rights to future benefits under an employee welfare benefit plan, and to enjoin illegal changes to an employee welfare benefit plan. Jurisdiction over Boeing's declaratory complaint, however, is more complicated.

Boeing does not dispute that it lacks independent standing to sue under section 502(a)(3) of ERISA, 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(3), because it is not a participant, beneficiary, or fiduciary, as those terms are defined in the Act. Boeing argues, though, that the court has subject-matter jurisdiction over the ERISA claims in its declaratory complaint because the retirees and the Union could bring (and indeed have brought) a coercive action against Boeing. The Union and the retirees disagree: they both argue that Boeing may not use the Declaratory Judgment Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2201, to “piggyback” on their standing under ERISA. The Union argues, moreover, that Boeing has not shown that the Union would have standing to bring ERISA and LMRA claims on behalf of the retirees—in other words, that there is any standing to “piggyback” on. Finally, the Union contests whether Boeing may bring an LMRA claim without alleging a contract violation. The court addresses each of these contentions below.

1. “Coercive Action” Jurisdiction Over Boeing's ERISA Claims Against the Class

Relying primarily on the fact that Congress expressly limited private ERISA claimants to participants, fiduciaries, and beneficiaries, the Union argues that Boeing, an employer, may not subvert congressional intent by using the Declaratory Judgment Act to bring a claim it otherwise *843 would not have standing to pursue. In a separate brief, the class joins, without elaborating, the Union's argument. Boeing responds that its declaratory complaint raises a substantial federal question because the class and the Union could (and in fact did) file a lawsuit alleging a violation of section 502 of ERISA, and federal-question jurisdiction would exist over such claims. And Boeing contends that, if a plaintiff invokes the Declaratory Judgment Act, there is no requirement that it have “independent standing” to sue under ERISA. Because the court has separate reservations about its jurisdiction over Boeing's claims against the Union, the court focuses here on Boeing's ability to “piggyback” on the class's standing.

This court has jurisdiction over “all civil actions arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States.” 28 U.S.C. § 1331. And, under the well-pleaded complaint rule, a federal question must be evident on the face of the plaintiff's complaint. City of Beloit v. Local 643, 248 F.3d 650, 652 (7th Cir.2001). The court may exercise jurisdiction only “where it is specifically authorized by federal statute,” and the Declaratory Judgment Act itself does not provide independent jurisdictional footing. Newell Operating Co. v. UAW, 532 F.3d 583, 587 (7th Cir.2008). (citation and quotation marks omitted). Thus, in a declaratory-judgment action, the well-pleaded complaint rule requires the court to assess whether a federal question would be present had the declaratory defendant filed suit against the declaratory plaintiff over the subject matter in the complaint. City of Beloit, 248 F.3d at 652; Primax Recoveries, Inc. v. Sevilla, 324 F.3d 544, 548 (7th Cir.2003).

Because ERISA occupies the field of law related to employee-welfare plans, disputes regarding these plans generally arise under federal law. See Spitz v. Tepfer, 171 F.3d 443, 447 (7th Cir.1999); Ceres Terminals, Inc. v. Industrial Commission of Illinois, 53 F.3d 183, 185 (7th Cir.1995). There are, however, exceptions—disputes that concern an employee-welfare plan but do not “arise under” ERISA. Franchise Tax Board v. Construction Laborers Vacation Trust, 463 U.S. 1, 103 S.Ct. 2841, 77 L.Ed.2d 420 (1983), the main case upon which the Union relies, is an example.

In Franchise Tax Board, a state tax authority was trying to levy funds from an ERISA vacation-benefit plan, to apply the money to unpaid state income taxes. Id. at 3, 103 S.Ct. 2841. When the trustees refused to turn over the funds, the tax authority filed suit in state court, seeking (1) enforcement of the levy under state law, and (2) a declaration that the trustees of the plan had a duty under state law to relinquish levied funds from the trust, notwithstanding their obligations under ERISA. Id. at 14, 103 S.Ct. 2841. The trustees sought and obtained removal of the suit to federal court, but the Supreme Court concluded that there was no federal jurisdiction. The Court found applicable the Skelly Oil doctrine, which demands that “if, but for the availability of the declaratory judgment procedure, the federal claim would arise only as a defense to a state created action, jurisdiction is lacking.” Id. at 16, 103 S.Ct. 2841; see Skelly Oil Co. v. Phillips Petroleum Co., 339 U.S. 667, 70 S.Ct. 876, 94 L.Ed. 1194 (1950). Applying the Skelly Oil doctrine, the Court ruled that the state's claims did not arise under federal law because its suit for a declaration of the validity of its own tax-levying law, despite possibly conflicting federal law, “is sufficiently removed from the spirit of necessity and careful limitation” that defines the scope of federal jurisdiction. Franchise Tax Board, 463 U.S. at 21–22, 103 S.Ct. 2841. Thus, it did not *844 matter that the trustees could have brought in federal court a declaratory-suit (under ERISA, alone) to determine whether they could comply with the levy. Id. at 20, 26–27, 103 S.Ct. 2841. The state's complaint, even if it was certain to require interpretation of ERISA, did not arise under federal law.

The Union (and the class) contend that Franchise Tax Board thus requires that a declaratory plaintiff advancing claims under ERISA itself have standing to sue under the statute. One court in this circuit has so held, see Pabst Brewing Co. v. Corrao, 176 F.R.D. 552, 560–61 (E.D.Wis.1997), aff'd on other grounds, 161 F.3d 434 (7th Cir.1998), but other courts, in this circuit and elsewhere, have rejected this interpretation. See BorgWarner Diversified Transmission Prods v. UAW, No. 1:06-cv-058-LJM-WTL, 2006 WL 1328723, 2006 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 30101 (S.D.Ind. May 12, 2006); Bowe Bell + Howell Co. v. IMMCO Employees' Ass'n, No. 03 C 8010, 2004 WL 1244143, 2004 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 10264 (N.D. Ill. June 2, 2004); Prudential Ins. Co. of Am. v. Doe, 76 F.3d 206, 210 (8th Cir.1996). The interpretation relies in part on the following passage in Franchise Tax Board:

The express grant of federal jurisdiction in ERISA is limited to suits brought by certain parties as to whom Congress presumably determined that a right to enter federal court was necessary to further the statute's purposes. It did not go so far as to provide that any suit against such parties must also be brought in federal court when they themselves did not choose to sue.

463 U.S. at 21, 103 S.Ct. 2841 (citation and footnote omitted) (emphasis in original).

This court does not read this passage, or Franchise Tax Board generally, to set forth an independent standing requirement for declaratory suits under ERISA. Rather, in this passage the Supreme Court was making a point in service of its broader holding: In enacting ERISA, Congress did not intend for federal courts to have exclusive jurisdiction over any case involving an employee-welfare plan where a participant, beneficiary, or fiduciary was sued, irrespective of whether the claims presented in the complaint have a federal character. The jurisdictional deficiency that the Court addressed in this passage was not that the declaratory plaintiff did not have independent standing to sue under ERISA (although that foreclosed a different jurisdictional theory), but that the controversy presented in the complaint—a dispute about the validity of a state tax-levying regulation—was not within the carefully circumscribed ambit of federal jurisdiction.

The Seventh Circuit, for its part, has not directly commented on the Union's "independent standing" argument. In its most recent examination of jurisdiction under ERISA and the Declaratory Judgment Act, the court did not have occasion to consider it. See Newell Operating Co. v. UAW, 532 F.3d 583 (7th Cir.2008). The Seventh Circuit has explained, however, that in the context of a declaratory complaint a federal court's jurisdiction "comes from the underlying controversy, not the particular party initiating suit." Ameritech Benefit Plan Comm. v. CWA, 220 F.3d 814, 819 (7th Cir.2000). Thus, it has found jurisdiction lacking for declaratory-judgment complaints where the presumed suit by the declaratory defendant would arise under state law. See Primax Recoveries, Inc. v. Sevilla, 324 F.3d 544, 548–49 (7th Cir.2003) (declaratory complaint did not present federal question where, had it been filed by declaratory defendant, it would be to force endorsement of a check for reimbursement of funds recovered from a third party under state law); *845 Commercial Nat'l Bank of Chicago v. Demos, 18 F.3d 485, 490 (7th Cir.1994) (declaratory complaint did not present federal question because potential suit by declaratory defendant would raise only state-law question of ownership of accounts). And the court recently held that jurisdiction was secure over a declaratory complaint arising under a federal statutory provision that authorized suit by the declaratory defendant, but not the declaratory plaintiff. See Wisconsin v. Ho-Chunk Nation, 512 F.3d 921, 935 (7th Cir.2008) (finding jurisdiction secure because declaratory-defendant, an American-Indian tribe, could bring suit against declaratory-plaintiff, a state, under 25 U.S.C. § 2710(d)(7)(A)(i)).

Applying these broad principles here, the court concludes that Boeing may use the Declaratory Judgment Act to "piggyback" on the class's standing to sue under ERISA because the underlying dispute arises under federal law: whether an employer may make unilateral changes to retirees' benefits under an ERISA welfare plan is entirely a federal question, requiring interpretation only of federal statutes and federal common law, and not state law. And there is no dispute that the court would have jurisdiction under ERISA to resolve the class's presumed complaint against Boeing. Accordingly, the court's jurisdiction over the live controversies in Boeing's declaratory complaint against the class is secure.

2. Jurisdiction Over Boeing's ERISA Claims Against the Union

Boeing's ERISA claims against the Union present a different complication. In Boeing's amended complaint, the company and the plan administrator seek a declaration, enforceable against the Union on behalf of the class, that Boeing and the plan administrator may modify, amend or terminate the class's health insurance benefits, and that the September 2006 and July 2009 changes did not violate ERISA. The Union contends that the court lacks jurisdiction over these claims because Boeing has not shown that the Union has standing to represent retirees (or other members of the class). Boeing responds that the Union could bring ERISA claims on behalf of retirees based on its associational standing, and it notes that the Union in fact did so in the Wood complaint.

Under some circumstances, a union may sue on behalf of its members in its "associational capacity." UAW v. Brock, 477 U.S. 274, 281–82, 106 S.Ct. 2523, 91 L.Ed.2d 228 (1986). Thus, while generally only participants, beneficiaries, and fiduciaries may bring claims under ERISA, 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a), the Seventh Circuit has held that a union may sue under ERISA on behalf of plan participants—its members—in an associational capacity. See Southern Illinois Carpenters Welfare Fund v. Carpenters Welfare Fund, 326 F.3d 919, 922 (7th Cir.2003). A due-process problem arises, though, when associations do not "represent adequately the interests of their injured members." Brock, 477 U.S. at 290, 106 S.Ct. 2523.

The Union contends that Boeing has not shown that the Union would represent adequately the interests of the retirees. First, it notes that, as "members in retired status," retirees enjoy the same privileges of membership as active employees, but they lack critical voting rights: under Article 6, Section 19 of the UAW Constitution, retirees are not allowed to vote on the ratification of contracts, the election of stewards and committeepersons, and in decisions related to strikes. The Union contends that, particularly because the retirees are not empowered to choose the individuals who would be responsible for representing their interests in this lawsuit, it cannot be an adequate representative. Second, the Union notes that, because it is *846 primarily responsible for its active employees, their interests will trump the retirees' interests in the case of conflict.

The Union has a point. See generally Allied Chem. & Alkali Workers of Am. v. Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., 404 U.S. 157, 92 S.Ct. 383, 30 L.Ed.2d 341 (1971). After all, the Union is not the retirees' exclusive bargaining representative. See id. For this reason, the Seventh Circuit has held, in the context of a union's motion to compel arbitration of retirees' grievances, that a union cannot represent retirees without a showing that the retirees assent to such representation. Rossetto v. Pabst

Brewing Co., 128 F.3d 538, 540 (7th Cir.1997); see also United Steelworkers of Am. v. Cooper Tire & Rubber Co., 474 F.3d 271, 282–83 (6th Cir.2007) (same). The Rossetto court reasoned that, because retirees are not employees included in a “bargaining unit” under the National Labor Relations Act, the union is not their exclusive bargaining representative, and they may deal with their former employer on their own. 128 F.3d at 539–40. Because the union in that case had not shown that the retirees assented to its representation, the Seventh Circuit concluded that it lacked standing to seek arbitration of their grievances. Id. at 541.

Boeing insists that proof of the retirees' assent is unnecessary here because the Union already brought suit on behalf of the retirees (the Wood complaint), and, Boeing contends, there is no obligation to make such a showing in the context of a declaratory complaint. The court disagrees with both contentions. First, the fact that the Union has purported to represent the retirees says nothing about the retirees' assent. It's true that Retiree Chapter President Jerry Patrone, a Local 1069 official who served on the 1986 bargaining committee, testified that he would be comfortable with the Union representing the retirees' interests in this lawsuit, and Joseph Sinni, a Union representative, testified that the Union is “fully supportive” of the retirees' claims that they have lifetime benefits and would “stand behind” them. But even if the Union's stance in this case would be sympathetic to the retirees' own perspectives, the retirees cannot be bound to it without their consent. Cf. Rossetto, 128 F.3d at 540. Second, this court would have jurisdiction over the presumed suit by the Union on behalf of the retirees only if the retirees consent to its representation. Thus, the Union's standing is critical to establish the jurisdictional basis for Boeing's declaratory claims under ERISA. And Boeing, as the proponent of federal jurisdiction, bears the burden of proving this jurisdictional fact by a preponderance of the evidence. Meridian Sec. Ins. Co. v. Sadowski, 441 F.3d 536, 543 (7th Cir.2006).

The court concludes that Boeing has not shown, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the retirees would assent to the Union's representation in this matter. Indeed, Boeing has not presented any evidence of such assent. Accordingly, this court lacks jurisdiction over Boeing's declaratory action under ERISA against the Union. But the court notes that, even if its jurisdiction were secure over the claims, it would as a matter of discretion decline to entertain them. See 28 U.S.C. § 2201(a); Newell, 532 F.3d at 590 (“A district court has ‘wide discretion’ to decline to hear actions that pursue only declaratory relief.”). The retirees are represented here, a class has been certified, and the Union's participation is largely unnecessary. Accordingly, the court dismisses Boeing's declaratory claims under ERISA against the Union.

3. Jurisdiction Under the LMRA

Boeing also asks the court to interpret the CBAs under the LMRA; it filed *847 claims for declaratory relief against the class and the Union (both as an entity in itself and as a representative of the retirees in an associational capacity). The Union contests the court's jurisdiction over these claims on the ground that Boeing has not alleged a violation of any contract.

In the Wood complaint, the Union alleged that Boeing had violated the CBAs. Boeing now seeks a declaration that its actions have not been violations, and that if it were to make further changes it would not violate the CBAs. The Union argues that, because Boeing does not contend that there has been a violation, its complaint does not fall within the strict jurisdictional contours of the LMRA. Boeing responds that it does not need to allege that it violated the CBA to invoke the court's jurisdiction; it is enough that the Union has asserted as much, and has publicly declared that position by filing the Wood complaint.

The court concludes that its jurisdiction is secure. Section 301 of the LMRA states:

Suits for violation of contracts between an employer and a labor organization representing employees in an industry affecting commerce as defined in this chapter ... may be brought in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the parties, without respect to the amount in controversy or without regard to the citizenship of the parties.

29 U.S.C. § 185(a). Although the statute authorizes federal courts only to decide suits “for violation of contracts,” it would be absurd to require that Boeing plead that it is violating the CBA in order to proceed with its declaratory complaint. It is enough that the underlying controversy concerns whether there has been, or will be, a violation of the CBAs.

The nature of the controversy here distinguishes it from Textron Lycoming Reciprocating Engine Div. v. UAW, 523 U.S. 653, 657, 118 S.Ct. 1626, 140 L.Ed.2d 863 (1998), the case upon which the Union relies. There the union sought a declaration that its collective bargaining agreement with an employer was invalid. Specifically, the union alleged that the employer had fraudulently induced it to sign the agreement by concealing its plans to subcontract work to non-union workers. Textron, 523 U.S. at 655, 118 S.Ct. 1626. The union did not allege, however, that either it or the employer had ever violated the terms of their agreement. Id. For this reason, the Supreme Court concluded that the LMRA did not confer subject-matter jurisdiction over the union's claim. Id. at 661–62, 118 S.Ct. 1626. The Court explicitly stated, however, that “a declaratory judgment plaintiff accused of violating a collective-bargaining agreement may ask a court to declare the agreement invalid” under the LMRA. Id. at 658, 118 S.Ct. 1626. The problem in that case was that no one contended that there had been a violation.

The Seventh Circuit has ruled that Textron did not foreclose jurisdiction in a similar case, J.W. Peters, Inc. v. Bridge, Structural & Reinforcing Iron Workers, 398 F.3d 967 (7th Cir.2005). There the employer was accused of violating the terms of a collective bargaining agreement by attempting to terminate the collective bargaining relationship without providing proper notice, and it sought declaratory relief from this alleged violation. Although the employer did not allege that it had violated the agreement, the Seventh Circuit described the suit as “for violation of contracts” within the meaning of § 301. Id. at 973. And more recently in Newell, the Seventh Circuit concluded that an employer's suit for a declaration that amendments to retirees' health benefits did not *848 violate the CBA fell within the “jurisdictional contours” of LMRA § 301. Newell, 532 F.3d at 590. The court explained that the suit “involves the alleged violation of the collective-bargaining agreement and therefore falls within the plain terms of LMRA § 301.” Id. The Union has not explained why these cases do not control the outcome here, and the court sees no reason why they would not.

There is, however, a lingering standing issue for Boeing's claim against the Union under the LMRA and the Declaratory Judgment Act. Boeing has sued the Union both as a representative of—or “in behalf of”—the retirees, and the Union again challenges whether it may be sued in this capacity. It notes that LMRA § 301(b) provides that a “labor organization may sue or be sued ... in behalf of the employees whom it represents in the courts of the United States,” 29

U.S.C. § 185(b) (emphasis added), but retirees, the Union contends, are not “employees whom it represents.” The Union also notes, again, that the retirees have not assented to its representation.

For the same reasons the court concluded that it lacked jurisdiction over Boeing's ERISA claims against the Union as a representative of the retirees, the court agrees. And, in the alternative, the court declines to exercise jurisdiction because the class can adequately represent the retirees' interests with respect to the LMRA claims in this suit. This does not, however, dispose of all of Boeing's LMRA claims against the Union. Unlike ERISA, the LMRA explicitly provides that a union may sue or be sued “as an entity.” 29 U.S.C. § 185(b). And it is “axiomatic” that a party who negotiated a contract on behalf of a third party has standing to sue to enforce that contract. See Rossetto, 128 F.3d at 539; Frontier Communications of New York, Inc. v. Int'l Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, No. 07 Civ. 10327, 2008 WL 1991096, at *2–*4 & n. 3, 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 37213, at *8–*12 & n. 3 (S.D.N.Y. May 6, 2008) (collecting cases). Accordingly, the court concludes that its jurisdiction is secure for Boeing's declaratory-judgment claim under the LMRA against the Union as an entity itself.

With these jurisdictional knots untied, the court moves on to examine the merits of the class's complaint, Boeing's declaratory complaint against the class, and Boeing's claim for declaratory relief under the LMRA against the Union.

II. FACTS<sup>1</sup>

A. Retiree Health Coverage under the Current CBA

Between 1956 and 2005, the Union participated in collective bargaining on behalf of hourly employees at the Ridley plant and the Wilmington Airport facility, negotiating a series of successive collective bargaining agreements (“CBAs”) on their behalf. Since the 1971–74 CBA, every CBA through the current CBA has provided health insurance benefits to retirees in Article XVI.

1. The Current CBA

The Union and Boeing entered into the most recent CBA (“current CBA”) on March 18, 2006. Article XVI, Section 5 of the current CBA says, “the Company will provide medical coverage for the duration *849 of this agreement for retirees, their spouses, same-gender domestic partner, and eligible dependents ....”

For active employees and employees who retire during the term of the agreement (“future retirees”), the current CBA makes changes from the previous CBA to medical plan options, deductibles, copayments and benefit payment levels. The current CBA does not apply these changes to current retirees.

The current CBA also includes a change in Article XVI, Section 1, entitled “Eligibility and Effective Date of Coverage,” which says:

The provisions of Article XVI of this Agreement shall be amended as described below for employees in active service ... on the dates of the amendments .... The provisions of the Group Medical Plans as they apply to current employees or to employees who retiree [sic] during the term of this Agreement not specifically modified below will remain in full force and effect.

(emphasis added). In the previous CBA, the last sentence of Section 1 did not limit its application to active employees and future retirees; it said, simply, “[t]he provisions of the Group Benefit Plans not specifically modified below will remain in full force and effect.” The parties dispute whether they changed the language because there was no need to say that current retirees’ benefits would remain in full force and effect because no modifications were made to those benefits (the class’s view), or to reflect that current retirees’ benefits could in fact be changed during the course of the agreement (Boeing’s view).

2. Negotiation History for the Current CBA

During the negotiations for the current CBA, neither Boeing nor the Union proposed any changes to health benefits for current retirees, including changes to the medical plans, prescription-drug programs, deductibles, or prescription-drug copayments. Boeing did, however, propose language limiting the provision of medical coverage (a paragraph in Article XVI, Section 6) only to future retirees. The corresponding paragraph in the 2002–05 CBA applied such medical coverage to then-current retirees. Boeing also proposed language that would limit this provision of coverage to “employees on the active payroll, on layoff, or on a leave of absence on December 31, 1992,” rather than “eligible retirees who commenced receiving retirement benefits prior to January 1, 1993, as well as employees on the active payroll, on layoff, or on leave of absence on December 31, 1992,” as it stated in the previous CBA.

Bruce Hanson, a Boeing senior manager of union pay and benefits, who participated in the negotiations for the current CBA, testified that the reason for Boeing’s proposal was “to be specific that our negotiations were for employees who retired during the term of the collective bargaining agreement and the medical benefits available to them upon retirement during the term of the agreement.”

By letter dated November 22, 2005, Boeing responded, as relevant here, to the Union’s inquiry about these proposed changes as follows: “As we explained on October 17, 2005, we are negotiating benefits for only those employees who will retire under the terms of this agreement. The language deleted refers to employees [retired] prior to the effective date of this agreement. Any changes to benefits for current retirees are not a subject of these negotiations.” Boeing reiterated this response in a letter to the Union dated February 17, 2006.

By letter dated February 13, 2006, the Union stated the following regarding medical *850 benefits for current retirees: “Please not[e] that the Union continues to propose no changes to current retirees as proposed on 7/15/05, however, we do have open proposals on future retirees and we continue to wait for answers and information concerning the Company’s proposals on future retirees.”

By letters dated February 27, 2006, and March 10, 2006, Boeing again proposed different language that would limit the promise of medical coverage in Article XVI, Section 6 to “eligible employees who retire after the ratification date and prior to the termination date of this Agreement during the term of this agreement,” and only “employees on the active payroll, on layoff, or on a leave of absence on December 31, 2006.”

The Union opposed Boeing’s proposals. In response, close to the end of the negotiation process, Boeing agreed to leave the language in the current CBA the same as it was written in the 2002–05 CBA, with the exception of the inclusion of the phrase “same-gender domestic partner.” Both Thomas A. Easley, Boeing's Director of Labor Relations, who participated in the negotiations for the current CBA, and Joseph Sinni, who led the Union's negotiations, confirmed these facts.

On or about March 10, 2006, Boeing presented its best and final offer to the Union, which consisted of over one hundred pages. Easley's cover letter stated:

All Articles, Appendices, and Attachments of the 2002–2005 Agreement have been reviewed in detail by the Company and Union negotiators. Except as agreed to by the negotiators or set forth in this offer letter, all Articles, Appendices, and Attachments of the 2002–2005 Agreement will remain unchanged. This constitutes The Boeing Company's entire proposal and is contingent upon the explicit understanding that only those provisions which have been agreed to by the parties during these negotiations will be considered as part of this Agreement. All others will be considered as “of the table.”

(emphasis added).

During a “side bar” discussion, Easley told Sinni and Local 1069 President John DeFrancisco that Boeing “would be implementing and making changes to the existing, the current retirees,” meaning “those retirees that had retired prior to the expiration of the agreement.”

3. Details of Coverage

Historically, Boeing has issued insurance booklets, summary plan descriptions and benefit updates (also called “summaries of material modifications”) that describe the benefits provided under the retiree medical plan. The insurance booklets and SPDs, as amended by the summaries of material modifications, include separate provisions for deductibles, co-payments and coinsurance, and contributions. Until 1989, descriptions of the medical benefits provided to retirees were included in the same booklet describing active employee benefits.

Two current SPDs, as later amended by the July 2006 Benefit Information Update for Retired Employees, describe the terms of the retiree medical plans effective July 1, 2000 for (a) individuals who retired before February 1, 1996, and (b) those who retired on or after February 1, 1996. The first is titled “Boeing Retiree Medical Plans Summary Plan Description, Retired Production and Maintenance Employees—UAW Local 1069/2000 Edition (Retired before February 1, 1996),” and the second is titled “Boeing Retiree Medical Plans Summary Plan Description, Retired Production and Maintenance Employees—UAW Local No. 1069/2000 Edition (Retired on or after *851 February 1, 1996);” both SPDs will be referred to as “Retiree SPDs.” Both Retiree SPDs state that the Plan “is provided according to Article XVI of the collective bargaining agreement that became effective September 2, 1999” between Boeing and the Union.

Article XVI, Section 11 of the current CBA states, in relevant part: “The details of the ... Medical, Dental and Vision Care coverages are set out in the Health Care Plans and Disability, Life, and Accident Plans Summary Plan Descriptions ....” (The parties dispute whether this refers only to the SPDs for active employees; the court will assume for present purposes that it refers to all of the 2000 SPDs, including the Retiree SPDs.)

The Retiree SPDs contain a “General Plan Provisions” section that states, “Although [Boeing] fully intends to continue the plans, it reserves the right (subject to the provisions of any applicable collective bargaining agreement) to change, modify, amend, or terminate them at any time.” They also contain a “Termination of Coverage” section that states, “Coverage for an eligible retired employee, spouse, or surviving spouse is subject to the terms of the collective bargaining agreement between the Company and the collective bargaining representative ... and any Company rights to amend or terminate the plan.”

The 2000 SPD for pre-February 1, 1996 retirees (and their eligible dependents) provides medical benefits for both non-Medicare eligible and Medicare-eligible participants under the “Traditional Medical Plan.” This includes the following deductibles, copayments and benefit payment levels:

- Annual Deductible: per person—$75; families of three or more—$225.

- Emergency Room Copayment: $25.
- Prescription Drug Copayments: pharmacy—$2 generic and $5 brand-name; mail service program—$0 generic and $5 brand-name.
- Covered services of network providers generally paid in full; covered services of nonnetwork providers paid at 70 percent of usual and customary charges in location where there are network providers, and at 100 percent of usual and customary charges where there are no network providers of any type.
- Mental Health Treatment: Covered inpatient, partial hospital or intensive outpatient services obtained from provider referred by Boeing Helpline paid in full.
- Substance Abuse Treatment: Covered inpatient, partial hospital, residential, intensive outpatient, or outpatient services obtained from provider referred by Boeing Helpline paid in full.

The 2000 SPD for post-February 1, 1996 (and their eligible dependents) provides for non-Medicare eligible participants the option of either the Traditional Medical Plan or a coordinated care plan. The latter option, which is like an HMO, covers services provided by network and nonnetwork providers. For Medicare-eligible participants, the SPD provides the option of the Traditional Medical Plan or a Medicare+Choice HMO. The Traditional Medical Plan for these retirees includes the same prescription-drug copayments, mental-health treatment coverage, and substance-abuse treatment coverage as for pre-February 1, 1993 retirees, with the following deductibles, copayments and benefit payment levels:

- Annual Deductible: per person—$125; families of three or more—$375.
- Emergency Room Copayment: $50.
- Covered services of network providers generally paid in full; covered services of nonnetwork providers paid at 60 percent of usual and customary charges in location where there are network providers, *852 and at 100 percent of usual and customary charges where there are no network providers of any type.

B. Boeing's Unilateral Changes to Retiree Health Benefits, 2006–2009

In July 2006, Boeing notified the retirees that it was modifying their health insurance benefits on September 1, 2006. The changes were described in a summary of material modifications titled “Benefit Information Update, Summary of Benefit Plan Changes and Clarifications, Retired Employees Formerly Represented by UAW 1069.” Annual deductibles for all retirees enrolled in the Traditional Medical Plan or the Medicare Traditional Indemnity Plan increased to $300 per individual and $600 or $900 per family. Other changes included: different provider options, including Aetna HMO, Aetna Medicare Advantage HMO, Keystone 10 HMO, Keystone Medicare Advantage HMO, and Regence Medicare Traditional Indemnity Plan; the office-visit copayment increased to $15; out-of-pocket maximums increased to $2000 per individual and $4000 per family; the emergency-room deductible increased to $50; and the co-insurance provisions changed, requiring retirees to pay at least 5% of their medical costs. Additionally, under all four HMOs, nonnetwork services and supplies are not covered except for emergency care, which is a change from the coordinated care plans they replaced. The Aetna HMO and the Keystone 10 HMO have higher office visit copayments than the coordinated care plans, which covered, with some limitations, office visits and most covered services from nonnetwork providers. Finally, the 2006 Benefits Update provides medical benefits for same-gender domestic partners of current retirees, and specifies that “effective September 1, 2006, Company contributions for the Medicare Part B premium reimbursement will be frozen at $88.50 per month for eligible retirees and dependents.”

The changes to medical plan options, deductibles, copayments and benefit-payment levels set forth in the July 2006 Benefits Update generally track those set forth in the current CBA for active employees and future retirees. And, in a notice to participants, the Retiree Health Plan stated in relevant part:

As a result of a new collective bargaining agreement, you can enroll in a new retiree medical plan or make certain dependent changes ...

Traditional Medical Plan benefits and monthly contributions will change on September 1, 2006. These changes are the result of a new collective bargaining agreement .... Also, note that for Medicare-eligible retirees, the Traditional Medical Plan will change its name to the Medicare Traditional Indemnity Plan.

Aetna and Keystone plan changes-if you're not eligible for Medicare. For retirees not eligible for Medicare, the Aetna and Keystone coordinated care plans will become HMO plans beginning September 1, 2006....

Aetna and Keystone plan changes-if you are eligible for Medicare. The Aetna and Keystone Medicare Supplement HMO plans won't be available after August 31, 2006. This change applies to a small number of retirees who were previously notified by mail. After August 31, the only plan available in the area in which you live will be the Medicare Traditional Indemnity Plan.

Same-gender domestic partners are eligible for coverage.

(emphasis in original).

C. Boeing's Unilateral Changes to Retiree Benefits, 1987–2002

The recent changes are not the only unilateral changes that Boeing has made *853 to retirees' health benefits. In the past, the changes generally tracked whatever amendments the parties negotiated for active employees' medical benefits.

1. 1987 Changes

From 1971 through 1986, the CBAs provided that retiree health insurance would be provided at Boeing's expense. During this period, the Plan generally did not require retirees to pay annual deductibles or a percentage of their incurred covered expenses (“coinsurance”), and there were no changes to the retirees' benefits.

During negotiations for the 1986 CBA, Boeing and the UAW agreed on a revised medical plan for active employees that introduced a preferred provider organization (“PPO”) that required, for the first time, annual deductibles ($75 per individual and $225 per family) and coinsurance provisions. The parties also amended the language in Article XVI to provide that active employees would be provided benefits at no cost only until December 31, 1986.

Effective January 1, 1987, Boeing applied those same changes to retirees. Additionally, the retirees were required to make a $25 copayment for each visit to a hospital emergency room that did not result in an immediate inpatient admission, and the Plan only paid a percentage of the charges for certain covered services and expenses (the coinsurance provisions).

And in 1989, after soliciting the Union's comments, Boeing issued a new benefit booklet for retired production and maintenance employees, which described the new deductible, co-payment and coinsurance provisions. Prior to the issuance of this booklet for retirees, descriptions of their medical benefits were included in the same booklet describing active employee benefits.

Retiree Chapter President Jerry Patrone, a Local 1069 official who served on the 1986 bargaining committee, testified that retirees had expressed that they were unhappy about the changes. He testified that retirees complained to him about the imposition of deductibles, which they believed broke a promise by Boeing. Meanwhile, Local 1069 President DeFrancisco, who testified in his Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 30\(b\)\(6\) capacity on behalf of Local 1069, stated that the imposition of a $75 deductible per individual and $225 deductible per family in 1987 to then-existing retirees was a breach of the Company's commitment to those retirees. And in a letter dated March 10, 1987, the UAW informed Boeing that there might be litigation over a proposed CBA because of a dispute over the terms and conditions of the medical plan. But neither the UAW nor the retirees filed a lawsuit contesting the 1987 changes to retiree health benefits.

2. 1993–1994 Changes

On January 1, 1993, pursuant to a new CBA, Boeing began requiring retirees and surviving spouses “to contribute $100 a month for spouse medical coverage, if the spouse is eligible for coverage under another employer-sponsored plan as an active employee and waives such coverage.” (The UAW and Mayfield plaintiffs dispute whether spouses previously were required to pay this cost.) That same year, the out-of-pocket maximum for coinsurance provisions increased from $500 per individual and $1000 per family in 1989 to $1000 per individual and $2000 per family. Boeing also reduced the portion of the charges it would pay for health-care services from providers who were in the preferred network service area but who were not members of the network, from 80% to 70%. Finally, Boeing required retirees to pay copayments of $2 for generic drugs and $5 for brand-name drugs, with no copayments for mail-order generic drugs and $5 copayments *854 for mail-order, brand-name drugs. Neither the Union nor the retirees sued over these changes.

In August 1994, Boeing issued a revised Retiree Medical Plan booklet describing the Plan's features as of January 1, 1993. The foreword to the 1993 Retiree Medical Plan booklet states that “Although the Company fully intends to continue the Plan, it reserves the right to change, modify, amend or terminate it at any time.” And the “Plan Continuation” section of the 1993 Retiree Medical Plan booklet states, “The Company intends to continue this Retiree Medical Plan indefinitely, but reserves the right to change, amend, modify or terminate the Plan at any time.”

3. 1996 Changes

According to minutes from a meeting during the 1996 negotiations, Boeing's Director of Labor Relations, Al Mansi, expressed the position that, even if he put in writing a statement that current retirees' benefits would not change, his “hands will not be tied. We will treat [current retirees] just as we are doing now. We believe we can make unilateral rights [sic]. We can do that in the future. We will not give you something that says we won't make changes.” Subsequently, Boeing required individuals retiring on or after February 1, 1996 who were participating in the Traditional Medical Plan to pay annual deductibles of $125 for individuals and $375 for families.

4. 2002–2005 CBA

Boeing did not make unilateral changes during the term of the 2002–05 CBA. During negotiations for that CBA, Boeing told the Union that “there [would be] no change to existing medical benefits for current or future retirees for the life of this Agreement. Benefits, co-pays, etc. will remain the same as those in place during the term of the 1999 Collective Bargaining Agreement.” The letter with that assurance was penned by Virginia J. Sauve, Director of Labor Relations for Boeing, and it was not included in the Articles, Appendices or Attachments of the 2002–05 CBA. Boeing did not make this assurance during negotiations for the current CBA.

D. Vesting of Benefits

Article XVI, Section 3 of the 1971–74 CBA was the first CBA to provide benefits to retirees. In contrast to the same section's language providing coverage for active employees “for the duration of this Agreement,” the promise of coverage for retirees contains no durational limit:

Effective December 1, 1968 a semi-private plan will be furnished by the Company at no cost to the employee for coverage of himself and his dependents for the duration of this Agreement. The Company will provide Hospital–Medical–Surgical benefits for retirees, their spouses and eligible dependents, surviving spouses and eligible dependents .... This will be a full service plan under Blue Cross and Blue Shield on a prevailing fee basis. Where coverage can be integrated with Medicare–Part B, it will be so integrated and the Company will continue the payment of the Medicare Part B premium.

(emphasis added). Similarly, Article XVI of the CBAs effective February 13, 1975, December 19, 1977, October 17, 1980, and October 31, 1983, explicitly states that medical benefits for active employees and their dependents will be furnished “for the duration of this Agreement,” but there is no similar limitation for retirees and their dependents. Article XVI of the CBA effective Sept. 2, 1999 was the first to state that the Company will provide medical coverage “for the duration of this agreement” for retirees and their dependents, *855 and each CBA since then has included this language.

Each CBA also contains an article stating that the entire agreement remains in effect only up to a specific point in time. The cover page of the current CBA and Article XXIII state that it lasts from September 2, 2005 “until midnight at the close of October 1, 2009, and thereafter for yearly periods unless notice is given in writing ... of [the Company or the Union's] desire to modify, amend or terminate the Agreement.” The UAW has admitted that this clause applies to each provision in the CBA. And it has in the past provided notice of its intent to terminate the then-current CBAs—in 1971, 1995, 2002, and 2005. The Union also has provided notice of its intent to modify the Retirement Plan Agreement in 1971, 1995, and 2002; to modify the Supplemental Unemployment Plan in 1971; and to modify the Layoff Benefit and Security Program Agreement in 1995.

James Donahue was a UAW International Representative for Local 1069 between 1984 and 2002. He testified that, in sending notice to Boeing of the Union's intent to terminate a then-current CBA, he would do so “with the intentions of renegotiating a total collective bargaining agreement”—a completely new agreement. He further explained that his intention was to terminate the CBA “as it related to the active employees in those areas which were noted.” According to

Donahue, the Union would not terminate the Retirement Plan Agreement and the Layoff Benefit and Security Program Agreement because the Union “[is] not in the business of terminating pensions” and it did “not want to terminate [the layoff security benefit] program.”

Former Local 1069 President Forte and Local 1069 President and Local 1069 Rule 30\(b\)\(6\) designee DeFrancisco testified that the Union distributes “highlight memoranda” to tout significant achievements that were made during negotiations, and to explain the nature and extent of members' benefits. The Union has never signaled to its members by way of “highlight memoranda” that it has secured vested, lifetime health benefits for retirees.

Both Donahue and DeFrancisco admitted that there is no language clearly stating Boeing's commitment to provide vested lifetime health insurance benefits in the CBAs. Patrone and DeFrancisco testified, moreover, that they were not aware of any Union benefit proposal seeking, in writing, Boeing's promise to provide vested, lifetime retiree insurance benefits. The UAW notes, however, that Donahue, the UAW International Representative who negotiated the 1986, 1989, 1992, 1996, 1999 and 2002 CBAs, testified that, although he never submitted a written proposal for vested benefits, the UAW negotiated for lifetime health benefits in discussions throughout the bargaining history. Donahue admitted, however, that if he could draft the agreements without anyone disagreeing with his choice of words, he would use language stating that eligible retirees have vested benefits for the duration of their lives that cannot be changed. He said he did not negotiate for such language with employers because “[if] there was an understanding and it had always been adhered to and the obligation met, there was no need; or, because a company would not want to include something along those lines within the framework of the collective bargaining agreement because it would precipitate problems with the other labor unions they dealt with.”

Sinni, the UAW 30\(b\)\(6\) designee, negotiated the 2005 CBA. He could not point to any language in the CBAs establishing that medical benefits for retirees are vested *856 for life. And he testified that, “when the circumstances are right,” it would be ideal to spell out in writing whether health insurance benefits were vested and could not be changed. But he stated that, throughout the years, Boeing and the Union “infer[red] or impl[ied]” that the benefits were for life, during negotiations. Sinni testified that this implicit understanding was passed down by “word of mouth” within the Union, and from company representatives. And, according to Sinni, any negative changes to retiree benefits—including instituting annual deductibles and increasing prescription-drug copayments—“[w]ould be a violation of the promise made to that retiree, which we say is a lifetime vested benefit.” According to Sinni, Easley and Hanson (of Boeing) had agreed with him that the benefits were vested, although they disagreed about whether they could make changes.

III. LEGAL STANDARD ON SUMMARY JUDGMENT

A party seeking summary judgment has the burden of showing, through “pleadings, depositions, answers to interrogatories, and admissions on file, together with the affidavits, if any,” that there are no genuine issues of material fact that would prevent judgment as a matter of law. Fed.R.Civ.P. 56\(c\). On a motion for summary judgment, courts “must construe all facts in the light most favorable to the non-moving party and draw all reasonable and justifiable inferences in favor of that party.” Allen v. Cedar Real Estate Group, LLP, 236 F.3d 374, 380 (7th Cir.2001).

The nonmoving party, in turn, may not rest on the allegations in its pleadings or conclusory statements in affidavits; it must support its contentions with evidence that would be admissible at trial. Celotex Corp. v. Catrett, 477 U.S. 317, 322–23, 106 S.Ct. 2548, 91 L.Ed.2d 265 (1986); see Albiero v. City of Kankakee, 246 F.3d 927, 932 (7th Cir.2001); Fed.R.Civ.P. 56\(c\). To avoid summary judgment, the nonmovant must do more than raise a “metaphysical doubt” as to the material facts. See Wolf v. Northwest Ind. Symphony Soc'y, 250 F.3d 1136, 1141 (7th Cir.2001) (citation and quotation omitted). And “a complete failure of proof concerning an essential element of the nonmoving party's case necessarily renders all other facts immaterial.” Celotex, 477 U.S. at 323, 106 S.Ct. 2548.

IV. ANALYSIS

The heart of the parties' dispute is whether Boeing may make unilateral changes to the class's health benefits. The court first will consider whether such changes are prohibited under the current CBA. Because the court concludes that the current CBA does not restrict Boeing's right to make changes, like those here, that simply bring the retirees' benefits in line with those of active employees, the court also will consider whether the changes are prohibited because the retirees' benefits are vested at a particular level.

A. Legitimacy of Boeing's Unilateral Changes to Retirees' Health Benefits Under the Current CBA

The Seventh Circuit has held that retiree health benefits, unlike pensions, do not vest as a matter of law. See Bland v. Fiatallis N. Am., 401 F.3d 779, 783 (7th Cir.2005). Thus, absent agreement to the contrary, employers generally are free to modify or terminate retiree welfare plans. See Curtiss-Wright Corp. v. Schoonejongen, 514 U.S. 73, 78, 115 S.Ct. 1223, 131 L.Ed.2d 94 (1995); Cherry v. Auburn Gear, 441 F.3d 476, 481 (7th Cir.2006); Bland, 401 F.3d at 783. To determine whether a contrary agreement was reached in the current CBA, the *857 court reads the document as a whole, "so that all its parts will be given effect." Murphy v. Keystone Steel & Wire Co., 61 F.3d 560, 565 (7th Cir.1995). And it interprets the current CBA "in light of the concrete circumstances in which it was written." Id. A contract is ambiguous only if it is susceptible to more than one reasonable interpretation. Id. "The reasonableness of a proposed interpretation of contractual language requires consideration of the contract as a whole, including terms incorporated by reference." Chicago Dist. Council of Carpenters Pension Fund v. K & I Construction, Inc., 270 F.3d 1060, 1069 (7th Cir.2001).

According to the class, two sections of the current CBA operate together to bar Boeing's unilateral changes. First, Article XVI, Section 5 ("Medical Benefits"), which provides in relevant part:

Medical benefit costs for eligible retirees and dependents will be paid as follows:

1. For eligible retirees who commenced receiving retirement benefits prior to January 1, 1993, as well as employees on the active payroll, on layoff, or on leave of absence on December 31, 1992, the Company will provide medical coverage for the duration of this agreement for retirees, their spouses, same-gender domestic partner, and eligible dependents, surviving spouses and eligible dependents of the following categories, except as described in Paragraph 5 below:

- a. Of a pensioner who receives Company pension.
- b. Of an active employee who died while eligible to retire.

Where coverage can be integrated with Medicare—Part B for retirees, it will be so integrated. The Company will freeze the payment of Medicare—Part B premium of $88.50.

...

4. Company contributions will be made only if such retiree authorizes deduction of the required contributions balance of such costs, if any, from the monthly retirement benefit payment or makes timely monthly payments of the required contributions.

5. The retired employee is required to contribute $100 a month to enroll a dependent spouse or same-gender domestic partner for Retiree Medical coverage if the spouse or same-gender domestic partner is eligible for coverage under another employer sponsored plan as an active employee and waives such coverage. In no case will the retired employee be required to contribute more than the greater of the amount required in Paragraph b. above, or this paragraph, to enroll such spouse or same-gender domestic partner.

Second, Article XVI, Section 11 ("Miscellaneous") of the CBA, which provides in relevant part:

- a. The details of the Group Life, Accidental Death and Dismemberment, Short-Term Disability, Survivor Income Benefit, Medical, Dental and Vision Care coverages are set out in the Health Care Plans and Disability, Life, and Accident Plans Summary Plan Descriptions which will be available to all participants.

The class contends that, through the latter section, the current CBA incorporates by reference the Retiree SPDs. And, by incorporating the SPDs, argues the class, the parties intended to fix the benefit levels in those SPDs for the duration of the agreement.

Boeing, for its part, does not dispute that under the current CBA it must provide medical coverage to retirees for the duration of the agreement. But Boeing contends that the CBA does not evidence *858 any agreement about the retirees' cost-sharing obligations, let alone an agreement that benefits must remain fixed at the levels provided in the 2000 SPDs.

1. Boeing's Ability to Make Changes, Absent Incorporation of the Retiree SPDs

Before addressing the class's incorporation argument, the court considers whether there is any other language in the current CBA restricting Boeing's right to change the retirees' benefits. Section 5 provides that the retirees will receive "medical coverage" for the duration of the agreement. And in that section the parties also agreed about enrollment costs for current retirees' spouses and domestic partners, as well as Boeing's share of the Medicare Part B premium—features of coverage that would persist until the CBA expires. But there is otherwise no agreement about the type of coverage to which the retirees are entitled for the duration of the CBA—nothing about, for example, plan options, deductibles, coinsurance, and copayments. And there is no language providing that retirees would receive coverage under the terms of a particular plan.

Meanwhile, whereas in the 2002 CBA the parties had agreed in Article XVI, Section 1 that "the Group Medical Plans not specifically modified below will remain in full force and effect," in the current CBA the same clause says, "The provisions of the Group Medical Plans as they apply to current employees or to employees who retiree [sic] during the term of this Agreement not specifically modified below will remain in full force and effect." Applying the principle of expressio unius est exclusio alterius, this strongly implies that in the current CBA the parties did not intend to limit Boeing's ability to modify current retirees' benefits. But it need not prove that much: it is enough that the current CBA does not include an agreement that the retirees' plans would "remain in full force and effect," given the presumption that retiree benefits do not vest. Accordingly, absent incorporation of the Retiree SPDs, there is no language in the current CBA restricting Boeing's right to change current retiree benefits.

2. Incorporation of the Retiree SPDs

The class argues that the parties incorporated by reference the Retiree SPDs in Article XVI, section 11 by providing that the "details of the Group ... Medical ... coverages are set out in the Health Care Plans ... Summary Plan Descriptions." Boeing responds that section 11 does not even refer to the Retiree SPDs, let alone incorporate them.

The court concludes that both parties' interpretation of section 11 are reasonable. As both parties acknowledge, section 11 clearly refers to one or more of the health and welfare SPDs from 2000. But the words it uses—"the Health Care Plans ... Summary Plan Descriptions"—does not identify by name any of the possible SPDs to which it could refer. The active employees' health-care SPD is titled "Health and Welfare Plans SPD," and the retirees' health-care SPDs each are titled "Retiree Medical Plan SPD," with different subtitles. Thus, because "Health Care Plans" could be read as an umbrella term for all of the available healthcare plans, including those for the retirees, one could reasonably interpret section 11 to refer, at least in part, to the Retiree SPDs. At the same time, because section 11 does not explicitly reference the Retiree SPDs by name, Boeing's interpretation also is reasonable.

Assuming, for present purposes, that the parties intended the clause to refer to the Retiree SPDs, it is also both reasonable to infer an intent to incorporate the terms of the Retiree SPDs and reasonable not to *859 infer such intent. The CBA says that the "details" of "coverages" are "set out" in the SPDs. Given the earlier promise of "coverage"—with its scope undefined—one could reasonably infer from this language an intent that the "details" in the SPDs provide such definition. At the same time, the parties did not use explicit language of incorporation—they did not say, for example, that those SPDs are "hereby made part of this agreement." This is in contrast to other, explicit language of incorporation in the current CBA: Article VI, Section 3, for example, states that "[a] list of all job classifications, job family groupings, and proper labor grades as existing on the effective date of this Agreement are outlined in the appendices and are made a part of this Agreement." In short, section 11 is ambiguous.

The problem for the class is that, even assuming that the current CBA incorporates the Retiree SPDs, it does not reflect an agreement that the benefits remain fixed at the levels provided in those documents. First, even if the benefits outlined in the Retiree SPDs could define the scope of the retirees' "coverage," it doesn't naturally follow that those benefits must be provided for the duration of the CBA. Section 5 assures the fact of coverage for the duration of the agreement; it does not provide that the details of coverage are fixed for that term. Meanwhile, section 11 says that the details of coverage are in the SPDs, but it is silent about whether those details are fixed for the duration of the agreement. This is in contrast to the contract in Pabst Brewing Co. v. Corrao, 161 F.3d 434 (7th Cir.1998), where the duration clause applied both to the fact of coverage and to the "details" of the plan: “For the term of this Agreement, the Employer, at its sole cost and expense, shall provide major medical, health, dental, sickness and accident, and life insurance benefits in accordance with and as summarized in Appendix A attached.” Id. at 435–36. The Seventh Circuit ruled that the effect of this was to read along with each detail in “Appendix A” the phrase “for the duration of the CBA.” Here, it would stretch the bounds of the parties’ expressed intent to apply Section 5’s durational term to each provision of a document incorporated in Section 11.

More importantly, the Retiree SPDs both contain reservation of rights clauses, which provide that, “[a]lthough The Boeing Company (“the Company”) fully intends to continue this plan, it reserves the right (subject to the provisions of any applicable collective bargaining agreement) to change, modify, amend, or terminate it at any time.” They also contain a clause that says, “coverage for an eligible retired employee, spouse, or surviving spouse is subject to the terms of the [CBA] between the Company and collective bargaining representative ... and any Company rights to amend or terminate the plan.” Thus, if the Retiree SPDs are incorporated into the current CBA, then Boeing’s reservation of its right to modify the plan is incorporated, too. See UAW v. Rockford Powertrain, Inc., 350 F.3d 698, 704–05 (7th Cir.2003) (“The CBA’s incorporation of the Insurance Agreement necessarily incorporated the reservation of rights clause found in the plan description.”) Because this fully incorporated agreement would then have to be read to effectuate each of its terms, see Murphy, 61 F.3d at 565, it would say this: “Boeing shall provide medical coverage to current retirees, their spouses, same-gender domestic partners, and dependents for the duration of the agreement, but it reserves the right to change, modify, amend, or terminate the Retiree plans at any time.” Thus, Boeing may make changes without violating the current CBA, even if the Retiree SPDs are incorporated. Indeed, Boeing could terminate *860 the current Retiree plans, as long as it continued to provide medical coverage for the retirees—access to the active employees’ plan, for example, could suffice.

3. Nullification of the Promise of Coverage

Having concluded that Boeing may make changes to the retirees’ benefits under the terms of the current CBA, a question remains: To what extent could Boeing make changes before breaching its obligation to provide coverage for the duration of the agreement? The class’s concern is that, through unilateral reductions ad infinitum of the retirees’ benefits, Boeing could effectively “cover” nothing—an understanding of Boeing’s power that the parties clearly did not reach. So what is the baseline?

The class contends that the absence of negotiations about changes to retiree benefits, combined with the promise of coverage (despite Boeing’s initial efforts to exclude retirees entirely from the current CBA) show that the parties intended the scope of coverage to remain the same—i.e., at the level provided in the Retiree SPDs—and that this would least upset the parties’ expectations. But the absence of negotiated changes is not the same as a relinquishment of Boeing’s right to change the retirees’ benefits. As explained supra, the default rule is that Boeing may make changes to retiree benefits at any time. See Curtiss–Wright, 514 U.S. at 78, 115 S.Ct. 1223; Cherry, 441 F.3d at 481; Bland, 401 F.3d at 783. In the current CBA, the parties restricted this right only to the extent that Boeing must provide “coverage”; but there is no evidence that they understood “coverage” to mean, exclusively, “the benefit levels in the Retiree SPDs.”

Meanwhile, the court does not agree with Boeing’s contention that a promise of coverage reflects no agreement about cost-sharing. Boeing relies on Judge Easterbrook’s dissent in Bidlack v. Wheelabrator Corp., 993 F.2d 603 (7th Cir.1993) (en banc), but his point—that there is a difference between a promise of coverage and a promise of free medical care—is non-responsive here. See id. at 615 (Easterbrook, J., dissenting). The retirees do not contend that Boeing must provide free medical care; they recognize their own cost-sharing obligations. The extent, not the existence, of those obligations is at issue.

Senn v. United Dom. Indus., 951 F.2d 806 (7th Cir.1992), the other case upon which Boeing relies, is more instructive. There the retirees were promised “coverage” under an applicable CBA. Id. at 810. They argued, however, that their former employer could not require them to pay the cost difference between an HMO plan and a conventional health insurance plan (a new cost-sharing arrangement introduced in the applicable CBA) because they had vested rights to benefits. The Seventh Circuit disagreed, explaining that because the retirees’ rights were not vested, they were not entitled to a specific type of coverage at a particular cost. Id. at 816. Therefore, the cost-sharing arrangement that the employer and union had negotiated could apply to the retirees without violating the promise of coverage.

Similarly although here the term “coverage” is not explicitly defined, the benefits provided to active employees would certainly qualify. First, in the current CBA the parties used the word to describe the medical benefits for active employees (“The current medical benefits coverage for eligible employees and dependents is continued subject to the following coverage revisions ...”). Since the parties understood that arrangement to be “coverage,” it follows that changes to retiree benefits *861 that put them in line with those of active employees would not nullify the promise of “coverage.” Second, this understanding is consistent with the history of Boeing's unilateral changes, which reflects a trend: in 1987, 1993, and 1996, the company applied changes negotiated for active employees to current retirees. Although the retirees and the Union initially protested these changes, they never sued, and their later silence implies an acquiescence to Boeing's assertion of this right. Meanwhile, although Boeing did not make changes during the term of the 2002 CBA, that year Boeing had explicitly agreed that it would not change the retirees' benefits, and there was no similar agreement during negotiations for the current CBA—indeed, Boeing explicitly asserted its right to change retiree benefits. Accordingly, the September 2006 and July 2009 changes, because they simply extend features of the active employees' benefits to the retirees, are well within Boeing's rights, and they do not nullify the promise of coverage.

B. Vesting of Benefits

The final issue is whether the retirees' health benefits were vested under the terms of another agreement, in which case they are “forever unalterable.” Bland, 401 F.3d at 784. If so, Boeing's unilateral changes in September 2006 and July 2009 would violate that agreement.

“ERISA does not require the vesting of welfare benefits,” so if the retirees' health benefits “vest at all, they do so under the terms of a particular contract.” Pabst Brewing Co. v. Corrao, 161 F.3d 434, 439 (7th Cir.1998); Barnett v. Ameren Corp., 436 F.3d 830, 832 (7th Cir.2006); UAW v. Rockford Powertrain, 350 F.3d 698, 702 (7th Cir.2003). “[B]ecause employers are not legally required to vest benefits, the intention to vest must be found in clear and express language.” Bland, 401 F.3d at 784 (quotation marks omitted). The parties need not use the word “vest,” nor must they “state unequivocally” that the employer is creating rights that will not expire. Id. But without language suggesting that benefits are vested, “the presumption is that benefits terminate when a collective bargaining agreement ends.” Cherry, 441 F.3d at 481. “This presumption can be rebutted by extrinsic evidence only if an ambiguity exists in the contractual language or if there is a yawning void that cries out for an implied term.” Id. (internal quotation marks, ellipses and citation omitted).

In Rossetto, the Seventh Circuit summarized the vesting rules as follows:

1. If a collective bargaining agreement is completely silent on the duration of health benefits, the entitlement to them expires with the agreement, as a matter of law ... unless the [retirees] can show by objective evidence that the agreement is latently ambiguous ....
2. If the agreement makes clear that the entitlement expires with the agreement, as by including such a phrase as ‘during the term of this agreement,’ then, once again, the [retirees lose] as a matter of law unless [they] can show a latent ambiguity by means of objective evidence ....
3. If there is language in the agreement to suggest a grant of lifetime benefits, and the suggestion is not negated by the agreement read as a whole, the [retirees] [are] entitled to a trial. Of course, if the agreement expressly grants such benefits, the [retirees] [are] entitled, not to a trial, but to judgment in his favor ....
4. If the [retirees are] entitled to a trial by reason of either a patent or a latent ambiguity, the normal rules of evidence will govern the trial, and *862 so the parties will not be limited at trial to presenting objective evidence of meaning.

Rossetto v. Pabst Brewing Co., 217 F.3d 539, 547 (7th Cir.2000).

Here, the class points to no language within the CBAs or plan documents providing for the vesting of retiree health benefits. Representatives of the union confirmed in their testimony, moreover, that they were aware of no such language. There also is no language that benefits would continue beyond the term of each CBA, let alone for the rest of the retirees' (or their survivors') lives. Meanwhile, in the Retiree SPDs, Boeing explicitly reserved its right to change, modify, or terminate the retirees' medical plan. And as far back as 1993, in the “Plan Continuation” section of the 1993 Retiree Medical Plan booklet, it states, “The Company intends to continue this Retiree Medical Plan indefinitely, but reserves the right to change, amend, modify or terminate the Plan at any time.”

Without any clear expression of an intent to vest the retirees' benefits, the class relies on what it argues is a patent ambiguity in the 1971–1983 CBAs: these agreements include a durational limitation for active employees' medical coverage, but not for the retirees. Specifically, these CBAs say only that “the Company will provide [health] benefits to [current retirees] ....” And they argue that, as a result, there is a latent ambiguity in the CBAs beginning in 1999, which provide that medical coverage for both active employees and retirees would last for the duration of the agreement.

“When an ambiguity is apparent just from reading the contract without having to know anything about how it interacts with the world—then the contract has what is called a patent, or intrinsic, ambiguity, and evidence is admissible to cure it.” Cherry, 441 F.3d at 482 (quotation marks and internal citations omitted). A latent ambiguity, on the other hand, can arise in a contract that is “clear on its face” (to the uninformed reader), but is in fact susceptible to more than one interpretation when applied to a particular dispute. Rossetto, 217 F.3d at 542.

Here, the 1971–1983 CBAs are ambiguous regarding the duration of retiree benefits, but they cannot reasonably be interpreted to vest those benefits for life. Normally their silence would trigger a presumption that the benefits expire at the end of each agreement. But because these CBAs explicitly limit the duration of active employees' benefits to that term—but do not do so for the retirees' benefits—one could reasonably infer, under the principle of expressio unius est exclusio alterius, that the parties did not intend to limit the duration of the retirees' benefits to that term. This ambiguity, though, does not help the retirees. At most, the retirees could show from the ambiguous language that the parties intended the benefits to continue beyond each agreement; that is not the same as an intent to vest the benefits for life. The language is far weaker than any Seventh Circuit case that has found a promise of vested benefits: it does not state that the benefits are “vested,” “shall continue,” are provided “for life” or “until death,” and it does not suggest that they last beyond the retirees' death. See generally Bland, 401 F.3d at 785–86 (collecting examples of strong, ambiguous, and weak vesting language).

Because the parties never expressed a clear intent to vest retirees' benefits, the parties' later introduction of durational limits does not create a latent ambiguity. Rather, any ambiguity about the duration of benefits in the earlier CBAs was resolved in the 1999 CBA, which explicitly limited retiree medical coverage to the term of the CBA, regardless of when the *863 retirees had retired. See Pabst Brewing Co. v. Corrao, 161 F.3d 434, 441–42 (7th Cir.1998) (affirming dismissal of retiree's lifetime benefit claims and finding no ambiguity where the clause “for the term of the agreement” was added to the 1984 and subsequent CBAs, but was absent from prior agreements.) The parties' intent, moreover, has been reaffirmed in each successive CBA, which include this durational limitation.

The class's evidence of a contrary intent is extremely limited. There is only the testimony of union representatives that the parties had “an implicit understanding” that the benefits were vested. But their own subjective view is not enough to establish a latent ambiguity. See Corrao, 161 F.3d at 442. Proof that their interpretation is reasonable must come from objective facts, and “[e]vidence is not objective when it is the self-serving testimony of one party to the contract as to what the contract, clear on its face, ‘really’ means, contrary to what it seems to mean.” Rossetto, 217 F.3d at 546. In any event, the representatives' testimony as to their subjective belief is contradicted both by their agreement to apply durational limitations to the retirees' medical coverage and by their failure to challenge Boeing's unilateral changes in 1987, 1993, and 1996.

Accordingly, the court concludes that Boeing's September 2006 and July 2009 changes do not violate any agreement to provide vested benefits to retirees, as no such agreement was reached.<sup>2</sup>

V. CONCLUSION

For these reasons, the UAW's motion for summary judgment is GRANTED in part: the court DISMISSES for lack of jurisdiction Boeing's ERISA and LMRA claims against the UAW on behalf of the retirees, and the court DENIES the motion as to Boeing's LMRA claims against the UAW as an entity; Boeing's motion for summary judgment against the class and the UAW is GRANTED with respect to those claims over which the court has exercised jurisdiction; and the class's motion for summary judgment is DENIED as moot. It is so ordered.

All Citations

656 F.Supp.2d 837, 187 L.R.R.M. (BNA) 2028, 47 Employee Benefits Cas. 2258, 74 A.L.R.6th 697

Footnotes

- 1 The facts presented here are undisputed, unless otherwise noted. Although each side has labeled some facts “disputed,” if the basis for the dispute is not supported by competent evidence, the court treats the fact as admitted. See N.D. III. L.R. 56.1(a), (b)(3)(C). Similarly, if a fact is unsupported by competent evidence, the court omits it. On its own motion, the court also omits facts that are not relevant to this decision.
- 2 Because the court concludes that the retirees are not entitled to vested, lifetime health benefits, it declines to consider Boeing's argument that pre-1993 retirees' claims for vested benefits are time-barred.

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-59

 KeyCite Yellow Flag - Negative Treatment
Distinguished by Gentle Wind Project v. Garvey, D.Me., January 3, 2006

378 F.3d 71

United States Court of Appeals,
First Circuit.

UNITED STATES of America, Appellee,

v.

Vincent A. CIANCI, Jr., Frank E. Corrente, and Richard E. Autiello, Defendants, Appellants.

Nos. 02–2158, 02–2159, 02–
2165, 02–2166, 02–2288.

|
Heard Oct. 9, 2003.

|
Decided Aug. 10, 2004.

Synopsis

Background: Defendants were convicted in the United States District Court for the District of Rhode Island, Ernest C. Torres, Chief Judge, of various offenses, including Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) conspiracy, and government's forfeiture motion was granted, 218 F.Supp.2d 232. Defendants appealed.

Holdings: The Court of Appeals, Stahl, Senior Circuit Judge, held that:

[1] indictment was sufficient to apprise defendants of nature and extent of the charges;

[2] municipal entities could be part of associated-in-fact enterprise charged under RICO;

[3] evidence was sufficient to support RICO conspiracy convictions;

[4] evidence of a connection between defendants' conduct and federal funds received by city police department was not required to support conviction under federal bribery statute;

[5] evidence was sufficient to support Hobbs Act attempted extortion and Hobbs Act extortion conspiracy convictions;

[6] taped statements of alleged coconspirator were admissible under coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule; and

[7] defendant's taped statements to undercover FBI agent was inadmissible under state of mind exception to hearsay rule.

Affirmed in part.

Howard, Circuit Judge, filed opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part.

West Headnotes (43)

[1] Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Indictment and information

Indictment charging defendants with conspiracy to operate Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) enterprise whose purpose included enrichment of one of the defendants, as city's mayor, and to protect the power and assets of its members was sufficient to apprise defendants of nature and extent of the charges; indictment delineated members of the enterprise, roles of defendants in the enterprise, purposes and goals of the racket, and ways in which defendants used other members of the enterprise, specifically, municipal entities that they controlled as part of conspiracy, to further those purposes and goals. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961\(4\).

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[2] Indictments and Charging Instruments Purpose of Accusation

Indictments and Charging Instruments  Informing defendant of nature of charge; notice

Indictments and Charging Instruments  Protection against subsequent prosecution

Indictments and Charging Instruments  Nature, Elements, and Incidents of Offenses in General

Indictment is sufficient if it, first, contains the elements of the offense charged and fairly informs a defendant of the charge against which he must defend, and, second, enables him to plead an acquittal or conviction in bar of future prosecutions for the same offense.

7 Cases that cite this headnote

- [3] Indictments and Charging Instruments  Necessity and sufficiency of using statutory language

It is generally sufficient that an indictment set forth the offense in the words of the statute itself, as long as those words of themselves fully, directly, and expressly, without any uncertainty or ambiguity, set forth all the elements necessary to constitute the offense intended to be punished.

8 Cases that cite this headnote

- [4] Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations  Informal entities; associations-in-fact

In cases involving an alleged associated-in-fact Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) enterprise, the existence of the charged enterprise does not follow, ipso facto, from evidence that those named as the enterprise's associates engaged in crimes that collectively may be characterized as a pattern of racketeering activity. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq.

5 Cases that cite this headnote

- [5] Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations  Informal entities; associations-in-fact

Criminal actors who jointly engage in criminal conduct that amounts to a pattern of “racketeering activity” do not automatically thereby constitute an association-in-fact Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) enterprise simply by virtue of having engaged in the joint conduct; something more must be found, something that distinguishes RICO enterprises from ad hoc one-time criminal ventures. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq.

6 Cases that cite this headnote

- [6] Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations  Governmental entities

Municipal entities could be part of associated-in-fact enterprise charged under Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO); city itself was not alleged to have formed an unlawful intent, and instead common purpose was imputed to the city by way of the individual defendants' control, influence, and manipulation of city for their illicit ends. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

- [7] Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations  Governmental entities

Municipal entities can be part of an unlawful purpose association-in-fact enterprise charged under Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) so long as those who control the entities share the purposes of the enterprise. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

- [8] Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations  Informal entities; associations-in-fact

Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) does not require intentional or purposeful behavior by corporations charged as members of an association-in-fact. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

- [9] Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations  Governmental entities

Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) enterprise animated by an illicit common purpose can be comprised of an association-in-fact of municipal entities and human members when the latter exploits the former to carry out that purpose. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq.

6 Cases that cite this headnote

[10] Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations 🔑 Governmental entities

Evidence in Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) conspiracy trial was sufficient to establish that alleged schemes were carried out by alleged racketeering enterprise that included municipal entities as associates; evidence indicated that individual defendants, as city's mayor and chief of administration, exercised substantial control over the municipal entities named as members of the enterprise, and used their positions and influence to sell municipal favors on a continuing basis. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[11] Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations 🔑 Continuity or relatedness; ongoing activity

Evidence was sufficient to establish pattern of racketeering activity in Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) conspiracy prosecution in which municipal entities were named as associates in alleged racketeering enterprise; evidence indicated that there were nine schemes that lasted over nine years, and defendants, including city's mayor, were the beneficiaries of most if not all of the nine alleged schemes, which were designed to line mayor's pockets as well as to maintain his political power in city. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq.

[12] Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations 🔑 Continuity or relatedness; ongoing activity

Two or more Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) predicate acts form a "pattern" if they are (1) related and (2) amount to or pose a threat of continued criminal activity. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[13] Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations 🔑 Continuity or relatedness; ongoing activity

Predicate acts are "related" for Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) purposes if they have the same or similar purposes, results, participants, victims, or methods of commission, or otherwise are interrelated by distinguishing characteristics and are not isolated events. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[14] Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations 🔑 Time and duration

Continuity of the pattern of racketeering may be shown in Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) prosecution by either a series of related predicates extending over a substantial period of time, or a pattern of more limited duration where the racketeering acts themselves include a specific threat of repetition extending indefinitely into the future or the predicate acts or offenses are part of an ongoing entity's regular way of doing business. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[15] Conspiracy 🔑 Elections and political activity, offenses concerning Evidence was sufficient to establish existence of conspiracy between three individual defendants in Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) conspiracy prosecution in which municipal entities were named as associates in alleged racketeering enterprise; evidence indicated that defendants, including city's mayor and its chief of administration, participated in schemes designed to obtain contributions to mayor's political fund. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq.

[16] Conspiracy 🔑 Racketeering conspiracies in general

Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) conspiracy does not require proof that a defendant himself committed or agreed to commit the two predicate acts requisite for a substantive RICO offense; rather, he must intend to further an endeavor which, if completed, would satisfy all of the elements of a substantive criminal offense, but it suffices that he adopt the goal of furthering or facilitating the criminal endeavor. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq.

14 Cases that cite this headnote

[17] Conspiracy 🔑 Racketeering conspiracies in general

Jury's conclusion in special verdict form that government failed to prove certain predicate acts underlying substantive Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) counts against three defendants did not preclude defendants' conviction for RICO conspiracy; evidence relating to those acts that were found unproven by the jury was still available to the jury in its evaluation of the overall RICO charge. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[18] Criminal Law 🔑 General Verdict
Criminal Law 🔑 Verdict or findings

Ordinarily, when a jury returns a general verdict of guilty on a substantive Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) count and one of the predicate acts is later found to be legally insufficient by a reviewing court, the conviction must be overturned where it is impossible to determine whether two legally sufficient predicate acts support a RICO conviction. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[19] Criminal Law 🔑 Special verdict or findings

Special verdict form in Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) prosecution allows juries to specifically identify the predicates for the general verdict. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[20] Criminal Law 🔑 Province of jury or trial court

In reviewing a criminal conviction for sufficiency, Court of Appeals does not assess the credibility of the witnesses, which is the sole function of the trier of fact.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[21] Indictments and Charging Instruments 🔑 Conspiracy, racketeering, and money laundering

District Court did not constructively amend indictment in Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) conspiracy prosecution in which municipal entities were named as associates in alleged racketeering enterprise when it stated, in denying defendants' motion to dismiss, that defendants were accused of conducting affairs of city through pattern of racketeering activity, where court instructed jury on association-in-fact enterprise theory alleged in indictment.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[22] Indictments and Charging Instruments 🔑 Amendment of Indictment in General

Amendment of indictment occurs when the charging terms of the indictment are altered, either literally or in effect, by the prosecutor or the court after the grand jury has returned the indictment.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[23] Criminal Law 🔑 Amendment
Indictments and Charging Instruments 🔑 Prejudice to defendant

Amending the indictment is considered prejudicial per se and thus demands reversal.

[24] Indictments and Charging*Instruments ➔ Material variance

“Variance” arises when the proof at trial depicts a scenario that differs materially from the scenario limned in the indictment.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[25] Criminal Law ➔ Indictment or information in general

Variance requires reversal only when it is both material and prejudicial, for example, if the variance works a substantial interference with the defendant's right to be informed of the charges laid at his doorstep.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[26] Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations ➔ Instructions

Jury instructions in Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) conspiracy prosecution did not permit conviction for performing acts without control over some part of the “direction” of the enterprise; jury was instructed that defendant must have “played some part in the operation or management of the enterprise.” 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[27] Conspiracy ➔ Obstructing justice, bribery, and perjury

Evidence of a connection between defendants' conduct and federal funds received by city police department was not required in prosecution for conspiracy to violate federal bribery statute based on defendants' alleged participation in scheme to require “campaign contributions” from those who wished to remain on the police department's tow list. 18 U.S.C.A. § 666(a)(1)(B).

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[28] Conspiracy ➔ Obstructing justice, bribery, and perjury

Evidence that defendant who held no authority to make police academy admission decisions told victims that they had not made any “contributions” and that they needed to come up with $5,000 in cash if they wanted their son to be accepted into police academy was sufficient to establish that defendant passed bribe along to public official, or conspired to do so, as required to support federal bribery conspiracy conviction; evidence permitted inference that the $5,000 was to be political “contribution” that would serve as ticket of admission when passed along to someone with authority over admission decisions. 18 U.S.C.A. § 666(a)(1)(B).

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[29] Commerce ➔ Federal Offenses and ProsecutionsExtortion ➔ Federal offenses

Evidence that, but for victim's agreement to pay defendant, a city official, for favorable intervention on his behalf with school department, there was a realistic probability that city contractor, an entity engaged in interstate commerce and whose lease agreement would be a transaction affecting interstate commerce, would have leased space in another city was sufficient to establish that defendant's conduct had de minimis effect on interstate commerce, as required to support Hobbs Act attempted extortion and Hobbs Act extortion conspiracy convictions. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1951(a).

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[30] Commerce ➔ Federal Offenses and ProsecutionsConspiracy ➔ Extortion, threats, stalking, and harassmentExtortion ➔ Federal offenses

Evidence that, as result of defendant's scheme, a city contractor that was engaged in interstate commerce was deprived of $1,100 in order to facilitate payments to which it was entitled was sufficient to establish that defendant's conduct had de minimis effect on interstate commerce, as required to support Hobbs Act attempted extortion and Hobbs Act extortion conspiracy convictions. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1951\(a\).

2 Cases that cite this headnote

- [31] Criminal Law 🔑 Furtherance or Execution of Common Purpose

Criminal Law 🔑 Weight and sufficiency

In determining whether the Government has met prerequisites of coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule, the district court must determine that it is more likely than not that the declarant and the defendant were members of a conspiracy when the hearsay statement was made, and that the statement was in furtherance of the conspiracy. Fed.Rules Evid.Rule 801\(d\)\(2\)\(E\), 28 U.S.C.A.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

- [32] Criminal Law 🔑 Character of acts or declarations

Taped statements of alleged coconspirator were admissible in Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) conspiracy prosecution under coconspirator exception to the hearsay rule; statements described the roles that declarant and others played in the conspiracy and what needed to be done to carry out two schemes to extort money, and were uttered as part of and in furtherance of the conspiracy. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq.; Fed.Rules Evid.Rule 801\(d\)\(2\)\(E\), 28 U.S.C.A.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

- [33] Criminal Law 🔑 Review De Novo

Court of Appeals reviews Confrontation Clause challenges de novo. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 6.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

- [34] Criminal Law 🔑 Coconspirators' statements

Confrontation Clause does not require a showing of unavailability as a condition to admission of the out-of-court statements of a nontestifying co-conspirator, when those statements otherwise satisfy the requirements of the co-conspirator exception to the hearsay rule; it also does not require a court to embark on an independent inquiry into the reliability of statements that satisfy the requirements of that rule. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 6; Fed.Rules Evid.Rule 801\(d\)\(2\)\(E\), 28 U.S.C.A.

- [35] Criminal Law 🔑 Coconspirators' statements

Admission of coconspirator's taped statements in Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) conspiracy prosecution did not violate confrontation clause because they were made to person who was eliciting incriminating statements as part of FBI "sting" operation, where co-conspirator was unaware he was being "stung," and there was no indication that his behavior would have been different had the conversation not been made at the FBI's direction. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 6; 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq.

- [36] Constitutional Law 🔑 Interference with witnesses

Criminal Law 🔑 Nonproduction of Witness or Rendering Witness Unavailable

Government's plea agreement with alleged co-conspirator, under which he plead guilty to some counts in return for dismissal of remaining counts at sentencing, did not make alleged conspirator unavailable as a witness, in violation of due process; although defendants claimed that co-conspirator would have asserted his Fifth Amendment rights against self-incrimination if called to testify because he potentially faced additional charges, he was sentenced when government was still presenting its case-in-chief, and defendants did not attempt to call him as witness after that point. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5.

- [37] Criminal Law 🔑 Mode of making objection

Criminal Law 🔑 General or specific

District Court did not abuse its discretion in Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations

Act (RICO) conspiracy prosecution when it refused to entertain piecemeal objections at trial to taped statement of alleged co-conspirator; pretrial scheduling order required memoranda in support of objections to be accompanied by copies of the transcripts objected to on which proposed deletions and corrections were noted, and defendants failed to provide the court with specific objections.

[38] Criminal Law 🔑 Then-existing state of mind or body

To be admissible under state of mind exception to the hearsay rule, a declaration, among other things, must mirror a state of mind, which, in light of all the circumstances, including proximity in time, is reasonably likely to have been the same condition existing at the material time. Fed.Rules Evid.Rule 803\(3\), 28 U.S.C.A.

3 Cases that cite this headnote

[39] Criminal Law 🔑 Particular determinations, hearsay inadmissible

Defendant's taped statement to undercover FBI agent was hearsay in Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) conspiracy prosecution; statement was offered to prove the truth of the assertion that defendant did not tolerate corruption. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq.

[40] Criminal Law 🔑 Particular cases
Criminal Law 🔑 Then-existing state of mind or body

Defendant's taped statements to undercover FBI agent, offered to show that defendant, as city's mayor, did not tolerate corruption, was inadmissible under state of mind exception to hearsay rule in Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) conspiracy prosecution; statement, at least in part, applied to past acts of defendant's administration and were to a large extent "self-serving" attempts to cover tracks already made. 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq.; Fed.Rules Evid.Rule 803\(3\), 28 U.S.C.A.

2 Cases that cite this headnote

[41] Criminal Law 🔑 Necessity of Objections in General

Under plain error review, the defendant must show (1) that an error occurred (2) which was "obvious" in the sense that governing law was clearly settled to the contrary, (3) affected the defendant's substantial rights, and (4) seriously impaired the fairness, integrity, or public reputation of judicial proceedings.

1 Cases that cite this headnote

[42] Criminal Law 🔑 Necessity and scope of proof

Application of evidentiary rules do not abridge an accused's right to present a defense so long as they are not arbitrary or disproportionate to the purposes they are designed to serve. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5.

[43] Constitutional Law 🔑 Right to present witnesses; compulsory process

Criminal Law 🔑 Necessity and scope of proof

Exclusion of defendant's taped statements to undercover FBI agent, offered to show that defendant, as city's mayor, did not tolerate corruption, did not violate defendant's due process right to present a complete defense in Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO) conspiracy prosecution; even if statements had some exculpatory value, given the amount of evidence of defendant's criminal knowledge and intent presented at trial, its absence from the evidence does not rise to egregious violation of defendant's interest in defeating government's case. U.S.C.A. Const.Amend. 5; 18 U.S.C.A. § 1961 et seq.

Attorneys and Law Firms

*77 John A. MacFadyen, for appellant Vincent A. Cianci, Jr.

Anthony M. Traini, for appellant Frank E. Corrente.

Richard C. Bicki with whom Cerilli & Bicki and Edward Gerstein were on brief for appellant Richard E. Autiello.

Donald C. Lockhart, Assistant United States Attorney with whom Margaret E. Curran, United States Attorney, Richard W. Rose and Terrence P. Donnelly, Assistant United States Attorneys were on brief, for appellee.

Before HOWARD, Circuit Judge, CAMPBELL and STAHL, Senior Circuit Judges.

Opinion

STAHL, Senior Circuit Judge.

Vincent A. Cianci was the Mayor of Providence, Rhode Island; Frank E. Corrente was the City's Director of Administration; Richard E. Autiello was a member of the Providence City Towing Association, a private organization. Between April 23 and June 24, 2002, the three were jointly tried on a superseding indictment that charged them and others with forty-six violations of federal statutes prohibiting public corruption. The district court entered judgments of acquittal on eight of the charges but submitted the rest to the jury.

On June 24, 2002, the jury returned a total of eight guilty verdicts but acquitted on the remaining thirty counts. All three defendants were convicted on a single count charging a conspiracy to violate the RICO (Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations) statute. See 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d). Corrente and Autiello were convicted on a count charging a federal bribery conspiracy. See 18 U.S.C. §§ 371 & 666(a)(1)(B). Corrente was convicted on a count charging a substantive RICO violation, see 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c), two counts charging Hobbs Act extortion conspiracies, see 18 U.S.C. § 1951(a), and two counts charging Hobbs Act attempted extortions, see id. Autiello was convicted on an additional count charging a second federal bribery conspiracy. See 18 U.S.C. §§ 371 & 666(a)(1)(B). The jury also answered “YES” to four of thirty-seven special interrogatories, which asked whether the government had “proven” the alleged predicate acts underlying the racketeering counts; all other special interrogatories were answered “NO” or not answered at all.

The district court subsequently granted a judgment of acquittal on one of the *78 extortion conspiracy charges of which Corrente had been convicted; ordered the forfeiture of $250,000 in a campaign contribution fund controlled by Cianci and Corrente pursuant to RICO's forfeiture provisions, see 18 U.S.C. § 1963(a)(1); and sentenced the defendants to prison terms of sixty-four months (Cianci), sixty-three months (Corrente), and forty-six months (Autiello).

Cianci, Corrente, and Autiello appeal their convictions and sentences, and Cianci and the government cross appeals the district court's forfeiture ruling. We begin with challenges to defendants' RICO convictions.

I. The RICO Convictions (All Defendants)

A. Indictment

[1] Count One of the indictment charged Cianci, Autiello, and Corrente with conspiracy to operate the affairs of an enterprise consisting of the defendants themselves, the City of Providence, “various officers, agencies and entities of Providence” including thirteen specified agencies, Jere Realty, and Friends of Cianci, and others “known or unknown to the Grand Jury.” The purpose of the enterprise “included the following: a. Enriching Defendant Vincent A. Cianci ... Friends of Cianci through extortion, mail fraud, bribery, money laundering, and witness tampering, and b. Through the same means enriching, promoting and protecting the power and assets of the leaders and associates of the enterprise.” In a pre-trial motion, defendants moved to dismiss the RICO allegations, asserting that the enterprise as charged was improper in that it was overly broad, vague, and legally impossible.<sup>1</sup> The district court denied the motion. The issues raised by this motion were revisited on motions for judgment of acquittal and for a new trial. The court denied these motions as well.

<sup>1</sup> We address this legal impossibility argument later in the context of whether sufficient evidence supported the charged RICO enterprise.

Defendants argue that the enterprise charged in the indictment was purposefully obscure and did not provide adequate notice to defendants of the crimes for which they were charged and ultimately convicted. The argument is couched in two ways: that 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4) is unconstitutional as applied for failure to provide “fair warning” of the alleged criminal conduct and that the charged enterprise failed to provide adequate notice against which the defendants could defend themselves. The government counters that, under the RICO statute, enterprise is defined broadly and that defendants were sufficiently apprised of the nature and extent of the charges.

RICO makes it unlawful “for any person employed by or associated with any enterprise engaged in, or the activities of which affect, interstate or foreign commerce, to conduct or participate, directly or indirectly, in the conduct of such enterprise's affairs through a pattern of racketeering activity[.]” 18 U.S.C. § 1962(c). The statute also outlaws conspiracies to violate § 1962(c). See id. § 1962(d). As stated above, Corrente was convicted of a substantive violation of § 1962(c), and all three defendants were convicted of RICO conspiracy under § 1962(d).

A RICO “enterprise” “includes any individual, partnership, corporation, association, or other legal entity, and any union or group of individuals associated in fact although not a legal entity.” 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4). See United States v. DeCologero, 364 F.3d 12, 18 (1st Cir.2004). It is important to stress that the Supreme *79 Court has admonished that RICO and the term “enterprise” be construed expansively. See United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 586–87, 101 S.Ct. 2524, 69 L.Ed.2d 246 (1981); Sedima, S.P.R.L. v. Imrex Co., Inc., 473 U.S. 479, 497–98, 105 S.Ct. 3275, 87 L.Ed.2d 346 (1985); see also United States v. London, 66 F.3d 1227, 1243–44 (1st Cir.1995); United States v. Lee Stoller Enterprises, Inc., 652 F.2d 1313, 1318 (7th Cir.1981). The term's flexibility is denoted by the use of the word “includes” rather than “means” or “is limited to”; it does not purport to be exhaustive. See United States v. Masters, 924 F.2d 1362, 1366 (7th Cir.1991) (Posner, J.); United States v. Perholtz, 842 F.2d 343, 353 (D.C.Cir.1988). Accordingly, “enterprise” has been interpreted inter alia to include (1) legal entities such as legitimate business partnerships and corporations, and (2) illegitimate associations-in-fact marked by an ongoing formal or informal organization of individual or legal-entity associates, see London, 66 F.3d at 1243–44 (associations-in-fact may include legal entities such as corporations), who or which function as a continuing organized crime unit “for a common purpose of engaging in a course of conduct.” Turkette, 452 U.S. at 580–83, 101 S.Ct. 2524; see also United States v. Patrick, 248 F.3d 11, 19 (1st Cir.2001), cert. denied, 535 U.S. 910, 122 S.Ct. 1215, 152 L.Ed.2d 152 (2002). The enterprise charged in this case is of the latter, associated-in-fact variety.

Here, the superseding indictment delineated the members of the enterprise, the roles of the defendants in the enterprise, the purposes and goals of the racket, and the ways in which the defendants used other members of the enterprise—specifically, municipal entities that they controlled as part of the conspiracy—to further those purposes and goals. It alleged that defendants conspired to violate and did in fact violate RICO through their involvement in an associated-in-fact enterprise devoted to enriching and empowering defendants and others through unlawful means. The enterprise was alleged to have been comprised of the individual defendants; the City of Providence “including, but not limited to” many of its departments, offices, and agencies; the campaign contribution fund controlled by Cianci and Corrente; and others known and unknown to the grand jury. The enterprise allegations, which we reproduce as redacted following the district court's entry of the eight judgments of acquittal prior to the jury charge, read as follows:

THE RACKETEERING ENTERPRISE

Defendants VINCENT A. CIANCI, JR., a/k/a “Buddy”; FRANK E. CORRENTE; RICHARD E. AUTIELLO; the City of Providence (“Providence”), including, but not limited to, the Office of Mayor, the Office of the Director of Administration, the Providence City Solicitor's Office, the Department of Planning and Development, the Providence Redevelopment Agency, the Tax Collector's Office, the Tax Assessor's Office, the Board of Tax Assessment Review, the Finance Department, the Department of Public Safety, the Providence School Department, the Department of Inspection and Standards, and the Building Board of Review; Friends of Cianci, the political organization of Defendant VINCENT A. CIANCI, JR., a/k/a “Buddy”; and others known and unknown to the Grand Jury, constituted an “enterprise” as defined by 18 U.S.C. § 1961(4), that is, a group of individuals and entities associated in fact. This enterprise, which operated in the District of Rhode Island and elsewhere, was engaged in, and its activities affected interstate commerce.

*80 PURPOSES OF THE ENTERPRISE

The purposes of the enterprise included the following:

- a. Enriching Defendant VINCENT A. CIANCI, JR., a/k/a “Buddy” and Friends of Cianci through extortion, mail fraud, bribery, money laundering, and witness tampering; and

b. Through the same means enriching, promoting, and protecting the power and assets of the leaders and associates of the enterprise.

DEFENDANTS AND THEIR ROLES IN THE ENTERPRISE

Defendants VINCENT A. CIANCI, JR., a/k/a “Buddy;” and FRANK E. CORRENTE were the leaders of the enterprise....

Defendant RICHARD E. AUTIELLO, and others known and unknown to the Grand Jury, were associated with, and conducted and participated, directly and indirectly, in the conduct of the enterprise's affairs, including but not limited to extortion, mail fraud, and bribery.

Superseding Redacted Indictment, ¶¶ 38–41. This enterprise was alleged to have existed “from in or about January 1991 through in or about December 1999.”

The balance of the indictment (again, in the redacted form in which it went to the jury) also detailed the “pattern of racketeering activity” underlying the grand jury's RICO and RICO conspiracy allegations. The unlawful conduct comprising the alleged pattern was set forth in a section detailing the predicate RICO “Racketeering Acts” and in separate offense counts. The pattern was itself subdivided into nine alleged schemes:

1. A scheme, carried out between 1991 and late 1999, in which Corrente (with Autiello serving as his intermediary) pressured companies with whom the Providence Police Department contracted for towing services to make campaign contributions totaling some $250,000 to Friends of Cianci in order to remain on the tow list (“the Tow List scheme”);

2. A scheme, carried out between 1991 and 1998, in which the owner of Jere Realty, a local real estate company, was alleged to have paid bribes and kickbacks which made their way to Corrente in order to secure a Providence School Department lease for one of the company's Providence buildings (“the Jere Lease scheme”);

3. A 1998 scheme in which Cianci was alleged to have been involved in extorting a $10,000 contribution from the estate of Fernando Ronci (which owed the City some $500,000 in back taxes) in exchange for his support in the estate's efforts to secure a tax abatement from the corrupt Board of Tax Assessment Review, which was chaired by co-conspirator Joseph Pannone and vice-chaired by co-conspirator David Ead (“the Ronci Estate scheme”);

4. A 1996–97 scheme in which Cianci was alleged to have arranged for Christopher Ise to obtain a job in the City's Department of Planning and Development in return for a $5,000 contribution (“the Ise Job scheme”);

5. A 1999 scheme in which Cianci was alleged to have supported the contemplated sale of two City lots to a City vendor, Anthony Freitas, in return for a $10,000 contribution (“the Freitas Lots scheme”);

6. A 1998–99 scheme in which Corrente was alleged to have attempted to influence the Providence School Department to encourage a city contractor entitled to reimbursement from the City for its lease expenses to lease a building owned by Anthony Freitas in return for contributions *81 totaling $2,000 (“the Freitas Lease scheme”);

7. A 1998 scheme in which Corrente, acting through Joseph Pannone, was alleged to have facilitated prompt payments of invoices submitted to the City by a business owned by Anthony Freitas in return for contributions totaling $1,100 (“the Freitas Invoices scheme”);

8. A 1998 scheme in which Cianci was alleged (a) to have attempted to influence the City's Building Board of Review to deny a request for construction variances made by the private University Club in retaliation for the Club's having refused to admit him as a member back in the 1970s and its continuing refusal to admit him, and (b) to have extorted a free honorary membership from the Club as the construction variance dispute was unfolding (“the University Club scheme”); and

9. A 1996 scheme in which Autiello conspired with an unnamed public official to facilitate the hiring of Joseph Maggiacomo as a Providence police officer in return for a $5,000 cash contribution by Joseph's mother, Mary Maggiacomo (“the Maggiacomo Job scheme”).

[2] [3] “[A]n indictment is sufficient if it, first, contains the elements of the offense charged and fairly informs a defendant of the charge against which he must defend, and, second, enables him to plead an acquittal or conviction in bar of future prosecutions for the same offense.” Hamling v. United States, 418 U.S. 87, 117, 94 S.Ct. 2887, 41 L.Ed.2d 590 (1974).

“It is generally sufficient that an indictment set forth the offense in the words of the statute itself, as long as ‘those words of themselves fully, directly, and expressly, without any uncertainty or ambiguity, set forth all the elements necessary to constitute the offense intended to be punished.’ ” Id. (citations omitted); see also United States v. McDonough, 959 F.2d 1137, 1140 (1st Cir.1992).

The indictment not only tracks the language of the RICO statute, but also goes into considerable detail with respect to the underlying factual allegations. Hence, we conclude that defendants were more than sufficiently apprised of the charges.

B. Enterprise

The defendants also argue that their RICO convictions cannot stand because there was insufficient evidence to ground the jury's foundational finding that the government had proved the existence of the RICO “enterprise” that the government charged.<sup>2</sup> We begin our analysis by summarizing the relevant legal principles and the government's RICO theory and proof.

<sup>2</sup> The indictment and the jury instructions required that the government prove the same enterprise, described below, in order to secure convictions on both the substantive RICO count and the RICO conspiracy count. The analysis that follows therefore applies with equal force to the substantive RICO conviction returned against Corrente and to the RICO conspiracy convictions returned against Cianci, Corrente, and Autiello.

[4] [5] In cases involving an alleged associated-in-fact RICO enterprise, the existence of the charged enterprise does not follow, ipso facto, from evidence that those named as the enterprise's associates engaged in crimes that collectively may be characterized as a “pattern of racketeering activity”:

While the proof used to establish these separate elements [i.e., the “enterprise” and the “pattern of racketeering activity”] may in particular cases coalesce, proof of one does not necessarily establish the other. The “enterprise” is not the “pattern of racketeering activity”; it *82 is an entity separate and apart from the pattern of activity in which it engages. The existence of an enterprise at all times remains a separate element which must be proved by the Government.

Turkette, 452 U.S. at 583, 101 S.Ct. 2524. In other words, criminal actors who jointly engage in criminal conduct that amounts to a pattern of “racketeering activity” do not automatically thereby constitute an association-in-fact RICO enterprise simply by virtue of having engaged in the joint conduct. Something more must be found—something that distinguishes RICO enterprises from ad hoc one-time criminal ventures. See Bachman v. Bear Stearns & Co., Inc., 178 F.3d 930, 932 (7th Cir.1999) (Posner, C.J.) (noting that a contrary rule would erroneously make “every conspiracy to commit fraud ... a RICO [enterprise] and consequently every fraud that requires more than one person to commit ... a RICO violation”).

Courts have divided over the legal standards that guide the drawing of this distinction. Some require proof that an alleged associated-in-fact enterprise have an “ascertainable structure distinct from that inherent in the conduct of a pattern of racketeering activity ... , which might be demonstrated by proof that a group engaged in a diverse pattern of crimes or that it has an organizational pattern or system of authority beyond what was necessary to perpetrate the predicate crimes.” Patrick, 248 F.3d at 18 (quoting United States v. Bledsoe, 674 F.2d 647, 664 (8th Cir.1982), and discussing cases from other circuits that have adopted Bledsoe's “ascertainable structure” standard) (internal quotation marks omitted). Courts following the “ascertainable structure” approach do so out of concern that the factfinder not be misled into “collaps[ing] ... the enterprise element with the separate pattern of racketeering activity element of a RICO offense.” Id. (quoting Bledsoe, 674 F.2d at 664) (internal quotation marks omitted).

This circuit has cast its lot with courts that have declined to make Bledsoe's “ascertainable structure” criterion a mandatory component of a district court's jury instructions explaining RICO associated-in-fact enterprises. See id. at 18–19. Instead, we have approved instructions based strictly on Turkette's explanation of how a criminal association might qualify as a RICO enterprise. See, e.g., Patrick, 248 F.3d at 17–19. In doing so, we have read Turkette to impose a requirement that those associated in fact “function as an ongoing unit” and constitute an “ongoing organization.” Id. at 19. Also important to such an enterprise is that its members share a “common purpose.” See, e.g., id.; Ryan v. Clemente, 901 F.2d 177, 180 (1st Cir.1990) (“[A]lthough much about the RICO statute is not clear, it is very clear that those who are ‘associates’ ... of a criminal enterprise must share a ‘common purpose’ ....”) (citations omitted).

[6] We turn now to the particulars of the defendants’ argument. First, they contend that the indictment charged a legal impossibility in alleging that municipal entities were themselves part of the unlawful purpose associated-in-fact enterprise. They base this argument on the requirement that members of such an enterprise share a common unlawful purpose and cases holding that municipalities cannot be found to have acted with unlawful intent. See, e.g., Lancaster Comm. Hosp. v. Antelope Valley Hosp. Dist., 940 F.2d 397, 404 (9th Cir.1991) (“[G]overnment entities are incapable of forming a malicious intent.”); United States v. Thompson, 685 F.2d 993, 1001 (6th Cir.1982) (“Criminal activity is private activity even when it is carried out in a public forum and even though the activity can only be undertaken by an official’s use of a state given power[.]”).

*83 [7] [8] [9] Defendants’ argument misses the mark because neither the indictment nor the jury instructions compel the conclusion that the City itself had to have formed an unlawful intent. It is uncontroversial that corporate entities, including municipal and county ones, can be included within association-in-fact RICO enterprises. See, e.g., London, 66 F.3d at 1244; Masters, 924 F.2d at 1366. It is also beyond dispute, as the Supreme Court held in Turkette, that “the term ‘enterprise’ as used in RICO encompasses both legitimate and illegitimate enterprises.” 452 U.S. at 578, 101 S.Ct. 2524. As the D.C. Circuit elucidated:

[A restrictive] reading of 1961(4) would lead to the bizarre result that only criminals who failed to form corporate shells to aid their illicit schemes could be reached by RICO. [Such an] interpretation hardly accords with Congress’ remedial purposes: to design RICO as a weapon against the sophisticated racketeer as well as (and perhaps more than) the artless.

Perholtz, 842 F.2d at 353. Municipal entities can be part of an unlawful purpose association-in-fact enterprise so long as those who control the entities share the purposes of the enterprise. “RICO does not require intentional or ‘purposeful’ behavior by corporations charged as members of an association-in-fact.” United States v. Feldman, 853 F.2d 648, 657 (9th Cir.1988). A RICO enterprise animated by an illicit common purpose can be comprised of an association-in-fact of municipal entities and human members when the latter exploits the former to carry out that purpose. Cianci, Corrente, and Autiello—those who wielded influence, exerted pressure, and effectively controlled the City’s various components—are the criminals here. Defendants’ legal impossibility argument holds water only had the government sought prosecution of the City itself. The City and its component agencies are not the defendants in this case; they were deemed members of the enterprise because without them, Cianci, Corrente, and Autiello would not have been able to even attempt to perpetrate the charged racketeering schemes. Indeed, this is not the first time an association-in-fact enterprise composed in this manner has been found to exist. See, e.g., Masters, 924 F.2d at 1362; United States v. McDade, 28 F.3d 283 (3d Cir.1994) (upholding association-in-fact enterprise consisting of congressman, his two offices, and congressional subcommittees that he chaired); United States v. Dischner, 974 F.2d 1502 (9th Cir.1992) (upholding association-in-fact enterprise consisting of municipal officials, office of mayor, and department of public works); United States v. Angelilli, 660 F.2d 23, 31–33 (2d Cir.1981) (“We view the language of § 1961(4), ... as unambiguously encompassing governmental units, ... and the substance of RICO’s provisions demonstrate a clear congressional intent that RICO be interpreted to apply to activities that corrupt public or governmental entities.”). In each of these cases, the groupings of individuals and corporate or municipal entities were sufficiently organized and devoted to the alleged illicit purposes that the resulting whole functioned as a continuing unit. The common purpose was dictated by individuals who controlled the corporate or municipal entities’ activities and manipulated them to the desired illicit ends.

The indictment and jury instructions are consistent with this framing of the enterprise. The district court instructed the jury, without objection from either party, that “the Government must prove that the alleged enterprise had an ongoing organization, whether it be formal or informal, and that its various associates functioned together as a continuing unit to achieve common goals.” The court continued, “It *84 is not necessary in proving the existence of an enterprise to show that each member of the enterprise participated in or even knew of all of its activities, but it is necessary to show that all members of the alleged enterprise shared a common purpose.” Requiring the government to prove that all members named in the enterprise shared a common purpose of illegality did not compel the government to show that the City itself had the mens rea to seek bribes and to extort. The Ninth and Sixth Circuits articulated what in some sense is the obvious: that a corporate or municipal entity does not have a mind of its own for purposes of RICO. Lancaster Comm. Hosp., 940 F.2d at 404; Thompson, 685 F.2d at 1001. Unlawful common purpose is imputed to the City by way of the individual defendants’ control, influence, and manipulation of the City for their illicit ends. Whether the defendants did exercise sufficient control over the City for purposes of the enterprise is one of fact for the jury and evidentiary sufficiency.

[10] It follows that the defendants also have an evidence-based argument. They contend that their RICO convictions must be reversed because the evidence introduced at trial in support of the alleged schemes set forth above—the only proof from which the jury might have inferred that the schemes were carried out, or were intended to be carried out, by means of a RICO enterprise, see Turkette, 452 U.S. at 583, 101 S.Ct. 2524 (observing that proof of the pattern of racketeering activity may in particular cases also constitute the proof of the enterprise itself)—was insufficient to ground a finding that the schemes were conducted through the specific entity alleged in the indictment to have constituted a RICO enterprise. Defendants base this argument on an assertion that there was no evidence from which the jury might have inferred a shared purpose between defendants and the municipal entities named as associates of the enterprise and through which many of the schemes were conducted. In support of this argument, the defendants point to specific statements by the district court that “there is no evidence that the [City] departments and/or agencies, themselves, shared [the enterprise’s] purposes,” United States v. Cianci, 210 F.Supp.2d 71, 73 (D.R.I.2002) (denying defendants’ motions for judgments of acquittal), and that “none of [defendants’] acts ... resulted in any significant disruption of a Governmental function.” Id. The defendants also emphasize that, even if we were to evaluate the sufficiency of the evidence underlying the RICO convictions by construing the entire record in the light most favorable to the government, the evidence is insufficient.

As set forth above, we have identified Turkette’s “ongoing organization,” “continuing unit,” and “common purpose” requirements as the principal tools a factfinder should use to distinguish a RICO enterprise from an ad hoc criminal confederation. We have applied these requirements to unlawful purpose associations-in-fact involving corporate legal entities. See London, 66 F.3d at 1243–45. The district court adequately set out these requirements to the jury; hence, we see no basis for disregarding the court’s instructions in the course of our sufficiency review. See, e.g., United States v. Zanghi, 189 F.3d 71, 79–80 (1st Cir.1999) (an unchallenged jury instruction that is faithful to the indictment and “not patently incorrect or internally inconsistent” becomes the standard by which evidentiary sufficiency is to be measured) (citing United States v. Gomes, 969 F.2d 1290, 1294 (1st Cir.1992)).

*85 After careful scrutiny of the record and setting the evidence against the jury instructions, we conclude that the jury could have found the above requirements, specifically that the defendants and others named as enterprise members comprised an ongoing organization that functioned as a continuing unit and was animated by common purposes or goals.

We agree with the government’s assertion that the jury’s enterprise finding is sustainable because there was sufficient evidence that Cianci and Corrente exercised substantial control over the municipal entities named as members of the enterprise. Cianci was the City’s mayor and Corrente its chief of administration. They were alleged and were shown to have used their positions and influence to sell municipal favors on a continuing basis. The evidence indicates a close relationship “in fact” among them, the City they managed, and Cianci’s political organization. Cianci, as mayor, and Corrente and Autiello, as city officials, were strongly connected to and had considerable influence over the various City employees and departments. Their illegal schemes could function only with the cooperation, witting or unwitting, of certain City agencies and officials. Insofar as Cianci’s and the other defendants’ criminal schemes were or would be carried out by themselves and others acting in their municipal roles, the City—if only to that extent—did share in the same common criminal purpose.<sup>3</sup> The defendants were not only human members of the enterprise, but were the City’s official leaders with considerable express and implicit authority over its departments and employees. Moreover, the enterprise’s corrupt purposes were aimed at exploiting the City’s resources. It is because of this control and these close connections that the jury could have imputed the enterprise’s common purpose to the City. See Masters, 924 F.2d at 1366 (“Surely if three individuals can constitute a RICO enterprise, ..., then the larger association that consists of them plus entities that they control can be a RICO enterprise too.”).

3 The evidence depicted a behavioral spectrum ranging from innocent cooperation to willful complicity in unlawful conduct. For example, with respect to the Freitas Invoices scheme, the evidence was merely that an employee within the City's Finance Department (Lorraine Lisi), acting at Corrente's request, paid valid invoices more promptly than usual. Similarly, with respect to the Ise Job scheme, the evidence was merely that the Deputy Director of the Department of Planning and Development (Thomas Deller) created a temporary position for Ise within the department at Cianci's request. At the more culpable end of the spectrum, however, there was evidence that, in connection with the Jere Lease scheme, the head of the Department of Public Property (Alan Sepe) and the Director of Business Relations for the School Department (Mark Dunham) were influenced by Corrente to tailor the specifications in a School Department lease bid to fit the dimensions of Jere Realty's building, and then to support the Jere Realty lease before the Board of Contract and Supply (which was the entity formally empowered to accept or reject bids of City contracts). Similarly, in connection with the Freitas Lease scheme, there was evidence that Corrente again contacted Dunham prior to finalization of the lease and influenced him to drop consideration of an alternative lease.

Evidence of defendants' control, both titular and actual, was sufficient to deem the enterprise a “continuing unit” and “ongoing organization.” The jury could easily glean from taped conversations and the trial testimony of David Ead—a co-conspirator and vice-chair of the Board of Tax Assessment Review—that there existed an organized structure with Cianci at the top, Corrente as a middle man facilitating and often initiating transactions, and others, including Autiello, Ead, and Pannone, that fed deals into the organization (or in Ead's case, sometimes tried to *86 replace Corrente as the middle man). The defendants attempted to use, to varying degrees of success, various municipal agencies in committing a series of related bribes and extortions. These agencies were used in this manner on an ongoing basis from 1991 through 1999. The fact that other persons and entities were used in some transactions but not in others does not matter; the jury instructions reflected this flexibility.<sup>4</sup>

4 The court instructed, in relevant part:

“An enterprise may exist even though individual members come and go as long as it continues in an essentially unchanged form during substantially the entire period alleged in the indictment,....”

“It is not necessary in proving the existence of an enterprise to show that each member of the enterprise participated in or even knew of all of its activities,....”

“... a Defendant need not have been associated with an enterprise for the entire time that the enterprise existed in order to have been associated with the enterprise, but a Defendant must share some common goal or objective of the enterprise in order to be a member.”

There was detailed evidence, moreover, placing Cianci, the City's mayor, in the middle of at least four of the enumerated racketeering acts. With regard to the Ronci Estate scheme, David Ead testified at trial that he suggested to Ronci's attorney that the estate settle its tax claim with the City for $100,000 in exchange for a $10,000 contribution to the Friends of Cianci. Ead met with Cianci and discussed the proposed deal. The settlement was approved by the City's Board of Tax Assessment Review. Ead testified that shortly thereafter, he was contacted by Corrente, who told him that Cianci wanted Corrente to collect the money. Ead responded that he was waiting for the Ronci attorney, to which Corrente replied, “Well you know that the Mayor he's on my back—do your best.” After receiving the money from Ronci's attorney, Ead brought the money to Corrente who put his finger on his lips and took the envelope. A tape-recorded conversation between Joseph Pannone and Anthony Freitas provided additional evidence.<sup>5</sup> Our dissenting brother recognizes that there was enough evidence for the jury to conclude that defendants functionally controlled the Board of Tax Assessment Review, often for criminal purposes.

<sup>5</sup> Pannone said to Freitas, “Ead took care of the Mayor, don't know what he gave the Mayor ... He took care of me, too. He pushed the Ronci settlement through.”

With regard to the Ise Job, Ead again testified that he served as a middleman for Mayor Cianci, this time arranging a $5,000 bribe in exchange for a municipal job. According to Ead, Cianci asked during their conversation about Ise, cautious about whether “he's alright” and looking for assurances that “he's not going to say nothing.” Upon learning that the City's Department of Planning and Development had no positions available, Cianci ordered the Department to “make one.” Upon receiving the $5,000 “contribution,” Cianci told Ead, “Don't get nervous.”

In their trial testimony, which closely tracked taped conversations among Freitas, Pannone, and other City officials, both Freitas and Ead implicated Cianci in the Freitas Lots scheme, in which Cianci pressured the Providence Redevelopment Authority, the entity empowered to sell the lots, to expedite the sale of two City-owned lots to Freitas in exchange for a $10,000 “contribution” by Freitas to the Cianci political fund. Finally, with regard to the Tow List scheme, Dorothy Deveraux—Corrente's assistant and the Friends' bookkeeper—wrote a note to Corrente which implicated all three defendants in *87 that scheme.<sup>6</sup> Moreover, as Judge Howard concedes, the jury could have found, based primarily on taped statements and the trial testimony of towing association chairman Kenneth Rocha, that Corrente effectively controlled who made it onto the police department's tow list.

<sup>6</sup> Deveraux's note supported the prosecution theory that when towers occasionally “contributed” too much money under the same name, the defendants arranged for “replacement” checks to be made by third-party straw contributors. The note read, “FRANK—attached are two over checks—Please sign and Dick Autiello will be by today to replace with new checks—I need your help with the other people—these overages total $3,420.00. I know the Mayor does not want to part with that—without money being replaced. Please assign someone to talk to these people.”

We recognize that the defendants did not always get their way with municipal departments and employees.<sup>7</sup> But the fact that some racketeering schemes did not go as planned, and that certain elements within the City may not have completely complied with the defendants' wishes, does not defeat the integrity of the charged enterprise. The jury could have concluded that these glitches in the schemes only meant that certain substantive crimes went uncompleted and that otherwise, defendants possessed and exercised considerable control over crucial elements of the City. The evidence amply establishes a close relationship between defendants and the City in which they exercised their leadership roles. The enterprise and the conspiracy still thrived and the defendants were able to complete other schemes through their abuse of the municipal apparatus.

<sup>7</sup> For example, in connection with the Freitas Lots scheme, Cianci was displeased that elements within the Providence Redevelopment Agency did not sufficiently accede to his wishes, specifically when the PRA sold one of the “Freitas lots” before Cianci had a chance to finalize a deal with Freitas. In connection with the University Club scheme, Cianci was displeased when members of the Providence Building Board of Review ignored his wishes and granted the club some of the variances that it sought. Finally, in connection with the Maggiacomo Job scheme, the Chief of Police declined to admit Maggiacomo to the police academy because he had a criminal history and had been untruthful during a screening interview.

Defendants attempt to expose what they deem an error by the government in charging an overly broad enterprise that places a criminal onus on a largely innocent City. They warn that an enterprise such as that charged here implicates non-culpable municipal parties in associations which they had little or no idea were engaged in illicit activities. But this fear is misplaced. Here, as long as elements within the City, such as the police chief and members of the Building Review Board and Redevelopment Agencies, in fact did not actively share in the defendants' illegal purposes, we see no reason why we run into now-Justice Breyer's admonition in Ryan: that of failing to differentiate between associations that fall within the sweep of RICO and associations involving only the exploitation of others by criminals. See 901 F.2d at 180–81 (emphasizing the need to limit “the potentially boundless scope of the word ‘enterprise’ so as to distinguish culpable from non-culpable associations,” and recognizing “the serious consequences for any man or woman, state official or private person, who is publicly accused of racketeering”); see also Fitzgerald v. Chrysler Corp., 116 F.3d 225, 226–28 (7th Cir.1997).<sup>8</sup> Justice Breyer’s *88 limiting principle of a shared common purpose among members of an association-in-fact enterprise still functions here to prevent a “boundless enterprise.” Those employees of a city that do not exhibit the requisite mens rea with regard to the enterprise’s illicit purposes will not be criminally or civilly implicated. In the present litigation, the City was named a member of the charged enterprise, not a defendant. The City “shared” in the enterprise’s purpose only to the extent of the defendants’ considerable influence and control over the relevant municipal agencies, and to the extent of those officials and departments who were wittingly or unwittingly involved in the various schemes. Being named in the enterprise does not make the City itself criminally or civilly liable under RICO.<sup>9</sup> It bears repeating that the RICO statute defines “enterprise” broadly and that the Supreme Court has consistently instructed that we read the overall statute expansively. See Turkette, 452 U.S. at 586–87, 101 S.Ct. 2524; Sedima, S.P.R.L., 473 U.S. at 497–98, 105 S.Ct. 3275. A liberal construal of the RICO statute and in particular, the term “enterprise,” leads us to the conclusion that the enterprise, as charged, is supported by the evidence.

<sup>8</sup> We distinguish Judge Howard’s law firm hypothetical on the same basis by which defendants’ criminal purpose is imputed to the City: that defendants, as City officials and leaders, had effective titular and actual control over these municipal agencies. The same presumably cannot be said for the hypothetical Providence law firm.

<sup>9</sup> The definitions of an enterprise in the RICO statute and the jury instructions in no way require an enterprise to include nothing but criminal actors. To the contrary, a legitimate business, exploited by racketeers, may be an enterprise. It is true that members of an association-in-fact enterprise, such as is now charged, must be connected by a common thread of purpose; and one might often expect such a purpose to be of a criminal nature. See Turkette, 452 U.S. at 578, 101 S.Ct. 2524. But the ultimate question is whether an association-in-fact exists.

For this, it is not required that each participant have a separate mens rea so long as each can reasonably be said to share in the common purpose. The City’s role here in the overall plans of the defendants suffices for it be part of the association-in-fact enterprise.

C. Pattern of racketeering activity

[11] Defendants also argue that there was insufficient evidence of a pattern of racketeering activity. For purposes of a RICO conspiracy, the sufficiency questions boils down to whether a jury could have found that the defendants intended to further an endeavor which, if completed, would have satisfied the “pattern” requirement of RICO. See Salinas v. United States, 522 U.S. 52, 61–66, 118 S.Ct. 469, 139 L.Ed.2d 352 (1997); United States v. Edwards, 303 F.3d 606, 642 (5th Cir.2002). Here, the evidence shows that the endeavor resulted in a series of completed crimes. Evidence of all nine schemes enumerated in the indictment, including the two that underlie Corrente’s substantive RICO conviction, shows a pattern of racketeering activity.

[12] Two or more RICO predicate acts form a “pattern” if they are (1) “related” and (2) “amount to or pose a threat of continued criminal activity.” H.J., Inc. v. Northwestern Bell Tel. Co., 492 U.S. 229, 239, 109 S.Ct. 2893, 106 L.Ed.2d 195 (1989); Systems Mgmt., Inc. v. Loiselle, 303 F.3d 100, 105 (1st Cir.2002).

[13] Predicate acts are “related” for RICO purposes if they “have the same or similar purposes, results, participants, victims, or methods of commission, or otherwise are interrelated by distinguishing characteristics and are not isolated events.” H.J., Inc., 492 U.S. at 240, 109 S.Ct. 2893 (quotation marks omitted). We must bear in mind that “a criminal enterprise is more, not less, dangerous if it is versatile, flexible, diverse in its objectives and capabilities. Versatility, flexibility, and diversity are not inconsistent with pattern.” Masters, 924 F.2d at 1367.

*89 The evidence shows that the defendants, and ultimately Cianci, were the beneficiaries of most if not all of the nine schemes. The jury could have concluded that the schemes were designed to line Cianci’s pockets as well as to maintain his political power in the City. As for methods, most of the schemes involved either Cianci or Corrente calling or personally meeting with city officials and influencing municipal decision-making either through explicit or implicit orders. As the government points out, important “sub-trends” underlay the schemes. The Jere Realty Lease and the Freitas Lease dealt with the School Department. The Tow List and Maggiamo Job involved the Police Department. The Ise and Maggiamo Jobs both involved pawning of municipal jobs. Both the Ronci Estate and Freitas Lots schemes involved extortions for tax abatements. All of the offenses involve trading jobs, contracts, and official acts for money, contributions to Cianci's political fund, or other items of value. In most of the schemes, the money was solicited by, paid to, or collected by Corrente.

In addition, the schemes often shared the same players. Corrente, Ead, Pannone, and Autiello were all fundraisers for the Friends of Cianci. Ead participated in the Ronci Estate, the Ise Job, and the Freitas Lots schemes, while Pannone played important roles in the Ronci Estate, the Freitas Lease, and Pay-to-Get-Paid schemes. Autiello was the chief associate in the Tow List extortion and Maggiamo Job sale. Overall, the evidence shows that the individual racketeering acts were not isolated events but rather parts of a pattern of racketeering activity contemplated and committed by an overarching RICO conspiracy to which all three defendants, along with other co-conspirators, belonged.

[14] “Continuity” of the pattern of racketeering may be shown by either “a series of related predicates extending over a substantial period of time,” or a pattern of more limited duration where “the racketeering acts themselves include a specific threat of repetition extending indefinitely into the future” or “the predicate acts or offenses are part of an ongoing entity's regular way of doing business.” H.J., Inc., 492 U.S. at 242, 109 S.Ct. 2893.

Defendants were accused of conducting a RICO conspiracy that lasted nine years. The Tow List scheme spanned approximately the entire period. During this time, Autiello regularly channeled contributions to Corrente. When towers contributed too much money under the same name, the conspirators scrambled to find other straw contributors, or “replacement” contributors.

The Jere Realty and Freitas Lots schemes both involved kickbacks to the defendants in exchange for pressure on the City to grant leases. As the district court concluded, “[I]t was reasonable for the jury to infer that additional payments would be made in order to renew the lease[s].” The Pay-to-Get-Paid scheme presented the same danger: “[T]he City's habitual tardiness in paying its vendors, and the period of time over which Freitas made payments to expedite payment of his invoices, provided ample justification for the jury to conclude that such payments would continue to be made in the future.”

Evidence concerning the Ise and Maggiamo Jobs, both transpiring in 1996, was enough for the jury to conclude that these bribes were part of the same, continuous pattern that these jobs in the City could be had for a price. The Freitas Lots, Freitas Lease, and Freitas Invoices schemes revolved around deals with Anthony Freitas, whose testimony revealed an especially active *90 stage of the conspiracy in 1998 and 1999.

There is no need to go into more detail. The evidence speaks more than enough to the conclusion that the jury could have found the requisite “pattern of racketeering activity” here.

D. Conspiracy

[15] [16] Based on the same evidence, the jury could have found a conspiracy involving all three defendants. We reiterate that RICO conspiracy does not require proof that a defendant “himself committed or agreed to commit the two predicate acts requisite for a substantive RICO offense under § 1962(c).” Salinas, 522 U.S. at 61–66, 118 S.Ct. 469. Rather, he “must intend to further an endeavor which, if completed, would satisfy all of the elements of a substantive criminal offense, but it suffices that he adopt the goal of furthering or facilitating the criminal endeavor.” Id. at 65, 118 S.Ct. 469. We have noted that “[t]he conspiratorial agreement need not be express so long as its existence can plausibly be inferred from the defendants' words and actions and the interdependence of activities and persons involved.” United States v. Boylan, 898 F.2d 230, 241–42 (1st Cir.1990). The evidence, detailed above and throughout this opinion, amply fills this requirement.

As for Cianci, Ead's testimony placed Cianci at the head of the Ronci Estate, Ise Job, and Freitas Lots schemes. Taped remarks by Corrente implicated Cianci in the Freitas Lease. Corrente's position as Cianci's Director of Administration is itself circumstantial evidence of Cianci's conspiratorial involvement.

Corrente was implicated in at least five of the nine racketeering schemes. He initiated the Tow List scheme and played a major part in maintaining it throughout the duration of the conspiracy. Corrente received cash payments as part of the Jere Realty, Ronci Estate, Freitas Lease, and Pay-to-Get-Paid schemes.

Testimony by Kenneth Rocha, the chairman of the towers' association, revealed that Autiello was the point person for towers when it came time to make contributions to Cianci's political fund. Autiello took in the payments and reminded towers when their payments were due. As for Autiello's part in the Maggiocomo Job scheme, Mary Maggiacommo testified that she asked Autiello, who was in charge of maintenance of police cruisers, to help her son obtain a job on the City force. She delivered the $5,000 payment to him. When her son was ultimately denied admission into the police, Autiello refused to return the payment to Mrs. Maggiacommo.

E. Special verdict

[17] At the government's request, the district court submitted to the jury a special verdict form. Under the substantive RICO count (Count Two), the verdict form contained special interrogatories for each of the RICO predicates, listing them separately for each defendant. For each of the RICO predicates, the form asked the jury to check off "yes" or "no" to indicate whether the government had proven the predicate with respect to each defendant. As to Cianci, the jury returned the verdict form with "no" checked for every box (except one) indicating the government had not proven those racketeering acts. The one unchecked box was for Act Ten (University Club); we offer no opinion on why the jury decided to leave it blank. For Corrente, the jury checked off "no" for all racketeering acts except Act Eight (Freitas Lease) and Act 9(a) ("Pay-to-Get-Paid"), for which the jury checked off "yes." For Autiello, the jury checked off "no" for all racketeering acts except Act Twelve (Maggiacommo job), which the jury *91 concluded the government had proven. Ultimately, only Corrente was convicted on Count Two, substantive RICO, and all three defendants were found guilty on Count One, RICO conspiracy.

[18] Defendants argue that the jury's responses to the interrogatories in the special verdict form under Count Two (the substantive RICO count) should bear on the verdict as to Count One (the RICO conspiracy). They claim that the jury's negative responses to these interrogatories indicate their rejection of the evidence proffered by the government for each of those offenses to which the jury responded "no." Defendants further contend that given the jury's specific findings, the evidence is insufficient to support the conspiracy verdict as a matter of law. They postulate that the specific purpose of the special verdict form is to limit the facts found at trial for the purpose of assessing on appeal the sufficiency of the prevailing party's case. Ordinarily, when a jury returns a general verdict of guilty on a substantive RICO count and one of the predicate acts is later found to be legally insufficient by a reviewing court, the conviction must be overturned where it is impossible to determine whether two legally sufficient predicate acts support a RICO conviction. See United States v. Holzer, 840 F.2d 1343, 1352 (7th Cir.1988); United States v. Kragness, 830 F.2d 842, 861 (8th Cir.1987).

[19] The special verdict form allows juries to specifically identify the predicates for the general verdict. In United States v. Torres Lopez, 851 F.2d 520 (1st Cir.1988), we reversed a substantive RICO conviction where the jury's responses to interrogatories on a special verdict form properly related to the substantive conviction revealed that the government proved only time-barred predicates. The defendants in that case argued that as indicated by the special verdict, the jury found them guilty of only two predicates. When both of those predicates were shown to be outside the statute of limitations, we overturned the substantive RICO conviction. Other circuits have employed the special verdict form similarly. See United States v. Edwards, 303 F.3d 606 (5th Cir.2002) (court used special verdict to uphold RICO conviction as being based on two valid predicates); United States v. Kramer, 73 F.3d 1067 (11th Cir.1996) (money laundering conviction cannot stand where special verdict established defendant involvement in only foreign transactions).

The government counters that defendants' argument fails under the doctrine articulated by the Supreme Court in Dunn v. United States, 284 U.S. 390, 52 S.Ct. 189, 76 L.Ed. 356 (1932) and United States v. Powell, 469 U.S. 57, 105 S.Ct. 471, 83 L.Ed.2d 461 (1984). In both cases, the Court held that acquittals on certain counts of an indictment play no role in the analysis of whether there is sufficient evidence supporting the surviving counts. Powell, 469 U.S. at 64–69, 105 S.Ct. 471; Dunn, 284 U.S. at 392–94, 52 S.Ct. 189; see also United States v. Alicea, 205 F.3d 480 (1st Cir.2000). The reasoning is that a jury's decision to acquit on a particular count or counts may well be the product of "mistake, compromise, and lenity" and "a criminal defendant already is afforded protection against jury irrationality or error by the independent review of the sufficiency of the evidence undertaken by the trial and appellate courts."<sup>10</sup> Powell, 469 U.S. at 65–67, 105 S.Ct. 471. The Court was *92 concerned with the impracticality of a rule that would allow defendants to challenge inconsistent verdicts where such a challenge was speculative or would require inquiries into the jury's deliberations. See id. at 68, 105 S.Ct. 471.

10 This rationale applies more directly to defendants' other argument that the jury's acquittals on the substantive, non-RICO counts should influence our review of the sufficiency of the evidence on the RICO conspiracy count.

[20] The defendants claim that neither Powell nor Dunn undermines the purpose and viability of special verdict forms in defining the universe of resolved facts. They assert that in this case, we should exempt from our sufficiency review those pieces of evidence that have “been conclusively contradicted[.]” Chongris v. Bd. of Appeals, 811 F.2d 36, 37 (1st Cir.1987). In reviewing a criminal conviction for sufficiency, we do not assess the credibility of the witnesses, “which is the sole function of the trier of fact.” Burks v. United States, 437 U.S. 1, 16, 98 S.Ct. 2141, 57 L.Ed.2d 1 (1978); Torres Lopez, 851 F.2d at 527.

We have been steadfast with Powell and have repeatedly refused to carve out exceptions to the rule. United States v. Bucuvalas, 909 F.2d 593, 595–97 (1st Cir.1990) (adhering to Powell rule in affirming bribery conspiracy conviction of defendant, where jury acquitted all of the charged conspirators except defendant); Alicea, 205 F.3d at 484 (“[I]n a single, multi-count trial, acquittal on one or more counts does not preclude conviction on other counts based upon the same evidence, as long as that evidence is legally sufficient to support a finding of guilt on the count(s) of conviction.”); see also United States v. Richard, 234 F.3d 763, 768 (1st Cir.2000); United States v. Hernandez, 146 F.3d 30, 33 (1st Cir.1998); United States v. Crochiere, 129 F.3d 233, 239 (1st Cir.1997).

We are similarly hard pressed to make an exception here. The RICO conspiracy count and substantive RICO count are separate. The list of racketeering acts to which the jury answered interrogatories is part of the substantive RICO count only. The government requested the form so that if the jury did convict on substantive RICO, the conviction would be buttressed by express jury findings as to the two-predicate requirement. The jury appears to have understood the two-predicate requirement, in that it checked off two predicates (extortion conspiracies for the Freitas Lease and “Pay-to-Get-Paid” schemes) for Corrente, who was the only defendant convicted on the substantive RICO count. No predicates were checked off for Cianci, and only one (bribery conspiracy in connection with the Maggiacomo Job) was found proven for Autiello; hence, neither was convicted of substantive RICO.

The “separate-ness” of the counts in the indictment, however, is not the central point of contention in this issue. Powell, 469 U.S. at 64, 105 S.Ct. 471. Defendants concede that “a person may be convicted of RICO conspiracy and acquitted of all substantive acts.” (emphasis added). If proof of the requisite criminal agreement exists, “whether or not the substantive crime ensues” is irrelevant. Salinas, 522 U.S. at 65, 118 S.Ct. 469. Hence, the jury did not go out-of-bounds by convicting on the RICO conspiracy count while concluding the government failed to prove certain predicate racketeering acts underlying the substantive RICO count. See United States v. Weiner, 3 F.3d 17, 22 (1st Cir.1993) (“[D]espite the dismissal of the separate [substantive] counts, the jury was entitled to consider the evidence [underlying those substantive counts] in support of the RICO counts”).

Most instructive is United States v. Connolly, 341 F.3d 16 (1st Cir.2003), where we upheld a substantive RICO and RICO conspiracy conviction. The defendant contended that the government's failure to prove an “enterprise” was evidenced by *93 the jury's finding that nine of fourteen racketeering acts listed in the indictment had not been proven beyond a reasonable doubt. Specifically, the defendant argued that the evidence did not establish that the charged enterprise was “continuous” or “ongoing.” We stated that simply because the jury found a specified racketeering act as “unproven beyond a reasonable doubt” does not mean that the jury found the evidence relating to that act unpersuasive, in combination with other evidence in the case, on the existence of an association-in-fact enterprise. Rather, it may only mean that the government did not prove a requisite element of the underlying crime alleged as a racketeering act.... In returning a finding of “unproven,” the jury could have concluded that the evidence underlying a [particular racketeering act], while failing to [prove all the elements of the crime committed by the act], nevertheless demonstrated a corrupt gratuity evidencing the existence of an illegal enterprise.

Id. at 26–27. The evidence relating to those acts that were found “unproven” by the jury was still available to the jury in its evaluation of the overall RICO charge. “That being so, the inquiry on appeal is whether the jury, in light of the totality of the evidence, was presented with sufficient evidence of “continuity” to support a conviction.” Id. at 27. The jury verdict may be a compromise reflecting evil preparations by all three defendants but some doubt about implementation by Cianci and Autiello. In other words, though the evidence might not have shown completed commission of the racketeering acts, it could have led the jury to find the requisites of a RICO conspiracy among the defendants to commit the racketeering acts.

F. Amendment and variance

[21] Defendants claim that the district court was only able to deny their dismissal motions by constructively amending the indictment. They point to the court's statement, in denying these motions, that “it seems to the Court that the indictment alleges that what the Defendants are accused of doing is having conducted the affairs of the City through a pattern of racketeering activity.” Defendants also claim that post-trial, the district court erroneously concluded that the indictment could have alleged that the City was an innocent, unwitting participant in the criminal enterprise. This, defendants contend, conflicts with how they understood the indictment—that the City was a culpable participant in the RICO enterprise—and hence constituted a constructive amendment of the indictment.

[22] [23] An amendment of the indictment occurs when the charging terms of the indictment are altered, either literally or in effect, by the prosecutor or the court after the grand jury has returned the indictment. United States v. Dubon-Otero, 292 F.3d 1 (1st Cir.2002). Amending the indictment is considered prejudicial per se and thus demands reversal. Id. at 4. The government argues that regardless of the alleged disparity between the indictment and the trial judge's characterization thereof, there was no constructive amendment where the court instructed the jury “on the theory as charged.” Indeed, the court specifically instructed, without objection from either party, that “the Government must prove that the Defendant[s] knowingly and willfully joined the conspiracy with knowledge of its unlawful purpose and with the intent that the purpose would be accomplished.”

We find defendants' claimed understanding of the illicit-purpose RICO enterprise charged in the indictment to be both inaccurate *94 and disingenuous. The indictment does not compel a reading that the City itself (or its constituent agencies) had to be found criminally culpable, as we explain in more detail supra. Defendants allude to United States v. Weissman, 899 F.2d 1111, 1115 (11th Cir.1990), where the Eleventh Circuit held that the district court's jury charge “in effect altered an essential element of the crime charged” in the indictment. Here, the charge was taken largely from the indictment. No intimations by the court recast the “essential” elements of RICO outlined in the indictment. At no point, pre-trial or post-trial, did the district court transform the charged association-in-fact enterprise into a legal-purpose or legal-entity enterprise. The court's descriptions of the enterprise were in accord with the breadth of the enterprise charged in the indictment and the breadth the Supreme Court has assigned to RICO overall.

[24] [25] Alternatively, defendants contend that disparities between the indictment and the evidence resulted in a prejudicial variance. “A variance arises when the proof at trial depicts a scenario that differs materially from the scenario limned in the indictment.” United States v. Villarman-Oviedo, 325 F.3d 1, 12 (1st Cir.2003) (internal quotation marks omitted). A variance requires reversal only when it is “both material and prejudicial, for example, if the variance works a substantial interference with the defendant's right to be informed of the charges laid at his doorstep.” Id. (internal quotations marks omitted).

First, we reiterate that the jury's acquittals on the substantive counts and negative decisions on the racketeering acts listed under Count Two do not make the evidence underlying those counts and acts irrelevant to the RICO conspiracy count. Second, we repeat that the evidence as a whole, viewed in the light most favorable to the verdict, is sufficient as to the RICO conspiracy convictions for all three defendants. Accordingly, defendants' reliance on United States v. Morales, 185 F.3d 74 (2d Cir.1999) (reversing RICO convictions where evidence established that defendants had all been incarcerated early in the period of racketeering activity alleged in the indictment), is misplaced. The evidence at trial, covering acts that occurred from 1991 to 1999 as charged in the indictment, tracked and satisfied the RICO elements and factual allegations contained in the indictment.

G. “Associate” Liability

[26] Autiello, and Corrente by adoption, argues that the court's instructions on “associate” liability under RICO failed to comply with the standard set out by the Supreme Court in Reves v. Ernst & Young, 507 U.S. 170, 113 S.Ct. 1163, 122 L.Ed.2d 525 (1993). The Court in Reves created the “operation management” test for determining RICO “associate” liability. In order to have taken part in, or associated with the conduct of an enterprise, an “associate” must have had some part in directing those affairs of the enterprise. Id. at 177–78, 113 S.Ct. 1163. The Court also stated that “an enterprise is operated not just by upper management but also by lower-rung participants in the enterprise who are under the direction of upper management.” Id. at 184, 113 S.Ct. 1163. The Court further elucidated:

Of course, the word “participate” makes clear that RICO liability is not limited to those with primary responsibility for the enterprise's affairs, just as the phrase “directly or indirectly” makes clear that RICO liability is not limited to those with a formal position in the enterprise, but some part in directing the enterprise's affairs is required. The “operation *95 or management” test expresses this requirement in a formulation that is easy to apply.

Id. at 179, 113 S.Ct. 1163.

Autiello and Corrente argue that the district court “watered down” the government's burden of proof in its jury instruction on “associate” RICO liability.<sup>11</sup> Specifically, they claim that the instructions permitted conviction for performing acts without control over some part of the “direction” of the enterprise.

<sup>11</sup> The court instructed, in relevant part: “I told you that the Government has to prove that a Defendant is employed by or associated with an enterprise. A person is considered to be associated with an enterprise if he or she knowingly participates directly or indirectly in the conduct of the enterprise's affairs or business. A person doesn't have to have a formal relationship with or an official position in an enterprise in order to be associated with that enterprise.

Association may include an informal relationship or agreement between a person and an enterprise. A person also may be associated with an enterprise even though his or her role is a relatively minor role, just as the case with respect to conspiracy. ... In order to establish that Defendant conducted or participated directly or indirectly in the conduct of an enterprise's affairs, the Government must prove that the Defendant played some part in the operation or management of the enterprise. Conducting or participating in the conduct of an enterprise's affairs includes things like performing acts, function or duties which are related to the operation of the enterprise. The Government doesn't have to prove that a Defendant exercised significant control over or within the enterprise, and the Government doesn't have to prove that the Defendant was an upper echelon member of the enterprise.

An enterprise is operated not only upper management but also by lower rung participants who work under the direction of the managers of the enterprise.”

We find no merit in defendants' objection. The instructions did not misstate the law; in fact, they reflected Reves nearly verbatim. Defendants argue that the buzz word on “associate” liability is that an associate “direct” or be “integral” to the affairs of the enterprise. The crucial words, however, are “operation and management,” which effectively communicate to a jury that in order for a defendant to have been an associate of the RICO enterprise, his participation needs to have had “an element of direction” of the enterprise's affairs. Id. at 178, 113 S.Ct. 1163; United States v. Marino, 277 F.3d 11, 33 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 536 U.S. 948, 122 S.Ct. 2639, 153 L.Ed.2d 819 (2002); United States v. Oreto, 37 F.3d 739, 750 (1st Cir.1994). The court more than sufficiently accounted for this requirement by instructing that the defendant must have “played some part in the operation or management of the enterprise.”

In general, we have fashioned the Reves “operation or management” test in accordance with the breadth with which we must construe RICO:

The requirement of association with the enterprise is not strict. The RICO net is woven tightly to trap even the smallest fish, those peripherally involved with the enterprise. The RICO statute seeks to encompass people who are merely associated with the enterprise. The defendant need only be aware of at least the general existence of the enterprise named in the indictment, and know about its related activities.

Marino, 277 F.3d at 33 (citations and internal quotations omitted). Hence, as an evidentiary matter, the government presented more than enough to establish that, if there was an enterprise, the two, at various times, played important roles in the direction and supervision of the enterprise's operations. Neither was merely "peripherally involved with the enterprise." *96 The direct testimony of Kenneth Rocha demonstrated that not only was Autiello aware of the general existence of the enterprise, but that he was central to furthering the goals of the enterprise, specifically as the collection agent for Corrente in obtaining payments from the Tow List members. His participation in the Maggiacomo Job scheme again evinced his awareness of the general enterprise as well as his direct involvement in the direction and management of the enterprise. As for Corrente, we need not rehash the evidence that amply establishes his role in the enterprise. The fact that he was Cianci's right-hand man, in addition to evidence specifically showing his directorial or supervisory involvement in individual racketeering acts, puts him in the heartland of "associate" RICO liability as set out in Reves.

II. The Joint Federal Bribery Conspiracy Convictions (Corrente and Autiello)

In relevant part, the federal bribery statute provides:

(a) Whoever, if the circumstance described in subsection (b) of this section exists—

(1) being an agent of an organization, or of a State, local, or Indian tribal government, or any agency thereof-

* * *

(B) corruptly solicits or demands for the benefit of any person, or accepts or agrees to accept, anything of value from any person, intending to be influenced or rewarded in connection with any business, transaction, or series of transactions of such organization, government or agency involving any thing of value of $5000 or more ...

* * *

shall be fined under this title, imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.

(b) The circumstance referred to in subsection (a) of this section is that the organization, government, or agency receives, in any one year period, benefits in excess of $10,000 under a Federal program involving a grant, contract, subsidy, loan, guarantee, insurance, or other form of Federal assistance.

18 U.S.C. § 666(a)(1)(B). Corrente and Autiello were convicted of conspiring to violate this statute, see 18 U.S.C. § 371, for their roles in the Tow List scheme. The government's theory was that, in requiring "campaign contributions" from those who wished to remain on the police department's tow list, Corrente (in cahoots with Autiello, who acted as the towers' agent) acted as an "agent" of the police department within the meaning of subsection (a)(1). The department qualified as an "agency" under subsection (b) because it received an average of about $1 million in federal aid annually (and never less than $10,000) between 1991 and 1999. A portion of that aid (conferred in connection with a federal anti-domestic violence program) was used in and around 1996(1) to train dispatchers for the police unit that, among their other duties, called companies on the City's tow list when towing was needed, and (2) to purchase the communications and computer equipment used by the dispatchers who made these calls.

[27] Corrente and Autiello argue that their convictions cannot stand because there is insufficient evidence of a connection between their conduct and the federal funds received by the police department. The district court instructed the jury, without objection, that such a connection is required. The court described the connection (in relevant part) as follows: "[T]he Government must ... prove that there is some connection between the alleged bribe *97 and the federal funds received by the local government or agency...." Corrente and Autiello contend that the "federal funds" evidence described in the preceding paragraph is patently inadequate to ground a finding that such a connection existed in this case.

The two concede that the statute itself does not require that the offense conduct have an effect on the federal funds. See Salinas, 522 U.S. at 61, 118 S.Ct. 469 (“[A]s a matter of statutory construction, § 666(a)(1)(B) does not require the Government to prove the bribe in question had any particular influence on federal funds ....”) (emphasis supplied). They also acknowledge that, at the time of oral argument, a post-Salinas circuit split had emerged over whether, as a statutory and/or constitutional matter, some connection between the offense conduct and a federal interest (if not federal funds themselves) was required. Compare, e.g., United States v. Zwick, 199 F.3d 672, 682–88 (3d Cir.1999) (treating the statute as having been enacted under the Spending Clause and holding, in part because the Constitution requires that “legislation regulating behavior of entities receiving federal funds must ... be based upon a federal interest in the particular conduct,” (citing South Dakota v. Dole, 483 U.S. 203, 207, 107 S.Ct. 2793, 97 L.Ed.2d 171 (1987))), that the statute requires the government to prove that a federal interest is implicated by the offense conduct), and United States v. Santopietro, 166 F.3d 88, 92–93 (2d Cir.1999) (similar, endorsing the post-Salinas vitality of prior Second Circuit law interpreting the statute to require that the offense conduct threaten the integrity and proper operation of a federal program), with, e.g., United States v. Sabri, 326 F.3d 937, 940–53 (8th Cir.2003) (no connection between the offense conduct and a case-specific federal interest is required by either the Constitution or the statute, which was lawfully enacted under the Necessary and Proper Clause and not the Spending Clause).

Unsurprisingly, Corrente and Autiello prefer the approach exemplified by Zwick and Santopietro. They emphasize that Salinas explicitly left open whether some connection between the offense conduct and a federal interest is required for the statute to be constitutionally applied. See 522 U.S. at 60–61, 118 S.Ct. 469 (declining to decide the broader constitutional issue because the statute was constitutionally applied on the case facts). They argue that requiring a connection such as the one identified in Zwick and Santopietro is necessary to maintain an appropriate state–federal balance in a criminal law area that has been the traditional province of the states.

While these appeals were under advisement, the Supreme Court granted a writ of certiorari in Sabri and resolved the circuit split in favor of the position adopted by the Eighth Circuit. See Sabri v. United States, 541 U.S. 600, 124 S.Ct. 1941, 1945–49, 158 L.Ed.2d 891 (2004). If error can be “plain” within the meaning of Fed.R.Crim.P. 52(b) even if it only becomes so while the case in which it is raised is on appeal, see Johnson v. United States, 520 U.S. 461, 467–68, 117 S.Ct. 1544, 137 L.Ed.2d 718 (1997), we see no reason why it should not also be “patent” for purposes of applying the Zanghi principle, see 189 F.3d at 79–80, discussed and applied supra at 84–85. Because application of Zanghi requires that we disregard the nexus instruction upon which Corrente and Autiello base their sufficiency challenges to their joint federal bribery conspiracy convictions, we must reject those challenges.

III. The Remaining Convictions

A. Federal Bribery Conspiracy (Autiello)

[28] Autiello argues that there was insufficient evidence to support his conviction *98 for federal bribery conspiracy in connection with the Maggiacomo Job scheme. Autiello contends that, because there was no direct evidence about either the identity of his co-conspirator or the fate of the $5,000 Mary Maggiacomo paid him, the evidence gave nearly equal circumstantial support to an inference that he pocketed the money as a payment for his efforts with the police department (with which he had influence) on behalf of Joseph Maggiacomo as it did to an inference that he passed the bribe along to some public official, or at least conspired to do so. See United States v. Andujar, 49 F.3d 16, 20 (1st Cir.1995) (“If the evidence viewed in the light most favorable to the prosecution gives equal or nearly equal circumstantial support to a theory of guilty and a theory of innocence of the crime charged, this court must reverse the conviction.”) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). The argument is unconvincing.

There was evidence that, during a face-to-face meeting in which his favorable intercessions were sought, Autiello told Mary Maggiacomo and her husband that Providence police officer positions were prized and that Joseph Maggiacomo's chances were not good because the Maggiacomos were not Providence taxpayers and had not made any “contributions.” In nearly the same breath, Autiello told them that, if they wanted Joseph to be accepted into the police academy, they would have to come up with $5,000 in cash. The juxtaposition of these two comments, combined with the evidence that Autiello himself held no authority to make police academy admission decisions, permitted a reasonable inference that the $5,000 was to be a political “contribution” that would serve as Joseph's ticket of admission when passed along to someone with authority over academy admission decisions.

B. Hobbs Act Attempted Extortion and Extortion Conspiracy (Corrente)

Corrente makes three arguments in favor of reversing or vacating his convictions for Hobbs Act attempted extortion and Hobbs Act extortion conspiracy in connection with the Freitas Lease and Freitas Invoices schemes: (1) there was insufficient evidence that these schemes had the constitutionally required impact on interstate commerce; (2) there was insufficient evidence that he affirmatively acted in such a way as to be fairly accused of having attempted or conspired to engage in extortion; and (3) the district court's jury instructions erroneously described what was required to establish an attempt or conspiracy to engage in extortion. There is some question whether each of these arguments was made below as to each of the three convictions, but we bypass issues of forfeiture because none of the arguments is persuasive on its merits.

Corrente's first argument is largely based on an assertion that his convictions are unconstitutional because his offense conduct had to, but did not, have more than a de minimis effect on interstate commerce in order to jibe with the Supreme Court's decisions in United States v. Lopez, 514 U.S. 549, 115 S.Ct. 1624, 131 L.Ed.2d 626 (1995), and United States v. Morrison, 529 U.S. 598, 120 S.Ct. 1740, 146 L.Ed.2d 658 (2000). After briefs were filed in this case, another panel of the court rejected this argument, United States v. Capozzi, 347 F.3d 327, 334–336 (1st Cir.2003), so we must reject it too, see, e.g., United States v. Downs–Moses, 329 F.3d 253, 263 (1st Cir.2003).

Corrente alternatively argues that no reasonable factfinder could have found that his offense conduct had such a de minimis effect. He is wrong.

*99 [29] With respect to Corrente's attempted extortion in connection with the Freitas Lease scheme, the jury could have found that, but for Freitas' agreement to pay Corrente for favorable intervention on his behalf with the school department, there was a realistic probability that the City contractor (an entity engaged in interstate commerce and whose lease agreement would be a transaction affecting interstate commerce<sup>12</sup>) would have leased space in Cranston, Rhode Island. This evidence alone satisfies constitutional concerns, even if the space for which Corrente advocated actually proved to be a better fit for the contractor. See Capozzi, 347 F.3d at 335 (extortionate conduct need only create a realistic probability of an effect on interstate commerce) (citations omitted); id. at 337 (conviction for attempted extortion requires only a showing that the identified effect would have occurred had the defendant succeeded in the extortion); United States v. Tormos–Vega, 959 F.2d 1103, 1113 (1st Cir.1992) (extortionate conduct meets constitutional requirements even where it “has a beneficial effect on interstate commerce”) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted); id. (where the victim's acquiescence in an extortion results in a transaction with effects on interstate commerce, constitutional concerns are satisfied).

12 The contractor, the Marriott Corporation, supplied lunches and custodial services to all Providence schools. There was evidence that the company was incorporated in New York and had offices in Washington, D.C., and Newark, Delaware.

[30] With respect to the Freitas Invoices scheme, the jury could have found that a city contractor that was indisputably engaged in interstate commerce was deprived of $1,100 in order to facilitate payments to which it was entitled. This was enough. See Capozzi, 347 F.3d at 337 (“One common method for the government to establish the required ‘de minimis effect’ on interstate commerce is to show that the defendant's activity “minimally depletes the assets of an entity doing business in interstate commerce.””) (quoting United States v. Nguyen, 246 F.3d 52, 54 (1st Cir.2001)).

Corrente's other two arguments are very difficult to follow. In the main, they appear to be interrelated attacks on the correctness of Evans v. United States, 504 U.S. 255, 112 S.Ct. 1881, 119 L.Ed.2d 57 (1992). Evans interpreted the provision of the Hobbs Act under which Corrente was convicted—one which prohibits extortion by means of “the obtaining of property from another, with his consent, ... [2] under color of official right,” 18 U.S.C. § 1951(b)(2)—not to require that the government prove that the defendant initiated the extortionate transaction or otherwise induced the payments. Rather, “the Government need only show that a public official has obtained a payment to which he was not entitled, knowing that the payment was made in return for official acts.” Id. at 268, 112 S.Ct. 1881. Corrente appears to believe that the Evans Court erred in concluding that the defendant need not induce the payment or otherwise initiate the event. See Corrente Br. at 49. To the extent that he is so arguing, Corrente acknowledges that we are powerless to grant him relief and that he must go to the Supreme Court. Id.

There are hints of other arguments in Corrente's brief, but none is sufficiently developed to warrant consideration on the merits. See United States v. Zannino, 895 F.2d 1, 17 (1st Cir.1990). In any event, our review of the record convinces us that there is no basis for reversing or vacating Corrente's attempted extortion and extortion conspiracy convictions.

*100 Any sufficiency challenge is doomed because there was sufficient evidence to support the convictions even under the more demanding interpretation of the Hobbs Act for which Corrente advocates. With respect to the Freitas Lease scheme, the jury could have found that Corrente “induced” payments from Freitas when, at one point prior to receiving any money related to this scheme, he suggested to Freitas that City Hall could either hurt or help his chances of securing the lease (depending, presumably, on whether Freitas anted up). With respect to the Freitas Invoices scheme, the jury could have found that Pannone, Corrente's co-conspirator, induced payments on Corrente's behalf by encouraging Freitas to “throw something” at Corrente—i.e., to “pay to get paid.”

So too with the jury instructions. As clarified in a supplemental charge just prior to the return of the verdicts, the instructions on the attempted extortion and extortion conspiracy charges were, if anything, overly generous to Corrente. And because the evidence was sufficient to support the convictions even under the arguably too lenient instructions, any error was harmless. See Fed.R.Crim.P. 52(a); United States v. Royal, 100 F.3d 1019, 1027 (1st Cir.1996).

IV. Admission of the Pannone Tapes

Defendants contend that the district court violated various Rules of Evidence and their confrontation and due process rights in admitting into evidence certain tape-recorded conversations among Freitas (who was acting as a government agent), Pannone, the Chairman of the Board of Tax Assessment Review and an alleged co-conspirator, and various other individuals, some identified and others not. They also argue that the court erred in precluding them from interposing objections to the admission of these tape recordings for their failure to abide by a procedural order requiring that Rule 403 and 404(b) objections be identified with specificity in advance of trial.

A. Petrozziello determination

[31] Defendants argue that the district court erred when it concluded that Pannone's statements fell outside of the hearsay rule under Fed.R.Evid. 801(d)(2)(E).<sup>13</sup> We review this determination for clear error. United States v. Geronimo, 330 F.3d 67, 74 (1st Cir.2003); Marino, 277 F.3d at 25. In determining whether the Government has met Rule 801(d)(2)(E) prerequisites, the district court must determine that it is “more likely than not that the declarant and the defendant were members of a conspiracy when the hearsay statement was made, and that the statement was in furtherance of the conspiracy.” United States v. Petrozziello, 548 F.2d 20, 23 (1st Cir.1977). We refer to this determination as a “Petrozziello ruling.” Geronimo, 330 F.3d at 75.

13 “A statement is not hearsay if ... [t]he statement is offered against the party[-opponent] and is ... a statement by a coconspirator of a party during the course and in furtherance of the conspiracy.” Fed.R.Evid. 801(d)(2)(E).

[32] Defendants contend that there was “scanty” evidence of a conspiracy among defendants and Pannone. They argue that Pannone's taped statements were unreliable and there was insufficient extrinsic evidence of the conspiracies because some of the conversations on the tape were “rambling and unfocused” and not all of the defendants were ultimately convicted as part of the three racketeering acts—the Ronci Estate, Freitas Lease, and Freitas Invoices schemes—of which Pannone had first-hand knowledge.

*101 We disagree. As we have detailed supra, the government presented sufficient evidence of a RICO conspiracy—conspiracy, enterprise, and pattern of racketeering activity—to satisfy the evidentiary standard set forth in Petrozziello. In particular, on tape, Corrente intimated to Freitas with respect to the Freitas Lease scheme, “Don't get involved with Joe unless something happens.” Corrente also admits on tape to receiving cash from Pannone in connection with the Pay-to-Get-Paid scheme. Pannone chaired the Board of Tax Assessment Review, a municipal office which we have already detailed to be crucial to the conspiracy. Both Freitas and Ead testified at trial to Pannone's involvement in the Ronci Estate, Freitas Lease, and Pay-to-Get Paid schemes. With regard to the Ronci Estate scheme, the evidence showed a sub-conspiracy among Cianci, Corrente, and Pannone to extort money from the Ronci estate in exchange for a reduction of back taxes owed to the City and the assessment of property owned by the estate. At the times the taped statements were made, the evidence also shows a conspiracy between at least Corrente and Pannone to extort money from Tony Freitas and JKL Engineering in exchange for assistance in leasing property owned by Freitas to the City or to the Marriott Corporation. Third, the evidence was sufficient to establish a conspiracy between at least Corrente and Pannone to extort money from Freitas and JKL in exchange for facilitating payments due from the City to JKL.

Pannone's taped statements were not made "after the fact," but were uttered as part of and in furtherance of the conspiracy. In these statements, Pannone described the roles that he, Cianci, Corrente, and Ead played in the conspiracy and in particular, what he and Freitas should do to carry out the Freitas Lease and Pay-to-Get-Paid schemes. Such statements are well within the core of Rule 801(d)(2)(E). See United States v. Martinez-Medina, 279 F.3d 105, 117 (1st Cir.), cert. denied, 537 U.S. 921, 123 S.Ct. 311, 154 L.Ed.2d 210 (2002); United States v. Eke, 117 F.3d 19, 21 (1st Cir.1997). The district court did not commit clear error in admitting the Pannone tapes and we decline to reverse defendants' convictions on Petrozziello grounds.

B. Confrontation Clause and Due Process claims

[33] [34] Defendants contend that Pannone's taped statements are inherently unreliable and hence should not have been admitted in evidence. As a constitutional matter, they claim that the statements' unreliability implicates Sixth Amendment witness confrontation concerns. This Court reviews Confrontation Clause challenges de novo. United States v. Ventura-Melendez, 275 F.3d 9, 15 (1st Cir.2001). The Confrontation Clause does not require "a showing of unavailability as a condition to admission of the out-of-court statements of a nontestifying co-conspirator, when those statements otherwise satisfy the requirements of Federal Rule of Evidence 801(d)(2)(E)." United States v. Inadi, 475 U.S. 387, 391, 106 S.Ct. 1121, 89 L.Ed.2d 390 (1986). It also "does not require a court to embark on an independent inquiry into the reliability of statements that satisfy the requirements of Rule 801(d)(2)(E)." Bourjaily v. United States, 483 U.S. 171, 183-84, 107 S.Ct. 2775, 97 L.Ed.2d 144 (1987).

[35] Defendants argue that notwithstanding Inadi and Bourjaily, Pannone's statements should not have been admitted because he was unavailable and unreliable. They assert that the present case is anomalous and that "corruption stings" such as this one should not fall within Inadi and Bourjaily. We find no case law excepting the case from the Inadi and Bourjaily rules. Defendants further suggest that Pannone was outside of his "natural habitat" because Freitas was eliciting incriminating statements from him as part of his cooperation with the FBI. Pannone, however, was unaware that he was being stung. We see no reason how his behavior would have been different had Freitas been making the same conversation without the FBI's direction.

To further address defendants' contention that Pannone's statements are inherently unreliable, we agree with the district court that Pannone "did have or was in a position to have firsthand knowledge of some of the things that he testified about." He was an insider to the conspiracy. Again, he was directly involved and even played a supervisory role in the Ronci Estate, Freitas Lease, and Freitas Invoices schemes. Trial testimony by Ead, Rocha, Freitas, and others corroborated Pannone's taped statements setting out how Corrente was often the middleman in the racket, that Cianci used Corrente as a buffer, and that money given to Corrente found its way into the campaign and eventually benefitted Cianci or the administration in some way. Taped conversations between Freitas and Corrente confirmed the same.

[36] The government questions Cianci and Corrente's motive for failing to call Pannone as a witness for cross-examination as Fed.R.Evid. 806 permits. Cianci and Corrente repeatedly contend that Pannone was unavailable to them because he would assert his Fifth Amendment rights against self-incrimination if called to testify. They claim that Pannone's behavior was "orchestrated" by the Government in their plea arrangements with him.

This alleged "attempt to thwart cross-examination" forms the basis of defendants' Fifth Amendment due process claim. The procedural travel of the case, however, reveals little to support this accusation. The indictment in this case originally named Pannone as a defendant on Counts 1, 2, 8, 9, 16-19, and 21-24. On February 14, 2002, he signed a plea agreement in which he agreed to plead guilty to Counts 1, 2, 8, 16, 19, and 22. The government agreed to dismiss the remaining counts at sentencing. Hence, dismissal of the remaining charges against Pannone was contingent upon sentencing.

On April 16, 2002, during a hearing to resolve defendants' motion to exclude the Pannone tapes, Corrente complained that Pannone's plea agreement had "left open" the remaining counts, suggesting that Pannone's fear of the government's handling of the remaining counts would cause him to assert his Fifth Amendment rights if he were called by the defense to testify. The court, though ultimately rejecting defendants' legal arguments, assured them that it would try to accelerate Pannone's sentencing, which at that time had been scheduled for July.

Thereafter, the district court moved up Pannone's sentencing in order to accommodate defendants in this case. Pannone was sentenced on May 24, 2002, while the government was still presenting its case-in-chief and almost two weeks before the defense presented their own case. Immediately after sentencing, the government moved to dismiss the remaining counts against Pannone; the court granted the motion. During a bench conference four days after Pannone's sentencing, Corrente's counsel briefly remarked that he had been informed by Pannone's counsel that Pannone would persist in his Fifth Amendment claim "because of a variety of reasons which I won't go into right now." Nothing more was made of these "reasons."

*103 After this point, defendants did not attempt to call Pannone as a witness. We find no evidence that Pannone would have invoked his Fifth Amendment right against self-incrimination if called to testify, and whether the court would have permitted him to do so. There simply is no evidence of an "orchestration" by the government to keep Pannone away from defendants. Thus, there were no constitutional infringements here.<sup>14</sup>

<sup>14</sup> To the extent that defendants' due process claim incorporates their argument that Pannone's statements are unreliable, our affirmance of the district court's Petrozziello ruling sufficiently responds to that claim.

C. Rules 403 and 404(b)

[37] Finally, with respect to the Pannone tapes, defendants argue that the district court erred by failing to consider their objections to admission of the tapes under Fed.R.Evid. 403<sup>15</sup> and 404\(b\).<sup>16</sup> They claim that they made timely objections pre-trial. They further recount that the court decided not to address the objections prior to trial, but then mistakenly at trial ruled that defendants waived their right to object to admission of the tapes.

<sup>15</sup> "Although relevant, evidence may be excluded if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury, or by considerations of undue delay, waste of time, or needless presentation of cumulative evidence." Fed.R.Evid. 403.

<sup>16</sup> "Other Crimes, Wrongs, or Acts—Evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts is not admissible to prove the character of a person in order to show action in conformity therewith. It may, however, be admissible for other purposes, such as proof of motive, opportunity, intent, preparation, plan, knowledge, identity, or absence of mistake or accident, provided that upon request by the accused, the prosecution in a criminal case shall provide reasonable notice in advance of trial, or during trial if the court excuses pre-trial notice on good cause shown, of the general nature of any such evidence it intends to introduce at trial." Fed.R.Evid. 404\(b\).

We first recount the procedural history giving rise to this issue. On April 24, 2001, the government provided defendants with copies of the two hundred tapes relating to their investigation of defendants, along with an index showing the dates of the recordings and the conversation participants. Three days later, the court issued an Arraignment and Pre-trial Discovery Order, whereby the government was ordered to provide the defendants with transcripts of the tapes. The court also ordered that all pre-trial motions be filed by December 31, 2001.

The government eliminated all but twenty-two tapes as possible trial exhibits. By October 31, 2001—two months before the deadline for pre-trial motions and six months before the commencement of trial—the government had provided transcripts of these twenty-two tapes to defendants.

On March 28, 2002, the district court issued a Pre-trial Scheduling Order, which read:

On or before April 12, 2002, counsel for any party disputing the audibility or admissibility of any such recording or the accuracy of any such transcript shall file an objection identifying the recording to which objection is being made. Memoranda in support of objections to the accuracy or completeness of transcripts shall be accompanied by copies of the transcripts objected to on which proposed deletions and corrections are noted.

In offering recorded conversations, counsel shall make every effort to edit out footage that contains no audible discussion or contains irrelevant material so that the jury will not be required to *104 listen for protracted periods of time to portions of recordings that provide little or no assistance in determining the pertinent facts. In order to achieve that objective, counsel shall meet and confer, in advance, in an effort to resolve any disputes with respect to editing.

... Failure to comply with the provisions of this paragraph may be considered as a waiver, by the proponent, of the right to offer the recorded conversation(s) at issue; or, alternatively, as a waiver of the right to object to omission of the recorded conversation(s) and/or dispute the accuracy or completeness of the transcript, as the case may be.

On April 8, 2002, defendants filed a motion objecting to the admission of the Pannone tapes. They based their motion primarily on Petrozziello and constitutional grounds, and mentioned Rules 403 and 404 in a general observation that “any given statement may also be inadmissible” under those rules. They did not identify which statements were inadmissible, but instead suggested that the court itself should “go through” the tapes “line-by-line, making individual assessments as to each declarative statement.” Defendants stated that they would provide the court with a schedule identifying offending statements and detailing the bases for their exclusion. They never provided this schedule.

At the April 16 hearing on the motion, defendants again focused on Petrozziello and the constitutional theories. Corrente's counsel acknowledged that the government had edited the tapes to deal with Rule 403 concerns. Nothing more was said with regard to either 403 or 404. The court denied the motion to suppress the Pannone statements and refused to undertake the line-by-line analysis, explaining that it “would take easily, ... weeks ... and it would delay the trial by that period of time.” The court expressed its plan to “minimize the risk of a mistrial in the event that statements are presented that later are found not satisfy the requirements” by requiring the government to present “additional evidence above and beyond the statements themselves to support a finding that they qualify as admissible co-conspirator statements.”

On April 24, the second day of trial, the government in-chambers mentioned that defendants had failed to propose cuts to the Pannone tapes. In response to Corrente's counsel's suggestion that the defense would later in the trial move to excise other taped statements pursuant to Rules 403 and 404, the court stated that such motions “should have been done long ago.”

Throughout trial, the court repeated that proposals for cuts to the tapes had been due by April 12, 2002, pursuant to its Pre-trial Scheduling Order. Upon challenges at trial by defendants to the admissibility of individual tapes, the court stated that they could not make these objections because they had failed to tender such an objection pre-trial.

Defendants argue that they complied with the pre-trial scheduling order because they timely filed “an objection identifying the recording to which objection is being made” as required by the Pre-trial Scheduling Order. However, they fail to mention that the order also mandates that “[m]emoranda in support of objections ... shall be accompanied by copies of the transcripts objected to on which proposed deletions and corrections are noted.” Defendants failed to provide the district court with these specific objections. The supplemental schedule promised by defendants never materialized; the schedule, moreover, was not an “extra” offer, but explicitly required by the order as part of any objection to the tapes. The district court declined to perform a line-by-line assessment *105 of the transcripts because it had specifically provided in the order that the parties do it. After repeated general objections non-compliant with the procedural order, the court decided that the defendants waived their right to object pursuant to the order. It did not abuse its discretion in refusing to entertain piecemeal objections to evidence in the Pannone tapes.

Regardless, admission of the taped statements—which defendants still have failed to itemize—did not prejudice defendants. As we have explained supra, the government has produced sufficient evidence of the tapes' reliability and probative value. Moreover, the court followed through on its assurance that it would “minimize the risk” of improper admission by requiring the government to produce evidence corroborative of statements made in the tapes.

We stress that the court wisely recognized that stop-and-go evidentiary evaluations of these tapes during trial would unduly delay the case and perhaps even cause the very prejudice and confusion that defendants contemplated in their general objection. Accordingly, the court fashioned a system well before trial through which it expected both parties to whittle down the tapes to their relevant portions. See United States v. Nelson–Rodriguez, 319 F.3d 12, 34 (1st Cir.2003) (“The trial court has wide discretion in determining admissibility under Rule 403 since the trial judge ‘is more directly familiar than a court of appeals with the need for the evidence and its likely effect.’”) (citations omitted). An important part of this system was for defendants to produce transcripts of the tapes denoting which portions they wished to redact out of Rule 403, Rule 404, constitutional, or Petrozziello concerns. Even in their appeal, defendants persist in the ambiguity of their objection to the tapes. Other circuits have not tolerated this type of objection. See, e.g., United States v. Holland, 880 F.2d 1091, 1094–95 (9th Cir.1989) (where some parts of audiotape were admissible but “much of the tape was irrelevant,” the defendant’s “blanket objection to the admission of the tape does not preserve an objection to failure to redact the tape”). We find no abuse in the district court’s exercise of its broad discretion over Rule 403 and 404 considerations.

V. Cianci’s Taped Statement

A. Hearsay

In 1995, a government agent posing as an air conditioning businessman taped his conversation with Cianci when he requested a city contract. Cianci assured the agent that he would refer him to Alan Sepe, who Cianci believed knew more about air conditioning matters than he did. Cianci then told the agent, “[Sepe] is honest as the day is long. He deals in governments and ..... No one will ask you for a thing. If anybody does, you pick up the phone and call me. I’ll cut his .... off and have him arrested, okay?” The agent had said or done nothing to prompt discussion of corruption. Then, Cianci, in introducing the agent to an unidentified man, remarked, “He’s probably an FBI agent.”

The district court refused to admit this tape on relevancy grounds, holding that the conversation in it “does not relate to any predicate act or to any specific matter with respect to which the Government has presented any evidence.” In response to Cianci’s argument that the statements were admissible under the “state of mind” exception to the hearsay rule, see Fed.R.Evid. 803(3), the court concluded, “This statement or the import of the statement is to show what Mr. Cianci did or didn’t do on other occasions with respect to unrelated matters, so therefore it does not fall under the exception to the hearsay rule *106 created by Rule 803(3) for state of mind existing at the time of the event in question.” Cianci argues that the district court’s refusal to admit this taped statement in evidence was an abuse of discretion and violated his right to due process. Colasanto v. Life Ins. Co. of North America, 100 F.3d 203, 213 (1st Cir.1996).

The district court deemed Cianci’s taped statement irrelevant because it did “not relate to any predicate act or to any specific matter with respect to which the Government has presented any evidence.” Cianci argues that the court failed to recognize the statement’s relevance to the RICO charges in general. He asserts that the statement tends to make the existence of the enterprise less likely than without the statement, Fed.R.Evid.

401, and that the court “conflat[ed] the provisions of Rule 803(3) ... with the relevancy requirements of Rule 401.”

[38] Cianci recapitulates that if the statement in the tape is hearsay, it falls within the state of mind exception to the hearsay rule. Fed.R.Evid. 803(3). “To be admissible under this exception, a declaration, among other things, must ‘mirror a state of mind, which, in light of all the circumstances, including proximity in time, is reasonably likely to have been the same condition existing at the material time.’ ” Colasanto, 100 F.3d at 212 (quoting 2 John W. Strong, McCormick on Evidence § 274 (4th ed.1992)). Cianci contends that the statement evinces a contemporaneous intent not to endorse bribery in his administration, rather than a statement denying past instances of corrupt acts. In addition to adopting the district court’s conclusion that the statement evinced a “state of mind” as to events or behavior on other occasions, the government argues that Cianci’s statements were self-serving, and hence outside the ambit of Rule 803(3), because he knew that he was talking to a federal agent.

[39] [40] As an initial matter, the taped statement is hearsay. Cianci offered it to prove the truth of the assertion that Cianci did not tolerate corruption. Another thing is certain: the statement was not admissible in order to show what Cianci might have done or not done on other occasions not proximate to the time the statement was uttered. The only purpose for which the statement could have been admitted would have been to establish Cianci’s state of mind at the time the statement was made. Because “disputes over whether particular statements come within the state-of-mind exception are fact-sensitive, the trial court is in the best position to resolve them.” Colasanto, 100 F.3d at 212. That the statement was made at one point during the time of charged conspiracy cannot be sufficient to mandate its admission, especially where the latter part of the statement—“He’s probably an FBI agent”—places doubt on what Cianci claims is the probative value and relevance of the statement as a whole. Whether Cianci’s statement is “forward-looking” or refers to past acts and events is unclear from the statement itself. This issue is further complicated by the fact that Cianci’s mention of pay-offs was “gratuitous” and not provoked by anything the agent said or did. Hence, it was within the district court’s discretion to conclude that the statement, at least in part, applied to past acts of the Cianci administration and were to a large extent “self-serving” attempts to cover tracks already made. Such observations are well-established grounds for non-admission. See, e.g., United States v. Bishop, 264 F.3d 535, 549 (5th Cir.2001), cert. denied, 535 U.S. 1016, 122 S.Ct. 1605, 152

L.Ed.2d 620 (2002); United States v. Miller, 874 F.2d 1255, 1265–66 (9th Cir.1989); *United States v. *107 Jackson*, 780 F.2d 1305, 1313–15 (7th Cir.1986). Thus, as the district court determined that Cianci sought to admit the statement “to show that he did not and does not take bribes or engage in corrupt activity,” we are loath to disturb the court’s exercise of discretion to deny admission of the statement.

B. Due Process claim

[41] Cianci claims that by denying admission of his taped statement, the district court violated his Fifth Amendment due process right to “a meaningful opportunity to present a complete defense.” Crane v. Kentucky, 476 U.S. 683, 687, 106 S.Ct. 2142, 90 L.Ed.2d 636 (1986). We review this claim for plain error because it was not raised at trial. Under plain error review, the defendant must show (1) that an error occurred (2) which was “obvious” in the sense that governing law was clearly settled to the contrary, (3) affected the defendant’s substantial rights, and (4) seriously impaired the fairness, integrity, or public reputation of judicial proceedings. United States v. Gomez, 255 F.3d 31, 37 (1st Cir.2001).

[42] [43] Application of evidentiary rules “do not abridge an accused’s right to present a defense so long as they are not ‘arbitrary’ or ‘disproportionate to the purposes they are designed to serve.’ ... [W]e have found the exclusion of evidence to be unconstitutionally arbitrary or disproportionate only where it has infringed upon a weighty interest of the accused.” United States v. Scheffer, 523 U.S. 303, 308, 118 S.Ct. 1261, 140 L.Ed.2d 413 (1998) (citing Rock v. Arkansas, 483 U.S. 44, 56, 107 S.Ct. 2704, 97 L.Ed.2d 37 (1987)). We have described the Supreme Court’s rule as overturning convictions only in “egregious cases.” Fortini v. Murphy, 257 F.3d 39, 47 (1st Cir.2001). Cianci outlines his “weighty interest” as his effort to disprove the government’s theory of criminal intent. Even if we were to give some exculpatory value to the statement, given the amount of evidence of Cianci’s criminal knowledge and intent presented at trial, its absence from the evidence does not rise to an “egregious” violation of Cianci’s interest in defeating this part of the government’s case. Arguably, the statement itself indicates that Cianci knew he was talking to an FBI agent. Regardless, the court acted well within its discretion in determining that Cianci’s taped statement did not pass muster under Rule 401 and that its value, if any, fell outside of Rule 803(3)’s exception to the hearsay rule. Accordingly, we conclude that the court’s refusal to admit his taped statement did not constitute error, let alone plain error, and thus, Cianci’s due process claim fails.

VI. Conclusion

Accordingly, defendants’ convictions are affirmed.

VII. Sentencing and Forfeiture Appeals

In light of the Supreme Court’s recent decision in Blakely v. Washington, 542 U.S. 296, 124 S.Ct. 2531, 159 L.Ed.2d 403 (June 24, 2004), we do not decide the sentencing appeals raised by all defendants as well as challenges by defendants and the government to the district court’s forfeiture order. By separate order, we have requested additional briefing and oral argument on these issues.

HOWARD, Circuit Judge, concurring in part and dissenting in part.

The majority has skillfully analyzed a number of very difficult issues, and I concur in parts II and III of its opinion, which affirm Corrente’s and Autiello’s non-RICO-related convictions. As to the RICO-related convictions, I am not persuaded *108 that the majority correctly disregards the jury’s interrogatory answers in conducting its sufficiency review, see ante part I–E, or that it has convincingly fended off defendants’ argument that a municipal entity, which is incapable of being found to have acted with an unlawful purpose, cannot coherently be regarded as a member of an associated-in-fact RICO enterprise that is defined by the shared unlawful purposes of its associates, see ante part I–B. But even if I assume that the jury’s interrogatory answers are irrelevant and that municipal entities can be named as associates of the type of RICO enterprise that was alleged in this case, I still must dissent from the majority’s conclusion that there is sufficient record evidence to sustain defendants’ RICO-related convictions. In my view, the RICO-related judgments (including the forfeiture judgment) should be reversed and this matter should be remanded for resentencing.

The majority has done an excellent job of summarizing the relevant legal principles, the nature of the associated-in-fact RICO enterprise alleged in this case, and the pattern of racketeering activity underlying the RICO and RICO conspiracy allegations. See ante at 78–81 & 81–82. I adopt this discussion by reference and turn to the particulars of the argument I find persuasive.

Defendants contest their RICO-related convictions, in part, on the ground that the evidence introduced at trial in support of the nine alleged schemes was inadequate to establish that the schemes were conducted through the amalgam of persons and entities alleged in the indictment to have constituted the RICO enterprise. Defendants premise this argument on an underlying assertion that there was no proof to ground an inference of a shared purpose among defendants and all of the municipal entities named as associates of the enterprise—a required finding (at least usually, see ante at 82) if an unlawful criminal association is to be regarded as a RICO enterprise. Defendants say that their position is bolstered by two “findings” made by the district court and not contradicted by the government (or at least not clearly so): (1) “there is no evidence that the [City] departments and/or agencies, themselves, shared [the enterprise's] purposes,” United States v. Cianci, 210 F.Supp.2d 71, 73 (D.R.I.2002), and (2) “none of [defendants'] acts ... resulted in any significant disruption of a Governmental function.” Thus, the argument goes, even if we were to assess the adequacy of the evidence supporting the RICO convictions by looking at the whole record and construing it in favor of the government (despite the nine judgments of acquittal entered by the district court and the special interrogatory answers collectively indicating that much of the government's RICO case was not “proven”), we would find only a few, relatively inconsequential interactions between the defendants and these municipal entities during the nearly eight years the enterprise was alleged to have existed.

The government's response tracks the grounds on which the district court rejected the defendants' motions for judgments of acquittal: (1) we should follow the Ninth Circuit and hold that “RICO does not require intentional or ‘purposeful’ behavior by corporations charged as members of an association-in-fact,” United States v. Feldman, 853 F.2d 648, 657 (9th Cir.1988); and (2) the jury's enterprise finding was sufficiently supported by evidence that Cianci and Corrente (Autiello, who was not a municipal employee, is not mentioned) “using the Office of the Mayor and the Office of Director of Administration as base camps, ... controlled” the municipal entities named as enterprise associates. The government's first suggestion, *109 that we reject defendants' argument on the basis of the Feldman principle, faces insurmountable obstacles. This court has identified the “common purpose” requirement discussed in United States v. Turkette, 452 U.S. 576, 580–83, 101 S.Ct. 2524, 69 L.Ed.2d 246 (1981), as one of the principal tools a factfinder should use to distinguish a RICO enterprise from an ad hoc criminal confederation. See ante at 82; see also Ryan v. Clemente, 901 F.2d 177, 180 (1st Cir.1990) (emphasizing that the common purpose requirement is necessary to “limit the potentially boundless scope of the word ‘enterprise’ ” and thereby “distinguish culpable, from non-culpable, associations”).<sup>1</sup> Indeed, we have applied the requirement (albeit without acknowledging Feldman) in a case involving an unlawful purpose RICO association-in-fact involving corporate legal entities. See United States v. London, 66 F.3d 1227, 1243–45 (1st Cir.1995). Moreover, and decisively, the district court instructed the jury without objection from the government: “[I]t is not necessary in proving the existence of an enterprise to show that each member of the enterprise participated in or even knew of all of its activities, but it is necessary to show that all members of the alleged enterprise shared a common purpose.” The government has not attempted to reconcile Feldman with Turkette, Ryan, London, or our other cases applying Turkette. See ante at 82. Thus, as the majority concedes, we cannot disregard the common-purpose instruction in analyzing defendants' sufficiency challenges. See ante at 84–85 (citing United States v. Zanghi, 189 F.3d 71, 79–80 (1st Cir.1999)). The question whether Feldman correctly states the law must be left to another day.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Ryan, which was authored by then-Judge Breyer, involved a civil RICO claim, but precedent generated in civil RICO cases applies to criminal RICO cases. See United States v. Shifman, 124 F.3d 31, 35 n. 1 (1st Cir.1997).

<sup>2</sup> Even under the Feldman approach, the court still would face the question whether entities not controlled by those accused of operating the alleged association-in-fact enterprise are properly considered part of such an enterprise. For the reasons that follow, I do not think that they are. Thus, my conclusion that the Feldman rule does not apply under the facts of this case is not outcome determinative.

This leaves the government's undeveloped assertion—an assertion that the majority finds convincing—that the jury's enterprise finding is sustainable because there was evidence that Cianci and Corrente exercised “control” over the municipal entities named as members of the enterprise. Because the common-purpose instruction binds for purposes of our analysis, I shall assume that the government intends by this assertion to argue that such “control” is sufficient to impute to the entities the unlawful purposes of those alleged to control them—i.e., Cianci and Corrente. Compare London, 66 F.3d at 1243–45 (involving closely held corporations operated by the defendant and alleged to be members of his unlawful associated-in-fact RICO enterprise); United States v. Masters, 924 F.2d 1362, 1366–67 (7th Cir.1991) (involving a law firm and two police departments associated in fact with those who controlled or manipulated them). I also shall assume that it would be fair to sustain the defendants' convictions on evidence of such control, notwithstanding the absence of jury instructions explaining that a municipal entity's "purposes" may be so ascertained. Even so, I do not see how the convictions can stand.

In my view, there is no proof that Cianci and Corrente so controlled the activities of all the municipal entities alleged to be associates of the charged enterprise that the two's shared criminal purposes are *110 reasonably imputed to each such entity. There is no evidence that, for example, Cianci and Corrente themselves could provide those willing to pay bribes with jobs in City departments over which they lacked hiring authority; or that they could contractually bind City departments under separate leadership; or that they could sell City property; or that they could grant or deny construction variances. Nor did the government show that the persons, committees, and boards within the municipal departments, offices, and agencies whose assistance the schemes required abdicated their decision-making responsibilities to Cianci or Corrente.<sup>3</sup> In short, neither Cianci nor Corrente was shown to have so dominated the affairs of the departments, offices, and agencies claimed to be associated with the unlawful purpose enterprise that each of these municipal entities might fairly be found to have been an alter ego of Cianci or Corrente with respect to the transactions in question.<sup>4</sup> Rather, the evidence showed only that Cianci and Corrente periodically used the power inherent in their positions to influence (or attempt to influence)<sup>5</sup> the decisions *111 of other municipal actors—actors who, with the exceptions noted in the preceding footnote, were not shown to be privy to, let alone supportive of, the alleged enterprise's purposes.

<sup>3</sup> This statement is subject to the following two qualifications. First, the jury could have found that Corrente himself had the ability to dictate which towers were placed on the police department's tow list. Second, the jury could have found that the Board of Tax Assessment Review was effectively controlled by Cianci and Corrente through the corrupt machinations of RICO co-conspirators Joseph Pannone (BTAR's Chairman) and David Ead (BTAR's Vice-Chairman).

<sup>4</sup> By this statement, I do not mean to imply that those municipal actors to whom Cianci and Corrente directed their successful requests and demands (compare infra note 5) always acted within standard operating procedures or even lawfully. To the contrary, as the majority explains it:

[T]he evidence depicted a behavioral spectrum ranging from innocent cooperation to willful complicity in unlawful conduct. For example, with respect to the Freitas Invoices scheme, the evidence was merely that an employee within the City's Finance Department (Lorraine Lisi), acting at Corrente's request, paid valid invoices more promptly than usual. Similarly, with respect to the Ise Job scheme, the evidence was merely that the Deputy Director of the Department of Planning and Development (Thomas Deller) created a temporary position for Ise within the department at Cianci's request. At the more culpable end of the spectrum, however, there was evidence that, in connection with the Jere Lease scheme, the head of the Department of Public Property (Alan Sepe) and the Director of Business Relations for the School Department (Mark Dunham) were influenced by Corrente to tailor the specifications in a School Department lease bid to fit the dimensions of Jere Realty's building, and then to support the Jere Realty lease before the Board of Contract and Supply (which was the entity formally empowered to accept or reject bids of City contracts). Similarly, in connection with the Freitas Lease scheme, there was evidence that Corrente again contacted Dunham prior to finalization of the lease and influenced him to drop consideration of an alternative lease.

Ante at 85 n. 3. But importantly, even in connection with these latter two schemes, Sepe and Dunham were not shown to have known of and willingly joined the alleged RICO enterprise conspiracy. Nor was there a basis for finding that a majority of the Board of Contract and Supply, the entity which ultimately voted to accept the Jere Realty lease, did so for purposes of furthering the alleged RICO enterprise conspiracy, or even with knowledge that it was ratifying a contract that had been formed in disregard of standard operating procedures.

<sup>5</sup> The majority acknowledges that Cianci and Corrente "did not always get their way...." Ante at

87. As the majority notes, there was uncontradicted evidence that, in connection with the Freitas Lots scheme, Cianci was displeased that elements within the Providence Redevelopment Agency, the entity empowered to sell the lots, did not sufficiently accede to his wishes. See id. n. 7. There also was uncontradicted evidence that, in connection with the University Club scheme, Cianci was angered when members of the Providence Building Board of Review ignored his wishes and granted the club some of the variances that it sought. See id. Finally, there was uncontradicted evidence that, in connection with the Maggiacomo Job scheme, the Chief of Police declined to admit Maggiacomo to the police academy because he had a criminal history and had been untruthful during a screening interview. See id.

The majority suggests that this evidence “does not defeat the integrity of the charged enterprise” because the jury could have concluded that “these glitches in the schemes only meant that certain substantive crimes went uncompleted....” Id. With respect, I think that the evidence is more telling on the point in question—whether there was sufficient evidence that Cianci and Corrente so controlled the Providence Redevelopment Agency, the Providence Building Board of Review, and the Department of Public Safety that their unlawful purposes should be imputed to these entities—than the majority acknowledges. There was, after all (and as the majority concedes, see ante at 84), no other evidence from which the jury might have found that defendants controlled these agencies (or at least relevantly so).

The question arises why this evidence of influence is not sufficient to make the persons and entities influenced part of the alleged enterprise. The answer, I believe, lies in the fact that we are here deciding what is required for membership in an associated-in-fact RICO enterprise defined only by the common unlawful purposes of its members. This is a highly ramified decision with implications, criminal and civil, that extend far beyond this case. Were we to permit a person or entity to be named part of an unlawful purpose enterprise on mere evidence that the person or entity acceded to a mobster's request (but without knowledge of the purposes underlying the request), we would be heading down the slippery slope against which then-Judge Breyer warned in Ryan: that of failing to differentiate between associations that fall within the sweep of RICO and associations involving only the exploitation of others by criminals. See 901 F.2d at 180–81 (emphasizing the need to limit “the potentially boundless scope of the word ‘enterprise’ so as to distinguish culpable from non-culpable associations,” and recognizing “the serious consequences for any man or woman, state official or private person, who is publicly accused of racketeering”); see also Fitzgerald v. Chrysler Corp., 116 F.3d 225, 226–28 (7th Cir.1997).<sup>6</sup> As Ryan suggests, membership in an unlawful purpose RICO enterprise implies potential culpability under the RICO statute. See 901 F.2d at 181; see also 18 U.S.C. § 1962(d) (allowing for the imposition of RICO liability under conspiracy principles). Thus, as a matter of logic (not to mention due process), one who lacks the mental state necessary for the imposition of RICO liability because he is unaware of the enterprise or its purposes also lacks the mental state necessary to be part of a RICO enterprise that is defined solely by the shared, culpable mental state of its members. This is ultimately what, in my view, dooms the government's enterprise allegations in this case.

<sup>6</sup> To illustrate, suppose there was evidence that a young law school graduate made a $5,000 “campaign contribution” to Cianci and asked for a recommendation to the hiring partner of a Providence law firm that does a substantial amount of city business. Suppose further that there was evidence that Cianci called the firm's hiring partner and asked that the firm give serious consideration to hiring the young lawyer. If the firm did so, would it become a member of the common purpose enterprise alleged in this case? If the answer is “no” (as I think it clearly should be), on what principled basis can we find that the Department of Planning and Development—the agency that created a temporary position for Christopher Ise at the request of Cianci—was proved to be part of the enterprise?

There was in this case significant evidence of public corruption. Perhaps the *112 government could have proved that Cianci and Corrente ran the Office of the Mayor or the Office of the Director of Administration as a RICO enterprise. Or perhaps the defendants (or, more likely, a subset thereof) might have been shown to be members of one or more smaller, associated-in-fact RICO enterprises. But the government successfully persuaded the grand jury to cast a wider net and to allege that the persons named as enterprise associates, along with the campaign contribution fund, the City of Providence, and many of its departments, offices and agencies, functioned as a de facto organized crime syndicate. Framing the case in this way permitted the government to allege that defendants were responsible under RICO's conspiracy provision for all of the illegal and unethical conduct put on display in this trial—even that in which they were not shown to have personally participated.<sup>7</sup> But this broad case theory obligated the government to prove that each municipal entity alleged to have engaged in conduct that constituted part of the “pattern of racketeering activity” identified in the indictment was itself a member of the enterprise. As another court has put it:

<sup>7</sup> For example, Autiello was responsible under RICO for the unlawful conduct underlying the Freitas Lease and Freitas Invoice schemes—schemes on which the jury returned substantive convictions but in which he was not involved—on the theory that he was a member of a conspiracy to conduct the enterprise that carried out these schemes.

[I]t must be stressed that the government, through its ability to craft indictments, is the master of the scope of the charged RICO conspiracy.... [RICO's conspiracy provision] is capable of providing for the linkage in one proceeding of a number of otherwise distinct crimes and/or conspiracies through the concept of enterprise conspiracy. The government, through the vehicle of the indictment, provides the linking conspiratorial objective of a specific RICO violation. The “specific” violation can be broad or narrow. It is the prosecution which sets the parameters to which a RICO conspiracy trial must be confined; having set the stage, the government must be satisfied with the limits of its own creation.

United States v. Weissman, 899 F.2d 1111, 1115 (11th Cir.1990) (quoting United States v. Neapolitan, 791 F.2d 489, 501 (7th Cir.1986)) (internal quotation marks omitted; emphasis in original).

RICO is a powerful weapon that can cause mischief if abused by an overzealous prosecutor.<sup>8</sup> While I do not doubt that RICO will sometimes apply in cases of political corruption, I fear the consequences of making the statute too easy to invoke—or too easy to apply broadly—in the political context, where persons who have made a contribution to a politician routinely receive favorable treatment from offices or agencies over which the politician has influence. I therefore agree with Justice Breyer that we must place comprehensible limits on RICO's reach and that an important way of cabining the statute is to require true culpability before one may be named part of an associated-in-fact RICO enterprise defined by the common unlawful purposes of its constituents. See Ryan, 901 F.2d at 180–81. Such a limitation helps to ensure that cases involving claims of political corruption will not also inevitably give rise to a RICO charge, and that cases involving multiple acts of common law fraud will not also inevitably give rise to civil liability under the statute.

<sup>8</sup> I am speaking generally here and in no way intend to impugn those who brought this case. Indeed, there is no reason to doubt that the government's enterprise allegations were made in a good faith attempt to comply with circuit precedent in this tricky area of the law.

*113 In this case, the government proved only that many of the municipal entities named in the indictment were used as tools by defendants. For reasons I have explained, this is not enough to prove that these entities were part of a RICO enterprise defined only by the shared unlawful goals of its members. Thus, the government failed to prove the existence of the enterprise alleged in connection with the RICO counts, and the RICO convictions cannot stand. See United States v. Morales, 185 F.3d 74, 80–82 (2d Cir.1999) (reversing on sufficiency grounds where the proof failed as to the specific enterprise charged in the indictment); Weissman, 899 F.2d at 1113–15 (vacating a conviction obtained after the trial court constructively amended the indictment in a supplemental jury instruction by permitting the jury to find a different enterprise than that charged in the indictment).

I respectfully dissent from part I of the majority opinion and would not reach the issues addressed in parts IV–VI (which are rendered immaterial by my conclusion that the defendants' RICO-related convictions must be reversed).

All Citations

378 F.3d 71, 64 Fed. R. Evid. Serv. 1208

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-60

I. Introduction

1. My name is Jack Goldsmith. I have been asked by Claimant ICM Registry, LLC, to give an opinion on certain questions of conflicts of law, international law, and Internet law as they relate to the captioned Request for Independent Review.

2. I am the Henry L. Shattuck Professor of Law at Harvard Law School. I have also been on the faculties of the University of Chicago Law School (1997-2003) and the University of Virginia Law School (1994-1997; 2003-2004). My fields of academic research, scholarship, and teaching include public international law, conflicts of law, and the law of the Internet. I have published numerous law review articles in these fields in, among other places, the Harvard Law Review, the Yale Law Journal, the University of Chicago Law Review, and the European Journal of International Law. I am also the co-author of, among other publications, Who Controls The Internet?: Illusions of a Borderless World (2006), and The Limits of International Law (2005). In addition, I am a member of the State Department Advisory Committee on International Law, the American Society of International Law, and the National Academy of Science Study of the Policy Consequences and Legal Ethical Implications of Offensive Information Warfare.

3. Before teaching at Harvard Law School, I was Assistant Attorney General, Office of Legal Counsel from 2003 to 2004, and Special Counsel to the General Counsel of the Department of Defense from 2002 to 2003. In addition, from 1991 to 1992, I was a legal assistant at the Iran-U.S. Claims Tribunal in The Hague, where I assisted George Aldrich, one of the American arbitrators.

4. I received a B.A., summa cum laude, from Washington and Lee University (1984), a B.A., first class honours, from Oxford University (1986), a J.D. from Yale Law School (1989), and a Diploma in Private International Law from the Hague Academy (1992). I am admitted to practice law in Washington, D.C. (1993). My CV, including a complete list of my scholarship, is attached as Exhibit A.

II. Background and Scope of Analysis

5. The Internet is the global network of computers that communicate with one another through a decentralized data routing mechanism. The Internet is, however, centralized in one crucial respect: its naming and numbering system. This system matches the unique Internet Protocol address of each computer in the world (for example, 123.456.78.912) with a recognizable “domain name” like <mcdonalds.com> or <whitehouse.gov> or <metmuseum.org.> Computers around the world are able to find and communicate with one another on the Internet because these Internet Protocol addresses uniquely and reliably correlate with domain names.

6. Some organization must ensure that this crucial naming and numbering system operates properly. Some organization must also decide which top-level domains (such as .COM, .GOV, and .ORG) shall exist. And some organization must administer the distribution and use of these top-level domains. From the 1970s until the late 1990s, these and related functions were performed by the Internet Assigned Numbers Authority (“IANA”), an informal organization run by Professor Jon Postel at the University of Southern California, pursuant to various contracts and understandings with the U.S. government.<sup>1</sup> Since the late 1990s, these functions have been performed by the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (“ICANN”).

---

<sup>1</sup> See MILTON L. MUELLER, RULING THE ROOT: INTERNET GOVERNANCE AND THE TAMING OF CYBERSPACE 73-104 (2002); A. Michael Froomkin, Wrong Turn in Cyberspace: Using ICANN to Route Around the APA and the Constitution, 50 DUKE LAW J. 17, 51-69 (2000).

7. ICANN is a California non-profit corporation headquartered in Marina Del Rey, California. But it is perhaps the most unusual and powerful non-profit corporation in the world, for it creates and distributes billions of dollars of global property rights on the Internet. The mismatch between ICANN's ostensible private status and its plenary governance authority over one of the globe's most important resources generated significant controversy at ICANN's inception. The nub of the controversy was that ICANN's extraordinary authority over the Internet was untempered by any form of administrative law or other checks and balances that usually accompany such large exercises of effective governmental power.<sup>2</sup>

8. In Article 4 of its Articles of Incorporation, ICANN assumed obligations, including obligations under international law. These obligations were designed to add legitimacy to ICANN's decisions and to address the concerns of those in the United States and the international community who believed that ICANN is, and should function as, an international organization. The original draft of ICANN's Articles of Incorporation did not contain any reference to international law. The first version of what became Article 4 of the Articles was introduced in the "fifth iteration" of the draft Articles of Incorporation in September 1998. It provided:

The Corporation shall operate for the benefit of the Internet community as a whole, carrying out its activities with due regard for applicable local and international law and, to the extent appropriate and consistent with these Articles and its Bylaws, through open and transparent processes that enable competition and open entry in Internet-related markets.<sup>3</sup>

---

<sup>2</sup> See, e.g., MUELLER, supra note 1, at 1-11, 141-184; Jonathan Weinberg, ICANN and the Problem of Legitimacy, 50 DUKE L.J. 187, 212-217 (2000).

<sup>3</sup> See Internet Assigned Numbers Authority, Draft Articles of Incorporation – Fifth Iteration, available at <http://web.archive.org/web/19990220074640/www.iana.org/articles5.html>.

This “fifth iteration” draft explained that Article 4 “was added in response to various suggestions to recognize the special nature of this organization and the general principles under which it will operate.”<sup>4</sup>

9. This initial effort to acknowledge ICANN’s “special nature” and “the general principles under which it will operate” was viewed as inadequate. On November 21, 1998, following discussions with U.S. government officials, the ICANN Board of Directors held a special meeting “to approve revisions of the Corporation’s articles of incorporation and bylaws.”<sup>5</sup> The Board voted to revise Article 4 to what became its final version:

The Corporation shall operate for the benefit of the Internet community as a whole, carrying out its activities in conformity with relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions and local law and, to the extent appropriate and consistent with these Articles and its Bylaws, through open and transparent processes that enable competition and open entry in Internet-related markets. To this effect, the Corporation shall cooperate as appropriate with relevant international organizations.

This final version of Article 4 amplified ICANN’s international law obligations. While the original version obliged ICANN to carry out its activities “with due regard for applicable . . . international law,” the final version obliged ICANN to carry out its activities “in conformity with relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions.” As ICANN’s Interim Chairman of the Board explained to the Department of Commerce, these and other changes made to its Articles “reflect emerging consensus about our governance and structure.”<sup>6</sup> She added that Article 4 in particular “mak[es] it clear that ICANN will comply with relevant and applicable international and local law.”<sup>7</sup>

---

<sup>4</sup> Id.

<sup>5</sup> See Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers, Minutes of Special Meeting (Nov. 21, 1998), available at <http://www.icann.org/en/minutes/minutes-21nov98.html>.

10. ICANN in its Bylaws took complementary steps to bring basic due process mechanisms, including checks and balances, to its decision-making.<sup>8</sup> Article 3(1) of the Bylaws provides that the corporation “shall operate to the maximum extent feasible in an open and transparent manner and consistent with procedures designed to ensure fairness.” The Bylaws further state that “[i]n carrying out its mission as set out in these Bylaws, ICANN should be accountable to the community for operating in a manner that is consistent with these Bylaws, and with due regard for the core values set forth in Article I of these Bylaws.”<sup>9</sup> These core values include “open and transparent policy development mechanisms that . . . promote well-informed decisions based on expert advice,” and a requirement to make decisions “by applying documented policies neutrally and objectively, with integrity and fairness.”<sup>10</sup>

11. The Bylaws additionally require ICANN to “have in place a separate process for independent third-party review of Board actions alleged by an affected party

---

<sup>6</sup> Joint Hearings before the Committee on Science Subcommittee on Basic Research and Subcommittee on Technology To Consider Department of Commerce Discussion Draft Proposal To Restructure and Privatize the Internet Domain Name System (DNS), 105th Cong. 336 (1998) (Letter of Nov. 23, 1998 from Ester Dyson, ICANN Interim Chairman of the Board, to J. Beckwith Burr, Acting Associate Administrator, National Telecommunications and Information Administration, United States Department of Commerce)

<sup>7</sup> Id.

<sup>8</sup> Bylaws for Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers, art. IV, § 3(b) (May 29, 2008), available at <http://www.icann.org/general/bylaws.htm>.

<sup>9</sup> Id. at art. IV, § 1.

<sup>10</sup> Id. at art. I, § 2.

to be inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws.”<sup>11</sup> When a party affected by an adverse ICANN Board decision submits a request for “independent review” of the decision, the Independent Review Panel (“IRP”) “shall be charged with comparing contested actions of the Board to the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, and with declaring whether the Board has acted consistently with the provisions of those Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws.”<sup>12</sup>

12. This review process emerged from what ICANN’s first Chairman of the Board described as the “need for a way to obtain recourse in the event that someone may believe ICANN or its staff has broken our own bylaws or otherwise not followed the rules that we have set up for ourselves and our successors.”<sup>13</sup> The process was included in ICANN’s Bylaws at “the insistence of the U.S. government” as a condition for delegating its control over the Internet’s naming and numbering system to ICANN.<sup>14</sup> As Paul Twomey, ICANN’s President and CEO, recently told Congress, the “independent review panel and independent arbitration” are the ultimate guarantors of ICANN’s “accountability in its decision making.”<sup>15</sup>

13. This is the first ICANN IRP ever formed. The issue before the IRP grows out of ICANN’s rejection of an application by Claimant ICM Registry, LLC (“ICM”), a

---

<sup>11</sup> Id. at art. IV, § 3(1).

<sup>12</sup> Id. at art. IV, § 3(3).

<sup>13</sup> Letter from Ester Dyson, supra note 6.

<sup>14</sup> See Weinberg, supra note 2, at 228-229 & nn. 211-213.

<sup>15</sup> ICANN Internet Governance: Is It Working?, Hearing Before the H. Subcommittee on Commerce, Trade, and Consumer Protection and Subcommittee on Telecommunications and the Internet of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, 109th Cong. 19 (2006).

Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in Jupiter, Florida, for a sponsored top-level domain (“sTLD”). ICM alleges that ICANN had determined that it qualified for a sTLD under a detailed “request for proposal” but then, under belated pressure from national governments and the Government Advisory Committee (“GAC”), changed its mind and rejected ICM’s application. ICM further alleges that ICANN’s decision to deny ICM the .XXX sTLD, and the process leading up to that decision, were arbitrary, lacking in transparency, discriminatory, contrary to ICANN’s evaluation criteria, and outside ICANN’s mission, all in violation of ICANN’s Articles and Bylaws as well as international law and local law.

14. This Report will address some of the international law, conflicts of law, and Internet law issues raised by these allegations. Part III will explain why international law matters in this proceeding. Part IV will explain why the phrase “relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions” in Article 4 of ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation includes general principles of law. Part V will describe the content of some of the general principles of law that apply in this Review.

III. Why International Law Matters in This Proceeding

15. ICANN Bylaws require the IRP to determine whether an ICANN Board decision is consistent with ICANN's Bylaws and Articles of Incorporation. Article 4 of the ICANN Articles states that ICANN "shall . . . carry[] out its activities in conformity with relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions and local law. . . ."<sup>16</sup> It follows straightforwardly from these provisions that this IRP must determine whether ICANN's decision to deny ICM a .XXX sTLD, as well as the process leading to that decision, were consistent with "relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions and local law."

16. The IRP can reach this conclusion about governing law, and in particular about international law's relevance, without a choice-of-law analysis. But if the IRP performs a choice-of-law analysis, it will reach the same conclusion. This Independent Review is governed by the International Arbitration Rules of the American Arbitration Association's International Centre for Dispute Resolution Procedures (hereinafter "ICDR Rules"), as modified by the Supplementary Procedures for Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (ICANN) Independent Review Process.<sup>17</sup> Article 28 of the ICDR Rules provides that "[t]he tribunal shall apply the substantive law(s) or rules of law designated by the parties as applicable to the dispute.”<sup>18</sup> The parties to this dispute have designated the laws contained in Article 4 as applicable to this dispute.

---

<sup>16</sup> Articles of Incorporation of Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers, art. 4 (Nov. 21, 1998), available at <http://www.icann.org/general/articles.htm>.

<sup>17</sup> See American Arbitration Association, International Dispute Resolution Procedures [hereinafter IDRPs], available at <http://www.adr.org/sp.asp?id=33994>; Supplementary Procedures for Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (ICANN) Independent Review Process, available at <http://www.adr.org/sp.asp?id=32197>.

17. An offer to arbitrate can be contained in a corporate charter or corporate bylaws.<sup>19</sup> Such charters and bylaws typically concern arbitration with shareholders or partners, but there is no reason that a corporation’s charter or bylaws could not include an offer to arbitrate with affected third parties.<sup>20</sup> It is also well established that a party’s participation in arbitral proceedings without protest can be the basis for a valid arbitration agreement.<sup>21</sup> Indeed, the ICDR Rules provide that any objections to arbitral jurisdiction must be raised in the statement of defense or are waived.<sup>22</sup>

18. Just as a corporate charter or corporate bylaws can contain an arbitration agreement, so too they can contain a governing law clause. In addition, parties can consent to governing law through other methods that reveal unambiguous intent. As Born’s treatise notes, “[c]hoice-of-law agreements may be implied or tacit, as well as express. This is recognized in all developed legal systems and has particular importance

---

<sup>18</sup> See id. at art. 28(1).

<sup>19</sup> See, e.g., UNIF. ARBITRATION ACT § 6, cmt. 1, 7 U.L.A. 14-15 (2005) (citing authorities); GARY B. BORN, INTERNATIONAL COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION 1223-26 (2009) (same).

<sup>20</sup> Cf. Jan Paulsson, Arbitration Without Privity, 10 ICSID REVIEW 232 (1995).

<sup>21</sup> See, e.g., BORN, supra note 19, at 672 (citing arbitration legislation, national court decisions, and arbitral institution rules for proposition that “a party’s tacit acceptance of its counterparty’s initiation of arbitration, through participation in the arbitral proceedings without raising a jurisdictional objection, can provide the basis for a valid agreement to arbitrate.”).

<sup>22</sup> See IDRPs Procedures, supra note 17, arts. 3, 15(3).

in the context of international commercial arbitration.”<sup>23</sup> Moreover, parties, including private parties, can choose to have their dispute governed by international law, including general principles of law.<sup>24</sup> In fact, Article 28’s reference to “rules of law” is a standard way to establish that parties can choose non-national laws, including international law, to govern their disputes.<sup>25</sup>

19. Putting these principles together and applying them to this case, ICM and ICANN have agreed to arbitrate whether ICANN’s denial of ICM’s application for a .XXX sTLD (as well as the process leading to that denial) complied with “relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions and local law.” The Bylaws establish an offer to arbitrate board decisions under a standard of review of consistency with, among other things, “principles of international law.” ICM accepted this offer when it brought this proceeding, effectively establishing an agreement to arbitrate and an agreement on governing law. Any uncertainty in the nature or scope of the agreement on arbitration and governing law was resolved by ICANN’s Response, which acknowledged that the IRP must assess the consistency of its actions against the Articles of Incorporation, including Article 4’s international law standard.

20. The same conclusion follows even if the parties have not effectively designated the governing laws or rules of law. In such a case, Article 28(1) of the ICDR

---

<sup>23</sup> BORN, s upra note 19, at 2207; see also ALAN REDFERN & MARTIN HUNTER (WITH NIGEL BLACKABY & CONSTANTINE PARTASIDES), LAW AND PRACTICE OF INTERNATIONAL COMMERCIAL ARBITRATION 2-76 (4th ed. 2004).

<sup>24</sup> See REDFERN & HUNTER, s upra note 23, at 2-46 (noting that there is “no reason in principle” why private parties and corporations “should not select public international law, or alternatively the general principles of law, as the law which is to govern their contractual relationship”).

<sup>25</sup> See, e.g., BORN, s upra note 19, at 2144.

Rules requires the IRP to apply the “appropriate” law. The “appropriate” starting place for determining whether ICANN has acted consistent with its Articles and Bylaws (including the international law obligations it assumed in the Articles) is almost certainly California law.<sup>26</sup> California law permits a non-profit corporation like ICANN to limit its powers in its Articles of Incorporation without qualification.<sup>27</sup> And ICANN has in fact limited its power by agreeing to act in conformity with “relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions and local law.” As a result, and once again, the IRP must assess whether ICANN’s actions are consistent with these laws in Article 4.

21. In sum, in an attempt to bring accountability and thus legitimacy to its decisions, ICANN (a) assumed in its Articles of Incorporation an obligation to act in conformity with “relevant principles of international law,” and (b) in its Bylaws extended to adversely affected third parties a novel right of independent review in this arbitration proceeding for consistency with ICANN’s Articles and Bylaws. The parties have agreed to international arbitration in this forum to determine consistency with the international law standards set forth in Article 4 of the Articles of Incorporation. California law allows a California non-profit corporation to bind itself in this way.

---

<sup>26</sup> This is so because, among other reasons, California law is “local law” within the meaning of Article 4 of the Articles of Incorporation and the law that would be chosen by all relevant state or national choice-of-law rules.

<sup>27</sup> See Cal. Corp. Code §§ 5131, 5140 (2007) (recognizing that a California nonprofit corporation’s “articles of incorporation may set forth a further statement limiting the purposes or powers of the corporation,” and that such a corporation has the powers of a natural person “[s]ubject to any limitations contained in the articles or bylaws.”) (emphases added).

IV. The Meaning of Article IV

22. The phrase “principles of international law and applicable international conventions and local law” refers to three types of law. “Local law” means California law. “Applicable international conventions” refers to treaties. The term “principles of international law” includes general principles of law.<sup>28</sup>

23. The place to begin for understanding the meaning of “principles of international law” is Article 38 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice (“ICJ”), which has become the canonical reference for the sources of international law. It lists three primary sources of international law that the ICJ shall apply:

- a. international conventions, whether general or particular, establishing rules expressly recognized by the contesting states;
- b. international custom, as evidence of a general practice accepted as law;
- c. the general principles of law recognized by civilized nations; . . .<sup>29</sup>

The phrase “principles of international law” would normally be interpreted to include all three of these sources. Since the first one, “international conventions,” is specified in the ICANN Articles, the reference to “principles of international law” in the Articles refers to the last two, customary international law and general principles of law.<sup>30</sup>

---

<sup>28</sup> I also believe the phrase includes customary international law, but ICM has not asked me to address issues of customary international law in this Report.

<sup>29</sup> Statute of the International Court of Justice art. 38, June 26, 1945, 59 Stat. 1055, 33 U.N.T.S 993.

<sup>30</sup> It is conceivable that the reference to “principles of international law” (as opposed to “rules” of international law or merely “international law”) was meant to pick out “general principles” but exclude customary international law. I doubt this is the correct interpretation. I know of no precedent for an entity to hold itself accountable to treaties and general principles and not custom, and I know of no reason why ICANN would wish to organize itself in this way. But in any event the important point is that Article 4 is best read to include a requirement to act in conformity with general principles of law.

24. This conclusion is confirmed by the drafting history of the ICANN Articles of Incorporation. As noted above, a draft of the Articles assumed an obligation to give “due regard” to “applicable . . . international law,” a reference that would naturally have meant all three of the sources in Article 38 of the ICJ Statute. The final draft changed the standard of compliance from “due regard” to “conformity,” and changed “applicable . . . international law” to “relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions.” This change ratcheted up ICANN’s standard of compliance, for “conformity” is more demanding than “due regard.” And it clarified that its commitment to international law extended to international law in all its forms.

25. This interpretation of “principles of international law” is further confirmed by the interpretation given to similar provisions in many other international law instruments. Most analogous is the Iran-U.S. Claims Tribunal, which is charged with applying “principles of commercial and international law as the Tribunal determines to be applicable.”<sup>31</sup> The Tribunal has interpreted this phrase to include “general principles of law” and “general principles of international law.”<sup>32</sup> Similarly, Article 31(3)(c) of the Vienna Convention on Treaties provides that, in interpreting treaties, account must be taken of “any relevant rules of international law applicable in the relations between the parties,” a term that has been interpreted to include general principles of law.<sup>33</sup>

---

<sup>31</sup> Declaration of the Government of the Democratic and Popular Republic of Algeria Concerning the Settlement of Claims by the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Islamic Republic of Iran, Jan. 19, 1981, art. V, reprinted in 1 Iran-U.S. Cl. Trib. Rep. 9 (1983) (emphases added).

<sup>32</sup> See Grant Hanessian, General Principles of Law in the Iran-U.S. Claims Tribunal, 27 COLUM. TRANSNAT’L L. 309 (1989) (citing many examples); John R. Crook, Applicable Law in International Arbitration: The Iran-U.S. Claims Tribunal Experience, 83 A.J.I.L. 278 (1989) (same).

Arbitrators in the International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes (“ICSID”) are charged, in the absence of party choice, with applying “such rules of international law as may be applicable.”<sup>34</sup> Both the Report of the ICSID Executive Directors and ICSID Tribunals have interpreted “rules of international law” to include general principles of law.<sup>35</sup> NAFTA Chapter 11 similarly charges a Tribunal with applying “applicable rules of international law,” and that term too has been interpreted to include general principles.<sup>36</sup> In short, references to “principles of international law” and the related phrase “rules of international law” are commonly interpreted to include “general principles.”

26. It is perfectly appropriate to apply “general principles” in this IRP even though ICANN is technically a non-profit corporation and ICM is a private corporation. ICANN voluntarily subjected itself to these general principles in its Articles of Incorporation, something that both California law permits and that is typical in international arbitrations, especially when public goods are at stake. The “international” nature of this arbitration – which is evidenced by the global impact of ICANN’s

---

<sup>33</sup> See, e.g., Appellate Body Report, United States - Import Prohibition of Certain Shrimp and Shrimp Products, ¶158, WT/DS58/AB/R (Oct. 12, 1998).

<sup>34</sup> Convention on the Settlement of Investment Disputes between States and Nationals of Other States art. 42(1), opened for signature Mar. 18, 1965, 17 U.S.T. 1270, 575 U.N.T.S. 159.

<sup>35</sup> See Executive Directors of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, Report of the Executive Directors on the Convention on the Settlement of Investment Disputes Between States and Nationals of Other States, para. 40 (Mar. 18, 1965), available at <http://icsid.worldbank.org/ICSID/StaticFiles/basicdoc/partB.htm>; CHRISTOPH H. SCHREUER, THE ICSID CONVENTION: A COMMENTARY art. 42, para. 113 (2001).

<sup>36</sup> See Methanex Corporation v. United States (NAFTA), Final Award on Jurisdiction and Merits (Ad hoc) (UNCITRAL) (Aug. 3, 2005), at para. II(B)3.

decisions, by ICANN's self-description as a "special . . . organization" that should be governed by international law,<sup>37</sup> and by the fact that ICANN itself chose an international arbitral institution for this Independent Review – confirms the appropriateness of applying general principles. Moreover, ICANN is only nominally a private corporation. It exercises extraordinary authority, delegated from the U.S. Government, over one of the globe's most important resources. Though for reasons just explained its status as a de facto public entity is not necessary for the application of general principles here, its control over the Internet naming and numbering system does make sense of its embrace of the "general principles" standard. As explained above, the Article 4 limitations were a response to ICANN's legitimacy deficit and were designed to bring accountability and international legal order to ICANN's decisions.

27. While there is no doubt that ICANN can and has bound itself to general principles of law as that phrase is understood in international law, there is an issue about how general principles should be applied in conjunction with the other legal limitations ICANN assumed in Article 4, and, in particular, with its duty to act in conformity with "local law." When international law is included in a treaty or governing law clause as a source of law alongside national or local law, arbitrators sometimes conclude that international law, including general principles, should trump when in conflict with national law. Here, however, there are no conflicts between the various forms of law in Article 4. In fact, as explained below, the general principles relevant here complement, amplify, and give detail to the requirements of independence, transparency, and due process that ICANN has otherwise assumed in its Articles and Bylaws and under

---

<sup>37</sup> See infra text accompanying note 4.

California law. General principles thus play their classic supplementary role in this proceeding.

V. The Content of “General Principles of Law” in this Proceeding: Good Faith

28. The analysis thus far has shown that the IRP must assess whether ICANN’s decision to deny ICM a sTLD, and the process leading to that decision, were consistent with ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, and that among the obligations assumed in the Articles was a substantive standard of conformity with general principles of law. I now turn to describe some of the “general principles” that apply in this proceeding.

29. The notion of “general principles” as originally articulated in the Permanent Court of International Justice referred to widely accepted principles recognized in national law, and was designed primarily as a gap-filler to avoid non liquet when treaties and custom did not address an issue. However, as international law has grown during the last sixty years, the concept of “general principles” has expanded to include general principles that emerge across different types of international legal relations and those that inhere in all forms of legal reasoning, domestic and international.<sup>38</sup> Brownlie correctly notes that “general principles” cannot be reduced to a

---

<sup>38</sup> See, e.g., Hermann Mosler, General Principles of Law, in THE ENCYCLOPEDIA OF PUBLIC INTERNATIONAL LAW [hereinafter “ENCYCLOPEDIA”], vol. 2, at 511-512 (1992) (“general principles of law” can mean “principles applied as law generally in national law,” “principles having their origin directly in international legal relations,” and “principles recognized in all kinds of legal relations, regardless of the legal order to which they may belong”).

“rigid categorization of sources,” and that while many such principles can be “traced to state practice,” they are “primarily abstractions from a mass of rules and have been so long and generally accepted as to be no longer directly connected with state practice.”<sup>39</sup>

30. There are many ostensible general principles of law, but perhaps none as settled or important – across domestic legal systems and in international law – as the principle of good faith.<sup>40</sup> The general principle of good faith is “the foundation of all law and all conventions.”<sup>41</sup> As the International Court of Justice has noted, “the principle of good faith is a well-established principle of international law.”<sup>42</sup> It is a fundamental principle of treaty law,<sup>43</sup> of the U.N. Charter,<sup>44</sup> of the law of the World Trade Organization,<sup>45</sup> of international commercial law,<sup>46</sup> and of international investment

---

<sup>39</sup> IAN BROWNLIE, PRINCIPLES OF PUBLIC INTERNATIONAL LAW 19 (7th ed. 2008).

<sup>40</sup> J.F. O’CONNOR, GOOD FAITH IN INTERNATIONAL LAW 35 (1991) (noting that “[t]he principle of good faith probably receives more unqualified acceptance than any other in international law”).

<sup>41</sup> BIN CHENG, GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF LAW AS APPLIED BY INTERNATIONAL COURTS AND TRIBUNALS 105 (quoting Megalidis Case, 8 T.A.M. 386, 395 (1928)); see also MALCOLM SHAW, INTERNATIONAL LAW 97 (2002) (“[p]erhaps the most important general principle, underpinning many international legal rules, is that of good faith”).

<sup>42</sup> Land and Maritime Boundary (Cameroon v. Nig.), 1998 I.C.J. 275, 296 (June 11).

<sup>43</sup> See Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, preamble (“Noting that the principles of free consent and of good faith and the pacta sunt servanda rule are universally recognized”) (emphasis added); art. 26 (“Every treaty in force is binding upon the parties to it and must be performed by them in good faith.”); art. 31(1) (“A treaty shall be interpreted in good faith . . .”).

<sup>44</sup> U.N. Charter, art. 2, para. 2 (“All Members, in order to ensure to all of them the rights and benefits resulting from membership, shall fulfill in good faith the obligations assumed by them in accordance with the present Charter.”).

<sup>45</sup> See Helge Elisabeth Zeitler, ‘Good faith’ in the WTO Jurisprudence: Necessary Balancing Element or an Open Door to Judicial Activism, 8(3) J. INT’L ECON. L. 721 (2005).

<sup>46</sup> See UNIDROIT Principles of International Commercial Contracts 2004 [hereinafter “UNIDROIT Principles 2004”], art 1.7, available at <http://www.unidroit.org/english/principles/contracts/main.htm> (“[e]ach party must act in accordance with good faith and fair dealing in international trade”). Note that the UNIDROIT law.<sup>47</sup> Good faith is also a prevalent general principle in domestic commercial laws.<sup>48</sup>

31. ICANN voluntarily held itself to the good faith standard when, in Article 4 of its Articles of Incorporation, it obliged itself to act “in conformity with principles of international law.” The good faith principle has at least three related applications in this proceeding: (a) the requirement of good faith in complying with legal restrictions; (b) the requirement of good faith in the exercise of discretion, also known as the doctrine of non-abuse of rights; and (c) the requirement of good faith in contractual negotiations.

A. Good Faith in Complying With Legal Restrictions

32. As Shaw has noted, summarizing many arbitral decisions, good faith operates as “a background principle informing and shaping the observance of existing rules of international law and in addition constraining the manner in which those rules may legitimately be exercised.”<sup>49</sup> Shaw was writing about the good faith principle as it applied to relations among states governed by international law. But the good faith

---

Principles provide that “[t]hey may be applied when the parties have agreed that their contract be governed by general principles of law,” and as an interpretive guide and supplement to domestic law. UNIDROIT Principles 2004, Preamble.

<sup>47</sup> See, e.g., Tecnicas Medioambientales Tecmed S.A. v. Mexico, Award, May 29, 2004, 43 ILM 133, para. 154; Waste Management v. Mexico, Final Award, Apr. 30, 2004, 43 ILM 967, para. 138; Eureko B.V. v. Poland, Partial Award, Aug. 19, 2005, para. 235; Saluka B.V. v. Czech Republic, Partial Award, Mar. 17, 2006, paras. 361-432.

<sup>48</sup> See, e.g., E. Allan Farnsworth, Duties of Good Faith and Fair Dealing under the UNIDROIT Principles, Relevant International Conventions, and National Laws, 3 TUL. J.INT’L & COMP. L. 47 (1995).

<sup>49</sup> SHAW, supra note 41, at 98 (citing many sources). Shaw’s dictum about good faith applying to extant legal rules explains what the International Court of Justice meant when it said that good faith, while “one of the basic principles governing the creation and performance of legal obligations,” is “not in itself a source of obligation where none would otherwise exist.” Border and Transborder Armed Actions (Nicar. v. Hond.), 1988 I.C.J. 69, 105 (Dec. 20).

principle is “equally applicable to relations between individuals and to relations between nations.”<sup>50</sup>

33. The good faith principle attaches to the obligations and legal limitations that ICANN assumed in its Articles and Bylaws and demands that ICANN comply with them “honestly and fairly.”<sup>51</sup> It “requires that one party should be able to place confidence in the words of the other,” and insists that “promises should be scrupulously kept so that . . . confidence . . . may be reasonably placed upon them.”<sup>52</sup> Similarly, in the investment dispute context, arbitral tribunals have applied the good faith principle, often through the lens of the fair and equitable treatment standard, to require the state to uphold the investor’s legitimate law-based expectations.<sup>53</sup> The principle of good faith also encompasses the related principles of fairness, estoppel, and transparency.

34. Taking ICM’s allegations as true, ICANN acted inconsistently with the good faith standard when it denied ICM’s application for a .XXX sTLD, for ICANN did not apply its rules and procedures honestly and fairly and thus did not fulfill ICM’s legitimate expectations based on these rules and procedures. According to the allegations, ICANN departed from its stated sponsorship criteria and instead used

---

<sup>50</sup> CHENG, supra note 41, at 105.

<sup>51</sup> Anthony D’Amato, Good Faith, in ENCYCLOPEDIA vol. 2, supra note 38, at 599; see also CHENG, supra note 41, at 119. It is important to note that the good faith principle imposes duties on top of ICANN’s many obligations under its Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, and provides a legal framework for the analysis of ICM’s claims that numerous provisions of the Articles and Bylaws, including many that I do not mention here, were violated. My focus in this Report is only on the independent duties arising from ICANN’s decision to conform its behavior to principles of international law.

<sup>52</sup> CHENG, supra note 41, at 107, 119.

<sup>53</sup> See supra note 47.

sponsorship criteria related to vague and undefined public policy and law enforcement concerns that are beyond, and inconsistent with, ICANN's technical mandate. Moreover, ICANN allegedly violated its Bylaws by, among other things, singling out a particular party for disparate treatment and not operating in an open and transparent fashion. These allegations, if true, violate ICANN's good faith obligations.

B. Good Faith In Exercising Discretion: Abuse of Rights

35. Closely related to the general principle of good faith, and indeed a specific application of it, is the general principle of non-abuse of right. The prohibition on abuse of right has many dimensions, but its core meaning is that the exercise of legal discretion or legal rights must be made in good faith.<sup>54</sup>

36. In the United States Nationals in Morocco Case, for example, the ICJ held that French officials in Morocco had the legally circumscribed power to value U.S. goods at the Moroccan border, but concluded that the power "must be exercised reasonably and in good faith."<sup>55</sup> Similarly, in the Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries Case, the ICJ determined that Norway had committed no "manifest abuse" in part because its maritime delineation decisions were "moderate and reasonable."<sup>56</sup> And in the Admissions of a State to the United Nations Case, the ICJ held that Article 4 of the U.N. Charter prescribed the exclusive conditions that states could invoke in determining whether to admit a new

---

<sup>54</sup> See Complaint by United States, United States – Import Prohibition of Certain Shrimp and Shrimp Products, ¶158, WT/DS58/AB/R (1998) (noting that "[o]ne application of this general principle [of good faith], the application widely known as the doctrine of abus de droit, prohibits the abusive exercise of a state's rights"); CHENG, supra note 41, at 121 (noting that the abuse of rights principle "is merely an application of this [good faith] principle to the exercise of rights").

<sup>55</sup> Rights of Nationals of United States of America in Morocco (Fr. v. U.S.), 1952 I.C.J. 176, 212 (Aug. 27).

<sup>56</sup> Anglo-Norwegian Fisheries Case (U.K. v. Nor.), 1951 I.C.J. 116, 141-142 (Dec. 18).

nation to the United Nations, and added that “Article 4 does not forbid the taking of account of any factor which it is possible reasonably and in good faith to connect to the conditions laid down in that Article.”<sup>57</sup>

37. In all of these cases, nations had legally circumscribed discretion to act, but this discretion was tempered by the good faith principle. Cheng deduces from these and many other arbitral decisions the following principle:

Where the right confers upon its owner a discretionary power, this must be exercised honestly, sincerely, reasonably, in conformity with the spirit of the law and with due regard to the interests of others. . . . They must not be exercised fictitiously so as to evade such obligations or rules of law, or maliciously so as to injure others. Violations of these requirements of the principle of good faith constitute abuses of right . . . .<sup>58</sup>

Or as O’Connor states the rule, drawing on subsequent decisions not analyzed by Cheng, “the expression ‘abuse of rights’ may be taken to include cases where a legal right – whether arising from a treaty or by virtue of customary rules – is exercised arbitrarily, maliciously or unreasonably, or fictitiously to evade a legal obligation.”<sup>59</sup>

38. Taking ICM’s allegations as true, ICANN violated the prohibition against abuse of right. There are many possible abuses of right alleged by ICM, but the one that strikes me as most obvious is the clearly fictitious basis ICANN gave for denying ICM’s application. ICANN’s reasons for denial included the following:

---

<sup>57</sup> Conditions of Admission of a State to Membership in the United Nations, 1948 I.C.J. 57, 63 (May 28) (emphasis added).

<sup>58</sup> CHENG, supra note 41, at 136; see also id. at 132-34 (“discretion must be exercised in good faith, and the law will intervene in all cases where this discretion is abused. . . . Whenever, therefore, the owner of a right enjoys a certain discretionary power, this must be exercised in good faith, which means that it must be exercised reasonably, honestly, in conformity with the spirit of the law and with due regard to the interest of others.”).

<sup>59</sup> O’Connor, supra note 40, at 38; see also Alexandre Kiss, Abuse of Rights, in ENCYCLOPEDIA vol 1, at 4 (“In international law, abuse of rights refers to a State exercising a right . . . for an end different from that for which the right was created, to the injury of another state.”).

The ICM Application raises significant law enforcement compliance issues because of countries' varying laws relating to content and practices that define the nature of the application, therefore obligating ICANN to acquire a responsibility related to content and conduct.

The Board agrees with the reference in the GAC communiqué from Lisbon, that under the Revised Agreement, there are credible scenarios that lead to circumstances in which ICANN would be forced to assume an ongoing management and oversight role regarding Internet content, which is inconsistent with its technical mandate.<sup>60</sup>

This explanation appears fictitious, and thus an abuse of right, for at least two reasons.

39. First, the concern about "law enforcement compliance issues because of countries' varying laws relating to content and practices that define the nature of the application" applies to many top-level domains besides .XXX. The website <pornography.com.> would be no less subject to various differing laws around the world than the website <pornography.xxx.> If anything, pornography on a website on the .XXX domain is easier for nations to regulate and exclude from computers in their countries because they can block all sites on the .XXX domain with relative ease but have to look at the content, or make guesses based on domain names, to block unwanted pornography on .COM and other top level domains.<sup>61</sup> In short, this reason for ICANN's denial, if genuine, would extend to many top-level domains and would certainly apply to all generic top-level domains (like .COM,

---

<sup>60</sup> Adopted Resolutions from ICANN Board Meeting (Mar. 30, 2007), available at <http://www.icann.org/en/minutes/resolutions-30mar07.htm>.

<sup>61</sup> On the techniques of Internet content blocking and their effectiveness, see ACCESS DENIED: THE PRACTICE AND POLICY OF GLOBAL INTERNET FILTERING (Ronald Deibert, John Palfrey, Rafal Rohozinski, Jonathan Zittrain, eds., 2008).

.INFO, .NET, and .ORG) where pornographic websites can be found.<sup>62</sup> But ICANN has only applied this reason for denial to the .XXX domain. This strongly suggests that the reasons for the denial are pretextual and thus that the denial is an abuse of right. Under the guise of content-neutrality, ICANN seems to be exercising power in a content-sensitive way; and it appears to be doing so without candor.

40. Second, and similarly pretextual, is ICANN's claim that "there are credible scenarios that lead to circumstances in which ICANN would be forced to assume an ongoing management and oversight role regarding Internet content." In fact it is hard to imagine such circumstances. In the unlikely scenario that (a) a national court ordered ICM to shut down a .XXX site that violated a law in that country, and (b) ICM ignored the court order, and (c) the court had jurisdiction over ICANN, it is possible that ICANN could become involved in a national law Internet content dispute. It is implausible to assume that this scenario would be "ongoing." But more importantly, the same logic applies to generic top level domains like .COM. The identical scenario could arise if a national court ordered VeriSign (as the registry operator for .COM) to shut down one of the hundreds of thousands of pornography sites on .COM. But ICANN has only expressed concern about an "ongoing management and oversight role regarding Internet content” in connection with ICM’s application. This strongly suggests, once again, that its reasons are pretextual, and thus that the denial was an abuse of right.

---

<sup>62</sup> The worry about multiple law enforcement is not limited to pornography, and .XXX is not the only sTLD that implicates the worry. National laws related to the Internet differ on scores of issues ranging from free speech to gambling to intellectual property to spam. And many sTLDs besides .XXX can potentially run afoul of these laws. For example, a website called <teens.jobs> that solicits the labor of teenagers would likely be illegal in some places and not in others. If national law enforcement compliance issues were a genuine reason not to grant a top-level domain, there would be many fewer top-level domains, and the Internet would be much less robust.

C. Good Faith in Contract Negotiations

41. An additional way that the good faith principle applies here is in requiring ICANN to negotiate its contracts in good faith. It is settled that “[a]s a general principle of law, contracts must be negotiated and performed in good faith.”<sup>63</sup> In particular, a lack of candor in negotiations can violate the good faith principle.<sup>64</sup> The requirement of candor also flows from the UNIDROIT commercial principles. These principles apply in cases, like this one, that are governed by general principles.<sup>65</sup> They require that “each party must act in accordance with good faith and fair dealing in international trade,” and state that it is “bad faith, in particular, for a party to enter into or continue negotiations when intending not to reach an agreement with the other party.”<sup>66</sup>

42. ICM has alleged an absence of good faith and a lack of candor on ICANN’s part in its contractual negotiations. ICM essentially contends that the ICANN Board authorized ICM to enter into contract negotiations over technical and commercial

---

<sup>63</sup> R. DOAK BISHOP, JAMES CRAWFORD, W. MICHAEL REISMAN, FOREIGN INVESTMENT DISPUTES: CASES AND CONTROVERSIES 15 (2005) (emphasis added); see also Nuclear Tests (Australia v. Fr.), 1974 I.C.J. 253, 268 (Dec. 20) (noting that principle of good faith is “one of the basic principles governing the creation and performance of legal obligations”) (emphasis added).

<sup>64</sup> See SHABTAI ROSENNE, DEVELOPMENTS IN THE LAW OF TREATIES: 1945-1986, at 173-74 (1989) (summarizing treaty and arbitral developments and concluding that “uncandidness . . . could well be taken as an indication that the negotiations were not being conducted in good faith”).

<sup>65</sup> See UNIDROIT Principles 2004, Preamble (noting that UNIDROIT principles “may be applied when the parties have agreed that their contract be governed by general principles of law”); Iran v. Cubic Defense Systems, 29 F. Supp. 2d 1168, 1173 (S.D. Cal. 1998) (confirming International Chamber of Commerce Tribunals Award that appeared to apply UNIDROIT Principles to the dispute as an instance of “general principles of international law”).

<sup>66</sup> UNIDROIT Principles 2004, arts. 1.7, 2.1.15.

matters without caveats or special instructions; that ICANN gave ICM every indication that ICM had satisfied the RFP evaluation criteria and that the contract negotiations would be straightforward and uncomplicated; that ICM negotiated agreement after agreement with the ICANN staff to meet the increasingly stringent demands imposed by the ICANN Board, acting under pressure from the GAC; and that the ICANN Board ultimately rejected the ICM proposed registry agreement on the basis of criteria that were unrelated to the original published evaluation criteria and beyond ICANN's mandate. These allegations, if true, suggest that the ICANN Board, after the GAC intervention, had no intention of reaching a registry agreement contract, and thus did not negotiate the contract in good faith.

* * *

43. I hereby declare that I have prepared this Expert Report to the best of my knowledge and belief.

Jack Goldsmith

January 22, 2009

JACK LANDMAN GOLDSMITH

goldsmith.jack@gmail.com

EDUCATION

Hague Academy of International Law, Diploma in Private International Law, 1992

Yale Law School, J.D., 1989

Oxford University, B.A., 1986, M.A., 1991, First Class Honours

Washington & Lee University, B.A., 1984, Summa Cum Laude

PROFESSIONAL EXPERIENCE

Harvard Law School, Henry L. Shattuck Professor of Law, 2005-present; Professor, 2004-2005 (courses and seminars taught: Civil Procedure, Conflict of Laws, Emergency Power, Foreign Relations Law, Law in the International Economy, Lawyering for the President, Presidential Power, Terrorism and the Laws of War)

Department of Justice, Assistant Attorney General, Office of Legal Counsel, 2003-2004

Department of Defense, Special Counsel to the General Counsel, 2002-2003

University of Chicago Law School, Professor, 1999-2003; Associate Professor, 1997-1999 (courses and seminars taught: Civil Procedure, Conflict of Laws, Constitutional Law, Foreign Relations Law, International Arbitration, International Criminal Tribunals, International Law, International Law and International Relations, International Litigation, Origins of the Nation-State, Slavery and Federalism)

University of Virginia School of Law, Associate Professor, 1994-1997; Professor, 2003-2004 (courses and seminars taught: Civil Procedure, Conflict of Laws, Foreign Relations Law, International Arbitration, International Litigation, Terrorism and the Law)

Covington & Burling, Washington, D.C., Associate, 1992-1994

Iran-U.S. Claims Tribunal, The Netherlands, Legal Assistant to Judge George Aldrich, 1991-1992

United States Supreme Court, Law Clerk to Justice Anthony M. Kennedy, 1990-1991

United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, Law Clerk to Judge J. Harvie Wilkinson, 1989-1990

PROFESSIONAL AFFILIATIONS

American Bar Association

American Society of International Law

Council on Foreign Relations

District of Columbia Bar

Supreme Court Bar

PUBLICATIONS

Books

- Foreign Relations Law: Cases and Materials (3rd ed. Aspen) (2009) (with Curtis Bradley)
- The Terror Presidency: Law and Judgment Inside the Bush Administration (W.W. Norton 2007)
- Who Controls the Internet? Illusions of a Borderless World (Oxford University Press) (2006) (with Tim Wu)
- Foreign Relations Law: Cases and Materials (2nd ed. Aspen) (2006) (with Curtis Bradley)
- Orwell and Our Future (co-editor with Abbott Gleason and Martha Nussbaum) (Princeton Press) (2005)
- The Limits of International Law (with Eric Posner) (Oxford University Press) (2004)
- Foreign Relations Law: Cases and Materials (Aspen) (2003) (with Curtis Bradley)
- Conflict of Laws: Cases and Materials (5th ed. Aspen) (2002) (with Lea Brilmayer)
- International Dispute Resolution: The Regulation of Forum Selection (1997) (editor)

Articles

- Terrorism and the Convergence of Criminal and Military Detention Models, 60 Stan. L. Rev. 1079 (2008) (with Bobby Cheney)
- Sosa*, Customary International Law, and the Continuing Relevance of Erie, 120 Harv. L. Rev. 869 (2007) (with Curtis Bradley and David Moore)
- The War on Terrorism: International Law, Clear Statement Requirements, and Constitutional Design, 118 Harv. L. Rev. 2683 (2005) (with Curtis Bradley)
- Congressional Authorization and the War on Terrorism, 118 Harv. L. Rev. 2047 (2005) (with Curtis Bradley)
- The Unexceptional U.S. Human Rights RUDs', 3 U. St. Thom. L.J. 311 (2005)
- The Self-Defeating International Criminal Court, 70 U. Chi. L. Rev. 89 (2003)
- Liberal Democracy and Cosmopolitan Duty, 54 Stan. L. Rev. 1667 (2003)
- U.S. Civil Litigation and International Terrorism, in Civil Litigation and International Terrorism (John Norton Moore, ed. 2004) (with Ryan Goodman)
- The Limits of Idealism, Daedalus (Winter 2003) (with Stephen Krasner)

Military Tribunals and Legal Culture: What a Difference Sixty Years Makes, 19 Const. Comm. 261 (2002) (with Cass Sunstein)

Moral and Legal Rhetoric in International Relations: A Rational Choice Perspective, 21 J. Leg. Stud. S115 (2002) (with Eric A. Posner)

Empirical Methodology and Legal Scholarship, 69 U. Chi. L. Rev. 153 (2002) (with Adrian Vermeule)

The Constitutional Validity of Military Commissions, 5 Green Bag 2d 249 (2002) (with Curtis A. Bradley)

Further Thoughts on Customary International Law, 23 Mich. J. Int'l L. 191 (2001) (with Eric Posner)

The Internet and the Legitimacy of Remote Cross-Border Searches, 2001 Univ. of Chi. Leg. Forum 103

Statutory Foreign Affairs Preemption, 2000 Sup. Ct. Rev. 175 (2001)

The Internet and the Dormant Commerce Clause, 110 Yale L. J. 785 (2001) (with Alan O. Sykes)

Treaties, Human Rights, and Conditional Consent, 149 Penn. L. Rev. 399 (2000) (with Curtis Bradley)

Should International Human Rights Law Trump U.S. Domestic Law?, 1 Chi. J. Int'l L. 327 (2000)

The Internet, Conflicts of Regulation, and International Harmonization, in Governance in the Light of Differing Local Values (Engel and Keller, eds. 2000)

Sovereignty, International Law, and International Relations Theory, 52 Stan. L. Rev. 959 (2000)

Unilateral Regulation of the Internet: A Modest Defense, 11 Eur. J. Int'l L. 135 (2000)

Understanding the Resemblance between Modern and Traditional Customary International Law, 40 Va. J. Int'l L. 639 (2000) (with Eric Posner)

Pinochet, Head-of-State Immunity, and International Human Rights Litigation in U.S. Courts, 97 Mich. L. Rev. 2129 (1999) (with Curtis Bradley)

A Theory of Customary International Law, 66 U. Chic. L. Rev. 1113 (1999) (with Eric Posner)

The New Formalism in United States Foreign Relations Law, 70 Colo. L. Rev. 1395 (1999)

Against Cyberanarchy, 65 Chi. L. Rev. 1199 (1998)

The Abiding Relevance of Federalism to U.S. Foreign Relations, 92 Am. J. Int'l L. 675 (1998) (with Curtis Bradley)

Notes Toward a Theory of Customary International Law, in Proceedings of the American Society of International Law 53 (1998) (with Eric Posner)

What Internet Gambling Legislation Teaches About Internet Regulation, 32 Int'l Lawyer 1115 (1998)

Regulation of the Internet: Three Persistent Fallacies, 73 Chic.-Kent L. Rev. 1119 (1998)

International Human Rights Law and the United States Double Standard, 1 Green Bag 2d 365 (1998)

Federal Courts and the Incorporation of International Law, 111 Harv. L. Rev. 2260 (1998) (with Curtis Bradley)

The Internet and the Abiding Relevance of Territorial Sovereignty, 5 Ind. J. Glob. Leg. Stud. 475 (1998)

Erie and the Irrelevance of Legal Positivism, 84 Va. L. Rev. 673 (1998) (with Steven Walt)

Federal Courts, Foreign Affairs, and Federalism, 83 Va. L. Rev. 1617 (1997)

The Current Illegitimacy of International Human Rights Litigation, 66 Fordham L. Rev. 319 (1997) (with Curtis Bradley)

Customary International Law as Federal Common Law: A Critique of the Modern Position, 110 Harv. L. Rev. 815 (1997) (with Curtis Bradley)

Book Review, 91 Am. J. Int'l L. 391 (1997) (reviewing Andreas Lowenfeld, International Litigation and the Quest for Reasonableness (1997)) (with Curtis Bradley)

Note, Interest Analysis Applied to Corporations: The Unprincipled Use of a Choice of Law Method, 98 Yale L.J. 597 (1989)

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-61

INTERNATIONAL CENTRE FOR DISPUTE RESOLUTION

In the Matter of the Independent Review Process:

ICM Registry, LLC,

Claimant,

v.

Internet Corporation For Assigned Names and Numbers ("ICANN"),

Respondent.

CASE MANAGER: Carolina Cárdenas

ICDR Case No. 50 117 T 00224 08

ICANN'S RESPONSE TO CLAIMANT'S MEMORIAL ON THE MERITS

JONES DAY
555 South Flower Street
Fiftieth Floor
Los Angeles, CA 90071
Telephone: (213) 489-3939
Facsimile: (213) 243-2539
Counsel for Respondent ICANN

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF ABBREVIATIONS .....	vi
I. INTRODUCTION .....	1
II. BRIEF SUMMARY OF RELEVANT FACTS AND ICM’S MEMORIAL.....	5
A. ICANN’S FUNCTION AND DECISION-MAKING.....	5
B. THE INITIAL ROUND FOR INTRODUCING NEW TLDs AND ICM’S APPLICATION FOR AN UNSPONSORED .XXX TLD. ....	7
C. THE SECOND ROUND FOR INTRODUCING NEW TLDs AND ICM’S APPLICATION FOR A SPONSORED .XXX TLD.....	10
D. CONSIDERATION AND ULTIMATE DENIAL OF ICM’S SPONSORED .XXX TLD APPLICATION.....	14
E. ICM’S INITIATION OF THE INDEPENDENT REVIEW PROCESS AND ICANN’S RESPONSE.....	23
III. THE PANEL SHOULD DECLARE THAT THE ICANN BOARD DID NOT ACT INCONSISTENTLY WITH ICANN’S ARTICLES AND BYLAWS IN CONSIDERING AND ULTIMATELY DENYING ICM’S APPLICATION. ....	26
A. ICM MISCHARACTERIZES THE NATURE OF THESE PROCEEDINGS AND THE LAW THAT APPLIES TO THEM. ....	26
1. The Results of The Independent Review Process Are Not Binding.....	28
a. The Bylaws And Their Drafting History Make Clear That IRP Declarations Are Not Binding. ....	29
i. The Bylaws Make Clear That IRP Declarations Are Not Binding.....	29
ii. The Drafting History of the Bylaws Makes Clear That IRP Declarations Are Not Binding.....	33
iii. ICM’s Contrary Arguments Are Baseless. ....	38
b. The Supplementary Procedures Governing The IRP Confirm That IRP Declarations Are Not Binding. ....	41
2. The Actions Of The ICANN Board Are Entitled To Substantial Deference From This Tribunal.....	44
a. ICANN’s Bylaws Expressly Confer Discretionary Authority Upon The Board In Applying The Provisions At Issue Here.....	45
b. Well-Established Principles Of Corporate Law Independently Compel Strong Deference To Decisions Of The ICANN Board.....	49

TABLE OF CONTENTS

(continued)

	Page
c.    ICM’s Other Argument Based On The Meaning Of “Independent Review” Is Baseless. ....	54
3.    ICM’s Cited Principles Of International Law Do Not Apply To The Circumstances At Issue In This Proceeding. ....	56
a.    Article 4 Is Not A “Choice-Of-Law Provision.” ....	57
b.    Even If Article 4 Were Read As Broadly As ICM Urges, ICM’s Cited Principles Of International Law Still Would Not Apply To This Dispute Between Two Private Entities From The Same Nation. ....	66
c.    ICM’s Cited Principles Are Ineffective Because California Law More Specifically Governs The Dispute. ....	72
B.    EACH OF ICM’S KEY FACTUAL ASSERTIONS IS WRONG. ....	79
1.    ICANN Was Not Bound By A Non-Overlapping, “Two-Step” Procedure For Evaluating sTLD Applications. ....	81
2.    ICANN’s Board Did Not Approve The .XXX sTLD On June 1, 2005. ....	85
3.    ICM Could Not Cure Its Sponsorship Shortcomings, Along With Other Deficiencies, During Contract Negotiations. ....	94
a.    Concerns Raised By The GAC. ....	94
b.    Concerns Raised During ICANN’s September 15, 2005 Board Meeting. ....	99
c.    At The Vancouver Meeting, ICM Made A Presentation To The GAC Promising Public Interest Benefits Of The Proposed .XXX sTLD. ....	100
d.    Concerns Raised In The Wellington Communiqué. ....	101
e.    Concerns Raised During The May 10, 2006 And February 12, 2007 Board Meetings. ....	104
f.    ICM Failed To Address The Board’s Concerns, As Made Clear In The Board’s March 30, 2007 Denial Of The Proposed .XXX sTLD. ....	107
4.    ICANN Ultimately Rejected ICM’s Application Due To Its Failure To Satisfy The Sponsorship Criteria, Not Because Of “Vague And Previously Unannounced” Notions Of Public Policy. ....	114
a.    The Sponsorship Criteria Were Consistently Applied. ....	114

TABLE OF CONTENTS

(continued)

	Page
b.    ICANN Ultimately Denied ICM’s Application Because It Failed To Satisfy The Sponsorship Criteria.....	116
c.    The Fact That the GAC’s Comments Regarding The .XXX sTLD Came After ICM Had Submitted Its Proposal To ICANN Was Not A Basis To Ignore Those Comments. ....	118
C.    AT EVERY STAGE OF THE EVALUATION PROCESS, ICANN COMPLIED WITH ITS BYLAWS AND ARTICLES IN CONSIDERING AND DENYING ICM’S sTLD APPLICATION. ....	119
1.    At All Times, ICANN Operated In An Open, Transparent, And Procedurally Fair Manner. ....	119
a.    ICANN Operated With Openness And Transparency. ....	120
b.    ICANN’s Review Was Procedurally Fair. ....	122
2.    ICANN Did Not Apply Its Procedures In A Discriminatory Fashion. ....	124
3.    ICANN Did Not Act In Excess Of Its Mission. ....	125
4.    The Board Reached Its Decision Independently, Giving Due Consideration, As It Was Required Under the Bylaws, To The GAC’s Comments. ....	126
5.    ICANN Did Not Violate International Law. ....	127
IV.    CONCLUSION AND PROPOSED FORMAT FOR the HEARING .....	127

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page

CASES

Beehan v. Lido Isle Comm. Cmty. Ass’n , 70 Cal. App. 3d 858 (1977) .....	51
de Sanchez v. Banco Central De Nicaragua , 770 F.2d 1385 (5th Cir. 1985) .....	71, 72
Frances T. v. Village Green Owners Ass’n , 42 Cal. 3d 490 (1986) .....	50
Hannula v. Hacienda Homes, Inc. , 34 Cal. 2d 442 (1949) .....	50
Harvey v. Landing Homeowners Ass’n , 162 Cal. App. 4th 809 (2008) .....	50, 51
Hill v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. , 166 Cal. App. 4th 1438 (2008) .....	50
Katz v. Chevron Corp. , 22 Cal. App. 4th 1352 (1994) .....	51
Lamden v. La Jolla Shores Clubdominium Homeowners Ass’n , 21 Cal. 4th 249 (1999) .....	50, 52, 53
Lauder v. The Czech Republic , (Final Award dated Sept. 3, 2001) .....	70
Lee v. Interinsurance Exchange of Auto. Club of S. Cal. , 50 Cal. App. 4th 694 (1996) .....	50
Lewin v. St. Joseph Hosp. , 82 Cal. App. 3d 368 (1978) .....	51
Pinsker v. Pac. Coast Soc’y of Orthodontists , 12 Cal. 3d 541 (1974) .....	52
Rights of Nationals of the United States of America in Morocco ( France v. United States of America ), 1952 I.C.J. 176 (August 27, 1952) .....	67
Ritter &amp; Ritter, Inc. v. Churchill Condominium Association , 166 Cal. App. 4th 103 (2008) .....	53
Sanchez v. Grain Growers Ass’n , 126 Cal. App. 3d 665 (1981) .....	57
Skiriotes v. Florida , 313 U.S. 69 (1941) .....	71
Unocal Corp. v. Mesa Petroleum Co. , 493 A.2d 946 (Del. 1985) .....	51

STATUTES

Cal. Corp. Code §§ 309, 7231 (2009) .....	51
---	----

OTHER AUTHORITIES

18B Am. Jur. 2d Corporations § 1476 (2008) .....	49
19 C.J.S. Corporations § 568 (2008) .....	49

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

	Page
\
CHESHIRE & NORTH'S PRIVATE INTERNATIONAL LAW 3 (11th ed. 1987).....	71
IAN BROWNLIE, PRINCIPLES OF PUBLIC INTERNATIONAL LAW 35 (7th ed. 2008).....	78
Riccardo Monaco, Sources of International Law , in 7 ENCYCLOPEDIA OF PUBLIC INTERNATIONAL LAW 429 (1984) ("Max Planck").....	73, 74

TABLE OF ABBREVIATIONS

ALAC	ICANN's At-Large Advisory Committee
DNS	domain name system
DNSO	Domain Name Supporting Organization
ERC	ICANN Evolution and Reform Committee
Evaluation Panel	independent panel of experts convened in April 2004 to review and make recommendations with respect to the sTLD applications
GAC	ICANN's Governmental Advisory Committee
GNSO	ICANN's Generic Names Supporting Organization
gTLD	generic Top Level Domain
ICANN	Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers
ICDR	International Centre for Dispute Resolution
ICDR Rules	ICDR International Arbitration Rules
ICM	ICM Registry, LLC
IFFOR	International Foundation for Online Responsibility
IP	Internet Protocol
IRP	ICANN's independent review process
Memorial	ICM's Memorial on the Merits
NTIA	National Telecommunications and Information Administration (an agency of the United States Department of Commerce)
Panel	IRP Panel
RFP	request for proposal
sTLD	sponsored Top Level Domain
TLD	Top Level Domain
uTLD	unsponsored Top Level Domain

Pursuant to Article IV, section 3 of the Bylaws for the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (“ICANN”), and the Rules of the International Centre for Dispute Resolution (“ICDR”) as amended and supplemented in this proceeding, ICANN hereby submits this Response (the “Response”) to Claimant’s Memorial on the Merits submitted by ICM Registry, LLC (“ICM”).

I. INTRODUCTION

1. This dispute relates to ICM’s proposal to operate a new sponsored Top Level Domain (an “sTLD”) on the Internet known as “.XXX.” The .XXX sTLD was intended to serve the online adult-entertainment (i.e., pornography) community. ICM asserts that ICANN’s denial of ICM’s proposal violated ICANN’s Bylaws and Articles of Incorporation, in particular that the Board did not act in an open, transparent, and procedurally fair manner.

2. The ICANN Board did deny ICM’s application, but only after a multi-year and extensive debate, during which the Board: (i) repeatedly allowed ICM to provide information in support of its application and to amend its proposed registry agreement to address ICANN’s concerns; (ii) received a significant amount of input from members of the “community” that ICM proposed to represent, as well as from several governments that were concerned about the proposed .XXX sTLD; (iii) debated the issues publicly and at great length; and (iv) ultimately determined that ICM had failed to meet the criteria established for the delegation of a sponsored TLD. Throughout ICANN’s review, evaluation and ultimate rejection of ICM’s proposal, ICANN adhered rigorously to its Bylaws and Articles of Incorporation. Indeed, it is hard to imagine a process that could have been more open, transparent, and procedurally fair.

3. These independent review proceedings are truly unique. ICANN, which has existed since 1998, established the process of independent review in Bylaws revisions that were adopted in 2002. The Bylaws provide that the limited purpose of independent review is to provide a forum to address whether ICANN acted inconsistently with its Bylaws and Articles of Incorporation. ICM’s challenge is the first time that the process has been invoked.

4. The independent review process must, of course, adhere strictly to the Bylaws that established the process. The process was not intended to provide for a “Supreme Court” of ICANN that would address all aspects of ICANN’s conduct, nor was the process intended to provide for a panel of three jurists who would substitute their views on the operation of the Internet's domain name system for the views of the ICANN Board following a de novo review of all the facts. This, however, is ICM's position in these proceedings, a position that is utterly inconsistent not only with the Bylaws but with the extensive process that resulted in ICANN's adoption of the Bylaws.

5. In this Response, ICANN will address these subjects in detail. After providing some general background on ICANN and the dispute at issue, this Response will proceed as follows:

- First, ICANN will address the nature of these proceedings and the fact that the Panel's declaration will not be legally binding on ICANN. See infra Section III.A.1.
- Second, ICANN will address the appropriate standard of review that applies to these proceedings, and show that decisions of the Board are entitled to significant deference. See infra Section III.A.2.
- Third, ICANN will address the law that applies to these proceedings. ICM attempts to import "international law" and assorted claims arising under international law, but the Articles and Bylaws are clear that international law does not apply here. See infra Section III.A.3.
- Fourth, and with respect to the factual merits of ICM's claims, ICANN will address the four major factual disputes that ICM has identified. ICANN will demonstrate that ICM's interpretation of the facts is demonstrably wrong in each respect. As a result, and whatever deference that the Panel elects to afford to the decisions of the Board, ICM has no basis for claiming any inconsistency with ICANN's Articles and Bylaws. See infra Sections III.B and III.C.

6. ICANN regrets the need to address so many issues. ICM knows better than to be arguing that these proceedings are binding or that the Panel should be conducting a de novo review. Indeed, ICM's own counsel, who participated in drafting the Bylaws governing these proceedings, has written that these proceedings are merely advisory and not binding. Under the standards unambiguously set out in the Bylaws, these proceedings are not nearly as complicated as ICM attempts to make them, and a hearing with live witnesses is unnecessary for the Panel to carry out its mandate, particularly in view of the enormous amount of materials that the parties have submitted to the Panel. In any event, there is little doubt that the ICANN Board's extremely comprehensive review of ICM's application for the .XXX sTLD was fully compliant with the Bylaws and Articles. The fact that ICM did not like the final outcome hardly means that ICANN violated its Bylaws or Articles; to the contrary, as will be discussed in this Response, ICANN devoted a tremendous amount of time to the .XXX sTLD application because: (i) the application was controversial; (ii) it involved complex issues in a world-wide setting that were not easily resolved; (iii) from the outset, the application generated significant concerns that it did not meet the "sponsorship" requirements for ICANN to approve .XXX as a sponsored TLD (as the application criteria clearly required); and (iv) it was the only sTLD application that ICANN received that did not appear to have support from the "community" it proposed to represent and, even more complicating, generated significant opposition over time.

7. Nearly all of ICM's arguments rest on the assertion that, in June 2005, the ICANN Board finally and unconditionally deemed ICM's application to satisfy ICANN's requirements for approval of a sponsored TLD. But the facts (including the resolutions that the Board adopted), and the parties' course of conduct following the June 2005 Board resolutions, make clear that the Board did not unconditionally approve ICM's application; to the contrary, the Board remained extremely concerned that ICM's application was lacking with respect to a critical component – sponsorship. Many Top Level Domains do not have (or require) sponsorship, but sponsorship was the key ingredient in this particular process that the ICANN Board had adopted and under which ICM submitted its application.

8. ICM assumes incorrectly that the two steps involved in reviewing sTLD applications (namely, review of the application's compliance with the requirements for issuance and the negotiation of an acceptable contract) could never overlap in time, so that any authorization to proceed with contract negotiations would always constitute an implicit approval of the application. This assumption is baseless. The language of the rules governing the process, the understanding of the participants, the operation of the process in practice, ICANN's historical practice, and common sense all uniformly show that ICANN was free to consider both steps simultaneously, because contract negotiations could sometimes facilitate resolution of issues regarding the requirements for any sTLD. The evidence shows beyond any doubt that this is precisely what ICANN did with respect to ICM's application. Because the ICANN Board did not approve ICM's application in June 2005, but merely voted to allow negotiations to proceed with ICM for the purpose of determining whether such negotiations might bear on the outstanding issues surrounding the application, ICM's arguments collapse.

9. ICM's insinuation that ICANN denied ICM's application based on vague public policy considerations is false. ICANN denied the application for the same reasons, among others, that had caused a completely independent Evaluation Panel to recommend that ICANN not proceed with ICM's .XXX sTLD – because ICM failed to satisfy essential “sponsorship” requirements. ICM's suggestion that these determinations were somehow pretextual is amply refuted by the fact that the Evaluation Panel reached precisely the same conclusion as ICANN, as well as by copious evidence demonstrating that those requirements were not, as a matter of fact, satisfied. Further, as ICANN explains herein, the Board properly considered the substantial public policy objections that numerous governments asserted during the course of the Board's deliberations.

10. ICANN could have denied ICM's application immediately upon the adverse recommendation of the Evaluation Panel, which determined that ICM failed to satisfy essential requirements for an sTLD and recommended that ICM's application receive no further consideration. Nonetheless, ICANN's Board chose to extend far greater review and latitude to ICM than was required by the process, permitting additional submissions, written and oral presentations to ICANN, and efforts to address ICM's shortcomings through negotiation. None of these additional activities were required by the sTLD process that ICANN had adopted for evaluating sTLD applications, but ICANN extended them to ICM (and others) nevertheless. Perhaps the Board should have denied ICM's application in 2004, but it extended the process in order to determine whether ICM could ultimately satisfy the necessary criteria for the TLD it proposed to operate. Over time, the answer turned to be “no,” but the notion that ICANN somehow violated its Bylaws or Articles of Incorporation in the process is unsupportable as a legal or factual matter.

II. BRIEF SUMMARY OF RELEVANT FACTS AND ICM'S MEMORIAL.

A. ICANN'S FUNCTION AND DECISION-MAKING.

11. ICANN is a not-for-profit public benefit corporation that was organized under California law in 1998.<sup>1</sup> ICANN's mission is to protect the stability, integrity, and utility of the Internet domain name system (the "DNS") on behalf of the global Internet community,<sup>2</sup> pursuant to a series of agreements with the United States Department of Commerce.<sup>3</sup> In carrying out its functions, ICANN solicits and receives input from a wide variety of Internet stakeholders.

12. ICANN has a Board of Directors, a Staff, an Ombudsman, a Nominating Committee for Directors, three Supporting Organizations,<sup>4</sup> four Advisory Committees, and numerous other stakeholders that participate in the ICANN process.<sup>5</sup> ICANN's Board of Directors (the "Board") consists of one compensated voting director (the President and CEO)

---

<sup>1</sup> Articles of Incorporation of Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (last modified November 21, 1998), attached to Claimant's Memorial on the Merits, Exhibit 4 (Hereinafter referred to as "Cl. Ex. __").

<sup>2</sup> ICANN Bylaws, Article 1, § 1 (Mission), Cl. Ex. 5.

<sup>3</sup> See, e.g., Memorandum of Understanding between the U.S. Department of Commerce and ICANN, November 25, 1998, Cl. Ex. 32.

<sup>4</sup> The Supporting Organizations are responsible for the development and recommendation of policies concerning the Internet's technical management within their areas of expertise. For example, the Generic Names Supporting Organization (the "GNSO") is responsible for advising the ICANN Board on substantive policy issues relating to generic top-level domains. See Generic Names Supporting Organization, GNSO Reference Documents, available at <http://gnso.icann.org/reference-documents.htm> (last visited May 4, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit A.

<sup>5</sup> ICANN Bylaws, supra note 2, Articles V-XI. ICANN's Bylaws provide for four Advisory Committees – the Governmental Advisory Committee (discussed in the next paragraph), the Security and Stability Advisory Committee, the Root Server System Advisory Committee, and the At-Large Advisory Committee. See id. at Article XI, §§ 1-2 (Advisory Committees). The Bylaws also provide that the ICANN Board may liaise with additional Committees, which it has done with the Technical Liaison Group and the Internet Engineering Task Force. The Bylaws established the Technical Liaison Group as a group of four preexisting, non-ICANN organizations intended to "connect the Board with appropriate sources of technical advice on specific matters pertinent to ICANN's activities." See id. at Article XI-A, §§ 1-2 (Technical Liaison Group). The Internet Engineering Task Force, which is also a non-ICANN organization, is an "open international community of network designers, operators, vendors, and researchers concerned with the evolution of the Internet architecture and the smooth operation of the Internet." Overview of the IETF, available at <http://www.ietf.org/overview.html> (last visited May 4, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit B. and fourteen volunteer voting directors,<sup>6</sup> two-thirds of whom presently reside outside of the United States. In addition, each of the Advisory Committees, along with the Technical Liaison Group (the “TLG”) and the Internet Engineering Task Force (the “IETF”), appoint a volunteer, non-voting liaison to the Board, who takes part in Board discussions and deliberations.<sup>7</sup>

13. The Governmental Advisory Committee (the “GAC”) is one of ICANN’s Advisory Committees, made up of representatives of national governments and intergovernmental organizations.<sup>8</sup> The GAC provides advice to ICANN on issues of public policy, acting as a conduit for different national governments to express their views to ICANN. In particular, the GAC considers ICANN’s activities and policies as they relate to the concerns of governments, particularly in matters where there may be an interaction between ICANN’s policies and national laws or international agreements.<sup>9</sup>

14. ICANN’s Bylaws provide that the ICANN Board shall notify the Chair of the GAC in a timely manner of any proposal raising public policy issues.<sup>10</sup> The GAC may also “put issues to the Board directly, either by way of comment or prior advice, or by way of specifically recommending action or new policy development or revision to existing policies.”<sup>11</sup>

15. The Bylaws require the ICANN Board to consider the GAC’s advice.<sup>12</sup> Where the Board elects to take actions that are inconsistent with the GAC’s advice, it must inform the

---

<sup>6</sup> ICANN Bylaws, supra note 2, Article VI, § 1 (Board of Directors). Eight directors are selected by ICANN’s Nominating Committee and the other six directors are selected by ICANN’s three Supporting Organizations (each selecting two). The ICANN President also serves as a voting director. Id. at Article VI, § 2.

<sup>7</sup> Id. at Article VI, § 9 (Non-Voting Liaisons).

<sup>8</sup> Id. at Article XI, § 2.

<sup>9</sup> Id. at Article XI, § 2.1(a); see also The Internet Domain Name System and the Governmental Advisory Committee (GAC) of the Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers (ICANN), Cl. Ex. 40; ICANN Governmental Advisory Committee, Operating Principles, Cl. Ex. 41 (“GAC’s Operating Principles”).

<sup>10</sup> ICANN Bylaws, supra note 2, Article XI, § 2.1(h) (Advisory Committees).

<sup>11</sup> Id. at Article XI, § 2.1(i).

<sup>12</sup> Id. at Article XI, § 2.1(j); see also GAC’s Operating Principles, supra note 9 (“The Governmental Advisory Committee should consider and provide advice on the activities of ICANN as they relate to concerns of governments and where they may affect public policy issues. The Advice of the

GAC and state its reasons for doing so. The GAC and the ICANN Board must then attempt to find a mutually acceptable solution.<sup>13</sup>

B. THE INITIAL ROUND FOR INTRODUCING NEW TLDs AND ICM'S APPLICATION FOR AN UNSPONSORED .xxx TLD.

16. When ICANN was formed, there were only three “generic” TLDs – .com, .net, and .org.<sup>14</sup> Since its inception, ICANN has worked to introduce new TLDs. Indeed, ICANN began to explore the possibility of adding new TLDs to the DNS shortly after ICANN's formation in 1998.

17. There are several types of TLDs. Currently, the TLDs with three or more characters are called “generic” TLDs or “gTLDs.” Other types of TLDs include two-letter country-code TLDs, such as .fr and .cz. TLDs are run by “registries” (or “registry operators”).

18. gTLDs can be subdivided into two types: “unsponsored” TLDs (“uTLDs”) and “sponsored” TLDs (previously defined as “sTLDs”). In general, a uTLD operates for the benefit of the global Internet community and has no restrictions on which “second level” domain names – i.e., “google.com” – can be registered in that TLD. An sTLD, by contrast, is a specialized TLD that has a “Sponsor” representing a specified community for whose benefit it wishes to operate the TLD, and the Sponsor places limitations on those who wish to register second level domain names.

19. An sTLD “Sponsor” (or “sponsoring organization”) is delegated the authority to control the operation of the sTLD. Each sTLD has a “Charter,” which defines the purpose of the Governmental Advisory Committee on public policy matters shall be duly taken into account by ICANN, both in the formulation and adoption of policies.”)

---

(continued...)

<sup>13</sup> ICANN Bylaws, supra note 2, Article XI, § 2.1(j).

<sup>14</sup> There were also four other limited-use TLDs that are sometimes referred to as “gTLDs”: .gov (for United States government use); .edu (for educational institutions, mainly in the United States); .int (for international treaty organizations); and .arpa (for infrastructural identifier spaces).

sTLD. The Sponsor must develop policies to implement the Charter for the benefit of a defined group of stakeholders, known as the “Sponsored TLD Community.”<sup>15</sup>

20. On July 16, 2000, after lengthy deliberation and public comment, the ICANN Board adopted a “measured and responsible” application process for the introduction of new gTLDs.<sup>16</sup> This initial round was a preliminary effort to constitute a “proof of concept” to improve ICANN’s understanding and experience in practical and policy issues involved in adding new TLDs.<sup>17</sup>

21. ICANN received forty-seven applications for over 200 new gTLDs (both unsponsored and sponsored). Among the forty-seven proposals was an application by ICM for an unsponsored .XXX TLD. ICANN staff recommended that the Board not select .XXX during this “proof of concept” round for three reasons: (1) a .XXX TLD “did not appear to meet unmet needs”; (2) there was significant “controversy surrounding” the application; and (3) the application adopted a “poor definition of the hoped-for benefits” of .XXX.<sup>18</sup> “The evaluation concluded that at this early ‘proof of concept’ stage with a limited number of new TLDs

---

<sup>15</sup> The purpose and function of uTLDs and sTLDs may evolve as ICANN continues to add new TLDs to the DNS. With respect to sTLDs, ICM’s expert, Dr. Milton Mueller, criticizes ICANN for being “in the position of approving who [is] the appropriate representative of a ‘community,’” and argues that “[s]uch a determination bears little direct connection to ICANN’s technical mandate.” ICM Memorial, Expert Report of Dr. Milton Mueller at p. 23. Dr. Mueller’s criticism is misplaced. Sponsorship permits sTLD policies to be developed by an independent sponsor, with more limited supervision by ICANN than is present in uTLDs. Far from accreting power to ICANN, sponsorship shifts policymaking away from ICANN in favor of independent actors.

<sup>16</sup> ICANN TLD Application Process: Information for Applicants, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/tlds/tld-application-process.htm> (last visited May 4, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit C; see also Resolutions of the ICANN Board on New TLDs, July 16, 2000, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/tlds/new-tld-resolutions-16jul00.htm> (last visited May 4, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit D.

<sup>17</sup> ICANN Criteria for Assessing TLD Proposals, August 15, 2000, Cl. Ex. 52 (“The current program of establishing new TLDs is intended to allow the Internet community to evaluate possible additions and enhancements to the DNS and possible methods of implementing them. Stated differently, the current program is intended to serve as a ‘proof of concept’ for ways in which the DNS might evolve in the longer term.”).

<sup>18</sup> ICANN Report on TLD applications: Application of the August 15 Criteria to Each Category or Group, November 9, 2000, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/tlds/report/report-iiib1c-09nov00.htm> (last visited May 4, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit E.

contemplated, other proposed TLDs without the controversy of an adult TLD would better serve the goals of this initial introduction of new TLDs.”<sup>19</sup>

22. On November 16, 2000, the ICANN Board passed a resolution authorizing ICANN’s President and General Counsel to commence contract negotiations with seven of the applicants, each for one TLD, including four uTLDs (.biz, .info, .name, and .pro) and three sTLDs (.museum, .aero, and .coop).<sup>20</sup> These seven were selected for negotiations following extensive input from ICANN staff, outside advisors, and the Internet community as a whole. ICM’s .XXX TLD application was not among those selected.<sup>21</sup>

23. The Board’s resolution that authorized ICANN staff to conduct contract negotiations with the proposed registry operators and sponsoring organizations did not constitute “final approval” of any proposed TLD:

Resolved [00.89], the Board selects the following proposals for negotiations toward appropriate agreements between ICANN and the registry operator or sponsoring organization, or both: JVTeam (.biz), Afiliias (.info), Global Name Registry (.name), RegistryPro (.pro), Museum Domain Management Association (.museum), Société Internationale de Télécommunications Aéronautiques (.aero), Cooperative League of the USA dba National Cooperative Business Association (.coop); [and]

Resolved [00.90], the President and General Counsel are authorized to conduct those negotiations on behalf of ICANN and, subject to further Board approval or ratification, to enter into appropriate agreements . . . .<sup>22</sup>

24. After the November 16, 2000 resolution, ICANN commenced lengthy negotiations with the seven applicants, after which negotiated contracts were submitted to the

---

<sup>19</sup> Id.

<sup>20</sup> Preliminary Report, Second Annual Meeting and Organizational Meeting of the ICANN Board, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/minutes/prelim-report-16nov00.htm> (last visited May 4, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit F.

<sup>21</sup> Id.

<sup>22</sup> Minutes of Second Annual Meeting of the Board, November 16, 2000, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/minutes/minutes-annual-meeting-16nov00.htm> (last visited May 4, 2009) (emphasis added), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit G.

Board for approval. For example, authorization to enter into the agreement for “.museum” was granted on September 10, 2001, concurrently with a resolution in favor of further negotiation of the registry agreements for the “.aero” and “.coop” sTLDs. The “.pro” TLD was not approved until March 14, 2002, after negotiations finally demonstrated a solution to serious issues that had stood in the way of its approval.<sup>23</sup>

25. Even with the approval of the ICANN Board, these TLDs could be added to the DNS only upon United States Department of Commerce approval because the Department of Commerce retains ultimate authority to approve or reject recommendations by ICANN for inclusion of new TLDs into the root zone.

26. ICANN considered the launch of the seven new TLDs to be successful because, among other things, the launch did not impair the security or stability of the Internet, and the new TLDs facilitated additional competition. As a result, following the completion of the “proof of concept” round and the addition of the new TLDs to the DNS, ICANN considered adopting procedures for the introduction of more TLDs, as described in the next section.

C. THE SECOND ROUND FOR INTRODUCING NEW TLDs AND ICM’S APPLICATION FOR A SPONSORED .XXX TLD.

27. On October 18, 2002, then-ICANN President Stuart Lynn issued “A Plan for Action Regarding New gTLDs.”<sup>24</sup> Mr. Lynn recommended that the ICANN Board consider initiating a new round of proposals for “sponsored” TLDs.

28. In 2003, ICANN solicited public comments about developing proposed criteria and procedures for evaluating sTLD proposals.<sup>25</sup> Consistent with its mandate for open and

---

<sup>23</sup> ICANN Montevideo Meeting Topic: New TLD Agreements, September 5, 2001, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/meetings/montevideo/new-tld-topic.htm> (last visited May 4, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit H.

<sup>24</sup> A Plan for Action Regarding New gTLDs, Stuart Lynn, ICANN President, October 18, 2002, Cl. Ex. 60.

<sup>25</sup> Although Mr. Lynn’s Action Plan suggested limiting the number of sTLDs in this round of proposals to three, community comment encouraged ICANN not to adopt that limit. See Establishment of new sTLDs: Request for Proposals (Draft for public comment), June 24, 2003, Cl. Ex. 72.

transparent processes, ICANN posted a draft Request for Proposals (“RFP”) for new sTLDs on June 24, 2003, and invited further public comment through August 25, 2003.<sup>26</sup>

29. The draft RFP received significant input through ICANN’s online public comment forum. The ICANN Board reviewed the public comments provided on the draft RFP and noted “an appreciation of the importance to the community of this topic, and the intent to seek further input and open communication with the community on this topic” before arriving at any decision.<sup>27</sup>

30. On October 9, 2003, ICANN’s At-Large Advisory Committee (the “ALAC”), which is “responsible for considering and providing advice on the activities of ICANN as they relate to the interests of individual Internet users (i.e., the ‘At-Large’ community),” drafted a “Response to the Proposed sTLD RFP and Suggested Principles for New TLD Processes.”<sup>28</sup> ICANN’s Generic Names Supporting Organization (the “GNSO”)<sup>29</sup> provided its comments shortly thereafter and called upon the ICANN Board to move forward with the process for sTLDs.<sup>30</sup>

31. On October 31, 2003, the ICANN Board met in Carthage, Tunisia, and passed resolutions for the introduction of new sponsored TLDs.<sup>31</sup> The Board also determined that a

---

<sup>26</sup> Id.

<sup>27</sup> ICANN Minutes, Special Meeting of the Board, October 13, 2003, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/minutes/minutes-13oct03.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit I.

<sup>28</sup> At-Large Advisory Committee (ALAC), At-Large Community Website, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/committees/alac/> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit J; Response to the Proposed sTLD RFP and Suggested Principles for New TLD Processes, October 9, 2003, available at <http://www.atlarge.icann.org/correspondence/response-stld-process-09oct03.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit K.

<sup>29</sup> The GNSO succeeded ICANN’s Domain Name Supporting Organization (the “DNSO”) with respect to gTLD responsibilities. ICANN, Registrars, available at <http://gns0.icann.org/registrars/> (last visited date) (“On December 14, 2002 the DNSO has been replaced by the GNSO.”), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit L.

<sup>30</sup> GNSO Council Carthage Meetings Minutes, October 29, 2003, available at <http://gns0.icann.org/meetings/minutes-gns0-29oct03.shtml> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit M.

<sup>31</sup> ICANN Board Resolutions in Carthage, Tunisia, October 31, 2003, Cl. Ex. 78.

policy process should commence through ICANN’s newly-formed GNSO to establish how the new uTLDs or “generic” TLDs would be added into the Root Zone in the future. (This policy process culminated with the ICANN Board vote in June 2008 for the policy to introduce new gTLDs. Presently, ICANN is working on a proposal to allow the launch of numerous additional unsponsored TLDs.<sup>32</sup>)

32. On December 15, 2003, ICANN launched the sTLD selection process by posting the final RFP and permitting interested parties to apply for the creation of new sTLDs.<sup>33</sup> Unlike the “proof of concept” round, this new round was limited to “sponsored” TLDs; as a result, all applications needed to satisfy additional requirements related to the sponsorship of TLDs.

33. The RFP began with an introduction “provid[ing] applicants with explanatory notes on the process as well as an indication of the type of information requested by ICANN.”<sup>34</sup> The RFP then included an application form setting out the selection criteria that would be used to evaluate proposals. These “objective criteria” were designed to enable the independent evaluators to determine which applicants “best” met ICANN’s requirements.<sup>35</sup> The selection criteria consisted of four categories: (1) Sponsorship Information; (2) Business Plan Information; (3) Technical Standards; and (4) Community Value.<sup>36</sup>

34. The RFP’s explanatory notes provided that the sponsorship criteria required “the proposed sTLD [to] address the needs and interest of a ‘clearly defined community’ (the Sponsored TLD Community), which can benefit from the establishment of a TLD operating in a policy formulation environment in which the community would participate.” Accordingly, applicants had to demonstrate that the Sponsored TLD Community was:

- (a) Precisely defined, so it can readily be determined which persons or entities make up that community; and

---

<sup>32</sup> ICANN, New gTLD Program, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/topics/new-gtld-program.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit N; P. Twomey Witness Statement, ¶ 14.

<sup>33</sup> New sTLD Application, December 15, 2003, Cl. Ex. 45.

<sup>34</sup> Id. (Part A. Explanatory Notes – Selection Criteria).

<sup>35</sup> Id.

<sup>36</sup> Id.

- (b) Comprised of persons that have needs and interests in common but which are differentiated from those of the general global Internet community.<sup>37</sup>

35. The sponsorship criteria further required applicants to provide an explanation of the Sponsoring Organization’s policy-formulation procedures, demonstrating that the organization:

- (a) Would operate primarily in the interests of the Sponsored TLD Community;
- (b) Has a clearly defined delegated policy-formulation role and is appropriate to the needs of the Sponsored TLD Community;
- (c) Has defined mechanisms to ensure that approved policies are primarily in the interests of the Sponsored TLD Community and the public interest; and
- (d) Is tailored to meet the particular needs of the defined Sponsored TLD Community and the characteristics of the policy formulation environment.<sup>38</sup>

36. Finally, the sponsorship criteria required the applicant to demonstrate support for the TLD from the Sponsored TLD Community: “A key requirement of a sTLD proposal is that it demonstrates broad-based support from the community it is intended to represent.”<sup>39</sup>

Accordingly, applicants were required to “demonstrate that there is”:

- (a) Evidence of broad-based support from the Sponsored TLD Community for the sTLD, for the Sponsoring Organization, and for the proposed policy-formulation process; and

---

<sup>37</sup> Id. (Part A. Explanatory Notes – Sponsorship Information – Definition of Sponsored TLD Community) (emphasis added).

<sup>38</sup> Id. (Part A. Explanatory Notes – Sponsorship Information – Appropriateness of the Sponsoring Organization and the Policy Formulation Environment) (emphasis added).

<sup>39</sup> Id. (Part A. Explanatory Notes – Sponsorship Information – Level of Support from the Community) (emphasis added).

- (b) An outreach program that illustrates the Sponsoring Organization's capacity to represent a wide range of interests within the community.<sup>40</sup>

37. ICM contends that “the final criteria were completely silent on the subject of adult content, or morality or offensive content generally, and the related public relations controversy.”<sup>41</sup> But in fact, such considerations were squarely embraced by the community value component, which required the applicants to demonstrate that their proposal “represents an endeavor or activity that has importance across multiple geographic regions.”<sup>42</sup> This necessarily requires an understanding of how sTLDs such as ICM's proposed adult content sTLD would be received globally.

38. Given the debate surrounding ICM's application for an unsponsored .XXX TLD in the 2000 “proof of concept” round, combined with the fact that ICANN had specifically noted in the 2000 uTLD round that “controversy surrounding” .XXX was great,<sup>43</sup> ICM had to know that its proposed sTLD inevitably would generate public policy concerns.

D. CONSIDERATION AND ULTIMATE DENIAL OF ICM'S SPONSORED .XXX TLD APPLICATION.

39. ICANN received a total of ten sTLD applications, including ICM's March 16, 2004 application for a .XXX sTLD.<sup>44</sup> The International Foundation for Online Responsibility (“IFFOR”) was proposed as .XXX's sponsoring organization. In light of ICM's previous application for the .XXX TLD as an unsponsored TLD, ICM knew that establishing the

---

<sup>40</sup> Id. (emphasis added).

<sup>41</sup> ICM Memorial ¶ 121.

<sup>42</sup> New sTLD Application, December 15, 2003, Part A. Explanatory Notes – Community Value – Addition of new value to the Internet name space, Cl. Ex. 45.

<sup>43</sup> ICANN Report on TLD Applications: Application of the August 15 Criteria to Each Category or Group, November 9, 2000, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/tlds/report/report-iiib1c-09nov00.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit E. See also ICM Memorial, Dr. Elizabeth Williams Witness Statement, ¶ 7 (“It was also obvious from the 2000 ‘proof of concept’ round that an application for an adult content string would be controversial from a public relations standpoint.”).

<sup>44</sup> New sTLD RFP Application, .XXX, Part B. Application Form, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/tlds/stld-apps-19mar04/xxx.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit O.

requisite “community” of a sponsored TLD and other sponsorship-specific requirements presented complex issues that would need to be addressed.<sup>45</sup>

40. In April 2004, ICANN convened an independent panel of experts (the “Evaluation Panel”) to review and recommend those sTLD applications that satisfied the selection criteria.<sup>46</sup> After an initial review period, the Evaluation Panel submitted a list of questions to each applicant. The Evaluation Panel asked ICM to elaborate on how the proposed .XXX sTLD would “create a new and clearly differentiated space, and satisfy needs that cannot be readily met through the existing TLDs,” and how ICM planned to reconcile “various culturally-based definitions.”<sup>47</sup> Later that same month, ICM submitted a response to the Evaluation Panel.<sup>48</sup> The Evaluation Panel prepared a report regarding each application and made a determination as to whether the application met the baseline criteria set out in the RFP.<sup>49</sup>

41. The Evaluation Panel submitted to ICANN its evaluations for all ten sTLD applications by the end of August 2004. The Evaluation Panel found that two applicants – the applicants for .cat and .post – met all of the selection criteria of the RFP. It determined that three more applicants – applicants for .asia, .jobs, and .travel – did not meet all of the selection criteria but merited further consideration. The Evaluation Panel found that the remaining four

---

<sup>45</sup> See P. Twomey Witness Statement, ¶ 16.

<sup>46</sup> For example, the sponsorship/community value team was chaired by Dr. Williams and included Pierre Ouédraogo and Daniel Weitzner. See Status Report on the sTLD Evaluation Process, at 5, Cl. Ex. 83. Dr. Williams had been active in ICANN’s Registrars’ Constituency and the ccTLD constituency as a member of the .auDA (the ccTLD for Australia) Board, among other activities. New sTLD Applications, Appendix D - Evaluation Reports, August 27, 2004, at 116, Cl. Ex. 110. Mr. Ouédraogo had been an Information Society Project Manager at the Francophone Institute for Information and Learning New Technologies (INTIF), as well as a founding member of AFRINIC (the African Internet Registry for IP addresses), the AfTLD (African Internet Top-Level Domain Names Association), AFNOG (African Network Operators Group), and AfrICANN (the African network of participants in the ICANN process), and also a member of the ccNSO launching group at ICANN and a technical contact for .bf ccTLD (Burkina Faso). Id. at 115. Mr. Weitzner had been a Director of the World Wide Web Consortium’s Technology and Society activities. Id. at 115-16.

<sup>47</sup> Confidential Exhibit – Evaluation Team Questions for ICM and IFFOR, attached to ICANN’s First Brief as Confidential Ex. A.

<sup>48</sup> Confidential Exhibit – ICM and IFFOR’s Joint Response to Evaluation Team Questions, attached to ICANN’s First Brief as Confidential Ex. B.

<sup>49</sup> sTLD Status Report, Appendix B, Status Report on the sTLD Evaluation Process, November 28, 2005, Cl. Ex. 108.

applicants – applicants for .mail, .mobi, .tel, and .XXX – did not meet all of the selection criteria and had “deficiencies [that] cannot be remedied within the applicant’s proposed framework.” The Panel recommended that ICANN not consider those four applications further.<sup>50</sup>

42. With respect to .XXX, the Evaluation Panel found that ICM’s application met both the technical and business selection criteria but concluded that the .XXX application did not meet four of the nine subparts of the sponsorship selection criteria.<sup>51</sup> Specifically, the Evaluation Panel: (1) “did not believe that the .XXX application represented a clearly defined community”; (2) found that the lack of cohesion in the community, and the planned involvement of child advocates and free expression interest groups, would preclude the effective formulation of policy for the community; (3) was not convinced that there was sufficient evidence of community support outside of North America or from child safety, law enforcement, or freedom of expression organizations; and (4) “did not agree that the application added new value to the Internet name space.”<sup>52</sup> Each of these issues ultimately plagued ICM’s application.

43. Because the Evaluation Panel had recommended approval of only two sTLD applicants, in August 2004, the ICANN Board decided to give all of the other sTLD applicants another opportunity to provide clarifying information and to answer further questions “relating to any potential deficiencies in the application that were highlighted in the independent evaluation.”<sup>53</sup> All applicants were encouraged to review the contents of the reports and to respond in writing to ICANN.<sup>54</sup> One of ICM’s witnesses praises the action of the ICANN Board in permitting a new chance, not required by the process outlined in the RFP, for applicants, including ICM, to pursue the creation of new sTLDs.<sup>55</sup>

---

<sup>50</sup> ICANN, New sTLD Applications, Appendix D, Evaluation Reports, August 27, 2004, at 82, Cl. Ex. 110.

<sup>51</sup> Id. at 110.

<sup>52</sup> Id.

<sup>53</sup> Confidential Exhibit – Correspondence from Kurt Pritz, ICANN, to Stuart Lawley, ICM, erroneously dated July 31, 2004, enclosing Independent Evaluation Report for .XXX, Prepared for ICANN, Compiled on August 27, 2004, attached to ICANN’s First Brief as Confidential Exhibit D.

<sup>54</sup> Id.

<sup>55</sup> ICM Memorial, Ms. J. Beckwith Burr Witness Statement, ¶ 25.

44. ICM responded to the Board's request for more information and provided ICANN staff with a formal response to the Evaluation Panel's report, arguing that the Evaluation Panel's sponsorship concerns were unfounded.<sup>56</sup> The ICANN Board discussed ICM's application and its ability to satisfy the sponsorship criteria, and suggested that it might be helpful for ICM to make a formal presentation to the Board on this issue.<sup>57</sup> On April 3, 2005, ICM gave its presentation to the ICANN Board.<sup>58</sup>

45. On June 1, 2005, the ICANN Board held a special meeting via teleconference. The Board engaged in extensive discussion regarding ICM's .XXX sTLD application and ultimately passed two resolutions (with a 6-3 vote in favor, 2 abstentions, and 4 Board members absent):

Resolved [05.32] the Board authorizes the President and General Counsel to enter into negotiations relating to proposed commercial and technical terms for the .XXX sponsored top-level domain (sTLD) with the applicant.

Resolved [05.33] if after entering into negotiations with the .XXX sTLD applicant the President and General Counsel are able to negotiate a set of proposed commercial and technical terms for a contractual arrangement, the President shall present such proposed terms to this board, for approval and authorization to enter into an agreement relating to the delegation of the sTLD.<sup>59</sup>

---

<sup>56</sup> Confidential Exhibit – Formal Response to ICANN's Independent Evaluation Report on .XXX sTLD, from Stuart Lawley, ICM, to Kurt Pritz, ICANN, October 9, 2004, attached to ICANN's Opening Brief as Confidential Exhibit F. ICM and IFFOR later provided the ICANN Board with a memorandum similar to its formal response to ICANN staff, outlining the reasons why they believed the ICANN Board should allow the .XXX sTLD to proceed despite the recommendation of the Evaluation Panel. See Confidential Exhibit – Memorandum to the ICANN Board of Directors, November 2, 2004, Revised December 7, 2004, attached to ICANN's Opening Brief as Confidential Exhibit G.

<sup>57</sup> ICANN Minutes, Special Meeting of the Board, January 24, 2005, Cl. Ex. 132.

<sup>58</sup> See Confidential Exhibit - ICM Slide Presentation, attached to ICANN's Opening Brief as Confidential Exhibit H.

<sup>59</sup> ICANN Minutes, Special Meeting of the Board, June 1, 2005, Cl. Ex. 120; see also ICANN Bylaws, supra note 2, Article II, § 1 (“With respect to any matters that would fall within the provisions of Article III, Section 6, the Board may act only by a majority vote of all members of the Board. In all other matters, except as otherwise provided in these Bylaws or by law, the Board may act by majority vote of those present at any annual, regular, or special meeting of the Board.”).

46. While still uncertain whether ICM satisfied the requisite sponsorship criteria, the Board took this step of permitting contract negotiations to explore whether terms of a proposed contract could resolve some of the ongoing concerns regarding sponsorship.<sup>60</sup> Although the supplemental materials that ICM presented to the Board provided additional clarification, “the Board still expressed concerns about whether the applicant had met all of the criteria, and took the view that such concerns could possibly be addressed by contractual obligations to be stated in a registry agreement.”<sup>61</sup> “Other applicants have not yet been determined to meet the baseline criteria. We are working with them still actively to determine if the application can be configured in a way so that baseline criteria can be met.”<sup>62</sup> As the then-Chair of the ICANN Board explained, proceeding to contract negotiations would allow Board members “to understand more deeply exactly how [ICM’s] proposal would be implemented, and seeing the contractual terms, it seemed to [him], would put much more meat on the bones of the initial proposal.”<sup>63</sup>

47. Contrary to ICM’s position in these proceedings, the Board’s resolutions did not constitute an “unconditional” approval of ICM’s .XXX application, just as the Board’s original vote in November 2000 did not constitute final approval of the seven new TLDs at that time.<sup>64</sup> The resolutions themselves expressly disclaim any final decision by the Board that the .XXX application satisfied the sponsorship criteria (or any baseline selection criteria) set forth in the RFP. Instead, the resolutions expressly say that, notwithstanding the approval to negotiate, any ultimate “approval and authorization to enter into an agreement relating to the delegation of the sTLD” could only be sought in the future, and further Board action would be required to grant such approval.

---

<sup>60</sup> Letter from Paul Twomey, ICANN, to Mohamed Sharil Tarmizi, GAC Chairman, May 4, 2006, Cl. Ex. 188.

<sup>61</sup> Id.

<sup>62</sup> ICANN Meetings in Mar Del Plata, April 7, 2005, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/meetings/mardelplata/captioning-public-forum-2-07apr05.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit P.

<sup>63</sup> See, e.g., ICANN Meetings in Lisbon Portugal, Transcript – ICANN Board of Directors Meeting, March 30, 2007, Real-Time Captioning, Cl. Ex. 201.

<sup>64</sup> Compare ICM Memorial ¶ 186, with P. Twomey Witness Statement, ¶ 28; V. Cerf Witness Statement, ¶ 25; A. Pisanty Witness Statement, ¶ 16.

48. The plain language of the resolutions is reinforced by the subsequent conduct by members of the Board regarding its effect. Following the resolutions, which were promptly publicly posted (along with the Board minutes) on ICANN's website, the Board continued to debate ICM's ability to satisfy the sponsorship selection criteria at several Board meetings up to and including the March 30, 2007 meeting when the Board ultimately rejected the .XXX application and ICM's proposed registry contract.<sup>65</sup>

49. The Board's conduct with regard to other applicants also shows that permitting contract negotiations to proceed did not constitute an approval of the ICM application. The Board allowed applicants for other sTLDs – namely, .jobs and .mobi – to commence with contract negotiations despite open questions relating to the RFP selection criteria.<sup>66</sup> The Board permitted .jobs to proceed to contract negotiations while specifically requesting that during the negotiations, “special consideration be taken as to how broad-based policymaking would be created for the sponsored community, and how this sTLD would be differentiated in the name space.”<sup>67</sup> With respect to .mobi, the Board specifically requested that during contract negotiations “special consideration be taken as to confirm the sTLD applicant's proposed community of content providers for mobile phone users, and confirmation that the sTLD applicant's approach will not conflict with the current telephone numbering systems.”<sup>68</sup>

50. The Board's conduct after the June 2005 resolutions further demonstrates that those resolutions did not constitute a finding that ICM met the RFP criteria. In accordance with the June 2005 resolutions, ICANN staff entered into contract negotiations with ICM for a proposed registry agreement. By August 9, 2005, ICM's first draft .XXX sTLD registry agreement was posted on ICANN's website for public comment and submitted to the Board.

---

<sup>65</sup> The meetings at which the Board discussed ICM's XXX sTLD application included Board meetings on September 15, 2005; April 18, 2006; May 10, 2006; February 12, 2007; and March 30, 2007.

<sup>66</sup> See, e.g., ICANN Minutes, Special Meeting of the Board, December 13, 2004, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/minutes/minutes-13dec04.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit Q.

<sup>67</sup> Id.

<sup>68</sup> Id.

ICANN's next Board meeting was scheduled for August 16, 2005, at which time ICANN had planned on discussing ICM's first draft of the .XXX registry agreement.<sup>69</sup>

51. However, following the publication of ICM's first draft, the GAC's Chairman and several member countries expressed concerns with the proposed .XXX sTLD, and requested that the Board provide additional time for governments to express their concerns before the Board reached a final decision on the proposed registry agreement.<sup>70</sup> As shown above, see supra ¶ 15, ICANN was required by its Bylaws to consider these concerns, and the Board postponed discussion of ICM's first draft registry agreement to allow for input from the GAC.

52. In August and September 2005, members of the ICANN Board corresponded with various governments and members of the Internet community, and reflected on such communications at its September 15, 2005 Board meeting, where the ICANN Board engaged in a "lengthy discussion" regarding the sponsorship criteria, ICM's application and supporting materials, and the specific terms of ICM's draft .XXX sTLD registry agreement.<sup>71</sup> The Board did not approve the draft agreement, but instead voted 11-0 (with 3 abstentions) in favor of a resolution authorizing further negotiation.<sup>72</sup> Not a single Board member voted to approve the proposed agreement on the basis that the Board "already had approved" the .XXX sTLD.

53. The September 15, 2005 resolution of the ICANN Board specifically addressed the negotiation of sponsorship-related terms within the .XXX sTLD registry agreement:

Resolved (05.75), that the ICANN President and General Counsel are directed to discuss possible additional contractual provisions or modifications for inclusion in the .XXX Registry Agreement, to ensure that there are effective provisions requiring development and implementation of policies consistent with the principles in the ICM application. Following such additional discussions, the

---

<sup>69</sup> See ICM Draft, August 1, 2005, Sponsored TLD Registry Agreement, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/tlds/agreements/xxx/proposed-xxx-agmt-09aug05.pdf> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit R.

<sup>70</sup> See Letter from Mohamed Sharil Tarmizi, GAC Chairman, to ICANN Board Regarding .XXX TLD, August 12, 2005, Cl. Ex. 163; Letter from Michael D. Gallagher, U.S. DOC, to Vinton Cerf, received August 15, 2005, Cl. Ex. 162.

<sup>71</sup> ICANN Minutes, Special Meeting of the Board, September 15, 2005, Cl. Ex. 119.

<sup>72</sup> Id.

President and General Counsel are requested to return to the board for additional approval, disapproval or advice.

54. At that point, in view of the controversy surrounding .XXX (with continuing correspondence from GAC members),<sup>73</sup> and at the specific request of ICM,<sup>74</sup> the Board decided to postpone formal consideration of ICM's proposed registry agreement until the GAC was able to review and comment on ICM's proposal. ICANN staff continued to work with ICM on its proposed registry agreement in order to address concerns posed by various members of the Internet community. In March 2006, a second draft of the registry agreement was posted.

55. As the time approached for the ICANN Board's March 31, 2006 meeting in Wellington, New Zealand, several of the GAC member countries expressed the view that they and other member countries should address the public policy issues raised by the .XXX sTLD application. Thus, after extensive meetings and discussions among 33 GAC members over the course of several days, the GAC issued a document (the "Wellington Communiqué") on March 28, 2006. The Wellington Communiqué stated that the public interest benefits promised by ICM had not yet been included as ICM's obligations in the draft .XXX sTLD registry agreement,<sup>75</sup> and asked that ICANN confirm that any final registry agreement contain enforceable provisions covering all of ICM's commitments. The Wellington Communiqué also stated that "without prejudice to the above, several members of the GAC are emphatically opposed from a public policy perspective to the introduction of a .xxx sTLD."<sup>76</sup>

---

<sup>73</sup> ICANN continued to receive correspondence from GAC members specifically requesting ICANN to defer any decisions on the .XXX sTLD to allow for further comment. See, e.g., Letter from Peter Zangl, European Commission, to Vint Cerf, ICANN, September 16, 2005, Cl. Ex. 172 (urging ICANN to reconsider any decision to proceed with the .XXX sTLD application until the GAC has an opportunity to comment); Letter from Dr. Kai-Sheng Kao, GAC Representative to Taiwan, to ICANN Board, September 30, 2005, Cl. Ex. 169 (requesting the Board defer final decision on the .XXX sTLD to allow for further public comment; noting that ICANN should "consider all social and cultural aspects" of the TLD "to reduce the possible negative impacts and ill effects").

<sup>74</sup> Letter from Stuart Lawley, ICM, to Paul Twomey, August 15, 2005, available at <http://www.icann.org/correspondence/lawley-to-twomey-15aug05.pdf> (last visited May 5, 2009) ("[T]o preserve the integrity of the ICANN process, we request that the Board defer final approval of the ICM Registry Agreement."), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit S.

<sup>75</sup> GAC Communiqué – Wellington, New Zealand, March 28, 2006, Cl. Ex. 181.

<sup>76</sup> Id.

56. Following the issuance of the Wellington Communiqué, the ICANN Board conducted its March 31, 2006 meeting in Wellington and adopted by a 12-0 vote (with 3 abstentions) a resolution directing ICANN's President and General Counsel to "analyze all publicly received inputs, to continue negotiations with ICM Registry, and to return to the Board with any recommendations regarding amendments to the proposed sTLD registry agreement, particularly to ensure that the TLD sponsor will have in place adequate mechanisms to address any potential registrant violations of the sponsor's policies."<sup>77</sup>

57. ICANN staff and ICM continued to negotiate a revised registry agreement to address the GAC's concerns. Although the staff believed serious issues remained, ICM insisted that the Board vote at the May 10, 2006 Board meeting on the existing registry agreement.<sup>78</sup> At that May 10, 2006 meeting, the ICANN Board, after considerable discussion, voted 9-5 against ICM's draft of the proposed .XXX sTLD registry agreement.<sup>79</sup> Because a number of Board members did not view the contract negotiations as having adequately resolved the underlying sponsorship issues, some ICANN Board members were beginning to think that further contract negotiations would be pointless.<sup>80</sup>

58. The Board's May 10, 2006 vote did not deny ICM's application outright. Instead, ICANN permitted ICM another opportunity to negotiate with ICANN staff and attempt to revise the registry agreement to conform to the RFP specifications. ICANN staff and ICM thereafter worked to negotiate additional revisions to the draft .XXX sTLD registry agreement that addressed the concerns regarding the sponsorship requirements, among others.

59. After another revised .XXX sTLD registry agreement was posted on the ICANN website, various members of the purported .XXX community provided comments on ICANN's online public comment forum in opposition to the proposed .XXX sTLD. At the Board's

---

<sup>77</sup> ICANN Minutes, Regular Meeting of the Board, March 31, 2006, Cl. Ex. 184.

<sup>78</sup> ICANN Minutes, Special Meeting of the Board, April 18, 2006, Cl. Ex. 186 (Dr. Cerf noting "the desire of ICM to have an up or down vote at the May 10[, 2006] meeting").

<sup>79</sup> ICANN Minutes, Special Meeting of the Board, May 10, 2006, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/minutes/minutes-10may06.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit T.

<sup>80</sup> P. Twomey Witness Statement, ¶¶ 30, 55; V. Cerf Witness Statement, ¶¶ 35-37.

meeting held on February 12, 2007, several Board members expressed concern about the apparent splintering of community support for the .XXX sTLD, a key RFP sponsorship requirement. As a result, the Board unanimously approved a resolution directing ICANN staff to further consult with ICM in an effort to inform the Board's upcoming decision on whether the sponsorship criteria could be met.<sup>81</sup>

60. Nevertheless, it had become increasingly clear to several members of the ICANN Board that ICM's proposal was not going to satisfy the RFP sponsorship criteria. On March 30, 2007, the Board adopted (by a 9-5 vote) a resolution rejecting ICM's revised agreement and denying ICM's application for the .XXX sTLD.<sup>82</sup>

E. ICM'S INITIATION OF THE INDEPENDENT REVIEW PROCESS AND ICANN'S RESPONSE

61. On June 6, 2008 (over a year after the final rejection of its application), ICM initiated this independent review proceeding pursuant to Article IV, Section 3 of ICANN's Bylaws. That provision allows "[a]ny person materially affected by a decision or action of the Board that he or she asserts is inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws [to] submit a request for independent review of that decision or action."<sup>83</sup> After ICM submitted its initial brief requesting independent review, and ICANN submitted its response, ICM submitted its Memorial on January 22, 2009.

62. Invoking provisions in ICANN's Articles and Bylaws on openness, transparency, procedural fairness, and non-discrimination, along with ICANN's mission and "international law," ICM's Memorial challenges the Board's consideration and review of ICM's .XXX sTLD application. ICM's fundamental claim is that the Board acted contrary to the RFP, and that many Board members simply acted irrationally in voting to reject the .XXX application.

---

<sup>81</sup> ICANN Minutes, Special Meeting of the Board, February 12, 2007, Cl. Ex. 199 (The Board passed a Resolution directing "ICANN staff [to] consult with ICM and provide further information to the Board prior to its next meeting, so as to inform a decision by the Board about whether sponsorship criteria is met for the creation of a new .XXX sTLD.").

<sup>82</sup> ICANN, Meeting of the Board, Transcript, March 30, 2007, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/meetings/lisbon/transcript-board-30mar07.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit U.

<sup>83</sup> ICANN Bylaws, supra note 2, at Article IV, § 3.

63. Along with its Memorial, ICM submitted statements from Dr. Elizabeth Williams, Ms. J. Beckwith Burr, and Mr. Stuart Lawley, as well as expert reports from Dr. Milton Mueller and Professor Jack Goldsmith. Dr. Williams, who chaired the Evaluation Panel that twice rejected ICM's Application on the grounds that it failed to satisfy the sponsorship criteria, states that it was her "personal belief" that (even after the extensive discussion of the sponsorship criteria and the negative recommendation prepared by her own panel) the ICANN Board's June 1, 2005 vote "was a definitive statement that the Board . . . had approved the application based on its determination that the application met the selection criteria."<sup>84</sup> Similarly, Ms. Burr, ICM's counsel during the contract negotiations, now claims that the Board's June 1, 2005 vote irreversibly established that ICM had met the RFP criteria and was thereby entitled to delegation of the new sTLD regardless of the outcome of the contract negotiations.<sup>85</sup> (Notably, Ms. Burr does not address whether these proceedings are binding under ICANN's Bylaws, even though, during her work drafting the Bylaws, she acknowledged that independent review proceedings would be advisory and not binding on the ICANN Board.<sup>86</sup>) Mr. Lawley, ICM's President and CEO, articulates his "suspicion" that his company's application was rejected solely based on opposition by the United States government.<sup>87</sup> Dr. Mueller, ICM's "expert" on ICANN, shares this view.<sup>88</sup> Professor Goldsmith addresses the law governing this proceeding, opining that Article 4 of ICANN's Articles of Incorporation is a "choice-of-law provision" importing international law principles into this dispute.

64. In response, ICANN will show that the Board's consideration and rejection of ICM's application was fully consistent with ICANN's Articles and Bylaws. As described more fully in Section III.B below, the Board ultimately rejected ICM's application because, after thorough consideration of the application, the Board determined that ICM had failed to satisfy the RFP requirements in the following ways:

---

<sup>84</sup> ICM Memorial, Dr. Elizabeth Williams Witness Statement, ¶ 24.

<sup>85</sup> ICM Memorial, Ms. J. Beckwith Burr Witness Statement, ¶ 32.

<sup>86</sup> See, e.g., Becky Burr, Recommendations Regarding Accountability at II (August 23, 2002), available at <http://www.icann.org/en/committees/evol-reform/afap-report-23aug02.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009, attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit V).

<sup>87</sup> ICM Memorial, Mr. Stuart Lawley Witness Statement, ¶ 65.

<sup>88</sup> ICM Memorial, Expert Report of Dr. Milton Mueller at p. 44-45.

- ICM's definition of its sponsored TLD community was not capable of precise or clear definition;
- ICM's policies were not primarily in the interests of the sponsored TLD community;
- ICM's proposed community did not have needs and interests which are differentiated from those of the general global Internet community;
- ICM could not demonstrate that it had the requisite community support; and
- ICM was not adding new and valuable space to the Internet name space.

65. The RFP required ICM to address each of these items to the Board's satisfaction, but the Board ultimately concluded (just as the Evaluation Panel previously had) that ICM had failed in each of these respects. In all respects, ICANN operated in a fair, transparent, and reasoned manner in accordance with its Bylaws and Articles of Incorporation. Indeed, it is difficult to imagine a process more open and transparent, fair, and non-discriminatory – ICANN is quite unique in how it conducts its business, and its review of ICM's application was entirely consistent with its corporate requirements.

66. In support of its brief, and in response to ICM's filings, ICANN submits statements from the following individuals, each of whom was associated with ICANN at the time of the issue in dispute: Alejandro Pisanty (then-Vice Chair of the Board), Dr. Vinton Cerf (then-Chair of the Board), and Dr. Paul Twomey (ICANN's then- and current-President).

67. ICANN also submits an expert opinion by Professor David D. Caron to address ICM's international law arguments based on Professor Goldsmith's report. Professor Caron is a member of the Faculty of Law at the University of California at Berkeley, where he has taught since 1987 and since 1996 has held the C. William Maxeiner Distinguished Professor of Law Chair. Professor Caron's scholarship covers various aspects of international law and organization, with the corpus of this work focusing on public and private international dispute resolution, international courts and tribunals, the United Nations, the law of the sea, international environmental law, climate change, and general theory of international law. Professor Caron's other positions and awards are noted in his opinion and attached curriculum vitae.

III. THE PANEL SHOULD DECLARE THAT THE ICANN BOARD DID NOT ACT INCONSISTENTLY WITH ICANN'S ARTICLES AND BYLAWS IN CONSIDERING AND ULTIMATELY DENYING ICM'S APPLICATION.

68. ICM's claims are premised on several mischaracterizations of the nature of the independent review process and the law that applies to the facts and circumstances at issue here. In Section III.A, ICANN addresses these preliminary issues. Specifically, ICANN demonstrates that: (i) the decision that the Panel has been asked to render will not be legally binding on ICANN; (ii) decisions of the Board are entitled to great deference; and (iii) claims arising based on principles of international law do not apply in the circumstances of this proceeding.

69. With these legal matters clarified, ICANN will turn to the merits of ICM's claims, which revolve around four central factual assertions. As explained in Section III.B, the record makes clear that ICM's central assertions are wrong. As a result, and as shown in Section III.C, ICM's claims have no merit. At every stage in the process of considering and ultimately denying ICM's application, the ICANN Board acted in a manner consistent with ICANN's Articles and Bylaws.

A. ICM MISCHARACTERIZES THE NATURE OF THESE PROCEEDINGS AND THE LAW THAT APPLIES TO THEM.

70. This independent review process (the "IRP") is designed to provide a forum to address whether ICANN acted inconsistently with its Articles and Bylaws. The unique process was established to ensure that parties had the ability to seek consideration of actions of the ICANN Board by an entity outside of ICANN.

71. Despite the manner in which ICM has approached these proceedings, the process is not open-ended or all-encompassing. To the contrary, the provisions of the ICANN Bylaws that created the process are quite clear as to the purpose of these types of proceedings and the scope of the review they afford. Without meaningfully addressing the actual language of the Bylaws, ICM grossly mischaracterizes the nature of the IRP and the law that governs these proceedings. These mischaracterizations would radically transform this proceeding in a manner directly contrary to the plain and unambiguous language of the documents governing this proceeding, and would essentially place the Panel in the position of the "Supreme Court" of ICANN. This concept was explored and completely rejected at the time that ICANN adopted the current version of the IRP.

72. ICANN wishes to make clear that its rejection of ICM's positions does not diminish in any way the seriousness with which ICANN approaches this proceeding. The thoroughness of this response should put to rest any issue in this regard. Frankly, the lengths to which ICM appears willing to mischaracterize the Panel's role and the applicable authority suggest an appreciation by ICM of the weakness of its claims and the need to create new legal theories and standards of review that were never intended to apply in an IRP proceeding.

73. ICM's mischaracterizations of the IRP concern three aspects of the Panel's role.<sup>89</sup> First, ICM claims that the Panel should declare that its results are "binding" on ICANN.<sup>90</sup> As an initial matter, the Panel need not address that question: the ultimate binding or non-binding character of IRP declarations is an issue to be resolved later, if necessary, in any subsequent forum where the effect of a ruling may be involved. In any event, ICM's position is plainly wrong. The language and drafting history of the provisions governing the IRP make clear that any IRP results are not binding, but rather are addressed to the discretion of the ICANN Board to consider.

74. Second, ICM claims that the Panel should conduct a "full review" of ICANN's actions and decisions, by which ICM means de novo review without any deference to reasonable judgments of the ICANN Board.<sup>91</sup> This argument again ignores the plain language of the provisions governing the IRP, as well as other provisions in ICANN's Bylaws consistently demonstrating that substantial deference is owed to judgments of the ICANN Board. ICM's argument is also contrary to well-settled principles of the law governing review of corporate board actions.

75. Third, ICM claims that the Panel should apply international law to this proceeding (and thus that the Panel should consider claims under international law that are not referenced in

---

<sup>89</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶ 279.

<sup>90</sup> Id. ¶¶ 279, 284-309.

<sup>91</sup> Id. ¶¶ 279, 310-23.

the Bylaws that created the IRP process). ICM makes this claim despite the fact that the IRP procedure provides for review only of ICANN's "conformity" with its Bylaws and Articles of Incorporation.<sup>92</sup> In claiming that ICANN's actions and decisions should be evaluated under international law, ICM misinterprets Article 4 of ICANN's Articles of Incorporation (which states that ICANN will operate for the benefit of the Internet community by carrying out its activities "in conformity with relevant principles of international law") as a "choice-of-law provision" governing the IRP, thereby allowing a party to bring into an IRP freestanding claims based on any and all general principles of international law (or to interpret ICANN's Articles and Bylaws under any and all general principles of international law).<sup>93</sup> ICM's reading – which is in no way "straightforward[]" as ICM contends<sup>94</sup> – contravenes the plain language of the governing provisions as well as their drafting history. Because ICM's misreading is the basis for many of ICM's claims, many of those claims may and should be disregarded.<sup>95</sup>

1. The Results of The Independent Review Process Are Not Binding.

76. Ordinarily, the binding or non-binding character of a declaration issued by a panel such as this one would not be addressed by the panel itself; any such questions would be addressed in future proceedings, if needed. Nonetheless, ICM asks the Panel to state affirmatively that its declaration is "final and binding" on ICM and ICANN.<sup>96</sup> ICM's request is improper, but, in any event, the Bylaws and other provisions governing IRPs make clear that this proceeding leads to a declaration that the ICANN Board must review and consider, but which it is not bound to act upon.

77. ICM suggests that, if the Panel's declaration is not "binding," ICANN will somehow take the process less seriously. ICANN hopes that its approach to this proceeding has made clear that ICANN takes this process seriously. Indeed, as shown below, ICANN

---

<sup>92</sup> See id. ¶ 279.

<sup>93</sup> See id. ¶¶ 279, 324-42.

<sup>94</sup> Id. ¶ 332.

<sup>95</sup> See Caron Opinion ¶¶ 23-24 (stating that ICM's interpretation of Article 4 "misapprehends the question" before the Panel, and this "confusion infuses ICM's argument").

<sup>96</sup> ICM Memorial ¶ 279.

established the IRP to serve the important function of increasing accountability by leading to public decisions that “shall be posted on the [ICANN] Website when they become available.”<sup>97</sup> The underlying petitions and claims must also be posted on the ICANN website, as ICANN has in fact done.<sup>98</sup> Because ICANN’s continuing existence is premised on its long tradition of transparency and involvement from the broader Internet community, the ICANN Board will be under enormous public pressure to take seriously its duty to “consider” and “review[]” IRP declarations as directed in the Bylaws.<sup>99</sup> But the seriousness with which ICANN addresses this proceeding is beside the point for the Panel and not a basis for the Panel to find that the proceedings are, or should be, “binding” in some fashion not contemplated by the Bylaws.

a. The Bylaws And Their Drafting History Make Clear That IRP Declarations Are Not Binding.

78. The plain language of the IRP provisions, which are set forth in Article IV, section 3 of ICANN’s Bylaws, provides that the Panel’s declaration is advisory to the ICANN Board and not binding. The drafting history of the development of the IRP provisions – history that ICM ignores even though its own counsel participated in it – similarly makes clear that IRP declarations are not binding on ICANN.

i. The Bylaws Make Clear That IRP Declarations Are Not Binding.

79. The starting point is the plain text of the Bylaws governing the IRP process. A reader of ICM’s Memorial would be unaware that any text of the Bylaws addresses the effect of a panel’s declarations. Yet the Bylaws speak directly to the manner in which ICANN should treat a panel’s declarations, and makes clear that such declarations are advisory and not binding.

80. The Bylaws that govern the IRP process, entitled “Independent Review of Board Actions,” provide in full:

1. In addition to the reconsideration process described in Section 2 of this Article [on reconsideration by the Board], ICANN shall

---

<sup>97</sup> ICANN Bylaws, supra note 2, Article IV, § 3.13. ICANN’s Bylaws require ICANN to “maintain a publicly-accessible Internet World Wide Web site.” Id. at Article III, § 2.

<sup>98</sup> Id.; see generally www.icann.org (last visited May 5, 2009).

<sup>99</sup> ICANN Bylaws, supra note 2, Article IV, §§ 3.8.c, 3.15.

have in place a separate process for independent third-party review of Board actions alleged by an affected party to be inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws.

2. Any person materially affected by a decision or action by the Board that he or she asserts is inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws may submit a request for independent review of that decision or action.
3. Requests for such independent review shall be referred to an Independent Review Panel (“IRP”), which shall be charged with comparing contested actions of the Board to the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, and with declaring whether the Board has acted consistently with the provisions of those Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws.
4. The IRP shall be operated by an international arbitration provider appointed from time to time by ICANN (“the IRP Provider”) using arbitrators under contract with or nominated by that provider.
5. Subject to the approval of the Board, the IRP Provider shall establish operating rules and procedures, which shall implement and be consistent with this Section 3.
6. Either party may elect that the request for independent review be considered by a three-member panel; in the absence of any such election, the issue shall be considered by a one-member panel.
7. The IRP Provider shall determine a procedure for assigning members to individual panels; provided that if ICANN so directs, the IRP Provider shall establish a standing panel to hear such claims.
8. The IRP shall have the authority to:
  - a. request additional written submissions from the party seeking review, the Board, the Supporting Organizations, or from other parties;
  - b. declare whether an action or inaction of the Board was inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws; and
  - c. recommend that the Board stay any action or decision, or that the Board take any interim action, until such time as the Board reviews and acts upon the opinion of the IRP.

9. Individuals holding an official position or office within the ICANN structure are not eligible to serve on the IRP.

10. In order to keep the costs and burdens of independent review as low as possible, the IRP should conduct its proceedings by e-mail and otherwise via the Internet to the maximum extent feasible. Where necessary, the IRP may hold meetings by telephone.

11. The IRP shall adhere to conflicts-of-interest policy stated in the IRP Provider's operating rules and procedures, as approved by the Board.

12. Declarations of the IRP shall be in writing. The IRP shall make its declaration based solely on the documentation, supporting materials, and arguments submitted by the parties, and in its declaration shall specifically designate the prevailing party. The party not prevailing shall ordinarily be responsible for bearing all costs of the IRP Provider, but in an extraordinary case the IRP may in its declaration allocate up to half of the costs of the IRP Provider to the prevailing party based upon the circumstances, including a consideration of the reasonableness of the parties' positions and their contribution to the public interest. Each party to the IRP proceedings shall bear its own expenses.

13. The IRP operating procedures, and all petitions, claims, and declarations, shall be posted on the Website when they become available.

14. The IRP may, in its discretion, grant a party's request to keep certain information confidential, such as trade secrets.

15. Where feasible, the Board shall consider the IRP declaration at the Board's next meeting.

81. In several places, the Bylaws make clear that panel declarations are advisory and not binding. The Bylaws charge the Panel with "comparing contested actions of the Board to the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, and with declaring whether the Board has acted consistently with the provisions of those Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws."<sup>100</sup> The Panel's "declarations" on this question are not binding on the Board. To the contrary, the IRP provisions repeatedly explain that panel declarations are committed to the ICANN Board for review and consideration. In particular, the Bylaws direct the Board to “consider” the declaration.<sup>101</sup> The direction to “consider” the Panel’s declaration necessarily means that the Board has discretion whether and how to implement it; if the declaration were binding, such as with a court judgment or binding arbitration ruling, there would be nothing to consider, only an order to implement.

---

<sup>100</sup> Id. at Article IV, § 3.3.

82. Another provision similarly states that the Board is to “review[]” IRP determinations, again making clear that ultimate authority is reserved to the Board.<sup>102</sup> ICM argues that the word “review” entails a supervisory (and hence controlling) function.<sup>103</sup> Yet, this argument actually defeats ICM’s position because the ICANN Board is specifically directed to “review” the Panel’s declarations, not to “implement” them.<sup>104</sup>

83. ICM offers no explanation for how the Panel’s declarations could be binding where the Board is expressly directed to “consider” and “review” the declarations, and is nowhere required to implement them uncritically (or otherwise).<sup>105</sup> ICM also offers no explanation for how declarations could be binding where the Panel is not given authority to issue injunctions or award damages.

84. Notably, the Board is not even required to review or consider the declaration immediately, or at any particular time. Instead, the Bylaws simply encourage the Board to consider the declaration at the next Board meeting, but specifically provide that the Board need only do so “[w]here feasible.”<sup>106</sup> The use of non-mandatory language in this timing provision reinforces the fact that the Board’s action (review and consideration) is not itself contemplated to require acceptance of the Panel’s declaration.

---

<sup>101</sup> Id. at Article IV, § 3.15.

<sup>102</sup> Id. at Article IV, § 3.8.c.

<sup>103</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶¶ 281, 312.

<sup>104</sup> See also V. Cerf Witness Statement, ¶¶ 10-12 (explaining that the IRP provisions “demonstrate that the ICANN Board retains ultimate authority over ICANN’s affairs, and that any declaration by the Independent Review Panel is not binding on the ICANN Board”).

<sup>105</sup> Likewise, the Bylaws do not provide – as they would have had the dispute resolution process been intended to result in a binding decision – for a process by which the parties could enforce the panel’s decision. Nor do the Bylaws provide how any decision of the panel might be self-enforcing. The absence of all such provisions merely confirms again that the panel’s decision is not binding.

<sup>106</sup> ICANN Bylaws, supra note 2, Article IV, § 3.15.

85. Providing still further proof of the Board’s ultimate authority, for the period during which the Board is reviewing and considering the Panel’s declaration, the Panel may merely “recommend that the Board stay any action or decision, or that the Board take any interim action.”<sup>107</sup> The Panel’s limited authority to recommend, rather than to require, temporary action reinforces the conclusion that the Board retains ultimate authority to decide what actions to take – both temporary and permanent – in response to the Panel’s conclusions in an IRP. If final declarations were binding, it would make no sense for interim remedies merely to be recommended to the Board. ICM offers no explanation as to how this provision can be reconciled with its position urging a binding effect for the Panel’s results.

ii. The Drafting History of the Bylaws Makes Clear That IRP Declarations Are Not Binding.

86. The lengthy drafting history of ICANN’s independent review process confirms that ICM’s position is wrong. ICM ignores all of this history, despite the fact that one of its witnesses in this proceeding was directly involved in the drafting, and her recognition during the drafting that a Panel’s findings would not be binding could not have been more clear.

87. The original version of the Bylaws, adopted in November 1998 when ICANN was first formed, did not contain a provision establishing an independent review process. The Bylaws simply stated that “[t]he Board may, in its sole discretion, provide for an independent review process by a neutral third party.”<sup>108</sup> When the Bylaws were revised later that month, this provision was amended to direct the adoption of a review process, but it did not provide additional specificity as to the process itself.<sup>109</sup>

---

<sup>107</sup> Id. at Article IV, § 3.8.c (emphasis added).

<sup>108</sup> ICANN Bylaws, Article III, § 4 (November 6, 1998), available at <http://www.icann.org/en/general/archive-bylaws/bylaws-06nov98.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit W.

<sup>109</sup> The revised provision states that the Board shall, “following solicitation of input from the Advisory Committee on Independent Review and other interested parties and consideration of all such suggestions, adopt policies and procedures for independent third-party review of Board actions alleged by an affected party to have violated the Corporation’s articles of incorporation or bylaws.” ICANN Bylaws, Article III, § 4(b) (November 21, 1998), available at <http://www.icann.org/en/general/archive-bylaws/bylaws-23nov98.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit X.

88. In nine subsequent revisions to the Bylaws during ICANN’s early formative period, from March 31, 1999, through February 12, 2002, the IRP Bylaws remained the same.<sup>110</sup> But during that period, ICANN proceeded with various activities to establish the independent review process as directed by the Bylaws. As part of that process, an advisory committee began working on the development of an independent review process and ultimately issued draft principles on matters ranging from the number of panelists to their length of service and required qualifications.<sup>111</sup>

89. Throughout its work, the committee consistently emphasized the non-binding nature of the review process. For instance, in comments issued in 1999, the committee stated that the IRP would be persuasive in its authority, “rest[ing] on its independence, on the prestige and professional standing of its members, and on the persuasiveness of its reasoned opinions.”<sup>112</sup> But the committee explained that “the ICANN Board should retain ultimate authority over ICANN’s affairs – after all, it is the Board, not the [independent review panel], that will be chosen by (and is directly accountable to) the membership and the supporting organizations,” and that the “reasoned and persuasive decision[s]” of the panel, which would be “made public,” would “have to be taken seriously by the Board.”<sup>113</sup>

90. When the committee’s ideas were discussed at the Board’s open meeting in May 1999, the non-binding nature of the contemplated process was again confirmed. A question was asked whether the Board’s action would have “[p]recedence” over the conclusion of the

---

<sup>110</sup> See generally ICANN Bylaws Archive, Cl. Ex. 38.

<sup>111</sup> See Draft Principles for Independent Review, Interim Report of the Advisory Committee on Independent Review With Addendum, available at <http://cyber.law.harvard.edu/icann/berlin/archive/IRdraft.html> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit Y; see also Independent Review Policy, March 10, 2000, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/committees/indreview/policy.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit Z.

<sup>112</sup> Draft Principles for Independent Review, Interim Report of the Advisory Committee on Independent Review With Addendum, available at <http://cyber.law.harvard.edu/icann/berlin/archive/IRdraft.html> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit Y.

<sup>113</sup> Id. (emphasis added).

reviewing panel.<sup>114</sup> The response was clear as to the non-binding effect of a panel's results: "If the board disagreed with the independent review committee, the board would do what it thought was appropriate. But it would all be public."<sup>115</sup>

91. The committee's work did not lead to the creation of an independent review process in 1999, but ICANN renewed its efforts in 2001 as part of a broader evaluation of its structure and processes.<sup>116</sup> In November 2001, ICANN established a committee that became known as the Committee on ICANN Evolution and Reform (the "ERC"), with responsibility for recommending changes to ICANN's structure and processes.<sup>117</sup> The ERC was tasked with, among other things, identifying workable "checks and balances that will ensure both the effectiveness and the openness of the organization."<sup>118</sup> To that end, in June 2002, the ERC issued a report entitled "ICANN: A Blueprint for Reform," which outlined the Committee's recommendations.<sup>119</sup> The Board subsequently adopted the Blueprint.

92. The Blueprint stated unequivocally that any new independent review process would be non-binding. In a section entitled "Accountability," the Blueprint recommended (and the Board agreed) that the Board would "create a process to require non-binding arbitration by an

---

<sup>114</sup> ICANN Open Meeting – Afternoon Session, May 25 & 26, 1999, available at <http://cyber.law.harvard.edu/icann/berlin/archive/open2.html> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AA.

<sup>115</sup> Id. Indeed, the committee initially described the review process as resulting in "advisory opinions." Id. While the committee later substituted that phrase with the term "declar[at]ions," it made clear that this change merely reflected the committee's interest in "more firmly root[ing]" the independent review process in the overall structure of ICANN (id. at Addendum to Interim Report) and did not alter the non-binding nature of the review process.

<sup>116</sup> The delay in implementing the committee's suggestions resulted from the need for procedures and requirements for appointing the panelists, which proved more time-consuming to accomplish than anticipated. See Draft Principles for Independent Review, Interim Report of the Advisory Committee on Independent Review, available at <http://cyber.law.harvard.edu/icann/berlin/archive/IRdraft.html> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit Y.

<sup>117</sup> See Committee on ICANN Evolution and Reform, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/committees/evol-reform> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AB.

<sup>118</sup> See id.

<sup>119</sup> See ICANN: A Blueprint for Reform (June 20, 2002) (the "Blueprint"), available at <http://www.icann.org/en/committees/evol-reform/blueprint-20jun02.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AC.

international arbitration body to review any allegation that the Board has acted in conflict with ICANN's Bylaws."<sup>120</sup> The Blueprint included three other recommendations for accountability: establishing an office of ombudsman; establishing a public-outreach staff position; and modifying the pre-existing reconsideration process in certain respects.<sup>121</sup> Each of these recommendations, along with the IRP process, served the common purpose of "advanc[ing] ICANN's core values of openness and transparency."<sup>122</sup>

93. ICM's counsel in conjunction with its sTLD application, Ms. J. Beckwith Burr, actively participated in the process and expressly agreed that the review process would not be binding. Ms. Burr, who had previously worked for the United States Department of Commerce, where she was responsible for issues related to ICANN, was in private law practice in 2002 (at the firm where she later represented ICM with respect to its .XXX sTLD application<sup>123</sup>) when the ERC asked her to suggest ways to implement the Blueprint's recommendations on accountability. In a report dated August 23, 2002, Ms. Burr provided her suggestions, within the framework of the ERC's concern that "ICANN's decision making process must be perceived as unbiased."<sup>124</sup>

94. In addressing the independent review process, Ms. Burr explained that IRP "decisions will be nonbinding, because the Board will retain final decision-making authority."<sup>125</sup> Ms. Burr further noted that, especially when compared to the reconsideration process administered by the Board rather than a "neutral" entity, the significance of the IRP process was not any binding effect but rather the IRP's status as a "formal process to review allegations that the Board has acted in conflict with ICANN's Bylaws."<sup>126</sup> Accountability would

---

<sup>120</sup> Id. at § 5 (emphasis added).

<sup>121</sup> Id.

<sup>122</sup> Id.

<sup>123</sup> See ICM Memorial, Ms. J. Beckwith Burr Witness Statement, ¶ 7.

<sup>124</sup> Becky Burr, Recommendations Regarding Accountability at II (August 23, 2002), available at <http://www.icann.org/en/committees/evol-reform/afap-report-23aug02.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit V.

<sup>125</sup> Id. (emphasis added).

<sup>126</sup> Id.

be achieved by a panel’s “persuasive public power,” which would be possible by making panel announcements “easily available” to the public.<sup>127</sup>

95. In this proceeding, ICM has submitted a lengthy witness statement by Ms. Burr, but her statement does not address any of her work on the IRP drafting issue.<sup>128</sup>

96. The ERC ultimately proposed a set of substantially revised Bylaws to the Board, addressing a new independent review process as well as a host of other issues evaluated during the evolution-and-reform process.<sup>129</sup> In doing so, the ERC explained that the proposed IRP Bylaws (which became Article IV, section 3 of the Bylaws) “largely track[ed] the recommendations” of Ms. Burr.<sup>130</sup>

97. In preparing and proposing the new Bylaws, the ERC again emphasized the non-binding nature of the new IRP. In an August 2002 interim report, the ERC stated: “We do not believe that ICANN should have either a Supreme Court or a ‘Super Board’ with the ability to nullify decisions reached by the ICANN Board, which will be the most broadly representative body within the ICANN structure.”<sup>131</sup> In its final report issued in October 2002 along with the new set of Bylaws, the ERC similarly stated that “a ‘Supreme Court,’ with the power to revisit and potentially reverse or vacate decisions of the ICANN Board, would itself raise many difficult questions” and thus had not been adopted.<sup>132</sup> As these comments demonstrate, although focused on providing accountability for the Board’s actions through the IRP, the ERC did not replace the

---

<sup>127</sup> Id.

<sup>128</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶ 10.

<sup>129</sup> See Proposed New Bylaws Recommended by the Committee on ICANN Evolution and Reform, Art. 4, § 3, ¶¶ 12-13 (October 23, 2002), available at <http://www.icann.org/en/committees/evol-reform/proposed-bylaws-23oct02.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AD.

<sup>130</sup> ERC, Final Implementation Report and Recommendations, at § 5 (October 2, 2002) [“Final Implementation Report”], available at <http://www.icann.org/en/committees/evol-reform/final-implementation-report-02oct02.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AE.

<sup>131</sup> ERC, First Interim Implementation Report, at § 2 (August 1, 2002), available at <http://www.icann.org/en/committees/evol-reform/first-implementation-report-01aug02.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AF.

<sup>132</sup> Final Implementation Report, supra note 130.

ultimate authority of that broadly representative Board with that of an independent third party otherwise unconnected to ICANN and its constituencies.

98. In reviewing and ultimately adopting the ERC's proposed Bylaws in December 2002, the Board again confirmed the non-binding nature of the IRP. The Board agreed with the ERC that the Board would retain ultimate authority, and amended the language proposed by the ERC to clarify even further the non-binding nature of the IRP. Specifically, it replaced the ERC's reference to IRP "decisions" with the term "declarations."<sup>133</sup> As explained in the Board's minutes, this replacement was precisely to avoid any erroneous inference that the IRP determinations are binding decisions akin to those of a judicial or arbitral tribunal.<sup>134</sup>

99. In his witness statement, Dr. Cerf, who was Chair of the ICANN Board when it adopted the IRP Bylaws, confirmed the Board's intent that the IRP would be non-binding. As he explained, "[w]hen the IRP was created, it was intended that an Independent Review Panel would consider claims that the ICANN Board violated ICANN's Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws, would conduct a reasoned and persuasive analysis of those claims, and would make public its conclusion and rationale so that members of the Internet community would understand the results of the process."<sup>135</sup> An independent review panel "was never meant to have the authority to overrule, nullify, or stay decisions of the ICANN Board."<sup>136</sup>

iii. ICM's Contrary Arguments Are Baseless.

100. ICM does not acknowledge the Bylaws provisions and the substantial drafting history. Instead, in support of its argument that the IRP Bylaws provide for "final and binding" declarations, ICM takes a few fragmentary phrases in the IRP Bylaws out of context.

---

<sup>133</sup> Compare Proposed New Bylaws Recommended by the Committee on ICANN Evolution and Reform, Art. 4, § 3, ¶¶ 12-13 (October 23, 2002), available at <http://www.icann.org/en/committees/evol-reform/proposed-bylaws-23oct02.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AD, with ICANN Bylaws, Art. 4, § 3, ¶¶ 12-13 (December 15, 2002) (referring to panel "declarations"), available at <http://www.icann.org/en/general/archive-bylaws/bylaws-15dec02.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AG.

<sup>134</sup> See ICANN Minutes, October 31, 2002, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/minutes/minutes-31oct02.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AH.

<sup>135</sup> V. Cerf Witness Statement, ¶ 9.

<sup>136</sup> Id.

101. ICM's primary argument is that the IRP Bylaws' use of the word "arbitration" necessitates the conclusion that the IRP is binding.<sup>137</sup> This is wrong. The Bylaws never characterize the IRP as "arbitration." To the contrary, they consistently refer to the proceeding as an "independent review" and never as "arbitration."<sup>138</sup> The Bylaws' one use of the word "arbitration" refers not to the nature of the IRP proceeding, but rather to the entity that will implement the IRP.<sup>139</sup> Because arbitral bodies are suitable entities to implement the process that ICANN established, it is unremarkable that they would be used to implement the IRP, and an occurrence of the word "arbitration" in that context does not support ICM's contention. In limiting the word's occurrence to a reference to the entity conducting the review, and consistently refraining from using the term to characterize the nature of the proceedings or the effects of the Panel's conclusions, the Bylaws actually reinforce that the IRP is not binding. Plainly, the Bylaws used the word "arbitration" where appropriate, so the failure to use the word "arbitration" in explaining the nature of the proceeding was deliberate.

102. Moreover, as shown above, the drafters of the Bylaws obviously did not understand the term "arbitration" to refer to a proceeding with necessarily binding results; in the course of the drafting history, they occasionally used the phrase "non-binding arbitration" to refer to the process.<sup>140</sup> Thus, the word "arbitration" would not be dispositive even if it had been used in reference to the proceeding as ICM wrongly claims.

103. ICM's only other textual argument is to quote phrases in the Bylaws out of context that, according to ICM, also suggest a "binding" effect. Thus, ICM points to the phrases "independent review," "declaration," "decisions/opinions," "writing[s]," "act[ing] upon the opinion of the IRP," and "prevailing party."<sup>141</sup> None of these terms, standing on their own and especially in their context, can possibly be read to require a binding decision, particularly in the

---

<sup>137</sup> ICM Memorial ¶¶ 291-92, 298-302.

<sup>138</sup> See ICANN Bylaws, supra note 2, Article IV, §§ 3.1-6, 3.9.

<sup>139</sup> See id. at Article IV, § 3.4 (stating that the review process should be administered by an "international arbitration provider . . . using arbitrators under contract with or nominated by that provider").

<sup>140</sup> See Blueprint, supra note 119, at § 5.

<sup>141</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶¶ 282, 304, 306-07.

face of the voluminous evidence ignored by ICM showing that the contrary was presupposed.<sup>142</sup> ICM offers no contextual analysis that could in any way support its bare assertions.

104. ICM also quotes statements by then-ICANN president Stuart Lynn and current-president Dr. Paul Twomey discussing the need for transparency and accountability in ICANN's structure and processes.<sup>143</sup> ICM's quotations are badly inapposite. Interest in greater transparency and accountability, however, obviously does not require, or even suggest, a binding result. To the contrary, these statements make clear that the driving purpose of the IRP was not to create a new tribunal to impose binding decisions, but rather to provide another means to foster openness and accountability, which the IRP accomplishes through the persuasive public power of the panel's declarations.<sup>144</sup> 105. ICM's heavy emphasis<sup>145</sup> on Dr. Twomey's use of the word "final" is particularly mystifying. During hearings before Congress in 2006 in which he addressed three "processes for accountability in [ICANN's] decision-making and in its bylaws," Dr. Twomey characterized the IRP as the Bylaws' "final method of accountability."<sup>146</sup> The IRP process was certainly "the final" (i.e., the last in time) of the three methods to which Dr. Twomey referred (the first two

---

<sup>142</sup> With respect to the phrase "prevailing party," ICM relies on case law addressing that term for purposes of attorneys' fee awards in civil rights litigation. See ICM Memorial ¶ 306. ICM provides no basis for applying that authority to the different situation here of an alternative dispute resolution where neither judicial litigation, civil rights, nor attorneys' fees are at issue. Obviously, a party "prevails" here if the panel issues a declaration in that party's favor, whether or not that declaration is binding.

<sup>143</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶¶ 284-89. Indeed, ICM claims that "it is instructive to consider" these statements "[b]efore considering the plain language of the provisions governing the Independent Review Process." ICM Memorial ¶ 284 (emphasis added). ICM's backward approach to interpreting the Bylaws underscores the absence of any textual basis for ICM's argument.

<sup>144</sup> See ICANN Governance, Hearing before the S. Subcommittee on Science, Technology, and Space of the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, 107 Cong. 2 (2002) (statement of Mr. Lynn that any reform efforts should "retain the fair, open, and transparent character of ICANN processes"); Hearings Before the H. Subcommittee on Commerce, Trade, and Consumer Protection and Subcommittee on Telecommunications & the Internet of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, 109th Cong. 19 (2006) (statement of Dr. Twomey emphasizing that the IRP is part of ICANN's "well-established principles and processes for accountability").

<sup>145</sup> ICM Memorial ¶¶ 288-89.

<sup>146</sup> Hearings Before the H. Subcommittee on Commerce, Trade, and Consumer Protection and Subcommittee on Telecommunications & the Internet of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, 109th Cong. 19 (2006).

being the Board’s initial decision-making process and the reconsideration process administered by the Board). Dr. Twomey obviously was not addressing whether an IRP declaration was legally binding on ICANN.

106. Likewise, ICM’s reliance on Mr. Lynn’s and Dr. Twomey’s references to “arbitrators” or “arbitration” is similarly misplaced.<sup>147</sup> The context of the statements ICM references makes clear that neither Mr. Lynn nor Dr. Twomey was referring to the question of whether a panel’s declarations were binding.<sup>148</sup> The word “arbitration” in this context does not have any relevance to the effect of IRP declarations, because, as shown above, ICANN has expressly used the term “arbitration” to refer to a “non-binding” process.<sup>149</sup> 107. In short, nothing in the IRP provisions in any way suggests that the Panel’s declaration is “binding.” To the contrary, the provisions’ plain language and drafting history make clear that the Panel’s declarations, have persuasive and advisory force, but do not bind the ICANN Board.

b. The Supplementary Procedures Governing The IRP Confirm That IRP Declarations Are Not Binding.

108. The operating rules and procedures for the IRP confirm that IRP declarations are not binding. Pursuant to Article IV, section 3.5 of the ICANN Bylaws, ICANN established rules to govern the IRP, selecting the ICDR International Arbitration Rules (“ICDR Rules”)<sup>150</sup> as amended by ICANN’s Supplementary Procedures.<sup>151</sup> ICANN’s individualization of the ICDR

---

<sup>147</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶¶ 287-88.

<sup>148</sup> See ICANN Governance, Hearing before the S. Subcommittee on Science, Technology, and Space of the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, 107 Cong. 2 (2002) (statement of Mr. Lynn that ICANN was creating a mechanism for “independent review of ICANN Board actions by experienced arbitrators”); Hearings Before the H. Subcommittee on Commerce, Trade, and Consumer Protection and Subcommittee on Telecommunications & the Internet of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, 109th Cong. 19 (2006) (statement of Dr. Twomey describing the IRP as “an independent review panel or arbitration process”).

<sup>149</sup> See Blueprint, supra note 119, § 5.

<sup>150</sup> See International Centre for Dispute Resolution, International Dispute Resolution Procedures [“ICDR Rules”], Cl. Ex. 11.

<sup>151</sup> See Supplementary Procedures for Internet Corporation for Assigned Names and Numbers [“Supplementary Procedures”], Cl. Ex. 12.

Rules, through those Supplementary Procedures, makes clear that IRP declarations are not binding.

109. Supplementary Procedures 6 and 8 are determinative. Supplementary Procedure 6, entitled “Interim Measures of Protection,” tracks the similar provision in the IRP Bylaws by stating that the Panel may merely “recommend that the Board stay any action or decision, or that the Board take any interim action, until such time as the Board reviews and acts upon the opinion of the IRP.”<sup>152</sup> As noted above, the authority merely to “recommend” temporary action, until the Board “reviews” the panel’s conclusions, demonstrates that the panel’s declarations do not have binding force. Moreover, this Supplementary Procedure replaces Article 21 of the ICDR Rules, also entitled “Interim Measures of Protection.” Article 21 authorizes an arbitral panel to “take whatever measures it deems necessary, including injunctive relief and measures for the protection or conservation of property” or “an interim award” that may require “security for the costs of such measures.”<sup>153</sup> By replacing the ICDR rule that authorizes the panel itself to award interim relief, and providing its own rule that retains the ICANN Board’s judgment and decision-making authority, ICANN ensured that even interim declarations by a panel would not be binding on the Board.

110. Supplementary Procedure 8 similarly confirms the non-binding nature of IRP declarations. In the ICDR Rules, Article 27 is entitled “Form and Effect of the Award” and specifies that arbitration awards are “final and binding.”<sup>154</sup> ICANN, however, adopted Supplementary Procedure 8, which replaces this provision. The title of Supplementary Procedure 8 – “Form and Effect of an IRP Declaration” – corresponds to Article 27 but, again, is tailored to ICANN’s particular review process. Like the IRP Bylaws that it tracks,<sup>155</sup> the supplementary rule refers to “declarations” and specifically omits the Article 27 reference to a

---

<sup>152</sup> Id. at Supplementary Procedure 6 (emphasis added). The IRP Bylaws state that the panel may “recommend that the Board stay any action or decision, or that the Board take any interim action, until such time as the Board reviews and acts upon the opinion of the IRP.” ICANN Bylaws, supra note 2, Article IV, § 3.8.c.

<sup>153</sup> ICDR Rules, supra note 150, Article 21; see also id., Article 27(7) (“In addition to making a final award, the tribunal may make interim, interlocutory or partial orders and awards.”).

<sup>154</sup> Id. at Article 27.

<sup>155</sup> See ICANN Bylaws, supra note 2, Article IV, § 3.12.

binding effect. The supplementary rule states that declarations shall: (i) “be made in writing, promptly by the [panel], based on the documentation, supporting materials and arguments submitted by the party,” (ii) “designate the prevailing party,” (iii) “be made public” if the parties consent, and (iv) be provided to the parties.<sup>156</sup> Supplementary Procedure 8 thus squarely rejects the “final and binding” language contained in Article 27.<sup>157</sup>

111. ICM claims that Supplementary Rule 8 has no effect on Article 27 or its reference to “final and binding” awards.<sup>158</sup> ICM would have the Panel reach the absurd conclusion that there are two different rules, both labeled “Form and Effect” of a result, with largely overlapping but different content, despite the fact that one was specially adopted for this proceeding and differs from the other, which is a standardized rule governing proceedings in the absence of modification. ICM’s only rationale for this nonsensical position is that, whereas ICANN expressly provided that another ICDR Rule (Article 37 addressing procedures for emergency proceedings) “will not apply,” ICANN did not make a similar statement with respect to Article 27. But it would have made no sense for ICANN to have made such a statement regarding Article 27. Unlike with Article 37, which ICANN eliminated wholesale without any corresponding replacement, ICANN modified Article 27 by expressly adopting a supplemental provision with a corresponding title that altered the content of Article 27. In light of Article 27’s modification, rather than entire elimination, it would have made no sense for ICANN to state, as it did with respect to Article 37, that Article 27 “did not apply.”

---

<sup>156</sup> See Supplementary Procedures, supra note 151, Supplementary Procedure 8.

<sup>157</sup> Setting aside prefatory Supplementary Procedures 1 and 2 (identifying definitions and scope of the Supplementary Procedures), ICANN’s other Supplementary Procedures, like Procedures 6 and 8, correspond to particular provisions in the ICDR Rules. Specifically, Procedure 3, entitled “Number of Independent Review Panelists,” corresponds to Article 5 on “Number of Arbitrators”; Procedure 4, entitled “Conduct of the Independent Review,” corresponds to Article 16 on “Conduct of the Arbitration”; Procedure 5, entitled “Written Statements,” corresponds to Article 17 of the same name; Procedure 7, entitled “Declarations,” corresponds to Article 26 on “Awards, Decisions and Rulings”; and Procedure 9, entitled “Costs,” corresponds to Article 31 of the same name. In modifying the ICDR Rules in each instance, ICANN replaced references to “arbitration” or “tribunal” with “independent review” or “IRP”; references to “arbitrators” with “independent review panelists”; and references to “award, decision, or ruling” with “declaration.” ICANN’s consistent and repeated tailoring of the ICDR Rules confirms that ICANN rejected any binding effect of results otherwise provided for in those Rules.

<sup>158</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶¶ 282, 308. ICM does not address the significance of Supplementary Rule 6’s replacement of Article 21.

112. ICM also argues that the act of using the ICDR Rules on arbitration somehow transforms this proceeding into a binding arbitration.<sup>159</sup> But the use of the ICDR Rules – as amended by ICANN’s Supplementary Procedures – actually proves just the opposite. While the ICDR Rules on arbitration apply well-established rules to the conduct of an IRP – to govern such procedural matters as the appointment of panelists, scheduling, and the manner in which the parties may discuss and provide evidence – the Supplementary Procedures expressly replace those provisions in the ICDR Rules that concern the effect of a panel’s determinations, tailoring the rules to ICANN’s process in which a panel’s declarations are not binding. In relying superficially on the word “arbitration” in the title of the ICDR Rules, ICM ignores the content of ICANN’s amendments to those rules. Some of those amendments would not have been required if ICANN had intended the IRP to be binding. As a result, to the extent any aspects of “arbitration” are part of the IRP, they relate to the operation of the proceeding, not to its results, which are governed by ICANN’s Supplementary Procedures that render the results non-binding.<sup>160</sup>

113. Finally, as with ICM’s misplaced reliance on various terms in the Bylaws, ICM cannot rely on the Supplementary Procedures’ various references to “independent review,” “declaration,” “decisions/opinions,” “writing[s],” “act[ing] upon the opinion of the IRP,” or “prevailing party” to infer a binding nature of the IRP.<sup>161</sup> Whether in isolation or in context, none of those terms implies a binding result.

2. The Actions Of The ICANN Board Are Entitled To Substantial Deference From This Tribunal.

114. As explained above, ICANN created the IRP process as part of its effort to allow aggrieved parties to challenge whether the conduct of the ICANN Board was inconsistent with

---

<sup>159</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶ 293.

<sup>160</sup> ICM argues that the fact that ICANN selected the ICDR Rules on arbitration over its mediation rules supports ICM’s argument. See ICM Memorial ¶ 293. Mediation, however, is an entirely different and inapposite process designed to facilitate agreement of the parties, not an independent review. See Black’s Law Dictionary 996 (7th ed. 1999) (defining mediation as “help[ing] the disputing parties reach a mutually agreeable solution”). Mediation could not possibly have supplied the form of review called for in ICANN’s Bylaws.

<sup>161</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶¶ 282, 304-07.

ICANN’s Bylaws and Articles of Incorporation. ICANN and its community deliberated with great care in crafting the rules governing this proceeding, and the rules and proceeding are unique to ICANN.

115. ICM suggests that the ICANN-created process, including the plain language of the governing Bylaws, be ignored and that the Panel should engage in a “full, non-deferential review of the ICANN’s actions.”<sup>162</sup> ICM’s argument is also contrary to well-settled principles of law on deferential review of corporate board decisions. ICM rests its argument instead on a misinterpretation of a single word (“independent”) that has absolutely nothing to do with the appropriate degree of deference in this proceeding.

a. ICANN’s Bylaws Expressly Confer Discretionary Authority Upon The Board In Applying The Provisions At Issue Here.

116. The Bylaws provisions to which ICM asks the Panel to compare ICANN’s actions are collected and summarized in section 2 of Article I. This section identifies eleven “core values” of ICANN governance, several of which (e.g., the adoption of “open and transparent” decision-making procedures (Article I, section 2) form the basis of ICM’s request for review.<sup>163</sup> This section directly speaks to the degree of latitude afforded to the Board and other ICANN decision-makers in implementing the provisions in question.

117. Article I, section 2 explains that the core values are “very general,” and that therefore “situations will inevitably arise in which perfect fidelity to all eleven core values simultaneously is not possible.” The Bylaws thus make clear that the requirements must not be construed in a “narrowly prescriptive” manner. To the contrary, Article 1, section 2 emphatically provides that the ICANN Board is vested with broad discretion in implementing these provisions. The section begins by noting that the core values “should guide” ICANN’s decisions and actions, and the section concludes by elaborating on this broad guidance:

Any ICANN body making a recommendation or decision shall exercise its judgment to determine which core values are most relevant and how they apply to the specific circumstances of the case at hand, and to determine, if necessary, an appropriate and defensible balance among competing values.<sup>164</sup>

---

<sup>162</sup> ICM Memorial ¶ 323.

<sup>163</sup> ICM expressly relies on core values 1, 2, 7, and 8.

118. The discretion given to the Board with respect to the core values contrasts with the unconditional requirement of adhering to ICANN’s mission – the other provision in Article I. Whereas the mission statement in Article 1, section 1 provides ultimate (albeit expansive) boundaries on ICANN’s scope, the core values in Article 1, section 2 provide judgment-driven guidance for “performing its mission” within that scope.<sup>165</sup>

119. While several provisions governing ICANN’s obligations on which ICM relies are provisions other than Article I, section 2, the Board’s actions pursuant to those obligations are due the same deference that applies to Board actions pursuant to Article I, section 2.<sup>166</sup> Each of these other obligations in ICANN’s governing documents either repeats core values as to which Board deference is expressly afforded in Article I, or implements Article I core values in specific contexts. For instance, the Bylaws addressing openness and transparency in Article III, section 1 simply repeat the core value on the same topic.<sup>167</sup> And the Bylaws prohibiting ICANN from providing “disparate treatment unless justified by substantial and reasonable cause” address more specifically what the core values of neutral, objective, and fair decision-making state in

---

<sup>164</sup> Id. (emphasis added).

<sup>165</sup> ICANN Bylaws, supra note 2, Article I, § 2.

<sup>166</sup> ICM relies on the following provisions in ICANN’s Bylaws and Articles that occur elsewhere than in the list of core values in Article I, section 2 (but nonetheless implement those core values, as discussed in the accompanying text): Article I, section 1 of the Bylaws and Article III of the Articles (both on the stable and secure operation of the Internet), which implement core value 1 on the same topic; Article II, section 3 of the Bylaws (on non-discriminatory treatment), which implements core value 8 on neutral, objective, and fair decision-making; Article III, section 1 of the Bylaws and Article IV of the Articles (both on openness and transparency), which implement core value 7 on the same topic; and Article XI, section 2.1 of the Bylaws (on the role of the GAC) and Article IV of the Articles (on operating for the benefit of the Internet community, carrying out activities in conformity with relevant principles of international law), which implement core values 4 and 11 on seeking and supporting diverse input, including from governments, in policy development and decision-making.

<sup>167</sup> Compare ICANN Bylaws, supra note 2, Article III, § 1 (requiring ICANN and its constituent bodies to “operate to the maximum extent feasible in an open and transparent manner and consistent with procedures designed to ensure fairness”), with Article I, § 2.7 (identifying the core value of “[e]mploying open and transparent policy development mechanisms that (i) promote well-informed decisions based on expert advice, and (ii) ensure that those entities most affected can assist in the policy development process”).

general terms.<sup>168</sup> Because the Bylaws expressly confer on ICANN bodies the discretion to make reasonable judgments as to how to balance the various core values, it would make no sense to interpret other similar Bylaws' provisions as silently taking that discretion away because there is no superfluous reiteration that discretion should be exercised.

120. By its terms, then, the deference expressly accorded to the Board in implementing the core values applies to all of these provisions. ICM itself appears to recognize this point, as it nowhere urges a different degree of deference to the Board's judgment.

121. In sum, the Bylaws expressly confer upon the ICANN Board the authority – in “its judgment” – to select and “balance” the principles that ICM claims were contravened in this case (both those listed in the core-values provision and those identified elsewhere). Thus, by its terms, the Bylaws' conferral of discretionary authority makes clear that any reasonable decision of the ICANN Board is, ipso facto, not inconsistent with the Bylaws and consequently must be upheld. Indeed, the Bylaws even go so far as to provide that outright departure from a core value is permissible in the judgment of the Board, so long as the Board reasonably “exercise[s] its judgment” in determining that other relevant principles outweighed that value in the particular circumstances at hand.

122. Here, as will be shown in the factual discussion in Parts III.B and III.C, there was not even any arguable departure from any of the Bylaws or Articles provisions that ICM cites. Thus, even without the substantial deference due to ICANN's reasonable actions pursuant to those provisions, ICANN's handling of the ICM application should not be found to violate the Bylaws or Articles. But because such substantial deference is in fact due, there is no basis whatsoever for a declaration in ICM's favor because the Board's decisions in this matter were, at a minimum, clearly justified and within the range of reasonable conduct.

123. The deference due to the ICANN Board is further reinforced by the Bylaws provision governing the independent review process itself. Article IV, section 3 strictly limits the scope of independent review proceedings to the narrow question of whether ICANN acted in a manner “inconsistent with” the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws. In confining the inquiry into whether ICANN’s conduct was inconsistent with its governing documents, the presumption is one of consistency so that inconsistency must be established, rather than the reverse. Other language in section 3 confirms this deference. The provision charges the Panel with the duty of “comparing contested actions of the Board to the Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws, and with declaring whether the Board has acted consistently with” those two documents. By making clear that the Panel’s role is limited to finding actual and specific violations of express provisions of the Bylaws or Articles (as opposed to a broader inquiry into the propriety of Board actions more generally), the provision governing this tribunal’s review makes clear that independent review is not to be used as a mechanism to upset arguable or reasonable actions of the Board.

---

<sup>168</sup> Compare ICANN Bylaws, supra note 2, Article II, § 3 (prohibiting ICANN from providing “disparate treatment unless justified by substantial and reasonable cause”), with Article I, § 2.8 (identifying core value of “[m]aking decisions by applying documented policies neutrally and objectively, with integrity and fairness”).

124. The drafters of the IRP provision (including Ms. Burr) confirmed this plain meaning in explaining the IRP’s purpose and effect. In the Report that recommended the language of the IRP provision, the drafters stated that the IRP “is not the ‘Supreme Court of ICANN’ that some in the community have urged.”<sup>169</sup> The Report made clear that the limited scope of review proceedings had been decided precisely in light of the appropriate latitude of the Board to make decisions on behalf of ICANN. “We believe that the ICANN Board envisioned in the New Bylaws . . . is broadly representative of the entire range of ICANN stakeholders, and is thus the most appropriate body to make final decisions on ICANN policies, within the scope of the mission also set forth in those New Bylaws.”<sup>170</sup> For instance, the Board is composed of fifteen members – who, except for ICANN’s President, are volunteers – drawn from a variety of different constituencies in the Internet community. Two-thirds of the Board members presently reside in countries other than the United States, reflecting ICANN’s commitment to represent the views and interests of the Internet community globally. Thus, as the drafters explained and in keeping with the plain language of the Bylaws, the narrow scope of the independent review process was designed precisely to protect the prerogatives of the Board in making decisions for which there is a range of reasonable conduct. Deference to such discretionary Board determinations is therefore inherent in the structure, as well as the text, of the Bylaws.

---

<sup>169</sup> Final Implementation Report, supra note 130, at § 5.

<sup>170</sup> Id. See also, e.g., Committee on ICANN Evolution and Reform, First Interim Implementation Report § 2 (August 1, 2002), available at <http://www.icann.org/en/committees/evol-reform/first-implementation-report-01aug02.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009) (“We do not believe that ICANN should have either a Supreme Court or a ‘Super Board’ with the ability to nullify decisions reached by the ICANN Board, which will be the most broadly representative body within the ICANN structure.”), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AB; Becky Burr, Recommendations Regarding Accountability at II (August 23, 2002), available at <http://www.icann.org/en/committees/evol-reform/afap-report-23aug02.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit V.

125. ICM offers no response to any of the foregoing Bylaws provisions or their drafting history. ICM's silence is puzzling in light of the fact that ICANN addressed these issues in its previous brief to the Panel.<sup>171</sup> Because the Bylaws directly speak to the question and make clear that a violation of the Bylaws and Articles can be found only in the event of a plain and unequivocal contravention of those documents, the Panel should give substantial deference to the actions of the ICANN Board in this proceeding.

b. Well-Established Principles Of Corporate Law Independently Compel Strong Deference To Decisions Of The ICANN Board.

126. Basic principles of corporate law supply an independent basis for the deference due to the reasonable judgments of the ICANN Board in this matter. It is black-letter law that “there is a presumption that directors of a corporation have acted in good faith and in the best interest of the corporation.”<sup>172</sup> This presumption ordinarily operates to “preclude[] judicial inquiry into actions of corporate directors taken in good faith and in the exercise of honest judgment in the lawful and legitimate furtherance of corporate purposes,” and, if unrebutted, forecloses a reviewing court from substituting its judgment for that of the board.<sup>173</sup>

127. In California, where ICANN is located and incorporated, these principles require deference to actions of a corporate board of directors so long as the board acted “upon reasonable investigation, in good faith and with regard for the best interests of” the corporation, and

---

<sup>171</sup> See ICANN's Response to Request for Independent Review ¶ 87.

<sup>172</sup> 19 C.J.S. Corporations § 568 (2008); accord, e.g., 18B Am. Jur. 2d Corporations § 1476 (2008). For the Panel's convenience, ICANN has submitted all legal authorities cited herein as ICANN Exhibits BF-BZ.

<sup>173</sup> Id.

“exercised discretion clearly within the scope of its authority.”<sup>174</sup> This includes the boards of not-for-profit corporations.<sup>175</sup> As California courts have explained, this doctrine rests on the well-accepted premise that those to whom decision-making has been entrusted are better equipped to make policy and management decisions than courts.<sup>176</sup> Thus, the amount of deference typically afforded to a board is extensive. Courts will only scrutinize the decisions of a corporate board where there are allegations of facts that tend to show that the board’s conclusions were made: (1) with inadequate information, or (2) in bad faith.<sup>177</sup> The presumption of sound business judgment is only rebutted by “allegations of facts which, if proven, would establish fraud, bad faith, overreaching or an unreasonable failure to investigate material facts.”<sup>178</sup>

128. For instance, in Lamden, a case cited by ICM, the court found that the board of directors of a community association should be afforded similar deference as under the business judgment rule, holding that actions taken “upon reasonable investigation, in good faith, and in a manner the Board believed was in the best interests of the Association and its members” would withstand court scrutiny.<sup>179</sup> “The theory behind the business judgment rule is that directors are not required to guarantee that their decisions will succeed, rather they are only expected to use ordinary and reasonable care in making corporate policy.”<sup>180</sup>

---

<sup>174</sup> Lamden v. La Jolla Shores Clubdominium Homeowners Ass’n, 21 Cal. 4th 249, 265 (1999); accord, e.g., Lee v. Interinsurance Exchange of Auto. Club of S. Cal., 50 Cal. App. 4th 694, 714 (1996) (noting that these principles “insulate[] from court intervention those management decisions which are made by directors in good faith in what the directors believe is the organization’s best interest”); Frances T. v. Village Green Owners Ass’n, 42 Cal. 3d 490, 508 n.14 (1986) (noting that such judicial deference to corporate boards “exists in one form or another in every American jurisdiction”).

<sup>175</sup> See, e.g., Harvey v. Landing Homeowners Ass’n, 162 Cal. App. 4th 809, 821-22 (2008).

<sup>176</sup> Lee, 50 Cal. App. 4th at 711 (extending business judgment rule to members of the Board of Governors of the Insurance Exchange); Frances T., 42 Cal. 3d at 508 n.14.

<sup>177</sup> Lee, 50 Cal. App. 4th at 716.

<sup>178</sup> Id. at 715.

<sup>179</sup> Lamden, 21 Cal. 4th at 265; see also Hannula v. Hacienda Homes, Inc., 34 Cal. 2d 442, 447 (1949) (realty corporation’s building restriction must only meet the test of “a reasonable determination made in good faith”).

<sup>180</sup> Hill v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 166 Cal. App. 4th 1438, 1492 (2008).

129. Likewise, in Katz v. Chevron Corp., the court emphasized that a board’s decisions or actions will be given deference if they are reasonable. In Katz, the court applied principles of reasonableness to reject challenges to the Chevron board’s response to a potential threat from Penzoil’s accumulation of stock and the amount of information that the board considered in developing its response.<sup>181</sup> The court explained that the business judgment rule “is a presumption that in making a business decision the directors of a corporation acted on an informed basis, in good faith and in the honest belief that the action taken was in the best interests of the company.”<sup>182</sup> Under the rule, “a court will not substitute its judgment for that of the board if the latter’s decision can be attributed to any rational business purpose.”<sup>183</sup> Because the board had both reasonably perceived what it believed to be a threat and acted reasonably in response, there was no triable issue of fact upon which to claim it had violated its duties.<sup>184</sup>

130. The California Corporations Code further supports the common law deference to corporate directors under the business judgment rule. The statutory rules for directors and management of for-profit and not-for-profit corporations provide, through the use of nearly identical language, that directors must act in good faith, in a manner the director believes to be in the best interests of the corporation, and with reasonable and prudent care under the circumstances.<sup>185</sup>

---

<sup>181</sup> Katz v. Chevron Corp., 22 Cal. App. 4th 1352, 1370-75 (1994).

<sup>182</sup> Id. at 1366 (citing Unocal Corp. v. Mesa Petroleum Co., 493 A.2d 946, 954 (Del. 1985)) (internal quotations omitted).

<sup>183</sup> Id.

<sup>184</sup> Id. at 1375; see also Lewin v. St. Joseph Hosp., 82 Cal. App. 3d 368, 384-85 (1978) (applying principles of reasonableness under the business judgment rule to a private not-for-profit hospital corporation, explaining that “[a] managerial decision . . . made rationally and in good faith by the board . . . should not be countermanded by the courts unless it clearly appears it is unlawful or will seriously injure a significant public interest”); Harvey, 162 Cal. App. 4th at 821-22 (evidence of the board’s efforts to conduct an investigation, consult with professionals, communicate with owners, and pass a resolution on the issue at hand indicated that the board performed a reasonable investigation in good faith); Beehan v. Lido Isle Comm. Cmty. Ass’n, 70 Cal. App. 3d 858, 865 (1977) (court would not substitute its judgment for that of nonprofit corporation where its board of directors, in deciding not to enforce amendment it believed had not been properly enacted, “acted in good faith and with a view to the best interests of the corporation and all its shareholders”).

<sup>185</sup> Cal. Corp. Code §§ 309, 7231 (2009). Furthermore, under California’s common law fair procedure doctrine, a Board’s action must be (1) substantively rational; and (2) procedurally fair. Pinsker v. Pac.

131. ICM’s challenge stems from the ICANN Board’s denial of an application. Therefore, long-established principles of corporate law require that Board decisions receive substantial deference, even apart from the fact that, in this case, such deference is required by the language of the Bylaws (as shown above).

132. This deference is particularly appropriate with respect to ICANN in light of the unusual and carefully crafted structure of its Board. As noted, the Board’s fifteen members are drawn from a variety of different constituencies in the Internet community.<sup>186</sup> The Board is frequently called upon to make difficult decisions concerning complex issues that affect multiple constituencies, often issues for which there is no precedent of any kind. Certainly, the question of whether to add a “sponsored” Top Level Domain to the Internet that would be dedicated exclusively to pornography was not an issue that any corporation, entity, or government had ever addressed, which explains why ICANN, ICM, the GAC, and others struggled over an extended period to address the issues. It is unreasonable to suppose in this context that there would be no deference whatsoever to the decisions of the ICANN Board, yet that is exactly what ICM proposes.

133. ICM’s primary argument against the extension of the ordinary deference to Board actions in this case is its suggestion that such deference “applies only to protect individual directors from liability.”<sup>187</sup> Yet, ICM’s only authority for this claim is Lamden, where the California Supreme Court gave such deference to board determinations despite the fact that the case (like this one) did not involve any attempt to impose liability on any individual directors.<sup>188</sup>

---

(continued...)

Coast Soc’y of Orthodontists, 12 Cal. 3d 541, 550-51 (1974). Fair procedure is violated where the decision is arbitrary, capricious, discriminatory, irrational or “contrary to public policy.” Id. at 553.

<sup>186</sup> See, e.g., Final Implementation Report § 5, supra note 130 (noting “that the ICANN Board . . . is broadly representative of the entire range of ICANN stakeholders and is thus the most appropriate body to make final decisions on ICANN policies”).

<sup>187</sup> ICM Memorial ¶ 470.

<sup>188</sup> See Lamden, 21 Cal. 4th at 265; see also id. at 258 (noting that “no individual directors are defendants here”).

In short, California’s highest court rejected ICM’s argument in the very case ICM cites to support it.

134. ICM also cites the decision of a lower California court in Ritter & Ritter, Inc. v. Churchill Condominium Association, 166 Cal. App. 4th 103 (2008), which distinguished Lamden.<sup>189</sup> But the Ritter court merely observed that deference to a corporate board may not extend “to a board action involving an extraordinary situation.”<sup>190</sup> While the court found Lamden distinguishable on the facts,<sup>191</sup> it expressly recognized that, under Lamden, deference applies even in suits where individual board members are not defendants.<sup>192</sup> ICM makes no argument (and could not have) that the ICANN Board’s action in reviewing ICM’s application was an “extraordinary action” outside its ordinary competence. To the contrary, making decisions about adding TLDs, including decisions about registry operators and sponsoring organizations, is a Board activity that is explicitly within ICANN’s mission.<sup>193</sup>

135. ICM also observes that there is an exception to the requirement of deference where the Board’s own governing documents disclaim the need for such deference.<sup>194</sup> Yet, in this case, as shown above in Section III.A.2, far from eliminating deference, the governing Bylaws emphasize the strong need for, and propriety of, substantial deference to Board actions, particularly in the context of the present independent review proceeding. Because, as shown above, ICM offers no response whatsoever to this showing, the exception ICM cites is wholly inapplicable. Indeed, to the contrary, it reaffirms the need for deference, because the governing documents affirmatively demand it.

---

<sup>189</sup> ICM Memorial ¶ 474.

<sup>190</sup> Ritter, 166 Cal. App. 4th at 122.

<sup>191</sup> Id. at 125.

<sup>192</sup> Id. at 122.

<sup>193</sup> See supra at Section II; ICANN Bylaws, supra note 2, Article I, §1 (stating that ICANN’s mission “is to coordinate, at the overall level, the global Internet’s systems of unique identifiers, and in particular to ensure the stable and secure operation of the Internet’s unique identifier systems,” and this mission includes coordinating domain names).

<sup>194</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶ 475.

c. ICM’s Other Argument Based On The Meaning Of “Independent Review” Is Baseless.

136. ICM argues that no deference is necessary because the term “independent” modifies “review” in the Bylaws.<sup>195</sup> ICM concedes that “independent review” is “not a term of common usage or general meaning within the context of international law or dispute resolution,”<sup>196</sup> but it nonetheless contends that the word “independent” connotes a full, non-deferential standard of review.

137. While the word “independent” can have a variety of meanings depending upon the context, there can be no doubt what meaning it has in the context of Article IV, section 3 of the ICANN Bylaws because the Bylaws themselves make that clear. The word “independent” in section 3 merely refers to the fact that it is a review conducted by an entity separate from (i.e., “independent” of) ICANN itself. The text eliminates any imaginable ambiguity on this point because the very sentence that introduces the term “independent” makes clear that it refers to the “third-party” nature of the entity, not to standards governing deference.<sup>197</sup> To carry out that independence, the Bylaws provide that a non-ICANN entity will operate the review process and appoint members to each panel, and further provides that no panel member may hold an official position or office within ICANN.<sup>198</sup> In addition, the Bylaws distinguish the independent review process as “separate” from the reconsideration process, which is not independent because it is administered by the ICANN Board.<sup>199</sup> In short, section 3 make clear that the word

---

<sup>195</sup> ICM Memorial ¶¶ 311-17.

<sup>196</sup> ICM Memorial ¶ 313.

<sup>197</sup> See id. (noting that “ICANN shall have in place a separate process for independent third-party review of Board actions alleged by an affected party to be inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws” (emphasis added)).

Further reinforcing this conclusion is the language from the original Bylaws on the IRP, which called for “an independent review process by a neutral third party.” ICANN Bylaws, Article III, § 4 (November 6, 1998), available at <http://www.icann.org/en/general/archive-bylaws/bylaws-06nov98.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit W. Especially where no reference is made to standards of review, the natural reading is that the independence of the review process refers to, and was effectuated by, the “neutral third party.”

<sup>198</sup> ICANN Bylaws, supra note 2, Article IV, §§ 3.4, 3.7, 3.9.

<sup>199</sup> Id. at Article IV, § 3.1.

“independent” simply refers to the fact that the panel conducting the review in question is not part of ICANN itself.<sup>200</sup>

138. The structure of ICANN’s Bylaws further reinforces this plain language; section 3 follows the “separate” accountability mechanism set out in section 2 – i.e., the neutral reconsideration process conducted by the ICANN Board itself. Thus, the reference to “independent” review in section 3 plainly establishes a contrast from the internal reconsideration procedures set out in the preceding section, and does not connote a standard of review, as ICM acontextually argues. Ms. Burr’s comments during the drafting of the IRP provisions confirm this reading. She contrasted the IRP process with the reconsideration process “run by a subcommittee of the ICANN Board rather than a neutral.”<sup>201</sup> In short, the word “independent” refers to the fact that the panel conducting the review in question is a “neutral” entity not part of ICANN itself.

139. ICM’s citation of a handful of judicial decisions using the word “independent” or cognates thereof in discussing a de novo standard of review merely reinforces the error in ICM’s argument.<sup>202</sup> None of these cases uses the phrase “independent review” as synonymous with de novo inquiry; rather, they merely use the word “independent” to refer to the fact that, under de novo review, the decision of an appellate tribunal is reached, in some sense, “independent” of the decision of a trial court. Here, the IRP provisions do not provide for de novo review but, as explained above, require substantial deference. Thus, cases that use the word “independent” in the context of de novo review are beside the point. ICM is trying to bootstrap its inapposite

---

<sup>200</sup> In addition, in comments issued by the advisory committee that was tasked with establishing principles for an earlier version of the IRP, the committee explained that “independent review should be conducted by a body that is independent of the ICANN Board of Directors, both in its appointment and in its proceedings.” Draft Principles for Independent Review: Interim Report of the Advisory Committee on Independent Review With Addendum, available at <http://cyber.law.harvard.edu/icann/berlin/archive/IRdraft.html> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit Y. Here again, “independent” plainly refers to the independence of the reviewing body from ICANN, not to any standards of review.

<sup>201</sup> Becky Burr, Recommendations Regarding Accountability at II (August 23, 2002), available at <http://www.icann.org/en/committees/evol-reform/afap-report-23aug02.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit V.

<sup>202</sup> ICM Memorial ¶¶ 311-17.

interpretation of “independent” in the present context with cases using an inapposite interpretation of that word; ICM’s argument is easily rejected.

140. Moreover, case law on any standard of review (whether de novo or otherwise) can have no possible application here, even under ICM’s own incorrect theory that this proceeding is a form of arbitration. Because the issue in those cases involved the standards governing review of the decision of a lower tribunal, they have no application to the present context. Here, the Panel is not reviewing the intermediate decision of a lower tribunal that reviewed the Board’s actions. Instead, the issue is deference to the ICANN Board. The fact that the word “independent” can occasionally occur in discussions of appellate review standards cannot possibly bear on the meaning of the term in the context of section 3 of ICANN’s Bylaws.

3. ICM’s Cited Principles Of International Law Do Not Apply To The Circumstances At Issue In This Proceeding.

141. ICM claims that the Panel should declare whether ICANN acted in conformity with certain “principles of international law” in considering and rejecting ICM’s .XXX application. Specifically, ICM refers to general commercial principles of good faith, estoppel, legitimate expectations, and abuse of rights. ICM’s invocation of international law depends on a two-step argument: first, ICM interprets Article 4 of the Articles of Incorporation (which provides that ICANN will operate for the benefit of the Internet community “in conformity with relevant principles of international law”) as a “choice-of-law provision” requiring ICANN to conform to an unlimited set of principles of international law; second, ICM infers that any violation of any principles of international law constitutes a violation of Article 4 (thus allegedly falling within the Panel’s jurisdiction to evaluate ICANN’s consistency with its Articles and Bylaws). Thus, ICM’s reading obliterates the express and straightforward limitation of the IRP Bylaws to ensure simple consistency with the Bylaws and Articles.

142. ICM’s interpretation of Article 4 contravenes the plain language of the governing provisions as well as their drafting history. Article 4 does not operate as a “choice-of-law provision” importing international law into the IRP without limitation. Instead, the substantive provisions of the Bylaws and Articles, as construed in light of the law of California (where ICANN is incorporated), govern the claims before the Panel. In any event, even if Article 4 did operate as ICM contends, the particular principles of international law that ICM invokes are not relevant to the circumstances at issue in this proceeding.

a. Article 4 Is Not A “Choice-Of-Law Provision.”

143. ICM argues that Article 4 operates as a “choice-of-law provision” permitting ICM to shoehorn into the IRP process any claim that ICANN acted in a manner inconsistent with any and all general principles of international law.<sup>203</sup> This is wrong.

144. To determine the meaning of Article 4, California law (where ICANN is incorporated) applies the common rules of statutory interpretation.<sup>204</sup> The use of California law to interpret Article 4 is not controversial. Not only does California law follow generally accepted rules for interpreting articles of incorporation, but ICM agrees that California law governs this issue.<sup>205</sup> Under the rules of interpretation, the plain language of the article controls, supplemented by canons of interpretation and the article’s drafting history.<sup>206</sup>

145. The plain language shows that Article 4 is not a “choice-of-law provision.”<sup>207</sup> Article 4 provides in full:

The Corporation shall operate for the benefit of the Internet community as a whole, carrying out its activities in conformity with relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions and local law and, to the extent appropriate and consistent with these Articles and its Bylaws, through open and transparent processes that enable competition and open entry in Internet-related markets. To this effect, the Corporation shall cooperate as appropriate with relevant international organizations.

---

<sup>203</sup> See, e.g., Goldsmith Report ¶ 24 (claiming that Article 4 committed ICANN to follow “international law in all its forms”).

<sup>204</sup> See, e.g., Sanchez v. Grain Growers Ass’n, 126 Cal. App. 3d 665, 672 (1981); see also Caron Opinion ¶ 27 (“California law would be applicable particularly to the question of interpretation of the Articles of Incorporation and the Bylaws,” and California law uses “the common rules of statutory interpretation” to interpret articles of incorporation.).

<sup>205</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶ 336 (stating that California law applies to the interpretation of ICANN’s Articles and Bylaws and, in any event, interpretation “would almost certainly be the same in any jurisdiction”); Goldsmith Report ¶¶ 20-21.

<sup>206</sup> See Sanchez, 126 Cal. App. 3d at 672.

<sup>207</sup> See also Caron Opinion ¶ 22 (observing that “Article 4 is not by its language a choice of law clause”).

146. The article thus begins by reiterating ICANN’s mission and purpose to “operate for the benefit of the Internet community as a whole.”<sup>208</sup> The same sentence states that ICANN will, in so operating, “carry[] out its activities in conformity with relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions and local law” and, as appropriate and consistent with ICANN’s two governing documents, “through open and transparent processes that enable competition and open entry in Internet-related markets.”<sup>209</sup> The second sentence adds that, to meet the objective of the first sentence, ICANN “shall cooperate as appropriate with relevant international organizations.”<sup>210</sup> ICM does not allege that ICANN acted in a manner inconsistent with this latter sentence, so it is not at issue here.

147. The specific “activities” that ICANN must “carry[] out in conformity with relevant principles of international law and applicable international conventions and local law” are, in turn, set out in the preceding Article 3.<sup>211</sup> As the list of activities in Article 3 makes clear, the activities in question are those relating to ICANN’s mission and purpose of operating for the benefit of the Internet community as a whole, which Article 3 describes in more detail as ICANN’s “charitable and public purposes of lessening the burdens of government and promoting the global public interest in the operational stability of the Internet.”<sup>212</sup>

148. Article 3 refers to ICANN’s activities in the following areas, which relate to the global nature of the Internet:

- (i) coordinating the assignment of Internet technical parameters as needed to maintain universal connectivity on the Internet;

---

<sup>208</sup> Articles of Incorporation, Article 4, Cl. Ex. 4.

<sup>209</sup> Id.

<sup>210</sup> Id.

<sup>211</sup> See also Caron Opinion ¶ 38.

<sup>212</sup> Articles of Incorporation, Article 3, Cl. Ex. 4; accord ICANN Bylaws, supra note 2, Article I, § 1 (stating that ICANN’s overall mission “is to coordinate, at the overall level, the global Internet’s systems of unique identifiers, and in particular to ensure the stable and secure operation of the Internets unique identifier systems”).

- (ii) performing and overseeing functions related to the coordination of the Internet Protocol (“IP”) address space;
- (iii) performing and overseeing functions related to the coordination of the Internet domain name system (“DNS”), including the development of policies for determining the circumstances under which new top-level domains are added to the DNS root system;
- (iv) overseeing operation of the authoritative Internet DNS root server system; and
- (v) engaging in any other related lawful activity in furtherance of items (i) through (iv).<sup>213</sup>

149. Taking these two provisions together, the word “relevant” in Article 4 means only that principles of international law that are relevant to the activities specifically referred to in the same sentence and addressed with greater specificity in the adjoining Article 3, namely, principles concerned with ICANN’s substantive Internet activities are included.<sup>214</sup> Because the word “relevant” is a relational concept, which requires that the modified phrase be relevant to something else, the first clause of the same sentence, discussing ICANN’s mission, sets out what the referenced international law principles must be relevant to.<sup>215</sup> Therefore, only principles of international law that are specially relevant or related to ICANN’s Internet-related activities, and not merely principles of general applicability that apply to the Internet only in the same way that they apply to other kinds of conduct, are included as “relevant” principles in Article 4. This limitation of the referenced principles of international law in Article 4 to those specially relevant to the Internet makes perfect sense. ICANN did not adopt principles of international law indiscriminately, but rather to ensure consistency between its policies developed for the world-wide Internet community and well-established substantive international law on matters relevant

---

<sup>213</sup> Id.

<sup>214</sup> See Articles of Incorporation, Articles 3 & 4, Cl. Ex. 4.

<sup>215</sup> See Caron Opinion ¶ 24 (chart) (explaining that, in Article 4, “ICANN has offered an IRP process to decide whether an act of the Board was inconsistent with it operating for the benefit of the Internet community as a whole, carrying out its activities in conformity with relevant principles of international law”); id. ¶ 56 (“[I]n my opinion the word ‘relevant’ implies those principles of international law that are . . . addressed to the subject matter of the first sentence of Article 4, that is, relevant to the ‘activities’ which are carried out so as to ‘operate for the benefit of the Internet community as a whole’ as contemplated by Article 3.”).

to various stakeholders in the global Internet community, such as general principles on trademark law and freedom of expression relevant to intellectual property constituencies and governments.<sup>216</sup>

150. For instance, a concern leading to the adoption of this language was that in its absence, ICANN might exclusively apply “U.S. trademark law as the law of the Internet.”<sup>217</sup> In other words, the provision was directed to ICANN’s special operation of the Internet, and incorporates only those international law principles specially “relevant” to those activities. Even ICM’s expert has acknowledged (in a separate publication not written for this proceeding) that the substantive issues specific to the operation of the Internet – “a revolutionary medium of communication” – include “a debate about speech governance.”<sup>218</sup> The principles of international law relied upon by ICM in this proceeding – the requirement of “good faith” and related doctrines – are principles of general applicability, and are not specially directed to concerns relating to the Internet, such as freedom of expression or trademark law. Therefore, those principles are not among the class of “relevant” principles directed to ICANN’s particular function and activities.

151. This conclusion is reinforced by the circumstances surrounding ICANN’s formation, and ICANN’s commitment to consider and act in conformity with certain law from sources beyond the United States. When authority for the DNS was being transferred from the U.S. Department of Commerce to ICANN, some members of the Internet community, particularly those outside the United States, expressed concern that a U.S. corporation deriving its authority from the U.S. government would lead the corporation to institute Internet policies closely patterned solely on United States law, thereby diminishing the Internet’s promise as a

---

<sup>216</sup> The parties agree that Article 4’s reference to “international law” means public international law. See Caron Opinion ¶ 47; ICM Memorial ¶ 345. For that reason, the principle of lex mercatoria (the law of merchants) does not come into play here, because it is not a part of public international law. See id. ¶ 51. Thus, the international sports cases cited by ICM (although not by its expert), which refer to a sports-based body of law akin to lex mercatoria, are off point. See ICM Memorial ¶¶ 381-84.

<sup>217</sup> See United States Department of Commerce, Statement of Policy, Cl. Ex. 31.

<sup>218</sup> Jack Goldsmith & Tim Wu, Who Controls the Internet? 150 (2008) (emphasis omitted).

truly global resource.<sup>219</sup> For instance, when the Department of Commerce solicited comments for its general policy statement that the DNS should be managed by a private corporation headquartered in the United States, some commentators were concerned “that the proposal to headquarter the new corporation in the United States represented an inappropriate attempt to impose U.S. law on the Internet as a whole” and that requiring domain name registrants to agree to the jurisdiction of U.S. courts in the event of a domain-name trademark dispute would be “an inappropriate attempt to establish U.S. trademark law as the law of the Internet.”<sup>220</sup> In its responses, the Department of Commerce focused on the new corporation’s mission of serving “the Internet community as a whole” – the same beneficiary identified in Article 4.<sup>221</sup>

152. In light of such concerns about the historic role of the U.S. government in overseeing the global resource of the Internet, and recognizing ICANN’s important responsibility for serving the global Internet community, ICANN (the new corporation headquartered in the United States) made clear in Article 4 that it will act in conformity with sources of law beyond U.S. law with respect to policies developed for the world-wide Internet community (i.e., the “Internet community as a whole”). In other words, Article 4’s reference to “international law” ensures that ICANN policy governing the Internet is suitably international to promote the Internet as a broadly accessible, truly global resource.<sup>222</sup>

153. ICM interprets the reference to “relevant principles of international law” in Article 4 far too broadly and entirely out of context. Article 4 does not operate as a choice-of-law provision requiring ICANN to adapt its conduct to any and all principles of international law, such as the general principles relating to commercial contracting that ICM invokes in this

---

<sup>219</sup> Accord ICM Memorial ¶¶ 45-49, 326-28. As noted above, ICANN has authority over the naming and numbering system pursuant to a series of agreements with the U.S. Department of Commerce.

<sup>220</sup> See United States Department of Commerce, Statement of Policy, Cl. Ex. 31.

<sup>221</sup> Id.; see also id. (reiterating that “[t]he new corporation should operate as a private entity for the benefit of the Internet community as a whole”).

<sup>222</sup> See Draft Articles of Incorporation, Fifth Iteration, Cl. Ex. 209 (noting that the Articles of Incorporation included a reference to international law “in response to various suggestions to recognize the special nature of this organization and the general principles under which it will operate”).

proceeding.<sup>223</sup> ICM’s misreading stems from a myopic focus on the excerpted phrase “conformity with relevant principles of international law.” Article 4 requires more specifically that ICANN “operate for the benefit of the Internet community as a whole, carrying out its activities in conformity with relevant principles of international law...” When read in context, Article 4 does not operate as a choice-of-law provision for IRP proceedings, nor is it concerned with commercial principles of international law of the sort that ICM invokes as “a prism through which” the Articles and Bylaws must be read or, even more drastically, as freestanding claims that take the IRP process well beyond that envisioned in the Bylaws.<sup>224</sup> Instead, Article 4 and its “relevant principles of international law” are intended to promote achievement of “the benefit of the Internet community as a whole” (the clause that the international-law phrase modifies), and are therefore concerned with ensuring that ICANN does not establish policies for coordination of the Internet that are contrary to international legal principles relevant to the global community’s use of the Internet.<sup>225</sup>

154. Thus, as Professor Caron explains, ICM’s arguments are contrary to the plain language of Article 4. “Article 4 is not by its language a choice of law clause,” so any conclusion that it is a choice-of-law provision “must be implied.”<sup>226</sup> And any such implication would be unwarranted. While there is no dispute as to the theoretical possibility of a choice-of-law provision in a corporate charter, such a theoretical possibility does not establish that the possibility is actuality here.<sup>227</sup> ICM and its expert simply “jump” from the theoretical possibility of having such a provision to their conclusion that Article 4 is such a provision, without offering “an analysis of why Article 4 in particular is such a choice of law clause.”<sup>228</sup> Especially where

---

<sup>223</sup> See Caron Opinion ¶ 54 (noting that international law “is not by its own terms applicable to the manner in which a California non-profit corporation is ‘carrying out its activities’”).

<sup>224</sup> ICM Memorial ¶ 344.

<sup>225</sup> In light of the foregoing discussion, which makes clear ICANN’s position that Article 4 incorporates international legal principles (but not those relied upon by ICM), ICM’s claim that ICANN reads Article 4 to “create[] no obligations or responsibilities” under international law is entirely wrong. ICM Memorial ¶ 329.

<sup>226</sup> Caron Opinion ¶ 22.

<sup>227</sup> See id. ¶ 21.

<sup>228</sup> Id. (emphasis in original).

the plain language points in the opposite direction, ICM’s lack of analysis is remarkable. For instance, as Professor Caron notes, “it is unlikely, and at a minimum unusual, that a choice of law clause would designate three sources of law joined by the conjunction ‘and,’ that is, three laws at the same level of hierarchy,” without further choosing among those three.<sup>229</sup>

155. As to how ICANN runs its business and interacts in a commercial manner with another entity, California law governs those matters, just like the law of the state of incorporation governs the operational matters of any other corporation.<sup>230</sup> Moreover, this application of California law arises out of ICANN’s incorporation – not Article 4’s reference to “local law.”<sup>231</sup> Article 4’s reference to “local law,” like its reference to international law, has a scope directed at the nature of ICANN’s global-coordination policies that do not reach ICM’s dispute here. As Professor Caron observes, there is no “doubt that California courts and the California Attorney General would apply the law of the State of California” to questions concerning ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation and Bylaws.<sup>232</sup> He thus concludes that, without a choice-of-law provision governing this dispute, the Panel “should ascertain the meaning of the various articles of the Bylaws and Articles in accordance with the law of the State of California.”<sup>233</sup>

156. The extensive drafting history of the IRP provisions similarly confirms that Article 4 is not a “choice-of-law provision” for IRP proceedings. As noted above, the IRP Bylaws were drafted with an eye to improving ICANN’s accountability and transparency. Nowhere in this drafting history did ICANN associate the IRP with Article 4 to treat the latter provision as a choice-of-law clause governing the IRP. Indeed, nowhere in this extensive drafting history did ICANN even mention Article 4, which was written years before the current IRP provisions were added to the Bylaws, as discussed below. ICANN implemented

---

<sup>229</sup> Id. ¶ 22.

<sup>230</sup> ICM concedes that California law governs ICANN’s affairs. See, e.g., ICM Memorial ¶ 336 & n.680.

<sup>231</sup> See Draft Articles of Incorporation, Fifth Iteration, Cl. Ex. 209 (noting that ICANN’s incorporation under California law means that California’s “reasonably well-defined nonprofit corporation jurisprudence” governs ICANN).

<sup>232</sup> Caron Opinion ¶ 26; see also ICDR Rules, supra note 150, Article 28 (directing the panel to apply the law it determines to be “appropriate” if the parties have not designated the applicable law).

<sup>233</sup> Caron Opinion ¶ 28.

transparency and accountability in other, explicit ways, such as establishing the IRP itself and providing that IRP declarations be made public. Further, the language governing the scope of IRP proceedings, which confines the issues before the Panel to the narrow question of whether ICANN violated the specific provisions of the Bylaws or Articles, was crafted precisely to constrain the analysis and to foreclose the consideration of vague and open-ended standards drawn from sources external to those documents of exactly the sort ICM relies upon here.

157. The fact that Article 4 and the IRP provisions were enacted at different times – indeed, four years apart – and in different documents reinforces the conclusion that Article 4 does not operate as a choice-of-law provision for an IRP. Article 4, along with all of ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation, was adopted in 1998 when ICANN first incorporated. The point of that document was to incorporate ICANN under California law, not to establish rules governing dispute resolution (and certainly not a dispute resolution process that had not yet been created). During its formation, ICANN never alluded to any expectation that in its Articles it would incorporate by reference all international law principles without any limitation.

158. The IRP provisions, by contrast, are found in ICANN’s Bylaws. When ICANN incorporated and adopted Article 4 in 1998, there was no IRP provision, only a direction to consider adopting one.<sup>234</sup> No particulars about the process itself were provided, and certainly no indication that ICANN intended Article 4 of the Articles of Incorporation to act as an “implicitly and retroactively incorporated” choice-of-law provision governing the type and scope of claims that could be raised in an IRP. Thus, when the current IRP provisions were drafted and adopted in 2002, neither Article 4 nor the idea of applying international law in IRP proceedings was mentioned. Given ICANN’s silence on Article 4 when later enacting the IRP provisions, it

---

<sup>234</sup> See ICANN Bylaws, Article III, § 4(b) (November 21, 1998), available at <http://www.icann.org/en/general/archive-bylaws/bylaws-23nov98.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit X.

After an initial provision merely permitting ICANN to establish an IRP, the Articles were amended directing the Board, “following solicitation of input from the Advisory Committee on Independent Review and other interested parties and consideration of all such suggestions, [to] adopt policies and procedures for independent third-party review of Board actions alleged by an affected party to have violated the Corporation’s articles of incorporation or bylaws.” Id.

would require a tortured reading of Article 4 to find an intent to adopt “principles of international law” retrospectively as governing a review process created four years later.<sup>235</sup>

159. Professor Caron makes the same observation about the different enactment dates of Article 4 and the IRP Bylaws. As he notes, “Article 4 was adopted at an earlier point in time [than the IRP provisions], yet it is not referenced in the Bylaws.”<sup>236</sup> He succinctly points out that the IRP provisions “could have made an explicit choice of the law for the IRP, but did not.”<sup>237</sup>

160. For all of these reasons, the general commercial principles of international law on which ICM relies – good faith, estoppel, legitimate expectations, and abuse of rights – do not fall within the scope of Article 4. Thus, in its review of ICANN’s consideration and rejection of ICM’s .XXX sTLD application, the Panel has no basis for considering whether, pursuant to Article 4, ICANN acted in conformity with those principles of international law. As a precaution, ICANN addresses these factual issues below, but if the Panel agrees with ICANN’s view of the applicable law, this portion of ICM’s “claims” should be disregarded.

161. ICM’s other arguments for importing any and all international law into this proceeding are equally without merit. The fact that the issuance of a particular TLD would have international effects does not make general commercial principles of international law “relevant” pursuant to Article 4.<sup>238</sup> As made clear by the context and language of Article 4, the principles that are relevant under Article 4 concern ICANN’s obligation to operate for the benefit of the Internet community as a whole, not ICANN’s commercial activities with respect to a particular TLD applicant. ICANN’s governing corporate law – California law – fills that latter role.

---

<sup>235</sup> Also undercutting ICM’s reading of Article 4 is the later establishment of the procedures and criteria for the sTLD application process that ICM has put at issue here. ICANN did not post the criteria for the sTLD applications until December 2003; in those, ICANN never mentioned principles of international law governing ICANN’s (or any other party’s) negotiating conduct. In light of this omission, and especially given that international legal principles are general and evolving, it would be remarkable to interpret Article 4 as an “implicitly and retroactively incorporated” choice-of-law provision applying general principles of international law to the application process.

<sup>236</sup> Caron Opinion ¶ 22.

<sup>237</sup> Id.

<sup>238</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶ 339; see also Goldsmith Report ¶ 26.

162. Likewise, the Bylaws' direction that the IRP shall be conducted by an "international arbitration provider" does not provide support for ICM's position that any and all international law applies here.<sup>239</sup> Arbitration or other adjudication described as "international" recognizes that the parties likely come from different nation-states, and that principles of international law that are "relevant" in the sense contemplated by Article 4 (unlike those relied upon by ICM here) may be raised in the proceedings; the description does not import international law into the proceeding indiscriminately.

163. As a final matter, ICANN notes that, by their terms, the IRP provisions are limited to determining whether the Board acted in a manner that is inconsistent with the Bylaws or Articles. As the above discussion on deference noted, the IRP is not to be used to upset arguable or reasonable actions of the Board; this includes the Board's reasonable interpretations of what the Bylaws and Articles mean. Thus, to the extent there is any ambiguity (and there is none) about the scope and meaning of Article 4, the Panel should defer to ICANN's understanding – i.e., that Article 4's reference to relevant principles of international law means well-established substantive principles tailored to ICANN's Internet-based purpose and mission – so that ICM's cited principles do not apply here.

b. Even If Article 4 Were Read As Broadly As ICM Urges, ICM's Cited Principles Of International Law Still Would Not Apply To This Dispute Between Two Private Entities From The Same Nation.

164. Even if Article 4 were interpreted as a choice-of-law provision requiring ICANN to comply with principles of international law even if unrelated to ICANN's Internet-based activities (and thus unmoored to the limiting first clause in Article 4), the particular principles that ICM cites, including the underlying authorities, still would not apply because they are not "relevant." If the term "relevant" in Article 4 means anything, it must mean principles of international law that apply to a private entity such as ICANN. As Professor Caron explains, in this sense of the word "relevant," "the 'principles of international law' to be considered [] are not those principles applicable to States, but rather those rare principles of international law intended to be applicable to private entities such as ICANN.”<sup>240</sup> ICM’s principles and cited authorities are not of that rare sort, and, to the extent they are, they are merely duplicative of California law.<sup>241</sup>

---

<sup>239</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶¶ 7, 340 (quoting Goldsmith Report ¶ 26 that "ICANN itself chose an international arbitral institution for this Independent Review").

165. In urging the application of its cited principles, ICM and its expert repeatedly cite international law governing sovereigns.<sup>242</sup> For instance, ICM relies on Rights of Nationals of the United States of America in Morocco (France v. United States of America), 1952 I.C.J. 176 (August 27, 1952).<sup>243</sup> Yet, that case involved Morocco’s and the United States’ competing claims, as sovereigns, to establish the import value for the purpose of assessing customs to United States imports into Morocco.<sup>244</sup> By its terms, the decision has no application to a dispute between ICM and ICANN, two private entities.

166. In relying on these cases involving sovereigns, ICM and its expert claim that they can treat ICANN as if it were a sovereign for purposes of ICM’s international law claims because, they assert, ICANN agreed to be treated as such in Article 4.<sup>245</sup> But Article 4 says nothing of the kind, and neither ICM nor its expert offers any textual exegesis to support this bare assertion. Even if Article 4 incorporated international law as some sort of “choice-of-law” provision, at most it would incorporate “relevant” international law. Here, “relevant” law could only mean law governing private actors because ICANN is a private entity. ICM does not dispute ICANN’s private-party status,<sup>246</sup> and ICANN’s governing documents confirm that ICANN is not a sovereign – to the contrary, ICANN’s Articles of Incorporation note that ICANN is designed to “lessen[] the burdens of government.”<sup>247</sup>

---

<sup>240</sup> Caron Opinion ¶ 58.

<sup>241</sup> See Section III.C.5, infra (addressing duplicative international law analysis).

<sup>242</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶¶ 418, 428-31, 434-38, 441-43; see also Goldsmith Report at 14-15, 17-18, 20-21.

<sup>243</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶ 428.

<sup>244</sup> See Rights of Nationals of the United States of America in Morocco (France v. United States of America), 1952 I.C.J. 176 at 181, 212 (August 27, 1952).

<sup>245</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶ 351.

<sup>246</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶ 350; see also Goldsmith Report ¶ 26. Although ICM and its expert claim that ICANN “voluntarily subjected itself to” international law governing sovereigns (Goldsmith Report ¶ 26; accord ICM Memorial ¶ 350), that “is a very substantial assumption” (Caron Opinion ¶ 59), and, as addressed above, one for which ICM and its expert provide no support.

<sup>247</sup> Articles of Incorporation, Article 3, Cl. Ex. 4.

167. As a private party, ICANN is not subject to law governing sovereigns. International law governing sovereigns generally does not carry over automatically to private entities, and ICM provides no reason for proceeding otherwise here, other than its wholly baseless assertion that ICANN volunteered to be treated as such. ICM's expert has acknowledged (outside of the context of this proceeding) that "international law addresses itself to states"; "for the most part," it does not address itself "to individuals."<sup>248</sup> Accordingly, whether read as a "choice-of-law provision" or in any other broad manner, Article 4's reference to "relevant principles of international law" does not incorporate international law governing the conduct of nations. To put it another way, a private party's choice-of-law clause incorporating "French law" would not, of course, be interpreted as assuming the obligations of the French sovereign.<sup>249</sup> Similarly, any incorporation by Article 4 of "international law" cannot properly be interpreted as assuming the obligations governing nations, because ICM has chosen not to dispute (nor could it reasonably dispute) that ICANN is a wholly private actor. Accordingly, ICM cannot support its claims with inapposite international legal principles and authorities directed to states instead of private entities. At most, ICANN would be governed by "those admittedly rare principles of international law intended to be applicable to private entities such as ICANN."<sup>250</sup>

168. Nor is ICANN an international organization<sup>251</sup>; indeed, ICM ignores this intermediate category between sovereigns and private entities.<sup>252</sup> But even assuming arguendo that ICANN were an international organization, it would not be bound by the same law applicable to states. International organizations that govern themselves according to international law are subject to different rules and principles than states. The distinction between <sup>250</sup> Caron Opinion ¶¶ 56, 66 (stating that "relevant" means at least "applicable to the actions of a private non-profit corporation").

---

<sup>248</sup> Jack L. Goldsmith & Eric A. Posner, The Limits of International Law 5 (2005).

<sup>249</sup> See Caron Opinion ¶ 59.

<sup>251</sup> See Caron Opinion ¶ 61 n.44 (noting that "it is clear" that ICANN "is not an international organization, such as the World Bank or the United Nations" because, among other things, ICANN was not established pursuant to a treaty or other instrument of international law and its membership is not primarily or exclusively states).

<sup>252</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶ 350 (distinguishing between state actors and private corporations, and failing to mention international organizations).

states and international organizations – of which ICANN is neither – reinforces the meaningfully different status that ICANN has as a private entity, the least among the three to be subject to international law.<sup>253</sup>

169. Moreover, status as an “international” organization does not automatically make any and all international law “relevant” to that organization. An international organization may choose to be governed by the national law of one or more nation-states, and to the extent international law does apply, it is limited to certain categories of law, such as “international administrative law” and law governing “the interpretation” and “responsibility” of the organization.<sup>254</sup>

170. Again assuming, arguendo, that ICANN were treated as an international organization, the law that would be “of particular relevance” would be the principle “that international tribunals in reviewing discretionary acts of international organizations (or national agencies) do not substitute their own judgment for that of the agency under review but rather look for ‘an egregious error that calls into question the good faith’ of the body reviewed.”<sup>255</sup> As Professor Caron explains, this principle is “an analog to the business judgment rule” in California law that ICM seeks to avoid.<sup>256</sup> Under this principle, tribunals “afford[] a degree of deference when reviewing a decision made under the discretionary authority of an international organization.”<sup>257</sup> Thus, if ICM’s cited principles were “relevant,” this deferential-review principle would be “relevant” as well, and “the demands” of ICM’s cited principles would “require accommodation with” this principle.<sup>258</sup> ICM overlooks that its cited principles would

---

<sup>253</sup> See Caron Opinion ¶¶ 62-65. As Professor Caron observes, “it must be emphasized it is difficult to transform the law of international organizations and distill principles applicable to a private non-profit corporation.” Id. ¶ 62.

<sup>254</sup> See Caron Opinion ¶ 65.

<sup>255</sup> Id. ¶ 99; see also id. ¶¶ 99-104.

<sup>256</sup> Id. ¶¶ 99-100.

<sup>257</sup> Id. ¶ 104.

<sup>258</sup> Id.

“not exist in a vacuum”<sup>259</sup> in which ICM could pick and choose only those principles that allegedly favor it.

171. Because ICANN is not a state nor an international organization, ICM errs in invoking the doctrine of non-abuse of rights. Because that doctrine applies to states, it does not apply in this proceeding.<sup>260</sup>

172. ICM similarly errs in relying on state-investor cases and government-procurement treaties.<sup>261</sup> For instance, ICM relies heavily on Lauder v. The Czech Republic, Final Award dated September 3, 2001 (UNCITRAL).<sup>262</sup> Yet, the dispute in that case was governed by the terms of a bilateral investment treaty; the tribunal expressly rejected the claimant’s attempt to rely on “general principles of international law” exclusive of express obligations under the treaty.<sup>263</sup> By its terms, therefore, Lauder has no application to a dispute between ICM and ICANN, two private entities.

173. Moreover, these cases depend upon the existence of a relevant treaty conferring the rights in question. They do not provide international legal principles relevant in the absence of such treaties. Of course, neither ICANN nor ICM is a party to any treaty conferring rights on the other, and ICM does not make any contrary contention.<sup>264</sup>

174. To the extent any of ICM’s cited principles have some application to private parties beyond treaties, the principles still are not relevant here because of the domestic nature of the dispute.<sup>265</sup> International legal principles of the sort cited by ICM do not govern commercial

---

<sup>259</sup> Id. ¶ 99.

<sup>260</sup> See Caron Opinion ¶ 81 (stating, with respect to non-abuse of rights, that he “fail[s] to readily see the application in these proceedings of a doctrine applied to States”).

<sup>261</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶¶ 359-67, 384-85, 397, 446-53; see also Goldsmith Report ¶ 30.

<sup>262</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶¶ 384-85.

<sup>263</sup> Lauder at ¶ 209.

<sup>264</sup> See also Caron Opinion ¶¶ 78, 90-92 (explaining that ICM “inappropriately relies” on cases in which obligations of good faith, legitimate expectations, and transparency arise from treaties).

<sup>265</sup> See Caron Opinion ¶ 57 (stating that “relevant” “bear[s] on the particular subject matter addressed or implicated in the action of the Board”).

disputes between two private U.S. corporations regarding a contract to be performed by one of those U.S. parties within the United States.<sup>266</sup>

175. Indeed, ICM recognizes that only one country is involved by conceding<sup>267</sup> that California law is the only applicable local law; ICM nowhere identifies the law of any other country that could conceivably be relevant. With only one country involved, international legal principles are not needed to avoid favoritism, to provide an “even playing field,” or to protect another sovereign – the typical purposes of applying international legal principles to a dispute that contains an international element.<sup>268</sup> Accordingly, the cases that ICM (although not its expert) cites, in which the conduct of certain private parties (international sports federations) were subject to principles of international law, are irrelevant; in each of those cases, the disputing parties were from different countries.<sup>269</sup> Moreover, the principles applied in those international sports cases had “developed and consolidated along the years” to address the specific conduct of international sports leagues.<sup>270</sup> ICM does not contend that any such body of law has developed and consolidated with respect to the consideration of TLD name applications.

176. ICM suggests that, even for this transaction involving two U.S. corporations, international law is “relevant” because awarding a TLD can have global effects.<sup>271</sup> But international legal principles do not apply to a dispute between private entities located in the

---

<sup>266</sup> See, e.g., de Sanchez v. Banco Central De Nicaragua, 770 F.2d 1385, 1395 (5th Cir. 1985) (“With a few exceptions [not applicable here], international law delineates minimum standards for the protection only of aliens; it does not purport to interfere with the relations between a nation and its own citizens.”); id. at 1396 (recognizing that “an injury by a state to its own nationals might implicate international law if the injury occurred within another state’s territory” but the injury must be “of such a nature as to” have a transnational element).

<sup>267</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶¶ 246-65; see also Goldsmith Report ¶ 22.

<sup>268</sup> See Skiriotes v. Florida, 313 U.S. 69, 73 (1941) (explaining that international law is not concerned with domestic rights and duties); CHESHIRE & NORTH’S PRIVATE INTERNATIONAL LAW 3 (11th ed. 1987) (noting that international law “functions only when” a “foreign element” is present in the dispute).

<sup>269</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶¶ 381-84 (citing cases involving disputes between parties from: the United Kingdom on the one side and Switzerland on the other; the United States on the one side and Monaco on the other; Greece and the Czech Republic on the one side and Switzerland on the other; and Switzerland on the one side and Spain on the other).

<sup>270</sup> AEK Athens and SK Slavia Prague v. Union of European Football Associations (UEFA), Arbitration CAS 98/200, award of 20 August 1999, at ¶ 156.

<sup>271</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶ 349.

same nation simply because the dispute may have global effects. Such a rule, apart from being unprecedented, would have the absurd effect of transforming all large disputes (e.g., disputes between two U.S. companies that both operate in more than a single country) into cases governed by international law. A stronger international connection, such as “affront[ing] the territorial sovereignty” of a nation<sup>272</sup> or involving an international transaction, must exist for principles of international law to apply to private parties. ICM itself appears to recognize that U.S., not international, law would govern any contract ultimately formed between ICM and ICANN for the .XXX name.<sup>273</sup> Under those circumstances, any international effects of a TLD are simply beside the point.

177. Finally, two of ICM’s cited principles (so-called “principles” of estoppel and legitimate expectations), and its reliance on a good-faith application of transparency, are not even well established, and thus would not apply in any event.<sup>274</sup> Therefore, ICM’s invocation of them in this proceeding is especially off point.

c. ICM’s Cited Principles Are Ineffective Because California Law More Specifically Governs The Dispute.

178. Even if ICM’s cited principles were “relevant,” they nonetheless would not govern the Panel’s review because other law (namely, the ICANN Bylaws and Articles, as well as California law) deals specifically with the circumstances of this dispute. This more specific law renders unnecessary any resort to ICM’s general principles of international law.

179. By its terms, Article 4 acknowledges that types of law other than “relevant principles of international law” may be at issue. Specifically, in addition to referring to such principles, Article 4 refers to “applicable international conventions and local law.”<sup>275</sup> Those types of law are more specific than “principles of international law” and, as a general matter, will provide sufficient guidance without resort to principles. As Professor Caron puts it, while “[i]t is theoretically possible that satisfaction of all of the rules of applicable ‘international conventions’

---

<sup>272</sup> de Sanchez, 770 F.2d at 1396

<sup>273</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶ 254 (referring to U.S. law as governing a contract for the .XXX sTLD).

<sup>274</sup> See Caron Opinion ¶¶ 84, 86-98.

<sup>275</sup> Articles of Incorporation, Article 4, Cl. Ex. 4.

and ‘local law’ might not also satisfy all ‘relevant principles of international law,’” that “would be a rare case.”<sup>276</sup>

180. To elaborate, treaties and local law are generally rule-based, making them “inherently more specific than principles.”<sup>277</sup> By contrast, principles are, as their name suggests, more general; they are “abstract statements of legal truth” that are used “to fill in the interstices between rules.”<sup>278</sup> Where gaps do not exist, principles are not needed. Professor Caron emphasizes that “the distinction between principles and rules is of critical and fundamental importance to the interpretation and application of Article 4.”<sup>279</sup>

181. In light of the distinction between rules and principles, the phrase “principles of international law” in Article 4 has “a limited general effect compared to ‘applicable international conventions’ or ‘local law.’”<sup>280</sup> This effect of Article 4 – “that the more exacting requirements of Article 4 are provided by the specific rules present in applicable international conventions and local law rather than by principles of international law” – is “not at all surprising” to Professor Caron.<sup>281</sup>

---

<sup>276</sup> Caron Opinion ¶ 74. ICM’s expert himself recognizes that there is only a limited exception to the sufficiency of local law when that law covers the dispute. See Goldsmith Report ¶ 27 (noting that “arbitrators sometimes conclude that international law, including general principles, should trump when in conflict with national law” (emphasis added)). ICM never alleges such a conflict here. Indeed, ICM urges that the result would be the same under California law and ICM’s cited principles of international law. See ICM Memorial ¶¶ 336, 341; see also Goldsmith Report ¶ 22, 27.

<sup>277</sup> Caron Opinion ¶ 74.

<sup>278</sup> Caron Opinion ¶¶ 12, 85; see also id. ¶¶ 39-40; Riccardo Monaco, Sources of International Law, in 7 ENCYCLOPEDIA OF PUBLIC INTERNATIONAL LAW 429 (1984) (“Max Planck”) (“[R]ecourse may be had to [general principles of international law] in order to fill certain gaps in general international law.”); id. at 429 (even stating that general principles of international law are “not part of the formal category of sources” of international law). ICM’s expert acknowledges the vagueness of principles of international law, admitting that they are “primarily abstractions from a mass of rules.” Goldsmith Report ¶ 29 (citation omitted).

<sup>279</sup> Caron Opinion ¶ 105.

<sup>280</sup> Id. ¶ 74. Even without Article 4, principles of international law would likely have a limited effect because, as explained in the text above, principles of international law are generally secondary to other law.

<sup>281</sup> Id. ¶ 105.

182. The relatively diminished efficacy of principles is reinforced by the place of principles of international law among other sources of international law.<sup>282</sup> A “hierarchy” of laws “establish[es] which source [of international law] should prevail over the others” when more than one source of international law is potentially applicable.<sup>283</sup> There are three major categories of sources of international law: (1) treaties, (2) custom, and (3) “general principles” (which include “the general principles of civilized nations,” the sort of principles on which ICM and its expert rely).<sup>284</sup> Under the hierarchy, the more specific sources (treaties and custom) have priority because they are generally rule-based and addressed to particular circumstances; they can confidently be applied to those circumstances (and not to others). Giving precedence to this more specific law promotes certainty and predictability. Principles, as noted, are general and thus have a “subsidiary status.”<sup>285</sup> Generally speaking, then, general principles of international law take second place to other types of international law where the latter govern the conduct in question.<sup>286</sup> For instance, “if there is a custom, then one looks to it and not to general principles generally held by civilized nations.”<sup>287</sup>

183. ICM acknowledges<sup>288</sup> that its cited principles are of the least forceful type of international law – general principles.<sup>289</sup> Yet ICM treats its cited principles “with the

---

<sup>282</sup> As noted, the parties agree that “international law” in Article 4 means public international law. See Caron Opinion ¶ 47; ICM Memorial ¶ 345.

<sup>283</sup> MAX PLANCK, supra, at 432-33; see also Caron Opinion ¶¶ 40, 55-56 (discussing the hierarchy of law).

<sup>284</sup> See Caron Opinion ¶ 47; accord Goldsmith Report ¶ 23.

<sup>285</sup> Caron Opinion ¶¶ 12, 38-40, 50, 68-71; id. at ¶ 68 (describing principles as “abstract considerations that might be applied in the way that the common law would term equity, and that can serve as the abstract limits within which more specific rules are articulated”); see also MAX PLANCK, supra, at 429-30.

<sup>286</sup> See MAX PLANCK, supra, at 429, 432 (noting that general principles of international law follow “constitutional principles, custom and agreement” in terms of priority); id. at 433 (“[B]elow customary rules, come the general principles of international law.”); id. (stating that “rules laid down by agreement” prevail over customary rules, which prevail over general principles of international law); id. at 427 (custom “is a primary source of law since it is itself capable of giving force to the rules which result from it”); see also Caron Opinion ¶ 40.

<sup>287</sup> Caron Opinion ¶ 49.

<sup>288</sup> See, e.g., ICM Memorial ¶¶ 346-47.

<sup>289</sup> Caron Opinion ¶ 12.

definiteness of rules rather than the generality of principles.”<sup>290</sup> In this way, ICM “inappropriately characterize[s]” its principles as more specific and exacting than they are.<sup>291</sup> As a result, as Professor Caron observes, ICM renders its analysis “unnecessarily confusing.”<sup>292</sup>

184. The opinion of ICM’s expert similarly confuses the analysis by discussing principles of international law as “amplify[ing]” and “giv[ing] detail” to more specific rules.<sup>293</sup> That is exactly the opposite of the way the different laws interact. As Professor Caron explains, “‘principles by their nature do not ‘amplify and give detail’ to requirements.”<sup>294</sup> Instead, principles “provide the outer boundaries of a norm.”<sup>295</sup> Thus, ICM’s expert misses the point in opining that ICM’s cited principles of international law “complement, amplify, and give detail to the requirements of independence, transparency, and due process that ICANN has otherwise assumed in its Articles and Bylaws and under California law.”<sup>296</sup> There is no “supplementary role”<sup>297</sup> for international law to play when more specific local law already addresses the matter.

185. The proper analysis, then, is to consider whether ICM’s cited principles would perform any clarifying role in this proceeding. They do not. In the circumstances at issue in this proceeding, the generally limited effect of Article 4’s “principles of international law” and the applicable rules set forth in the ICANN Bylaws and Articles as well as California law render resort to ICM’s cited principles unnecessary. As noted, local law is a specific type of law, almost always composed of rules rather than principles. That is the case here, where the Bylaws

---

<sup>290</sup> Id. ¶ 48.

<sup>291</sup> Id.

<sup>292</sup> Id. As Professor Caron explains, ICM’s expert appears to have misinterpreted a list carefully distinguishing among different meanings ascribed to “general principles of international law” as a list showing “that all of these various meanings have come together.” Id. ¶ 51. As a result, “ICM and its expert move too easily among possible sources of general principles and in seeking to articulate the contours of a particular principle of international law on occasion refer to sources that are not necessarily on point and thus must be approached with care.” Id.

<sup>293</sup> Goldsmith Report ¶ 27.

<sup>294</sup> Caron Opinion ¶¶ 72, 76.

<sup>295</sup> Id.

<sup>296</sup> Goldsmith Report ¶ 27.

<sup>297</sup> Id.

and Articles provide clear rules of decision, and where California law, in its many particulars, extensively addresses a non-profit corporation's conduct of its general business activities such as deciding whether to enter into contracts with other U.S. corporations and how contracts are formed and interpreted. For instance, with respect to the principle of good faith (the primary principle on which ICM relies), Professor Caron explains that, to the extent that the principle is found to apply in this proceeding, "its place as a practical matter comes after more specific rules and laws" addressing the same concerns motivating the good-faith principle.<sup>298</sup> He elaborates: "[T]he principle of good faith, perhaps the most broad and general of general principles of law, must indeed play second fiddle to those rules and obligations that specifically apply in this review."<sup>299</sup> And while status as "second fiddle" does not itself render the principle wholly ineffective, the principle's role in "the background" is relevant only "to the extent that the rules and laws applicable in this review do not completely provide the basis for this Panel's consideration."<sup>300</sup> ICM agrees that the "applicable local law" under Article 4 is California law and that California law reaches the same result as its cited principles.<sup>301</sup> Moreover, as explained in Parts III.B and III.C below, ICANN's conduct was consistent with ICANN's Bylaws and Articles in every respect, under any exacting requirements of ICANN's Articles and Bylaws interpreted under the particulars of California law. Thus, even if ICM's cited principles were "relevant principles of international law" within the meaning of Article 4, they still would not play a role in this proceeding because local law and the Bylaws and Articles themselves provide sufficient guidance for the Panel's analysis. With ICM's principles providing no clarifying role, they are essentially irrelevant.

186. ICM also confuses the analysis by interpreting "principles of international law" to mean only "general principles of law recognized by civilized nations" and omitting any attention

---

<sup>298</sup> Caron Opinion ¶ 85 (emphasis added).

<sup>299</sup> Id.

<sup>300</sup> Id.; see also id. ¶ 77 ("Indeed, many of the cases in which the term 'good faith' appears do not involve a finding that a party did not act in good faith but rather is a term added seemingly as a reminder to the parties of the conduct required by the principle.").

<sup>301</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶¶ 336, 341; see also Goldsmith Report ¶¶ 22, 27 (stating that California law is the applicable local law and that here "there are no conflicts between the various forms of law in Article 4").

to principles found elsewhere in international law, particularly in customary international law.<sup>302</sup> At ICM's request, ICM's expert does likewise, expressly refusing to discuss customary international law because he had been instructed not to do so.<sup>303</sup> But principles of international law are "found in customary international law" and "on occasion in universal multilateral treaties as well as general principles of law recognized by civilized nations."<sup>304</sup> Both ICM and its expert focus on only one source of principles – and indeed, the least forceful source of international law: "general principles of law recognized by civil nations".<sup>305</sup> As Professor Caron observes, "it is astounding" and "incomprehensible" that, in asking for an opinion on the meaning of Article 4, ICM directed its expert to not address issues of customary international law.<sup>306</sup> That omission is "disabling of any opinion" on Article 4's meaning.<sup>307</sup>

187. None of ICM's other arguments salvage its approach to Article 4. ICM claims that the order in which ICANN listed the types of law in Article 4 should establish that principles of international law are primary.<sup>308</sup> But ICM provides no support for this interpretation of Article 4, which is contrary to the well-established distinction between specific and general law. The less persuasive force of principles is inherent in their nature; they are characteristically stated broadly and govern only when no local law applies. Thus, regardless of the order in which sources of law happen to be listed in Article 4, principles (such as principles of international law)

---

<sup>302</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶ 347.

<sup>303</sup> See Goldsmith Report ¶ 22 n.28.

<sup>304</sup> Caron Opinion ¶ 52. ICM's expert similarly observes that it would be unlikely that "principles of international law" would "pick out 'general principles' but exclude customary international law." Goldsmith Report ¶ 23 n.30.

<sup>305</sup> Id. ¶ 49 (identifying the "limited role given to 'general principles of law recognized by civilized nations'").

<sup>306</sup> Id. ¶ 48.

<sup>307</sup> Id. Indeed, as Professor Caron observes, if, as ICM contends, ICANN had intended to adopt international law governing sovereigns, such intent must also encompass custom, yet ICM and its expert remarkably and curiously elide any discussion of custom. See id. at ¶ 59; see also id. ¶ 47 n.26 (addressing the "clear interstate character" of customary international law).

<sup>308</sup> ICM Memorial ¶ 339 (contending that Article 4's placement of "relevant principles of international law before international conventions or local law" prioritizes the law with which ICANN agreed to act in conformity).

are less forceful than more specific law in treaties (which are listed second) and applicable local law (which is listed third).

188. ICM further suggests that, at least in this instance, local law is not more specific than ICM's cited principles, and therefore the cited principles provide an independent source of law to apply.<sup>309</sup> To urge this point, ICM falls back on its misplaced reliance on ICANN's oversight of the Internet as "a global resource."<sup>310</sup> As noted above, the international applicability of a TLD does not render this dispute – between two U.S. corporations concerning an application process governed by U.S. law – international in character for purposes of Article 4.

189. ICM also relies on its muddled application of the hierarchy of law to contend that international law has an independent role here. Quoting, once again, individual phrases out of context, ICM attempts to rely on the "general duty to bring internal [i.e., local] law into conformity with obligations under international law."<sup>311</sup> As an initial matter, that duty applies only where international legal obligations already exist; here, no international legal obligations exist as relevant to these proceedings. Moreover, as the fuller context surrounding ICM's quotation confirms, this duty to conform local law to international law "aris[es] from the nature of treaty obligations and from customary law"<sup>312</sup> – two sources of international law that ICM does not rely on here. Nothing in the quoted excerpt suggests that specific local law must incorporate general principles of international law, which play only a gap-filling, not a primary, role.

190. In sum, even if Article 4 operates as a choice-of-law clause bringing general commercial principles of international law into an IRP proceeding, those principles nonetheless

---

<sup>309</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶ 461 (contending that California law is "less analogous" to this dispute than ICM's cited principles of international law).

<sup>310</sup> ICM Memorial ¶ 461; see also Goldsmith Report ¶ 26.

<sup>311</sup> ICM Memorial ¶ 339 (quoting IAN BROWNLIE, PRINCIPLES OF PUBLIC INTERNATIONAL LAW 35 (7th ed. 2008)).

<sup>312</sup> BROWNLIE, supra, at 35.

do not provide guidance in this particular proceeding because rules under local law provide more specific guidance for the circumstances at issue here.<sup>313</sup>

B. EACH OF ICM’S KEY FACTUAL ASSERTIONS IS WRONG.

191. ICANN now turns to the factual issues on which ICM focuses. Because of the limited nature of these proceedings and the fundamental infirmities of ICM’s claims, ICANN focuses its response on the four central factual issues that ICM has identified; each of ICM’s claims rests upon one of more of these four central issues.

192. With respect to each of these four issues, ICANN is absolutely confident that, even if (as ICM contends) these proceedings involved de novo review and the evaluation by this Panel sitting as a “Supreme Court of ICANN,” the Panel still would determine that ICANN’s conduct was not inconsistent with ICANN’s Bylaws and Articles in any respect. For this reason, ICANN addresses each of these four issues in some detail in order to demonstrate that ICM’s characterizations of the facts are wrong.

193. In so doing, however, ICANN does not wish to leave the impression that the Panel should (or somehow needs to) address these matters at this level of detail. To the contrary, in light of the deference that should be accorded to the Board’s decisions in this matter, the Panel should declare that ICANN’s conduct was not inconsistent with its Bylaws and Articles even if ICM’s version of the facts is largely correct (which it is not). The issues presented to the ICANN Board by the ICM .XXX sTLD application were difficult, and the Panel can determine that ICANN’s Board addressed ICM’s application with great care, devoted an enormous amount of time trying to determine the right course of action, allowed ICM to be heard frequently, and deliberated openly and transparently. Indeed, ICANN is unaware of a corporate deliberative process that is more open and transparent than ICANN’s process, and that openness and transparency was fully apparent with respect to ICM’s application for .XXX. After this intensive process, the majority of the ICANN Board twice concluded that ICM’s proposal should be rejected, with no hint whatsoever of the “bad faith” ICM alleges.

---

<sup>313</sup> Even setting aside that ICM’s cited principles of international law do not apply here because they are not relevant, those cited principles do not permit any relief to ICM. As demonstrated in Parts III.B and III.C below, ICANN’s conduct was appropriate and consistent with the international legal principles that ICM invokes. In asserting otherwise, ICM’s expert inappropriately exceeds his role as an expert by applying the law to the facts of this case. See, e.g., Goldsmith Report ¶¶ 34, 37-40, 42. By doing so, ICM’s expert usurps not only the role of counsel in this proceeding but the role of the Panel as well, which has the sole province in this proceeding to declare whether, under the law as applied to the facts of this case, the ICANN Board has acted inconsistently with ICANN’s Articles and Bylaws. Moreover, ICM’s expert applies the law to assumed facts, which inappropriately overlooks the adversarial process because the facts here are disputed. Id. Thus, those portions of his report that apply the law to ICM’s facts should have no substantive bearing whatsoever on this proceeding.

194. In short, there is no basis to find that ICANN’s conduct was inconsistent with its Bylaws or Articles – to the contrary, ICANN tackled extremely difficult and controversial issues with great care, and each of the members of ICANN’s Board worked hard to try to identify the best answers. By the time of the last vote, five of the members of the Board supported the .XXX sTLD application, while nine of the members did not. ICM disagrees with the majority, but there is no basis to find that the Board – with each of the nine Board members in the majority expressing (often at some length) his or her own reasons for his/her vote – actually violated ICANN’s Bylaws or Articles in the course of this process.<sup>314</sup> The evidence before the Panel is in black and white, and no amount of “spin” can alter the foundational facts and reasons for the Board’s decisions.

195. First, ICM claims that ICANN adopted a rigidly non-overlapping two-step procedure for approving new sTLDs, under which applications would first be tested for baseline selection criteria, and only after the applications were finally and irrevocably approved by the ICANN Board could the applications proceed to technical and commercial contract negotiations with ICANN staff.

196. Second, ICM alleges that despite the Evaluation Panel’s conclusion that ICM did not satisfy the sponsorship criteria, ICANN’s Board “unconditionally approved” the .XXX TLD on June 1, 2005, when the Board allowed ICANN staff to begin registry agreement negotiations with ICM.

---

<sup>314</sup> According to the Bylaws, the limited purpose of independent review is to provide a forum to address whether the ICANN Board as a whole, and not individual members, acted consistently with ICANN’s Bylaws and Articles of Incorporation. ICANN Bylaws, supra note 2, Article IV, § 3.1 (“ICANN shall have in place a separate process for independent third-party review of Board actions alleged by an affected party to be inconsistent with the Articles of Incorporation or Bylaws.”). Thus, while nothing suggests that any individual Board member violated the Bylaws or Articles, the relevant inquiry is the Board’s actions as a whole.

197. Third, ICM asserts that, during technical and commercial negotiations with ICANN staff, ICM satisfied all relevant concerns about the .XXX sTLD and presented a registry contract that the ICANN Board should have approved.

198. And fourth, ICM claims that, in a March 30, 2007 vote, the ICANN Board reversed its “unconditional approval” of the .XXX sTLD based on “vague and unannounced” notions of public policy, which were outside of the stated evaluation criteria for sTLDs.

199. In the sections below, ICANN demonstrates that ICM’s version of the facts is wrong in each respect. Much more importantly, none of these events supports a finding that the Board violated its Bylaws or Articles.

1. ICANN Was Not Bound By A Non-Overlapping, “Two-Step” Procedure For Evaluating sTLD Applications.

200. ICM’s claims begin with the notion that ICANN adopted, and was bound by, an inflexible, two-step procedure for evaluating sTLD applications. First, according to ICM, applications would be reviewed by the Evaluation Panel for the baseline selection criteria. Second, only after applications were finally and irrevocably approved by the ICANN Board would the applications proceed to contract negotiations with ICANN staff with no ability by the Board to address any of the issues that the Board previously had raised in conjunction with the sTLD application.

201. The RFP, however, decisively refutes this contention. Neither the RFP nor any other official statement regarding the RFP process suggests that ICANN had implemented a consecutive two-step process for evaluating sTLD applications in a manner that never permitted the evaluation process and contractual negotiations to overlap in time. The evaluation process in the RFP was described as follows:

- (a) The selection procedure is based on principles of objectivity, non-discrimination and transparency.
- (b) An independent team of evaluators will perform the evaluation process. The evaluation team will make recommendations about the preferred applications, if any applications are successful in meeting the selection criteria.

(c) Based on the evaluator’s recommendations, ICANN staff will proceed with contract negotiations and develop an agreement reflecting the commercial and technical terms to be agreed, although such terms may be subject to further amendment, as appropriate. ICANN will negotiate specific terms and conditions with each Registry Operator.<sup>315</sup>

202. The RFP makes clear that an sTLD registry agreement could not be presented to the Board for final approval without having proceeded through the evaluation process and contract negotiations. The RFP does not, however, suggest the Board’s allowance for an application to proceed to contract negotiation confirms the close of the evaluation process.

203. Consistent with the language of the RFP, ICANN announced nearly a year before authorizing any contract negotiations with ICM that contract negotiations precede any approval or disapproval of the underlying application: “Upon completion of the technical and commercial negotiations, successful applicants will be presented to the ICANN Board with all the associated information, so the Board can independently review the findings along with the information and make their own adjustments. And then final decisions will be made by the Board, and they’ll authorize staff to complete or execute the agreements with the sponsoring organizations, thereby designated in the registries.”<sup>316</sup>

204. This approach to contract negotiations was the only logical approach. The Board could not always know whether applications are able to satisfy the sponsorship (or other evaluation) criteria until it was shown how the criteria would be implemented in the contract. As former Chairman of the Board Vinton Cerf notes, in keeping with the plain language of the RFP, “ICANN never intended that this would be a formal ‘two-step’ process, where proceeding to contract negotiations automatically constituted a de facto final and irrevocable approval with respect to the baseline selection criteria, including sponsorship.”<sup>317</sup>

---

<sup>315</sup> See New sTLD application, December 15, 2003, Part A. Explanatory Notes – Selection Criteria, Cl. Ex. 45.

<sup>316</sup> ICANN Meetings in Kuala Lumpur ICANN Public Forum, Thursday, July 22, 2004, Real-Time Captioning, Cl. Ex. 111 (comments of Kurt Pritz, ICANN) (emphasis added).

<sup>317</sup> V. Cerf Witness Statement, ¶ 15.

205. Instead, before the ICANN Board could approve an sTLD application, applicants had to satisfy the baseline selection criteria set forth in the RFP, including the technical, business/financial, and sponsorship criteria, and also negotiate an acceptable registry contract with ICANN staff.<sup>318</sup> These were two overlapping phases in the evaluation of the sTLDs. And the established process for evaluating the sTLD applications always gave the ICANN Board the right to vote against a proposed sTLD should the Board find deficiencies in the proposed registry agreement or in the sTLD proposal as a whole.

206. ICANN did employ a two-stage process – insofar as the evaluation of the RFP criteria and technical negotiations involved different functions – but a review of the relevant documents and contemporaneous statements by the Board makes clear that the two phases could (and often did) overlap in time.

207. Dr. Twomey (ICANN’s then and current-President), Alejandro Pisanty (then-Vice Chairman of the Board), and Dr. Cerf (then-Chairman of the Board) unanimously confirm this understanding. Each explains that the ICANN Board retained the authority to review and assess the baseline RFP selection criteria even after some of the applicants were allowed to proceed to contract negotiations.<sup>319</sup> ICM and other applicants were thus permitted to begin contract negotiations despite unresolved RFP issues, in the hope that those concerns might be addressed to the Board’s satisfaction via the contract negotiations.

208. These views are also confirmed by the conduct of the ICANN Board members who were in favor of ICM’s .XXX sTLD application in June 2005. During the many discussions of ICM’s sponsorship shortcomings after ICM was allowed to proceed to contract negotiations on June 1, 2005, none of these Board members ever objected that the Board had already approved the .XXX sTLD. Plainly, if the June 1, 2005 resolutions had constituted a final approval of ICM's application, the Board members supporting that application could have argued as much. Notably, two Board members who had originally voted to allow ICM to proceed to contract negotiations ultimately voted against the proposed registry contract.<sup>320</sup>

---

<sup>318</sup> Id; see also P. Twomey Witness Statement, ¶ 18.

<sup>319</sup> P. Twomey Witness Statement, ¶¶ 18-22 ; V. Cerf Witness Statement, ¶¶ 15-20; see also Cerf Comments on March 30, 2007 vote, ICANN Meetings in Lisbon, Portugal, Transcript, March 30, 2007, Cl. Ex. 201 (“The record will show that at one point I voted in favor of proceeding to negotiate a contract. Part of the reason for that was to try to understand more deeply exactly how this proposal would be implemented, and seeing the contractual terms, it seemed to me, would put much more meat on the bones of the initial proposal.”) (emphasis added); A. Pisanty Witness Statement, ¶ 16 (“As the adopted resolutions made clear, the Board’s vote was intended only to permit ICM to proceed with contract negotiations. Under no circumstances was ICANN bound by this vote to award the .XXX sTLD to ICM because the resolution that the Board adopted was not a finding that ICM had satisfied the sponsorship criteria set forth in the Request for Proposal.”).

209. ICM's "evidence" is not to the contrary. Despite the fact that ICM makes this issue the lynchpin of its arguments, ICM cites nothing more than a few comments by ICANN staff and Board Members stating that there were "two major steps" in the evaluation process.<sup>321</sup> These statements were accurate because there were two major steps in the evaluation process. The relevant question, however, is whether ICANN's Bylaws required these two steps to be non-overlapping in time, such that contract negotiations could not commence until the satisfaction of the RFP criteria was finally and irrevocably determined, and that consequently any resolution permitting contract negotiations with an applicant would constitute an implicit determination that all of the RFP criteria were, sub silentio, deemed satisfied. Nothing in ICM's citations even hints at such an atextual view of the RFP process, and ICM offers no response at all to the foregoing evidence proving that the fundamental underlying premise of its entire claim is wrong.<sup>322</sup>

---

<sup>320</sup> The two Board members were Dr. Cerf and Vanda Scartezini.

<sup>321</sup> See, e.g., ICANN Meetings in Rome, ICANN Public Forum, Part 1, Thursday, March 4, 2004, Real-Time Captioning, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/meetings/rome/captioning-forum1-04mar04.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009) (Kurt Pritz provided a summary of the anticipated sTLD evaluation process: "There's two major steps to the process. The first is the application process as you see it now ... the process is to demonstrate involvement in the community, technical competence, financial viability, and a robust business model. After that, as I stated before, we'll enter into this commercial and technical negotiation phase."), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AI.

<sup>322</sup> Throughout the evaluation process, ICANN altered the evaluation schedule in order to provide applicants, especially ICM, an opportunity to address problems that had been identified in their applications. For instance, after the Evaluation Panel's initial findings, the ICANN Board instructed the Panel to reconsider their findings as to all applicants. After the Evaluation Panel confirmed its initial findings, the ICANN Board gave each of the applicants an opportunity to respond to the findings in writing to the Board. After ICM responded to the findings of the Evaluation Panel, the ICANN Board offered ICM an opportunity to make an in-person presentation to the Board.

2. ICANN's Board Did Not Approve The .XXX sTLD On June 1, 2005.

210. ICM's claims are also premised on the argument that, on June 1, 2005, the ICANN Board voted to give ICM an "unconditional" approval of the .XXX sTLD application.

211. As discussed above, on June 1, 2005, the ICANN Board held a special meeting in which it passed two resolutions authorizing ICANN staff to negotiate contract terms with ICM:

Resolved [05.32] the Board authorizes the President and General Counsel to enter into negotiations relating to proposed commercial and technical terms for the .XXX sponsored top-level domain (sTLD) with the applicant.

Resolved [05.33] if after entering into negotiations with the .XXX sTLD applicant the President and General Counsel are able to negotiate a set of proposed commercial and technical terms for a contractual arrangement, the President shall present such proposed terms to this board, for approval and authorization to enter into an agreement relating to the delegation of the sTLD.<sup>323</sup>

212. ICM's claims are predicated on the assumption that these resolutions "by [their] terms" reflect the Board's "unconditional decision that ICM's application satisfied the RFP selection criteria, including the sponsorship criteria," and thus constituted approval of ICM's .XXX sTLD application.<sup>324</sup> But because nothing in the resolutions actually says that, ICM's argument rests on ICM's assumption that the two steps of ICANN's evaluation process were rigidly non-overlapping, so that any authorization to negotiate (irrespective of the language of the agreement that was negotiated) must always be an unconditional approval. Because, as shown above, this premise is demonstrably incorrect, ICM's characterization of the resolutions also fails.

213. In fact, nothing in the resolutions expresses any approval at all, let alone an unconditional approval, of the .XXX sTLD application. To the contrary, the text of the resolutions makes clear that they did not constitute "approval and authorization," which could occur only in the future. The resolutions provided that "if after entering into negotiations with the .XXX sTLD applicant the President and General Counsel are able to negotiate a set of proposed commercial and technical terms for a contractual arrangement, the President shall present such proposed terms to this Board, for approval and authorization to enter into an agreement relating to the delegation of the sTLD.”<sup>325</sup> The plain language of the resolutions makes clear that they did not themselves constitute approval of the .XXX sTLD application.<sup>326</sup> The resolutions thus track the RFP, which makes clear that a “final decision will be made by the Board” only after “completion of the technical and commercial negotiations.”<sup>327</sup>

---

<sup>323</sup> See ICANN Minutes, Special Meeting of the Board, June 1, 2005, Cl. Ex. 120.

<sup>324</sup> ICM Memorial ¶ 186.

214. As of June 2005, there remained numerous unanswered questions and concerns regarding ICM’s ability to satisfy the baseline sponsorship criteria set forth in the RFP.<sup>328</sup> Despite these open questions, some Board members believed that the best way to test whether ICM could satisfy the sponsorship criteria was to determine whether the deficiencies could be addressed in a registry agreement with ICM.<sup>329</sup> Thus, contrary to the views of ICM’s witness Ms. Burr, the Board had good reason “to authorize ICM to proceed to negotiations for the registry agreement [even though] it did not feel that the application met the criteria.”<sup>330</sup> Had the Board not taken this action in order to further test ICM’s proposal, some Board members likely would have voted “no” and ICM’s proposal would have been rejected at that time.<sup>331</sup> One important purpose of the resolutions was to permit ICM to proceed to contract negotiations in an effort to determine whether ICM’s sponsorship shortcomings could be resolved in the contract.<sup>332</sup>

---

<sup>325</sup> Id. (emphasis added).

<sup>326</sup> ICM’s argument also supposes that the Board intended to confer approval of the controversial .XXX sTLD without even postponing the June 1 vote to allow the four absent Board members to voice their opinions regarding this important matter.

<sup>327</sup> See ICANN Meeting in Kuala Lumpur ICANN Public Forum, Thursday, July 22, 2004, Real-Time Captioning, Cl. Ex. 111 (comments of Kurt Pritz, ICANN) (emphasis added).

<sup>328</sup> See ICANN Minutes, Special Meeting of the Board, June 1, 2005, Cl. Ex. 120 (The Board’s discussion “surrounded the adequacy of the application with particular focus on the ‘sponsored community’ issues.”).

<sup>329</sup> A. Pisanty Witness Statement, ¶ 15; V. Cerf Witness Statement, ¶¶ 17-18.

<sup>330</sup> ICM Memorial, Ms. J. Beckwith Burr Witness Statement, ¶ 32.

<sup>331</sup> P. Twomey Witness Statement, ¶ 27; V. Cerf Witness Statement, ¶ 24.

<sup>332</sup> V. Cerf Witness Statement, ¶ 24 (“Allowing ICM to proceed to contract negotiations allowed us to truly test ICM’s ability to satisfy the sponsorship selection criteria, among other things. Had this not been

215. The Board also permitted other applicants for sTLDs – .jobs and .mobi – to proceed to contract negotiations despite open questions relating to the initial RFP selection criteria. However, ICM was unique among the field of sTLD applicants due to the extremely controversial nature of the proposed TLD, and concerns as to whether ICM had identified a “community” that existed and actually supported the proposed sTLD. Thus, while there was essentially no opposition to .jobs and .mobi from the sTLD communities defined by those applications, there was a significant negative response to ICM’s proposed .XXX sTLD by many adult entertainment providers, the very individuals and entities who logically would be in ICM’s proposed community.<sup>333</sup> There was no doubt that these issues warranted further evaluation and that ICM would have to continue to “prove” the validity of its application at subsequent Board meetings. ICM’s conduct, as discussed below, makes clear that it understood its challenge.

216. ICM’s position is further refuted by the actions taken by the Board after the June 2005 resolutions. At five subsequent Board meetings in which the Board discussed ICM’s application, the Board continued to discuss whether ICM was going to be able to satisfy the baseline sponsorship criteria required under the RFP. Many of these discussions were open to the public, and minutes from every meeting were posted on ICANN’s website.

217. For example, the Board extensively discussed its concerns regarding ICM’s ability to meet the sponsorship criteria at the September 15, 2005 special meeting (“after a lengthy discussion involving nearly all of the directors regarding the sponsorship criteria....”);<sup>334</sup> at the May 10, 2006 special meeting (ICANN Board and staff “entered into a detailed discussion on the following points: agreement terms against the application statements and promises made by ICM in support of their proposal; concerns regarding ICANN’s ability to enforce the promises made by ICM through a contractual framework and the potential harm if such enforcement could not be maintained; the sponsorship criteria in the RFP and materials submitted in support by a viable option for testing ICM’s proposal, I likely would have voted ‘no’ and I believe ICM’s proposal would have been turned down at that time.”).

---

(continued...)

<sup>333</sup> P. Twomey Witness Statement, ¶ 31.

<sup>334</sup> ICANN Minutes, Special Meeting of the Board, September 15, 2005, Cl. Ex. 119.

ICM and others . . . and ICM’s submission and supporting letters and documentation.”);<sup>335</sup> and again at the February 12, 2007 special meeting (where the Board discussed the “splintering” of support for the .XXX sTLD in the online adult entertainment community, a topic that “had been the subject of debate by the Board in earlier discussion in 2006”).<sup>336</sup>

218. Notably, at the February 12, 2007 special meeting, the Board conducted a “straw poll” for Board members to express their individual views with respect to the “serious concerns” expressed by “a majority of Board members” about ICM’s ability to satisfy the baseline sponsorship criteria set out in the RFP. Eight members and three non-voting liaisons expressed “serious concern.”<sup>337</sup> One of those non-voting liaisons also noted that “ALAC did not yet have a final and unanimous view on whether the domain should be created or not, and in any case, as it had said previously, did not support the requirement of the sponsorship for new TLDs in itself.”<sup>338</sup> Only three members stated that they did not have serious concerns.<sup>339</sup>

219. The fact that most Board members expressed significant concerns about ICM’s sponsorship shortcomings after the June 1, 2005 resolutions negates any notion that the June 2005 resolutions (which do not say that the Board is approving anything and, to the contrary, state clearly that the Board is not doing so) conclusively determined the sponsorship issue.

220. The sponsorship shortcomings in ICM’s application were also raised by Board members who joined the Board after the June 1, 2005 resolutions.<sup>340</sup> ICANN’s Board members are seated in a staggered fashion approximately every six months and the regular term of office for persons other than the President is three years. Thus, over the Board’s nearly two-year consideration of ICM’s application for the .XXX sTLD, the Board’s composition changed, and new members were seated. Several of these new members believed (quite appropriately) that it

---

<sup>335</sup> ICANN Minutes, Special Meeting of the Board, May 10, 2006, Cl. Ex. 122.

<sup>336</sup> ICANN Minutes, Special Meeting of the Board, February 12, 2007, Cl. Ex. 199.

<sup>337</sup> Id.

<sup>338</sup> Id.

<sup>339</sup> Id.

<sup>340</sup> V. Cerf Witness Statement, ¶ 39.

was incumbent on them to make their own evaluations of ICM's application because the issue continued to be addressed.

221. Contrary to ICM's odd assertion, it was not "impossible for the new Board members to absorb the relevant information before [each] vote."<sup>341</sup> Members of corporate boards routinely change over time, and those board members "get up-to-speed" on issues facing the board. In this circumstance, new Board members endeavored in good faith to review the pertinent materials and bring themselves up to speed.<sup>342</sup>

222. ICM's speculative assertion that a particular Board member (whether new or not) did not "fully grasp" the issues is hardly a basis to conclude that the Board violated ICANN's Bylaws, as ICM contends.<sup>343</sup> The statement of Ms. Burr that "it is a fact that most Board members lacked the legal training necessary to question the legitimacy of, or to identify legal inadequacies in, the tactics employed by ICANN's management" in rejecting ICM's registry agreement and application, not only improperly denigrates the credentials of the ICANN Board, but more importantly, confuses the issue. No member of the ICANN Board is required to have legal training, and whether any member does or does not have legal training is utterly irrelevant in determining whether ICANN violated its Bylaws by voting to reject ICM's sTLD application. (ICM's argument is also self-defeating because, if correct, it would show that a vote in favor of ICM's application would have been equally unsupportable.)

223. The addition of new Board members provided further opportunities for the Board to confirm that ICM's application satisfied the RFP specifications (if, as ICM contends, that is what the Board had decided in June 2005). Between the June 2005 and February 2007 Board meetings, there were a total of six new voting Board members (out of a total of fifteen) considering ICM's application. One such Board member was Rita Rodin Johnston (formerly Rita Rodin, who is a partner in the Intellectual Property and Technology practice at the Skadden Arps law firm and in fact does have substantial legal training). Ms. Rodin Johnston was

---

<sup>341</sup> ICM Memorial ¶ 262.

<sup>342</sup> V. Cerf Witness Statement, ¶ 39.

<sup>343</sup> ICM Memorial ¶ 263.

appointed to the Board by the GNSO in May 2006, and thus did not participate in the June 2005 and May 2006 votes. Ms. Rodin Johnston stated at the February 12, 2007 special meeting that “in preparation for the meeting [she] had reviewed the materials prepared by staff and other information available about the proposed domain.”<sup>344</sup> Based on her review, she expressed “some concerns about whether the proposal met the criteria set forth in the RFP. For example, [Ms. Rodin Johnston] noted that it was not clear to her whether the sponsoring community seeking to run the domain genuinely could be said to represent the adult on-line community.”<sup>345</sup>

224. The minutes further note that, in expressing these concerns, Ms. Rodin Johnston requested that John Jeffrey (ICANN’s General Counsel and Secretary) and Dr. Twomey “confirm that this sort of discussion should take place during this meeting. She said that she did not want to reopen issues if they had already had been decided by the Board.”<sup>346</sup> In response to Ms. Rodin Johnston’s query, no one stated that the sponsorship issue had already been decided by the Board. To the contrary, Dr. Cerf “noted that [it] had been the subject of debate by the Board in earlier discussions in 2006” and opined that “in recent times (over the last six months) there seemed to have been a more negative reaction from members of the adult online community to the proposal.”<sup>347</sup> Ms. Rodin Johnston agreed, saying that “a review of the materials indicates that there seems to be a ‘splintering’ of support in the adult on-line community” and that “this splintering suggested there may not be widespread support within the adult online community.”<sup>348</sup>

225. Contemporaneous correspondence from the ICANN Board to interested third-parties further confirms that the June 1, 2005 vote did not constitute unconditional approval of the .XXX sTLD. After the June 1, 2005 vote, the ICANN Board received correspondence from numerous governments and entities around the world expressing concerns about the proposed .XXX sTLD. On January 17, 2006, Dr. Cerf responded to concerns expressed by Peter Zangl

---

<sup>344</sup> ICANN Minutes, Special Meeting of the Board, February 12, 2007, Cl. Ex. 199.

<sup>345</sup> Id.

<sup>346</sup> Id.

<sup>347</sup> Id.

<sup>348</sup> Id.

(Deputy Director General of the Information Society and Media DG for the European Commission) regarding ICM's application. In describing the June 1, 2005 resolutions, Dr. Cerf stated that the Board had merely "voted to begin discussion of proposed commercial and technical terms with ICM" and "also requested the President to present any such negotiated agreement to the Board for approval and authorization."<sup>349</sup>

226. Dr. Twomey also confirmed ICANN's position that the June 1, 2005 resolutions did not constitute approval of ICM's application. In a May 4, 2006 letter from Dr. Twomey to Mohamed Sharil Tarmizi, then-Chairman of the GAC, Dr. Twomey noted that:

it is important to note that the Board decision as to the .XXX application is still pending. The decision by the ICANN Board at its June 1, 2005 Special Board Meeting reviewed the criteria against the materials supplied and the results of the independent evaluations. After consultation with ICM, the board voted to authorize staff to enter into contractual negotiations without prejudicing the Board's right to evaluate the resulting contract and to decide whether it meets all of the criteria before the Board including public policy advice such as might be offered by the GAC. The final conclusion on the Board's decision to accept or reject the .XXX application has not been made and will not be made until such time as the Board either approves or rejected the registry agreement relating to the .XXX application.<sup>350</sup>

---

<sup>349</sup> Letter from Vinton Cerf to Peter Zangl, January 17, 2006, available at <http://www.icann.org/correspondence/cerf-to-zangl-30jan06.pdf> (emphasis added) (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AJ.

<sup>350</sup> Letter from Paul Twomey, ICANN, to Mohamed Sharil Tarmizi, GAC Chairman, May 4, 2006, Cl. Ex. 188 (emphasis added).

Contrary to Ms. Burr's assertion, Dr. Twomey's May 4, 2006 letter was not the "first indication of a new strategy to re-open the selection criteria question." See ICM Memorial, Ms. J. Beckwith Burr Witness Statement, ¶ 63. As previously noted, it was known since the "proof of concept" round in 2000 that Board approval was required before delegation of a new TLD, and that the authorization to enter contract negotiations with a proposed registry operator or sponsoring organization would not, on its own, signify final approval of any proposed TLD. In the context of the sTLD round, Dr. Twomey confirmed the same position in an earlier letter to the GAC. See Letter from Paul Twomey, ICANN, to Mohamed Sharil Tarmizi, GAC Chairman, February 11, 2006, available at <http://www.icann.org/correspondence/twomey-to-tarmizi-16feb06.pdf> (last visited May 5, 2009) ("It should be noted that, consistent with Article II, section 1 of the Bylaws, it is the ICANN Board that has the authority to decide, upon the conclusion of technical and commercial negotiations, whether or not to approve the creation of a new sTLD. Such decisions are not made by outside evaluators or by ICANN Staff. Indeed, the sTLD RFP made it clear that the evaluators would make 'recommendations' to ICANN. Responsibility for resolving issues

227. Dr. Cerf reconfirmed this view in another letter to Mr. Tarmizi in March 2007. Dr. Cerf wrote that “the ICANN Board has not made a final decision on the .XXX application.”<sup>351</sup>

228. Contrary to ICM’s position that “ICANN never gave ICM any reason to doubt that the application had been approved,”<sup>352</sup> ICM was aware of all of the Board’s discussions and correspondence subsequent to June 1, 2005. Likewise, ICM was aware that members of the Board continued to express significant concerns about sponsorship issues associated with the proposed sTLD, and were noting objections of governments and the GAC to the sTLD. The Board minutes and correspondence discussed above were all publicly posted on ICANN’s website throughout the process.

229. Finally, the witness statements of ICANN Board members Dr. Cerf, Dr. Twomey, and Mr. Pisanty also confirm that the June 1, 2005 resolutions were not an “unconditional” or final approval of ICM’s .XXX sTLD application.<sup>353</sup>

230. Mr. Pisanty explains: “As the adopted resolutions made clear, the Board’s vote was intended only to permit ICM to proceed with contract negotiations. Under no circumstances was ICANN bound by this vote to award the .XXX sTLD to ICM because the resolution that the Board adopted was not a finding that ICM had satisfied the sponsorship criteria set forth in the relating to an applicant’s readiness to proceed to technical and commercial negotiations and, subsequently, whether or not to approve delegation of a new sTLD, rests with the Board.”), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AK.

---

(continued...)

<sup>351</sup> Letter from Vint Cerf, ICANN, to Mohamed Sharil Tarmizi, GAC Chairman, March 14, 2007, available at <http://www.icann.org/correspondence/cerf-to-tarmizi-karklins-14Mar07.pdf> (last visited May 5, 2009) (emphasis added), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AL.

<sup>352</sup> ICM Memorial ¶ 194.

<sup>353</sup> P. Twomey Witness Statement, ¶ 28; V. Cerf Witness Statement, ¶ 25; A. Pisanty Witness Statement, ¶ 16. The sworn testimony of ICANN Board members who actually participated in the decision and voted at the June 1, 2005 Board meeting is more persuasive than ICM’s reliance on the “understanding” of Dr. Williams and various unidentified third parties who had simply “monitor[ed] the process.” See ICM Memorial ¶ 193.

Request for Proposal. There were simply too many open questions concerning sponsorship in June 2005 for the Board to find that ICM had fulfilled the sponsorship selection criteria.”<sup>354</sup>

231. Dr. Cerf similarly notes: “The Resolutions did not constitute approval of ICM’s .XXX application. First, the Resolutions make no mention of any decision (final or otherwise) by the Board that the .XXX sTLD application satisfied the selection criteria (including the sponsorship criteria) set forth in the RFP. As is clear on the face of the Resolutions, the Board’s action was intended only to permit ICM to proceed with contract negotiations, nothing more. The alternative was simply to reject the .XXX sTLD application at that time, without giving ICM the opportunity to demonstrate that the concerns that had been raised could be addressed adequately by negotiated contractual provisions. Second, as of June 1, 2005, there were a number of unanswered questions and concerns regarding ICM’s ability to satisfy the requisite sponsorship criteria, including concerns relating to ICM’s definition of Sponsored Community and the level of support from the community.”<sup>355</sup>

232. And Dr. Twomey confirms: “There can be no doubt that these Resolutions did not constitute approval of ICM’s .XXX application, despite ICM’s argument in this proceeding to the contrary.”<sup>356</sup>

233. Thus, ICM’s baffling contention that “nothing in any Board minutes, transcripts or other ICANN pronouncements suggest that the Board’s approval to proceed to the registry agreement negotiation stage was subject to any residual concerns as to whether ICM’s application satisfied all of the RFP selection criteria”<sup>357</sup> is refuted by mountains of evidence that ICM simply ignores.

---

<sup>354</sup> A. Pisanty Witness Statement, ¶ 16.

<sup>355</sup> V. Cerf Witness Statement, ¶¶ 25-26.

<sup>356</sup> P. Twomey Witness Statement, ¶ 28.

<sup>357</sup> ICM Memorial ¶ 230.

3. ICM Could Not Cure Its Sponsorship Shortcomings, Along With Other Deficiencies, During Contract Negotiations.

234. ICM claims that it addressed all relevant concerns regarding the .XXX sTLD through the registry contract negotiations and discussions with ICANN staff. ICM is wrong. Further, throughout 2005 and up to the Board's denial of the .XXX sTLD on March 30, 2007, a number of additional concerns and issues appeared beyond those originally voiced by the Evaluation Panel at the beginning of the review process. Despite the best efforts of many, ICM could not satisfy these additional concerns, and most importantly, could not cure the continuing sponsorship defects.

a. Concerns Raised By The GAC.

235. Following the Board's June 1, 2005 resolution, ICANN staff, as directed by the ICANN Board, entered into contract discussions with ICM for a proposed registry agreement. By August 9, 2005, ICM's first draft .XXX sTLD registry agreement was posted on ICANN's website and submitted to the Board for approval. ICANN's next Board meeting was scheduled for August 16, 2005, at which time the Board had planned on discussing the proposed agreement.<sup>358</sup>

236. Within days of ICANN posting the proposed registry agreement, GAC Chairman Mr. Tarmizi wrote Dr. Cerf a letter expressing the GAC's "diverse and wide ranging" concerns with the .XXX sTLD (concerns that echoed those of the Board) and requesting that the Board provide additional time for governments to express their public policy concerns before the Board reached a final decision on the proposed registry agreement.<sup>359</sup> Because contract negotiations were still pending, an immediate written response to the GAC was premature.<sup>360</sup>

---

<sup>358</sup> See ICM Draft, August 1, 2005, Sponsored TLD Registry Agreement, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/tlds/agreements/xxx/proposed-xxx-agmt-09aug05.pdf> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit R.

<sup>359</sup> The GAC's statements in August 2005 disprove ICM's contention that the GAC had made in April 2005 "an affirmative statement that the GAC was declining to take a position on the .XXX, or any other, application." ICM Memorial ¶ 204. The GAC clearly took a position, and it was one of concern over ICM's .XXX application. And even if the GAC had declined to take a position in April 2005 – which it did not – ICANN was required under its Bylaws to consider the GAC's views, whether they were expressed in August 2005 or at any other time.

<sup>360</sup> V. Cerf Witness Statement, ¶ 32.

237. The GAC's input was significant because the ICANN Bylaws require the Board to take into account advice from the GAC on public policy matters, both in formulation and adoption of policies.<sup>361</sup> Where the Board seeks to take actions that are inconsistent with the GAC's advice, the Board must tell the GAC why.<sup>362</sup> Thus, it was perfectly appropriate, and fully consistent with the Bylaws and Articles, for the Board to consider and try to address the GAC's (and others') concerns.<sup>363</sup>

238. ICM's expert, Dr. Mueller, had already concluded (long before these proceedings began) that ICANN's treatment of the .XXX sTLD application had "proved conclusively" that the U.S. Government would influence the outcome "when domestic political pressures make it politically profitable to do so."<sup>364</sup> Dr. Mueller's opinions appear to be based largely on a suspicion of government involvement on issues of public policy, particularly by the United States, and by his personal view that such involvement, even as authorized through the GAC under the Bylaws, should be avoided. Thus, Dr. Mueller disagrees with ICANN's Bylaws, a disagreement that, of course, has nothing to do with whether ICANN's Board violated those Bylaws.

239. Dr. Mueller claims that, in raising its policy concerns through the GAC, the U.S. Government acted beyond the "oversight role contemplated" by the documents establishing the U.S. Government's relationship with ICANN.<sup>365</sup> But without regard to the merits of <sup>361</sup> ICANN Bylaws, supra note 2, Article XI, § 2.1(j) ("The advice of the Governmental Advisory Committee on public policy matters shall be duly taken into account, both in the formulation and adoption of policies.").

---

<sup>362</sup> Id.

<sup>363</sup> V. Cerf Witness Statement, ¶ 30. In any event, the GAC's concerns were consistent with the ICANN Board's concerns regarding ICM's ability to satisfy the sponsorship criteria.

<sup>364</sup> See, e.g., Milton Mueller, Triple X, Internet Content Regulation and the ICANN Regime, available at www.internetgovernance.org/pdf/new-xxx-contract.pdf (January 16, 2007) (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AM. On April 5, 2005, Dr. Mueller co-authored a concept paper proposing structural reforms to address a perception of "unilateralism by the US Government in its control of the DNS root and its supervision of ICANN." Milton Mueller & Hans Klein, What to Do About ICANN: A Proposal for Structural Reform, Concept Paper by the Internet Governance Project, at p. 1, available at <http://internetgovernance.org/pdf/igp-icannreform.pdf> (Apr. 5, 2005) (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AN.

<sup>365</sup> ICM Memorial, Expert Report of Dr. Milton Mueller at p. 39.

Dr. Mueller's views about U.S. Government involvement with ICANN, the GAC does not exercise any "oversight" over ICANN but rather acts in an advisory role. When the U.S. Government requested additional time to allow opinions to be voiced about the .XXX application – the event Dr. Mueller describes as having reversed "the fate" of .XXX – the Board undoubtedly was justified in taking those opinions into consideration, just as the GAC had requested in a prior communication.<sup>366</sup>

240. The notion that the ICANN Board actually violated its Bylaws or Articles by taking those views into consideration is illogical. The fact that the Board did not follow the process that Dr. Mueller (and ICM) wish were required under the Bylaws is not relevant in this proceeding. Further, ICM has presented no facts (or legal argument) that would support its view that the Board violated its Bylaws or Articles by listening to and considering the GAC's position on the .XXX sTLD application.

241. Dr. Mueller has acknowledged that the GAC has only an advisory role under the Bylaws.<sup>367</sup> Nevertheless, in his report, he reaches the contradictory conclusion that the ICANN Board's rejection of ICM's application "impl[ies] that the Board must defer indiscriminately to any claim of public policy concerns raised by any member of the GAC at any time."<sup>368</sup> He now takes issue even with the GAC's limited advisory role as it relates to matters of public policy

---

<sup>366</sup> See id. at p. 42. Contrary to ICM's assertion, Suzanne Sene, the representative from the U.S. Department of Commerce on the GAC, did not "tr[y] to prevent GAC from expressing negative views about .xxx" as Dr. Mueller now claims. See ICM Memorial, Expert Report of Dr. Milton Mueller at p. 41. While it is true that Ms. Sene believed "the matter could have been raised before at Plenary or Working group level," she did not try to stop other GAC representatives from expressing their views. More importantly, the minutes of the same meeting make clear that "[t]he Chair [of the GAC] confirmed that, having consulted the ICANN Legal Counsel, GAC could still advise ICANN about the .xxx proposal, should it decide to do so." Minutes of GAC Meeting XXII, held in Luxembourg from July 11-12, 2005, dated November 23, 2005, Cl. Ex. 139.

<sup>367</sup> ICM Memorial, Expert Report of Dr. Milton Mueller at p. 26 ("[T]he GAC is institutionalized as simply a committee that advises the Board of Directors."); Milton Mueller & Hans Klein, What to Do About ICANN: A Proposal for Structural Reform, Concept Paper by the Internet Governance Project, at p. 1, available at <http://internetgovernance.org/pdf/igp-icannreform.pdf> (Apr. 5, 2005) (last visited May 5, 2009) (expressing "[d]issatisfaction" that the GAC "ha[s] only advisory powers"), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AN.

<sup>368</sup> ICM Memorial, Expert Report of Dr. Milton Mueller at p. 50.

because “governments do not speak with one voice on public policy.”<sup>369</sup> When many governments actually did agree on policy concerns raised by the .XXX proposal, Dr. Mueller could only surmise that “something is terribly wrong with governments – with governments as governments – when Brazil, France and the Bush administration agree on something this silly and arbitrary.”<sup>370</sup> At odds with his fear of “unilateralism by the US Government,”<sup>371</sup> he seems not willing to consider that other governments should be heard, believing that all policy matters should instead be handled by the GNSO.<sup>372</sup>

242. The bottom line, however, is that Dr. Mueller’s preferred processes for ICANN, including his preference that ICANN completely ignore the views expressed by governments, are not at issue in this proceeding because they are inconsistent with the processes actually required by ICANN’s Bylaws.

---

<sup>369</sup> ICM Memorial, Expert Report of Dr. Milton Mueller at p. 26.

<sup>370</sup> Milton Mueller, Milton Mueller on governmental flap over .xxx domains, POLITECH: Politics & Tech. Blog, available at <http://www.politechbot.com/2005/08/16/milton-mueller-on/> (August 16, 2005) (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AO.

<sup>371</sup> Milton Mueller & Hans Klein, What to Do About ICANN: A Proposal for Structural Reform, Concept Paper by the Internet Governance Project, at p. 1, available at <http://internetgovernance.org/pdf/igp-icannreform.pdf> (Apr. 5, 2005) (last visited date), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AN.

<sup>372</sup> ICM Memorial, Expert Report of Dr. Milton Mueller at p. 25. In an article drafted for the Internet Governance Project (“IGP”) (an academic consortium composed of many members from the Syracuse University of Information Studies where Dr. Mueller is employed, see IGP, Scientific Committee/Organizational Information, available at <http://www.internetgovernance.org/people.html> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AP), Dr. Mueller did not appear to support .XXX based on ICM’s ability to satisfy the sponsorship criteria actually under consideration, but instead on his opinion that, “[i]f there are problems here, they are not problems with the .xxx gTLD application. They are problems inherent in ICANN’s institutional structure.” Milton Mueller, Triple X, Internet Content Regulation and the ICANN Regime, available at www.internetgovernance.org/pdf/new-xxx-contract.pdf (January 16, 2007) (emphasis added) (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AM. Thus, his views with respect to ICM’s .XXX sTLD application, as expressed prior to these proceedings, had nothing to do with the claims ICM has asserted. Instead, Dr. Mueller believes the entire ICANN structure needs to be changed, changes that the ICANN community has thus far rejected. For example, Dr. Mueller has argued that the GAC should be abolished. See ICM Memorial, Expert Report of Dr. Milton Mueller at p. 22-23; Milton Mueller & Hans Klein, What to Do About ICANN: A Proposal for Structural Reform, Concept Paper by the Internet Governance Project, at p. 1, available at <http://internetgovernance.org/pdf/igp-icannreform.pdf> (Apr. 5, 2005) (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AN.

243. Notwithstanding Dr. Mueller's views, ICM understood that it was necessary for ICANN to include the GAC and other interested parties in the process.<sup>373</sup> ICM – recognizing, in its own words, the “need for all stakeholders to feel that they have had an adequate and meaningful opportunity to express their views,” and in order to “preserve the integrity of the ICANN process” – even requested, on August 15, 2005, that the ICANN Board defer a vote on the pending draft registry agreement in order to allow ICM to respond to the GAC's concerns (and the ICANN Board agreed to do so).<sup>374</sup> ICM knew that it was critical to try to address the GAC's concerns because ICM's application was very much at risk.

244. ICM blames the Bush Administration for expressing opinions about the .XXX application and for prompting the GAC to come forward with concerns.<sup>375</sup> ICM complains that the U.S. Government requested that the ICANN Board “provide a proper process and adequate additional time for concerns to be voiced and addressed before any additional action takes place.”<sup>376</sup> But ICM does not explain why ICANN should have ignored the fact that governments (including the U.S. government) wanted more of a “process” in the evaluation of sTLDs. Moreover, even if the U.S. Government did change its mind, as ICM alleges, it could not possibly be improper for ICANN to consider the government's new views (and certainly could not constitute a violation of ICANN's Bylaws or Articles of Incorporation).<sup>377</sup> Even ICM recognizes that ICANN could not and should not have simply “ignore[d] the demands of the U.S.

---

<sup>373</sup> Letter from Stuart Lawley, ICM, to Paul Twomey, ICANN, August 15, 2005, available at <http://www.icann.org/correspondence/lawley-to-twomey-15aug05.pdf> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit S.

<sup>374</sup> Id. Notably, if ICM truly believed that the Board already had approved the sTLD in June 2005, this would have been a good opportunity for ICM to say so. Instead, ICM asked for extra time to address the concerns that surfaced immediately after the Board's June 2005 vote. Special Meeting of the Board, Preliminary Report, August 16, 2005, available at <http://www.icann.org/minutes/resolutions-16aug05.htm> (last visited date) (“XXX was deferred in response to requests from the applicant ICM, as well as the ICANN Government Advisory Committee Chairman's and the US Department of Commerce's request to allow for additional time for comments by interested parties.”), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AQ.

<sup>375</sup> ICM Memorial, ¶¶ 206-12.

<sup>376</sup> Id. at ¶ 207.

<sup>377</sup> See ICM Memorial ¶ 208.

government.”<sup>378</sup> And ICM never explains how listening to the views of the U.S. Government possibly could amount to a violation of ICANN’s Bylaws or Articles.

b. Concerns Raised During ICANN’s September 15, 2005 Board Meeting.

245. By the time of the Board’s September 2005 meeting, although there remained unresolved concerns dealing with, among other things, sponsorship and content issues relating to child pornography, ICM’s counsel Ms. Burr requested that the Board put the existing draft of the proposed .XXX sTLD registry agreement to a vote of the Board.<sup>379</sup> At the September 15, 2005 meeting, the Board agreed to vote on ICM’s application, doing so after a “lengthy discussion” regarding the sponsorship criteria, the application and additional supplemental materials, and the specific terms of ICM’s proposed registry agreement.<sup>380</sup> The primary concern of many Board members was that the proposed registry agreement did not match up to the promises made in ICM’s application. The Board therefore did not approve the contract, but instead voted, 11-0, to authorize further negotiations:

Resolved (05.75), that the ICANN President and General Counsel are directed to discuss possible additional contractual provisions or modifications for inclusion in the .XXX Registry Agreement, to ensure that there are effective provisions requiring development and implementation of policies consistent with the principles in the ICM application. Following such additional discussions, the President and General Counsel are requested to return to the board for additional approval, disapproval or advice.<sup>381</sup>

246. Although ICM now claims that ICANN “made no mention of any concern that the application had not met the sponsorship or other RFP criteria” in its September 15, 2005 resolution,<sup>382</sup> the evidence is to the contrary. The resolution reflected the concerns expressed

---

<sup>378</sup> ICM Memorial ¶ 211.

<sup>379</sup> See Letter from Stuart Lawley, ICM, to Vinton Cerf, ICANN, September 15, 2005, attached as Confidential Exhibit I to ICANN’s First Brief: Hours before the September 15, 2005 Board Meeting, ICM “request[ed] that the ICANN Board take the next step and approve the registry agreement without further delay.” See also P. Twomey Witness Statement, ¶ 43.

<sup>380</sup> See ICANN Minutes, Special Meeting of the Board, September 15, 2005, Cl. Ex. 119 (“after a lengthy discussion involving nearly all of the directors regarding the sponsorship criteria....”).

<sup>381</sup> Id.

<sup>382</sup> ICM Memorial ¶ 217.

during the September 15 Board meeting, namely “the lengthy discussion involving nearly all of the directors regarding the sponsorship issue.”<sup>383</sup> Moreover, as the resolution makes clear, contract language had to be negotiated that satisfied the Board’s concerns regarding sponsorship for “development and implementation of policies [for .XXX]” (and other principles in the ICM application”) before ICM’s sTLD .XXX application could be approved.

c. At The Vancouver Meeting, ICM Made A Presentation To The GAC Promising Public Interest Benefits Of The Proposed .XXX sTLD.

247. The GAC and ICANN met in Vancouver, Canada, on November 29, 2005, to discuss Mr. Tarmizi’s July 2005 statement that the “GAC could still advise ICANN about the .XXX proposal, should it decide to do so. However, no member [of the GAC] ha[d] yet raised this as an issue for formal comments to be given to ICANN in the Communiqué.”<sup>384</sup> The day before the Vancouver meeting, ICANN posted on its website a status report on the sTLD evaluation process.<sup>385</sup> With respect to ICM’s proposal for the .XXX sTLD, the status report noted that “[t]he sponsorship/community value team found that the relevant selection criteria had not been met,” and the report cited: (1) “[t]he extreme variability in definitions of what constitutes the [adult] content which defines this community,” (2) uncertainty as to the interests of the proposed community, and (3) a lack of support among users and members of the community, including those outside North America.<sup>386</sup>

248. At the conclusion of the November 29, 2005 meeting between the GAC and ICANN, ICM made a presentation to the GAC in which ICM promised “a range of public interest benefits” in support of its .XXX sTLD application.<sup>387</sup>

---

<sup>383</sup> See ICANN Minutes, Special Meeting of the Board, September 15, 2005, Cl. Ex. 119 (“after a lengthy discussion involving nearly all of the directors regarding the sponsorship criteria....”).

<sup>384</sup> Minutes of GAC Meeting 22, held in Luxembourg from July 11-12, 2005, dated November 23, 2005, Cl. Ex. 139).

<sup>385</sup> See Status Report on the sTLD Evaluation Process, November 28, 2005, available at <http://icann.org/tlds/stld-apps-19mar04/stld-status-report.pdf> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AR.

<sup>386</sup> Id.

<sup>387</sup> GAC Communiqué – Wellington, New Zealand, March 28, 2006, Cl. Ex. 181 (“In its application, supporting materials and presentation to the GAC in November 2005, ICM Registry promised a range of

249. After the meeting, the GAC requested from the ICANN Board an explanation of the process used in the sTLD round of applications and in particular the .XXX application. On February 11, 2006, Dr. Twomey wrote to Mr. Tarmizi in response to this request. Dr. Twomey explained the difference between the “proof of concept” round of applications in 2000 and the sTLD round of applications and emphasized that the passing over of ICM and other applicants in favor of the seven gTLDs chosen in the “proof of concept” round did not constitute a permanent rejection of those TLDs by the ICANN Board.<sup>388</sup> The letter also underscored that, notwithstanding the decision to proceed to contract negotiations with any applicant, “it is the ICANN Board that has the authority to decide, upon the conclusion of technical and commercial negotiations, whether or not to approve the creation of a new sTLD.”<sup>389</sup>

d. Concerns Raised In The Wellington Communiqué.

250. As the time approached for the ICANN Board’s March 31, 2006 meeting in Wellington, New Zealand, several GAC member countries had raised concerns regarding the public policy issues implicated by the .XXX sTLD application. Sweden, Brazil, the European Commission, and the United States were among those member countries raising concerns.<sup>390</sup>

251. After extensive meetings and discussions among 33 members over the course of several days, the GAC issued its “Wellington Communiqué” on March 28, 2006, stating the “emphatic[] oppos[ition]” of several of its members to the .XXX sTLD from a public policy public interest benefits as part of its bid to operate the .xxx domain.”); See also GAC Meeting Agenda, Vancouver, Canada, November 27 to December 1, 2005, available at http://old.gac.icann.org/web/meetings/mtg23/VANCOUVER\_AGENDA.doc (Presentation of ICM (.xxx) Registry on November 29, 2005) (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AS.

---

(continued...)

<sup>388</sup> Letter from Paul Twomey, ICANN, to Mohamed Sharil Tarmizi, GAC Chairman, May 4, 2006, Cl. Ex. 188.

<sup>389</sup> Id.

<sup>390</sup> See, e.g., Letter from Marcelo de Carvalho Lopes to Mohamed Sharil Tarmizi, September 6, 2005, Cl. Ex. 167; see also Letter from Peter Zangl to Vinton Cerf, September 16, 2005, Cl. Ex. 172; Letter from Jonas Bjelfvenstam to Paul Twomey, November 23, 2005, Cl. Ex. 168; Letter from Michael D. Gallagher to Vinton Cerf, August 11, 2005, Cl. Ex. 162.

perspective.<sup>391</sup> Those concerns included: (1) “appropriate measures to restrict access to illegal and offensive content,” (2) “the development of tools and programs to protect vulnerable members of the community,” (3) the means to “[m]aintain accurate details of registrants and assist law enforcement agencies to identify and contact the owners of particular websites,” and (4) “[a]ct[ions] to ensure the protection of intellectual property and trademark rights, personal names, country names, names of historical, cultural and religious significance and names of geographic identifiers . . . .”<sup>392</sup>

252. In addition, some countries were concerned that, because the .XXX application would not require all pornography to be located within the .XXX domain, a new .XXX sTLD would simply result in the expansion of the number of domain names that involved pornography.<sup>393</sup> Indeed, ICM had confirmed that it could not require migration of pornography sites from .com and other TLDs to .XXX, which created a concern that a new TLD devoted exclusively to pornographic sites would do little more than expand the number of pornography websites available on the Internet without imposing any restrictions on the sites that were maintained at .com and other TLDs.

253. The GAC also requested a written explanation from the Board on how the .XXX sTLD application could satisfy the sponsored community and public interest criteria, noting that ICM’s proposed draft registry agreement had not, to date, addressed the “range of public interest benefits” that had been promised in its application and November 29, 2005 presentation to the GAC.<sup>394</sup>

254. On May 4, 2006, Dr. Twomey wrote again to Mr. Tarmizi in response to the GAC’s request in the Wellington Communiqué for information about the Board’s decision to proceed with several sTLD applications, notwithstanding negative reports from the independent

---

<sup>391</sup> GAC Communiqué – Wellington, New Zealand, March 28, 2006, Cl. Ex. 181.

<sup>392</sup> Id.

<sup>393</sup> P. Twomey Witness Statement, ¶ 50.

<sup>394</sup> GAC Communiqué – Wellington, New Zealand, March 28, 2006, Cl. Ex. 181.

evaluation teams. As the letter explained, “the Board decision as to the .XXX application [wa]s still pending.”

The decision by the ICANN Board during its June 1, 2005 Special Board Meeting reviewed the criteria against the materials supplied and the results of the independent evaluations. After additional consultation with ICM, the board voted to authorize staff to enter into contractual negotiations without prejudicing the Board’s right to evaluate the resulting contract and to decide whether it meets all of the criteria before the Board including public policy advice such as might be offered by the GAC. The final conclusion on the Board’s decision to accept or reject the .XXX application has not been made and will not be made until such time as the Board either approves or rejects the registry agreement relating to the .XXX application. In fact, it is important to note that the Board has reviewed previous proposed agreements with ICM for the .XXX registry and has expressed concerns regarding the compliance structures established in those drafts.<sup>395</sup>

255. Dr. Twomey also explained that the Board allowed those applicants (such as ICM) that the Evaluation Panel had not viewed as having satisfied the sponsorship criteria to present additional supporting documentation directly to the Board for review and consideration. Although in the case of .XXX, as well as others, “the additional materials provided sufficient clarification to proceed with contractual discussions, the Board still expressed concerns about whether the applicant met all of the criteria, but took the view that such concerns could possibly be addressed by contractual obligations to be stated in a registry agreement.”<sup>396</sup>

256. In revising its proposed registry agreement to address the GAC’s concerns regarding the “range of public interest benefits” that had been promised in its application and presentation, as ICM knew it must, ICM took the position that it would install “appropriate measures to restrict access to illegal and offensive content,” including monitoring such content globally.<sup>397</sup> This was immediately controversial among many ICANN Board members because complaints about ICM’s “monitoring” would inevitably be sent to ICANN, which is neither

---

<sup>395</sup> Letter from Paul Twomey, ICANN, to Mohamed Sharil Tarmizi, GAC Chairman, May 4, 2006, Cl. Ex. 188 (emphasis added).

<sup>396</sup> Id.

<sup>397</sup> GAC Communiqué – Wellington, New Zealand, March 28, 2006, Cl. Ex. 181; see also V. Cerf Witness Statement, ¶ 37.

equipped nor authorized to monitor (much less resolve) “content-based” objections to Internet sites.<sup>398</sup>

257. ICM did not do anything to address the sponsorship concerns raised in the Wellington Communiqué or the monitoring issues created by ICM in the draft registry agreement. Instead, ICM insisted that the Board vote on the draft agreement as it existed at that time without making further changes to accommodate the concerns that had been expressed.<sup>399</sup>

e. Concerns Raised During The May 10, 2006 And February 12, 2007 Board Meetings.

258. During the ICANN May 10, 2006 Board meeting, the Board conducted a lengthy discussion concerning the sponsorship issue for the .XXX sTLD and then voted 9-5 against ICM’s then-current draft of the proposed .XXX sTLD registry agreement.<sup>400</sup>

259. By this time, some Board members had concluded that ICM’s registry agreement would not be able to yield the results that ICM had predicted and that the Board had requested. For instance, Board member Hagen Hultzsch voted against the proposed agreement because “the negotiations didn’t produce the required and expected results.”<sup>401</sup> Board member Alejandro Pisanty asserted that he did not believe “the agreement as stated [had] built-in structural guarantees that the conditions and representations made by ICM can be fulfilled. Many of them are not so because of any fault of ICM itself, but because of the complexities of developing them further in an international, multilingual, and multicultural environment.”<sup>402</sup> Dr. Cerf commented

---

<sup>398</sup> V. Cerf Witness Statement, ¶ 37; see also ICANN Meeting Minutes for Special Meeting of the Board, April 18, 2006, Cl. Ex. 186 (The ICANN Board discussed their concerns about the manner in which ICM guaranteed compliance by the registry operator and whether the right level of policy enforcement processes were in place within the proposed agreement to respond to a community as complex as the adult entertainment community. Concerns were also expressed about how to implement the proposed compliance process and whether ICANN was structured to respond to the proposed process.).

<sup>399</sup> ICANN Minutes, Special Meeting of the Board, April 18, 2006, Cl. Ex. 186 (Dr. Cerf noting “the desire of ICM to have an up or down vote” at the May 10, 2006 meeting).

<sup>400</sup> ICANN Minutes, Special Meeting of the Board, May 10, 2006, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/minutes/minutes-10may06.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit T.

<sup>401</sup> Id.

<sup>402</sup> Id.

that he was voting against the agreement because he “no longer believe[d] it’s possible for ICM to achieve the conditions and recommendations that the GAC has placed before [the Board] as a matter of public policy and that the terms of the contract do not assure any of those – the ability of ICM to provide the protections that are requested.”<sup>403</sup> And Board member Vanda Scartezini, who had voted in favor of authorizing staff to enter contract negotiations with ICM in June 2005, now voted against the proposed agreement because “the contract language did not come with the guarantee that [she had] expected.”<sup>404</sup>

260. ICM criticizes these views of individual members of the Board, but there is no doubt that the members took their responsibilities seriously and analyzed the issues with care. And more importantly, whether or not the Board members “got it right” is irrelevant for purposes of determining whether the Board violated its Bylaws or Articles in rejecting ICM’s application.

261. Moreover, prominent members of the online adult entertainment industry, including Larry Flynt Publications and Wicked Pictures, had begun to voice opposition to ICM’s application, and tension between these firms and IFFOR, ICM’s proposed Sponsoring Organization, was growing.<sup>405</sup> This growing opposition led many Board members to conclude that ICM could not satisfy the sponsorship criteria and in fact did not even have a “community” that supported the application, which was one of the original concerns of the Evaluation Panel two years earlier.<sup>406</sup>

---

<sup>403</sup> Id.

<sup>404</sup> Id.

<sup>405</sup> See Letter from Larry Flynt to ICANN Board, April 30, 2006, available at <http://www.icann.org/correspondence/flynt-to-board-30apr06.jpg> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AT; see also Letter from Steve Orenstein, Wicked Pictures, to ICANN, April 10, 2006, available at <http://www.icann.org/correspondence/orenstein-to-board-10apr06.jpg> (last visited May 5, 2009) (expressing Wicked Pictures’ “profound opposition to the establishment of a .XXX” sTLD), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AU; see also Letter from Johan Gillborg, Private Media Group, to ICANN, March 22, 2006, available at <http://www.icann.org/correspondence/gillborg-to-board-22mar06.pdf> (last visited May 5, 2009) (expressing Private Media Group’s opposition to the creation of the .XXX sTLD and its belief that there is no compelling reason to establish such TLD), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AV.

<sup>406</sup> P. Twomey Witness Statement, ¶ 56.

262. Indeed, ICM's application unnaturally described the Sponsored TLD Community only using the future tense. Unlike with the other sTLD applicants, it was clear that a community did not yet exist separate and apart from the proposed .XXX sTLD itself. Instead, ICM asserted that the sponsoring community would emerge once the .XXX sTLD was approved, but this circular approach to the sponsorship requirement was fundamentally at odds with the RFP.<sup>407</sup>

263. The Board's May 10, 2006 vote rejected ICM's then-current draft of the proposed .XXX sTLD registry agreement. Nonetheless, the Board did not deny ICM's application in its entirety at that time, but instead provided ICM yet another opportunity to attempt to revise the agreement to conform to the RFP specifications. Notably, the Board's decision to allow ICM to continue to work the problem is directly at odds with ICM's position that the Board had decided "for political reasons" to reject ICM's application; if so, it would have been much easier for the Board to reject ICM's application in its entirety in 2006. And giving ICM another opportunity obviously does not constitute a violation of ICANN's Bylaws.

264. Throughout the rest of 2006, ICANN staff and ICM worked on additional revisions to the draft registry agreement in an attempt to address the concerns regarding the sponsorship requirements, among others. On January 5, 2007, a revised agreement was posted for public comment.

265. After the agreement was posted, ICANN staff and ICM negotiated additional clarifying language to Appendix S of the revised agreement, which was critical to the sponsorship analysis.<sup>408</sup> Appendix S, inter alia, identified the purpose for which .XXX would be delegated and the community to be served by its delegation, a description of the sTLD community, and relevant information regarding how the .XXX Registry would be operated. Appendix S was thereafter posted for public comment.

---

<sup>407</sup> Compare New sTLD application, Part A. Explanatory Notes – Sponsorship Information – Definition of Sponsored TLD Community, December 15, 2003, Cl. Ex. 45 ("Applicants must demonstrate that the Sponsored TLD Community is precisely defined, so it can readily be determined which persons or entities make up that community.") with New sTLD RFP application, .XXX, Part B. Application Form, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/tlds/stld-apps-19mar04/xxx.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009) (defining the .XXX Sponsored TLD Community as self-selecting and "intended primarily to serve the needs of the global online adult-entertainment community"), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit O.

<sup>408</sup> ICM argues incorrectly that Appendix S provided only "slight revisions." See ICM Memorial ¶ 257. In fact, Appendix S provided key clarifying language to the registry agreement, particularly with respect to sponsorship issues.

266. After the public comment period closed, the Board's next meeting was held on February 12, 2007. During this meeting, the Board reviewed the recently posted public comments on the revised agreement, including Appendix S. The vast majority of comments were opposed to the introduction of the .XXX sTLD, prompting many Board members to reiterate the concern that ICM's proposed .XXX sTLD lacked the broad-based support of the community ICM intended to represent. Indeed, 77% of the comments posted to the public forum were opposed to ICM's .XXX sTLD.<sup>409</sup> Only 16% expressed support.<sup>410</sup>

267. Despite such evidence of splintering community support, the Board did not deny ICM's application in February 2007. Instead, the Board unanimously approved a resolution directing ICANN staff to further consult with ICM in an effort to facilitate the Board's upcoming decision of whether the sponsorship criteria could be met for the creation of a new .XXX sTLD.<sup>411</sup>

f. ICM Failed To Address The Board's Concerns, As Made Clear In The Board's March 30, 2007 Denial Of The Proposed .XXX sTLD.

268. On March 30, 2007, the Board voted 9-5 (with one abstention and one absent Board member) to reject ICM's revised agreement and deny ICM's application for the .XXX sTLD. This vote came after extensive review, analysis, and debate among ICANN Board members, and followed a public presentation and debate during the March 29, 2007 ICANN

---

<sup>409</sup> ICANN Minutes, Special Meeting of the Board, February 12, 2007, Cl. Ex. 199.

<sup>410</sup> Id.

<sup>411</sup> Id. (The Board passed a Resolution directing "ICANN staff [to] consult with ICM and provide further information to the Board prior to its next meeting, so as to inform a decision by the Board about whether sponsorship criteria is met for the creation of a new .XXX sTLD.").

Public Forum among representatives of the adult entertainment industry who opposed the application and those who were in favor.<sup>412</sup>

269. The primary factors that influenced the nine members who voted against ICM’s application can be summarized in five respects.

270. First, the RFP required applicants to “demonstrate that the Sponsored TLD Community is: Precisely defined, so it can readily be determined which persons or entities make up that community....”<sup>413</sup> Several Board members determined that ICM could not satisfy this criterion, despite having had ample opportunity to do so throughout the contract negotiations. Ultimately, ICM’s proposed sponsored community definitions were circularly defined to include only those members of the online adult entertainment industry who supported the creation of the .XXX sTLD, and thus by definition excluded all online adult entertainment industry members who opposed ICM’s application. Such self-selection and extreme subjectivity regarding what constituted the content that defined the .XXX community made it nearly impossible to determine which persons or services would be in or out of the community.<sup>414</sup> Moreover, the definition of “adult entertainment” varies considerably from region to region and culture to culture, depending on one’s moral, religious, national, or cultural perspective, such that there was not a global definition that could be applied to the .XXX sTLD community.

271. ICM was first apprised of this concern by the Evaluation Panel in its rejection of ICM’s .XXX application on August 27, 2004.<sup>415</sup> Despite its efforts, ICM was unable to cure this critical defect. Several Board members, in adhering to the RFP criteria – obviously not a

---

<sup>412</sup> ICANN Meetings in Lisbon, Portugal, Transcript of ICANN Public Forum, March 29, 2007, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/meetings/lisbon/transcript-public-forum-29mar07.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AW; See also Meeting of the Board, Transcript, March 30, 2007, Cl. Ex. 201.

<sup>413</sup> New sTLD application, December 15, 2003, Part A. Explanatory Notes – Sponsorship Information – Definition of Sponsored TLD Community, Cl. Ex. 45.

<sup>414</sup> ICM admits as much in its Memorial: “Since membership in the [.XXX] community would be voluntary, registrants would only become members after affirmatively identifying themselves as responsible providers of adult content....” ICM Memorial ¶ 148.

<sup>415</sup> ICANN, New sTLD applications, Appendix D: Evaluation Reports, August 27, 2004, p. 95, Cl. Ex. 110.

violation of ICANN’s Bylaws or Articles – ultimately voted against ICM’s application because ICM failed to satisfy this fundamental sponsorship requirement.<sup>416</sup> In short, without a precisely defined Sponsored TLD Community, the Board could not approve ICM’s sTLD application.

272. Second, the RFP required that the Sponsored TLD Community be “[c]omprised of persons that have needs and interests in common but which are differentiated from those of the general global Internet community.”<sup>417</sup> While on its face ICM’s sponsored community appeared to have common needs and interests, some Board members deemed that the revised agreement posted in 2007 failed to meet this portion of the RFP specification because of its selective membership. The sponsored community as defined by ICM was simply a subset of all online adult entertainment providers, and ICM never provided any documentation or information that the excluded providers had separate needs or interests from the sponsored community it sought to represent. Online adult entertainment providers, whether they seek the type of self-regulation proffered by ICM or not, all face issues of privacy, free expression and child protection, among others. Thus, as contract negotiations progressed, it became increasingly evident that ICM was simply proposing an unsponsored TLD for adult entertainment – a uTLD, disguised as an sTLD, just as ICM had proposed in 2000.

273. Third, the RFP required ICM to “demonstrate broad-based support from the community it is intended to represent.”<sup>418</sup> The RFP was phrased in the present tense, such that to satisfy the RFP criteria, ICM had to show “evidence of broad-based support from the Sponsored TLD Community for the sTLD, for the Sponsoring Organization, and for the proposed policy-formulation process,” at all times.<sup>419</sup>

274. Whatever community support ICM may have had at one time, however, had fallen apart by early 2007. As noted above, during the final public comment period from January 5,

---

<sup>416</sup> P. Twomey Witness Statement, ¶¶ 57, 63; V. Cerf Witness Statement, ¶ 38; A. Pisanty Witness Statement, ¶ 23.

<sup>417</sup> New sTLD application, December 15, 2003, Part A. Explanatory Notes – Sponsorship Information – Definition of Sponsored TLD Community, Cl. Ex. 45.

<sup>418</sup> Id. at Part A. Explanatory Notes – Sponsorship Information – Level of Support from the Community, Cl. Ex. 45.

<sup>419</sup> Id.

2007 to February 5, 2007, a vast majority of the comments posted to the public forum and sent to ICANN staff opposed ICM's .XXX sTLD. ICM was not able to provide evidence that the larger online adult entertainment provider community supported the .XXX sTLD, ICM, or the policy-formation process. Even those who had initially supported the sTLD began to change their minds.

275. For example, support from major child advocacy organizations and major law enforcement organizations was absent. There was also insufficient support from the freedom of expression community, which ICM had initially hoped to include as a supporting organization. Indeed, the free expression advocates came out against the .XXX sTLD out of fear that it would provide a mechanism either to over-define the realm of adult entertainment and/or to force all adult-related content to the .XXX sTLD.<sup>420</sup> For example, at the March 29, 2007 ICANN public forum, Ms. Diane Duke, the executive director for the Free Speech Coalition, a U.S. based trade association for the adult entertainment industry with membership worldwide, stated:

First of all, I would like to thank the ICANN board for allowing us this time to speak, and to speak of our concerns of the dot xxx sponsored top-level domain.

Let me be clear. As the only trade association for the adult entertainment industry, we represent the sponsorship community. It is our organization that sued the United States government on behalf of the industry and won in the U.S. Supreme Court.

It was our organization that ICM itself came to five years ago offering a portion of the proceeds from the sTLD in return for our support of their proposed domain.

ICM recognized us as the representative for the sponsorship community even then.

Today, we are here because the adult entertainment community believes that the views of the industry are being misrepresented on the issue of the dot xxx sponsored top-level domain.

---

<sup>420</sup> See, e.g., Comments at <http://forum.icann.org/lists/xxx-icm-agreement/msg00526.html> (last visited May 5, 2009) (.XXX sTLD poses serious free speech challenges), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AX; <http://forum.icann.org/lists/xxx-icm-agreement/msg00453.html> (last visited May 5, 2009) (same), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AY; <http://forum.icann.org/lists/xxx-icm-agreement/msg00609.html> (last visited May 5, 2009) (Free Speech Coalition opposes creation of .XXX sTLD), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AZ.

Let me be clear. The adult entertainment industry, the sponsorship community, not only does not support ICM's proposal but it actively opposes the creation of a dot xxx top-level domain.

Five years ago when ICM approached the free speech coalition with a proposal that could increase our income by tenfold, we turned down that, recognizing the negative ramification that dot xxx [TLD] would have for the industry.

Today industry leaders as well as small webmasters have joined together not only to publicly oppose the creation of a dot xxx TLD but also to fund our trip to this conference, ensuring that their opposition is clearly communicated to the people who will be making this critical decision.

ICM will tell you that it already has met the obligation of sponsorship. Through interest received early in the process before some of the details and dangers had been made apparent and when financial wind falls were promised to many, ICM claimed to have industry support.

Support no longer exists.<sup>421</sup>

276. While there was some (mixed) support for a .XXX sTLD from North American representatives of the adult industry, there did not appear to be much, if any, support from the Internet community (adult entertainment or otherwise) outside of the United States. ICM admits that community support outside of North America was limited to “members from the United Kingdom, Australia, Netherland Antilles, Spain and the Caribbean.”<sup>422</sup> This hardly constitutes “broad-based support” as required by the RFP.<sup>423</sup>

277. With inadequate evidence that the relevant community (even assuming it was clearly defined, which it was not) actually sought, much less supported, the services that ICM

---

<sup>421</sup> ICANN Meetings in Lisbon, Portugal, Transcript of ICANN Public Forum, March 29, 2007, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/meetings/lisbon/transcript-public-forum-29mar07.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AW.

<sup>422</sup> Confidential Exhibit – Formal Response to ICANN’s Independent Evaluation Report on .XXX sTLD, from Stuart Lawley, ICM, to Kurt Pritz, ICANN, October 9, 2004, attached to ICANN’s Opening Brief as Confidential Exhibit F; See also ICANN, New sTLD applications, Appendix D: Evaluation Reports, August 27, 2004, p. 95, Cl. Ex. 110 (“There was considerable support from North American representatives of the adult industry. However, virtual[ly] no support was available from the rest of the world, or from users or other members of this community.”).

<sup>423</sup> New sTLD application, December 15, 2003, Part A. Explanatory Notes – Sponsorship Information – Level of Support from the Community, Cl. Ex. 45.

proposed to offer, the Board plainly was justified in denying ICM's application for failure to satisfy the RFP sponsorship selection criteria. And, with due apologies to the Panel for the repetition of the point, there truly is no basis for a finding that the Board violated its Bylaws or Articles in rejecting the .XXX application after finding that there was no "community" that supported the sponsored TLD.

278. Fourth, ICM could not demonstrate that it was adding new and valuable space to the Internet name space, as required by the RFP. To the extent that online adult service providers chose not to register within the .XXX sTLD (and the opposition to the sTLD made clear that there would be many), the .XXX sTLD would represent merely a duplicate space on the Internet. In fact, the existence of industry opposition to the .XXX sTLD demonstrated that the needs of online adult entertainment industry members were met via existing TLDs without any need for a new sTLD. Further, the increasing governmental opposition suggested that there might be massive blocking of the .XXX sTLD by individual nations, which further demonstrated a lack of broad geographic scope as the RFP required.<sup>424</sup>

279. Fifth and finally, in the February 2007 revised draft agreement, ICM undertook certain commitments regarding policy development and stakeholder protection, including the delegation of issues of "Best Business Practices." Specifically, ICM provided that it will establish "policy development procedures and mechanisms" that include "sufficient opportunity for public comment and input from concerned and affected groups," including procedures that "support informed participation reflecting the functional, geographic, and cultural diversity of the responsible online adult entertainment community and the broader Internet stakeholders at all levels of policy development and decision making."<sup>425</sup> As part of its commitment to resolve global concerns, ICM and its supporting organization, IFFOR, proposed to "proactively reach out to governments and international organizations to provide information about IFFOR’s activities and solicit input and participation.”<sup>426</sup>

---

<sup>424</sup> New sTLD application, December 15, 2003, Part A. Explanatory Notes – Community Value – Enrichment of Broad Global Communities, Cl. Ex. 45.

<sup>425</sup> ICM Registry LLC, Appendix S, February 8, 2007, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/tlds/agreements/xxx/appendix-S-rev-16feb07.pdf> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit BA.

280. Such measures diluted the possibility that the policies would be “primarily in the interests of the Sponsored TLD Community,” as required by the sponsorship selection criteria, because the measures specifically obligated ICM to seek input from multiple governments and organizations on local concerns, which added yet another non-community voice to the policy formulation aspect. And with the inclusion of multiple governments in the policy-making process, ICM ran the specific risk of needing to tailor its policies to conform to the varying legal requirements of the countries, some of which may run counter to the interests of the sponsored community. Moreover, the process by which ICM proposed to address “geography and cultural diversity” and seek foreign input was not clearly defined in the revised registry agreement, which abrogated the RFP requirement for clear definition of the policy-setting mechanisms.<sup>427</sup>

281. In short, despite the good-faith efforts of both ICANN and ICM over a lengthy period of time, the majority of the Board determined that ICM could not satisfy, among other things, the sponsorship requirements of the RFP. The sTLD was controversial worldwide, and no consensus had emerged as to how ICM could address the concerns of the many who had questioned the value of the sTLD. ICANN gave ICM numerous opportunities to demonstrate that the .XXX sTLD could satisfy the criteria set forth in the RFP, but in the end, the majority of the Board was not satisfied that the problems had been adequately addressed. Reasonable people might disagree – including the five members of ICANN’s Board who voted in favor of ICM’s application at the March 2007 Board meeting – but that disagreement does not even approach a violation of a Bylaw or Article of Incorporation. Instead, ICM simply challenges the ultimate outcome, but disagreement with a Board vote does not translate into a “lack of transparency” or “unequal treatment.” It simply means ICM and a majority of the ICANN Board disagreed – nothing more complicated or nefarious than that.

---

<sup>426</sup> Id.

<sup>427</sup> New sTLD application, December 15, 2003, Part A. Explanatory Notes – Sponsorship Information – Appropriateness of the Sponsoring Organization and the Policy Formulation Environment, Cl. Ex. 45.

4. ICANN Ultimately Rejected ICM’s Application Due To Its Failure To Satisfy The Sponsorship Criteria, Not Because Of “Vague And Previously Unannounced” Notions Of Public Policy.

282. ICM claims that ICANN ultimately rejected ICM’s application because of “vague and previously unannounced” public policy concerns and based on a “different definition of the sponsorship criteria.”<sup>428</sup> There is no question that a number of Internet stakeholders raised public policy issues with respect to the overall implications of a .XXX sTLD. There also is no question that ICANN considered the concerns of the GAC, the U.S. Department of Commerce, and the European Commission, among others. Public policy concerns may have played a role in the overall context of the debate, but those concerns were appropriately considered by the Board because it was required under the Bylaws to consider the GAC’s advice. Although the Board’s decision is entitled to substantial deference in view of ICANN’s good faith and robust debate on the issue, ICANN nevertheless has demonstrated in this Response that the Board’s decision was prudent and consistent with its obligations, including its Bylaws and Articles of Incorporation.

a. The Sponsorship Criteria Were Consistently Applied.

283. ICM claims that ICANN changed the definition of a sponsored community to require that ICM have the full support of everyone who might possibly be a community member,<sup>429</sup> and that this amounted to a “new and different definition of the sponsorship criteria.”<sup>430</sup> ICM is wrong, as detailed above in Section III.B.3: the ICANN Board carefully applied the RFP’s sponsorship criteria and ultimately determined that ICM failed to satisfy the fundamental sponsorship requirements.

284. The original RFP called for a “[e]vidence of broad-based support from the Sponsored TLD Community for the sTLD.”<sup>431</sup> ICM did not come close to satisfying this requirement. Although support for the .XXX sTLD seemed to ebb and flow, by February 2007,

---

<sup>428</sup> ICM Memorial ¶¶ 369-77.

<sup>429</sup> Id. at ¶ 375.

<sup>430</sup> Id.

<sup>431</sup> New sTLD application, December 15, 2003, Part A. Explanatory Notes – Sponsorship Information – Definition of Sponsored TLD Community, Cl. Ex. 45 (emphasis added).

77% of the comments posted on ICANN's public forum were opposed to ICM's .XXX sTLD.<sup>432</sup> Of the various commentators, 88 identified themselves as "webmasters of adult content, of whom 74% were opposed to the creation of ICM's .XXX sTLD."<sup>433</sup> Further, prominent members of the adult entertainment industry, including Larry Flynt Publications and AVN Media Network, were adamantly opposed to the creation of the .XXX sTLD.<sup>434</sup>

285. ICM argues that it had support from the proposed community because ICM received 75,000 pre-registrations for .XXX.<sup>435</sup> Out of the over 4.2 million adult content websites in operation,<sup>436</sup> this tiny number (less than 2%) hardly represents the "broad based support" required under the sponsorship criteria.

286. Further, the view of ICM's expert, Dr. Mueller, that the sponsorship criteria were somehow inconsistently applied is impossible to reconcile with the facts.<sup>437</sup> There is no doubt that the majority of the Board determined, among other things, that ICM failed to meet the baseline sponsorship criteria laid out in the original RFP. Notwithstanding Dr. Mueller's unhappiness with the "institutional structure" of ICANN, the Board consistently applied the sponsorship criteria and did not violate its Bylaws in so doing. ICM simply second-guesses the

---

<sup>432</sup> ICANN Minutes, Special Meeting of the Board, February 12, 2007, Cl. Ex. 199.

<sup>433</sup> Id.

<sup>434</sup> See, e.g., Letter from L. Flynt, Flynt Management Group, LLC, to ICANN, April 30, 2006, available at <http://www.icann.org/correspondence/flynt-to-board-30apr06.jpg> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AT; see also Letter from Steve Orenstein, Wicked Pictures, to ICANN, April 10, 2006, available at <http://www.icann.org/correspondence/orenstein-to-board-10apr06.jpg> (last visited May 5, 2009) (expressing Wicked Pictures' "profound opposition to the establishment of a .XXX" sTLD), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AU; see also Letter from Johan Gillborg, Private Media Group, to ICANN, March 22, 2006, available at <http://www.icann.org/correspondence/gillborg-to-board-22mar06.pdf> (last visited May 5, 2009) (expressing Private Media Group's opposition to the creation of the .XXX sTLD and its belief that there is no compelling reason to establish such TLD), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit AV.

<sup>435</sup> ICM Memorial ¶ 247.

<sup>436</sup> ICM's President "Mr. Lawley estimates there are four million adult websites, owned by 100,000 webmasters." Tom Pullar-Strecker, The Age, Once again, US blocks porno domain, available at <http://www.theage.com.au/articles/2006/03/28/1143441122717.html?from=rss> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit BB; see also BYU Women's Services and Resources, National Pornography Statistics, available at <http://wsr.byu.edu/content/view/2591/> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit BC.

<sup>437</sup> ICM Memorial, Expert Report of Dr. Milton Mueller § 6.3.

Board's judgment as to whether ICM's .XXX application conformed with the RFP. But even if that judgment were flawed (which it was not), there is no evidence that the Board's decision amounted to a violation of ICANN's Bylaws.

b. ICANN Ultimately Denied ICM's Application Because It Failed To Satisfy The Sponsorship Criteria.

287. The Board's rejection of ICM's proposed sTLD application on March 30, 2007 was based largely on ICM's inability to meet the sponsored community requirement, which was the key problem identified in ICM's application from the outset.<sup>438</sup> As then-ICANN Board member Ms. Rodin Johnston (who was not a member of the Board during the earlier discussions concerning ICM's application) noted:

[M]y obligation as a board member is to take a look at this application, this applicant, to look at the sponsorship criteria and the content that has been proposed, when I do that myself, I believe that I am compelled to vote no for this application.

As others have said, I don't believe that this is an appropriate sponsored community. I think it's inappropriate to allow an applicant in any sTLD to simply define out what could potentially be any people that are not in favor of a TLD, and particularly in this case where you define those that aren't in favor of this TLD that are part of the adult webmaster community as irresponsible.

288. The reasoning for additional Board members' votes to deny the .XXX sTLD are presented in Section III.B.3.f, above. As the transcripts made clear, these Board members voted to reject the .XXX sTLD because of ICM's sponsorship shortcomings.

289. Even if "public policy" issues had influenced the Board, ICM could hardly have been surprised by that. The original proposal in 2000 for .XXX had been rejected, in part, because the "controversy surrounding .XXX was great."<sup>439</sup> As events unfolded, the Board's ultimate decision was in accord with the views of ICANN's Evaluation Panel, which noted potential public policy issues in its early communications with ICM. For example, the Evaluation Panel asked ICM to explain how it would deal with “various culturally-based definitions” of the relevant content (i.e., pornography).<sup>440</sup> To that end, the Panel ultimately found that “[t]here can be no disagreement about the fact that the definition of such content and the scope of this content category varies considerably depending on one’s moral, religious, national or cultural perspective.”<sup>441</sup>

---

<sup>438</sup> P. Twomey Witness Statement, ¶¶ 57, 63; V. Cerf Witness Statement, ¶ 38; A. Pisanty Witness Statement, ¶ 23.

<sup>439</sup> ICANN Report on TLD Applications: Application of the August 15 Criteria to Each Category or Group, November 9, 2000, available at <http://www.icann.org/en/tlds/report/report-iiib1c-09nov00.htm> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit E; see also ICM Memorial, Dr. Elizabeth Williams Witness Statement, ¶ 7 ("It was also obvious from the 2000 'proof of concept' round that an application for an adult content string would be controversial from a public relations standpoint.").

290. ICM itself recognized the “need for all stakeholders to feel that they have had an adequate and meaningful opportunity to express their views” and in order to “preserve the integrity of the ICANN process.”<sup>442</sup> Thus, in November 2005, ICM made presentations to the GAC in an effort to satisfy the GAC’s public policy concerns by promising, among other things, “public interest benefits” that would flow from the .XXX sTLD.<sup>443</sup> But, as noted in the GAC’s Wellington Communiqué, the public interest benefits promised by ICM during its November 2005 presentation had not yet been included as ICM’s obligations in the proposed .XXX registry agreement. ICM knew, early on, that it had to satisfy the public policy concerns raised in the GAC’s Wellington Communiqué and live up to its own promises of public interest benefits.<sup>444</sup>

---

<sup>440</sup> Confidential Exhibit – Evaluation Team Questions for ICM and IFFOR, attached to ICANN’s First Brief as Confidential Ex. A.

<sup>441</sup> ICANN, New sTLD applications, Appendix D: Evaluation Reports, August 27, 2004, p. 95, Cl. Ex. 110.

<sup>442</sup> Letter from Stuart Lawley, ICM, to Paul Twomey, ICANN, August 15, 2005, available at <http://www.icann.org/correspondence/lawley-to-twomey-15aug05.pdf> (last visited May 5, 2009), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit S.

<sup>443</sup> See Confidential Exhibit - ICM Slide Presentation, attached to ICANN’s First Brief as Confidential Ex. H.

<sup>444</sup> GAC Communiqué – Wellington, New Zealand, March 28, 2006, Cl. Ex. 181 (“ICM Registry promised a range of public interest benefits as part of its bid to operate the .xxx domain. To the GAC’s knowledge, these undertakings have not yet been included as ICM obligations in the proposed .xxx Registry Agreement negotiated with ICANN.”).

c. The Fact That the GAC’s Comments Regarding The .XXX sTLD Came After ICM Had Submitted Its Proposal To ICANN Was Not A Basis To Ignore Those Comments.

291. ICANN rejected ICM’s application due to its failure to satisfy the sponsorship criteria,<sup>445</sup> which were clearly defined and previously announced in the RFP and were known by ICM to be of concern at the outset of and throughout the negotiation of the registry agreement.<sup>446</sup> The fact that those negotiations continued as the GAC expressed its concerns does not alter the fact that the sponsorship concerns were a principal issue.

292. That the GAC did not express views prior to June 2005 certainly was not a basis to ignore the GAC’s views once they were expressed. There appear to have been at least two reasons the GAC did not comment on the .XXX sTLD prior to the June 1, 2005 ICANN Board vote. First, some countries believed (erroneously) that, because ICM’s .XXX unsponsored TLD had been rejected in the 2000 “proof of concept” round, it would not be considered in the new sTLD round. Second, because the Evaluation Panel had rejected the .XXX sTLD application for failure to satisfy the sponsorship selection criteria, many countries likely believed that the application would not be allowed to proceed.

293. Whatever the reason for the timing of the GAC’s statements, ICM’s position that ICANN should have disregarded the GAC’s concerns because they were articulated during the so-called “second step” of the process cannot possibly amount to a violation of ICANN’s Bylaws because the Bylaws expressly require the Board to consider the GAC’s opinions, whenever expressed. ICM’s position also depends on a finding that the ICANN Board “finally” approved the .XXX sTLD in June 2005, which did not occur.

294. In addition to expressing public policy concerns, the GAC also noted the sponsorship deficiencies in ICM’s application and proposed registry agreements in each of its communications to ICANN.<sup>447</sup> Amid the GAC’s concerns regarding the sponsorship

---

<sup>445</sup> Meeting of the Board, Transcript, March 30, 2007, Cl. Ex. 201.

<sup>446</sup> See New sTLD application, December 15, 2003, Part A. Explanatory Notes – Sponsorship Information, Cl. Ex. 45.

<sup>447</sup> See GAC Communiqué – Vancouver, Canada, December 1, 2005, available at <http://old.gac.icann.org/web/communiques/gac23com.pdf> (last visited May 5, 2009) (“[T]he GAC deficiencies of ICM's application, and the atmosphere of disintegrating support and opposition among prominent members of the community ICM purported to represent, ICM's speculation that its application was rejected solely due to "vague and previously unannounced" notions of public policy is unfounded. ICM's application was rejected for its failure to satisfy the sponsorship criteria.<sup>448</sup> In addition to its failure to satisfy those baseline criteria, the Board's consideration of public policy concerns raised by the GAC was not only appropriate but required under the Bylaws.

C. AT EVERY STAGE OF THE EVALUATION PROCESS, ICANN COMPLIED WITH ITS BYLAWS AND ARTICLES IN CONSIDERING AND DENYING ICM'S STLD APPLICATION.

295. The facts simply do not support ICM's claims that ICANN violated its Bylaws and Articles of Incorporation. The Board's discussions concerning ICM's .XXX sTLD application were open and transparent; its decisions, which are entitled to substantial deference, were made in good faith; the Board did not apply its procedures in a discriminatory manner; and ICM was at all times given substantial opportunities to be heard.

1. At All Times, ICANN Operated In An Open, Transparent, And Procedurally Fair Manner.

296. ICM claims that ICANN failed to act openly and transparently and in a procedurally fair manner. ICM's misguided perceptions notwithstanding, all of ICANN's actions were open, transparent, and procedurally fair.

---

(continued...)

welcome[s] the decision to postpone the Board's consideration of the .XXX application . . . until such time as the GAC has been able to review the Evaluation Report . . ."), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit BD; GAC Communiqué – Wellington, New Zealand, March 28, 2006, Cl. Ex. 181 ("The GAC would request a written explanation of the Board decision, particularly with regard to the sponsored community and public interest criteria outlined in the sponsored top level domain selection criteria."); GAC Communiqué – Lisbon, Portugal, March 28, 2007, Cl. Ex. 200 ("The GAC does not consider the information provided by the Board to have answered the GAC concerns as to whether the ICM application meets the sponsorship criteria.").

<sup>448</sup> Meeting of the Board, Transcript, March 30, 2007, Cl. Ex. 201.

a. ICANN Operated With Openness And Transparency.

297. ICM alleges that ICANN failed to act openly and transparently by failing to adhere to the selection criteria established in the RFP.<sup>449</sup> Specifically, ICM asserts that (i) “despite the erroneous conclusions of the” Review Panel, ICM’s application clearly satisfied the sponsorship criteria”; (ii) the ICANN Board “specifically determined that ICM’s application met the criteria when it approved the resolutions allowing ICM to proceed to registry agreement negotiations” on June 1, 2005; (iii) the ICANN Board “reversed” this decision because of “sponsorship issues” and “vague and previously unannounced criteria such as ‘public policy issues’”; and (iv) that the ultimate rejection of the .XXX sTLD was based on a “different definition of the sponsorship criteria, one that apparently required the applicant to have the full support of everyone who might possible be a community member.”<sup>450</sup> All of this, according to ICM, “are clear violations of the obligation to be open and transparent.”<sup>451</sup> ICM’s disagreement with the Board’s honest judgments and carefully crafted decision does not support a conclusion that the ICANN Board violated its Bylaws. In any event, ICM is wrong in each instance.

298. First, ICM did not satisfy the sponsorship criteria, as ICM contends. As explained above, a majority of the Board determined that ICM failed to set forth a precisely defined community, proposed language that would require ICANN to monitor (outside of its technical mandate) illegal and offensive content according to all law globally, could not identify a community that was comprised of persons with needs and interests in common but which are differentiated from those of the general global Internet community, and ultimately failed to garner support from the larger online adult entertainment provider community. Each of these facts placed ICM directly at odds with the requirements set forth in the RFP at the outset of the sTLD process.

299. Second, the ICANN Board did not approve the .XXX sTLD application on June 1, 2005. All of the evidence identified throughout this Response proves that the Board’s

---

<sup>449</sup> ICM Memorial ¶¶ 369-377.

<sup>450</sup> Id. at ¶¶ 372-375.

<sup>451</sup> Id. at ¶ 377.

June 1, 2005 vote did not determine that ICM had satisfied the RFP selection criteria, including sponsorship.

300. Third, ICANN never “reversed” its decision because ICANN never found that ICM satisfied the RFP requirements in the first place. ICANN’s final decision to deny ICM’s application was based on ICM’s inability to satisfy the sponsorship selection criteria as set forth clearly in the RFP.

301. Fourth and finally, the ultimate rejection of the .XXX sTLD was not based on a “different definition of the sponsorship criteria, one that apparently required the applicant to have the full support of everyone who might possibly be a community member.”<sup>452</sup> The RFP explicitly required the proposed sTLD to address the needs and interests of a “clearly defined community” that can benefit from the establishment of the sTLD. The RFP further required that applicants demonstrate that the sTLD community was “precisely defined, so it can be determined which persons or entities make up that community.” ICM defined the sponsoring community as the “responsible online adult-entertainment community.” The Board’s vote made clear that ICM’s defined community was based on self-selection and was not capable of objective definition. Moreover, unlike other sTLD applicants, ICM’s proposed community did not yet exist. As a result, ICM was asking ICANN to evaluate a proposed hypothetical community that ICM believed would coalesce around the .XXX TLD. In short, ICM did not propose a “clearly defined community” as required by the RFP.

302. ICM was never in the dark on any of these issues. Instead, ICM was apprised of all relevant procedures, standards, and decisions throughout the process. ICM was provided with copies of all materials used in the evaluation process, and minutes of the Board’s meetings were posted on ICANN’s website. Indeed, nearly all of documents ICM relies upon to establish the factual record in its brief are publicly available documents.

---

<sup>452</sup> ICM Memorial ¶ 375.

b. ICANN's Review Was Procedurally Fair.

303. ICM argues that ICANN failed to provide procedural fairness because, ICM believes: (1) the RFP process called for a rigid two-step evaluation wherein, if an applicant cleared the “first step” by entering contract negotiations, it necessarily satisfied all RFP criteria and ICANN could not subsequently revisit the RFP criteria – even if it appeared that the applicant’s intractable problems with respect to those criteria could not be addressed through any number of proposed registry agreements; (2) ICANN allegedly added new, substantive criteria by considering the GAC’s public policy comments with respect to ICM’s application; and (3) ironically, given ICM’s claims that ICANN did not act openly and transparently, ICM believes that ICANN should not have published the Evaluation Panel’s reports because they contained negative comments with respect to ICM’s application.<sup>453</sup>

304. As discussed above, the ICANN Board’s process for evaluating ICM’s sTLD application was both consistent with ICANN’s Bylaws and procedurally fair under California law. First, there was never an inflexible two-step sequential process. The Board could not know if an sTLD application would be able to satisfy the RFP criteria, including sponsorship, until it was shown how the applicant’s ideas would be implemented in the registry agreement. Thus, an evaluation process divided into two concrete and inflexible “steps” would be unworkable in practice, at least with respect to proposed sTLDs that had “sponsorship issues,” because it would have been impractical for the Board to commit to a new sTLD without knowing the details of the registry that would operate it. While there is no doubt that ICANN employed a two-staged process – insofar as the evaluation of the RFP criteria and contractual negotiations involved different functions – both of these phases needed to be completed before a sTLD application could be submitted to the Board for approval, and the evaluation process and contract negotiations could overlap in time. This was absolutely consistent with how ICANN managed the earlier TLD expansion in 2000 as well.

305. ICM was not the only sTLD applicant that ICANN permitted to move on to contract negotiations before satisfying the selection criteria. Applications for .jobs and .mobi were also allowed to proceed to contract negotiations despite open questions relating to the RFP selection criteria.<sup>454</sup> This negates any notion put forth by ICM that ICANN somehow applied “new substantive criteria in evaluating ICM’s application.”<sup>455</sup> ICM was treated in a non-discriminatory manner.

---

<sup>453</sup> Id. ¶¶ 386-93.

306. It is ironic that ICM complains of being treated “unfairly” in this process given that ICM was permitted numerous additional opportunities – opportunities that were not called for in the RFP – to prove to ICANN that it could satisfy the sponsorship criteria. For instance, after the Evaluation Panel’s initial findings, the ICANN Board instructed the Evaluation Panel to reconsider its findings as to all applicants; this was not called for in the ICANN evaluation schedule. After the Evaluation Panel confirmed its initial findings, ICANN gave each of the applicants an opportunity to respond in writing to the findings; this also was not called for in the ICANN evaluation schedule. After ICM responded to the findings of the Evaluation Panel, ICANN offered ICM an opportunity to make an oral presentation to the Board; this also was not called for in the ICANN evaluation schedule. Then, the Board voted to proceed to contract negotiations, despite significant concerns on the critical sponsorship issues. There is no conceivable basis that any of this could be viewed as “unfair,” much less in derogation of ICANN’s Bylaws.

307. The Board’s authorization to ICANN staff to commence negotiations on a registry agreement did not reflect an unconditional approval of ICM’s .XXX sTLD.<sup>456</sup> Therefore, ICANN did not “approve” the .XXX sTLD on June 1, 2005, and subsequently “reverse” that decision, as ICM contends.

308. ICANN made its ultimate decision to reject ICM’s application and proposed registry agreement by applying documented policies neutrally and objectively, with integrity and fairness. ICM was provided with every opportunity to address the concerns of the Board and the GAC, and ICM provided numerous memoranda to the Board and the GAC. Multiple drafts of

---

<sup>454</sup> See, e.g., ICANN Minutes, Special Meeting of the Board, December 13, 2004, Cl. Ex. 116.

<sup>455</sup> ICM Memorial ¶ 390.

<sup>456</sup> See P. Twomey Witness Statement ¶ 28.

the proposed registry agreement were presented to the Board for its consideration, and the Board devoted countless hours evaluating and debating the merits of ICM's application.

309. Finally, ICM takes the position that ICANN should not have published the Evaluation Panel's reports because they reflected negatively on ICM's application.<sup>457</sup> ICM, which also alleges that ICANN did not act in an open and transparent manner, asks the Panel to find that ICANN violated its Bylaws because it publicly disclosed information about the status of ICM's sTLD application during the selection process. ICM appears not to recognize the irony of its position. While ICM may have preferred that the negative conclusions of the Evaluation Panel not be published, there can be no credible argument that ICANN's Articles and Bylaws required their suppression.

2. ICANN Did Not Apply Its Procedures In A Discriminatory Fashion.

310. ICM maintains that ICANN applied its procedures in a discriminatory fashion by considering public policy issues that were unique to ICM's application, defining the sTLD community and requirement of "broad-based support" differently with respect to ICM's application, and allowing different contract terms to be used during negotiations of the proposed registry agreement.<sup>458</sup> Here, again, ICM is wrong.

311. As discussed above, ICANN did not reject ICM's application based only on issues of public policy (although these were important and well-reasoned concerns). ICM's sTLD application was rejected because of ICM's inability to show how the sTLD would satisfy the sponsorship criteria. The definitions relevant to those criteria never changed during the contract negotiations, nor were they applied any differently with respect to ICM's application. This much is clear from the consistency of the Board's ultimate decision to reject ICM's application for many of the same sponsorship concerns noted in the initial recommendation of the Evaluation Panel.

---

<sup>457</sup> ICM Memorial ¶ 393.

<sup>458</sup> Id. ¶¶ 399-404.

312. ICM has no basis to argue that it was treated differently than other sTLD applicants. ICANN applied its standards, policies, procedures, and practices equitably, without singling out any particular party for disparate treatment. The fact that ICM's application ultimately was rejected obviously does not, by itself, lead to the conclusion that ICM was treated differently. Any applicant presenting an application having the infirmities of ICM's .XXX application would have been rejected. And the length of time that ICANN devoted to the ICM application hardly reflects a breach of ICANN's Bylaws or Articles (much less "bad faith" on ICANN's part).

313. Similarly, the fact that certain contract terms for ICM may have been different from those proposed for the registry agreements for other sTLDs is not a manifestation of a discriminatory intent, but simply reflects the inherent differences among the needs of the proposed Sponsored TLD communities.

314. ICM's application was (by far) the most controversial and complicated application. The fact that some Board members disagreed with the Board's final vote in March 2007 shows that ICM's application was the subject of legitimate debate among the members of the Board, and that ICM was able to persuade some, but ultimately not a majority, of Board members that its .XXX sTLD application met the criteria set forth in the RFP. Such disagreement is not evidence of discriminatory treatment of ICM's application.<sup>459</sup>

315. In sum, the fact that ICANN's Board ultimately turned down this sTLD application obviously does not mean that the Board must have "mistreated" the applicant. The facts demonstrate that ICM was treated fairly.

3. ICANN Did Not Act In Excess Of Its Mission.

316. ICM argues that ICANN acted in excess of its purpose and mission, which is to protect the stability, integrity, and utility of the Internet domain name system. ICM contends that the Board's rejection of ICM's application was premised on a "substantive judgment of Internet content,” which was beyond ICANN’s technical mandate.<sup>460</sup> But no such rationale was ever articulated by the Board or could be inferred from the process.

---

<sup>459</sup> ICM Memorial, ¶¶ 239- 242.

317. To the contrary, ICANN did not reject ICM’s application based on a “substantive judgment of Internet content,” but because ICM could not satisfy the sponsorship criteria, and also because ICM’s proposed registry agreement would have required ICANN to manage the content of the .XXX sTLD – exactly the type of content-based function that ICM now complains is improper. Under these circumstances, the fact that Board decided that ICANN’s mission was best served by denial of ICM’s application does not demonstrate any objective error in judgment or lack of good faith on the part of the Board. Certainly, it cannot be said that the Board acted in excess of its mission.

4. The Board Reached Its Decision Independently, Giving Due Consideration, As It Was Required Under the Bylaws, To The GAC’s Comments.

318. ICM alleges that ICANN violated the Bylaws provisions with respect to the GAC. Recognizing that the Board is required under the Bylaws to consider the GAC’s advice on issues of public policy, ICM claims that the Board was “overly deferential” to the GAC’s concerns.<sup>461</sup>

319. The Bylaws do not limit the extent to which the Board can consider the GAC’s views. Although ICANN did take into account the opinion of the GAC as well as other Internet stakeholders, as it was required to do under the Bylaws, the Board reached its decision independently and rejected ICM’s proposal based on the RFP selection criteria. Had the ICANN Board taken the view that the GAC’s views must in every case be followed without independent judgment, the Board presumably would have rejected ICM’s application in late 2005 or early 2006, rather than waiting another full year for the parties to try to identify a resolution that would have allowed the sTLD to proceed.

---

<sup>460</sup> Id. ¶¶ 405-11.

<sup>461</sup> Id. ¶¶ 412-14.

5. ICANN Did Not Violate International Law.

320. The same facts foreclose ICM's international law claims. As shown above, see supra section III.A.3, the principles of international law that ICM cites are inapplicable to this proceeding for a variety of reasons. The Panel should therefore disregard such claims.

321. Further, each of ICM's international law principles – the duty of good faith (and related applications), abuse of rights, legitimate expectations, and estoppel – depends upon the same assumptions of wrongdoing on the part of ICANN that never actually occurred. Thus, ICM's international law claims, unsupportable as they are as a matter of law, fail even to provide an alternative basis to support claims against ICANN, but rather merely repackage the same erroneous factual arguments in a different guise.<sup>462</sup>

IV. CONCLUSION AND PROPOSED FORMAT FOR THE HEARING

322. For all of the reasons set forth above, the Panel should declare, pursuant to Article IV, Section 12 of the Bylaws, that the ICANN Board did not act inconsistently with ICANN's Articles and Bylaws. At every stage of ICANN's comprehensive review and ultimate denial of ICM's .XXX sTLD application, the ICANN Board fully complied with the provisions in the Articles and Bylaws raised by ICM – providing an open, transparent, and procedurally fair process; applying its procedures in a non-discriminatory fashion; adhering to ICANN's purpose and mission; and reaching its decision independently based on the RFP selection criteria. ICM is simply trying to second-guess the well-reasoned and careful judgment of the ICANN Board, which is not the proper subject of an independent review proceeding.

323. The Panel should further declare, again pursuant to Article IV, Section 12 of the Bylaws, that ICANN is the prevailing party; that ICM is the party not prevailing; and that ICM is responsible for bearing all costs of the independent review process provider (i.e., the ICDR).

---

<sup>462</sup> See, e.g., Caron Opinion ¶ 99 (noting that the principle of good faith is “an analog to the business judgment rule”). ICANN further notes that Article 4 does not require “perfect compliance” with any international legal principles that may apply. Caron Opinion ¶¶ 41-44; id. ¶ 41 (noting that “in conformity with” is “not a precise standard”). Because Article 4 requires only that ICANN act “in conformity with” such principles, ICANN's consistency with its other Bylaws and Articles a fortiori satisfies Article 4.

The Panel should also declare that, as the party not prevailing, ICM is not entitled to any of the relief it seeks.

324. ICANN looks forward to the hearing that is scheduled to begin on September 21, 2009. ICANN respectfully submits that this hearing should be limited to the equivalent of a closing argument. The parties have provided the Panel with a substantial amount of briefing, and counsel should be prepared to address these issues, perhaps in a sequenced manner, during the course of the hearing.

325. ICANN does not believe, however, that the hearing should involve live testimony from the witnesses who have submitted statements in conjunction with these proceedings. The parties already have submitted considerable evidence by way of witness statements as well as documentation. While live testimony might (or might not) supplement the factual record in some way, the Panel has ample facts on which to determine whether the Board violated its Bylaws or Articles of Incorporation. It is hard to imagine that further development of the factual record would be useful in facilitating the Panel's work. ICM's counsel even told the Panel that ICM would be satisfied to present a response in a reply brief instead of holding any live hearing.<sup>463</sup>

326. Although a hearing with live witnesses is not forbidden by the Bylaws that created this independent review process, the procedures that apply to this unique process of independent review certainly support a hearing limited to attorney presentation, without live witnesses. The Bylaws provide that this independent review proceeding be conducted in a manner "to keep the costs and burdens of independent review as low as possible,"<sup>464</sup> and encourage resolution of disputes "on the papers" using email and conference calls as necessary.<sup>465</sup> Nowhere do the procedures contemplate the presentation of live witnesses.

---

<sup>463</sup> See Email Correspondence from Arif Hyder Ali to the Panel (Apr. 16, 2009) (stating that ICM would be satisfied responding to ICANN's submission "either at a hearing on the merits or through a written response") (emphasis added), attached hereto as ICANN Exhibit BE.

<sup>464</sup> ICANN Bylaws, supra note 2, Article IV, § 3.10.

<sup>465</sup> See id. at Article IV, § 3.10 ("In order to keep the costs and burdens of independent review as low as possible, the [Panel] should conduct its proceedings by e-mail and otherwise via the Internet to the maximum extent feasible. Where necessary, the IRP may hold meetings by telephone."); see also

Indeed, the procedures specify that the Panel “shall make its declaration based solely on the documentation, supporting materials, and arguments submitted by the parties.”<sup>466</sup>

327. For all of these reasons, ICANN proposes that the hearing that the Panel has scheduled to begin September 21, 2009 consist of detailed closing arguments by counsel, but not provide for live witness testimony. The closing argument could, for example, be structured according to the various legal and factual issues that the parties have addressed in ICM’s Memorial and ICANN’s Response.

Respectfully submitted,

Jeffrey A. DeVee
Eric Enson
Kate Wallace
Hirad Dadgostar
JONES DAY
555 South Flower Street
Fiftieth Floor
Los Angeles, CA 90071-2300
Telephone: (213) 489-3939
Facsimile: (213) 243-2539

Michael S. Fried
Jennifer L. Swize
JONES DAY
51 Louisiana Avenue NW
Washington, DC 20001-2113
Telephone: (202) 879-5417
Facsimile: (202) 626-1700

---

(continued...)

Supplementary Procedures, supra note 151, Supplementary Procedure 4 (“The IRP should conduct its proceedings by electronic means to the extent feasible. Where necessary, the IRP may conduct telephone conferences.”).

<sup>466</sup> ICANN Bylaws, supra note 2, Article IV, § 3.12 (emphasis added).

APPENDIX A

Appendix A: Chronology of Key Events

DATE	EVENT
1998
September 30, 1998	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Articles of Incorporation filed and ICANN formed</li> </ul>
November 6, 1998	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Bylaws (original version) adopted</li> </ul>
November 21, 1998	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Bylaws modified to provide for independent third-party review of Board actions alleged by an affected party to have “violated the Corporation’s articles of incorporation or bylaws.”</li> </ul>
2000
July 16, 2000	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>ICANN Board adopts policy for the introduction of new TLDs</li> </ul>
August 15, 2000	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>ICANN posts criteria to be used in the “proof of concept” round for assessing gTLD applications.</li> <li>ICM Registry’s unsponsored .XXX TLD application is one of 47 proposals submitted to ICANN</li> </ul>
November 9, 2000	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Report issued by ICANN staff evaluating each TLD proposal.</li> <li>ICM’s .XXX unsponsored TLD proposal is not selected for 3 reasons: (1) “it did not appear to meet unmet needs;” (2) “the controversy surrounding .XXX was great;” and (3) the application included a “poor definition of the hoped-for benefits of [] .XXX.”</li> </ul>
2002
June 20, 2002	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>ICANN Board adopts recommendation from the Committee on ICANN Evolution and Reform (“ERC”) that would “create a process to require non-binding arbitration by an international arbitration body to review any allegation that the Board has acted in conflict with ICANN’s Bylaws.”</li> </ul>
August 1, 2002	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>ERC states: “We do not believe that ICANN should have either a Supreme Court or a ‘Super Board’ with the ability to nullify decisions reached by the ICANN Board, which will be the most broadly representative body within the ICANN structure.”</li> </ul>
October 2, 2002	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>ERC states that “a ‘Supreme Court,’ with the power to revisit and potentially reverse or vacate decisions of the ICANN Board, would itself raise many difficult questions” and thus is not the process recommended by the ERC.</li> </ul>
October 18, 2002	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>ICANN President Stuart Lynn issues “A Plan for Action Regarding New gTLDs”</li> </ul>
December 15, 2002	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>ICANN contemplates draft Request for Proposal (RFP) for purpose of soliciting proposals for a limited number of additional new sponsored TLDs.</li> </ul>
December 15, 2002	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>ICANN Board adopts ERC’s proposed Bylaws, but replaces the ERC’s reference to IRP “decisions” with the term “declarations.”</li> </ul>
2003
December 15, 2003	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>ICANN launches round for sTLDs and posts final RFP.</li> <li>The final RFP requests information on: (1) Sponsorship; (2) Business Plan; (3) Technical Standards; and (4) Community Value.</li> </ul>

Appendix A: Chronology of Key Events

DATE	EVENT
2004
March 19, 2004	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>ICANN receives 10 applications for sTLDs, including one from ICM Registry for the introduction of .XXX.</li> </ul>
April 7, 2004	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Independent Evaluation Panel is appointed to review sTLD applications.</li> </ul>
August 27, 2004	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Independent Evaluation Panel submits its reports on each sTLD application. ICM's application is found to meet both the technical and business selection criteria but not the sponsorship selection criteria.</li> <li>Evaluation Panel recommends that ICANN not consider ICM's application further.</li> </ul>
August 31, 2004	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>ICANN Board encourages ICM to review the Evaluation Panel's report and suggest how the Evaluation Panel's concerns could be addressed.</li> </ul>
October 9, 2004	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>ICM provides list of reasons why Evaluation Panel was mistaken as to sponsorship.</li> </ul>
2005
May 3, 2005	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Special Meeting of the ICANN Board. Detailed discussion regarding .XXX and whether or not the application meets the "sponsored community" criteria of the RFP</li> </ul>
June 1, 2005	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Special Meeting of the ICANN Board. Board adopts two resolutions: (1) authorizing the President and General Counsel to enter negotiations with ICM relating to the proposed commercial and technical terms; and (2) requesting the President to present a negotiated agreement to the Board for approval and authorization.</li> </ul>
July 11-12, 2005	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>GAC Meeting in Luxembourg. Concerns expressed about .XXX sTLD</li> <li>GAC Communiqué asks ICANN to hold consultations on new TLDs and looks forward to providing advice on the process.</li> </ul>
August 9, 2005	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>First draft .XXX sTLD registry agreement posted and submitted to the ICANN Board.</li> </ul>
August 15, 2005	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>ICM requests that ICANN Board "defer final approval of the ICM Registry Agreement until its September call."</li> </ul>
August 16, 2005	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Special Meeting of the ICANN Board. Review of the .XXX sTLD Registry Agreement deferred until Board's September 15, 2005 Meeting.</li> </ul>
August – Sept. 2005	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>"Strong opposition to the creation of a .XXX TLD" expressed by numerous governments and entities.</li> </ul>
September 15, 2005	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>Special Meeting of the ICANN Board. Board expresses concerns about proceeding with the .XXX sTLD domain name</li> <li>ICANN President and General Counsel directed to discuss possible contract modifications to ensure compliance with RFP specifications</li> </ul>
November 29, 2005	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>GAC meeting in Vancouver.</li> <li>Presentation by ICANN Board to the GAC on .XXX; consideration of the .XXX Application will be postponed as requested.</li> <li>Presentation by ICM to the GAC; ICM promises a range of public interest</li> </ul>

Appendix A: Chronology of Key Events

DATE	EVENT
	benefits.
2006
March 30, 2006	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• GAC’s “Wellington Communiqué ” published.</li> <li>• Several GAC members are “emphatically opposed from a public policy perspective to the introduction of a .XXX sTLD.”</li> </ul>
March 31, 2006	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• ICANN Board Meeting. Board directs President and General Counsel to “analyze all publicly received inputs, to continue negotiations with ICM Registry, and to return to the Board with any recommendations regarding amendments to the proposed sTLD Registry Agreement.”</li> </ul>
April 18, 2006	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• ICM submits – and ICANN posts – revised draft .XXX Registry Agreement.</li> <li>• ICM requests a vote on the Agreement at the Board’s May 10, 2006 meeting.</li> </ul>
May, 10 2006	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• ICANN’s Board Meeting. Board votes 9-5 against ICM’s then-current draft of the proposed .XXX Registry Agreement, but does not reject ICM’s application outright.</li> </ul>
2007
January 5, 2007	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Revised Proposed Registry Agreement for the .XXX sTLD is posted.</li> </ul>
February 12, 2007	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Special meeting of the Board.</li> <li>• Majority expresses concerns about whether .XXX has the support of a clearly-defined sponsored community.</li> <li>• ICANN Staff directed to consult with ICM to provide further information at the Board’s next meeting.</li> </ul>
March 28, 2007	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• ICM gives presentation to ICANN Board on support in the Sponsored Community.</li> </ul>
March 30, 2007	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• The GAC Lisbon Communiqué published.</li> </ul>
March 30, 2007	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• ICANN Board approves a resolution rejecting the Revised Agreement with ICM and denying ICM’s application for the .XXX sTLD.</li> </ul>
2008
June 6, 2008	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• ICM files a Request for Independent Review with the International Centre for Dispute Resolution.</li> </ul>

APPENDIX B

Appendix B: Comparison of the RFP and How ICM Failed to Meet the RFP Criteria

RFP Criteria	How ICM Failed to Meet RFP Criteria
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Sponsorship Information <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Definition of a sponsored community (The RFP required that the proposed sTLD address the needs and interests of a “clearly defined community” that can benefit from the establishment of the sTLD, and required that the community be “comprised of persons that have needs and interests in common but which are differentiated from those of the general global Internet community.”);</li> <li>2. Support by a Sponsoring Organization</li> <li>3. The appropriateness of the Sponsoring Organization (including that it operate primarily in the interests of the sTLD Community); and</li> <li>4. “Broad-Based Support from the Community” is a “Key Requirement”</li> </ol> </li> </ul>	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• ICM failed to set forth a precisely defined community. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>○ ICM defined the sponsoring community as the “responsible online adult-entertainment community.” ICM’s defined community was based on self-selection and was not capable of objective definition. ICM’s proposed community did not yet exist. As a result, ICM was asking ICANN to evaluate a hypothetical community that ICM believed would coalesce around the .XXX TLD. In short, the community was not “clearly defined.”</li> </ul> </li> <li>• ICM failed to identify a community that was “comprised of persons with needs and interests in common but which are differentiated from those of the general global Internal community.” <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>○ ICM failed to meet this portion of the RFP specification because of its selective membership. The sponsored community as defined by ICM was but a subset of all online adult entertainment providers (i.e., those that supported the sTLD), and ICM never provided any documentation or information that the excluded providers had separate needs or interests from the sponsored community it sought to represent.</li> </ul> </li> <li>• ICM failed to propose policies “primarily in the interests of the Sponsored TLD Community.” <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>○ ICM undertook to delegate issues of “Best Business Practices” in the proposed registry agreement. Such measures diluted the possibility that the policies would be “primarily in the interests of the Sponsored TLD Community” because the measures specifically obligated ICM to seek input from foreign governments and organizations on local concerns, which added yet another non-community voice to the policy formulation aspect.</li> </ul> </li> <li>• ICM ultimately failed to garner support from the larger online adult entertainment provider community. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>○ During the final public comment period, the majority of the comments posted to the public forum and sent to ICANN staff opposed ICM’s .XXX sTLD. ICM was not able to provide evidence to the contrary.</li> </ul> </li> </ul>

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Community Value <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Addition of new value to the Internet name space;</li> <li>2. Protecting the rights of others;</li> <li>3. Assurance of charter-compliant registrations and avoidance of abusive registration tactics;</li> <li>4. Assurance of adequate dispute-resolution mechanisms; and</li> <li>5. Provision of ICANN-policy compliant WHOIS service</li> </ol> </li> </ul>	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• ICM failed to demonstrate that it was adding new and valuable space to the Internet Name Space. <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>○ To the extent that online adult service providers chose not to register within the .XXX sTLD (and the opposition to the sTLD made clear that there would be many), the .XXX sTLD would represent merely duplicate space on the Internet.</li> </ul> </li> </ul>
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Technical Standards <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Ability to ensure stable registry operation;</li> <li>2. Ability to ensure best practices;</li> <li>3. A full range of registry services; and</li> <li>4. Assurance of continuity of registry operation in the event of business failure of the proposed registry</li> </ol> </li> </ul>	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• ICM proposed language that would require ICANN to monitor illegal and offensive content according to all law globally. This requirement fell outside of ICANN’s mandate.</li> </ul>
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• Business Plan Information <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Business Plan; and</li> <li>2. Financial Plan</li> </ol> </li> </ul>

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-62

KA
32.75
.S32.
1976
c.2

CA-62

A MANUAL
OF INTERNATIONAL LAW

by
GEORG SCHWARZENBERGER

of Gray's Inn, Barrister-at-Law;
Director, London Institute of World Affairs;
Emeritus Professor of International Law in the University of London

and

E. D. BROWN

Professor of International Law in the University of Wales;
Director, Centre for Marine Law and Policy

SIXTH EDITION

PROFESSIONAL BOOKS LIMITED

1976

countries with different civilisations in the Near, Middle and Far East. Capitulation treaties provided means of harmonising discrepancies in standards of conduct, especially in the administration of civil and criminal law. In this way, foreigners resident in Asian and African countries were largely exempted from local territorial jurisdiction and made amenable to that of their home States which exercised jurisdiction on the spot through their consular courts or in their own colonial possessions nearby.<sup>18</sup>

Finally, matters might be left in the hands of colonial companies such as the Dutch and British East India Companies. They were not considered as themselves endowed with international personality, but were regarded as organs of the States which had granted them their charters. They had, however, wide discretionary powers and used them in concluding treaties with, or making war on, local rulers. Some of these treaties make sense only on the assumption that the colonial company acknowledged the sovereignty and international personality of the local princes concerned. Others are more akin to public contracts under the municipal law of the colonial Power concerned. Today, these aspects of international law are primarily of historical significance. They are by-products of the transition of the European State system from periods of early colonialism and imperialism to the era of a slowly maturing world society.

B. International Law in Sociological Perspective

1. The Structure of International Law

Three features characterise the structure of international law on the level of unorganised international society: (a) its universality, (b) its exclusiveness and (c) its individualistic character.

(a) The Universality of International Law. On the level of unorganised international society, the geographical scope of international law is universal, in the sense that it extends to the whole world. International law on this level comprises the sum total of the rules from which the seven fundamental and inter-related principles of sovereignty, recognition, consent, good faith, freedom of the seas, responsibility and self-defence can be abstracted.<sup>19</sup>

The subjects of international law are, however, free to organise themselves on higher levels of integration. They may, for instance, become parties to a general agreement for the renunciation of resort to war, such as the Kellogg Pact of 1928,<sup>20</sup> or join regional or universalist international institutions, such as the Organisation of American States or the United Nations.<sup>21</sup> They may even coalesce into territorial or functional federations on the model of Switzerland or the European Economic Community.<sup>22</sup> Inside such institutional superstructures, international law may

<sup>18</sup> See below, p. 74 et seq.

<sup>19</sup> See below, p. 33 et seq.

<sup>20</sup> See below, p. 151.

<sup>21</sup> See below, pp. 222 et seq. and 273 et seq.

<sup>22</sup> See below, pp. 45 and 288.

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-63

INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

REPORTS OF JUDGMENTS,
ADVISORY OPINIONS AND ORDERS

NUCLEAR TESTS CASE
(AUSTRALIA v. FRANCE)

JUDGMENT OF 20 DECEMBER 1974

1974

COUR INTERNATIONALE DE JUSTICE

RECUEIL DES ARRÊTS,
AVIS CONSULTATIFS ET ORDONNANCES

AFFAIRE DES ESSAIS NUCLÉAIRES
(AUSTRALIE c. FRANCE)

ARRÊT DU 20 DÉCEMBRE 1974

Official citation :

Nuclear Tests (Australia v. France), Judgment,
I.C.J. Reports 1974, p. 253.

---

Mode officiel de citation :

Essais nucléaires (Australie c. France), arrêt,
C.I.J. Recueil 1974, p. 253.

Sales number: 400 N° de vente: 400
---

20 DECEMBER 1974

JUDGMENT

NUCLEAR TESTS CASE
(AUSTRALIA v. FRANCE)

---

AFFAIRE DES ESSAIS NUCLÉAIRES
(AUSTRALIE c. FRANCE)

20 DÉCEMBRE 1974

ARRÊT

INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

YEAR 1974

1974
20 December
General List
No. 58

20 December 1974

NUCLEAR TESTS CASE

(AUSTRALIA v. FRANCE)

Questions of jurisdiction and admissibility—Prior examination required of question of existence of dispute as essentially preliminary matter—Exercise of inherent jurisdiction of the Court.

Analysis of claim on the basis of the Application and determination of object of claim—Significance of submissions and of statements of the Applicant for definition of the claim—Power of Court to interpret submissions—Public statements made on behalf of Respondent before and after oral proceedings.

Unilateral acts creative of legal obligations—Principle of good faith.

Resolution of dispute by unilateral declaration giving rise to legal obligation—Applicant's non-exercise of right of discontinuance of proceedings no bar to independent finding by Court—Disappearance of dispute resulting in claim no longer having any object—Jurisdiction only to be exercised when dispute genuinely exists between the Parties.

JUDGMENT

Present: President LACHS; Judges FORSTER, GROS, BENGZON, PETRÉN, ONYEAMA, DILLARD, IGNACIO-PINTO, DE CASTRO, MOROZOV, JIMÉNEZ DE ARÉCHAGA, Sir Humphrey WALDOCK, NAGENDRA SINGH, RUDA; Judge ad hoc Sir Garfield BARWICK; Registrar AQUARONE.

In the Nuclear Tests case, between

Australia,

represented by

Mr. P. Brazil, of the Australian Bar, Officer of the Australian Attorney-General's Department, as Agent,

assisted by

H.E. Mr. F. J. Blakeney, C.B.E., Ambassador of Australia,
as Co-Agent,

Senator the Honourable Lionel Murphy, Q.C., Attorney-General of Australia,

Mr. M. H. Byers, Q.C., Solicitor-General of Australia,

Mr. E. Lauterpacht, Q.C., of the English Bar, Lecturer in the University of Cambridge,

Professor D. P. O'Connell, of the English, Australian and New Zealand Bars, Chichele Professor of Public International Law in the University of Oxford,

as Counsel, and by

Professor H. Messel, Head of School of Physics, University of Sydney,

Mr. D. J. Stevens, Director, Australian Radiation Laboratory,

Mr. H. Burmester, of the Australian Bar, Officer of the Attorney-General's Department,

Mr. F. M. Douglas, of the Australian Bar, Officer of the Attorney-General's Department,

Mr. J. F. Browne, of the Australian Bar, Officer of the Department of Foreign Affairs,

Mr. C. D. Mackenzie, of the Australian Bar, Third Secretary, Australian Embassy, The Hague,

as Advisers,

and

the French Republic,

THE COURT,

composed as above,

delivers the following Judgment:

1. By a letter of 9 May 1973, received in the Registry of the Court the same day, the Ambassador of Australia to the Netherlands transmitted to the Registrar an Application instituting proceedings against France in respect of a dispute concerning the holding of atmospheric tests of nuclear weapons by the French Government in the Pacific Ocean. In order to found to the jurisdiction of the Court, the Application relied on Article 17 of the General Act for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes done at Geneva on 26 September 1928, read together with Articles 36, paragraph 1, and 37 of the Statute of the Court, and alternatively on Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute of the Court.

2. Pursuant to Article 40, paragraph 2, of the Statute, the Application was at once communicated to the French Government. In accordance with paragraph 3 of that Article, all other States entitled to appear before the Court were notified of the Application.

3. Pursuant to Article 31, paragraph 2, of the Statute of the Court, the Government of Australia chose the Right Honourable Sir Garfield Barwick, Chief Justice of Australia, to sit as judge ad hoc in the case.

4. By a letter dated 16 May 1973 from the Ambassador of France to the Netherlands, handed by him to the Registrar the same day, the French Government stated that, for reasons set out in the letter and an Annex thereto, it considered that the Court was manifestly not competent in the case, and that it could not accept the Court's jurisdiction; and that accordingly the French Government did not intend to appoint an agent, and requested the Court to remove the case from its list. Nor has an agent been appointed by the French Government.

5. On 9 May 1973, the date of filing of the Application instituting proceedings, the Agent of Australia also filed in the Registry of the Court a request for the indication of interim measures of protection under Article 33 of the 1928 General Act for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes and Article 41 of the Statute and Article 66 of the Rules of Court. By an Order dated 22 June 1973 the Court indicated, on the basis of Article 41 of the Statute, certain interim measures of protection in the case.

6. By the same Order of 22 June 1973, the Court, considering that it was necessary to resolve as soon as possible the questions of the Court's jurisdiction and of the admissibility of the Application, decided that the written proceedings should first be addressed to the questions of the jurisdiction of the Court to entertain the dispute and of the admissibility of the Application, and fixed 21 September 1973 as the time-limit for the filing of a Memorial by the Government of Australia and 21 December 1973 as the time-limit for a Counter-Memorial by the French Government. The Co-Agent of Australia having requested an extension to 23 November 1973 of the time-limit fixed for the filing of the Memorial, the time-limits fixed by the Order of 22 June 1973 were extended, by an Order dated 28 August 1973, to 23 November 1973 for the Memorial and 19 April 1974 for the Counter-Memorial. The Memorial of the Government of Australia was filed within the extended time-limit fixed therefor, and was communicated to the French Government. No Counter-Memorial was filed by the French Government and, the written proceedings being thus closed, the case was ready for hearing on 20 April 1974, the day following the expiration of the time-limit fixed for the Counter-Memorial of the French Government.

7. On 16 May 1973 the Government of Fiji filed in the Registry of the Court a request under Article 62 of the Statute to be permitted to intervene in these proceedings. By an Order of 12 July 1973 the Court, having regard to its Order of 22 June 1973 by which the written proceedings were first to be addressed to the questions of the jurisdiction of the Court and of the admissibility of the Application, decided to defer its consideration of the application of the Government of Fiji for permission to intervene until the Court should have pronounced upon these questions.

8. On 24 July 1973, the Registrar addressed the notification provided for in Article 63 of the Statute to the States, other than the Parties to the case, which were still in existence and were listed in the relevant documents of the League of Nations as parties to the General Act for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, done at Geneva on 26 September 1928, which was invoked in the Application as a basis of jurisdiction.

9. The Governments of Argentina, Fiji, New Zealand and Peru requested that the pleadings and annexed documents should be made available to them in accordance with Article 48, paragraph 2, of the Rules of Court. The Parties were consulted on each occasion, and the French Government having maintained the position stated in the letter of 16 May 1973, and thus declined to express an opinion, the Court or the President decided to accede to these requests.

10. On 4-6, 8-9 and 11 July 1974, after due notice to the Parties, public hearings were held, in the course of which the Court heard the oral argument, on the questions of the Court's jurisdiction and of the admissibility of the Application, advanced by Mr. P. Brazil, Agent of Australia and Senator the Honourable Lionel Murphy, Q.C., Mr. M. H. Byers, Q.C., Mr. E. Lauterpacht, Q.C., and Professor D. P. O'Connell, counsel, on behalf of the Government of Australia. The French Government was not represented at the hearings.

11. In the course of the written proceedings, the following submissions were presented on behalf of the Government of Australia:

in the Application:

"The Government of Australia asks the Court to adjudge and declare that, for the above-mentioned reasons or any of them or for any other reason that the Court deems to be relevant, the carrying out of further atmospheric nuclear weapon tests in the South Pacific Ocean is not consistent with applicable rules of international law.

And to Order that the French Republic shall not carry out any further such tests."

in the Memorial:

"The Government of Australia submits to the Court that it is entitled to a declaration and judgment that:

- (a) the Court has jurisdiction to entertain the dispute, the subject of the Application filed by the Government of Australia on 9 May 1973; and*
- (b) the Application is admissible."*

12. During the oral proceedings, the following written submissions were filed in the Registry of the Court on behalf of the Government of Australia:

"The final submissions of the Government of Australia are that:

- (a) the Court has jurisdiction to entertain the dispute the subject of the Application filed by the Government of Australia on 9 May 1973; and*
- (b) the Application is admissible* and that accordingly the Government of Australia is entitled to a declaration and judgment that the Court has full competence to proceed to entertain the Application by Australia on the Merits of the dispute."

13. No pleadings were filed by the French Government, and it was not represented at the oral proceedings; no formal submissions were therefor made by that Government. The attitude of the French Government with regard to the question of the Court's jurisdiction was however defined in the above-mentioned letter of 16 May 1973 from the French Ambassador to the Netherlands, and the document annexed thereto. The said letter stated in particular that:

“... the Government of the [French] Republic, as it has notified the Australian Government, considers that the Court is manifestly not competent in this case and that it cannot accept its jurisdiction”.

*
*   *
*

14. As indicated above (paragraph 4), the letter from the French Ambassador of 16 May 1973 also stated that the French Government “respectfully requests the Court to be so good as to order that the case be removed from the list”. At the opening of the public hearing concerning the request for interim measures of protection, held on 21 May 1973, the President announced that “this request . . . has been duly noted, and the Court will deal with it in due course, in application of Article 36, paragraph 6, of the Statute of the Court”. In its Order of 22 June 1973, the Court stated that the considerations therein set out did not “permit the Court to accede at the present stage of the proceedings” to that request. Having now had the opportunity of examining the request in the light of the subsequent proceedings, the Court finds that the present case is not one in which the procedure of summary removal from the list would be appropriate.

*
*   *
*

15. It is to be regretted that the French Government has failed to appear in order to put forward its arguments on the issues arising in the present phase of the proceedings, and the Court has thus not had the assistance it might have derived from such arguments or from any evidence adduced in support of them. The Court nevertheless has to proceed and reach a conclusion, and in doing so must have regard not only to the evidence brought before it and the arguments addressed to it by the Applicant, but also to any documentary or other evidence which may be relevant. It must on this basis satisfy itself, first that there exists no bar to the exercise of its judicial function, and secondly, if no such bar exists, that the Application is well founded in fact and in law.

*
*   *
*

16. The present case relates to a dispute between the Government of Australia and the French Government concerning the holding of atmospheric tests of nuclear weapons by the latter Government in the South Pacific Ocean. Since in the present phase of the proceedings the Court has to deal only with preliminary matters, it is appropriate to recall that its approach to a phase of this kind must be, as it was expressed in the Fisheries Jurisdiction cases, as follows:

“The issue being thus limited, the Court will avoid not only all expressions of opinion on matters of substance, but also any pronouncement which might prejudice or appear to prejudice any eventual decision on the merits.” (I.C.J. Reports 1973, pp. 7 and 54.)

It will however be necessary to give a summary of the principal facts underlying the case.

17. Prior to the filing of the Application instituting proceedings in this case, the French Government had carried out atmospheric tests of nuclear devices at its Centre d'expérimentations du Pacifique, in the territory of French Polynesia, in the years 1966, 1967, 1968, 1970, 1971 and 1972. The main firing site used has been Mururoa atoll some 6,000 kilometres to the east of the Australian mainland. The French Government has created “Prohibited Zones” for aircraft and “Dangerous Zones” for aircraft and shipping, in order to exclude aircraft and shipping from the area of the tests centre; these “zones” have been put into effect during the period of testing in each year in which tests have been carried out.

18. As the United Nations Scientific Committee on the Effects of Atomic Radiation has recorded in its successive reports to the General Assembly, the testing of nuclear devices in the atmosphere has entailed the release into the atmosphere, and the consequent dissipation in varying degrees throughout the world, of measurable quantities of radioactive matter. It is asserted by Australia that the French atmospheric tests have caused some fall-out of this kind to be deposited on Australian territory; France has maintained in particular that the radio-active matter produced by its tests has been so infinitesimal that it may be regarded as negligible, and that such fall-out on Australian territory does not constitute a danger to the health of the Australian population. These disputed points are clearly matters going to the merits of the case, and the Court must therefore refrain, for the reasons given above, from expressing any view on them.

*
*       *
*

19. By letters of 19 September 1973, 29 August and 11 November 1974, the Government of Australia informed the Court that subsequent to the Court's Order of 22 June 1973 indicating, as interim measures under Article 41 of the Statute (inter alia) that the French Government should avoid nuclear tests causing the deposit of radio-active fall-out in Australian territory, two further series of atmospheric tests, in the months of July and August 1973 and June to September 1974, had been carried out at the Centre d'expérimentations du Pacifique. The letters also stated that fall-out had been recorded on Australian territory which, according to the Australian Government, was clearly attributable to these tests, and that “in the opinion of the Government of Australia the conduct of the French Government constitutes a clear and deliberate breach of the Order of the Court of 22 June 1973”.

20. Recently a number of authoritative statements have been made on behalf of the French Government concerning its intentions as to future nuclear testing in the South Pacific Ocean. The significance of these statements, and their effect for the purposes of the present proceedings, will be examined in detail later in the present Judgment.

*
*       *
*

21. The Application finds the jurisdiction of the Court on the following basis:

“(i) Article 17 of the General Act for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, 1928, read together with Articles 36 (1) and 37 of the Statute of the Court. Australia and the French Republic both acceded to the General Act on 21 May 1931 . . .

(ii) Alternatively, Article 36 (2) of the Statute of the Court. Australia and the French Republic have both made declarations thereunder.”

22. The scope of the present phase of the proceedings was defined by the Court’s Order of 22 June 1973, by which the Parties were called upon to argue, in the first instance, questions of the jurisdiction of the Court and the admissibility of the Application. For this reason, as already indicated, not only the Parties but also the Court itself must refrain from entering into the merits of the claim. However, while examining these questions of a preliminary character, the Court is entitled, and in some circumstances may be required, to go into other questions which may not be strictly capable of classification as matters of jurisdiction or admissibility but are of such a nature as to require examination in priority to those matters.

23. In this connection, it should be emphasized that the Court possesses an inherent jurisdiction enabling it to take such action as may be required, on the one hand to ensure that the exercise of its jurisdiction over the merits, if and when established, shall not be frustrated, and on the other, to provide for the orderly settlement of all matters in dispute, to ensure the observance of the “inherent limitations on the exercise of the judicial function” of the Court, and to “maintain its judicial character” (Northern Cameroons, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1963, at p. 29). Such inherent jurisdiction, on the basis of which the Court is fully empowered to make whatever findings may be necessary for the purposes just indicated, derives from the mere existence of the Court as a judicial organ established by the consent of States, and is conferred upon it in order that its basic judicial functions may be safeguarded.

24. With these considerations in mind, the Court has first to examine a question which it finds to be essentially preliminary, namely the existence of a dispute, for, whether or not the Court has jurisdiction in the present case, the resolution of that question could exert a decisive influence on the continuation of the proceedings. It will therefore be necessary to make a detailed analysis of the claim submitted to the Court by the Application of Australia. The present phase of the proceedings having been devoted solely to preliminary questions, the Applicant has not had the opportunity of fully expounding its contentions on the merits. However the Application, which is required by Article 40 of the Statute of the Court to indicate "the subject of the dispute", must be the point of reference for the consideration by the Court of the nature and existence of the dispute brought before it.

25. The Court would recall that the submission made in the Application (paragraph 11 above) is that the Court should adjudge and declare that "the carrying out of further atmospheric nuclear weapon tests in the South Pacific Ocean is not consistent with applicable rules of international law"—the Application having specified in what respect further tests were alleged to be in violation of international law—and should order "that the French Republic shall not carry out any further such tests".

26. The diplomatic correspondence of recent years between Australia and France reveals Australia's preoccupation with French nuclear atmospheric tests in the South Pacific region, and indicates that its objective has been to bring about their termination. Thus in a Note dated 3 January 1973 the Australian Government made it clear that it was inviting the French Government "to refrain from any further atmospheric nuclear tests in the Pacific area and formally to assure the Australian Government that no more such tests will be held in the Pacific area". In the Application, the Government of Australia observed in connection with this Note (and the French reply of 7 February 1973) that:

"It is at these Notes, of 3 January and 7 February 1973, that the Court is respectfully invited to look most closely; for it is in them that the shape and dimensions of the dispute which now so sadly divides the parties appear so clearly. The Government of Australia claimed that the continuance of testing by France is illegal and called for the cessation of tests. The Government of France asserted the legality of its conduct and gave no indication that the tests would stop." (Para. 15 of the Application.)

That this was the object of the claim also clearly emerges from the request for the indication of interim measures of protection, submitted to the Court by the Applicant on 9 May 1973, in which it was observed:

"As is stated in the Application, Australia has sought to obtain from the French Republic a permanent undertaking to refrain from further atmospheric nuclear tests in the Pacific. However, the French Republic has expressly refused to give any such undertaking. It was made clear in a statement in the French Parliament on 2 May 1973 by the French Secretary of State for the Armies that the French Government, regardless of the protests made by Australia and other countries, does not envisage any cancellation or modification of the programme of nuclear testing as originally planned.” (Para. 69.)

27. Further light is thrown on the nature of the Australian claim by the reaction of Australia, through its Attorney-General, to statements, referred to in paragraph 20 above, made on behalf of France and relating to nuclear tests in the South Pacific Ocean. In the course of the oral proceedings, the Attorney-General of Australia outlined the history of the dispute subsequent to the Order of 22 June 1973, and included in this review mention of a communiqué issued by the Office of the President of the French Republic on 8 June 1974. The Attorney-General’s comments on this document indicated that it merited analysis as possible evidence of a certain development in the controversy between the Parties, though at the same time he made it clear that this development was not, in his Government’s view, of such a nature as to resolve the dispute to its satisfaction. More particularly he reminded the Court that “Australia has consistently stated that it would welcome a French statement to the effect that no further atmospheric nuclear tests would be conducted ... but no such assurance was given”. The Attorney-General continued, with reference to the communiqué of 8 June:

“The concern of the Australian Government is to exclude completely atmospheric testing. It has repeatedly sought assurances that atmospheric tests will end. It has not received those assurances. The recent French Presidential statement cannot be read as a firm, explicit and binding undertaking to refrain from further atmospheric tests. It follows that the Government of France is still reserving to itself the right to carry out atmospheric nuclear tests.” (Hearing of 4 July 1974.)

It is clear from these statements that if the French Government had given what could have been construed by Australia as “a firm, explicit and binding undertaking to refrain from further atmospheric tests”, the applicant Government would have regarded its objective as having been achieved.

28. Subsequently, on 26 September 1974, the Attorney-General of Australia, replying to a question put in the Australian Senate with regard to reports that France had announced that it had finished atmospheric nuclear testing, said:

“From the reports I have received it appears that what the French Foreign Minister actually said was ‘We have now reached a stage in our nuclear technology that makes it possible for us to continue our program by underground testing, and we have taken steps to do so as early as next year' . . . this statement falls far short of a commitment or undertaking that there will be no more atmospheric tests conducted by the French Government at its Pacific Tests Centre . . . There is a basic distinction between an assertion that steps are being taken to continue the testing program by underground testing as early as next year and an assurance that no further atmospheric tests will take place. It seems that the Government of France, while apparently taking a step in the right direction, is still reserving to itself the right to carry out atmospheric nuclear tests. In legal terms, Australia has nothing from the French Government which protects it against any further atmospheric tests should the French Government subsequently decide to hold them."

Without commenting for the moment on the Attorney-General's interpretation of the French statements brought to his notice, the Court would observe that it is clear that the Australian Government contemplated the possibility of "an assurance that no further atmospheric tests will take place" being sufficient to protect Australia.

29. In the light of these statements, it is essential to consider whether the Government of Australia requests a judgment by the Court which would only state the legal relationship between the Applicant and the Respondent with regard to the matters in issue, or a judgment of a type which in terms requires one or both of the Parties to take, or refrain from taking, some action. Thus it is the Court's duty to isolate the real issue in the case and to identify the object of the claim. It has never been contended that the Court is entitled to interpret the submissions of the parties, and in fact is bound to do so; this is one of the attributes of its judicial functions. It is true that, when the claim is not properly formulated because the submissions of the parties are inadequate, the Court has no power to "substitute itself for them and formulate new submissions simply on the basis of arguments and facts advanced" (P.C.I.J., Series A, No. 7, p. 35), but that is not the case here, nor is it a case of the reformulation of submissions by the Court. The Court has on the other hand repeatedly exercised the power to exclude, when necessary, certain contentions or arguments which were advanced by a party as part of the submissions, but which were regarded by the Court, not as indications of what the party was asking the Court to decide, but as reasons advanced why the Court should decide in the sense contended for by that party. Thus in the Fisheries case, the Court said of nine of the thirteen points in the Applicant's submissions: "These are elements which might furnish reasons in support of the Judgment, but cannot constitute the decision"

(I.C.J. Reports 1951, p. 126). Similarly in the Minquiers and Ecrehos case, the Court observed that:

“The Submissions reproduced above and presented by the United Kingdom Government consist of three paragraphs, the last two being reasons underlying the first, which must be regarded as the final Submission of that Government. The Submissions of the French Government consist of ten paragraphs, the first nine being reasons leading up to the last, which must be regarded as the final Submission of that Government.” (I.C.J. Reports 1953, p. 52; see also Nottebohm, Second Phase, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1955, p. 16.)

30. In the circumstances of the present case, although the Applicant has in its Application used the traditional formula of asking the Court “to adjudge and declare” (a formula similar to those used in the cases quoted in the previous paragraph), the Court must ascertain the true object and purpose of the claim and in doing so it cannot confine itself to the ordinary meaning of the words used; it must take into account the Application as a whole, the arguments of the Applicant before the Court, the diplomatic exchanges brought to the Court’s attention, and public statements made on behalf of the applicant Government. If these clearly circumscribe the object of the claim, the interpretation of the submissions must necessarily be affected. In the present case, it is evident that the fons et origo of the case was the atmospheric nuclear tests conducted by France in the South Pacific region, and that the original and ultimate objective of the Applicant was and has remained to obtain a termination of those tests; thus its claim cannot be regarded as being a claim for a declaratory judgment. While the judgment of the Court which Australia seeks to obtain would in its view have been based on a finding by the Court on questions of law, such finding would be only a means to an end, and not an end in itself. The Court is of course aware of the role of declaratory judgments, but the present case is not one in which such a judgment is requested.

31. In view of the object of the Applicant’s claim, namely to prevent further tests, the Court has to take account of any developments, since the filing of the Application, bearing upon the conduct of the Respondent. Moreover, as already mentioned, the Applicant itself impliedly recognized the possible relevance of events subsequent to the Application, by drawing the Court’s attention to the communiqué of 8 June 1974, and making observations thereon. In these circumstances the Court is bound to take note of further developments, both prior to and subsequent to the close of the oral proceedings. In view of the non-appearance of the Respondent, it is especially incumbent upon the Court to satisfy itself that it is in possession of all the available facts.

32. At the hearing of 4 July 1974, in the course of a review of developments in relation to the proceedings since counsel for Australia had previously addressed the Court in May 1973, the Attorney-General of Australia made the following statement:

“You will recall that Australia has consistently stated it would welcome a French statement to the effect that no further atmospheric nuclear tests would be conducted. Indeed as the Court will remember such an assurance was sought of the French Government by the Australian Government by note dated 3 January 1973, but no such assurance was given.

I should remind the Court that in paragraph 427 of its Memorial the Australian Government made a statement, then completely accurate, to the effect that the French Government had given no indication of any intention of departing from the programme of testing planned for 1974 and 1975. That statement will need now to be read in light of the matters to which I now turn and which deal with the official communications by the French Government of its present plans.”

He devoted considerable attention to a communiqué dated 8 June 1974 from the Office of the President of the French Republic, and submitted to the Court the Australian Government's interpretation of that document. Since that time, certain French authorities have made a number of consistent public statements concerning future tests, which provide material facilitating the Court's task of assessing the Applicant's interpretation of the earlier documents, and which indeed require to be examined in order to discern whether they embody any modification of intention as to France's future conduct. It is true that these statements have not been made before the Court, but they are in the public domain, and are known to the Australian Government, and one of them was commented on by the Attorney-General in the Australian Senate on 26 September 1974. It will clearly be necessary to consider all these statements, both that drawn to the Court's attention in July 1974 and those subsequently made.

33. It would no doubt have been possible for the Court, had it considered that the interests of justice so required, to have afforded the Parties the opportunity, e.g., by reopening the oral proceedings, of addressing to the Court comments on the statements made since the close of those proceedings. Such a course however would have been fully justified only if the matter dealt with in those statements had been completely new, had not been raised during the proceedings, or was unknown to the Parties. This is manifestly not the case. The essential material which the Court must examine was introduced into the proceedings by the Applicant itself, by no means incidentally, during the course of the hearings, when it drew the Court's attention to a statement by the French authorities made prior to that date, submitted the documents containing it and presented an interpretation of its character, touching particularly upon the question whether it contained a firm assurance. Thus both the statement and the Australian interpretation of it are before the Court pursuant to action by the Applicant. Moreover, the Applicant subsequently publicly expressed its comments (see paragraph 28 above) on statements made by the French authorities since the closure of the oral proceedings. The Court is therefore in possession not only of the statements made by French authorities concerning the cessation of atmospheric nuclear testing, but also of the views of the Applicant on them. Although as a judicial body the Court is conscious of the importance of the principle expressed in the maxim audi alteram partem, it does not consider that this principle precludes the Court from taking account of statements made subsequently to the oral proceedings, and which merely supplement and reinforce matters already discussed in the course of the proceedings, statements with which the Applicant must be familiar. Thus the Applicant, having commented on the statements of the French authorities, both that made prior to the oral proceedings and those made subsequently, could reasonably expect that the Court would deal with the matter and come to its own conclusion on the meaning and effect of those statements. The Court, having taken note of the Applicant's comments, and feeling no obligation to consult the Parties on the basis for its decision finds that the reopening of the oral proceedings would serve no useful purpose.

34. It will be convenient to take the statements referred to above in chronological order. The first statement is contained in the communiqué issued by the Office of the President of the French Republic on 8 June 1974, shortly before the commencement of the 1974 series of French nuclear tests:

“The Decree reintroducing the security measures in the South Pacific nuclear test zone has been published in the Official Journal of 8 June 1974.

The Office of the President of the Republic takes this opportunity of stating that in view of the stage reached in carrying out the French nuclear defence programme France will be in a position to pass on to the stage of underground explosions as soon as the series of tests planned for this summer is completed.”

A copy of the communiqué was transmitted with a Note dated 11 June 1974 from the French Embassy in Canberra to the Australian Department of Foreign Affairs, and as already mentioned, the text of the communiqué was brought to the attention of the Court in the course of the oral proceedings.

35. In addition to this, the Court cannot fail to take note of a reference to a document made by counsel at a public hearing in the proceedings, parallel to this case, instituted by New Zealand against France on 9 May 1973. At the hearing of 10 July 1974 in that case, the Attorney-General of New Zealand, after referring to the communiqué of 8 June 1974, mentioned above, stated that on 10 June 1974 the French Embassy in Wellington sent a Note to the New Zealand Ministry of Foreign Affairs, containing a passage which the Attorney General read out, and which, in the translation used by New Zealand, runs as follows:

“France, at the point which has been reached in the execution of its programme of defence by nuclear means, will be in a position to move to the stage of underground tests, as soon as the test series planned for this summer is completed.

Thus the atmospheric tests which are soon to be carried out will, in the normal course of events, be the last of this type.”

36. The Court will also have to consider the relevant statements made by the French authorities subsequently to the oral proceedings: on 25 July 1974 by the President of the Republic; on 16 August 1974 by the Minister of Defence; on 25 September 1974 by the Minister for Foreign Affairs in the United Nations General Assembly; and on 11 October 1974 by the Minister of Defence.

37. The next statement to be considered, therefore, will be that made on 25 July at a press conference given by the President of the Republic, when he said:

“... on this question of nuclear tests, you know that the Prime Minister had publicly expressed himself in the National Assembly in his speech introducing the Government’s programme. He had indicated that French nuclear testing would continue. I had myself made it clear that this round of atmospheric tests would be the last, and so the members of the Government were completely informed of our intentions in this respect . . .”

38. On 16 August 1974, in the course of an interview on French television, the Minister of Defence said that the French Government had done its best to ensure that the 1974 nuclear tests would be the last atmospheric tests.

39. On 25 September 1974, the French Minister for Foreign Affairs, addressing the United Nations General Assembly, said:

“We have now reached a stage in our nuclear technology that makes it possible for us to continue our programme by underground testing, and we have taken steps to do so as early as next year.”

40. On 11 October 1974, the Minister of Defence held a press conference during which he stated twice, in almost identical terms, that there would not be any atmospheric tests in 1975 and that France was ready to proceed to underground tests. When the comment was made that he had not added “in the normal course of events”, he agreed that he had not. This latter point is relevant in view of the passage from the Note of 10 June 1974 from the French Embassy in Wellington to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of New Zealand, quoted in paragraph 35 above, to the effect that the atmospheric tests contemplated “will, in the normal course of events, be the last of this type”. The Minister also mentioned that, whether or not other governments had been officially advised of the decision, they could become aware of it through the press and by reading the communiqués issued by the Office of the President of the Republic.

41. In view of the foregoing, the Court finds that France made public its intention to cease the conduct of atmospheric nuclear tests following the conclusion of the 1974 series of tests. The Court must in particular take into consideration the President's statement of 25 July 1974 (paragraph 37 above) followed by the Defence Minister's statement on 11 October 1974 (paragraph 40). These reveal that the official statements made on behalf of France concerning future nuclear testing are not subject to whatever proviso, if any, was implied by the expression "in the normal course of events [normalement]".

*
*      *

42. Before considering whether the declarations made by the French authorities meet the object of the claim by the Applicant that no further atmospheric nuclear tests should be carried out in the South Pacific, it is first necessary to determine the status and scope on the international plane of these declarations.

43. It is well recognized that declarations made by way of unilateral acts, concerning legal or factual situations, may have the effect of creating legal obligations. Declarations of this kind may be, and often are, very specific. When it is the intention of the State making the declaration that it should become bound according to its terms, that intention confers on the declaration the character of a legal undertaking, the State being thenceforth legally required to follow a course of conduct consistent with the declaration. An undertaking of this kind, if given publicly, and with an intent to be bound, even though not made within the context of international negotiations, is binding. In these circumstances, nothing in the nature of a quid pro quo nor any subsequent acceptance of the declaration, nor even any reply or reaction from other States, is required for the declaration to take effect, since such a requirement would be inconsistent with the strictly unilateral nature of the juridical act by which the pronouncement by the State was made.

44. Of course, not all unilateral acts imply obligation; but a State may choose to take up a certain position in relation to a particular matter with the intention of being bound—the intention is to be ascertained by interpretation of the act. When States make statements by which their freedom of action is to be limited, a restrictive interpretation is called for.

45. With regard to the question of form, it should be observed that this is not a domain in which international law imposes any special or strict requirements. Whether a statement is made orally or in writing makes no essential difference, for such statements made in particular circumstances may create commitments in international law, which does not require that they should be couched in written form. Thus the question of form is not decisive. As the Court said in its Judgment on the preliminary objections in the case concerning the Temple of Preah Vihear:

“Where . . . as is generally the case in international law, which places the principal emphasis on the intentions of the parties, the law prescribes no particular form, parties are free to choose what form they please provided their intention clearly results from it.”
(I.C.J. Reports 1961, p. 31.)

The Court further stated in the same case: “. . . the sole relevant question is whether the language employed in any given declaration does reveal a clear intention . . .” (ibid., p. 32).

46. One of the basic principles governing the creation and performance of legal obligations, whatever their source, is the principle of good faith. Trust and confidence are inherent in international co-operation, in particular in an age when this co-operation in many fields is becoming increasingly essential. Just as the very rule of pacta sunt servanda in the law of treaties is based on good faith, so also is the binding character of an international obligation assumed by unilateral declaration. Thus interested States may take cognizance of unilateral declarations and place confidence in them, and are entitled to require that the obligation thus created be respected.

*
*   *   *

47. Having examined the legal principles involved, the Court will now turn to the particular statements made by the French Government. The Government of Australia has made known to the Court at the oral proceedings its own interpretation of the first such statement (paragraph 27 above). As to subsequent statements, reference may be made to what was said in the Australian Senate by the Attorney-General on 26 September 1974 (paragraph 28 above). In reply to a question concerning reports that France had announced that it had finished atmospheric nuclear testing, he said that the statement of the French Foreign Minister on 25 September (paragraph 39 above) “falls far short of an undertaking that there will be no more atmospheric tests conducted by the French Government at its Pacific Tests Centre” and that France was “still reserving to itself the right to carry out atmospheric nuclear tests” so that “In legal terms, Australia has nothing from the French Government which protects it against any further atmospheric tests”.

48. It will be observed that Australia has recognized the possibility of the dispute being resolved by a unilateral declaration, of the kind specified above, on the part of France, and its conclusion that in fact no “commitment” or “firm, explicit and binding undertaking” had been given is based on the view that the assurance is not absolute in its terms, that there is a “distinction between an assertion that tests will go underground and an assurance that no further atmospheric tests will take place”, that “the possibility of further atmospheric testing taking place after the commencement of underground tests cannot be excluded” and that thus “the Government of France is still reserving to itself the right to carry out atmospheric nuclear tests”. The Court must however form its own view of the meaning and scope intended by the author of a unilateral declaration which may create a legal obligation, and cannot in this respect be bound by the view expressed by another State which is in no way a party to the text.

49. Of the statements by the French Government now before the Court, the most essential are clearly those made by the President of the Republic. There can be no doubt, in view of his functions, that his public communications or statements, oral or written, as Head of State, are in international relations acts of the French State. His statements, and those of members of the French Government acting under his authority, up to the last statement made by the Minister of Defence (of 11 October 1974), constitute a whole. Thus, in whatever form these statements were expressed, they must be held to constitute an engagement of the State, having regard to their intention and to the circumstances in which they were made.

50. The unilateral statements of the French authorities were made outside the Court, publicly and erga omnes, even though the first of them was communicated to the Government of Australia. As was observed above, to have legal effect, there was no need for these statements to be addressed to a particular State, nor was acceptance by any other State required. The general nature and characteristics of these statements are decisive for the evaluation of the legal implications, and it is to the interpretation of the statements that the Court must now proceed. The Court is entitled to presume, at the outset, that these statements were not made in vacuo, but in relation to the tests which constitute the very object of the present proceedings, although France has not appeared in the case.

51. In announcing that the 1974 series of atmospheric tests would be the last, the French Government conveyed to the world at large, including the Applicant, its intention effectively to terminate these tests. It was bound to assume that other States might take note of these statements and rely on their being effective. The validity of these statements and their legal consequences must be considered within the general framework of the security of international intercourse, and the confidence and trust which are so essential in the relations among States. It is from the actual substance of these statements, and from the circumstances attending their making, that the legal implications of the unilateral act must be deduced. The objects of these statements are clear and they were addressed to the international community as a whole, and the Court holds that they constitute an undertaking possessing legal effect. The Court considers that the President of the Republic, in deciding upon the effective cessation of atmospheric tests, gave an undertaking to the international community to which his words were addressed. It is true that the French Government has consistently maintained, for example in a Note dated 7 February 1973 from the French Ambassador in Canberra to the Prime Minister and Minister for Foreign Affairs of Australia, that it "has the conviction that its nuclear experiments have not violated any rule of international law", nor did France recognize that it was bound by any rule of international law to terminate its tests, but this does not affect the legal consequences of the statements examined above. The Court finds that the unilateral undertaking resulting from these statements cannot be interpreted as having been made in implicit reliance on an arbitrary power of reconsideration. The Court finds further that the French Government has undertaken an obligation the precise nature and limits of which must be understood in accordance with the actual terms in which they have been publicly expressed.

52. Thus the Court faces a situation in which the objective of the Applicant has in effect been accomplished, inasmuch as the Court finds that France has undertaken the obligation to hold no further nuclear tests in the atmosphere in the South Pacific.

53. The Court finds that no question of damages arises in the present case, since no such claim has been raised by the Applicant either prior to or during the proceedings, and the original and ultimate objective of Applicant has been to seek protection "against any further atmospheric test" (see paragraph 28 above).

54. It would of course have been open to Australia, if it had considered that the case had in effect been concluded, to discontinue the proceedings in accordance with the Rules of Court. If it has not done so, this does not prevent the Court from making its own independent finding on the subject. It is true that "the Court cannot take into account declarations, admissions or proposals which the Parties may have made during direct negotiations between themselves, when such negotiations have not led to a complete agreement" (Factory at Chorzów (Merits), P.C.I.J., Series A, No. 17, p. 51). However, in the present case, that is not the situation before the Court. The Applicant has clearly indicated what would satisfy its claim, and the Respondent has independently taken action; the question for the Court is thus one of interpretation of the conduct of each of the Parties. The conclusion at which the Court has arrived as a result of such interpretation does not mean that it is itself effecting a compromise of the claim; the Court is merely ascertaining the object of the claim and the effect of the Respondent's action, and this it is obliged to do. Any suggestion that the dispute would not be capable of being terminated by statements made on behalf of France would run counter to the unequivocally expressed views of the Applicant both before the Court and elsewhere.

55. The Court, as a court of law, is called upon to resolve existing disputes between States. Thus the existence of a dispute is the primary condition for the Court to exercise its judicial function; it is not sufficient for one party to assert that there is a dispute, since "whether there exists an international dispute is a matter for objective determination" by the Court (Interpretation of Peace Treaties with Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania (First Phase), Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 1950, p. 74). The dispute brought before it must therefore continue to exist at the time when the Court makes its decision. It must not fail to take cognizance of a situation in which the dispute has disappeared because the object of the claim has been achieved by other means. If the declarations of France concerning the effective cessation of the nuclear tests have the significance described by the Court, that is to say if they have caused the dispute to disappear, all the necessary consequences must be drawn from this finding.

56. It may be argued that although France may have undertaken such an obligation, by a unilateral declaration, not to carry out atmospheric nuclear tests in the South Pacific Ocean, a judgment of the Court on this subject might still be of value because, if the judgment upheld the Applicant's contentions, it would reinforce the position of the Applicant by affirming the obligation of the Respondent. However, the Court having found that the Respondent has assumed an obligation as to conduct, concerning the effective cessation of nuclear tests, no further judicial action is required. The Applicant has repeatedly sought from the Respondent an assurance that the tests would cease, and the Respondent has, on its own initiative, made a series of statements to the effect that they will cease. Thus the Court concludes that, the dispute having disappeared, the claim advanced by Australia no longer has any object. It follows that any further finding would have no raison d'être.

57. This is not to say that the Court may select from the cases submitted to it those it feels suitable for judgment while refusing to give judgment in others. Article 38 of the Court's Statute provides that its function is "to decide in accordance with international law such disputes as are submitted to it"; but not only Article 38 itself but other provisions of the Statute and Rules also make it clear that the Court can exercise its jurisdiction in contentious proceedings only when a dispute genuinely exists between the parties. In refraining from further action in this case the Court is therefore merely acting in accordance with the proper interpretation of its judicial function.

58. The Court has in the past indicated considerations which would lead it to decline to give judgment. The present case is one in which "circumstances that have . . . arisen render any adjudication devoid of purpose" (Northern Cameroons, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1963, p. 38). The Court therefore sees no reason to allow the continuance of proceedings which it knows are bound to be fruitless. While judicial settlement may provide a path to international harmony in circumstances of conflict, it is none the less true that the needless continuance of litigation is an obstacle to such harmony.

59. Thus the Court finds that no further pronouncement is required in the present case. It does not enter into the adjudicatory functions of the Court to deal with issues in abstracto, once it has reached the conclusion that the merits of the case no longer fall to be determined. The object of the claim having clearly disappeared, there is nothing on which to give judgment.

*
*   *   *

60. Once the Court has found that a State has entered into a commitment concerning its future conduct it is not the Court's function to contemplate that it will not comply with it. However, the Court observes that if the basis of this Judgment were to be affected, the Applicant could request an examination of the situation in accordance with the provisions of the Statute; the denunciation by France, by letter dated 2 January 1974, of the General Act for the Pacific Settlement of International Disputes, which is relied on as a basis of jurisdiction in the present case, cannot by itself constitute an obstacle to the presentation of such a request.

*
*   *   *

61. In its above-mentioned Order of 22 June 1973, the Court stated that the provisional measures therein set out were indicated "pending its final decision in the proceedings instituted on 9 May 1973 by Australia against France". It follows that such Order ceases to be operative upon the delivery of the present Judgment, and that the provisional measures lapse at the same time.

*
*   *   *

62. For these reasons,

THE COURT,

by nine votes to six, finds that the claim of Australia no longer has any object and that the Court is therefore not called upon to give a decision thereon.

Done in English and in French, the English text being authoritative, at the Peace Palace, The Hague, this twentieth day of December, one thousand nine hundred and seventy-four, in three copies, one of which will be placed in the archives of the Court and the others transmitted to the Government of Australia and the Government of the French Republic, respectively.

(Signed) Manfred LACHS,
President.

(Signed) S. AQUARONE,
Registrar.

President LACHS makes the following declaration:

Good administration of justice and respect for the Court require that the outcome of its deliberations be kept in strict secrecy and nothing of its decision be published until it is officially rendered. It was therefore regrettable that in the present case, prior to the public reading of the Court's Order of 22 June 1973, a statement was made and press reports appeared which exceeded what is legally admissible in relation to a case sub judice.

The Court was seriously concerned with the matter and an enquiry was ordered in the course of which all possible avenues accessible to the Court were explored.

The Court concluded, by a resolution of 21 March 1974, that its investigations had not enabled it to identify any specific source of the statements and reports published.

I remain satisfied that the Court had done everything possible in this respect and that it dealt with the matter with all the seriousness for which it called.

Judges BENGZON, ONYEAMA, DILLARD, JIMÉNEZ DE ARÉCHAGA and Sir Humphrey WALDOCK make the following joint declaration:

Certain criticisms have been made of the Court's handling of the matter to which the President alludes in the preceding declaration. We wish by our declaration to make it clear that we do not consider those criticisms to be in any way justified.

The Court undertook a lengthy examination of the matter by the several means at its disposal: through its services, by convoking the Agent for Australia and having him questioned, and by its own investigations and enquiries. Any suggestion that the Court failed to treat the matter with all the seriousness and care which it required is, in our opinion, without foundation. The seriousness with which the Court regarded the matter is indeed reflected and emphasized in the communiqués which it issued, first on 8 August 1973 and subsequently on 26 March 1974.

The examination of the matter carried out by the Court did not enable it to identify any specific source of the information on which were based the statements and press reports to which the President has referred. When the Court, by eleven votes to three, decided to conclude its examination it did so for the solid reason that to pursue its investigations and inquiries would in its view, be very unlikely to produce further useful information.

Judges FORSTER, GROS, PETRÉN and IGNACIO-PINTO append separate opinions to the Judgment of the Court.

Judges ONYEAMA, DILLARD, JIMÉNEZ DE ARÉCHAGA and Sir Humphrey WALDOCK append a joint dissenting opinion, and Judge DE CASTRO and Judge ad hoc Sir Garfield BARWICK append dissenting opinions to the Judgment of the Court.

(Initialed) M.L.

(Initialed) S.A.

---

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-64

COUR INTERNATIONALE DE JUSTICE

RECUEIL DES ARRÊTS,
AVIS CONSULTATIFS ET ORDONNANCES

AFFAIRE DE LA FRONTIÈRE TERRESTRE ET MARITIME ENTRE LE CAMEROUN ET LE NIGÉRIA

(CAMEROUN c. NIGÉRIA)

EXCEPTIONS PRÉLIMINAIRES

ARRÊT DU 11 JUIN 1998

1998

INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

REPORTS OF JUDGMENTS,
ADVISORY OPINIONS AND ORDERS

CASE CONCERNING
THE LAND AND MARITIME BOUNDARY
BETWEEN CAMEROON AND NIGERIA

(CAMEROON v. NIGERIA)

PRELIMINARY OBJECTIONS

JUDGMENT OF 11 JUNE 1998

Mode officiel de citation :

Frontière terrestre et maritime entre le Cameroun et le Nigéria, exceptions préliminaires, arrêt, C.I.J. Recueil 1998, p. 275

---

Official citation :

Land and Maritime Boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria, Preliminary Objections, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1998, p. 275

ISSN 0074-4441

ISBN 92-1-070772-9

N° de vente :
Sales number

708

INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE

YEAR 1998

11 June 1998

1998
11 June
General List
No. 94CASE CONCERNING
THE LAND AND MARITIME BOUNDARY
BETWEEN CAMEROON AND NIGERIA

(CAMEROON v. NIGERIA)

PRELIMINARY OBJECTIONS

(1) Optional Clause (Article 36, paragraph 2, of Statute) — Deposit of Declaration with United Nations Secretary-General (Article 36, paragraph 4, of Statute) — Transmission of copy by Secretary-General to States parties to Statute — Interval between deposit of Declaration and filing of Application — Alleged abuse of Optional Clause system — Date of establishment of consensual bond under Article 36, paragraph 2, of Statute — Res judicata — Article 59 of Statute.

Articles 16, 24 and 78 of Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties.

Withdrawal of declarations of acceptance of compulsory jurisdiction — Reasonable period of notice — Question whether such period should be required for deposit of declarations.

Whether a State subscribing to Optional Clause and filing an application shortly thereafter has obligation to inform prospective respondent State — Principle of good faith.

Condition of reciprocity — Reservation ratiōne temporis.

(2) Asserted duty to resort exclusively to bilateral machinery — Estoppel — Principle of good faith — Rule pacta sunt servanda — Whether exhaustion of diplomatic negotiations is precondition for referral to the Court.

(3) Whether Lake Chad Basin Commission has exclusive jurisdiction for settlement of boundary disputes — Arrangements or agencies within meaning of Article 52 of United Nations Charter — Estoppel — Claim that the Court should decline to decide merits of submissions for reasons of judicial propriety.

(4) Boundary terminating in a tripoint in Lake Chad — Possible effect on legal interests of third States.

(5) Question relating to the existence of a boundary dispute — Determination of the existence of a dispute.

(6) Presentation of facts in an application — Requirements of Article 38, paragraph 2, of Rules of Court — Meaning of “succinct”.

(7) Determination of title to a peninsula prior to maritime delimitation — Discretionary power of the Court concerning sequence in which it settles issues before it — Alleged absence of sufficient action by Parties to effect delimitation by agreement on basis of international law — Seisin based on declarations made under Article 36, paragraph 2, of Statute — Sufficiently precise character of a dispute.

(8) Maritime delimitation which may involve rights and interests of third States — Whether objection raised has exclusively preliminary character (Article 79, paragraph 7, of Rules of Court).

JUDGMENT

Present: President SCHWEBEL; Vice-President WEERAMANTRY; Judges ODA, BEDJAOUI, GUILLAUME, RANJEVA, HERCZEGH, SHI, FLEISCHHAUER, KOROMA, VERESHCHETIN, HIGGINS, PARRA-ARANGUREN, KOOLMANS, REZEK; Judges ad hoc MBAYE, AJIBOLA; Registrar VALENCIA-OSPINA.

In the case concerning the land and maritime boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria,

between

the Republic of Cameroon,

represented by

H.E. Mr. Laurent Eso, Minister of Justice, Keeper of the Seals,
as Agent;

Mr. Douala Moutomé, Member of the Cameroon Bar, former Minister,
Mr. Maurice Kamto, Professor, University of Yaoundé II, Member of the Paris Bar,

Mr. Peter Ntamark, Dean, Professor of Law, Faculty of Law and Political Science, University of Yaoundé II, Barrister-at-Law, member of the Inner Temple,

as Co-Agents;

H.E. Mr. Joseph Owona, Minister of Youth and Sport,

Mr. Joseph-Marie Bipoun Woum, Professor, University of Yaoundé II, former Minister,

as Special Advisers;

Mr. Alain Pellet, Professor, University of Paris X-Nanterre and Institute of Political Studies, Paris,

as Deputy-Agent, Counsel and Advocate;

Mr. Michel Aurillac, avocat à la cour, Honorary Member of the Council of State, former Minister,

Mr. Jean-Pierre Cot, Professor, University of Paris I (Panthéon-Sorbonne), Vice-President of the European Parliament, Member of the Paris and Brussels Bars, former Minister,

Mr. Keith Highet, Counsellor in International Law, Vice-Chairman, Inter-
American Juridical Committee, Organization of American States,

Mr. Malcolm N. Shaw, Barrister-at-Law, Sir Robert Jennings Professor of International Law, Faculty of Law, University of Leicester,

Mr. Bruno Simma, Professor, University of Munich,

Sir Ian Sinclair, K.C.M.G., Q.C., Barrister-at-Law,

Mr. Christian Tomuschat, Professor, University of Berlin,

as Counsel and Advocates;

H.E. Mr. Pascal Biloa Tang, Ambassador of Cameroon to France,

H.E. Mrs. Isabelle Bassong, Ambassador of Cameroon to the Benelux Countries,

H.E. Mr. Martin Belinga Eboutou, Ambassador, Permanent Representative of Cameroon to the United Nations,

Lieutenant General Pierre Semengue, Chief of Staff of the Armed Forces,

Mr. Robert Akamba, Principal Civil Administrator, chargé de mission, Secretariat of the Presidency of the Republic,

Mr. Etienne Ateba, Minister-Counsellor, Chargé d'affaires a.i. at the Embassy of Cameroon, The Hague,

Mr. Ernest Bodo Abanda, Director of the Cadastral Survey, Member of the National Boundary Commission of Cameroon,

Mr. Ngolle Philip Ngwesse, Director at the Ministry of Territorial Administration,

Mr. Thomas Fozein Kwanke, Counsellor in Foreign Affairs, Deputy Director at the Ministry of Foreign Relations,

Mr. Jean Gateaud, ingénieur général géographe,

Mr. Bienvenu Obelabout, Director, Central Administration, General Secretariat of the Presidency of the Republic,

Mr. Marc Sassen, Advocate and Legal Adviser, The Hague,

Mr. Joseph Tjop, Consultant at Mignard, Teitgen, Grisoni and Associates,
Senior Teaching and Research Assistant, University of Paris X-Nanterre,

Mr. Songola Oudini, Director, Central Administration, General Secretariat of the Presidency of the Republic,

as Advisers;

Mrs. Florence Kollo, Principal Translator-Interpreter,

as Translator-Interpreter;

Mr. Pierre Bodeau, Teaching and Research Assistant, University of Paris
X-Nanterre,

Mr. Olivier Corten, Senior Lecturer, Faculty of Law, Université libre de Bruxelles,

Mr. Daniel Khan, Assistant, University of Munich,

Mr. Jean-Marc Thouvenin, Senior Lecturer, University of Maine, and Institute of Political Studies, Paris,

as Research Assistants;

Mr. Guy Roger Eba'a,
 Mr. Daniel Nfan Bile,
 as Communications Specialists;
 Mrs. René Bakker,
 Mrs. Florence Jovis,
 Mrs. Mireille Jung,
 as Secretaries,

and

the Federal Republic of Nigeria, represented by

H.E. the Honourable Alhaji Abdullahi Ibrahim, OFR, SAN, Attorney-General of the Federation and Minister of Justice,

as Agent;

Chief Richard Akinjide, SAN, FCIArb, former Minister, Member of the English and Gambian Bars,

as Co-Agent;

Mr. Ian Brownlie, C.B.E., Q.C., F.B.A., Chichele Professor of Public International Law, University of Oxford, Member of the International Law Commission, Member of the English Bar,

Sir Arthur Watts, K.C.M.G., Q.C., Member of the English Bar,

Mr. James Crawford, S.C., Whewell Professor of International Law, University of Cambridge, Member of the International Law Commission, Member of the Australian Bar,

as Counsel and Advocates;

Mr. Timothy H. Daniel, Partner, D. J. Freeman of the City of London,

Mr. Alan Perry, Partner, D. J. Freeman of the City of London,

Mr. David Lerer, Solicitor, D. J. Freeman of the City of London,

Mr. Christopher Hackford, Solicitor, D. J. Freeman of the City of London,

Ms Louise Cox, trainee Solicitor, D. J. Freeman of the City of London, as Solicitors;

Mr. A. H. Yadudu, Professor, Special Adviser to the Head of State on Legal Matters,

Mr. A. Oye Cukwurah, Professor, National Boundary Commission, Abuja,

Mr. I. A. Ayua, Professor, Director-General, NIALS,

Brigadier General L. S. Ajiborisha, Director of Operations, DHQ,

Mrs. Stella Omiyi, Director, International and Comparative Law Department, Federal Ministry of Justice,

Mr. K. Mohammed, Director of Research and Analysis, the Presidency,

Mr. Jalal A. Arabi, Legal Adviser to the Secretary to the Government of the Federation,

Mr. M. M. Kida, Assistant Director, Ministry of Foreign Affairs,

Mr. Alhaji A. A. Adisa, Deputy Surveyor-General of the Federation, Abuja,

Mr. P. M. Mann, Chargé d'affaires, Embassy of Nigeria, The Hague,

Mrs. V. Okwecheme, Counsellor, Embassy of Nigeria, The Hague,
Mr. Amuzuei, Counsellor, Embassy of Nigeria, The Hague,
Mr. Clive Schofield, Cartographer, International Boundaries Research Unit,
Durham University,
Mr. Arthur Corner, Cartographer, Durham University,
Ms Michelle Burgoine, Information Technology Assistant,
as Advisers;
Mrs. Coralie Ayad, D. J. Freeman of the City of London as Secretary.

THE COURT,

composed as above,
after deliberation,

delivers the following Judgment:

1. On 29 March 1994, the Government of the Republic of Cameroon (hereinafter called "Cameroon") filed in the Registry of the Court an Application instituting proceedings against the Government of the Federal Republic of Nigeria (hereinafter called "Nigeria") in respect of a dispute described as "relat[ing] essentially to the question of sovereignty over the Bakassi Peninsula". Cameroon further stated in its Application that the "delimitation [of the maritime boundary between the two States] has remained a partial one and [that], despite many attempts to complete it, the two parties have been unable to do so". It accordingly requested the Court, "in order to avoid further incidents between the two countries, . . . to determine the course of the maritime boundary between the two States beyond the line fixed in 1975". In order to found the jurisdiction of the Court, the Application relied on the declarations made by the two Parties accepting the jurisdiction of the Court under Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute of the Court.

2. Pursuant to Article 40, paragraph 2, of the Statute, the Application was immediately communicated to the Government of Nigeria by the Registrar.

3. On 6 June 1994, Cameroon filed in the Registry an Additional Application "for the purpose of extending the subject of the dispute" to a further dispute described in that Additional Application as "relat[ing] essentially to the question of sovereignty over a part of the territory of Cameroon in the area of Lake Chad". Cameroon also requested the Court, in its Additional Application, "to specify definitively" the frontier between the two States from Lake Chad to the sea, and asked it to join the two Applications and "to examine the whole in a single case". In order to found the jurisdiction of the Court, the Additional Application referred to the "basis of . . . jurisdiction . . . already . . . indicated" in the Application instituting proceedings of 29 March 1994.

4. On 7 June 1994, the Registrar communicated the Additional Application to the Government of Nigeria.

5. At a meeting which the President of the Court held with the representatives of the Parties on 14 June 1994, the Agent of Nigeria stated that he had no objection to the Additional Application being treated, in accordance with the wish expressed by Cameroon, as an amendment to the initial Application, so that the Court could deal with the whole in a single case. By an Order dated 16 June 1994, the Court indicated that it had no objection itself to such a procedure, and fixed 16 March 1995 and 18 December 1995, respectively, as the time-limits for the filing of the Memorial of Cameroon and the Counter-Memorial of Nigeria.

6. Pursuant to Article 40, paragraph 3, of the Statute, all States entitled to appear before the Court were notified of the Application.

7. Cameroon duly filed its Memorial within the time-limit prescribed in the Court's Order dated 16 June 1994.

8. Within the time-limit fixed for the filing of its Counter-Memorial, Nigeria filed preliminary objections to the jurisdiction of the Court and the admissibility of the Application. Accordingly, by an Order dated 10 January 1996, the President of the Court, noting that, under Article 79, paragraph 3, of the Rules of Court, the proceedings on the merits were suspended, fixed 15 May 1996 as the time-limit within which Cameroon might present a written statement of its observations and submissions on the preliminary objections.

Cameroon filed such a statement within the time-limit so prescribed, and the case became ready for hearing in respect of the preliminary objections.

9. Since the Court included upon the Bench no judge of the nationality of the Parties, each Party exercised its right under Article 31, paragraph 3, of the Statute of the Court to choose a judge ad hoc to sit in the case: Cameroon chose Mr. Kéba Mbaye and Nigeria chose Mr. Bola Ajibola.

10. By a letter dated 10 February 1996 and received in the Registry on 12 February 1996, Cameroon submitted a request for the indication of provisional measures under Article 41 of the Statute. By an Order dated 15 March 1996, the Court, after hearing the Parties, indicated certain provisional measures.

11. By various communications, Cameroon stressed the importance of a speedy disposal of the case; it also filed, under cover of a letter dated 9 April 1997, a document with annexes entitled "Memorandum of the Republic of Cameroon on Procedure". Nigeria made known its views on the latter communication in a letter dated 13 May 1997.

12. By a letter dated 2 February 1998, Nigeria sought to introduce a volume of documents entitled "Supplemental Documents (Lake Chad Basin Commission Proceedings)". By a letter dated 16 February 1998, the Agent of Cameroon indicated that Cameroon did not oppose their introduction. The Court admitted the said documents pursuant to Article 56, paragraph 1, of the Rules of Court.

13. By a letter dated 11 February 1998, the Agent of Cameroon sought to introduce certain "new documents relating to events occurring since the filing of the Memorial" of Cameroon, and "moreover requested the Court to consider the annexes to the [Memorandum of April 1997] as an integral part of the proceedings". Having considered the views expressed by Nigeria in its above-mentioned letter of 13 May 1997 (see paragraph 11 above) and in its letter of 24 February 1998, the Court admitted the documents pursuant to the provisions of Article 56 of its Rules.

14. In accordance with Article 53, paragraph 2, of its Rules, the Court decided to make accessible to the public, on the opening of the oral proceedings, the preliminary objections of Nigeria and the written statement containing the observations and submissions of Cameroon on the objections, as well as the documents annexed to those pleadings.

15. Public sittings were held between 2 March and 11 March 1998, at which the Court heard the oral arguments and replies of:

For Nigeria: H.E. the Honourable Alhaji Abdullahi Ibrahim, Mr. Richard Akinjide,
Mr. Ian Brownlie,
Sir Arthur Watts,
Mr. James Crawford.

For Cameroon: H.E. Mr. Laurent Easo,
Mr. Douala Moutomé,
Mr. Maurice Kamto,
Mr. Peter Ntamark,
Mr. Joseph-Marie Bipoun Woum,
Mr. Alain Pellet,
Mr. Michel Aurillac,
Mr. Jean-Pierre Cot,
Mr. Keith Highet,
Mr. Malcolm N. Shaw,
Mr. Bruno Simma,
Sir Ian Sinclair,
Mr. Christian Tomuschat.

At the hearings, a Member of the Court put a question to the Parties, who answered in writing after the close of the oral proceedings.

*

16. In its Application, Cameroon made the following requests:

“On the basis of the foregoing statement of facts and legal grounds, the Republic of Cameroon, while reserving for itself the right to complement, amend or modify the present Application in the course of the proceedings and to submit to the Court a request for the indication of provisional measures should they prove to be necessary, asks the Court to adjudge and declare:

- (a) that sovereignty over the Peninsula of Bakassi is Cameroonian, by virtue of international law, and that that Peninsula is an integral part of the territory of Cameroon;
- (b) that the Federal Republic of Nigeria has violated and is violating the fundamental principle of respect for frontiers inherited from colonization (uti possidetis juris);
- (c) that by using force against the Republic of Cameroon, the Federal Republic of Nigeria has violated and is violating its obligations under international treaty law and customary law;
- (d) that the Federal Republic of Nigeria, by militarily occupying the Cameroonian Peninsula of Bakassi, has violated and is violating the obligations incumbent upon it by virtue of treaty law and customary law;
- (e) that in view of these breaches of legal obligation, mentioned above, the Federal Republic of Nigeria has the express duty of putting an end to its military presence in Cameroonian territory, and effecting an immediate and unconditional withdrawal of its troops from the Cameroonian Peninsula of Bakassi;

- (e') that the internationally unlawful acts referred to under (a), (b), (c), (d) and (e) above involve the responsibility of the Federal Republic of Nigeria;
- (e'') that, consequently, and on account of the material and non-material damage inflicted upon the Republic of Cameroon, reparation in an amount to be determined by the Court is due from the Federal Republic of Nigeria to the Republic of Cameroon, which reserves the introduction before the Court of [proceedings for] a precise assessment of the damage caused by the Federal Republic of Nigeria.
- (f) In order to prevent any dispute arising between the two States concerning their maritime boundary, the Republic of Cameroon requests the Court to proceed to prolong the course of its maritime boundary with the Federal Republic of Nigeria up to the limit of the maritime zones which international law places under their respective jurisdictions."

17. In its Additional Application, Cameroon made the following requests:

"On the basis of the foregoing statement of facts and legal grounds, and subject to the reservations expressed in paragraph 20 of its Application of 29 March 1994, the Republic of Cameroon asks the Court to adjudge and declare:

- (a) that sovereignty over the disputed parcel in the area of Lake Chad is Cameroonian, by virtue of international law, and that that parcel is an integral part of the territory of Cameroon;
- (b) that the Federal Republic of Nigeria has violated and is violating the fundamental principle of respect for frontiers inherited from colonization (uti possidetis juris), and its recent legal commitments concerning the demarcation of frontiers in Lake Chad;
- (c) that the Federal Republic of Nigeria, by occupying, with the support of its security forces, parcels of Cameroonian territory in the area of Lake Chad, has violated and is violating its obligations under treaty law and customary law;
- (d) that in view of these legal obligations, mentioned above, the Federal Republic of Nigeria has the express duty of effecting an immediate and unconditional withdrawal of its troops from Cameroonian territory in the area of Lake Chad;
- (e) that the internationally unlawful acts referred to under (a), (b), (c) and (d) above involve the responsibility of the Federal Republic of Nigeria;
- (e') that consequently, and on account of the material and non-material damage inflicted upon the Republic of Cameroon, reparation in an amount to be determined by the Court is due from the Federal Republic of Nigeria to the Republic of Cameroon, which reserves the introduction before the Court of [proceedings for] a precise assessment of the damage caused by the Federal Republic of Nigeria.
- (f) That in view of the repeated incursions of Nigerian groups and armed forces into Cameroonian territory, all along the frontier between the two countries, the consequent grave and repeated incidents, and the vacillating and contradictory attitude of the Federal Republic of Nigeria in regard to the legal instruments defining the frontier between the two countries and the exact course of that frontier, the Republic of Cameroon respectfully asks the Court to specify definitively the frontier between Cameroon and the Federal Republic of Nigeria from Lake Chad to the sea.”

18. In the written proceedings, the Parties presented the following submissions:

On behalf of the Government of Cameroon,
in the Memorial:

“The Republic of Cameroon has the honour to request that the Court be pleased to adjudge and declare:

(a) That the lake and land boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria takes the following course:

- from the point at longitude 14° 04' 59" 9999 E of Greenwich and latitude 13° 05' 00" 0001 N, it then runs through the point located at longitude 14° 12' 11" 7 E and latitude 12° 32' 17" 4 N;
- thence it follows the course fixed by the Franco-British Declaration of 10 July 1919, as specified in paragraphs 3 to 60 of the Thomson-Marchand Declaration, confirmed by the Exchange of Letters of 9 January 1931, as far as the ‘very prominent peak’ described in the latter provision and called by the usual name of ‘Mount Kombon’;
- from Mount Kombon the boundary then runs to ‘Pillar 64’ mentioned in paragraph 12 of the Anglo-German Agreement of Obokum of 12 April 1913 and follows, in that sector, the course described in Section 6 (1) of the British Nigeria (Protectorate and Cameroons) Order in Council of 2 August 1946;
- from Pillar 64 it follows the course described in paragraphs 13 to 21 of the Obokum Agreement of 12 April 1913 as far as Pillar 114 on the Cross River;
- thence, as far as the intersection of the straight line joining Bakassi Point to King Point and the centre of the navigable channel of the Akwayafe, the boundary is determined by paragraphs 16 to 21 of the Anglo-German Agreement of 11 March 1913.

(b) That notably, therefore, sovereignty over the Peninsula of Bakassi and over the disputed parcel occupied by Nigeria in the area of Lake Chad, in particular over Darak and its region, is Cameroonian.

(c) That the boundary of the maritime zones appertaining respectively to the Republic of Cameroon and to the Federal Republic of Nigeria follows the following course:

- from the intersection of the straight line joining Bakassi Point to King Point and the centre of the navigable channel of the Akwayafe to ‘point 12’, that boundary is determined by the ‘compromise line’ entered on British Admiralty Chart No. 3343 by the Heads of State of the two countries on 4 April 1971 (Yaoundé Declaration) and, from that ‘point 12’ to ‘point G’, by the Declaration signed at Maroua on 1 June 1975;

- from point G that boundary then swings south-westward in the direction which is indicated by points G, H, I, J and K represented on the sketch-map on page 556 of this Memorial and meets the requirement for an equitable solution, up to the outer limit of the maritime zones which international law places under the respective jurisdictions of the two Parties.
- (d) That by contesting the courses of the boundary defined above under (a) and (c), the Federal Republic of Nigeria has violated and is violating the fundamental principle of respect for frontiers inherited from colonization (uti possidetis juris) and its legal commitments concerning the demarcation of frontiers in Lake Chad and land and maritime delimitation.
  - (e) That by using force against the Republic of Cameroon and, in particular, by militarily occupying parcels of Cameroonian territory in the area of Lake Chad and the Cameroonian Peninsula of Bakassi, and by making repeated incursions, both civilian and military, all along the boundary between the two countries, the Federal Republic of Nigeria has violated and is violating its obligations under international treaty law and customary law.
  - (f) That the Federal Republic of Nigeria has the express duty of putting an end to its civilian and military presence in Cameroonian territory and, in particular, of effecting an immediate and unconditional withdrawal of its troops from the occupied area of Lake Chad and from the Cameroonian Peninsula of Bakassi and of refraining from such acts in the future.
  - (g) That the internationally wrongful acts referred to above and described in detail in the body of this Memorial involve the responsibility of the Federal Republic of Nigeria.
  - (h) That, consequently, and on account of the material and non-material damage inflicted upon the Republic of Cameroon, reparation in a form to be determined by the Court is due from the Federal Republic of Nigeria to the Republic of Cameroon.

The Republic of Cameroon further has the honour to request the Court to permit it to present an assessment of the amount of compensation due to it as reparation for the damage it has suffered as a result of the internationally wrongful acts attributable to the Federal Republic of Nigeria, at a subsequent stage of the proceedings.

These submissions are lodged subject to any points of fact and law and any evidence that may subsequently be lodged; the Republic of Cameroon reserves the right to complete or amend them, as necessary, in accordance with the Statute and the Rules of Court.”

On behalf of the Government of Nigeria,

in the preliminary objections:

First preliminary objection:

- “(1) that Cameroon, by lodging the Application on 29 March 1994, violated its obligations to act in good faith, acted in abuse of the system established by Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute, and disregarded the requirement of reciprocity established by Article 36,

- paragraph 2, of the Statute and the terms of Nigeria's Declaration of 3 September 1965;
- (2) that consequently the conditions necessary to entitle Cameroon to invoke its Declaration under Article 36, paragraph 2, as a basis for the Court's jurisdiction did not exist when the Application was lodged; and
  - (3) that accordingly, the Court is without jurisdiction to entertain the Application."

Second preliminary objection:

"For a period of at least 24 years prior to the filing of the Application the Parties have in their regular dealings accepted a duty to settle all boundary questions through the existing bilateral machinery.

- (1) This course of joint conduct constitutes an implied agreement to resort exclusively to the existing bilateral machinery and not to invoke the jurisdiction of the Court.
- (2) In the alternative, in the circumstances the Republic of Cameroon is estopped from invoking the jurisdiction of the Court."

Third preliminary objection:

"Without prejudice to the second preliminary objection, the settlement of boundary disputes within the Lake Chad region is subject to the exclusive competence of the Lake Chad Basin Commission, and in this context the procedures of settlement within the Lake Chad Basin Commission are obligatory for the Parties.

The operation of the dispute settlement procedures of the Lake Chad Basin Commission involved the necessary implication, for the relations of Nigeria and Cameroon inter se, that the jurisdiction of the Court by virtue of Article 36, paragraph 2, would not be invoked in relation to matters within the exclusive competence of the Commission."

Fourth preliminary objection:

"The Court should not in these proceedings determine the boundary in Lake Chad to the extent that that boundary constitutes or is constituted by the tripoint in the Lake."

Fifth preliminary objection:

"(1) In the submission of Nigeria there is no dispute concerning boundary delimitation as such throughout the whole length of the boundary from the tripoint in Lake Chad to the sea, and in particular:

- (a) there is no dispute in respect of the boundary delimitation as such within Lake Chad, subject to the question of title to Darak and adjacent islands inhabited by Nigerians;
- (b) there is no dispute relating to the boundary delimitation as such from the tripoint in Lake Chad to Mount Kombon;
- (c) there is no dispute relating to the boundary delimitation as such between Boundary Pillar 64 on the Gamana River and Mount Kombon; and
- (d) there is no dispute relating to the boundary delimitation as such between Pillar 64 on the Gamana River and the sea.

(2) This preliminary objection is without prejudice to the title of Nigeria over the Bakassi Peninsula.”

Sixth preliminary objection:

- “(1) that the Application (and so far as relevant, Amendment and Memorial) filed by Cameroon does not meet the required standard of adequacy as to the facts on which it is based, including the dates, circumstances and precise locations of the alleged incursions and incidents by Nigerian State organs;
- (2) that those deficiencies make it impossible
- (a) for Nigeria to have the knowledge to which it is entitled of the circumstances which are said by Cameroon to result in Nigeria’s international responsibility and consequential obligation to make reparation; and
- (b) for the Court to carry out a fair and effective judicial examination of, or make a judicial determination on, the issues of State responsibility and reparation raised by Cameroon; and
- (3) that accordingly all the issues of State responsibility and reparation raised by Cameroon in this context should be declared inadmissible.”

Seventh preliminary objection:

“There is no legal dispute concerning delimitation of the maritime boundary between the two Parties which is at the present time appropriate for resolution by the Court, for the following reasons:

- (1) no determination of a maritime boundary is possible prior to the determination of title in respect of the Bakassi Peninsula;
- (2) at the juncture where there is a determination of the question of title over the Bakassi Peninsula, the issues of maritime delimitation will not be admissible in the absence of sufficient action by the Parties, on a footing of equality, to effect a delimitation ‘by agreement on the basis of international law’.”

Eighth preliminary objection:

“The question of maritime delimitation necessarily involves the rights and interests of third States and is inadmissible.”

Concluding submissions:

“For the reasons advanced, the Federal Republic of Nigeria requests the Court to adjudge and declare that:

it lacks jurisdiction over the claims brought against the Federal Republic of Nigeria by the Republic of Cameroon;

and/or the claims brought against the Federal Republic of Nigeria by the Republic of Cameroon are inadmissible to the extent specified in these preliminary objections.”

On behalf of the Government of Cameroon, in the written statement containing its observations on the preliminary objections:

“For the reasons given . . . , the Republic of Cameroon requests the International Court of Justice:

- (1) to dismiss the preliminary objections raised by the Federal Republic of Nigeria;
- (2) to find that, by its formal declarations, Nigeria has accepted the jurisdiction of the Court;
- (3) to adjudge and declare:
  - that it has jurisdiction to decide on the Application filed by Cameroon on 29 March 1994 as supplemented by the additional Application of 6 June 1994; and
  - that the Application, thus consolidated, is admissible;
- (4) having due regard to the particular nature of the case, which relates to a dispute concerning the territorial sovereignty of Cameroon and is creating serious tensions between the two countries, to fix time-limits for the further proceedings which will enable the Court to proceed to the merits at the earliest possible time.”

19. In the oral proceedings, the Parties presented the following submissions:

On behalf of the Government of Nigeria,

at the hearing on 9 March 1998:

“[F]or the reasons that have been stated either in writing or orally, Nigeria submits:

First preliminary objection

1.1. That Cameroon, by lodging the Application on 29 March 1994, violated its obligations to act in good faith, acted in abuse of the system established by Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute, and disregarded the requirement of reciprocity established by Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute and the terms of Nigeria’s Declaration of 3 September 1965;

1.2. that consequently the conditions necessary to entitle Cameroon to invoke its Declaration under Article 36, paragraph 2, as a basis for the Court’s jurisdiction did not exist when the Application was lodged;

1.3. that accordingly, the Court is without jurisdiction to entertain the Application.

Second preliminary objection

2.1. That for a period of at least 24 years prior to the filing of the Application, the Parties have in their regular dealings accepted a duty to settle all boundary questions through the existing bilateral machinery;

2.1.1. that this course of joint conduct constitutes an implied agreement to resort exclusively to the existing bilateral machinery and not to invoke the jurisdiction of the Court;

2.1.2. that in the alternative, in the circumstances the Republic of Cameroon is estopped from invoking the jurisdiction of the Court.

Third preliminary objection

3.1. That without prejudice to the second preliminary objection, the settlement of boundary disputes within the Lake Chad region is subject to the exclusive competence of the Lake Chad Basin Commission, and in this context the procedures of settlement within the Lake Chad Basin Commission are obligatory for the Parties;

3.2. that the operation of the dispute settlement procedures of the Lake Chad Basin Commission involved the necessary implication, for the relations of Nigeria and Cameroon inter se, that the jurisdiction of the Court by virtue of Article 36, paragraph 2, would not be invoked in relation to matters within the exclusive competence of the Commission.

Fourth preliminary objection

4.1. That the Court should not in these proceedings determine the boundary in Lake Chad to the extent that that boundary constitutes or is constituted by the tripoint in the Lake.

Fifth preliminary objection

5.1. That, without prejudice to the title of Nigeria over the Bakassi Peninsula, there is no dispute concerning boundary delimitation as such throughout the whole length of the boundary from the tripoint in Lake Chad to the sea, and in particular:

- (a) there is no dispute in respect of the boundary delimitation as such within Lake Chad, subject to the question of title to Darak and adjacent islands inhabited by Nigerians;
- (b) there is no dispute relating to the boundary delimitation as such from the tripoint in Lake Chad to Mount Kombon;
- (c) there is no dispute relating to the boundary delimitation as such between boundary pillar 64 on the Gamana River and Mount Kombon; and
- (d) there is no dispute relating to the boundary delimitation as such between pillar 64 on the Gamana River and the sea.

Sixth preliminary objection

6.1. That the Application (and so far as permissible, subsequent pleadings) filed by Cameroon does not meet the required standard of adequacy as to the facts on which it is based, including the dates, circumstances and precise locations of the alleged incursions and incidents by Nigerian State organs;

6.2. that those deficiencies make it impossible

- (a) for Nigeria to have the knowledge to which it is entitled of the circumstances which are said by Cameroon to result in Nigeria's international responsibility and consequential obligation to make reparation; and
- (b) for the Court to carry out a fair and effective judicial examination of, or make a judicial determination on, the issues of State responsibility and reparation raised by Cameroon;

6.3. that accordingly all the issues of State responsibility and reparation raised by Cameroon in this context should be declared inadmissible;

6.4. that, without prejudice to the foregoing, any allegations by Cameroon as to State responsibility or reparation on the part of Nigeria in respect of matters referred to in paragraph 17 (f) of Cameroon's amending Application of 6 June 1994 are inadmissible.

Seventh preliminary objection

7.1. That there is no legal dispute concerning delimitation of the maritime boundary between the two Parties which is at the present time appropriate for resolution by the Court, for the following reasons:

- (1) no determination of a maritime boundary is possible prior to the determination of title in respect of the Bakassi Peninsula;
- (2) in any event, the issues of maritime delimitation are inadmissible in the absence of sufficient action by the Parties, on a footing of equality, to effect a delimitation 'by agreement on the basis of international law'.

Eighth preliminary objection

8.1. That the question of maritime delimitation necessarily involves the rights and interests of third States and is inadmissible beyond point G.

Accordingly, Nigeria formally requests the Court to adjudge and declare that:

- (1) it lacks jurisdiction over the claims brought against the Federal Republic of Nigeria by the Republic of Cameroon; and/or
- (2) the claims brought against the Federal Republic of Nigeria by the Republic of Cameroon are inadmissible to the extent specified in the preliminary objections."

On behalf of the Government of Cameroon,

at the hearing on 11 March 1998:

"For the reasons developed in the written pleadings and in the oral proceedings, the Republic of Cameroon requests the International Court of Justice:

- (a) to dismiss the preliminary objections raised by the Federal Republic of Nigeria;
- (b) completely in the alternative, to join to the merits, as appropriate, such of those objections as it may deem not to be of an exclusively preliminary character;
- (c) to adjudge and declare: that it has jurisdiction to decide on the Application filed by Cameroon on 29 March 1994 as supplemented by the Additional Application of 6 June 1994; and that the Application, thus consolidated, is admissible;
- (d) having due regard to the particular nature of the case, to fix time-limits for the further proceedings which will permit examination of the merits of the dispute at the earliest possible time."

* * *

20. The Court will successively examine the eight preliminary objections raised by Nigeria.

FIRST PRELIMINARY OBJECTION

21. The first objection contends that the Court has no jurisdiction to entertain Cameroon's Application.

22. In this regard, Nigeria notes that it had accepted the Court's compulsory jurisdiction by a declaration dated 14 August 1965, deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations on 3 September 1965. Cameroon had also accepted the Court's compulsory jurisdiction by a declaration deposited with the Secretary-General on 3 March 1994. The Secretary-General transmitted copies of the Cameroon Declaration to the parties to the Statute eleven-and-a-half months later. Nigeria maintains, accordingly, that it had no way of knowing, and did not actually know, on the date of the filing of the Application, i.e., 29 March 1994, that Cameroon had deposited a declaration. Cameroon consequently is alleged to have "acted prematurely". By proceeding in this way, the Applicant "is alleged to have violated its obligation to act in good faith", "abused the system instituted by Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute" and disregarded "the condition of reciprocity" provided for by that Article and by Nigeria's Declaration. The Court consequently does not have jurisdiction to hear the Application.

23. In contrast, Cameroon contends that its Application fulfils all the conditions required by the Statute. It notes that in the case concerning Right of Passage over Indian Territory, the Court held that "the Statute does not prescribe any interval between the deposit by a State of its Declaration of Acceptance and the filing of an Application by that State, and that the principle of reciprocity is not affected by any delay in the receipt of copies of the Declaration by the Parties to the Statute" (Right of Passage over Indian Territory, Preliminary Objections, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1957, p. 147).

Cameroon indicates that there is no reason not to follow this precedent, at the risk of undermining the system of compulsory jurisdiction provided by the Optional Clause. It adds that the Cameroonian Declaration was in force as early as 3 March 1994, as at that date it was registered in accordance with Article 102 of the United Nations Charter. Cameroon states that in any event Nigeria has acted, since the beginning of these proceedings, in such a way that it should be regarded as having accepted the jurisdiction of the Court.

24. Nigeria argues in reply that the "case concerning the Right of Passage over Indian Territory, was a first impression", that the Judgment given is outdated, and that it is an isolated one; that international law, especially as it relates to good faith, has evolved since and that in accordance with Article 59 of the Statute, that Judgment only has the force of res judicata as between the parties and in respect of that case. For these reasons, the solution adopted in 1957 should not be adopted here. Nigeria does not accept the reasoning of Cameroon based on Article 102 of the Charter. Nigeria also contends that there is no question of its having consented to the jurisdiction of the Court in the case and hence there is no forum prorogatum.

Cameroon contests each of these arguments.

25. The Court observes initially that, in accordance with Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute:

“The States parties to the present Statute may at any time declare that they recognize as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other State accepting the same obligation, the jurisdiction of the Court in all legal disputes” as specified in that clause.

Article 36, paragraph 4, provides:

“Such declarations shall be deposited with the Secretary-General of the United Nations, who shall transmit copies thereof to the parties to the Statute and to the Registrar of the Court.”

In the case concerning Right of Passage over Indian Territory, the Court concluded, in the light of these provisions, that:

“by the deposit of its Declaration of Acceptance with the Secretary-General, the accepting State becomes a Party to the system of the Optional Clause in relation to the other declarant States, with all the rights and obligations deriving from Article 36. The contractual relation between the Parties and the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court resulting therefrom are established, ‘ipso facto and without special agreement’, by the fact of the making of the Declaration . . . For it is on that very day that the consensual bond, which is the basis of the Optional Clause, comes into being between the States concerned.” (Right of Passage over Indian Territory, Preliminary Objections, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1957, p. 146.)

The conclusions thus reached by the Court in 1957 reflect the very essence of the Optional Clause providing for acceptance of the Court’s compulsory jurisdiction. Any State party to the Statute, in adhering to the jurisdiction of the Court in accordance with Article 36, paragraph 2, accepts jurisdiction in its relations with States previously having adhered to that clause. At the same time, it makes a standing offer to the other States party to the Statute which have not yet deposited a declaration of acceptance. The day one of those States accepts that offer by depositing in its turn its declaration of acceptance, the consensual bond is established and no further condition needs to be fulfilled. Thus, as the Court stated in 1957:

“every State which makes a Declaration of Acceptance must be deemed to take into account the possibility that, under the Statute, it may at any time find itself subjected to the obligations of the Optional Clause in relation to a new Signatory as the result of the deposit by that Signatory of a Declaration of Acceptance” (ibid., p. 146).

26. Furthermore, and as the Court also declared in the case concerning Right of Passage over Indian Territory, the State making the declaration

“is not concerned with the duty of the Secretary-General or the manner of its fulfilment. The legal effect of a Declaration does not depend upon subsequent action of the Secretary-General. Moreover, unlike some other instruments, Article 36 provides for no additional requirement, for instance, that the information transmitted by the Secretary-General must reach the Parties to the Statute, or that some period must elapse subsequent to the deposit of the Declaration before it can become effective. Any such requirement would introduce an element of uncertainty into the operation of the Optional Clause system. The Court cannot read into the Optional Clause any requirement of that nature.” (I.C.J. Reports 1957, pp. 146-147.)

27. The Court furthermore recalls that, contrary to what is maintained by Nigeria, this Judgment is not an isolated one. It has been reaffirmed in the case concerning the Temple of Preah Vihear (Preliminary Objections, I.C.J. Reports 1961, p. 31), and in the case concerning Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua (Nicaragua v. United States of America) (Jurisdiction and Admissibility, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1984, p. 392). In that latter case, the Court pointed out that:

“as regards the requirement of consent as a basis of its jurisdiction, and more particularly as regards the formalities required for that consent to be expressed in accordance with the provisions of Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute, the Court has already made known its view in, inter alia, the case concerning the Temple of Preah Vihear. On that occasion it stated: ‘The only formality required is the deposit of the acceptance with the Secretary-General of the United Nations under paragraph 4 of Article 36 of the Statute.’ (I.C.J. Reports 1961, p. 31.)” (I.C.J. Reports 1984, p. 412, para. 45.)

28. Nigeria nonetheless contests that conclusion pointing out that, in accordance with Article 59 of the Statute, “[t]he decision of the Court has no binding force except between the parties and in respect of that particular case”. Thus, judgments given earlier, in particular in the case concerning Right of Passage over Indian Territory, “clearly [have] no direct compelling effect in the present case”.

It is true that, in accordance with Article 59, the Court’s judgments bind only the parties to and in respect of a particular case. There can be no question of holding Nigeria to decisions reached by the Court in previous cases. The real question is whether, in this case, there is cause not to follow the reasoning and conclusions of earlier cases.

29. In this regard, Nigeria maintains first of all that the interpretation given in 1957 to Article 36, paragraph 4, of the Statute should be reconsidered in the light of the evolution of the law of treaties which has occurred since. In that connection, Nigeria relies on Article 78 (c) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties of 23 May 1969. That Article relates to the notifications and communications made under that Convention. It provides that:

“Except as the treaty or the present Convention otherwise provide, any notification or communication to be made by any State under the present Convention shall:

- .....
- (c) if transmitted to a depositary, be considered as received by the State for which it was intended only when the latter State has been informed by the depositary.”

According to Nigeria, that rule “must apply to Cameroon’s Declaration”. In the light of the provisions of the Vienna Convention, Nigeria contends that the Court should overturn the solution it adopted earlier in the case concerning Right of Passage over Indian Territory. Cameroon states, for its part, that the declarations of acceptance of the Court’s compulsory jurisdiction “are not treaties within the meaning of the Vienna Convention” and “it was clearly no part of the intentions of the drafters of the . . . Convention . . . to interfere with the settled jurisprudence of the Court in this matter”. This jurisprudence, Cameroon argues, should be followed.

30. The Court notes that the régime for depositing and transmitting declarations of acceptance of compulsory jurisdiction laid down in Article 36, paragraph 4, of the Statute of the Court is distinct from the régime envisaged for treaties by the Vienna Convention. Thus the provisions of that Convention may only be applied to declarations by analogy (Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua (Nicaragua v. United States of America), Jurisdiction and Admissibility, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1984, p. 420, para. 63).

31. The Court furthermore observes that in any event the provisions of the Vienna Convention do not have the scope which Nigeria imputes to them. Article 78 of the Convention is only designed to lay down the modalities according to which notifications and communications should be carried out. It does not govern the conditions in which a State expresses its consent to be bound by a treaty and those under which a treaty comes into force, those questions being governed by Articles 16 and 24 of the Convention. Indeed, the International Law Commission, in its Report to the General Assembly on the draft which was subsequently to become the Vienna Convention, specified that if the future Article 78 included in limine an explicit reservation, that was “primarily in order to prevent any misconception as to the relation” between that Article and the future Articles 16 and 24 (Yearbook of the International Law Com- mission, 1966, Vol. II, p. 271). It added that consequently "specific provisions [of those latter Articles] will prevail".

According to Article 16:

"Unless the treaty otherwise provides, instruments of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession establish the consent of a State to be bound by a treaty upon:

.....
 (b) their deposit with the depositary."

Article 24 further provides in its paragraph 3 that:

"When the consent of a State to be bound by a treaty is established on a date after the treaty has come into force, the treaty enters into force for that State on that date, unless the treaty otherwise provides."

In its report to the General Assembly, the International Law Commission had pointed out that:

"In the case of the deposit of an instrument with a depositary, the problem arises whether the deposit by itself establishes the legal nexus between the depositing State and other contracting States or whether the legal nexus arises only upon their being informed by the depositary." (Yearbook of the International Law Commission, 1966, Vol. II, p. 201.)

After describing the advantages and disadvantages of both solutions, it concluded that:

"The Commission considered that the existing general rule clearly is that the act of deposit by itself establishes the legal nexus . . . This was the view taken by the International Court of Justice in the Right of Passage over Indian Territory (preliminary objections) case in the analogous situation of the deposit of instruments of acceptance of the optional clause under Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute of the Court . . . [Therefore] the existing rule appears to be well-settled." (Ibid.)

This general rule is reflected in Articles 16 and 24 of the Vienna Convention: the deposit of instruments of ratification, acceptance, approval or accession to a treaty establishes the consent of a State to be bound by a treaty; the treaty enters into force as regards that State on the day of the deposit.

Thus the rules adopted in this sphere by the Vienna Convention correspond to the solution adopted by the Court in the case concerning Right of Passage over Indian Territory. That solution should be maintained.

32. Nigeria maintains however that, in any event, Cameroon could not file an application before the Court without allowing a reasonable period to elapse "as would . . . have enabled the Secretary-General to take the action required of him in relation to Cameroon's Declaration of 3 March 1994". Compliance with that time period is essential, the more so because, according to Nigeria, the Court, in its Judgment of 26 November 1984 in the case concerning Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua, required a reasonable time for the withdrawal of declarations under the Optional Clause.

33. The Court, in the above Judgment, noted that the United States had, in 1984, deposited with the Secretary-General, three days before the filing of Nicaragua's Application, a notification limiting the scope of its Declaration of acceptance of the Court's jurisdiction. The Court noted that that Declaration contained a clause requiring six months' notice of termination. It considered that that condition should be complied with in cases of either termination or modification of the Declaration, and concluded that the 1984 notification of modification could not, with immediate effect, override the obligation entered into by the United States beforehand (Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua (Nicaragua v. United States of America), Jurisdiction and Admissibility, I.C.J. Reports 1984, p. 421, para. 65).

The Court noted, moreover, in relation to Nicaragua's Declaration upon which the United States was relying on the grounds of reciprocity, that, in any event,

"the right of immediate termination of declarations with indefinite duration is far from established. It appears from the requirements of good faith that they should be treated, by analogy, according to the law of treaties, which requires a reasonable time for withdrawal from or termination of treaties that contain no provision regarding the duration of their validity" (ibid., p. 420, para. 63).

The Court added: "the question of what reasonable period of notice would legally be required does not need to be further examined: it need only be observed that [three days] would not amount to a 'reasonable time'" (ibid.).

34. The Court considers that the foregoing conclusion in respect of the withdrawal of declarations under the Optional Clause is not applicable to the deposit of those declarations. Withdrawal ends existing consensual bonds, while deposit establishes such bonds. The effect of withdrawal is therefore purely and simply to deprive other States which have already accepted the jurisdiction of the Court of the right they had to bring proceedings before it against the withdrawing State. In contrast, the deposit of a declaration does not deprive those States of any accrued right. Accordingly no time period is required for the establishment of a consensual bond following such a deposit.

35. The Court notes moreover that to require a reasonable time to elapse before a declaration can take effect would be to introduce an element of uncertainty into the operation of the Optional Clause system. As set out in paragraph 26 above, in the case concerning Right of Passage over Indian Territory, the Court had considered that it could not create such uncertainty. The conclusions it had reached then remain valid and apply all the more since the growth in the number of States party to the Statute and the intensification of inter-State relations since 1957 have increased the possibilities of legal disputes capable of being submitted to the Court. The Court cannot introduce into the Optional Clause an additional time requirement which is not there.

*

36. Nigeria's second argument is that Cameroon omitted to inform it that it intended to accept the jurisdiction of the Court, then that it had accepted that jurisdiction and, lastly, that it intended to file an application. Nigeria further argued that Cameroon even continued, during the first three months of 1994, to maintain bilateral contacts with it on boundary questions while preparing itself to address the Court. Such conduct, Nigeria contends, infringes upon the principle of good faith which today plays a larger role in the case-law of the Court than before, and should not be accepted.

37. Cameroon, for its part, argues that it had no obligation to inform Nigeria in advance of its intentions, or of its decisions. It adds that in any event "Nigeria was not at all surprised by the filing of Cameroon's Application and . . . knew perfectly well what Cameroon's intentions were in that regard several weeks before the filing". The principle of good faith was not at all disregarded.

38. The Court observes that the principle of good faith is a well-established principle of international law. It is set forth in Article 2, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations; it is also embodied in Article 26 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties of 23 May 1969. It was mentioned as early as the beginning of this century in the Arbitral Award of 7 September 1910 in the North Atlantic Fisheries case (United Nations, Reports of International Arbitral Awards, Vol. XI, p. 188). It was moreover upheld in several judgments of the Permanent Court of International Justice (Factory at Chorzów, Merits, Judgment No. 13, 1928, P.C.I.J., Series A, No. 17, p. 30; Free Zones of Upper Savoy and the District of Gex, Order of 6 December 1930, P.C.I.J., Series A, No. 24, p. 12, and 1932, P.C.I.J., Series A/B, No. 46, p. 167). Finally, it was applied by this Court as early as 1952 in the case concerning Rights of Nationals of the United States of America in Morocco (Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1952, p. 212), then in the case concerning Fisheries Jurisdiction (Federal Republic of Germany v. Iceland) (Jurisdiction of the Court, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1973, p. 18), the Nuclear Tests cases (I.C.J. Reports 1974, pp. 268 and 473), and the case concerning Border and Transborder Armed Actions (Nicaragua v. Honduras) (Jurisdiction and Admissibility, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1988, p. 105).

39. The Court furthermore notes that although the principle of good faith is “one of the basic principles governing the creation and performance of legal obligations . . . it is not in itself a source of obligation where none would otherwise exist” (Border and Transborder Armed Actions (Nicaragua v. Honduras), Jurisdiction and Admissibility, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1988, p. 105, para. 94). There is no specific obligation in international law for States to inform other States parties to the Statute that they intend to subscribe or have subscribed to the Optional Clause. Consequently, Cameroon was not bound to inform Nigeria that it intended to subscribe or had subscribed to the Optional Clause.

Moreover:

“A State accepting the jurisdiction of the Court must expect that an Application may be filed against it before the Court by a new declarant State on the same day on which that State deposits with the Secretary-General its Declaration of Acceptance.” (Right of Passage over Indian Territory, Preliminary Objections, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1957, p. 146.)

Thus, Cameroon was not bound to inform Nigeria of its intention to bring proceedings before the Court. In the absence of any such obligations and of any infringement of Nigeria’s corresponding rights, Nigeria may not justifiably rely upon the principle of good faith in support of its submissions.

40. On the facts of the matter, to which the Parties devoted considerable attention, and quite apart from legal considerations, the Court would add that Nigeria was not unaware of Cameroon’s intentions. On 28 February 1994, Cameroon had informed the Security Council of incidents which had occurred shortly beforehand in the Bakassi Peninsula. In response, on 4 March 1994, Nigeria apprised the Security Council of its surprise in noting that “the Cameroon Government had decided to raise the matter to an international level by . . . (c) bringing proceedings before the International Court of Justice”. Indeed on 4 March, Cameroon had deposited its declaration of acceptance of the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court, but had not yet seised the Court. Nigeria’s communication to the Security Council nevertheless showed that it was not uninformed of Cameroon’s intentions.

Further the Court points out that, on 4 March 1994, the Journal of the United Nations, issued at Headquarters in New York to United Nations organs and to the permanent missions, reported that Cameroon had deposited with the Secretary-General a “declaration recognizing as compulsory the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice under Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute of the Court” (Journal of the United Nations, Friday 4 March 1994, No. 1994/43 (Part II)).

Lastly, on 11 March 1994, the bringing of the matter to the Security Council and the International Court of Justice by Cameroon was mentioned at the extraordinary general meeting of the Central Organ of the Mechanism for Conflict Prevention, Management and Resolution of the Organization of African Unity, devoted to the border conflict between Cameroon and Nigeria.

*

41. Nigeria recalls in the third place that, by its Declaration deposited on 3 September 1965, it had recognized

“as compulsory ipso facto and without special agreement, in relation to any other State accepting the same obligation, that is to say, on the sole condition of reciprocity, the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice in conformity with Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute of the Court”.

Nigeria maintains that on the date on which Cameroon’s Application was filed, it did not know that Cameroon had accepted the Court’s compulsory jurisdiction. Accordingly it could not have brought an application against Cameroon. There was an absence of reciprocity on that date. The condition contained in the Nigerian Declaration was operative; consequently, the Court does not have jurisdiction to hear the Application.

42. Cameroon disputes this argument in fact as well as in law. It states that, in the minds of the States party to the Optional Clause, the condition of reciprocity never possessed the meaning which Nigeria now ascribes to it; the Court had ascribed a completely different meaning to it in a number of its judgments. The interpretation now provided by Nigeria of its own declaration was a new interpretation for which no authority was cited in support. In sum, the purpose of the Nigerian Declaration, according to Cameroon, was only to emphasize that there is “a sole and unique condition to the compulsory character of the Court’s jurisdiction in this case, i.e., that Cameroon should accept the same obligation as Nigeria, or in other words that it should accept the jurisdiction of the Court. This Cameroon does.”

43. The Court has on numerous occasions had to consider what meaning it is appropriate to give to the condition of reciprocity in the implementation of Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute. As early as 1952, it held in the case concerning Anglo-Iranian Oil Co. that, when declarations are made on condition of reciprocity, “jurisdiction is conferred on the Court only to the extent to which the two Declarations coincide in conferring it” (I.C.J. Reports 1952, p. 103). The Court applied that rule again in the case of Certain Norwegian Loans (I.C.J. Reports 1957, pp. 23 and 24) and clarified it in the Interhandel case where it held that:

“Reciprocity in the case of Declarations accepting the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court enables a Party to invoke a reservation to that acceptance which it has not expressed in its own Declaration but which the other Party has expressed in its Declaration. . . Reciprocity enables the State which has made the wider acceptance of the jurisdiction of the Court to rely upon the reservations to the acceptance laid down by the other Party. There the effect of reciprocity ends." (I.C.J. Reports 1959, p. 23.)

In the final analysis, "[t]he notion of reciprocity is concerned with the scope and substance of the commitments entered into, including reservations, and not with the formal conditions of their creation, duration or extinction" (Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua (Nicaragua v. United States of America), Jurisdiction and Admissibility, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1984, p. 419, para. 62). It simply requires that the Court ascertain whether, at the time of filing the Application instituting proceedings "the two States accepted 'the same obligation' in relation to the subject-matter of the proceedings" (ibid., pp. 420-421, para. 64).

Therefore, in legal proceedings, the notion of reciprocity, and that of equality, "are not abstract conceptions. They must be related to some provision of the Statute or of the Declarations" (Right of Passage over Indian Territory, Preliminary Objections, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1957, p. 145). Consequently, "the principle of reciprocity is not affected by any delay in the receipt of copies of the Declaration by the Parties to the Statute" (ibid., p. 147).

Nigeria considers, however, that that precedent does not apply here. It points out that, although in its 1965 Declaration, it recognized the jurisdiction of the Court as compulsory in relation to any other State accepting the same obligation, it was more explicit in adding the words "and that is to say, on the sole condition of reciprocity". "Those additional words clearly have some meaning and effect . . . it is the supplementing of the 'coincidence' required by Article 36, paragraph 2, by the element of mutuality inherent in the concept of 'reciprocity'." The Nigerian condition, in other words, sought "to mitigate the effects" of the Court's earlier decision in the case concerning Right of Passage over Indian Territory by creating an equality of risk and precluding that proceedings be brought before the Court by surprise.

44. In support of its position, Nigeria invokes the decision given in the case concerning Anglo-Iranian Oil Co., in which the Court stated that it could not base its interpretation of the Iranian Declaration recognizing the jurisdiction of the Court

"on a purely grammatical interpretation of the text. It must seek the interpretation which is in harmony with a natural and reasonable way of reading the text, having due regard to the intention of the Government of Iran at the time when it accepted the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court." (Anglo-Iranian Oil Co., Preliminary Objection, I.C.J. Reports 1952, p. 104.)

The Court had concluded that "[i]t is unlikely that the Government of Iran . . . should have been willing, on its own initiative, to agree that disputes relating" (ibid., p. 105) to the capitulations which it had just denounced be submitted to an international court of justice.

45. The Court considers that the situation in this case is very different. Nigeria does not offer evidence in support of its argument that it intended to insert into its Declaration of 14 August 1965 a condition of reciprocity with a different meaning from the one which the Court had drawn from such clauses in 1957. In order to protect itself against the filing of surprise applications, in 1965, Nigeria could have inserted in its Declaration an analogous reservation to that which the United Kingdom added to its own Declaration in 1958. Ten or so other States proceeded in this way. Nigeria did not do so at that time. Like the majority of States which subscribe to the Optional Clause, it merely specified that the commitments it was entering into, in accordance with Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute, were reciprocal in relation to any other State accepting the same obligation. In the light of this practice, the additional phrase of the sentence, "that is to say, on the sole condition of reciprocity" must be understood as explanatory and not adding any further condition. This interpretation is "in harmony with a natural and reasonable way of reading the text" (Anglo-Iranian Oil Co., Preliminary Objection, I.C.J. Reports 1952, p. 104) and Nigeria's condition of reciprocity cannot be treated as a reservation ratione temporis.

46. The Court therefore concludes that the manner in which Cameroon's Application was filed was not contrary to Article 36 of the Statute. Nor was it made in violation of a right which Nigeria may claim under the Statute, or by virtue of its Declaration, as it was in force on the date of the filing of Cameroon's Application.

*

47. Nigeria's first preliminary objection is accordingly rejected. The Court is therefore not called upon to examine the reasoning put forward by Cameroon under Article 102 of the Charter, nor Cameroon's alternative submissions based on forum prorogatum. In any event, the Court has jurisdiction to pass upon Cameroon's Application.

* *

SECOND PRELIMINARY OBJECTION

48. Nigeria raises a second preliminary objection stating that

"for a period of at least 24 years prior to the filing of the Application the Parties have in their regular dealings accepted a duty to settle all boundary questions through the existing bilateral machinery".

According to Nigeria, an implicit agreement is thus said to have been reached with a view to resorting exclusively to such machinery and to refraining from relying on the jurisdiction of the International Court of Justice. In the alternative, Nigeria claims that by its conduct Cameroon is estopped from turning to the Court. Finally, Nigeria invokes the principle of good faith and the rule pacta sunt servanda in support of this argument.

49. Cameroon maintains that the bilateral bodies which dealt with various boundary difficulties that had emerged between the two countries had only been temporary and that no permanent institutional machinery had been set up. It contends that no explicit or implicit agreement had been established between the Parties with a view to vesting exclusive jurisdiction in such bodies. Finally, according to Cameroon, the conditions laid down in the Court's case-law for the application of estoppel to arise were not fulfilled here. Therefore, there was no occasion to apply the principle of good faith and the rule pacta sunt servanda.

50. Nigeria's objection thus consists of two branches. But before making a legal determination considering them in turn, the Court will review the relevant facts.

51. The first bilateral contact referred to in the pleadings concerns a local dispute in the districts of Danare (Nigeria) and Budam (Cameroon). This dispute gave rise in 1965 to "exploratory talks" concerning the demarcation of the boundary in this sector. That course having been determined by the German and British authorities at the beginning of the century, it was agreed to locate existing boundary pillars with a view to identifying the boundary and proceeding with its demarcation not only between Danare and Budam, but also on a stretch of some 20 miles from Obokum Falls to Bashu (boundary pillars Nos. 114 to 105). The existing pillars were identified but none of the work planned was subsequently carried out.

52. Five years later, in response to incidents that occurred in the Cross River region and the Bakassi Peninsula, the two Governments decided to set up a Joint Boundary Commission. At the first meeting of that Commission, the delegates from Cameroon and Nigeria approved, on 14 August 1970, a declaration recommending that the delimitation of the boundary be carried out in three stages:

- (a) the delimitation of the maritime boundary;
- (b) the delimitation of the land boundary as defined in the Anglo-German Protocol signed at Obokum on 12 April 1913 and confirmed by the London Anglo-German agreement 'respecting (1) the settlement of Frontier between Nigeria and Cameroon from Yola to the sea; and (2) the Regulation of navigation on the Cross River', and the exchange of letters between the British and German Governments on 6 July 1914;
- (c) the delimitation of the rest of the land boundary".

The declaration further specified the bases on which the delimitation of the maritime boundary was to be carried out. It recommended that the demarcation work commenced in 1965 be resumed. Finally, it recommended that, on completion of each of these stages, a separate treaty be signed by the two countries to give effect to the boundary so demarcated and surveyed.

A Joint Technical Committee was then set up for the purpose of implementing the joint declaration. As agreed, it began its work with the delimitation of the maritime boundary. Negotiations went on at various levels on this matter for almost five years. They concluded on 4 April 1971 as regards the maritime boundary at the mouth of the Cross River, then led on 1 June 1975 to a declaration in Maroua by the two Heads of State concerning the course of the maritime boundary from the mouth of the Cross River to a point denominated "G" situated, according to the Parties, some 17 nautical miles from the coast.

53. Over the following years, contacts between the two countries on these boundary issues became less frequent. At most, it may be noted that two Joint Committee meetings were held. The first, in 1978, was attended by the two Foreign Ministers. They set forth their points of view on a number of boundary problems without undertaking negotiations and the meeting did not result in any joint minutes. The second meeting, held in 1987, brought together the Ministers responsible for planning in the two countries and did not broach boundary matters.

54. The negotiations on these issues, which were interrupted after 1975, were only resumed between the two States 16 years later when, on 29 August 1991, the two Foreign Ministers adopted a joint communiqué stating:

"On border issues, the two sides agreed to examine in detail all aspects of the matter by the experts of the National Boundary Commission of Nigeria and the experts of the Republic of Cameroon at a meeting to be convened at Abuja in October 1991 with a view to making appropriate recommendations for a peaceful resolution of outstanding border issues."

Indeed, a first meeting of these experts took place at the same time as that of the Foreign Ministers in August 1991. It was followed by a second meeting at Abuja in December 1991, then by a third at Yaoundé in August 1993. No agreement could be reached at these meetings, in particular as regards the Maroua Declaration, which was considered binding by Cameroon but not by Nigeria.

55. In sum, the Court notes that the negotiations between the two States concerning the delimitation or the demarcation of the boundary were carried out in various frameworks and at various levels: Heads of State, Foreign Ministers, experts. The negotiations were active during the period 1970 to 1975 and then were interrupted until 1991.

*

56. Turning to legal considerations, the Court will now consider the first branch of the Nigerian objection. It recalls first that, "Negotiation and judicial settlement are enumerated together in Article 33 of the Charter of the United Nations as means for the peaceful settlement of disputes" (Aegean Sea Continental Shelf, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1978, p. 12, para. 29). Neither in the Charter nor otherwise in international law is any general rule to be found to the effect that the exhaustion of diplomatic negotiations constitutes a precondition for a matter to be referred to the Court. No such precondition was embodied in the Statute of the Permanent Court of International Justice, contrary to a proposal by the Advisory Committee of Jurists in 1920 (Advisory Committee of Jurists, Procès-verbaux of the Proceedings of the Committee (16 June-24 July 1920) with Annexes, pp. 679, 725-726). Nor is it to be found in Article 36 of the Statute of this Court.

A precondition of this type may be embodied and is often included in compromissory clauses of treaties. It may also be included in a special agreement whose signatories then reserve the right to seise the Court only after a certain lapse of time (cf. Territorial Dispute (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya/Chad), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1994, p. 9). Finally, States remain free to insert into their optional declaration accepting the compulsory jurisdiction of the Court a reservation excluding from the latter those disputes for which the parties involved have agreed or subsequently agree to resort to an alternative method of peaceful settlement. In this case, however, no reservation of this type was included in the Declarations of Nigeria or Cameroon on the date of the filing of the Application.

Moreover, the fact that the two States have attempted, in the circumstances set out in paragraphs 54 and 55 above, to solve some of the boundary issues dividing them during bilateral contacts, did not imply that either one had excluded the possibility of bringing any boundary dispute concerning it before other fora, and in particular the International Court of Justice. The first branch of Nigeria's objection accordingly is not accepted.

57. Turning to the second branch of the objection, the Court will examine whether the conditions laid down in its jurisprudence for an estoppel to exist are present in the instant case.

An estoppel would only arise if by its acts or declarations Cameroon had consistently made it fully clear that it had agreed to settle the boundary dispute submitted to the Court by bilateral avenues alone. It would further be necessary that, by relying on such an attitude, Nigeria had changed position to its own detriment or had suffered some prejudice (North Sea Continental Shelf, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1969, p. 26, para. 30; Land, Island and Maritime Frontier Dispute (El Salvador/Honduras), Application to Intervene, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1990, p. 118, para. 63).

These conditions are not fulfilled in this case. Indeed, as pointed out in paragraph 56 above, Cameroon did not attribute an exclusive character to the negotiations conducted with Nigeria, nor, as far as it appears, did Nigeria. Furthermore, Nigeria does not show that it has changed its position to its detriment or that it has sustained prejudice in that it could otherwise have sought a solution to the border problems existing between the two States by having recourse to other procedures, but was precluded from doing so by reliance on the positions allegedly taken by Cameroon.

58. Finally, the Court has not been persuaded that Nigeria has been prejudiced as a result of Cameroon's having instituted proceedings before the Court instead of pursuing negotiations which, moreover, were deadlocked when the Application was filed.

59. This being so, in bringing proceedings before the Court, Cameroon did not disregard the legal rules relied on by Nigeria in support of its second objection. Consequently, Nigeria is not justified in relying on the principle of good faith and the rule pacta sunt servanda, both of which relate only to the fulfilment of existing obligations. The second branch of Nigeria's objection is not accepted.

60. The second preliminary objection as a whole is thus rejected.

* *

THIRD PRELIMINARY OBJECTION

61. In its third preliminary objection, Nigeria contends that "the settlement of boundary disputes within the Lake Chad region is subject to the exclusive competence of the Lake Chad Basin Commission".

62. In support of this argument, Nigeria invokes the treaty texts governing the Statute of the Commission as well as the practice of member States. It argues that "the procedures for settlement by the Commission are binding upon the Parties" and that Cameroon was thus barred from raising the matter before the Court on the basis of Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute.

63. For its part, Cameroon submits to the Court that "no provision of the Statute of the Lake Chad Basin Commission establishes in favour of that international organization any exclusive competence in relation to boundary delimitation".

It adds that no such exclusive jurisdiction can be inferred from the conduct of member States. It therefore calls upon the Court to reject the third preliminary objection.

*

64. The Court observes that the Statute of the Lake Chad Basin Commission was annexed to an Agreement of 22 May 1964 signed on that date by Cameroon, Chad, Niger and Nigeria. According to its preamble, this convention concerning the development of the Lake Chad Basin is designed “to formulate principles of the utilization of the resources of the Basin for economic purposes, including the harnessing of the water”. Article IV of the Statute develops those principles by providing that “[t]he development of the said Basin and in particular the utilisation of surface and ground waters shall be given its widest connotation and refers in particular to domestic, industrial and agricultural development, the collection of the products of its fauna and flora”.

In addition, under Article VII of the Statute, member States undertake to “establish common rules for the purpose of facilitating navigation on the Lake and on the navigable waters in the Basin and to ensure the safety and control of navigation”.

Article I of the Convention establishes the Lake Chad Basin Commission. The Commission comprises two commissioners per member State. In accordance with Article X, paragraph 3, of the Statute, the decisions of the Commission shall be by unanimous vote.

The functions of the Commission are laid down in Article IX of the same Statute. They are inter alia to prepare “general regulations which will permit the full application of the principles set forth in the present Convention and its annexed Statute, and to ensure their effective application”. The Commission exercises various powers with a view to co-ordinating action by member States regarding the use of the waters of the Basin. Finally, one of its responsibilities under Article IX, paragraph (g), is “to examine complaints and to promote the settlement of disputes and the resolution of differences”.

65. Member States have also entrusted to the Commission certain tasks that had not originally been provided for in the treaty texts. Further to incidents between Cameroon and Nigeria in 1983 in the Lake Chad area, an extraordinary meeting of the Commission was convened from 21 to 23 July 1983 in Lagos on the initiative of the Heads of State concerned, in order to entrust to the Commission certain boundary and security matters. Two sub-commissions of experts were then set up. They met from 12 to 16 November 1984. An agreement was immediately reached between the experts to adopt “as working documents” various bilateral conventions and agreements concluded between Germany, France and the United Kingdom between 1906 and 1931 “on the delimitation of Borders in the Lake Chad area”. The experts proposed at the same time that the boundary so delimited be demarcated as early as possible.

This demarcation was carried out from 1988 to 1990 in the course of three boundary-marking operations involving the setting up of seven main and 68 intermediary boundary pillars. The Final Report on Beaconing was signed by the delegates of the four States concerned. Then, on 23 March 1994, at the Eighth Summit of the Lake Chad Basin Commission in Abuja, the Heads of State and Government were informed that “the physical work in the field on the border demarcation exercise was fully completed”. They then decided “to approve the technical document on the demarcation of the international boundaries of member States in Lake Chad”, on the understanding “that each country should adopt the document in accordance with its national laws”. The question of the ratification of that document came up at the Ninth Summit of Heads of State of the Commission held on 30 and 31 October 1996 in N’Djamena when Heads of State of Cameroon and Nigeria were absent and where no progress was recorded. Since then, however, on 22 December 1997, Cameroon deposited its instrument of ratification, whereas Nigeria has not done so.

*

66. In the light of the treaty texts and the practice thus recalled, the Court will consider the positions of the Parties on this matter. For its part, Nigeria first of all contends that “the role and Statute of the Commission” must be understood “in the framework of regional agencies” referred to in Article 52 of the United Nations Charter. It accordingly concludes that “the Commission has an exclusive power in relation to issues of security and public order in the region of Lake Chad and that these issues appropriately encompass the business of boundary demarcation”.

Cameroon argues, for its part, that the Commission does not constitute a regional arrangement or agency within the meaning of Article 52 of the Charter, pointing in particular to the fact that “there has never been any question of extending this category to international regional organizations of a technical nature which, like the [Commission], can include a mechanism for the peaceful settlement of disputes or for the promotion of that kind of settlement”.

67. The Court notes that Article 52, paragraph 1, of the Charter refers to “regional arrangements or agencies for dealing with such matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security as are appropriate for regional action”. According to paragraph 2 of that Article, “[t]he Members of the United Nations entering into such arrangements or constituting such agencies shall make every effort to achieve pacific settlement of local disputes through such regional arrangements or by such regional agencies before referring them to the Security Council”.

Under Article 53, the Security Council may use these arrangements or agencies for “enforcement action under its authority”.

From the treaty texts and the practice analysed at paragraphs 64 and 65 above, it emerges that the Lake Chad Basin Commission is an international organization exercising its powers within a specific geographical area; that it does not however have as its purpose the settlement at a regional level of matters relating to the maintenance of international peace and security and thus does not fall under Chapter VIII of the Charter.

68. However, even were it otherwise, Nigeria's argument should nonetheless be set aside. In this connection, the Court notes that, in the case concerning Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua, it did not consider that the Contadora process could "properly be regarded as a 'regional arrangement' for the purposes of Chapter VIII of the United Nations Charter". But it added that, in any event,

"the Court is unable to accept either that there is any requirement of prior exhaustion of regional negotiating processes as a precondition to seising the Court; or that the existence of the Contadora process constitutes in this case an obstacle to the examination by the Court of the Nicaraguan Application" (Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua (Nicaragua v. United States of America), Jurisdiction and Admissibility, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1984, p. 440).

Whatever their nature, the existence of procedures for regional negotiation cannot prevent the Court from exercising the functions conferred upon it by the Charter and the Statute.

69. Nigeria further invokes Article 95 of the United Nations Charter according to which:

"Nothing in the present Charter shall prevent Members of the United Nations from entrusting the solution of their differences to other tribunals by virtue of agreements already in existence or which may be concluded in the future."

According to Nigeria, the Lake Chad Basin Commission should be seen as a tribunal falling under the provisions of this text. This would mean that, if the Court were to pronounce on this submission of Cameroon it "would be in breach of the principle of the autonomy of jurisdictional competence" and "would be exercising an appellate jurisdiction".

The Court considers that the Lake Chad Basin Commission cannot be seen as a tribunal. It renders neither arbitral awards nor judgments and is therefore neither an arbitral nor a judicial body. Accordingly, this contention of Nigeria must also be set aside.

70. Nigeria further maintains that the Convention of 22 May 1964, confirmed by the practice of the member States of the Commission, attributes to that Commission an exclusive competence for the settlement of boundary disputes. It concludes from this that the Court cannot entertain Cameroon's submissions requesting it to determine the boundary between the two countries in this sector.

The Court cannot subscribe to that reasoning. It notes first of all that no provision in the Convention ascribes jurisdiction and a fortiori exclusive jurisdiction to the Commission as regards the settlement of boundary disputes. In particular, such a jurisdiction cannot be deduced from Article IX, paragraph (g), of the Convention (see paragraph 64 above).

The Court further notes that the member States of the Commission subsequently charged it with carrying out the demarcation of boundaries in the region on the basis of the agreements and treaties referred to in the experts' report of November 1984 (see paragraph 65 above). Thus, as pointed out by Nigeria, "the question of boundary demarcation was clearly within the competence of the [Commission]". This demarcation was designed by the States concerned as a physical operation to be carried out in the field under the authority of the Commission with a view to avoiding the reoccurrence of the incidents that had arisen in 1983.

But the Commission has never been given jurisdiction, and a fortiori exclusive jurisdiction, to rule on the territorial dispute now involving Cameroon and Nigeria before the Court, a dispute which moreover did not as yet exist in 1983. Consequently, Nigeria's argument must be dismissed.

71. Nigeria also argues that, from 1983 to 1994, "Cameroon had clearly and consistently evinced acceptance of the régime of exclusive recourse to the Lake Chad Basin Commission"; Cameroon then appealed to the Court contrary to the commitments it had entered into. This course of conduct, it was argued, had been prejudicial to Nigeria, deprived as it was of the "consultation" and "negotiation" procedures afforded by the Commission. Nigeria claims that Cameroon is estopped from making its Application.

The Court points out that the conditions laid down in its case-law for an estoppel to arise, as set out in paragraph 57 above, are not fulfilled in this case. Indeed, Cameroon has not accepted that the Commission has jurisdiction to settle the boundary dispute now submitted to the Court. This argument must also be set aside.

72. In the alternative, Nigeria finally argues that, on account of the demarcation under way in the Lake Chad Basin Commission, the Court "cannot rule out the consideration of the need for judicial restraint on grounds of judicial propriety" and should decline to rule on the merits of Cameroon's Application, as it did in 1963 in the case concerning Northern Cameroons.

In that case, the Court had noted that the United Nations General Assembly had terminated the trusteeship agreement in respect of the Northern Cameroon by resolution 1608 (XV); it observed that the dispute between the parties "about the interpretation and application [of that agreement therefore concerned a treaty] no longer in force"; it went on to say that "there can be no opportunity for a future act of interpretation or application of that treaty in accordance with any judgment the Court might render". It had concluded that any adjudication would thus be "devoid of purpose" and that no purpose "would be served by undertaking an examination of the merits in the case". Observing that the limits of its judicial function "do not permit it to entertain the claims submitted to it [by Cameroon, it had considered itself unable to] adjudicate upon the merits of [those] claim[s]" (Northern Cameroons, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1963, pp. 37-38).

The Court considers that the situation in the present case is entirely different. Indeed, whereas in 1963 Cameroon did not challenge the validity of the General Assembly resolution terminating the trusteeship, Nigeria, in the present case, does not regard the technical document on the demarcation of the boundaries, approved at the Abuja Summit of the Lake Chad Basin Commission, as a document definitively settling boundary problems in that region. Nigeria reserved its position before the Court as regards the binding character of that document. It contends that the document requires ratification and recalls that it has not ratified it. Lastly, it specified at the Ninth Summit of the Commission at N'Djamena in 1996 that "Nigeria could not even start processing ratification unless the issue was out of Court".

Cameroon for its part considers that Nigeria is obliged to complete the process of approval of the document concerned and, that, even in the absence of so doing, the boundary between the two countries in this sector is "legally defined", "marked out on the ground" and "internationally recognized".

It is not for the Court at this stage to rule upon these opposing arguments. It need only note that Nigeria cannot assert both that the demarcation procedure initiated within the Lake Chad Commission was not completed and that, at the same time, that procedure rendered Cameroon's submissions moot. There is thus no reason of judicial propriety which should make the Court decline to rule on the merits of those submissions.

73. In the light of the above considerations, Nigeria's third preliminary objection must be rejected.

* *

FOURTH PRELIMINARY OBJECTION

74. The Court will now turn to the fourth preliminary objection raised by Nigeria. This objection contends that:

"The Court should not in these proceedings determine the boundary in Lake Chad to the extent that that boundary constitutes or is constituted by the tripoint in the Lake."

75. Nigeria holds that the location of the tripoint within Lake Chad directly affects a third State, the Republic of Chad, and that the Court therefore cannot determine this tripoint. Nigeria maintains that the finding of the Chamber in the case concerning the Frontier Dispute (Burkina Faso/Republic of Mali)

“that its jurisdiction is not restricted simply because the end-point of the frontier lies on the frontier of a third State not party to the proceedings. The rights of the neighbouring State, Niger, are in any event safeguarded by the operation of Article 59 of the Statute . . .”
(I.C.J. Reports 1986, p. 577, para. 46) is not applicable in the present case. It says there is a difference because the 1986 Frontier Dispute case was instituted by Special Agreement, which reflected the agreement of the Parties to have the entire boundary delimited. In addition, in the Frontier Dispute case Niger was treated as a wholly third party, while in the present case there is the Lake Chad Basin Commission in which the States bordering Lake Chad co-operate. Because of that co-operation, boundary or other agreements relating to Lake Chad between Nigeria and Cameroon are not res inter alios acta for the other member States of the Commission. Therefore, neither Niger nor Chad are simple third parties in this case. According to Nigeria, “the régime of Lake Chad is subject to multilateral co-operation, and is not susceptible to the thorough-going bilateralization” which the Chamber adopted in the Frontier Dispute case.

Nigeria also alleges that it is not the case that Chad as a third party is merely theoretically or contingently involved in the question of boundaries; there had been clashes between Nigeria and Chad in and in relation to Lake Chad. Finally, Nigeria questions the distinction which the Chamber in the Frontier Dispute case drew between maritime and land delimitation. “Criteria of equidistance, proportionality and equity have been applied to the delimitation of lacustrine boundaries, especially in large lakes.” Nigeria’s position is such that it would warrant the conclusion that its fourth preliminary objection goes not only to the jurisdiction of the Court (by analogy with the principle in the case of the Monetary Gold Removed from Rome in 1943, Preliminary Question, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1954, p. 19), but also to the admissibility of the Application, as the objection is in its view well founded on either basis.

76. Cameroon claims that the Court must exercise its jurisdiction over the totality of the disputed boundary, as far as the northern end-point within Lake Chad; Nigeria’s fourth preliminary objection directly conflicts with consistent case-law relating to tripoints. Cameroon particularly rejects the Nigerian argument which distinguishes the Frontier Dispute decision from the present case: the absence of a special agreement, and therefore the consent of Nigeria to the institution of the proceedings, is irrelevant; Nigeria does not cite any precedent in which a differentiation was made between “wholly third States” and States which would not be real third States. Inter se boundary agreements from which third States are absent are frequent. Article 59 suffices as protection of the third States' rights. The concept of theoretical involvement of a third State in a boundary question is, in the view of Cameroon, not pertinent. There is no support for this concept, the implications of which are not clearly explained. Lastly Cameroon contests the efforts made by Nigeria to exclude the applicability of the Frontier Dispute Judgment to delimitation in lakes.

77. The Court notes that, to the extent that Nigeria's reference to the Lake Chad Basin Commission is to be understood as referring to an exclusive competence of the Commission for boundary delimitation in Lake Chad, this argument has been dealt with under the third preliminary objection. As the third preliminary objection has not been upheld, the Court need not deal with this argument again.

78. The Court moreover notes that the submissions of Cameroon addressed to it in the Additional Application (para. 17) and as formulated in the Memorial of Cameroon (Memorial of Cameroon, pp. 669-671, para. 9) do not contain a specific request to determine the localization of the tripoint Nigeria-Cameroon-Chad in the Lake. The Additional Application requests the Court "to specify definitively the frontier between Cameroon and the Federal Republic of Nigeria from Lake Chad to the sea" (para. 17 (f) of the Additional Application), while the Memorial requests the Court to adjudge and declare:

"that the lake and land boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria takes the following course:

— from the point at longitude 14° 04' 59" 9999 E of Greenwich and latitude 13° 05' 00" 0001 N, it then runs through the point located at longitude 14° 12' 11" 7 E and latitude 12° 32' 17" 4 N" (p. 669, para. 9.1 (a)).

These submissions nevertheless bear upon the localization of the tripoint. They could lead either to a confirmation of the localization of the tripoint as accepted in practice up to now on the basis of acts and agreements of the former colonial powers and the demarcation carried out by the Commission (see paragraph 65 above), or they could lead to a redetermination of the situation of the tripoint, possibly as a consequence of Nigeria's claims to Darak and adjacent islands. Thus these claims cannot be considered on the merits by the Court at this stage of the proceedings. However, the Court notes, at the present stage, that they are directed against Cameroon and that in due course the Court will be in a position to take its decision in this regard without pronouncing on interests that Chad may have, as the Court will demonstrate hereafter.

79. The Court therefore now turns to the crux of Nigeria's fourth preliminary objection, namely the assertion that the legal interests of Chad would be affected by the determination of the tripoint, and that the Court can therefore not proceed to that determination.

The Court recalls that it has always acknowledged as one of the fundamental principles of its Statute that no dispute between States can be decided without their consent to its jurisdiction (Monetary Gold Removed from Rome in 1943, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1954, p. 32.) Nevertheless, the Court has also emphasized that it is not necessarily prevented from adjudicating when the judgment it is asked to give might affect the legal interests of a State which is not a party to the case; and the Court has only declined to exercise jurisdiction when the interests of the third State “constitute the very subject-matter of the judgment to be rendered on the merits” (Certain Phosphate Lands in Nauru (Nauru v. Australia), Preliminary Objections, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1992, p. 261, para. 55; East Timor (Portugal v. Australia), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1995, pp. 104-105, para. 34).

The Court observes that the submissions presented to it by Cameroon refer to the frontier between Cameroon and Nigeria and to that frontier alone. These submissions do not refer to the frontier between Cameroon and the Republic of Chad either as contained in the Additional Application of Cameroon or as formulated in the Memorial. Certainly, the request to “specify definitively the frontier between Cameroon and the Federal Republic of Nigeria from Lake Chad to the sea” (para. 17 (f) of the Additional Application) may affect the tripoint, i.e., the point where the frontiers of Cameroon, Chad and Nigeria meet. However, the request to specify the frontier between Cameroon and Nigeria from Lake Chad to the sea does not imply that the tripoint could be moved away from the line constituting the Cameroon-Chad boundary. Neither Cameroon nor Nigeria contests the current course of that boundary in the centre of Lake Chad as it is described in the “technical document on the demarcation of the . . . boundaries” mentioned in paragraph 65 above. Incidents between Nigeria and Chad in the Lake, as referred to by Nigeria, concern Nigeria and Chad but not Cameroon or its boundary with Chad. Any redefinition of the point where the frontier between Cameroon and Nigeria meets the Chad-Cameroon frontier could in the circumstances only lead to a moving of the tripoint along the line of the frontier in the Lake between Chad and Cameroon. Thus, the legal interests of Chad as a third State not party to the case do not constitute the very subject-matter of the judgment to be rendered on the merits of Cameroon’s Application; and therefore, the absence of Chad does not prevent the Court from proceeding to a specification of the border between Cameroon and Nigeria in the Lake.

80. The Court notes also that, in the case concerning the Territorial Dispute (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya/Chad), the tripoint where the boundary between Libya and Chad meets the western boundary of the Sudan, on the 24th meridian east of Greenwich, was determined without involvement of the Sudan. The eastern end-points of the principal lines taken into consideration by the Court in that case for the delimitation of the boundary between Libya and Chad were situated at various locations on the western boundary of the Sudan.

Furthermore, in that case, the Court, in the absence of Niger, fixed the western boundary between Libya and Chad as far as the point of intersection of the 15th meridian east and the parallel 23° of latitude north, a point at which, according to Chad, the frontiers of Chad, Libya and Niger meet.

81. The factual situation underlying the case concerning the Frontier Dispute (Burkina Faso/Republic of Mali) was quite different from the present case in the sense that the relevant part of the boundary of Niger at the time was not delimited; in that case the fixing of the tripoint therefore immediately involved Niger as a third State, which, however, did not prevent the Chamber from tracing the boundary between Burkina Faso and the Republic of Mali to its furthest point. Whether the location of the tripoint in Lake Chad has actually to be changed from its present position will follow from the judgment on the merits of Cameroon's Application. Such a change would have no consequence for Chad.

82. Finally the Court observes that, since neither Cameroon nor Nigeria challenge the current course of the boundary, in the centre of Lake Chad, between Cameroon and the Republic of Chad (see paragraph 79 above), it does not have to address — even if that was possible at the present preliminary stage — the argument presented by Nigeria concerning the legal principles applicable to the determination of boundaries in lakes and especially in large lakes like Lake Chad.

83. The fourth preliminary objection is accordingly rejected.

* *

FIFTH PRELIMINARY OBJECTION

84. In its fifth preliminary objection Nigeria alleges that there is no dispute concerning "boundary delimitation as such" throughout the whole length of the boundary from the tripoint in Lake Chad to the sea, subject, within Lake Chad, to the question of the title over Darak and adjacent islands, and without prejudice to the title over the Bakassi Peninsula.

85. In the course of the oral proceedings, it became clear that in addition to Darak and Bakassi, there are competing claims of Nigeria and Cameroon in respect of the village of Tipsan, which each Party claims to be on its side of the boundary. Also, in the course of the oral proceedings, a question was asked of the Parties by a Member of the Court as to whether Nigeria's assertion that there is no dispute as regards the land boundary between the two States (subject to the existing problems in the Bakassi Peninsula and the Darak region) signifies,

“that, these two sectors apart, there is agreement between Nigeria and Cameroon on the geographical co-ordinates of this boundary as they result from the texts relied on by Cameroon in its Application and its Memorial”.

The reply given to this question by Nigeria will be examined below (paragraph 91).

86. For Cameroon its existing boundary with Nigeria was precisely delimited by the former colonial powers and by decisions of the League of Nations and acts of the United Nations.

These delimitations were confirmed or completed by agreements made directly between Cameroon and Nigeria after their independence. Cameroon requests that the Court “specify definitively the frontier between Cameroon and Nigeria from Lake Chad to the sea” (Additional Application, para. 17 (f)) along a line the co-ordinates of which are given in Cameroon’s Memorial.

The fact that Nigeria claims title to the Bakassi Peninsula and Darak, and adjacent islands, means, in the view of Cameroon, that Nigeria contests the validity of these legal instruments and thus calls into question the entire boundary which is based on them. That, in the view of Cameroon, is confirmed by the occurrence, along the boundary, of numerous incidents and incursions. Nigeria’s claims to Bakassi as well as its position regarding the Maroua Declaration also throw into doubt the basis of the maritime boundary between the two countries. In Cameroon’s view, and contrary to what Nigeria asserts, a dispute has arisen between the two States concerning the whole of the boundary.

87. The Court recalls that,

“in the sense accepted in its jurisprudence and that of its predecessor, a dispute is a disagreement on a point of law or fact, a conflict of legal views or interests between parties (see Mavrommatis Palestine Concessions, Judgment No. 2, 1924, P.C.I.J., Series A, No. 2, p. 11; Northern Cameroons, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1963, p. 27; and Applicability of the Obligation to Arbitrate under Section 21 of the United Nations Headquarters Agreement of 26 June 1947, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 1988, p. 27, para. 35)” (East Timor (Portugal v. Australia), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1995, pp. 99-100, para. 22);

and that,

“[i]n order to establish the existence of a dispute, ‘It must be shown that the claim of one party is positively opposed by the other’ (South West Africa, Preliminary Objections, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1962, p. 328); and further, 'Whether there exists an international dispute is a matter for objective determination' (Interpretation of Peace Treaties with Bulgaria, Hungary and Romania, First Phase, Advisory Opinion, I.C.J. Reports 1950, p. 74)" (I.C.J. Reports 1995, p. 100).

On the basis of these criteria, there can be no doubt about the existence of disputes with respect to Darak and adjacent islands, Tipsan, as well as the Peninsula of Bakassi. This latter dispute, as indicated by Cameroon, might have a bearing on the maritime boundary between the two Parties.

88. All of these disputes concern the boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria. However, given the great length of that boundary, which runs over more than 1,600 km from Lake Chad to the sea, it cannot be said that these disputes in themselves concern so large a portion of the boundary that they would necessarily constitute a dispute concerning the whole of the boundary.

89. Further, the Court notes that, with regard to the whole of the boundary, there is no explicit challenge from Nigeria. However, a disagreement on a point of law or fact, a conflict of legal views or interests, or the positive opposition of the claim of one party by the other need not necessarily be stated expressis verbis. In the determination of the existence of a dispute, as in other matters, the position or the attitude of a party can be established by inference, whatever the professed view of that party. In this respect the Court does not find persuasive the argument of Cameroon that the challenge by Nigeria to the validity of the existing titles to Bakassi, Darak and Tipsan, necessarily calls into question the validity as such of the instruments on which the course of the entire boundary from the tripoint in Lake Chad to the sea is based, and therefore proves the existence of a dispute concerning the whole of the boundary.

90. The occurrence of boundary incidents certainly has to be taken into account in this context. However, not every boundary incident implies a challenge to the boundary. Also, certain of the incidents referred to by Cameroon took place in areas which are difficult to reach and where the boundary demarcation may have been absent or imprecise. And not every incursion or incident alleged by Cameroon is necessarily attributable to persons for whose behaviour Nigeria's responsibility might be engaged. Even taken together with the existing boundary disputes, the incidents and incursions reported by Cameroon do not establish by themselves the existence of a dispute concerning all of the boundary between Cameroon and Nigeria.

91. However, the Court notes that Nigeria has constantly been reserved in the manner in which it has presented its own position on the matter. Although Nigeria knew about Cameroon's preoccupation and concerns, it has repeated, and has not gone beyond, the statement that there is no dispute concerning “boundary delimitation as such”. Nigeria has shown the same caution in replying to the question asked by a Member of the Court in the oral proceedings (see paragraph 85 above). This question was whether there is agreement between the Parties on the geographical co-ordinates of the boundary as claimed by Cameroon on the basis of the texts it relies upon. The reply given by Nigeria reads as follows:

“The land boundary between Nigeria and Cameroon is not described by reference to geographical co-ordinates. Rather, the relevant instruments (all of which pre-date the independence of Nigeria and Cameroon) and well-established practice, both before and after independence, fix the boundary by reference to physical features such as streams, rivers, mountains and roads, as was common in those days. Since independence, the two States have not concluded any bilateral agreement expressly confirming or otherwise describing the pre-independence boundary by reference to geographical co-ordinates. Nevertheless, the course of the boundary, which was well established before independence and related United Nations procedures, has continued to be accepted in practice since then by Nigeria and Cameroon.”

92. The Court notes that, in this reply, Nigeria does not indicate whether or not it agrees with Cameroon on the course of the boundary or on its legal basis, though clearly it does differ with Cameroon about Darak and adjacent islands, Tipsan and Bakassi. Nigeria states that the existing land boundary is not described by reference to geographical co-ordinates but by reference to physical features. As to the legal basis on which the boundary rests, Nigeria refers to “relevant instruments” without specifying which these instruments are apart from saying that they pre-date independence and that, since independence, no bilateral agreements “expressly confirming or otherwise describing the pre-independence boundary by reference to geographical co-ordinates” have been concluded between the Parties. That wording seems to suggest that the existing instruments may require confirmation. Moreover, Nigeria refers to “well-established practice both before and after independence” as one of the legal bases of the boundary whose course, it states, “has continued to be accepted in practice”; however, it does not indicate what that practice is.

93. The Court is seised with the submission of Cameroon which aims at a definitive determination of its boundary with Nigeria from Lake Chad to the sea (see paragraph 86 above). Nigeria maintains that there is no dispute concerning the delimitation of that boundary as such throughout its whole length from the tripoint in Lake Chad to the sea (see paragraph 84 above) and that Cameroon’s request definitively to determine that boundary is not admissible in the absence of such a dispute. However, Nigeria has not indicated its agreement with Cameroon on the course of that boundary or on its legal basis (see paragraph 92 above) and it has not informed the Court of the position which it will take in the future on Cameroon's claims. Nigeria is entitled not to advance arguments that it considers are for the merits at the present stage of the proceedings; in the circumstances however, the Court finds itself in a situation in which it cannot decline to examine the submission of Cameroon on the ground that there is no dispute between the two States. Because of Nigeria's position, the exact scope of this dispute cannot be determined at present; a dispute nevertheless exists between the two Parties, at least as regards the legal bases of the boundary. It is for the Court to pass upon this dispute.

94. The fifth preliminary objection raised by Nigeria is thus rejected.

* *

SIXTH PRELIMINARY OBJECTION

95. The Court will now turn to Nigeria's sixth preliminary objection which is to the effect that there is no basis for a judicial determination that Nigeria bears international responsibility for alleged frontier incursions.

96. Nigeria contends that the submissions of Cameroon do not meet the standard required by Article 38 of the Rules of Court and general principles of law regarding the adequate presentation of facts on which Cameroon's request is based, including dates, the circumstances and precise locations of the alleged incursions and incidents into and on Cameroonian territory. Nigeria maintains that what Cameroon has presented to the Court does not give Nigeria the knowledge which it needs and to which it is entitled in order to prepare its reply. Similarly, in Nigeria's view, the material submitted is so sparse that it does not enable the Court to carry out fair and effective judicial determination of, or make determination on, the issues of State responsibility and reparation raised by Cameroon. While Nigeria acknowledges that a State has some latitude in expanding later on what it has said in its Application and in its Memorial, Cameroon is said to be essentially restricted in its elaboration to the case as presented in its Application.

97. Cameroon insists that it stated clearly in its pleadings that the facts referred to in order to establish Nigeria's responsibility were only of an indicative nature and that it could, where necessary, amplify those facts when it comes to the merits. Cameroon refers to the requirements established in Article 38, paragraph 2, of the Rules and which call for a "succinct" presentation of the facts. It holds that parties are free to develop the facts of the case presented in the application or to render them more precise in the course of the proceedings.

98. The decision on Nigeria's sixth preliminary objection hinges upon the question of whether the requirements which an application must meet and which are set out in Article 38, paragraph 2, of the Rules of Court are met in the present instance. The requirements set out in Article 38, paragraph 2, are that the Application shall "specify the precise nature of the claim, together with a succinct statement of the facts and grounds on which the claim is based". The Court notes that "succinct", in the ordinary meaning to be given to this term, does not mean "complete" and neither the context in which the term is used in Article 38, paragraph 2, of the Rules of Court nor the object and purpose of that provision indicate that it should be interpreted in that way. Article 38, paragraph 2, does therefore not preclude later additions to the statement of the facts and grounds on which a claim is based.

99. Nor does Article 38, paragraph 2, provide that the latitude of an applicant State, in developing what it has said in its application is strictly limited, as suggested by Nigeria. That conclusion cannot be inferred from the term "succinct"; nor can it be drawn from the Court's pronouncements on the importance of the point of time of the submission of the application as the critical date for the determination of its admissibility; these pronouncements do not refer to the content of applications (Questions of Interpretation and Application of the 1971 Montreal Convention arising from the Aerial Incident at Lockerbie (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United Kingdom), Preliminary Objections, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1998, p. 26, para. 44; and Questions of Interpretation and Application of the 1971 Montreal Convention arising from the Aerial Incident at Lockerbie (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya v. United States of America), Preliminary Objections, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1998, p. 130, para. 43). Nor would so narrow an interpretation correspond to the finding of the Court that,

"whilst under Article 40 of its Statute the subject of a dispute brought before the Court shall be indicated, Article 32 (2) of the Rules of Court [today Article 38, paragraph 2] requires the Applicant 'as far as possible' to do certain things. These words apply not only to specifying the provision on which the Applicant founds the jurisdiction of the Court, but also to stating the precise nature of the claim and giving a succinct statement of the facts and grounds on which the claim is based." (Northern Cameroons (Cameroon v. United Kingdom), Preliminary Objections, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1963, p. 28.)

The Court also recalls that it has become an established practice for States submitting an application to the Court to reserve the right to present additional facts and legal considerations. The limit of the freedom to present such facts and considerations is "that the result is not to transform the dispute brought before the Court by the application into another dispute which is different in character” (Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua (Nicaragua v. United States of America), Jurisdiction and Admissibility, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1984, p. 427, para. 80). In this case, Cameroon has not so transformed the dispute.

100. As regards the meaning to be given to the term “succinct”, the Court would simply note that Cameroon’s Application contains a sufficiently precise statement of the facts and grounds on which the Applicant bases its claim. That statement fulfils the conditions laid down in Article 38, paragraph 2, and the Application is accordingly admissible.

This observation does not, however, prejudice the question whether, taking account of the information submitted to the Court, the facts alleged by the Applicant are established or not, and whether the grounds it relies upon are founded or not. Those questions belong to the merits and may not be prejudged in this phase of the proceedings.

101. Lastly, the Court cannot agree that the lack of sufficient clarity and completeness in Cameroon’s Application and its inadequate character, as perceived by Nigeria, make it impossible for Nigeria to respond effectively to the allegations which have been presented or makes it impossible for the Court ultimately to make a fair and effective determination in the light of the arguments and the evidence then before it. It is the applicant which must bear the consequences of an application that gives an inadequate rendering of the facts and grounds on which the claim is based. As the Court has stated in the case concerning Military and Paramilitary Activities in and against Nicaragua (Nicaragua v. United States of America):

“[u]ltimately . . . however, it is the litigant seeking to establish a fact who bears the burden of proving it; and in cases where evidence may not be forthcoming, a submission may in the judgment be rejected as unproved, but is not to be ruled out as inadmissible in limine on the basis of an anticipated lack of proof.” (Ibid., p. 437, para. 101.)

102. The Court consequently rejects the sixth preliminary objection raised by Nigeria.

* *

SEVENTH PRELIMINARY OBJECTION

103. In its seventh preliminary objection Nigeria contends that there is no legal dispute concerning delimitation of the maritime boundary between the two Parties which is at the present time appropriate for resolution by the Court.

104. Nigeria says that this is so for two reasons: in the first place, no determination of a maritime boundary is possible prior to the determination of title in respect of the Bakassi Peninsula. Secondly, at the juncture when there is a determination of the question of title over the Bakassi

Peninsula, the issues of maritime delimitation will not be admissible in the absence of prior sufficient action by the Parties, on a footing of equality, to effect a delimitation “by agreement on the basis of international law”. In Nigeria’s view, the Court cannot properly be seised by the unilateral application of one State in relation to the delimitation of an exclusive economic zone or continental shelf boundary if that State has made no attempt to reach agreement with the respondent State over that boundary, contrary to the provisions of Articles 74 and 83 of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea. Any such unilateral application, in the view of Nigeria, is inadmissible.

105. Cameroon is of the view that the first argument invoked by Nigeria concerns neither jurisdiction nor the admissibility of its Application, but simply the method whereby the merits of the case are best addressed, a decision which falls within the discretion of the Court. As to the second argument put forward by Nigeria, Cameroon denies that the conduct of negotiations is a precondition for instituting proceedings before the Court in cases of delimitation. Cameroon views the identical paragraphs 2 of Articles 74 and 83 of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea not as barring recourse to third party settlement, but as an obligation for such recourse in order to avoid unilateral delimitations.

Cameroon says that, in any event, it had sufficiently negotiated with Nigeria before it seised the Court, and it seised the Court only when it became clear that any new negotiation would be doomed to failure. In this respect, it contends that since the actual occupation of the Bakassi Peninsula by Nigeria, any negotiation on the delimitation of the maritime boundary has become impossible.

106. The Court will initially address the first argument presented by Nigeria. The Court accepts that it will be difficult if not impossible to determine the delimitation of the maritime boundary between the Parties as long as the title over the Peninsula of Bakassi has not been determined. The Court notes, however, that Cameroon’s Application not only requests the Court

“to proceed to prolong the course of its maritime boundary with the Federal Republic of Nigeria up to the limit of the maritime zones which international law places under their respective jurisdictions” (Application of Cameroon of 29 March 1994, p. 15; para. 20 (f)), but also,

“to adjudge and declare:

- (a) that sovereignty over the Peninsula of Bakassi is Cameroonian, by virtue of international law, and that that Peninsula is an integral part of the territory of Cameroon” (ibid., para. 20).

Since, therefore, both questions are before the Court, it becomes a matter for the Court to arrange the order in which it addresses the issues in such a way that it can deal substantively with each of them. That is a matter which lies within the Court's discretion and which cannot be the basis of a preliminary objection. This argument therefore has to be dismissed.

107. As to the second argument of Nigeria, the Court notes that, while its first argument concerned the whole maritime boundary, the second one seems only to concern the delimitation from point G seawards. That was accepted by counsel for Nigeria and seems to correspond to the fact that there were extensive negotiations between the two Parties in the period between 1970 and 1975 on the maritime boundary from the land-fall on Bakassi to point G, which resulted in the disputed Maroua Declaration.

Moreover, the Court recalls that, in dealing with the cases brought before it, it must adhere to the precise request submitted to it. Nigeria here requests the Court to hold that,

“at the juncture where there is a determination of the question of title over the Bakassi Peninsula, the issues of maritime delimitation will not be admissible in the absence of sufficient action by the Parties, on a footing of equality, to effect a delimitation ‘by agreement on the basis of international law’”.

What is therefore in dispute between the Parties and what the Court has to decide now is whether the alleged absence of sufficient effort at negotiation constitutes an impediment for the Court to accept Cameroon's claim as admissible or not.

This matter is of a genuinely preliminary character and has to be decided under Article 79 of the Rules of Court.

108. In this connection, Cameroon and Nigeria refer to the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea, to which they are parties. Article 74 of the Convention, relating to the exclusive economic zone, and Article 83, concerning the continental shelf, provide, in their first identical paragraphs, that the delimitation “between States with opposite or adjacent coasts shall be effected by agreement on the basis of international law, as referred to in Article 38 of the Statute of the International Court of Justice, in order to achieve an equitable solution”.

These are followed by identical paragraphs 2 which provide that “If no agreement can be reached within a reasonable period of time, the States concerned shall resort to the procedures provided for in Part XV.” One of these procedures is the submission of the case to the Court for settlement by contentious proceedings.

109. However, the Court notes that, in this case, it has not been seised on the basis of Article 36, paragraph 1, of the Statute, and, in pursuance of it, in accordance with Part XV of the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea relating to the settlement of disputes arising between the parties to the Convention with respect to its interpretation or application. It has been seised on the basis of declarations made under Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute, which declarations do not contain any condition relating to prior negotiations to be conducted within a reasonable time period.

The second argument of Nigeria cannot therefore be upheld.

*

110. In addition to what has been put forward by the Parties, the question could arise whether, beyond point G, the dispute between the Parties has been defined with sufficient precision for the Court to be validly seised of it. The Court observes not only that the Parties have not raised this point, but Cameroon and Nigeria entered into negotiations with a view to determining the whole of the maritime boundary. It was during these negotiations that the Maroua Declaration relating to the course of the maritime boundary up to point G was drawn up. This declaration was subsequently held to be binding by Cameroon, but not by Nigeria. The Parties have not been able to agree on the continuation of the negotiations beyond point G, as Cameroon wishes. The result is that there is a dispute on this subject between the Parties which, ultimately and bearing in mind the circumstances of the case, is precise enough for it to be brought before the Court.

*

111. The Court therefore rejects the seventh preliminary objection.

* *

EIGHTH PRELIMINARY OBJECTION

112. The Court will now deal with the eighth and last of the preliminary objections presented by Nigeria. With that objection Nigeria contends, in the context of and supplementary to the seventh preliminary objection, that the question of maritime delimitation necessarily involves the rights and interests of third States and is to that extent inadmissible.

113. Nigeria refers to the particular concave configuration of the Gulf of Guinea, to the fact that five States border the Gulf and that there are no agreed delimitations between any two of those States in the disputed area. In these circumstances, the delimitation of the maritime zones appertaining to two of the States bordering the Gulf will necessarily and closely affect the others. Nigeria also holds that the situation between Cameroon and Nigeria is distinct from that underlying the case concerning the Frontier Dispute (Burkina Faso/Republic of Mali) (Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1986, p. 554) as that case concerned a land boundary to the delimitation of which apply principles that are different from those applying to the delimitation of maritime boundaries. The case concerning the Continental Shelf (Libyan Arab Jamahiriya/Malta) (Application for Permission to Intervene, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1984, p. 3) was different from the present case in the sense that the areas to which the claims of the third State (Italy) related, were known; and in the case concerning the Continental Shelf (Tunisia/Libyan Arab Jamahiriya) (Application for Permission to Intervene, Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1981, p. 3) the Court was merely laying down principles applicable to the delimitation of the continental shelf in a given context without actually drawing any particular line. Nigeria acknowledges that by virtue of Article 59 of the Statute, third States are not formally bound by decisions of the Court; it maintains nevertheless that Article 59 of the Statute gives insufficient protection, since in specific situations, in spite of that Article, decisions of the Court may have clear and direct legal and practical effects on third States, as well as on the development of international law.

114. Cameroon holds that the maritime delimitation which it is requesting the Court in part to confirm and in part to determine, concerns only the Parties to the present dispute. In Cameroon's view, the interests of all other States are preserved by Article 59 of the Statute and by the principle according to which any delimitation as between two States is res inter alios acta. Referring to the jurisprudence of the Court, Cameroon claims that the Court has not hesitated to proceed to maritime delimitations in cases where the rights of third States were more clearly in issue than they are in the present case. Cameroon also finds that practice of State treaties confirms that a delimitation is in no way made impossible by the existence of the interests of neighbouring States.

115. The Court notes, as do the Parties, that the problem of rights and interests of third States arises only for the prolongation, as requested by Cameroon, of the maritime boundary seawards beyond point G. As to the stretch of the maritime boundary from point G inwards to the point of landfall on the Bakassi Peninsula, certainly a dispute has arisen because of the rival claims of the Parties to Bakassi and the fact that the Maroua Declaration is considered binding by Cameroon but not by Nigeria.

That dispute however does not concern the rights and interests of third States. That is so because the geographical location of point G is clearly closer to the Nigerian/Cameroonian mainland than is the location of the tripoint Cameroon-Nigeria-Equatorial Guinea to the mainland.

116. What the Court has to examine under the eighth preliminary objection is therefore whether prolongation of the maritime boundary beyond point G would involve rights and interests of third States and whether that would prevent it from proceeding to such prolongation. The Court notes that the geographical location of the territories of the other States bordering the Gulf of Guinea, and in particular Equatorial Guinea and Sao Tome and Principe, demonstrates that it is evident that the prolongation of the maritime boundary between the Parties seawards beyond point G will eventually run into maritime zones where the rights and interests of Cameroon and Nigeria will overlap those of third States. It thus appears that rights and interests of third States will become involved if the Court accedes to Cameroon's request. The Court recalls that it has affirmed, "that one of the fundamental principles of its Statute is that it cannot decide a dispute between States without the consent of those States to its jurisdiction" (East Timor (Portugal v. Australia), Judgment, I.C.J. Reports 1995, p. 101, para. 26). However, it stated in the same case that, "it is not necessarily prevented from adjudicating when the judgment it is asked to give might affect the legal interests of a State which is not a party to the case" (ibid., p. 104, para. 34).

Similarly, in the case concerning Certain Phosphate Lands in Nauru (Nauru v. Australia), it adopted the same approach:

"a finding by the Court regarding the existence or the content of the responsibility attributed to Australia by Nauru might well have implications for the legal situation of the two other States concerned, but no finding in respect of that legal situation will be needed as a basis for the Court's decision on Nauru's claims against Australia. Accordingly, the Court cannot decline to exercise its jurisdiction." (I.C.J. Reports 1992, pp. 261-262, para. 55.)

The Court cannot therefore, in the present case, give a decision on the eighth preliminary objection as a preliminary matter. In order to determine where a prolonged maritime boundary beyond point G would run, where and to what extent it would meet possible claims of other States, and how its judgment would affect the rights and interests of these States, the Court would of necessity have to deal with the merits of Cameroon's request. At the same time, the Court cannot rule out the possibility that the impact of the judgment required by Cameroon on the rights and interests of the third States could be such that the Court would be prevented from rendering it in the absence of these States, and that consequently Nigeria's eighth preliminary objection would have to be upheld at least in part. Whether such third States would choose to exercise their rights to intervene in these proceedings pursuant to the Statute remains to be seen.

117. The Court concludes that therefore the eighth preliminary objection of Nigeria does not possess, in the circumstances of the case, an exclusively preliminary character.

* * *

118. For these reasons,

THE COURT,

(1) (a) By fourteen votes to three,

Rejects the first preliminary objection;

IN FAVOUR: President Schwebel; Judges Oda, Bedjaoui, Guillaume, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer, Vereshchetin, Higgins, Parra-Aranguren, Kooijmans, Rezek; Judge ad hoc Mbaye;

AGAINST: Vice-President Weeramantry; Judge Koroma; Judge ad hoc Ajibola;

(b) By sixteen votes to one,

Rejects the second preliminary objection;

IN FAVOUR: President Schwebel; Vice-President Weeramantry; Judges Oda, Bedjaoui, Guillaume, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer, Vereshchetin, Higgins, Parra-Aranguren, Kooijmans, Rezek; Judges ad hoc Mbaye, Ajibola;

AGAINST: Judge Koroma;

(c) By fifteen votes to two,

Rejects the third preliminary objection;

IN FAVOUR: President Schwebel; Vice-President Weeramantry; Judges Oda, Bedjaoui, Guillaume, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer, Vereshchetin, Higgins, Parra-Aranguren, Kooijmans, Rezek; Judge ad hoc Mbaye;

AGAINST: Judge Koroma; Judge ad hoc Ajibola;

(d) By thirteen votes to four,

Rejects the fourth preliminary objection;

IN FAVOUR: President Schwebel; Vice-President Weeramantry; Judges Bedjaoui, Guillaume, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer, Vereshchetin, Higgins, Kooijmans, Rezek; Judge ad hoc Mbaye;

AGAINST: Judges Oda, Koroma, Parra-Aranguren; Judge ad hoc Ajibola;

(e) By thirteen votes to four,

Rejects the fifth preliminary objection;

IN FAVOUR: President Schwebel; Vice-President Weeramantry; Judges Bedjaoui, Guillaume, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer, Higgins, Parra-Aranguren, Kooijmans, Rezek; Judge ad hoc Mbaye;

AGAINST: Judges Oda, Koroma, Vereshchetin; Judge ad hoc Ajibola;

(f) By fifteen votes to two,

Rejects the sixth preliminary objection;

IN FAVOUR: President Schwebel; Vice-President Weeramantry; Judges Oda, Bedjaoui, Guillaume, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer, Vereshchetin, Higgins, Parra-Aranguren, Kooijmans, Rezek; Judge ad hoc Mbaye;

AGAINST: Judge Koroma; Judge ad hoc Ajibola;

(g) By twelve votes to five,

Rejects the seventh preliminary objection;

IN FAVOUR: President Schwebel; Vice-President Weeramantry; Judges Bedjaoui, Guillaume, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer, Vereshchetin, Parra-Aranguren, Rezek; Judge ad hoc Mbaye;

AGAINST: Judges Oda, Koroma, Higgins, Kooijmans; Judge ad hoc Ajibola;

(2) By twelve votes to five,

Declares that the eighth preliminary objection does not have, in the circumstances of the case, an exclusively preliminary character;

IN FAVOUR: President Schwebel; Vice-President Weeramantry; Judges Bedjaoui, Guillaume, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer, Vereshchetin, Parra-Aranguren, Rezek; Judge ad hoc Mbaye;

AGAINST: Judges Oda, Koroma, Higgins, Kooijmans; Judge ad hoc Ajibola;

(3) By fourteen votes to three,

Finds that, on the basis of Article 36, paragraph 2, of the Statute, it has jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the dispute;

IN FAVOUR: President Schwebel; Judges Oda, Bedjaoui, Guillaume, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer, Vereshchetin, Higgins, Parra-Aranguren, Kooijmans, Rezek; Judge ad hoc Mbaye;

AGAINST: Vice-President Weeramantry; Judge Koroma; Judge ad hoc Ajibola;

(4) By fourteen votes to three,

Finds that the Application filed by the Republic of Cameroon on 29 March 1994, as amended by the Additional Application of 6 June 1994, is admissible.

IN FAVOUR: President Schwebel; Judges Oda, Bedjaoui, Guillaume, Ranjeva, Herczegh, Shi, Fleischhauer, Vereshchetin, Higgins, Parra-Aranguren, Kooijmans, Rezek; Judge ad hoc Mbaye;

AGAINST: Vice-President Weeramantry; Judge Koroma; Judge ad hoc Ajibola.

Done in French and in English, the French text being authoritative, at the Peace Palace, The Hague, this eleventh day of June, one thousand nine hundred and ninety-eight, in three copies, one of which will be placed in the archives of the Court and the others transmitted to the Government of the Republic of Cameroon and the Government of the Federal Republic of Nigeria, respectively.

(Signed) Stephen M. SCHWEBEL,
President.

(Signed) Eduardo VALENCIA-OSPINA, Registrar.

Judges ODA, VERESHCHETIN, HIGGINS, PARRA-ARANGUREN and KOOIJMANS append separate opinions to the Judgment of the Court.

Vice-President WEERAMANTRY, Judge KOROMA and Judge ad hoc AJIBOLA append dissenting opinions to the Judgment of the Court.

(Initialed) S.M.S.

(Initialed) E.V.O.

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-65

ENCYCLOPEDIA
OF
PUBLIC INTERNATIONAL LAW

PUBLISHED UNDER THE AUSPICES OF THE MAX PLANCK INSTITUTE FOR COMPARATIVE PUBLIC LAW AND INTERNATIONAL LAW
UNDER THE DIRECTION OF RUDOLF BERNHARDT

ADVISORY BOARD

RUDOLF L. BINDSCHEDLER · THOMAS BUERGENTHAL · KARL DOEHRING
JOCHEN ABR. FROWEIN · GÜNTHER JAENICKE · HERBERT MIEHSLER
HERMANN MOSLER · FRITZ MÜNCH · DANIEL P. O'CONNELL
KARL JOSEF PARTSCH · PIERRE PESCATORE · HENRY G. SCHERMERS
ULRICH SCHEUNER · HANS-JÜRGEN SCHLOCHAUER · MAX SØRENSEN
HELMUT STREBEL

ASSISTANT GENERAL EDITOR

PETER MACALISTER-SMITH

VOLUME TWO

EAST AFRICAN COMMUNITY TO ITALY-UNITED STATES AIR TRANSPORT
ARBITRATION (1965)

1995

NORTH-HOLLAND

ELSEVIER

AMSTERDAM-LAUSANNE-NEW YORK-OXFORD-SHANNON-TOKYO

favoured passing under Spanish sovereignty. Then Great Britain again enlarged the powers of the local Gibraltarian authorities by issuing an Order in Council entitled The Gibraltar Constitution Order (1969). Spain promptly terminated all communications between Gibraltar and the mainland, which remained closed until they were partially reopened in December 1982.

5. Conclusion

When Spain became a member of the → North Atlantic Treaty Organization, the former made sovereignty over Gibraltar a major issue. However, a subsequent Spanish Government removed the barriers to access from Spain to Gibraltar and negotiations have been initiated for the joint operation of the Gibraltar airport. With the advent in 1992 of further changes in the European Economic Community, of which Spain is now a member, Gibraltar once again is looking forward to becoming the "Hong Kong of the Mediterranean", particularly in financial matters.

There are many problems to be resolved before there can be a final settlement between Spain and Great Britain with respect to the problem of Gibraltar. The only really viable solution appears to be the transfer of sovereignty to Spain, with appropriate agreed provisions to protect both the Gibraltarians and Great Britain.

- LOPEZ DE AYALA, História de Gibraltar (1782).
 J.M. DE AREILZA and F.M. CASTIELLA, Reivindicaciones de España (1941).
 J. PLA CARCELES, Gibraltar (1955).
 G. HILLS, Rock of Contention: A History of Gibraltar (1974).
 T. FRANCK and P. HOFFMAN, The Right of Self-Determination in Very Small Places, New York University Journal of International Law and Politics, Vol. 8 (1975-1976) 331-386.
 E. BRADFORD, Gibraltar: The History of a Fortress (1977).
 H. LEVIE, The Status of Gibraltar (1983).

[1990]

HOWARD S. LEVIE

GOOD FAITH

1. Notion

The principle of good faith requires parties to a transaction to deal honestly and fairly with each other, to represent their motives and purposes truthfully, and to refrain from taking unfair advantage that might result from a literal and unintended interpretation of the agreement between them (→ Interpretation in International Law). The concept figures prominently in the → Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, which by virtue of its careful draftsmanship and wide ratification has assumed an authoritative place in international law on questions relating to the interpretation and enforcement of → treaties. Art. 31(1) of that Convention provides: "A treaty shall be interpreted in good faith in accordance with the ordinary meaning to be given to the terms of the treaty in their context and in the light of its object and purpose." These references to context and purpose demonstrate that the substance of the principle of good faith is the negation of unintended and literal interpretations of words that might result in one of the parties gaining an unfair or unjust advantage over another party.

A secondary notion of good faith in the context of explicit agreements pertains to the duties of signatories to a treaty prior to ratification. The early rule of international law to the effect that States had an obligation to ratify treaties that their diplomatic agents had signed has been replaced since the 18th century by the concept of discretionary ratification (→ Treaties, Conclusion and Entry into Force). This change came about as a result of the growth of parliamentary institutions within States that adopted constitutional checks and balances against the acts of the executive branch or its diplomatic agents abroad (→ Diplomatic Agents and Missions). Yet the new concept of discretionary ratification carried over the old notion to the extent that the executive branch, having signed the treaty through its agents, now had an obligation to make every effort in good faith to obtain the consent of the sovereign, and not to act in the interim period in such a way as to prejudice the unperfected rights of the signatories to the treaty. Art. 18 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, while not explicitly referring to the principle of good faith, summarizes its substance by providing that a signatory, prior to ratification, "is obliged to refrain from acts which would defeat the object and purpose" of the treaty.

Finally, the principle of good faith may be said to apply, apart from treaties or other agreements, to the general performance of a State's obligations under international law. According to a significant

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-66

Arbitration CAS 2002/O/410 The Gibraltar Football Association (GFA)/Union des Associations Européennes de Football (UEFA), award of 7 October 2003

Panel : Mr. Bruno Simma (Germany), President; Professor Pierre Lalive (Switzerland); Mr. Dirk-Reiner Martens (Germany)

Football

Application for UEFA membership

Rules on membership applicable at the time when the application was made

Legality of a change of rule with a retrospective effect

Principles of fairness and good faith

Freedom of association

- 1. According to the new version of Article 5 of the UEFA Statutes, UEFA membership is restricted to associations in countries which are recognised as independent States by the United Nations. This new rule should not be regarded as a rule dealing only with procedural aspects justifying immediate application regardless of when the facts at issue occurred. The immediate application in this matter would entail a violation of general principles of law which are widely recognised, particularly the principles of fairness and of good faith.
- 2. According to the old version of Article 5 of the UEFA Statutes “Membership of UEFA is open to national football associations situated in the continent of Europe which are responsible for the organisation and implementation of football-related matters in their particular territory”. GFA indisputably exercises sole responsibility for the organisation and structure of football in its territory. The concept of “nation” or “country” in the sports environment must not necessarily be “understood within its common political meaning. More importantly, UEFA already has – and had at the time when the application was made – a number of member associations from countries which do not enjoy independent statehood, such as Scotland, Wales or the Faroe Islands.
- 3. Generally, freedom of association includes the freedom of an association to accept or to refuse any applicant for membership, even if the applicant fulfils all statutory conditions. However, the exclusion of athletes, or of a sports association to which athletes are affiliated, from an international sports organisation which occupies a dominant or monopolistic position in the organisation of sports competitions may have the effect of a boycott. Such an exclusion should therefore be held invalid, at least to the extent that it is not grounded on objective and justified reasons.

The Claimant, the Gibraltar Football Association (“GFA”), is an unincorporated body that is responsible for the organisation of all football in the territory of Gibraltar. The GFA was established in 1895, and today it has between 2000 and 2500 members.

The GFA has a Men’s senior league composed of three divisions, a Junior league, and Ladies and “Futsal” competitions. All football currently organised by the GFA is non-professional.

Despite proposals made in the past that the Claimant may become affiliated to the Spanish Football Association, the GFA has always been independent from any other football association, whether within Gibraltar or elsewhere.

The territory of Gibraltar is a dependent territory of the United Kingdom. It forms part of Her Majesty the Queen’s Dominions, but it is not part of the United Kingdom, and it is not an independent State either although it enjoys a certain level of autonomy.

The Respondent, the Union des Associations Européennes De Football (“UEFA”), is an association incorporated under the laws of Switzerland with its headquarters in Nyon, Switzerland. UEFA is the governing body of European football, dealing with all questions relating to European football and exercising regulatory, supervisory and disciplinary functions over national associations, clubs, officials and players of the European continent.

The Respondent is one of the continental football confederations. All national associations located in Europe and which wish to be affiliated to the Fédération Internationale de Football Association (“FIFA”) must previously become a member of UEFA.

In January 1997, the GFA applied to FIFA for membership.

On 27 November 1997, the English Football Association (“FA”) confirmed to FIFA its thorough support of the GFA's application for membership.

On 3 March 1999, FIFA wrote to the GFA confirming that the “preliminary procedure” was completed, and that “consequently, FIFA may submit the file to the confederation concerned for the second phase of the procedure (evaluation of the organisation for a period of at least two years)”.

In that same letter, FIFA further stated that “according to article 4.7 of the FIFA Statutes the confederation concerned shall decide whether to grant provisional membership or associate membership to the applicant association”.

In parallel to this letter, FIFA forwarded to UEFA the GFA's file for membership, as confirmed by UEFA to the Claimant on 23 March 1999. The GFA was consequently invited to make an oral presentation of its application to UEFA representatives in April 1999 in Nyon, Switzerland.

On 20 April 1999, following the presentation made by the GFA's representatives in Nyon, UEFA informed the Claimant that they would examine the file with FIFA, possibly proceed with a visit on site in Gibraltar, and then make a recommendation to the UEFA Executive Committee, outlining that “no final decision will be taken until the year 2000”.

On 7 January 2000, UEFA informed the GFA that FIFA was in the process of reviewing its affiliation procedure rules, that a meeting was scheduled to take place within FIFA's organisation in March 2000 and, therefore, that UEFA would not be able to give the GFA more information on the process of its own affiliation request until that time.

By letter dated 19 January 2000, the GFA responded to UEFA that it failed to understand why a “present ongoing review of affiliation procedure rules” within FIFA should affect the application by the GFA which had been made before such review was commenced. The Claimant further expressed its concern because the UEFA inspection of the GFA's facilities should have occurred already by the end of the year 1999, and it insisted that it be given “the necessary assurances that our application is being processed as per the present applicable procedures”.

By e-mail dated 25 March 2000, UEFA informed the GFA that “FIFA and UEFA administrations have discussed the application procedure for your association. After having received also the green light by the FIFA Committee for national associations we inform you that a joint FIFA/UEFA delegation will visit your association”.

On 25 April 2000, UEFA provided the GFA with details of the visit to the GFA's facilities and infrastructures by representatives of FIFA and of UEFA. Such visit was scheduled to take place between 8 and 10 May 2000.

A joint delegation from the FIFA and UEFA administrations eventually conducted the inspection visit in Gibraltar between 8 and 10 May 2000.

On 11 July 2000, the UEFA delegation issued a report of the visit conducted in Gibraltar two months earlier. In this report, the UEFA delegation proposed inter alia that “the FA of Gibraltar be admitted to UEFA on a provisional basis” under three cumulative conditions, namely that (i) Gibraltar teams could not enter club competitions or senior and Under-21 national-team competitions immediately, but only UEFA's youth, women's and amateur competitions; (ii) the football infrastructure in Gibraltar must correspond to the UEFA requirements at the time of entering the relevant competitions; and (iii) the GFA's statutes had to be adapted to UEFA's requirements.

The UEFA administration justified this position, which in principle favoured the affiliation of the GFA, by stating that “the FA of Gibraltar fulfils all requisite statutory conditions for admission to UEFA (Article 2 of the Regulations governing the implementation of the UEFA Statutes)”.

The report on the FIFA/UEFA joint visit to Gibraltar and the proposals contained therein were supposed to be submitted to the UEFA Executive Committee at its next meeting which was scheduled to be held on 25-26 August 2000.

On 3 August 2000, the FIFA Executive Committee apparently decided to freeze all applications from associations to FIFA, pending the approval of new FIFA Statutes in the year 2004. FIFA informed UEFA of this decision in September 2001.

On 26 August 2000, the UEFA Executive Committee decided to postpone its decision concerning the GFA's provisional membership until its next meeting which was scheduled to take place in October 2000, and to call a meeting between UEFA, the English FA and the Spanish FA on 22 September 2000 in order to discuss this matter.

The meeting between UEFA, the English FA and the Spanish FA did not take place until 30 November 2000. During its meeting on 4-5 October 2000, the UEFA Executive Committee had decided to postpone its decision on the matter again as it was waiting for the results of the aforementioned meeting with the English FA and the Spanish FA.

On 14-15 December 2000, the UEFA Executive Committee met again. In respect of the GFA's application for membership, it considered that independent legal advice was necessary for it to be able to evaluate the application. Therefore, the UEFA Executive Committee decided to set up a legal panel with three members from UEFA's External Legal Experts Panel which was entrusted with the preparation of a substantiated report to the UEFA Executive Committee based on the FIFA and UEFA Statutes (the "Expert Panel").

The Claimant was informed of these decisions by UEFA on 15 December 2000. At that time, UEFA also provided the GFA with a copy of a written report that had been filed by the Spanish FA (in which the latter opposed the GFA's application), asking the GFA to comment thereon in writing by the end of January 2001. The same request was made by UEFA to the English FA.

By the end of the year 2000, the Expert Panel set up by UEFA had received all of the written submissions by the Spanish FA, the English FA and the GFA. The Claimant also filed a supplementary report in March 2001.

The aforementioned three parties made oral submissions before the Expert Panel on 19 April 2001. According to the order of procedure decided by its members, the Expert Panel was then to submit a written legal report to the UEFA Executive Committee, for it to take a final decision on the GFA's application.

As from June 2001, the Claimant repeatedly asked the UEFA what the conclusions of the Expert Panel were. The UEFA Executive Committee was to meet in July 2001 and the GFA assumed that the report of the Expert Panel would be available before such meeting, where the GFA's application for membership would be on the agenda.

The UEFA Executive Committee met on 11-12 July 2001. It did not take any decision on the GFA's application. However, what the UEFA Executive Committee did decide was to put an amendment of the UEFA Statutes before the UEFA Congress to be held in October 2001.

According to this proposed amendment, UEFA membership would be restricted to associations in countries which are recognised as independent States by the United Nations.

On 30 July 2001 and 20 August 2001, the GFA again asked the UEFA what the conclusions of the Expert Panel were.

On 27 August 2001, the Expert Panel appointed by the UEFA rendered its written legal opinion to the UEFA Executive Committee.

The members of the Expert Panel unanimously considered that according to Art. 5 paragraph 1 of the UEFA Statutes (NB: the version that came into force on 24 December 1997 and was amended on 30 June and 1 July 2000) and to Art. 1 and 2, sentence 1 of the Regulations governing the implementation of the UEFA Statutes, “the GFA was entitled to provisional admission as a member of UEFA”.

In the same Expert Report of 27 August 2001, the members of the Expert Panel suggested to the UEFA Executive Committee “to amend the UEFA Statutes (...) to avoid similar problems in the future”. The Expert Panel thus proposed “an amendment to the effect that only UN-recognised States may apply for admission to and membership of UEFA”.

On 30 August 2001, the UEFA confirmed to the GFA that the Expert Panel had rendered its decision. However, as per the order of procedure decided from the outset, the UEFA refused to communicate a copy of the Expert Report to the GFA. The UEFA indicated to the Claimant that the report would be discussed by the members of the UEFA Executive Committee on 6-8 September 2001 and that a decision on the GFA's application would then be taken.

In addition, the UEFA also communicated to the GFA on 30 August 2001 that “as regards the extraordinary Congress in October in Prague, we confirm that there is a request for a change of the UEFA Statutes, and especially the provision of UEFA membership. However we cannot provide you with a copy of these amendments until you are part of the UEFA family”.

On 5 September 2001, FIFA's Secretary General wrote to UEFA stating that in FIFA's view it would be premature to proceed with the affiliation of the GFA in the forthcoming months, and that FIFA was planning to change its rules on membership.

On 7 September 2001, UEFA wrote to the GFA and informed it that, at its most recent meeting on the same day, “the Executive Committee did not enter into the request of the Football Association of Gibraltar to be provisionally affiliated to UEFA. The UEFA Executive Committee has already discussed and decided at its July 2001 meeting to change the membership conditions in the UEFA Statutes. These proposals will be dealt with by the UEFA member associations at the next extraordinary Congress in Prague in October 2001. (...) The decision concerning the affiliation request of the Football Association of Gibraltar is therefore postponed until further notice.”

During the same meeting of the UEFA Executive Committee, a request for admission to UEFA filed by the Football Association of Kazakhstan was considered, and the Executive Committee agreed that such request should proceed.

The Football Association of Kazakhstan, which requested admission to UEFA after leaving the Asian confederation in 2001, was eventually admitted as a UEFA member by the UEFA Congress upon the recommendation of the UEFA Executive Committee in April 2002. Kazakhstan is an independent State and accepted as a member by the United Nations.

As from September 2001, the GFA repeatedly requested UEFA to render a decision on its request for provisional membership without delay, and to do so on the basis of the UEFA rules that existed at the time when the application was made.

On 5 October 2001, a meeting took place between senior officers of UEFA and of the GFA during which no solution could be found.

On 11 October 2001, the UEFA Congress approved the change of the UEFA Statutes, whereby UEFA membership would from then on be open only to associations in a country “recognised by the United Nations as an independent State”.

On 13 November 2001, UEFA wrote to the Claimant rejecting the latter’s repeated demands for immediate consideration of its affiliation request and stating that “the Executive Committee has so far not taken a negative decision on your application request but has only postponed its decision upon FIFA's request”.

The GFA replied to UEFA on 20 November 2001 that it considered that UEFA had acted illegally in this matter.

It must be noted that in November 2001, a number of national Football bodies of UK Dependencies which are not independent States and not members of the United Nations were already FIFA members, such as the FA of Anguilla or the FA of the Turks and Caicos Islands. Similarly, the FA of the Faroe Islands, which is not an independent State but a dependency of Denmark, is a FIFA member since 1988 and was admitted as a UEFA member in the mid-nineties.

On 26 April 2002, the GFA, acting through one of its counsel, wrote to UEFA stating that “the GFA (...) understands UEFA’s position to be that the GFA is not eligible for membership of UEFA under (new) Article 5.1 and that therefore the GFA's application cannot succeed”. The GFA further stated that “(a) UEFA’s failure to assess the GFA's application to become a member of UEFA by reference to the rules applicable when the application was made in 1999, under which the application would have been successful, and (b) UEFA’s decision instead to change the rules with purportedly retrospective effect in such a way as to make the GFA's application incapable of success, are illegal.”

In that same letter, the GFA requested UEFA to accept CAS arbitration in this matter. The same request was submitted again by the Claimant to UEFA on 6 June 2002.

On 12 July 2002, UEFA confirmed to the GFA that its Executive Committee had accepted CAS jurisdiction in respect of the GFA's claims against UEFA in this matter.

On 16 August 2002, the GFA filed a Request for Arbitration accompanied by 38 Exhibits with the CAS, asking principally (i) that the UEFA Executive Committee be ordered to consider the GFA's application for membership by reference to the rules applicable when the application was made in 1999, (ii) to declare that under those rules the GFA is entitled to provisional membership of UEFA with immediate effect, and (iii) to order payment by the Respondent UEFA of all costs of the arbitration as well as legal costs suffered by the Claimant.

The Respondent filed its Answer, accompanied by 8 Exhibits, on 27 September 2002, requesting the CAS to “dismiss all Principal Orders of the Request for Arbitration”, with all costs and compensations to be charged to the Claimant.

The hearing was held on 27 May 2003 in Lausanne.

The Claimant presented in its Request for Arbitration and specified in its Statement of Claim the following principal requests for relief:

- That UEFA be ordered to decide the GFA's application for membership by reference to the rules applicable when the application was made or was or ought to have been considered prior to 11 October 2001.
- That it be declared that under those rules the GFA is entitled to provisional membership of UEFA with immediate effect;
- That the Respondent UEFA be ordered to pay of all the costs of the arbitration as well as the legal costs incurred by the Claimant.

The Claimant principally submits that:

- a) Under the rules on membership contained in the UEFA Statutes before the modification approved by the UEFA Congress on 11 October 2001, the GFA's application for provisional membership fulfilled all requisite conditions.
- b) Under those rules, the GFA was therefore entitled to membership, as evidenced by the behaviour of the UEFA competent bodies in their processing of the Claimant's application.
- c) The change of the UEFA rules on membership was inspired by the simple wish to prevent the GFA's application from succeeding, and the reason for that wish was to be seen in the political pressure exercised by the powerful Spanish FA.
- d) In July 2001, when the UEFA Executive Committee proposed that the UEFA Statutes be amended to the effect that only associations in countries which are recognised by the United Nations as independent States are eligible for membership, the UEFA Executive Committee must have been aware of the Expert Panel's conclusions.
- e) It would be unfair under the circumstances to permit the dismissal of the GFA's application for affiliation by reference to the amended version of the UEFA rules on membership.

The Respondent submitted in both its Answer and its Response the following principal requests for relief:

- That all of the principal orders requested in the Request for arbitration be dismissed.
- That the Claimant be ordered to pay all of the costs of the arbitration as well as the legal costs incurred by UEFA.

The Respondent is principally of the opinion that:

- a) Under Swiss law, any association, such as UEFA, has a discretionary right to refuse a person or entity as a member, even if such person or entity fulfils all of the conditions stipulated in the association's statutes.
- b) While there are limits to this discretionary right of the association under Swiss law, namely the protection of the personality (art. 28 Swiss Civil Code) and the rules of Swiss Cartel law, those limits were not violated in the present case since UEFA's attitude was neither arbitrary nor based on unjustified reasons.
- c) UEFA's attitude in this matter was not dictated by political pressure exercised by the Spanish FA, which however openly opposed the application made by the GFA.

LAW

1. The CAS has jurisdiction over this dispute on the basis of the correspondence exchanged by the parties on 6 June and 12 July 2002.
Furthermore, during the hearing in Lausanne on 27 May 2003, it was explicitly acknowledged between the parties that the competence of the CAS is not in dispute.
2. Pursuant to Article R45 of the Code, the dispute must be decided "according to the rules of law chosen by the parties or, in the absence of such a choice, according to Swiss law".
3. The issue of the Claimant's right to membership of UEFA is to be examined in the light of the applicable UEFA Statutes. The Panel considers that Swiss civil law is applicable to all aspects of the dispute relating to the construction of the FIFA and UEFA Statutes and Regulations, in accordance with Article R45 of the Code, Article 4, par. 3 a) of the FIFA Statutes and Article 59, par. 1 of the UEFA Statutes.
4. In addition, to the extent that it deems it appropriate, the Panel may apply general principles of law, which are applicable as a type of lex mercatoria for sports regardless of their explicit presence in the applicable UEFA or FIFA Statutes. Such general principles of law include for example the principle of fairness, which implies inter alia the obligation to respect fair procedures (see, in particular, AEK Athens and SK Slavia Prague vs. UEFA, CAS 98/200, sections 60/61 and 155 and seq., in Digest of CAS Awards II, 1998-2000, edited by Matthieu Reeb, pp. 65-66 and 102-103).

5. At the time when the GFA applied for membership to FIFA, and when FIFA subsequently forwarded the GFA's application file to UEFA, the criteria for eligibility as a member of UEFA provided for under Article 5 paragraph 1 of the UEFA Statutes were set out as follows:

“Membership of UEFA is open to national football associations situated in the continent of Europe which are responsible for the organisation and implementation of football-related matters in their particular territory” (the prevailing German text read “Mitglieder der UEFA können europäische Verbände werden, die in ihrem Gebiet für die Organisation und Durchführung des Fussballsports verantwortlich sind”; hereinafter the “Old Rule”).

6. Article 5 paragraph 1 of the UEFA Statutes was amended by the UEFA Congress on 11 October 2001. According to the new version of this provision, UEFA membership is restricted to associations in countries which are recognised as independent States by the United Nations (hereinafter the “New Rule”). The Panel interprets this text to mean that the respective country must have been admitted as a member of the United Nations. The United Nations do not “recognise” countries in the strict sense of the word. However, what is clear is that under the New Rule, the GFA would not be eligible as a member of UEFA, since Gibraltar is not an independent State admitted to membership in the United Nations.

7. The first question which the Panel must address is therefore to establish whether today, taking into account the circumstances of this particular case, UEFA may validly rely on the New Rule to appraise (and hypothetically dismiss) the GFA's application, although such application was filed and dealt with for a period of several years on the basis of the Old Rule.

8. The CAS has already considered in the past that in the absence of an express provision to the contrary, laws and rules relating to procedural matters apply immediately upon entering into force and regardless of when the facts occurred. On the other hand, it is a general principle that laws, regulations and rules of a substantive nature that were in force at the time when the facts occurred must be applied. Such principles were set out in particular in the CAS award S. vs. FINA, CAS 2000/A/274, sections 72-73 (see, in Digest of CAS Awards II, op. cit., p. 405):

“Under Swiss law, the prohibition against the retroactive application of law is well-established. In general, it is necessary to apply those laws, regulations or rules that were in force at the time that the facts at issue occurred (...).

This general principle is, however, subject to several exceptions, including an exception for laws or rules that are procedural in nature. In the absence of an express provision to the contrary, laws and rules relating to procedural matters apply immediately upon entering into force and regardless of when the facts at issue occurred (...).”

9. In the present instance, while the third sentence of Article 2 of the Regulations governing the implementation of the UEFA Statutes sets out the formal conditions which an application for UEFA membership has to meet, it is quite another question whether Article 5 paragraph 1 of the UEFA Statutes is to be seen as merely procedural.

10. This provision sets out the substantive conditions that any applicant will need to fulfil in order to become a member. For this first reason, in accordance with the general principle of non-retroactivity of laws and rules, the Panel may have to consider that the New Rule may not apply to the GFA's application.
11. Even if the New Rule was to be regarded as a rule dealing only with procedural aspects, the Panel is of the opinion that its application in this matter would entail a violation of general principles of law which are widely recognised, particularly the principles of fairness and of good faith. In particular, the Panel refers to the principle of venire contra factum proprium. This principle provides that when the conduct of one party has led to raise legitimate expectations on the part of the second party, the first party is barred from changing its course of action to the detriment of the second party (see, AEK Athens and SK Slavia Prague vs. UEFA, CAS 98/200, in Digest of CAS Awards II, op. cit., pp. 38 and seq.; S. vs. FINA, CAS 2000/A/274, section 37, in Digest of CAS Awards II, op. cit., p. 400; Art. 2 of the Swiss Civil Code).
12. In casu, upon receipt of the GFA's application in 1997, the UEFA administration processed it at first without any reservations. The visit on site in Gibraltar by a delegation of UEFA and FIFA representatives in May 2000 was carried out in knowledge of the fact that FIFA was already considering changing its rules on membership in the future (see above).
13. In July 2000, a favourable report was rendered by the UEFA representatives who had inspected Gibraltar's facilities, outlining that all requisite conditions set out in the applicable UEFA Statutes and Regulations were fulfilled (see above). Subsequently, the UEFA Executive Committee decided to ask for advice of an Expert Panel before rendering a decision on the GFA's application. It was therefore legitimate for the GFA to understand that UEFA would decide on its application on the basis of the conclusions of the Expert Panel, bearing in mind that the GFA, the English FA and the Spanish FA had all been requested to make written and oral submissions in this context.
14. The Expert Panel came to the main conclusion that the GFA was entitled to UEFA provisional membership. In the Expert Report which was submitted in writing to the UEFA Executive Committee on 27 August 2001, the members of the Expert Panel suggested to the UEFA Executive Committee "to amend the UEFA Statutes (...) to avoid similar problems in the future" (emphasized added). The Expert Panel thus proposed "an amendment to the effect that only UN-recognised States may apply for admission to and membership of UEFA".
15. However, before any decision on the merits was taken by UEFA on the GFA's application on the basis of the Expert Panel's main conclusion, as one would have reasonably expected, the relevant Old Rule on membership was changed in October 2001 upon a recommendation made in July of that same year by the UEFA Executive Committee. The New Rule actually implemented the recommendation that the Expert Panel had made, but only for future cases.

16. The present Panel is of the opinion that such a recommendation to replace the Old Rule by the New Rule was made in the light of the conclusions of the Expert Panel. The fact that the UEFA Executive Committee had already made such an amendment proposal at its meeting of 11-12 July 2001 (i.e. prior to receiving the Expert Panel's written report in August) tends to suggest that the UEFA Executive Committee was aware of the Expert Panel's conclusions at that time. The panel is thus satisfied that one of the main purposes for the amendment proposal made by the UEFA Executive Committee was to prevent the GFA's application from succeeding.
17. To apply the New Rule to the Claimant's case under these circumstances would be unfair and contrary to the above mentioned general principles of law. It were the actions of UEFA itself which created legitimate expectations that the GFA's application would be processed under the Old Rule, with adequate speed or at least upon receipt of and in compliance with the advice of the Expert Panel that UEFA had appointed specifically for that purpose.
18. The GFA's application to be admitted as a provisional UEFA member shall therefore be examined on the basis of the Old Rule, namely the rule applicable when the application was made and on the basis of which the Expert Panel appointed by the UEFA rendered its opinion.
19. As mentioned above, according to the Old Rule "Membership of UEFA is open to national football associations situated in the continent of Europe which are responsible for the organisation and implementation of football-related matters in their particular territory".
20. When reviewing whether the GFA's application fulfilled the conditions set out in this provision, the Expert Panel considered that "given that Gibraltar is a European association which is no longer dependent on the [British] FA and which has become autonomous in a sporting respect, and given that the GFA indisputably exercises sole responsibility for the organisation and structure of football in its territory, Article 5 paragraph 1 can only be interpreted as to mean that the GFA from a legal perspective fulfils the criteria of the UEFA statutes for becoming a UEFA member".
21. The same opinion was given by the UEFA administration itself in its inspection report and recommendations issued on 11 July 2000 (see, sections 18 and 19 above).
22. The Panel considers that these opinions are accurate and that there is no reason for considering, as submitted by the Respondent on the basis of the words used in Article 5 paragraph 2 of the UEFA Statutes, that the Old Rule on UEFA membership should in fact – as the New Rule eventually expressed in an explicit way - be construed as restricting eligibility to associations of countries which are recognized politically as independent States.
23. Such a point of view is in fact not supported by the letter of the Old Rule. Neither is it consistent with the opinion of CAS, as expressed in previous cases, that the concept of "nation" or "country" in the sports environment must not necessarily be "understood within its common political meaning" (see, Celtic Plc vs. UEFA, CAS 98/2001, paragraphs 25 seq., in Digest of CAS Awards II, op. cit., pp. 118-120). More importantly, the Respondent's argument is contradicted by the fact that UEFA already has – and had at the time when the application was made – a number of member associations from countries which do not enjoy independent statehood, such as Scotland, Wales or the Faroe Islands.

24. As a consequence of the above considerations the Panel is of the opinion that the GFA's application for UEFA membership meets the requirements set out in Article 5 paragraph 1 of the Old Rule.
25. Upon receipt of an application file from FIFA, as in the present case, UEFA must "decide whether to grant provisional membership or associate membership to the applicant association" (Article 4 paragraph 7 of the FIFA Statutes).
26. Article 6 paragraph 3 of the UEFA Statutes provides that the UEFA Executive Committee is competent to admit an applicant association as a provisional UEFA member, while the decision on full admission must be taken by the UEFA Congress.
27. The Respondent submits that even though the GFA's application might meet all requisite conditions for UEFA membership, an association like UEFA remains free to admit or to refuse the applicant as a new member by virtue of the principle of autonomy of the association under Swiss law.
28. The Panel must therefore examine whether the fact that the GFA's application meets the requirements of Article 5 paragraph 1 of the Old Rule entitles the GFA to provisional membership or whether UEFA has discretion to invoke the principle of freedom of association and has the right to deny membership on that basis.
29. Generally, freedom of association includes the freedom of an association to accept or to refuse any applicant for membership, even if the applicant fulfils all statutory conditions (see, inter alia HEINI A., Das Schweizerische Vereinsrecht, Bâle 1988, p. 48).
30. However, this principle is now generally considered to be limited, such limits being derived in particular from:
  - (i) the contractual nature of the membership to an association and the related obligation to act in good faith in the context of contractual or pre-contractual discussions (Article 2 Swiss Civil Code; see, inter alia ZEN-RUFFINEN P., Droit du sport, Zurich 2002, n° 279 and references; BADDELEY M., L'association sportive face au droit, Genève 1994, p. 75; HEINI A., op.cit., p.48);
  - (ii) the general prohibition of arbitrary decisions and the need of a control of the association's decision to refuse a new member (Article 2 paragraph 2 Swiss Civil Code);
  - (iii) in professional matters, the provisions of competition law and the related need to protect personality rights (see, JdT 1957 I 202-212; Article 7 of the Swiss Federal Law on Cartels).

31. Furthermore, in the context of sports associations, it is now often considered that associations in a monopolistic position – which is undoubtedly the case for the Respondent in Europe – have in fact a duty to accept new members if they fulfil all statutory conditions to that effect. This opinion is derived both from the legislation on cartels and from the provisions on the protection of the personality (see, HEINI A., op.cit., p. 49; BADDELEY M., op. cit., p. 82).
32. The Panel holds, in that respect, that the exclusion of athletes, or of a sports association to which athletes are affiliated, from an international sports organisation which occupies a dominant or monopolistic position in the organisation of the sports competitions at issue may have the effect of a boycott. It is the Panel's opinion that such an exclusion should therefore be held invalid, at least to the extent that it is not grounded on objective and justified reasons.
33. The Respondent itself admitted that a refusal by UEFA to grant the GFA provisional membership could be considered as illegal if it were arbitrary or based on "unjustified reasons".
34. The above legal considerations lead to the general conclusion that, under Swiss law, an association does not remain entitled, under any circumstances, to accept or refuse a new member at its sole discretion. However, in order to rule on the present case, there is no need for the Panel to develop a position of principle on this question. The Panel thus leaves open the question of the right of UEFA to accept or refuse new members at its sole discretion. The Panel is of the opinion that it may rely on the particular circumstances surrounding the GFA's application and the way it was processed by UEFA to decide upon the present case.
35. As pointed out above, UEFA acted from the outset as if the applicant would be granted provisional membership if all applicable conditions were met. The GFA invested a considerable amount of time and resources in obtaining its admission as a UEFA member, relying on the legitimate expectation that UEFA would not refuse its application without any justified reason.
36. The Panel holds that it is therefore the behaviour of the UEFA itself which created such legitimate expectations on the part of the Claimant (visits on site, favourable visit report and recommendation, appointment of an Expert Panel to assist the Executive Committee to decide on the case, favourable conclusions of the Expert Panel following a comprehensive and adversary procedure, etc.).
37. UEFA chose to process thoroughly the GFA's application and by doing so, it led the Claimant to believe that it would be admitted as a provisional member if the Statutes' conditions were met. By doing so, UEFA waived the right that it may have had under Swiss law to reject the Claimant's request for membership without justified reasons.
38. In that respect, it is the Panel's opinion that neither the change of membership rules by UEFA, the purpose of which may have been to enable UEFA to dismiss the GFA's application, nor the clearly negative position allegedly taken by the Spanish FA, which may have influenced the UEFA's change of attitude and progressive reluctance to decide in a timely manner upon the GFA's application, constitute any such justified reasons.

39. The 11 July 2000 report by the UEFA delegation (see, section 18 above) lists certain conditions which have to be met in order for the GFA application for UEFA membership to succeed. It is for UEFA to decide whether these conditions are in fact met. Given the length of time which has elapsed since the application was first made, such a decision will have to be taken forthwith and will have to conform with the views expressed in this award.
40. The Panel further stresses that the possible change of FIFA rules on membership, which has been put forward by the Respondent as a reason for postponing any decision on the GFA's application, should not be an impediment to the UEFA granting provisional UEFA membership to the GFA.
41. Under Art. 4 paragraph 7 of the FIFA Statutes, the confederation "shall notify FIFA as soon as it considers a provisional member national association to be qualified to become a member of FIFA". This wording suggests that in two years' time, the UEFA shall remain entitled to assess whether the GFA fulfils the criteria for FIFA membership on the basis of the FIFA Statutes then in force.

The Court of Arbitration for Sport rules that:

1. UEFA is ordered to decide on the GFA's application for membership on the basis of the UEFA rules applicable at the time when the application was made. The decision has to be made by the UEFA no later than 31 March 2004.
2. GFA's other motions are rejected.
3. (...)

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-67

Arbitration CAS 2001/A/317 A. / Fédération Internationale de Lutttes Associées (FILA), award of 9 July 2001

Panel: Mr. Dirk-Reiner Martens (Germany), President; Mr. Odd Seim Haugen (Norway); Mr. Jean-Philippe Rochat (Switzerland)

Wrestling

Doping (nandrolone)

Use of nutritional supplements

Strict Liability Rule

Mitigating circumstances

1. The legal relations between an athlete and a federation are of a civil nature and do not leave room for the application of principles of criminal law. This is particularly true for the principles of in dubio pro reo and nulla poena sine culpa and the presumption of innocence as enshrined in Art. 6 ECHR.
2. It is perfectly proper for the rules of a sporting federation to establish that the results achieved by an athlete at a competition during which he was under the influence of a prohibited substance must be cancelled irrespective of any guilt on the part of the athlete. This conclusion is the natural consequence of sporting fairness against the other competitors. The interests of the athlete concerned in not being punished without being guilty must give way to the fundamental principle of sport that all competitors must have equal chances.
3. If the federation is able to establish the objective elements of a doping offence, there is a presumption of guilt against the athlete. The principle of presumed fault on the part of the athlete does not, however, leave him without protection because he/she has the right to rebut the presumption, i.e. to establish that the presence of the prohibited substance in his/her body was not due to any intent or negligence on his/her part.
4. An athlete cannot exculpate himself/herself by simply stating that the container of the particular product taken by him/her did not specify that it contained a prohibited substance. It is obvious that the sale of nutritional supplements, many of which are available over the internet and thus sold without an effective governmental control, would go down dramatically if they properly declared that they contain (or could contain) substances prohibited under the rules governing certain sports. Therefore, to allow athletes the excuse that a nutritional supplement was mislabelled would provide an additional incentive for the producers to continue that practice. In summary, therefore, it is no excuse for an athlete found with a prohibited substance in his/her body that he/she checked the label on the product he took and that the label did not specify that the product contained a prohibited substance.

A. participated in the XXVII Olympic Games in Sydney as a wrestler in the 85 kg weight category, Greco Roman Style. He finished fourth in his competition which took place on September 27, 2000.

After the end of his competition he underwent a doping control. The A sample (No. A403123) showed the presence of "metabolites of nandrolone, norandrostenedione or norandrostenediol (19-norandrosterone and 19-noretiocholanolone). The concentration of norandrosterone in the sample was more than twice the IOC threshold" (4 ng/ml). In his subsequent request for arbitration A. specified the concentration as having been 8 ng/ml.

By decision of the IOC Executive Board of October 1, 2000, A. was disqualified and excluded from the Games of the XXVII Olympiad for the use of prohibited substances (Chapter II, Article 2.2 of the Olympic Movement Anti-Doping Code). He did not challenge this disqualification.

Upon the request of the athlete's national delegation, the test of the B-sample (No. B403123) was carried on October 3, 2000 in the presence of Mr. J. Segura and Mr. S. Nolan. No member of the national delegation was present at the opening of the B-sample since the Chef de Mission and all physicians had already left. The test result of the B-sample confirmed the result of the A-sample.

The FILA Sport Judge suspended A. from all national and international wrestling competitions for a period of two years. On November 3, 2000 this decision was notified to the national Wrestling Federation and subsequently communicated by it to A. The athlete and his national Wrestling Federation unsuccessfully challenged this decision before internal FILA instances.

Over a period of several months prior to the Olympic Games in Sydney A. had taken 8 to 10 different vitamins/nutritional supplements in accordance with a schedule developed by his sponsor, the witness L. who is a wholesaler of health products in Sweden. During this period A. underwent several doping control tests which were always negative. Approximately 5 to 6 weeks before the Sydney Olympic Games A. began taking six tablets a day of Pyrovate 500, a nutritional supplement produced by the US-company Pinnacle and recommended and supplied to A. by L.. A. did not undergo a doping test after he began taking Pyrovate 500 until the positive test at the Olympic Games. When already in Australia in a training camp, the athlete's trainers heard that a weight-lifter had tested positive for nandrolone and that food supplements were suspected to be responsible for this result. As a consequence, the labels of every product taken by A., in particular the Pyrovate 500 label, were checked as to whether the products contained any prohibited substances. The label did not show any such substance and A. continued to take – inter alia – Pyrovate 500. Following the athlete's positive doping test in Sydney Pyrovate 500 was tested by the IOC accredited laboratory in Cologne. The test revealed the presence of anabolic androgenic steroids (nandrolone precursors) which were not declared on the label.

On January 4, 2001 Appellant filed a request for arbitration with the Court of Arbitration for Sport against the decision of FILA's Sport Judge of October 24, 2000.

By letter dated February 19, 2001 the Respondent filed its response to the request for arbitration.

The Appellant claims that his rights were infringed during the internal FILA-proceedings since he was not given the benefit of a fair hearing before the decision of the FILA Sport Judge. With respect to the merits of the case, the Appellant contends that the Respondent cannot rely on "strict liability". Athletes who have broken the rules without intent or negligence should not be punished. Moreover, since the FILA doping regulations required "use" of a forbidden substance, they themselves showed that an intentional element was required for a doping offence. Since Appellant took the forbidden substance neither intentionally nor negligently, the FILA decision should be annulled. Even if the FILA doping rules were considered to contain a strict liability regime the Panel should take into account that there was a case of exceptional circumstances which did not warrant a suspension in addition to disqualification from the Olympic Games. Regarding the product Pyrovate 500 the Appellant observes that neither he nor his trainer were aware of the fact that this supplement could contain a forbidden substance. Finally, A. adds that all his previous doping tests had been negative and that his clean record should also be considered. In conclusion, the Appellant requests that the FILA decision be declared invalid.

The Respondent requests the CAS to reject the appeal and to confirm the decision to suspend the Appellant for a duration of two years. Since in the case in hand it was not contested that a forbidden substance was found in the Appellant's body, in the Respondent's view the suspension was correct since the Appellant was unable to show that he had fulfilled all his duties of care. The Respondent submits that high level athletes have known for several years that nutritional supplements available from US-American producers may sometimes contain forbidden substances. In this respect Respondent cites press releases by the IOC issued in 1999 and at the beginning of 2000 as evidence of the level of awareness in the sports world. The fact that the Appellant tested positive after ingestion of a product which contained a prohibited substance not marked on the label could not in itself provide a valid excuse because this would open a wide door to any kind of abuse. However, the Respondent conceded that the special circumstances of the case might allow the sanction to be reduced.

A first hearing was held on April 3, 2001 and a second one on May 15, 2001, both in Lausanne.

LAW

1. The Appellant alleges a violation of his right to be heard since he was not given the opportunity to present his case before the FILA Sport Judge rendered his decision on the suspension.
2. The CAS jurisdiction is based on the arbitration agreement reached by the parties at the hearing of 3 April 2001 but also results from FILA's rules and regulations (Article 37(c) of the FILA Constitution and Article 6 of the FILA Disciplinary Regulations).

3. Pursuant to Article R58 of the Code, the Panel is required to decide the dispute according to the applicable regulations of FILA and Swiss law since Respondent has its seat in Switzerland and the parties did not choose a different governing law.
4. Since the doping control and the analysis of the samples took place after the FILA Congress held on September 22, 2000 in Sydney the Panel will apply the FILA Constitution as amended at that Congress (FILA Official Bulletin No. 166-167/2001) and the FILA Doping Regulations as well as the Disciplinary Regulation in force at that time. For the interpretation of the FILA rules the Panel will have special regard to Swiss law in accordance with Article R58 of the Code.
5. Indeed, there is no evidence that the FILA Sport Judge heard the Appellant either personally or by written submissions. It seems that he rendered his decision without further inquiries, only on the basis of the documentation on the disqualification by the IOC, provided to him by FILA.
6. However, the Panel will not deal with this argument in detail. It observes that the CAS has always considered the right to be heard as a general legal principle which has to be respected also during internal proceedings of the federations (CAS 91/53 G. v/ FEI, award of January 15, 1992, Digest, p. 79, 86 f). Federations have the obligation to respect the right to be heard as one of the fundamental principles of due process.
7. However, according to Article R57 of the Code, the Panel will hear the case de novo. This means that, even if a violation of the principle of due process occurred in the first instance, any such violation may be cured by a full hearing following appeal to the CAS (CAS 94/129 USA Shooting & Q. v/ UIT, Digest, p. 187, 203).
8. The Panel is satisfied that the Appellant committed a doping offence under the relevant FILA Rules as interpreted pursuant to Swiss law.
9. Provisions on doping can be found in several places in FILA's regulations (the following quotes are based on the version of the regulations as applicable after the 22 September 2000 FILA Congress).
10. FILA Constitution
*"Article 9. – Doping
The absorption of any substance intended to artificially improve the performance of the athlete is strictly prohibited. The IOC's official list is authoritative."*
[The French text reads: "L'absorption de toutes substances destinées à accroître artificiellement la performance..."].
11. The FILA Doping Regulations state the following:
"Art. 1 – Definition of doping in sport

Doping is defined as the use, intake or administration of any substance that may affect the mental state or the physical performance of the competitor in a positive or negative way.

...

Doping consists of

- a) the administration, intake and use of substances belonging to the classes of forbidden pharmacological agents and the use of forbidden methods by athletes...,
- b) resorting to substances or methods which are potentially dangerous for the athlete's health, or are capable of increasing his performance artificially,
- c) the presence in the athlete's organisation of forbidden substances or the certification of the use of methods which are not allowed, by referring to the list provided by the IOC and to its successive updates".

12. Art. 27 of the FILA Doping Regulations then makes reference to the IOC Anti-Doping Code by stating:

"Art. 27 Particular and Final Provisions

...

2. Concerning anything which is not indicated in these Regulations, the standards and provisions laid down by the IOC's anti-doping code are applicable.

...

6. *Bearing in mind that the anti-doping code of the Olympic Movement has been drawn up in close cooperation with the International Federations, it must apply to ... the various Championships ..., to all other competitions organised by the FILA...
Therefore, any problems of interpretation of any article in these Regulations or for any question not dealt with here, must be referred to the IOC's Anti-Doping Code Lausanne 2000."*

13. Finally, the IOC Anti-Doping Code to which the FILA Doping Regulations refer states that (Chapter II Art. 2 and Art. 3):

"Article 2

Doping is:

...

2. the presence in the athlete's body of a Prohibited Substance or evidence of the use thereof or evidence of the use of a Prohibited Method.

Article 3

1. In a case of doping, the penalties for a first offence are as follows:

...

- b) If the prohibited substance is one other than those referred to in a) above:

...

- III) Suspension from any competition for a minimum period of two years. However, based on specific, exceptional circumstances to be evaluated in the first instance by the competent IF bodies, there may be a provision for a possible modification of the two-year sanction.

2. In case of

- a) intentional doping:

...

The sanctions are as follows: [sanctions of up to a life ban]"

The notion of "intentional doping" is further defined in the IOC's Explanatory Memorandum (p. 9):

"With regard to intentional doping, this is a new notion which is added to that of doping as a breach of these rules. The latter exists as soon as the presence of a banned substance has been detected in an athlete's body, independent of any element of intention. Therefore, the athlete has to be punished. Nothing has changed as far as this is concerned. However, in the rare cases where it can be proved that doping was intentional, the Code allows for the imposition of much stricter sanctions..."

14. As to sanctions, Annex D of the FILA Anti-Doping Regulations provides:

"Sanctions

1. In the event of proving responsibility, the sanctions laid down by the IOC and quoted in annexe 1 which is an integral part of the FILA anti doping regulations. Any updates by the Olympic Movements will be introduced following deliberation by the Executive Committee and defined as follows:

Constitutes a violation of the anti doping standards:

A. *Administering or use of substances which are part of the following classes of forbidden medication:
... anabolising agents ...*

B. The use of doping practices ...

C. The absorption of substances belonging to the following classes of pharmaceutical classes whose use is subject to restriction: alcohol ...

D. The administration or absorption of the following substances: ephedrine ...

2. For violations mentioned in point 1, letters A, B, C, the following sanctions are applicable:

- two years for the first offence;

- life ban for the second offence."

15. Finally, with regard to sanctions, Art. 26 of the FILA Doping Regulations provides the following:

"Art. 26 Violations of the anti-doping standards and the relative sanctions

...

4. The FILA, depending on the case, for positive doping results, can apply heavier sanctions than those laid down in the Regulations.

5. The FILA, through its own justice bodies, can find specific and exceptional attenuating circumstances which will enable the sanctions to be reduced."

16. The Panel finds the provisions on doping in the various FILA regulations rather confusing.

According to the Constitution, doping is the "absorption" of a "substance intended to artificially improve the performance". In turn Art. 1 of the FILA Anti Doping Regulations states that it is sufficient for the substance to "affect" the performance and the same Article declares that "the presence in the athlete's organism of forbidden substances" constitutes a doping offence.

The FILA Doping Regulations then confirm that the IOC Anti Doping Code "must apply" to all FILA competitions and this very IOC Anti-Doping Code states that "Doping is ... the presence in the athlete's body of a Prohibited Substance" and the IOC's Explanatory Memorandum further explains that doping "exists as soon as the presence of a banned substance has been detected in an athlete's body, independent of any element of intention".

17. Finally, according to Annex D of the FILA Anti Doping Regulations there seems to be a requirement of "proving responsibility" in order for sanctions to be imposed. The same can be concluded from Art. 17.21 of the same regulations which provides for sanctions of a "wrestler at fault".

18. The Panel observes that this "cocktail" of definitions and legal principles in connection with the fight against doping certainly falls short of the clarity and certainty desirable in an area as sensitive as doping and as demanded by CAS (CAS 94/129, USA Shooting & Q. v/ UIT, Digest, p. 187, 203). However, in the opinion of the Panel, the lack of clarity in the FILA Regulations does not go quite far enough to justify rejecting them as a whole as being so unclear that they cannot be applied at all. The Panel will therefore apply these rules as they are but will, if necessary, interpret any uncertainties contra stipulatorem, i.e. against FILA.

19. The facts of the case in hand are more straight forward than in most other doping cases:

It is uncontested that a substance prohibited under Art. 6 of the FILA Doping Regulations (metabolites of nandrolone, norandrostenedione or norandrostenediol (19-norandrosterone and 19-noretiocholanolone)) in quantities in excess of that allowed under the FILA rules (2ng/ml according to Article 27.2 of the FILA Doping Regulations; indeed, the Appellant himself states "a level of 8ng/ml of nandrolone") were found in the Appellant's urine sample taken on 27 September 2000. The Appellant admits that he took Pyrovate 500 during the time preceding his doping test and that – according to the findings of the IOC accredited laboratory in Cologne – this product contained anabolic-androgenic-steroids although this was not declared on the label. No challenge has been brought forward with respect to the conduct of the doping test, the chain of custody of the sample or the laboratory analysis.

20. The parties differ in their interpretation of the FILA rules and the consequences to be drawn from them.

According to the Appellant

"(I)t is clear that athletes, who have not broke the rules of doping with intent or negligently, cannot be punished" (Statement of Appeal dated 5 December 2000), while the Respondent is of the opinion that:

"(I)he doping definition resulting from the applicable FILA Regulations is a strict liability definition. If the presence of a doping agent is established, then the sanction applies. No intention has to be shown" (Answer dated 19 February 2000).

21. If, indeed, under the FILA rules no subjective element, i.e. no intent or negligence on the part of the athlete were required for a doping offence to have been committed the Panel would in principle have to apply the two-year sanction provided for in Annex D, Section 2 of the FILA Doping Regulations and would be limited to evaluating whether there are "specific and exceptional attenuating circumstances which will enable the sanctions to be reduced" (Art. 26, Section 5 of the FILA Doping Regulations).

22. However, the Panel is of the opinion that as a matter of principle and irrespective of "specific and exceptional circumstances" an athlete cannot be banned from competition for having committed a doping offence unless he is guilty, i.e. he has acted with intent or negligence. Even if the rules and regulations of a sports federation do not expressly provide that the guilt of the athlete has to be taken into account the foregoing principle will have to be read into these rules to make them legally acceptable.
23. CAS panels have to interpret the rules in question in a way "which seeks to discern the intention of the rule maker, and not to frustrate it" (CAS 96/149 A.C. v/ FINA, award of March 13, 1997, Digest, p. 251, 259). In interpreting the FILA rules the Panel does not find any indication that they intended to ignore the subjective elements as such. Since the Panel is of the opinion that under Swiss law an athlete cannot validly be banned in the absence of any fault (see infra), an interpretation to the contrary would lead to the rules being void which would frustrate the objective of the fight against doping pursued by the entire sporting world.
24. Before explaining the reasons for the principle of guilt the Panel wishes to clarify that this principle does not apply to the disqualification of a "doped athlete" from the event at which the doping test was conducted. It is therefore perfectly proper for the rules of a sporting federation to establish that the results achieved by a "doped athlete" at a competition during which he was under the influence of a prohibited substance must be cancelled irrespective of any guilt on the part of the athlete. This conclusion is the natural consequence of sporting fairness against the other competitors. The interests of the athlete concerned in not being punished without being guilty must give way to the fundamental principle of sport that all competitors must have equal chances (CAS 94/129 USA Shooting & Q. v/ UIT, Digest, p. 187, 193 et seq.; CAS 95/141 C. v/ FINA, Digest, p. 215, 220; CAS 98/214 B. v/ FIJ, p. 17; CAS 94/126 N. v/ FEI, p. 8).
25. The Panel comes to a different conclusion with regard to the suspension of an athlete from future competition. The so-called "strict liability" rule, i.e. a rule as advocated by the Respondent according to which the mere presence of a prohibited substance in an athlete's body justifies his suspension, does not, in the Panel's opinion, sufficiently respect the athlete's right of personality ("Persönlichkeitsrecht") as established in Articles 20 and 27 et seq. of the Swiss Civil Code which CAS panels are required to apply (Art. 58 of the Code of Sports-related Arbitration). In fact, under Swiss law also sporting federations are under a duty to respect the framework established by Articles 20 and 27 et seq. Swiss Civil Code (BADDELEY M., L'association sportive face au droit, Basel et al. 1994, p. 227).
26. As a preliminary remark the Panel wishes to clarify that the legal relations between an athlete and a federation are of a civil nature and do not leave room for the application of principles of criminal law. This is particularly true for the principles of in dubio pro reo and nulla poena sine culpa and the presumption of innocence as enshrined in Art. 6 ECHR (Swiss Federal Tribunal, ASA Bull. 1993, p. 398, 409 et seq. [G. v/ FEI] and Swiss Federal Tribunal judgment of March - 31, 1999 [5P. 83/1999], unreported, p. 12; see also BADDELEY M., op. cit., p. 220; SCHERRER U., in: FRITZWEILER J. (ed), Doping-Sanktionen, Beweise, Ansprüche, Bern et al. 2000, p. 119, 127).

27. When deciding whether a "strict liability" rule is proper under Swiss law, the Panel has to weigh the interests of the federation against those of the athlete, in particular his right of personality (see BADDELEY M., op. cit., p. 239).
  28. In recent times the fight against doping has become sport's most burning problem. At times, public attention and, in particular, that of the media is focused more on whether the athletes are under the influence of doping substances than on the sporting event itself and its results. This development is a very serious threat to the entire sporting movement and, indirectly, to an industry which accounts for an important percentage of the world economy.
  29. It is obvious that it would be an important weapon in the fight against doping if the federations were able to impose sanctions on athletes who have tested positive, without having to establish any element of guilt on the part of the athlete. However, this argument, which is one of prevention and deterrence, loses sight of the general objective of doping sanctions, namely the punishment of the athlete for having violated the rules (BADDELEY M., op. cit., p. 219).
  30. On the other hand, it has to be recognised that in professional sport doping sanctions have the effect of restraining the athlete from carrying out his chosen trade and thus from earning a living for a certain period of time. In addition, doping sanctions clearly affect the honour and social standing of the athlete concerned and are a stigma on his future.
  31. When weighing up the interests of both sides the Panel is of the view that the interests of the athlete take precedence over those of the federation to enforce a rule of "strict liability". The contrary view would only be acceptable if a strict liability rule were the only meaningful weapon in the fight against doping. (see BADDELEY M., in: FRITZWEILER J. (ed), op. cit., p. 9, 22; SCHERRER U., op. cit., p. 119, 127; see also CAS 95/142 L. v/ FINA, Digest, p. 225, 231). As will be shown below, there are other means, in particular when allocating the burden of proof, to ensure an effective fight against doping without accepting the risk of sanctioning an athlete who is not guilty of an offence or whose level of guilt does not justify the full extent of the sanction.
  32. The Panel further notes that in a recent decision the Court of Appeals of Frankfurt/Main, Germany also held that liability without fault was incompatible with the rights of the athlete and German law (OLG Frankfurt/Main, judgment of May 18, 2000, 13W29/00 [B. v/ DLV] p. 15).
  33. Having established the principle that the suspension of an athlete for a doping offence requires fault on his/her part, this does not, in the Panel's view, mean that it is for the federation to provide full proof of every element of the offence, as is necessary in respect of a criminal act for which a presumption of innocence operates in favour of the accused. There is - no doubt that the federation has to establish and – if contested – to prove the objective elements of the offence, in particular, for example, that the sample was taken properly, that there was a complete chain of custody of the sample on its way to the laboratory and that the analysis of the sample was state-of-the-art. This follows from the general rule that a person who alleges a fact has the burden of proof (CAS 98/208 N., J., Y., W. v/ FINA, Digest II, p. 247; CAS 99/A/234 & CAS 99/A/235 M.M. & M. v/ FINA, award of February 29, 2000, p. 14).

34. However, it would put a definite end to any meaningful fight against doping if the federations were required to prove the necessary subjective elements of the offence, i.e. intent or negligence on the part of the athlete (CAS 95/141 C. v/ FINA, Digest, p. 215, 220; CAS 98/214 B. v/ FIJ, Digest II, p. 318 et seq.). In fact, since neither the federation nor the CAS has the means of conducting its own investigation or of compelling witnesses to give evidence, means which are available to the public prosecutor in criminal proceedings, it would be all too simple for an athlete to deny any intent or negligence and to simply state that he/she has no idea how the prohibited substance arrived in his/her system (see CAS 96/156 F. v/ FINA).
  35. For this reason the Panel believes that, with regard to the subjective elements of a doping offence, when weighing the interests of the federation to combat doping and those of the athlete not to be punished without fault, the scales tip in favour of the fight against doping. In fact, doping only happens in the sphere of the athlete: he/she is in control of his/her body, of what he/she eats and drinks, of who has access to his/her nutrition, of what medication he/she takes, etc. In these circumstances it is appropriate to presume that the athlete has knowingly or at least negligently consumed the substance which has led to the positive doping test (see also: BADDELEY M., op. cit., p. 243; BELOFF M., Drugs, Laws and Versapaks, in O'LEARY J. (ed.), Drugs and Doping in Sport, London 2000, p. 39, 49; STEINER U., Doping aus verfassungsrechtlicher Sicht, in RÖHRICHT/VIEWEG (eds.), Doping Forum, Stuttgart et al. 2000, p. 125, 134; BADDELEY M., in: FRITZWEILER (ed.), op. cit., p. 9, 22).
  36. Therefore, if the federation is able to establish the objective elements of a doping offence, there is a presumption of guilt against the athlete.
  37. The principle of presumed fault on the part of the athlete does not, however, leave him without protection because he/she has the right to rebut the presumption, i.e. to establish that the presence of the prohibited substance in his/her body was not due to any intent or negligence on his/her part (CAS 95/141 C. v/ FINA, Digest, p. 215, 220 et seq.; CAS 98/214 B. v/ FIJ, Digest II, p. 319). The athlete may for example provide evidence that the presence of the forbidden substance is the result of an act of malicious intent by a third party (CAS 91/56 S. v/ FEI, Digest, p. 93, 97; CAS 92/63 G. v/ FEI, Digest, p. 115, 121; CAS 92/73 N. v/ FEI, Digest, p. 153, 157).
  38. It is noteworthy that the Swiss Federal Tribunal has accepted an interpretation of doping rules to the effect that it is admissible to presume an athlete's guilt if he/she has been tested positive for a prohibited substance. The athlete is then accorded the opportunity to rebut the presumption (Swiss Federal Tribunal, Digest, p. 561, 575 [G. v/ FEI]; Swiss Federal Tribunal, 5P.83/1999 [W., C., Z., W. v/ FINA], p. 12).

39. The principle of presumption of guilt and rebuttal thereof by the athlete has also been applied by several CAS decisions, not only with respect of the rules of the FEI which expressly provide for a presumption of guilt, but also in connection with regulations which appear to follow a system of liability without fault (see CAS 91/56 S. v/ FEI, Digest, p. 93, 95; CAS 92/63 G. v/ FEI, p. 115, 120; CAS 92/73 N. v/ FEI, Digest, p. 153, 157; CAS 92/86 W. v/ FEI, Digest, p. 161, 163; CAS 98/204 R. v/ FEI, p. 8; CAS 91/53 G. v/ FEI, Digest, p. 79, 87; see especially: CAS 95/141 C. v/ FINA, Digest, p. 215, 220; CAS 96/156 F. v/ FINA, p. 40 et seq.; CAS 98/214 B. v/ FIJ, Digest II, p. 319; CAS 99/A/252 FCLP v/ IWF, p. 22 et seq.; CAS 2000/A/309 R. v/ RLVB, p. 5). On the other hand, the Panel is conscious of the fact that there have been CAS decisions where the Panel was prepared to apply a strict liability standard with respect to suspensions and was not willing to take into account the subjective elements of the case in questions (see: CAS 98/208 N., J., Y., W.. v/ FINA, Digest II, p. 25; CAS 98/222 B. v/ ITU, Digest II, p. 336-337; see also: CAS 95/150 V. v/ FINA, Digest, p. 265, 272). However, it should be noted that all these decisions took account of the level of "guilt" on the part of the athlete when establishing the duration of the suspension. It can also be taken from these awards that their reasoning was often based on arguments invoked to justify a simple disqualification. They did not consider the very purpose of suspensions as opposed to a mere disqualification and the differences between them. For these reasons the Panel is not prepared to follow these decisions.
40. The Panel recognises that the opinions of the courts and legal authorities differ as to whether the reversal of the burden of proof puts too much burden on the athlete. As an example the OLG Frankfurt in its decision of 18 May 2000 (see above) is in favour of a rule pursuant to which the presence of a prohibited substance in an athlete's body provides prima facie evidence of guilt on the part of the athlete; this leaves the athlete with the burden of proving that, in his/her particular case, the facts were different from the normal sequence of events. In many cases the practical results of both scenarios – a reversal of the burden of proof or the rebuttal of prima facie evidence – will be the same, but the Panel does recognise that the burden on the athlete is slightly less in the latter case. The Panel does, however, believe that, as a matter of principle, the reversal of the burden of proof and thus the burden being on the athlete to provide full proof of the absence of intent or negligence, is adequate and appropriate when weighing the interests of both sides.

In the case in hand, in which none of the objective elements of the offence is in dispute, the Appellant is thus presumed to have intentionally or negligently committed the offence.

41. As has been shown above, the burden is on the Appellant to prove that he is not guilty of a doping offence. To this end, the Panel took the testimony of several witnesses proffered by the Appellant.
42. It is the opinion of the Panel that the Appellant has not succeeded in proving that he was without fault.

43. The Appellant contends that he was not aware that Pyrovate 500 contained a substance which was the source of his positive doping test in Sydney.
44. In fact, the Panel accepts, in the Appellant's favour, that he did not intentionally take a prohibited substance, in other words, that he did not know that Pyrovate 500 contained precursors of nandrolone. The Panel further assumes, in the Appellant's favour, that his use of Pyrovate 500 was in fact the cause for his positive doping test in Sydney.
45. However, the Panel is of the opinion that under the circumstances the Appellant acted negligently when he took Pyrovate 500 without making certain that it did not contain a prohibited substance.
46. As a general remark, the Panel observes that the sporting world has, for quite some time even before the 2000 Sydney Games, been well aware of the risks in connection with using so called nutritional supplements, i.e. the risk that they may be contaminated or, in fact, "spiked" with anabolic steroids without this being declared on the labels of the containers. There have been several cases of positive tests for nandrolone which have been attributed to nutritional supplements and which have been widely publicised in the sports press. This fact was the likely motive for the IOC press releases in October 1999 and February 2000 which give an unequivocal warning about the use of imported and unlicensed nutritional supplements and their possible mislabelling.
47. Under these circumstances it is certainly not a valid excuse for an athlete to contend that he/she – personally – was not aware of these warnings. In fact, athletes are presumed to have knowledge of information which is in the public domain. In this context, the Panel notes that there is CAS case law to the effect that athletes are themselves solely responsible for, inter alia, the medication they take and that even a medical prescription from a doctor is no excuse for the athlete (CAS 92/73, N. v/ FEI, Digest, p. 153, 158). Furthermore an athlete cannot exculpate himself/herself by simply stating that the container of the particular product taken by him/her did not specify that it contained a prohibited substance. It is obvious that the sale of nutritional supplements, many of which are available over the internet and thus sold without an effective governmental control, would go down dramatically if they properly declared that they contain (or could contain) substances prohibited under the rules governing certain sports. Therefore, to allow athletes the excuse that a nutritional supplement was mislabelled would provide an additional incentive for the producers to continue that practice. In summary, therefore, it is no excuse for an athlete found with a prohibited substance in his/her body that he/she checked the label on the product he took and that the label did not specify that the product contained a prohibited substance.
48. The Panel can leave open the question whether a "doped athlete" can be sanctioned on the basis alone that he/she knew (or is presumed to have known) the risk involved in taking nutritional supplements which may contain a prohibited substance not declared on the label. In the case in hand there are additional elements which establish negligence on the Appellant's part:

49. In his statement before this Panel the Appellant admitted that during his training camp before the Olympic Games he had been informed that a weightlifter had tested positive for nandrolone and that nutritional supplements were suspected to be the cause of his positive test. At that point in time at the very latest the Appellant should have ceased taking a nutritional supplement which, it should be noted, was not prescribed to him by a medical doctor but was supplied by his "sponsor", a wholesaler of health products with a direct economic interest in marketing (and testing) these products in the sports world.
50. The rules and regulations of the Respondent (and of the IOC) provide for a two-year sanction in the case of a positive doping test for nandrolone. Even though it is well established that a two-year suspension for a first time doping offence is legally acceptable, there are several CAS decisions according to which a sanction may not be disproportionate and must always reflect the extent of the athlete's guilt (CAS 95/141 C. v/ FINA, Digest, p 215, 222; CAS 92/73 N. v/ FEI, Digest, p. 153, 159; CAS 96/156 F. v/ FINA, p. 48). Therefore, this Panel in its capacity as an appeals body enjoys the same discretion in fixing the extent of the sanction as the Respondent's internal instances (Art. 26.5 of the FILA Doping Regulations, see above). In fact, the Panel would enjoy this discretion even if there were no "exceptional attenuating circumstances".
51. When taking into consideration all the elements of this case, in particular the fact that the Appellant acted negligently but without intent to indulge in doping, the Panel is of the view that, based on the evidence produced, there are mitigating circumstances which warrant a reduction of the maximum penalty allowed under the rules and regulations of the Respondent. As a result, the Panel is of the opinion that it is adequate and appropriate to suspend the Appellant for 15 months. As regards the date upon which the suspension should begin, the Panel takes note of the fact that the sanction imposed by the Respondent started to run on the date the test was carried out (27 September 2000). The Panel sees no reason why it should change this date. Therefore, the Appellant's suspension will last until 26 December 2001.

The Court of Arbitration for Sport rules:

1. The appeal filed by A. on 3 January 2001 is partially upheld.
2. The decision of the FILA Sport Judge of 24 October 2000 shall be modified as follows:
A. is suspended for a period of 15 months from 27 September 2000 to 26 December 2001.
3. (...).

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-68

G. v Fédération Equestre Internationale (FEI), Award, CAS Case No. 1991/A/53, 15 January 1992

G. is a member of the Italian national equestrian team. At the end of September, G. and her mother left their residence, in Lecce, in order to participate with two horses, including the mare F., in a national show jumping event in Grosseto. The horses covered the journey of approximately 700 km by road, in a horse-box.

During the week preceding the national showjumping event, Grosseto hosted the national foal breeders' show. There had been 400 or 500 foals in this competition up to Wednesday 26th September 1990, housed in the stables created for the occasion and for the national showjumping event which was to follow.

G. and her mother arrived in Grosseto late on Thursday evening, and went in search of loose-boxes for their two horses. It should be noted that, while these boxes were numbered, the organization, described as lacking by the appellant and her mother, had not arranged for any allocation of boxes by name, leaving each competitor to sort things out for themselves. Normally, it was the job of the organizer to disinfect and clean out the boxes. However, when G. arrived, the few boxes that were page "79" free had not been cleaned out nor, more importantly, disinfected. She had to take the boxes which she could find, since the large majority of the foals had not yet left Grosseto.

The litter of the box in which G. put her mare F. was dirty, and still contained remains of fodder and feedstuffs. Not having any means of disinfection with her, she did what she could, that is to say gave the box a brief clean out. She was not able to change all the litter owing to the lack of straw, since this was delivered for the needs of the competitors only once a day, in the morning. When she arrived, there was almost none left. She did not, however, take the precaution of emptying her horse's manger.

During her stay in Grosseto, G. competed with two horses, F. being left alone when she was looking after the other horse. During the day, there was no guard provided for the stables; during the night, there was one guard who went from stable to stable.

The event in Grosseto, which was won by G. with the mare F., ended at around 13.00 hours on Sunday 30th September 1990. There was no veterinary control after the competition. G. and her mother stayed in Grosseto until around 09.00 hours on Monday 1st October 1990.

Upon leaving Grosseto, the two horses were once again placed in a horse-box for the journey to Catane (Sicily) where G. and the mare F. were entered to take part in the CSI cat. A competitions taking place during the weekend of 6/7th October 1990. This involved a distance of some 700 km, covered in around 15 hours. Such a journey is relatively long for a horse and creates a degree of stress, particularly as it involves a thirty-minute crossing of the Straits of Messina by ferry, a means of transport which horses do not enjoy.

When asked about the length of the journey and the risk of stress and anxiety, increased by a ferry crossing, the appellant and her mother provided the following information which the Court of Arbitration for Sport regards as constant:

- The mare F. has been used to making long journeys for several years. Indeed, living in Lecce, G. is often obliged to make journeys of 500 or 600 km, or even longer, in order to take part in events with her mare.
- F. is an eight-year old mare. She is described as being very sensitive, but not highly strung.
- For approximately the last five-and-a-half years, she has been treated by a single veterinarian, Dr. C., who has attested in writing that he has never had to prescribe any tranquilizing therapy, and that no substance has ever been given to the horse by G. without his opinion having been sought beforehand.

page "80"

Organization

- › Court of Arbitration for Sport

Arbitrators/Judges

- › Denis Oswald, President
- › Hans Ulrich Sutter
- › Benigno Alvarez

Case date

- › 15 January 1992

Case number

- › CAS Case No. 1991/A/53

Parties

- › Claimant, G.
- › Respondent, Fédération Equestre Internationale (FEI)

Key words

- › Horse doping (promazine)
- › Right to be heard
- › Negligence by the rider

Source

- › G. v Fédération Equestre Internationale (FEI), Award, CAS Case No. 1991/A/53, 15 January 1992 in Matthieu Reeb (ed), Digest of CAS Awards I 1986-1998, Digest of CAS Awards Series Set, Volume 1 (© Kluwer Law International; Kluwer Law International 1998) pp. 79 - 91

– G. travels with a first aid kit for her horses which was given to her by Dr. C. and which contains a few medicaments including “combelen”, which is in all likelihood a sedative, but which G. declares she has never used on her horse. At best, she knows that, if she uses it, she has to inform the veterinarian at the following event, in accordance with the Veterinary Regulations.

Both G. and her mother rule out the possibility that, during the journey from Grosseto to Catane someone could have had access to the horse-box, which remained locked at all times when they were not present. The horses did not leave the horse-box, even during the stopover made on the evening of the first day, that is to say from 19.00 hours until around 08.00 hours the following morning. The horses were fed by nobody other than G. with fodder brought with them from Lecce at the start of the trip.

G. arrived in Catane two days before the start of the CSI. In this town the stables are permanent, and when she arrived the loose-boxes were clean. G. and her mother were accommodated some 500 metres away from the stables. Only the horse F. took part in the event.

On Sunday 7th October 1990, G. and her mare F. took part in the “Premio no. 7” of the Catane CSI, where they placed thirty-fourth. After the event, the horse was chosen by the drawing of lots for a medication control which was performed immediately after the event. The analysis by the Horseracing Forensic Laboratory Ltd, Newmarket (England), dated 31st October 1990, established the presence of Hydroxypromazine in the urine (sample A) of the mare F. “as a result of the administration of promazine”.

By fax of 1st November 1990, the FEI informed the Italian Equestrian Sports Federation of the positive result of the analysis, stating the following:

Please refer to Veterinary Regulations arts. 1023, 1024 and 1025 and indicate:

- 1. If you accept the result or if you require a confirmatory analysis (art. 1023.3). Please advise prior to 12th November 1990.*
- 2. If you require a witnessing analyst and, if so, whom (art. 1023.4).*

May we have the written explanation of the Person Responsible prior to 23rd November 1990? All written evidence and any request for a personal hearing must be sent to the FEI before this deadline, in accordance with art. 050.6 of the Statutes. The cost of such a hearing, including the travel and accommodation expenses for the Judicial Committee, will  page "81" be to the account of the Person Responsible if the Judicial Committee so decides (art. 177.10 of the General Regulations).

Please note that you are responsible for communicating the content of this letter/fax to the Person Responsible. The Judicial Committee will consider this case based on the written evidence filed unless you request a hearing as indicated above.

Before the deadline of 12th November 1990, the appellant requested a confirmatory analysis and designated Dr. Z. from the Brughiera Veterinary Clinic near Varese as her expert witness.

The confirmatory analysis was performed in England by the same laboratory on 20th November 1990, in the presence of Dr. Z. who knew on the same day that the result of the first analysis was confirmed, in that the urine of F. contained in the B sample showed exactly the same presence of Hydroxypromazine.

The result of the confirmatory analysis was communicated to the FEI by letter on 23rd November 1990, and received on 26th November 1990.

At almost exactly the same time, that is to say by fax of 23rd November 1990, the Italian Equestrian Sports Federation wrote the following to the FEI:

With regard to the defence of G., please could you give us the following information:

- 1) What is the deadline laid down for presenting the account of the defence?*

2) In the event of a positive response from the confirmatory analysis, may the owner of the horse take part in the meeting of the Judicial Committee?

In a fax dated 29th November 1990, the FEI gave, inter alia, the following answer:

In response to your fax of 23rd November 1990, may we inform you of the following:

- 1) In accordance with the legal procedure of the FEI, positive cases are submitted to the Judicial Committee for examination of all the information as soon as this is received (explanation by the Person Responsible, by the national federation, laboratory report, report on the confirmatory analysis, etc.).
- 2) In accordance with article 052.3 of the Statutes, G. has the option to appear, alone or accompanied by witnesses, before the Judicial Committee in order to defend her case. She may also ask to be represented by a lawyer.

 page "82"

The confirmatory analysis of the samples taken from the horse F. took place on 20th November 1990 in the presence of Dr. Z. The result from the HFL laboratory confirmed the presence of the prohibited substance Hydroxy-Promazine. We should be grateful if you could send us the report by Dr. Z. so that we can submit the file to the Judicial Committee.

The FEI did not include the letter from the laboratory with its fax, nor did it ask the Italian Equestrian Sports Federation to inform G., nor did it inform the latter directly. It considered that the presence of the analyst, a witness at the confirmatory analysis, constituted sufficient communication.

Complying with the request of the FEI, confirmed by telephone on 21st January 1991, the Brughiera veterinary clinic, under the signature of Dr. Z., sent an expert appraisal on 3-Hydroxypromazine on 21st January 1991.

The aforementioned report contained, inter alia, the following information (summarized translation):

- Promazine HC1 is a depressive drug which affects the central nervous system and which is widely used as a tranquilizer for horses.
- Researchers who have studied the influence of promazine on the metabolism of horses have found at least five urinary metabolites, the most important of which is 3-Hydroxypromazine (1, 2, 3, 4). All the research performed has shown that, apart from the metabolites, the urine from horses always contains a small but determining quantity of non-metabolized promazine.
- The elimination of 3-Hydroxypromazine, the most important of the metabolites, takes longer than for the minor metabolites and the non-metabolized promazine. In practice, when the other metabolites can no longer be detected with the usual methods, 3-Hydroxypromazine can still be detected. As a result, if, in a horse's urine, one finds only small residues of the minor metabolites and non-metabolized promazine, it is possible to deduce that the period of time elapsed between ingestion and the analysis is relatively long.
- A comparative analysis has shown, upon analysis, that the laboratory horse which had been injected with 0.3 to 0.4 mg/kg of promazine (the normal therapeutic dose is between 0.4 and 1.1 mg/kg), displayed a concentration of 3-Hydroxypromazine twenty times higher than that found in the urine of F.
- Referring to the works devoted to the dynamics of metabolites, Dr. Z. and the cosignatory of the report reached the conclusion that the concentration of 3-Hydroxypromazine found in the urine of the  page "83" horse F. necessarily implied that the ingestion took place at least 72 to 96 hours before the urine samples were taken.
- Finally, they explain that the duration of activity of promazine (4 to 6 hours after ingestion) was already long past by the time of the competition, and therefore no longer had any tranquilizing effect, with there being only the residual presence of the metabolite 3-Hydroxypromazine, which in itself has no pharmacological effect.

On 7th May 1991, the FEI Judicial Committee, basing its action on the analysis and confirmatory analysis and mentioning the written declaration by G. according to which she had not administered any prohibited substance to her horse F., made the following decision:

1. Disqualification of the horse F. from all CSI, cat. A events in Catane.
2. Suspension of G. from all national and international competitions for three months.
3. Publication of the sanction inter alia in the FEI bulletin after expiry of the appeal deadline.

G. appealed against the decision by the FEI Judicial Committee in a document which was not dated, but which reached the FEI by 24th June at the latest.

Through the intermediary of her counsel, the appellant admitted that Hydroxypromazine, a metabolite of promazine, was a prohibited substance in the sense of art. 1013 of the Veterinary Regulations and that such a metabolite had been found in the urine of the horse F. by two uncontested analyses.

In Law

1. The competence of the Court of Arbitration for Sport to review an appeal against the decisions of the Judicial Committee derives from articles 051.6.2 and 053.1 of the Statutes of the FEI under the new terms thereof in accordance with the modifications decided by the General Assembly of March 1991.

Where the limit of competence with regard to sanctions is concerned, this derives from art. 169 of the FEI General Regulations which refers to art. 168.

2. For the rest, in terms of its form, the appeal was in accordance with the regulations. It therefore fulfilled all the conditions of admissibility.  page "84"
3. The appellant having expressly drawn attention to the violation of the right to be heard by the Judicial Committee, a right provided for under art. 052.5 of the Statutes of the FEI, the Court of Arbitration for Sport must examine this question prejudicially.
4. The competition took place on 7th October 1990, and the "A" sample of urine from the mare F. reached the laboratory in Newmarket (England) on 11th October 1990. The analysis was performed on 31st October 1990, that is to say within the time limit of 21 days stipulated in art. 1023.1 of the Veterinary Regulations. The result of such analysis was notified to the FEI by fax on 1st November 1990, and two deadlines were fixed:
  - a) a deadline of 12th November 1990 by which to request a confirmatory analysis;
  - b) a deadline of 23rd November 1990 by which to provide written explanations, evidence and request a personal hearing by the Judicial Committee.
5. With regard to the first deadline, this derives from art. 1023 of the Veterinary Regulations of the FEI which states, under paragraph 3, that the person responsible may request a confirmatory analysis "within the ten days following the written notification by the FEI of the result of the analysis of the 'A' sample to the national federation concerned".
6. With regard to the second deadline of 23rd November 1990, the Court of Arbitration for Sport notes first of all that no provision of any kind expressly provides for this. The reference to art. 050.6 of the Statutes is, moreover, erroneous, as the section which deals with this matter is actually to be found under art. 052.5, which stipulates the following: "The Commission must take into consideration all the appropriate evidence, provided orally or in writing. The parties must receive all the details of the case, together with copies of written evidence, and be informed of the dates, places and manner in which the inquiry will be conducted, and have the possibility of appearing in person in order to submit oral and/or written evidence, and to call witnesses with a view to examination thereof".

7. The text of the fax of 1st November 1990 from the FEI is unclear, and leads one to wonder whether the two deadlines are of an alternative or cumulative nature. In accordance with the general principle of law whereby a declaration must be interpreted contra stipulatorem, the Court of Arbitration for Sport deems that the indication of a double page "85" deadline was of an alternative nature, in the sense that, from the moment that the appellant had asked for a confirmatory analysis before the deadline of 12th November 1990 – which was the case –, she had respected the requirement of the rules as formulated by the FEI. In the logic of the double analysis system, the simultaneous fixing of two deadlines seems totally inadequate, as it was manifestly inappropriate to demand written explanations and evidence together with a personal hearing before knowing the definitive objective result of the analyses, that is to say the result of the confirmatory analysis as well.
8. Moreover, it is implicit in the fax of 23rd November that the Italian Equestrian Sports Federation interpreted the double deadline in the alternative sense, since it asked the general secretariat of the FEI by what deadline the person responsible could present her defence and how such person could take part in the meeting of the Judicial Committee in the event that the second analysis were to confirm the results of the first.
9. The FEI did not give a clear answer to this double request in its fax of 29th November 1990 and, what is more, did not draw attention to the fact that the deadline of 23rd November 1990 had already passed six days previously.
10. In art. 1024 of the Veterinary Regulations of the FEI, the Court of Arbitration for Sport sees an implicit confirmation of the alternative nature of the deadlines fixed in the fax of 1st November 1990. Indeed, it stipulates in this article that "if the analysis of the 'B' sample cannot legally be performed, the case must be abandoned and no subsequent action may be undertaken". In the light of this perfectly clear provision, it would be pointless, even specious, to require written explanations or evidence before knowing the result of the confirmatory analysis which might prove negative and therefore result in the whole procedure's being abandoned. It would be equally premature to seek a personal hearing in such conditions.
11. In the case in point, upon reception of the positive result of the confirmatory analysis, the FEI should have notified this formally to the Italian Equestrian Sports Federation, fixing a new deadline by which to provide written explanations and evidence and to request a personal hearing by the FEI Judicial Committee. By not fixing a new deadline – on the erroneous assumption that the deadline had not been respected – and by making a decision without further investigation page "86", the FEI violated the general legal principle, expressly provided for by the statutes, of the right to be heard.
12. On the basis of the foregoing, the Court of Arbitration for Sport considers that the decision by the Judicial Committee of 7th May 1991 must be annulled, and a new decision made by the Panel.
13. Taking up the case again, the Court of Arbitration for Sport considers as follows:

The appellant, rightly, did not call into question the two analyses which she does not contest and which revealed the presence of Hydroxypromazine, the metabolite of promazine, in the two urine samples from the horse F. taken after the CSI "Premio no. 7" in Catane on 7th October 1990. Again with just cause, she admitted that Hydroxypromazine is a Prohibited Substance in the sense of art. 1013 of the Veterinary Regulations, since this stipulates that "a prohibited substance includes the metabolites of such substance".
14. In accordance with art. 149.2 of the FEI General Regulations, the presence of the prohibited substance results in a pure strict liability which is expressed in the automatic disqualification of the horse and the rider "from all competitions at that event" which implies loss of all rankings obtained. This consequence is confirmed by art. 177.5.1 of the FEI General Regulations.
15. Still to be examined is the problem of the additional penalty which may or must be imposed on the person responsible in application of art. 177.5.2 or 177.5.3 of the FEI General Regulations.

16. The Court of Arbitration for Sport wishes first of all to recall that, where doping or the taking of prohibited substances is concerned, there is normally and generally in the sporting regulations of Federations an inversion of the burden of proof in the sense that, as soon as the presence of prohibited substances is detected, there is the presumption of a voluntary act. It is then up to the athlete to produce evidence to the contrary.
17. The system provided for by the General Regulations of the FEI is different, since the result of the analyses – it rests with the FEI to produce such evidence – must tend to “be construed as a deliberate attempt to affect the performance of the horse ...” (art. 177.5.2) or “may not be construed as a deliberate attempt to affect the performance of the horse” (art. 177.5.3). In other words, it rests with the FEI to establish page "87" the burden of proof of a presumption of intent or a presumption of negligence, principally by means of the analyses performed.
18. It is not for the Court of Arbitration for Sport to judge the system instituted by the General Regulations, but it does wish to note that it is almost impossible to offer proof of the presumption of intent or the presumption of negligence on the basis of simple objective analyses like those performed on the A and B samples by the Horseracing Forensic Laboratory Ltd, such analyses being satisfied with establishing the presence or absence of a prohibited substance, to the exclusion of any other consideration or any other more exhaustive analysis. Already at this stage, the Court of Arbitration for Sport finds that the FEI has not offered proof of a presumption of intent.
19. Consequently, for this first reason, art. 177.5.2 is inapplicable. On the other hand, the presence of a prohibited substance in the urine of a horse presumes negligence on the part of the person responsible and automatically results in the application of art. 177.5.3, unless the person responsible clears himself from such presumption by proving that he had taken all the necessary precautions.
20. The Court of Arbitration for Sport does not know how the FEI learned that Dr. Z. of the Brughiera Veterinary Clinic had produced a report interpreting the results of the analysis. This question may remain undecided. The Panel notes, however, that the FEI asked for such report to be produced in its fax of 29th November 1990 through the intermediary of the Italian Equestrian Sports Federation. Not having received anything, the FEI secretariat asked Dr. Z. directly for it by telephone on 21st January 1991, before taking a decision. One must therefore infer from the above, and especially from the postponement of the decision until such time as the contents of the report from the Brughiera Veterinary Clinic were known, that the Judicial Committee would regard this report as an important piece of evidence. It is therefore surprising to see that the Judicial Committee, which inter alia waited for this report before taking the decision which is the subject of this appeal on 7th May 1991, makes no mention of it, in particular under paragraph 2.1, not even to distance itself from it.
21. As this report was not contested either by the decision which is the subject of this appeal or by the FEI during the proceedings of the present case, the Court of Arbitration for Sport regards it as a piece of evidence in the same way as the other documents produced. page "88"
22. The report concludes that the ingestion of promazine took place at least 72 to 96 hours before the urine samples were taken, based on the concentration of the metabolite 3-Hydroxypromazine revealed by the analysis. It explains that the duration of activity of promazine is limited to 4 to 6 hours after ingestion, and that the metabolite 3-Hydroxypromazine as found in the samples – which is just a “residue” of promazine – has no pharmacological effect.
23. Admittedly, this report does not explain in what circumstances this substance found its way into the body of the horse F., but its pharmacological inefficacy at the time of the event constitutes an element which should be taken into account in order to determine whether there is an indication of negligence or intent.
24. This report does not in any case prove that G. deliberately and intentionally sought to improve the performance of her horse. It therefore remains to determine whether she could clear herself of the presumption of negligence indicated by the presence of a prohibited substance in the urine of the mare F.

25. The appellant displayed culpable negligence when she took possession of the loose-boxes for her horses on the occasion of the event held in Grosseto a few days before, by not sufficiently cleaning out the litter and by not removing the fodder and feedstuffs left in the manger. Investigation of the case on this point did not enable her to overturn the presumption of negligence and, on the contrary, established the existence of such negligence.
26. For this second reason, art. 177.5.3 must apply, whereas the application of art 177.5.2 must be ruled out, the proof of intent not having been offered.
27. In short, not only has the FEI not produced proof of a deliberate attempt in the sense of art. 177.5.2, but also, thanks to the report from the Brughiera Veterinary Clinic, and thanks to testimony and her personal hearing, G. has provided evidence which tends to prove that there was no deliberate attempt to alter the performance of the mare F. in the sense of this same provision which, as a result, cannot apply. On the other hand, G. has not shown herself to have taken all the precautions which would have enabled her to clear herself of the presumption of negligence which results from the presence, in the urine of her horse, of a Prohibited Substance. In accordance with the system chosen by the FEI, the Court of Arbitration for Sport must therefore apply art. 177.5.3 of the General Regulations. page "89"
28. The Court of Arbitration for Sport notes finally that, in addition, apart from referring to the automatic disqualification, the decision of 7th May 1991 makes no mention of the legal basis of the additional penalty, that is to say whether it is in application of art. 177.5.2 or art. 177.5.3.
29. Consequently, only art. 177.5.3 is applicable, which provides for an obligatory fine of CHF 1,000.– to CHF 15,000.– and a possible suspension of one to three months. Taking into account the personal details of the rider and the unintentional nature of the infraction, but also of the need to fight against doping in general, the Court of Arbitration for Sport, basing its decision inter alia on the guidelines contained in the International Olympic Charter against Doping in Sport, considers that a fine of CHF 1,000.– and a suspension from international equestrian competitions for the period of one month are sufficient penalty for the present case.
30. With regard to publication of the award, the Court of Arbitration for Sport considers that this must be authorized, not only for technical reasons relating to the organization of the FEI, but also in the interest of G. whose case has become known among equestrian circles. To take this double interest into account, the Court of Arbitration for Sport orders the publication of the award by the FEI, but only in a summarized form established by the Court of Arbitration for Sport which indicates expressly the unintentional nature of the infraction in the sense of art. 177.5.3.

The Court of Arbitration for Sport pronounces:

1. The appeal is partially upheld.
2. The decision of 7th May 1991 by the FEI is annulled.
In a new ruling, the Court of Arbitration for Sport pronounces:
  3. The mare F. and the rider G. are disqualified from all the CSI cat. A competitions in Catane on 7th October 1990.
  4. In application of art. 177.5.3 GR, the rider G. is punished:
    - with a suspension from international equestrian competitions for the period of one month;
    - with a fine of 1,000.– Swiss francs to be paid to the FEI.
  5. (...)
  6. (...) page "90"
  7. The award shall be published in the next bulletin of the FEI. The award shall appear in a summarized form to be established by the Court of Arbitration for Sport. page "91" permission of the publisher.

If you would like to know more about this service, visit www.kluwarbitration.com or contact our Sales staff at sales@kluwerlaw.com or call +31 (0)172 64 1562.

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-69

Arbitration CAS 98/200 AEK Athens and SK Slavia Prague / Union of European Football Associations (UEFA), award of 20 August 1999

Panel: Mr. Massimo Coccia (Italy), President; Dr. Christoph Vedder (Germany); Dr. Dirk-Reiner Martens (Germany)

Football

Conflicts of interest related to multi-club ownership within the same competition

Application of EC law to sport

Status of UEFA according to EC law

Right to be heard

Principle of procedural fairness

1. If clubs with the same owner can take part in the same competitions, whether national or international, doubts may arise as to whether the outcome is really undecided in advance. The challenged UEFA Rule is therefore an essential feature for the organization of a professional football competition and is not more extensive than necessary to serve the fundamental goal of preventing conflicts of interest which would be publicly perceived as affecting the authenticity, and then the uncertainty, of results in UEFA competitions.
2. Membership of UEFA is open only to national football associations situated on the continent of Europe who are responsible for the organization and implementation of football-related matters in their particular territory. The UEFA Statutes attribute voting rights only to national federations, and article 75 of the Swiss Civil Code (CC) refers to members which have voting rights within the association whose resolution is challenged. Clubs do not meet these requirements.
3. Under Article 75 CC, members of an association have the right to be heard when resolutions are passed which affect them to a significant extent. However, requiring an international sports federation to provide for hearing to any party potentially affected by its rule-making authority could quite conceivably subject the international federation to a quagmire of administrative red tape which would effectively preclude it from acting at all to promote the game.
4. The doctrine of venire contra factum proprium provides that where the conduct of one party has led to the legitimate expectations on the part of a second party, the first party is estopped from changing its course of action to the detriment of the second party. In casu, UEFA may not change its Cup Regulations without allowing the clubs sufficient time to adapt their operations to the new rules accordingly. However, such procedural defect by itself does not warrant the permanent annulment of the contested UEFA Rule.

- 5. Sport is subject to Community law only insofar as it constitutes an economic activity within the meaning of Article 2 of the EC Treaty. EC law does not prevent the adoption of rules or of a practice excluding foreign players from participation in certain matches for reasons which are not of an economic nature, which relate to the particular nature and context of such matches and are thus of sporting interest only.

The Claimant AEK PAE (hereinafter «AEK») is a Greek football club incorporated under the laws of the Hellenic Republic and having its seat in Athens. AEK currently plays in the Greek first division championship and over the years has often qualified for the European competitions organized by UEFA. At the end of the 1997/98 football season AEK ranked third in the Greek championship, thus becoming eligible to participate in the 1998/99 UEFA club competition called «UEFA Cup». AEK is owned as to 78.4% by ENIC Hellas S.A., a company wholly controlled, through subsidiaries, by the English company ENIC plc.

The Claimant SK Slavia Praha (hereinafter «Slavia») is a Czech football club incorporated under the laws of the Czech Republic and having its seat in Prague. Slavia currently plays in the Czech-Moravian first division championship and along the years has often qualified for the UEFA competitions. At the end of the 1997/98 football season, Slavia ranked second in the Czech-Moravian championship, thus becoming eligible to participate in the 1998/99 UEFA Cup. Slavia is owned as to 53.7% by ENIC Football Management Sarl, a company wholly controlled, through subsidiaries, by ENIC plc.

Both AEK and Slavia are under the control of ENIC plc (hereinafter «ENIC»), a company incorporated under the laws of England and listed on the London Stock Exchange. In the last couple of years ENIC, through subsidiaries, has invested in several European football clubs, acquiring controlling interests in AEK, Slavia, the Italian club Vicenza Calcio SpA, the Swiss club FC Basel, and a minority interest in the Scottish club Glasgow Rangers FC.

The Respondent Union of European Football Associations (hereinafter «UEFA»), association which has its seat in Nyon, Switzerland, is a sports federation which has as its members all the fifty-one national football associations (i.e. federations) of Europe. UEFA is the governing body for European football, dealing with all questions relating to European football and exercising regulatory, supervisory and disciplinary functions over national associations, clubs, officials and players. Pursuant to the UEFA Statutes, member associations must comply with such Statutes and with other regulations and decisions, and must apply them to their own member clubs. Until the 1998/99 European football season UEFA has organized three main club competitions: the Champions' League, the Cup Winners' Cup and the UEFA Cup. UEFA has recently resolved to cancel the Cup Winners' Cup and, as of the 1999/2000 season, has reduced the main club competitions to the Champions' League and the UEFA Cup.

During 1997 ENIC acquired the above-mentioned controlling interests in AEK, Slavia and Vicenza. In the 1997/98 European football season, these three clubs took part in the UEFA Cup Winners'

Cup and all qualified for the quarter final. At this stage, the three ENIC-owned clubs were not drawn to play against each other and only one of them reached the semi-finals (AEK lost to the Russian club Lokomotiv Moscow, Slavia lost to the German club VfB Stuttgart, whereas Vicenza defeated the Dutch club Roda JC). Being confronted with a situation where three out of eight clubs left in the same competition belonged to a single owner, UEFA started to consider the problems at stake.

On 24 February 1998, at ENIC's request, representatives of UEFA and ENIC met in order to discuss the issue of «multi-club ownership», that is the ethical and non-ethical questions raised by the circumstance that two or more clubs controlled by the same owner take part in the same competition. In that meeting ENIC proposed to UEFA a «code of ethics» to be adopted by football clubs, with a view to convincing UEFA not to adopt a rule banning teams with common ownership from participating in the same UEFA competition.

After the meeting, ENIC exchanged correspondence with UEFA and submitted a draft code of ethics for consideration. Thereafter, UEFA referred the issue of multiple ownership to some of its internal bodies, namely the Committee for Non-Amateur Football, the Juridical Committee and the Committee for Club Competitions. These came to the conclusion that there was no guarantee that a code of ethics would be effectively implemented and that a code of ethics was not a viable solution. They therefore recommended to the Executive Committee of UEFA that the rule at issue in this arbitration be adopted.

On 7 May 1998, UEFA sent to its member associations several documents to be communicated to the clubs entitled to compete in the 1998/99 UEFA Cup. In particular, UEFA sent the regulations and the entry forms for the 1998/99 UEFA Cup and the booklet entitled «Safety and security in the stadium – For all matches in the UEFA competitions». The UEFA Cup regulations set forth the conditions of participation without any mention of a limitation related to multi-club ownership. Moreover, the regulations did not make reservation for future amendments, except in the event of «force majeure». At that time, pursuant to the regulations, both AEK and Slavia were entitled to compete in the 1998/99 UEFA Cup because of their results in the 1997/98 national championships.

On 19 May 1998, the UEFA Executive Committee finally addressed the issue of multi-club ownership and adopted the rule at issue in these proceedings (hereinafter the «Contested Rule»). The Contested Rule is entitled «Integrity of the UEFA Club Competitions: Independence of the Clubs» and reads as follows:

«A. General Principle

It is of fundamental importance that the sporting integrity of the UEFA club competitions be protected. To achieve this aim, UEFA reserves the right to intervene and to take appropriate action in any situation in which it transpires that the same individual or legal entity is in a position to influence the management, administration and/or sporting performance of more than one team participating in the same UEFA club competition.

B. Criteria

With regard to admission to the UEFA club competitions, the following criteria are applicable in addition to the respective competition regulations:

1. No club participating in a UEFA club competition may, either directly or indirectly:
  - (a) hold or deal in the securities or shares of any other club, or
  - (b) be a member of any other club, or
  - (c) be involved in any capacity whatsoever in the management, administration and/or sporting performance of any other club, or
  - (d) have any power whatsoever in the management, administration and/or sporting performance of any other club participating in the same UEFA club competition.
2. No person may at the same time, either directly or indirectly, be involved in any capacity whatsoever in the management, administration and/or sporting performance of more than one club participating in the same UEFA club competition.
3. In the case of two or more clubs which are under common control, only one may participate in the same UEFA club competition. In this connection, an individual or legal entity has control of a club where he/she/it:
  - (a) holds a majority of the shareholders' voting rights, or
  - (b) has the right to appoint or remove a majority of the members of the administrative, management or supervisory body, or
  - (c) is a shareholder and alone controls a majority of the shareholders' voting rights pursuant to an agreement entered into with other shareholders of the club in question.
4. The Committee for the UEFA Club Competitions will take a final decision with regard to the admission of clubs to these competitions. It furthermore reserves the right to act vis-à-vis clubs which cease to meet the above criteria in the course of an ongoing competition».

On 20 May 1998, UEFA released a press statement announcing the adoption of the Contested Rule. On 26 May 1998, UEFA communicated the Contested Rule to all its member associations through Circular Letter no. 37, a copy of which was sent to ENIC, informing that the new provision would be effective as of the start of the new season.

Subsequently, pursuant to Paragraph B.4 of the Contested Rule, the UEFA Committee for Club Competitions decided that the following criteria would determine which of two or more commonly owned clubs should be admitted to a UEFA club competition: first, the club with the highest «club coefficient» (based on the club's results of the previous five years) would be admitted; then, if the club coefficients were the same, the club with the highest «national association coefficient» (based on the previous results of all the teams of a national association) would be admitted; lastly, in case of equal national association coefficients, lots would be drawn.

On 25 June 1998, UEFA informed AEK of the criteria adopted by the UEFA Committee for Club Competitions and of the resulting non-admission of AEK to the UEFA Cup, while Slavia was authorized to compete. The Hellenic Football Association was called upon to enter a substitute for AEK, by designating the club which finished the domestic championship immediately below AEK. In the same letter, UEFA granted AEK a last opportunity to take part in the competition, if it were to submit a statement confirming a change of control in compliance with the Contested Rule by 1 July 1998 (this was later extended to 20 July 1998).

On 12 June 1998, the parties executed an arbitration agreement, by which they agreed to submit the present dispute to the Court of Arbitration for Sport («CAS») in accordance with the Code of Sports-related Arbitration (the «Code»).

On 15 June 1998, AEK and Slavia filed with the CAS a request for arbitration together with several exhibits, primarily petitioning that the Contested Rule be declared void or annulled (see infra, para. 32). On the same day, AEK and Slavia also filed a request for interim relief, petitioning that during the proceedings UEFA be restrained from giving effect to the Contested Rule and, in particular, from excluding either Claimant from the 1998/99 UEFA Cup competition.

UEFA filed its reply to the Claimants' request for interim relief on 26 June 1998 and filed its answer to the request for arbitration, with some exhibits, on 22 July 1998.

On 15 July 1998, the President of the Ordinary Division of CAS held a hearing at the CAS offices in Lausanne, where the parties and their counsel answered questions of fact and law raised by the President and counsel presented oral arguments.

On 16 July 1998, the CAS issued a «Procedural Order on Application for Preliminary Relief», granting the following interim relief:

- «1. For the duration of this arbitration or for the duration of the 1998/99 season of the UEFA Cup, whichever is shorter, the Respondent shall not give effect to the decision taken by its Executive Committee on May 19, 1998 regarding the "Integrity of the UEFA Club Competitions: Independence of the Clubs";
2. As a result, the Respondent shall admit AEK Athens to the 1998/99 UEFA Cup Competition, in addition to Slavia Prague;
3. The costs of the present stage of the proceedings shall be settled in the final award or in any other final disposition of this arbitration».

As a result, AEK and Slavia were allowed to participate in the 1998/99 UEFA Cup (where they were eliminated after winning a few rounds of the competition and did not end up playing each other).

According to the grounds of the interim order, released the following day, the CAS based its decision primarily on the circumstance that UEFA violated its duties of good faith and procedural fairness insofar as it enacted the Contested Rule too late, when the Cup Regulations for the 1998/99 season – containing no restriction for multiple ownership – had already been adopted, and shortly before the start of the 1998/99 season, at a time when ENIC and its clubs could legitimately expect that no restriction was going to be adopted for the said season.

In the interim order the CAS left open for the final award the question whether the Contested Rule could be deemed lawful under competition law and civil law, stating that all findings of fact and legal assessments were made on a prima facie basis, without prejudice to the CAS final award to be rendered after additional factual and legal investigation.

On 23 July 1998, the CAS issued a notice that the CAS Arbitration Panel for the present dispute (hereinafter the «Panel») was constituted in the following composition: Mr. Massimo Coccia as President, Dr. Christoph Vedder as arbitrator appointed by the Claimants and Mr. George Abela as arbitrator appointed by the Respondent.

On 4 September 1998, upon request of the Claimants, pursuant to Article R44.3 of the Code the Panel ordered the Respondent to produce the reports and minutes of the meetings of the UEFA Juridical Committee and of the UEFA Committee for Club Competitions related to the present case. UEFA produced such documents, later providing a few more internal documents upon request of the Claimants.

On 14 September 1998, the CAS issued an order of procedure, detailing the procedural guidelines for the conduct of the arbitration. The order of procedure was accepted and countersigned by both sides. Subsequently, in the course of the proceedings, the Panel supplemented the initial order of procedure with several other orders concerning procedural and evidentiary questions.

On 15 October 1998, the Claimants filed their statement of claim, together with eleven bundles of exhibits. UEFA's response, together with forty exhibits, was submitted to the CAS on 27 November 1998.

On 18 November 1998, the Claimants filed with the CAS a petition pursuant to Article R34 of the Code, challenging the appointment of Mr. George Abela as arbitrator, on the grounds that some circumstances gave rise to legitimate doubts over his independence vis-à-vis UEFA, and requesting his removal. On 25 November 1998, Mr. Abela communicated to the CAS that he deemed the Claimants' allegations to be totally unfounded and unjustified; however, because of the very fact that doubts had been expressed regarding his independence and impartiality, for the sake of the CAS he felt that he had to resign from his function as arbitrator in the present case.

On 3 December 1998, the Respondent communicated to the CAS that, in substitution of Mr. Abela, it appointed as arbitrator Dr. Dirk-Reiner Martens. Therefore, the Panel was reconstituted in the new formation comprising Mr. Coccia as President and Messrs. Vedder and Martens as arbitrators. No objection has been raised by either party with respect to the new formation of the Panel.

On 24 December 1998, the Claimants filed with the CAS their reply to UEFA's response. On 1 February 1999, the Respondent filed its rejoinder. Subsequently, on 26 and 28 February 1999, both sides submitted their lists of witnesses and expert witnesses to be summoned to the hearing.

On 12 March 1999, the Panel issued a procedural order detailing directions with respect to the hearing and to the witnesses and experts to be heard.

The hearing was held on 25 and 26 March 1999 at the World Trade Center in Lausanne. The Panel was present, assisted by the ad hoc clerk Mr. Stefano Bastianon, attorney-at-law in Busto Arsizio/IT, and by Mr. Matthieu Reeb, attorney-at-law and counsel to the CAS. The Claimants were represented by Mr. Petros Stathis, General Manager of AEK, and Mr. Vladimir Leska, General Manager of Slavia Prague, assisted by his personal interpreter, and represented and assisted by the following attorneys: Mr. Michael Beloff QC and Mr. Tim Kerr, attorneys-at-law in London/UK (Gray's Inn), Mr. Stephen Kon, Ms. Lesley Farrel and Mr. Tom Usher, attorneys-at-law in London/UK (SJ Berwin), Mr. Jean-Louis Dupont, attorney-at-law in Brussels/BEL, Mr. Marco Niedermann and Mr. Roberto Dallafior, attorneys-at-law in Zurich/CH. The Respondent was represented by Mr. Marcus Studer, Deputy Secretary General of UEFA, and represented and assisted by Mr. Ivan Cherpillod, attorney-at-law in Lausanne/CH, and by Mr. Alasdair Bell, attorney-at-law in Brussels/BEL. With the agreement of all parties two directors of ENIC, Mr. Rasesh Thakkar and (after his testimony had been given) Mr. Daniel Levy, also attended the hearing.

During the two days of hearing the following witnesses and expert witnesses were heard: Mr. Gerald Boon (economist of Deloitte & Touche), Mr. Ivo Trijbits (legal counsel to the Dutch club AFC Ajax NV), Mr. Daniel Levy (managing director of ENIC), Sir John Smith (advisor on security issues to the English Football Association), Lord Kingsland QC (former Member of the European Parliament) and Prof. Paul Weiler (professor of law at Harvard Law School), all called by the Claimants; Mr. Gordon Taylor (chief executive of the Professional Footballers Association) and Prof. Gary Roberts (professor of law at Tulane Law School), called by the Respondent. Each witness and expert witness was invited by the Panel to introduce himself and to tell the truth subject, as to statements related to facts, to the sanctions of perjury in accordance with Article R44.2 of the Code and Articles 307 and 309 of the Swiss Penal Code; each witness and expert witness rendered his testimony and was then examined and cross-examined by the parties and questioned by the Panel.

The parties presented their opening and intermediate statements on 25 March 1999 and their final arguments on 26 March 1999, the Respondent having the floor last in accordance with Article R44.2 of the Code. At the end of the final arguments both sides confirmed their written legal petitions (infra, paras. 1 and 4), with counsel for the Claimants also petitioning that the interim stay of the Contested Rule be extended indefinitely and that the award be communicated to the parties on a Friday after the closing of the London stock exchange and rendered public on the following Monday. The parties did not raise with the Panel any objection in respect of their right to be heard and to be treated equally in the present arbitration proceedings.

On 26 March 1999, after the parties' final arguments, the Panel closed the hearing and reserved its final award.

LAW

Parties' legal petitions and basic positions

1. The Claimants presented in their request for arbitration of 15 June 1998 and confirmed in their statement of claim of 15 October 1998 the following legal petitions:

«That it be declared that the resolution of the Executive Committee of the UEFA of 19 May 1998, as notified to the UEFA member associations on 26 May 1998, regarding the Integrity of the UEFA Club Competitions: Independence of the Clubs is void;

eventualiter:

that the resolution of the Executive Committee of the UEFA of 19 May 1998, as notified to the UEFA member associations on 26 May 1998, regarding the Integrity of the UEFA Club Competitions: Independence of the Clubs be annulled;

subeventualiter:

that the Defendant be ordered not to deny now and in the future the admission of the Clubs to the UEFA Club Competitions on the ground that they are under common control; with all costs and compensations to be charged to the Defendant».

At the hearing the Claimants also petitioned that the stay of the Contested Rule ordered by the CAS on 16 July 1998 be extended indefinitely and that the award be notified to the parties on a Friday afternoon and rendered public on the following Monday. The latter petition was subsequently reiterated in writing, with no objection raised by the Respondent.

2. The Claimants argue that the Contested Rule is unlawful because it violates Swiss civil law, European Community (hereinafter «EC») competition law and Swiss competition law, general principles of law, and EC provisions on freedom of establishment and free movement of capital. The Claimants focus their grievances particularly on Paragraph B.3 of the Contested Rule, providing that «in the case of two or more clubs which are under common control, only one may participate in the same UEFA club competition». In summary, they assert the unlawfulness of the Contested Rule on the following ten grounds:
  - (a) infringement of Swiss civil law (grounds 1, 2, 3 and 4 of the statement of claim): violation of the UEFA Statutes because of the argued creation of different categories of members; breach of the principle of equal treatment because of discrimination between clubs which are under common control and clubs which are not; disregard of the Claimants' right to be heard; unjustified violation of the Claimants' personality;
  - (b) infringement of EC competition law (grounds 5 and 7 of the statement of claim): contravention of Article 85 (now 81) of the EC Treaty, because of an agreement between undertakings which has the object and effect of restricting, distorting and preventing competition and limiting investment within the common market; contravention of Article 86 (now 82) of the EC Treaty, because of an abuse by

- UEFA of its dominant position within the market for the provision of European football and related markets;
- (c) infringement of Swiss competition law (grounds 6 and 8 of the statement of claim): contravention of Article 5 of the Swiss Federal Act on cartels, because of an agreement between undertakings significantly affecting competition; contravention of Article 7 of the Swiss Federal Act on cartels, because of an abuse of UEFA's dominant position;
  - (d) infringement of EC law on freedom of movement (ground 10 of the statement of claim): contravention of Articles 52 (now 43) and 73 B (now 56) of the EC Treaty, because of restrictions on freedom of establishment and on free movement of capitals;
  - (e) infringement of general principles of law (ground 9 of the statement of claim): abuse by UEFA of its regulatory power with the purpose of preserving its position as the dominant organizer of European football competitions.
3. Underlying all such grounds are the Claimants' basic allegations that UEFA's predominant purpose in adopting the Contested Rule has been to preserve its monopolistic control over European football competitions and that a code of ethics would be adequate enough to address the issue of conflict of interests in the event that two commonly owned clubs are to participate in the same UEFA competition.
4. The Respondent submitted both in its answer of 22 July 1998 and in its response of 27 November 1998 the following legal petition:
- «UEFA respectfully requests the Court of Arbitration for Sport to dismiss all the legal petitions submitted by the Claimants, with all costs and compensations to be charged to the Claimants».*
5. The Respondent asserts that each and every legal ground put forward by the Claimants is entirely without merit. In particular, the Respondent asserts that it enacted the Contested Rule with the sole purpose of protecting the integrity of European football competitions and avoiding conflicts of interests. The Respondent argues that a code of ethics would be inadequate to that purpose, whereas the Contested Rule is a balanced and proportionate way of addressing the question, as it deals only with the issue of common control – basing the definition of «control» on EC Directive no. 88/627 (the so-called «Transparency Directive») – rather than with investment in football clubs.

Procedural issues

Jurisdiction of the CAS

6. The CAS has jurisdiction over this dispute on the basis of the arbitration agreement executed by and between the parties on 12 June 1998. Neither side has contested the validity of such arbitration agreement nor raised any objection to the jurisdiction of the CAS over the present dispute.

7. In addition, the Panel notes that the CAS could also be deemed to have jurisdiction under Article 56 of the UEFA Statutes, according to which «CAS shall have exclusive jurisdiction to deal with all civil law disputes (of a pecuniary nature) relating to UEFA matters which arise between UEFA and Member Associations, clubs, players or officials, and between themselves» (emphasis added).

Applicable law

8. Pursuant to Article R45 of the Code, the dispute must be decided «according to the rules of law chosen by the parties or, in the absence of such a choice, according to Swiss law». The parties agreed at the hearing of 15 July 1998 and confirmed in their briefs that Swiss law governs all issues of association law arising in this arbitration, and that the Panel should apply EC competition law and Swiss competition law if the dispute falls within the scope of these laws.
9. The choice of Swiss law does not raise any questions. Even if the parties had not validly agreed on its application, Swiss civil law would be applicable anyway pursuant to Article R45 of the Code and to Article 59 of the UEFA Statutes, according to which UEFA Statutes are governed in all respects by Swiss law. As to Swiss competition law, an arbitration panel sitting in Switzerland is certainly bound to take into account any relevant Swiss mandatory rules in accordance with Article 18 of the Swiss private international law statute (Loi fédérale sur le droit international privé of 18 December 1987, or «LDIP»).
10. With regard to EC competition law, the Panel holds that, even if the parties had not validly agreed on its applicability to this case, it should be taken into account anyway. Indeed, in accordance with Article 19 of the LDIP, an arbitration tribunal sitting in Switzerland must take into consideration also foreign mandatory rules, even of a law different from the one determined through the choice-of-law process, provided that three conditions are met:
  - (a) such rules must belong to that special category of norms which need to be applied irrespective of the law applicable to the merits of the case (so-called lois d'application immédiate);
  - (b) there must be a close connection between the subject matter of the dispute and the territory where the mandatory rules are in force;
  - (c) from the point of view of Swiss legal theory and practice, the mandatory rules must aim to protect legitimate interests and crucial values and their application must allow an appropriate decision.
11. The Panel is of the opinion that all such conditions are met and that, pursuant to Article 19 of LDIP, EC competition law has to be taken into account. Firstly, antitrust provisions are often quoted by scholars and judges as fundamental rules typically pertaining to the said category of mandatory rules. Then, the close connection with the case derives from the fact that EC competition law has direct effect in eighteen European countries – fifteen from the European Union and three from the European Economic Area – in whose jurisdiction one can find most of the strongest football clubs taking part in UEFA competitions and, in particular, one of the Claimants (AEK). Lastly, the Swiss Cartel Law, as is the case with various national competition laws around Europe (well beyond the borders of the said eighteen countries), has been inspired by and modelled on EC competition law; accordingly, the interests and values protected by such EC provisions are shared and supported by the Swiss legal system (as well as by most European legal systems).

12. The Panel notes that the Claimants have argued inter alia that UEFA violated the provisions of the EC Treaty on the right of establishment and on free movement of capital, but the parties have not explicitly agreed on the applicability of such provisions to this case. However, for the same reasons outlined with respect to EC competition law (supra, paras. 10-11), the Panel holds that it must also take into account EC provisions on freedom of establishment and of movement of capital.

Merits

Relevant circumstances concerning European football

13. Prior to discussing the specific legal issues raised by the parties, the Panel wishes to describe and discuss certain circumstances and situations concerning European football which have to be taken into account with reference to all such legal issues. In particular, the Panel considers it useful to briefly describe the current structure and regulation of football in Europe and to address the issue of the so-called «integrity of the game».
  - a) Regulation and organization of football in Europe
14. In European football there are several private bodies performing regulatory and administrative functions, each of which has different institutional roles, constituencies and goals. Leaving aside the international football federation («FIFA»), which is certainly the body exercising the highest regulatory and supervisory authority worldwide, UEFA is the only regulator of football throughout Europe. UEFA performs its regulatory function with respect to both professional and amateur football, including youth football. For the time being, UEFA is also the only entity organizing pan-European competitions both for club teams and national representative teams. With particular regard to UEFA club competitions, each season the participating clubs are the few top-ranked clubs of each national league, which at the end of a season earn the right to play in the UEFA competitions of the subsequent season. As already mentioned, UEFA organizes the Champions' League, the Cup Winners' Cup (cancelled as of the 1999/2000 season) and the UEFA Cup, with the minor competition Intertoto Cup used also as a qualifier for the UEFA Cup. The competition format has traditionally been the knock-out system based on the aggregate result of one home-match and one away-match (played two weeks later), with away goals and penalty kicks as tie-breakers. Clubs (particularly those investing more) tend to dislike this system because a single unlucky match can be enough to terminate the whole international season, and because there are fewer high-level matches to play. Mainly for this reason, UEFA has in recent years organized rounds of competition (particularly in the Champions' League) based on small groups of teams playing each other home and away in round-robin fashion, with the top clubs of each group qualifying for the next round. The trend seems to be towards increasing this competition format, reserving the knock-out system only for a few rounds of the competition.

15. Since UEFA is a confederation of fifty-one national football federations, it has below it many football associations and organizations which set rules for their constituent members, in particular clubs and individuals associated with them, and organize and/or oversee all national, regional and local competitions. The structure of European football is often described as a hierarchical pyramid (see the EC Commission's «consultation document» drafted by the Directorate General X and entitled The European model of sport, Brussels 1999, chapter one).
16. At national level, the primary regulators are the national federations. Each national federation has a wide constituency of regional and local federations, associations, clubs, leagues, and individuals such as players, coaches and referees. National federations are private bodies which pursue the mission – which in some countries is entrusted upon them by national legislation as a form of delegation of governmental powers (as is the case, e.g., in France with Law no. 84-610 of 16 July 1984) – to promote and organize football at all levels and to care for the interests of the whole of the sport and all its members, whether they are involved in the amateur or in the professional game. National federations also organize and manage the national representative teams, selections of the best national players which compete against the other national representative teams in competitions such as the World Cup, the Olympic Games and the European Championship.
17. In the European countries where football is most developed, a very important role is also performed by professional «leagues» (e.g., the «Premier League» in England, the «Liga Nacional de Fútbol Profesional» in Spain or the «Lega Nazionale Professionisti» in Italy). National professional leagues are bodies concerned only with professional football, as their members are only the clubs which participate in the most important national professional championships. They organize and manage yearly, under the jurisdiction of the respective national federation, the highest national professional championship. Such annual championship is traditionally organized in round-robin format, with each club playing against all the other clubs twice, once at home and once away; clubs are awarded points depending upon whether they win (three points), draw (one point) or lose matches (no points), and the club with the highest number of points each season is the champion (usually with no final playoff, differently from other sports). National professional leagues are indeed similar in many respects to trade associations. They exist primarily to protect the interests of their member clubs and to provide them with some services, for instance settling disputes between them and trying to maximize their commercial benefits (e.g., selling collectively some of the television rights) and to minimize their costs (e.g., negotiating with players' associations).

18. Throughout Europe a general trend can be detected towards an increasing independence and autonomy of leagues vis-à-vis the national federations; accordingly, tense confrontation between leagues and federations is nowadays not rare. However, thus far leagues are still associated within, and supervised by, the respective national federations – in several countries, this is even mandated by the law – with degrees of autonomy varying from country to country. Due to this system, national football leagues around Europe do not enjoy the absolute independence and autonomy which United States sports leagues enjoy. In addition to other major differences, European professional leagues are not «closed» leagues, and their membership varies slightly each season because at the end of the season some of the bottom-ranked clubs are relegated to the inferior national division and the highest ranked clubs from such division are promoted to the higher national division. This system of relegation and promotion applies more or less in the same way to all the other national and regional divisions and championships below the high-level ones. Consequently, it can happen in European football – as indeed it has done more than just a few times – that amateur or semi-amateur clubs, even from small towns, over the years earn their way up to professional championships and eventually transform into successful professional clubs. This system of promotion and relegation is generally regarded as «one of the key features of the European model of sport» (EC Commission, DG X, The European model of sport, Brussels 1999, para. 1.1.2).

19. At pan-European level, no transnational football leagues exist yet. Currently, there is only an association of the main national leagues in Europe, which does not organize any competitions and is basically only a forum for discussion and an instrument of coordination. Recently, a private commercial group («Media Partners») has attempted to create ex novo a European football league outside of the UEFA realm and has even notified the EC Commission of a number of draft agreements between Media Partners and eighteen founder clubs – comprising some of the most famous European clubs – concerning the establishment and the administration of two main pan-European football competitions, the «Super League» and the «Pro Cup», involving a total of 132 clubs from all territories covered by UEFA-affiliated national associations (see Official Journal EC, 13 March 1999, C 70/5). For the time being this attempt seems to have been aborted, inter alia probably because UEFA has modified the organization of its competitions in a way which is certainly pleasing to most important European clubs.

20. As to European football clubs, they are not all shaped in the same legal manner around Europe. Most professional clubs are incorporated as stock companies – and sometimes their shares are even listed on some stock exchanges (e.g. Manchester United and several other clubs in England, S.S. Lazio in Italy) –, but there are countries where some or all the clubs are still unincorporated associations with sometimes thousands of members who elect the association's board (e.g. F.C. Barcelona and Real Madrid C.F. in Spain or the German clubs).

21. The above outlined traditional structure of European football might change in the future. In particular, especially after the cited attempt of Media Partners, it might be envisaged that sooner or later there will be in some countries or at a pan-European level some closed (or semi-closed) leagues independent from national federations and from UEFA and modelled on United States professional leagues. However, for the time being, the above outlined structure still prevails and it is very difficult to compare it to the sports structure in the United States. Not only are there in Europe no closed professional leagues such as the NBA or the NFL, but there are no collegiate competitions such as the NCAA either. As a result, the Panel maintains that although any analysis of United States sports law is very instructive – in this respect the Panel appreciates the parties’ efforts in presenting the views and testimony of renowned experts on this subject – it has limited precedential value for the present dispute and its significance must be weighed very carefully. For example, the Panel considers that to characterize UEFA as a «league» comparable to United States professional leagues, as has been done in some testimony, is factually and legally misplaced and, therefore, potentially misleading for an examination of the present dispute.

b) The «integrity of the game» question

22. Much of the written and oral debate in this case has centred around the question of the «integrity of the game». Both Claimants and Respondent have shown that they are seriously concerned with this question. On the one hand, the Respondent has repeated over and over that it has a specific duty to protect the integrity of the game and that this has been the only motive behind the Contested Rule. On the other hand, the Claimants have expressly stated that they and ENIC accept and espouse the need to preserve sporting integrity, and that they also accept that UEFA has a current responsibility to safeguard the integrity of football in its role as organizer and regulator of European football competition.
23. Several witnesses have stated that the highest standards are needed for the integrity of the game (Mr. Taylor), that the integrity of sports is crucial to the sports consumer (Professor Weiler), and that «football can only continue to be successful if it is run according to the highest standards of conduct and integrity, both on and off the field» (Sir John Smith).
24. As concern for the integrity of the game is indeed common ground between the parties, the question is then how «integrity» needs to be defined and characterized in the context of sports in general and football in particular. Part of the debate between the parties has focused on integrity in its typical meaning of honesty and uprightness, and the Claimants have argued, supported by some witnesses (in particular Sir John Smith) for the necessity of a «fit and proper» test in order to vet owners, directors and executives of football clubs before allowing them to hold such positions. The debate has also evidenced the connection between the notion of integrity in football and the need for authenticity and uncertainty of results from both a sporting and an economic angle. Some witnesses have stated that uncertainty of results is the most important objective of football regulators (Mr. Taylor) and the critical element for the business value of football (Mr. Boon).
25. The Panel notes, quite obviously, that honesty and uprightness are fundamental moral qualities that are required in every field of life and of business, and football is no exception. More specifically, however, the Panel is of the opinion that the notion of integrity as applied to football requires something more than mere honesty and uprightness, both from a sporting and from a business point of view. The Panel considers that integrity, in football, is crucially related to the authenticity of results, and has a critical core which is that, in the public's perception, both single matches and entire championships must be a true test of the best possible athletic, technical, coaching and management skills of the opposing sides. Due to the high social significance of football in Europe, it is not enough that competing athletes, coaches or managers are in fact honest; the public must perceive that they try their best to win and, in particular, that clubs make management or coaching decisions based on the single objective of their club winning against any other club. This particular requirement is inherent in the nature of sports and, with specific regard to football, is enhanced by the notorious circumstance that European football clubs represent considerably more in emotional terms to fans – the ultimate consumers – than any other form of leisure or of business.

26. The Panel finds inter alia confirmation and support for the view that the crucial element of integrity in football is the public's perception of the authenticity of results in two documents exhibited by the Claimants, viz. the well researched and very insightful reports presented by Sir John Smith to the English Football Association on «Betting on professional football within the professional game» (1997) and on «Football, its values, finances and reputation» (1998). The Smith reports are particularly valuable evidence because they were not prepared specifically for this case. Both reports make quite clear that the most important requirement for football is not honesty in itself or authenticity of results in itself, but rather the public's perception of such honesty and such authenticity.

27. Here are a few excerpts from the Smith reports (with emphasis added):

«public perception dictates that players and others involved in the game should not benefit from their “insider” position»;

«the public has a right to expect that a participant in football will play for his team to win, or make management decisions based on the team winning, as their sole objective. Anything whatsoever that detracts from that prime purpose has to be positively discouraged»;

«even if a result of such a bet is not that a player or official actually intends not to try to win the game, the public's perception of the integrity of the game would be prejudiced in such a situation»;

«the interest of fans in the game would quite rightly not continue at present levels if they had reason to believe that the outcome of any matches was or may be controlled by factors other than personal efforts of those participating in the game, aimed at their team winning»;

«football must preserve its great strength in business terms: the enormous hold which individual clubs have over the loyalty of their supporters. This makes the game attractive to advertisers, sponsors, television and so on. Maintaining that loyalty is not being sentimental; being responsive to spectator concerns is simply good business. That means, amongst other things, being able to reassure supporters that the game is straight».

28. Having clarified what is meant by integrity of the game, the question is then whether multiple ownership of clubs in the context of the same competition has anything to do with such integrity and, therefore, represents a legitimate concern for a sports regulator and organizer. In other words, can multiple ownership within the same football competition be publicly perceived as affecting the authenticity of sporting results? Can the public perceive a conflict of interest which might contaminate the competitive process when two commonly owned clubs play in the same sporting event?

29. The Claimants have addressed this question mostly from the angle of match-fixing, arguing that it is highly unlikely that a match could be fixed without being detected sooner or later and that, insofar as match-fixing is possible at all, it is also feasible – as has happened on some occasions in the past – with respect to matches between unrelated clubs. In particular, the Claimants have argued that match-fixing necessarily involves complicity by a significant number of people whom, if the truth were discovered, would be ruined and each of whom would, after the event, have a hold over the accomplices. The Claimants have also argued that it is in the interest of a common owner, especially if the common owner is a corporation listed on the stock exchange, that each club does as well as possible on both the economic and sporting level, and that the existing criminal and sporting penalties are sufficient to deal with the risk of match-fixing as well as the perceived risk thereof. The Claimants have supported such arguments with several written statements by players, referees and managers, all essentially asserting in a similar vein that it is almost impossible to fix a football match, that multi-club ownership does not entail any greater threat to sporting integrity than single ownership and that a pledge to respect a «code of ethics» would suffice. Mr. Boon has also testified that multi-club owners would place their entire business at risk if they sought to fix matches and, therefore, this cannot be part of their financial strategy or activity. The Respondent has, in turn, presented some written statements supporting its argument that common ownership is a threat to the integrity of competition and that self-control by multi-club owners through a code of ethics would not be an adequate response to such threat.
30. The Panel is not persuaded that the main problem lies in direct match-fixing (meaning by this the instructions and bribes given to some players so that they lose a match). Indeed, the Panel finds some merit in the Claimants' arguments that direct match-fixing in football is quite difficult (albeit far from impossible, as notorious past cases in France, Italy or other countries demonstrate), that an attempt at direct match-fixing has a fair chance of being detected sooner or later, that any such discovery would eventually harm the multi-club controlling company and that in principle the honesty rate of multi-club owners, directors and executives cannot be any worse than that of single club owners, directors and executives.
31. However, even assuming that no multi-club owner, director or executive will ever try to directly fix the result of a match between their clubs or will ever break the law, the Panel is of the opinion that the question of integrity, as defined, must still be examined, also in the broader context of a whole football season and of a whole football competition. In short, the Panel finds that the main problem lies in the aggregate of three issues that need further analysis: the allocation of resources by the common owner among its clubs, the administration of the commonly owned clubs in view of a match between them, and the interest of third clubs.

32. The analysis of such issues relies on two assumptions. The first assumption, as already mentioned, is that multi-club owners, directors or executives do not try to directly fix a match and always act in compliance with any laws and with sporting regulations. The second underlying assumption is that the multi-club controlling company's executives are in constant contact with the controlled clubs' own executives and structures, as is normal within a group of companies; in fact, according to EC case law and practice all the companies within a group – parent companies, holding companies, subsidiaries, etc. – are considered as a single economic entity (see e.g. the EC Commission Notice «on the concept of undertakings concerned», in Official Journal EC, 2 March 1998, C 66/14, para. 19). The Panel has indeed been impressed by ENIC's description of its bona fide efforts at isolating the management of each of its controlled clubs from the controlling company's and from other clubs' structures. However, the analysis is not to be made with reference to ENIC but with reference to a hypothetical individual, company or group owning two or more football clubs and whose organization might be less careful than ENIC about isolating each controlled club's structure. After all, even ENIC's isolation policy does not seem so strict, as Mr. Boon reports that:

«during the time for completion of this report, I have also noted that employees from ENIC's head office in London have travelled to Greece, Italy, the Czech Republic and Switzerland to impart their industry and cross-club experience to individual clubs controlled by ENIC».

This has been confirmed by Mr. Patrick Comminos, General Manager of AEK, who has stated in his written testimony:

«As general Manager, my contact with the owners of the club is on a daily basis, especially with whichever member of ENIC is in Athens at the time».

Accordingly, the Panel is of the opinion that also the second underlying assumption is appropriate.

33. The first issue is the allocation of resources by the common owner among its clubs. Given that in UEFA competitions there is only one sporting winner and there are only a few business winners (the clubs which advance to the last rounds of the competition), and given that a huge amount of money is required in order to keep a football club at the top European level, it would appear to be a waste of resources for a common owner to invest in exactly the same way in two or more clubs participating in the same competition. This is particularly true if the commonly owned clubs are located in different countries (as is generally the case, since at national level there are often rules hindering multiple ownership). After the Bosman ruling (EC Court of Justice, Judgement of 15 December 1995, case C-415/93, in E.C.R. 1995, I-4921), competition for hiring the top European players is wholly transnational, whereas most of a club's revenues – television rights, game and season tickets, merchandising, advertising and sponsorship – still depend on the national and local markets because of consumer preferences and natural barriers. Therefore, although the costs of creating a team which will potentially be successful in a UEFA competition tend nowadays to be comparable all over Europe – players’ remuneration being by far the single most important cost for professional clubs – a club’s revenues and rates of return on investments are quite different even with comparable successful sporting results. Revenues and rates of return for football clubs are much higher in a few countries, such as England, France, Germany, Italy and Spain. This explains why the best, and most costly, players always end up in those few countries and why clubs from those countries currently dominate UEFA competitions.

34. The data contained in the economic report presented by Mr. Boon provide ample support for such propositions. As to transnational competition for players and as to their remuneration, Mr. Boon’s research shows that: «internationally renowned clubs in Europe are willing to compete for the services of leading football players to maintain their successful international position. They are also typically the clubs with the financial resources to do so. ... it costs a significant amount to buy a leading player out of his existing club contract and, typically, to offer the player a premium on his remuneration to entice him to move elsewhere. ... the rate of increase in players’ wages has been nothing short of spectacular in the last five years. In Italy, from 1995/96 to 1996/97 the increase was 24.1% and 35% in the English Premier League».

Mr. Boon’s report shows also that «there is an active cross-border European transfer market in which clubs compete for the top players. ... 31% of transfers between major European associations in 1996/97 were cross border».

With regard to the enormous disparity of revenues between different countries, Mr. Boon reports that «in 1996/97 the second largest English club (Newcastle) had a turnover of ... $69.9 million and Juventus’ turnover in Serie A was $74.1 million; whereas SK Slavia Prague (the number 2 Czech club) had an income of ... $2.2 million and AEK (one of the top 3 Greek clubs) an income of ... $4.9 million» (figures in national currencies have been omitted).

With regard to sporting results deriving from this situation, Mr. Boon confirms the well-known fact that «there is some polarisation of market power developing within the European market. That polarisation is manifest in that clubs from the larger (and relatively more prosperous) countries with bigger “budgets” for transfers and players’ wages have increasingly come to dominate European competition».

35. Given the above situation, assuming the viewpoint of the shareholders of a corporation controlling two clubs of different nationality participating in the same UEFA competition, it would certainly be a more efficient and more productive allocation of the available resources (and thus an economically sounder conduct by directors and executives) to allocate them, and thus to allocate the best players, in such a way as to have a «first team», capable of competing at top European level and situated in the richer market, and a «second team» located in the less developed market and which would be useful for, inter alia, allowing younger players to gain experience and to be tested with a view to a possible transfer to the first team. The testimony of Mr. Trijbits has given some empirical evidence of this kind of attitude by top rated clubs which acquire interests in clubs of lower rank.

36. The Panel is of the opinion that such differentiated allocation of resources among the commonly owned clubs is in itself perfectly legitimate from an economic point of view, and given its economic soundness it might even be regarded as a duty of the directors vis-à-vis the shareholders of the controlling corporation. However, the fans/consumers of the «second club» – which, in order to be eligible for UEFA competitions, is necessarily one of the top clubs of its country, supported in its international matches by most of the football fans of that country – would inevitably perceive that management decisions are not based on the only objective of their club winning against anybody else.
37. Furthermore, even if the different clubs are located in equally profitable (or unprofitable) markets and there is no diverse treatment as a first team and a second team, the common parent company might nevertheless decide, as is usual in a group of companies, to divert resources from one controlled club to another in order to follow wholly legitimate business strategies, for example if the sale of one of the clubs is contemplated. Some examples of such diversion of resources have been provided by Mr. Taylor, who stated in his written testimony:

«When we had common ownership in this country of Oxford United and Derby County by Robert Maxwell there was a transfer of Oxford United's leading players to Derby County at a sum that was less the normal market value and this was very much against the wishes of the then manager of Oxford, Mark Lawrenson. We also had problems regarding Peter Johnson, owner of Tranmere Rovers, moving to Everton and consequent problems with the transfer of monies and questions about the transfer of the goalkeeper from Tranmere to Everton. Similar problems occurred with common ownership by Anton Johnson of Rotherham United and Southern United and there were allegations of asset stripping».

In any event, the Panel is of the opinion that in situations of common ownership, even if a diversion of resources does not really happen, the fans of either club would always be inclined to doubt whether any transfer of players or other management move is decided only in the interest of the club they support rather than in the interest of the other club controlled by the same owner.

38. The second issue is the administration of commonly owned clubs before a match between them. It has already been described how shareholders, and thus executives, of the common parent company might have a legitimate economic interest in seeing a given controlled club prevail over another because of the better financial rewards which can be reaped from the success of the first one. In line with the initial assumption, the Panel considers that multi-club owners or executives might favour one club over another without any need to violate the law or to resort to risky attempts of direct match-fixing. In this respect, if a coach (or maybe a club physician) is encouraged or forced to ensure that the best team available is not fielded, it is unclear whether this could meet the definition of match-fixing. However, since there are sporting rules prescribing that clubs always field the best team available – albeit such rules are usually deemed impossible to apply and enforce – and risks (due to the involvement of coaches or physicians) perhaps close to those of direct match-fixing, the Panel does not wish to take into account this hypothetical circumstance in the present analysis.

39. Executives might have various ways of affecting or conditioning the performance of their teams in a given match, or set of matches, without even getting close to violating laws or sporting regulations and without even speaking to players or coaches. A first way might be connected with performance-related bonuses, which are wholly legitimate under any law. As has been evidenced at the hearing, bonuses linked to results in single matches or in entire championships are always a fair portion of players' (and coaches') remuneration, and ENIC clubs are no exception to this practice (Mr. Levy's testimony). In Mr. Boon's written report it is stated that one of the relevant costs associated with a club playing in Europe is «player bonuses for playing and winning UEFA matches». Mr. Boon also testified that all club owners and executives would, understandably, like a larger percentage of the total player remuneration to relate to performance than the percentage which usually applies (10% to 20%). The Panel observes that the widespread practice of bonuses demonstrates that professional players – no differently from other professionals (one can think of contingent fees) – are quite sensitive to incentives. Accordingly, it would be easily possible and perfectly legal for multi-club executives, by adjusting bonuses, to highly motivate the players of one team with suitable incentives and not at all (or much less) the players of the other team.
40. A second way might be connected with players' transfers. Up to a certain point in the football season (nowadays, very late in the season) it is always possible to obtain new players or to let players leave. It is quite easy to induce players to move from a club to another through a wage hike or the opportunity to play in a winning team. Therefore, at any moment before a match between the commonly owned clubs, team rosters could easily change because of management and business needs rather than coaching decisions. One can find in the sporting press plenty of examples of players given away or hired by club owners and executives without the prior consent, and sometimes even without the prior knowledge, of the coaching staff.
41. A third relevant way of influencing the outcome of a match between commonly owned clubs might be connected with «insider information». One team could have, through common executives, access to special knowledge or information about the other team which could give the first team an unfair advantage. There is a relevant difference between widely available information (such as tapes of the other team's official matches or any news which has appeared in the press) and confidential information obtained from a person within the opponent club's structure (e.g. with regard to unpublicized injuries, training sessions, planned line-up, match tactics and any other peculiar situation concerning the other team).
42. Another, more trivial, way of conditioning team performances could even be connected with the day-to-day administration of a team in view of a match, particularly of an away match. There are plenty of choices usually made by club executives – e.g. with regard to travel, lodging, training, medical care and the like – which may condition either positively or negatively the attitude and performance of professional football players.
43. The third issue concerns the interest of third clubs. Whenever competitions have qualification rounds based on groups of teams playing each other home and away in round-robin format, the interest of unrelated third clubs ending up in a qualification group together with two commonly owned clubs is quite evident. Football history provides unfortunately various instances of matches – even in the World Cup under the eyes of hundreds of millions of television viewers – where both teams needed a draw to the detriment of a third team and in fact obtained such a draw without much effort and without anybody explicitly admitting any agreement afterwards (in fact, probably true agreements were never made, common interest being enough for an unspoken understanding, an «entente cordiale»). It is true, this can happen with single owned clubs as well as with commonly owned clubs, but the multi-club owner or executive has additional ways of facilitating an (already easy) unspoken understanding between the teams, for example setting bonuses for drawing higher than, or even equal to, bonuses for winning the match. A third club's interest might also be affected when, before playing the last match or matches of a round-robin group, one of the two commonly owned clubs has already virtually qualified or been eliminated and the other is still struggling; in this case the multi-club owner or executive might be tempted to induce (by the described lawful means) the first club to favour the other club in the last match or matches.

44. As mentioned (supra, para. 14), due also to the preferences of the most influential clubs, the current trend in the organization of UEFA competitions (particularly the Champions' League) is more and more towards qualification rounds in round-robin format and, conversely, away from competition rounds played in knock-out format. Such an organizational trend renders this issue particularly delicate, because it increases the need to protect third competitors. Needless to say, even if in fact the outcome of a game between two commonly owned clubs is absolutely genuine, a disadvantaged third club and its fans will inevitably tend to perceive the outcome as unfair.
45. The analysis of the three above issues shows that, even assuming that multi-club owners, directors or executives always act in compliance with the law and do not try to directly fix any match, there are situations when the economic interests of the multi-club owner or parent company are at odds with sporting needs in terms of public perception of the authenticity of results. It may be desirable that multi-club directors and executives safeguard sporting values and act counter to the parent company's wishes and economic interests. However, what about the legitimate economic interests of the shareholders? What about the investors in the stock exchange? Would the shareholders and investors be prepared to accept from a director or an executive the «sporting uncertainty» justification for not having done his/her best, without violating any laws, to promote their economic interests? The Panel is of the opinion that in such a situation there is an inescapable pressure for legitimate (or sometimes «grey-area») behaviour which is in the interest of the controlling company and in the interest of some of the controlled clubs, but not in the interest of all the controlled clubs and their fans, or not in the interest of third clubs or football fans in general. As a result, the Panel holds that a problem of conflict of interest does exist in multi-club ownership situations.
46. Several sporting bodies and some State legislators have indeed issued rules in order to deal with this question. For example, among European sports bodies there are rules dealing with multi-club ownership in the English Premier League, the English Football League, the Scottish Football Association, and the Spanish football and basketball professional leagues.

In Spain a limit to multi-club ownership in the same competition is prescribed by law: Article 23 of the 1990 Sports Act («Ley 10/1990, de 15 de octubre, del Deporte» as subsequently amended) currently forbids any kind of cross-ownership between Spanish professional clubs and limits the possible direct or indirect shareholding or voting rights in more than one club participating in the same competition to 5%. In Spain, the issue appears to be of particular public awareness because of the case of a well-known entrepreneur who has been suspected and found to hold indirectly, through various companies or figure-heads, shares in various professional football clubs, some of them participating in the same league division. In particular, the Spanish press raised some serious suspicions with regard to the outcome of certain matches between clubs allegedly under common control. Rules prohibiting investment in more than one professional club can also be found in renowned United States sports leagues, such as the National Basketball Association («NBA»), the National Football League («NFL»), the National Hockey League («NHL»), and in baseball the American League and the National League (forming together the Major League Baseball or «MLB») and the minor leagues associated with the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues («NAPBL»). This attitude by the most important American sports leagues seems to be shared by the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit, which has stated that «no single owner could engage in professional football for profit without at least one other competing team. Separate owners for each team are desirable in order to convince the public of the honesty of the competition» (Judgement of 27 January 1982, NASL v. NFL, 670 F.2d 1249, at 1251, emphasis added).

47. The Panel notes that there is evidence enough showing that a certain number of sports regulators, and some national legislators or judges, perceive that multi-club ownership within the same sporting competition implies a conflict of interest. Even Mr. Karel Van Miert, EC Commissioner for competition policy, has stated before the European Parliament, in reply to written and oral questions posed by some Parliament Members, that «clearly, if clubs with the same owner can take part in the same competitions, whether national or international, doubts may arise as to whether the outcome is really undecided in advance» (answers given by Mr. Van Miert on behalf of the Commission to parliamentary questions nos. E-3980/97, 0538/98, P-2361/98, emphasis added).

In his testimony, Professor Weiler characterized this conflict of interest issue as an «illusion» and counsel for the Claimants picked up and utilized such locution in the course of the final oral argument. The Panel is of the opinion that, even assuming (but not conceding) that there is no true conflict of interest, it must be acknowledged that «clearly ... doubts may arise» (as put by Mr. Van Miert). The mere fact that some knowledgeable authorities like sports regulators, national legislators or judges, and European commissioners are under such «illusion» proves that the general public – the consumers – might also easily fall under an analogous «illusion». After all, even Professor Weiler himself, a couple of years before studying in depth the issue of multi-club ownership in order to be an expert witness before this Panel, wrote that «from the point of view of the League as a whole, there are also significant potential advantages from assigning control and responsibility for individual teams to an identifiable owner. On the playing field or court, this reinforces the impression among fans that their favored team is fully committed to winning all its games. ... With respect to business decisions made off the field, separate ownership and control of individual teams may be more likely to enhance the team's appeal and extract the revenues available in its local market» (WEILER, Establishment of a European League, in FIBA International Legal Symposium (June 1997), Bilbao 1999, 77, at 87-88).

Therefore, the perception of an inherent conflict of interest in multi-club ownership within the same championship or competition seems wholly reasonable.

48. As a result, the Panel finds that, when commonly controlled clubs participate in the same competition, the «public's perception will be that there is a conflict of interest potentially affecting the authenticity of results». This reasonable public perception, in the light of the above characterization of the integrity question within football (see supra, paras. 25-27), is enough to justify some concern, also in view of the fact that many football results are subject to betting and are inserted into football pools all over Europe. This finding in itself, obviously, does not render the Contested Rule admissible under the different principles and rules of law which still have to be analyzed. At this stage of its findings, the Panel merely concludes that ownership of multiple clubs competing in the same competition represents a justified concern for a sports regulator and organizer.

Swiss civil law

49. The Claimants argue that the Contested Rule is unlawful under Swiss civil law because of the procedure by which it was adopted and for reasons of substance. With respect to procedural grounds, the Claimants assert that in adopting and enforcing the Contested Rule the Respondent (1) violated the UEFA Statutes by creating different categories of members, and (2) failed to observe fair procedures, disregarding in particular the clubs' right to a legal hearing. As to substantive grounds, the Claimants assert that the Respondent (3) infringed the principle of equal treatment by discriminating between clubs which are under common control and clubs which are not, and (4) violated without justification the personality of the clubs. The Respondent rejects all such claims.
- a) Compliance with UEFA Statutes
50. Article 75 CC provides that a resolution taken by an organ of an association which contravenes the law or the association statutes can be judicially challenged by any member of the association who has not approved it.
51. The Claimants argue that they should be considered as «indirect members» of UEFA because they are members of the respective national associations (i.e. federations) which, in turn, are members of UEFA. Therefore, they claim that UEFA violated its own Statutes insofar as the Executive Committee created different categories of clubs – clubs under common control vis-à-vis clubs which are not – and thus different categories of indirect members, without the power to do so (as the creation of different categories of members would require an amendment to the Statutes, which can be done only by the UEFA Congress). In response, UEFA points out that the national federations rather than the clubs are its members and that, in any event, it did not create different membership categories but it merely amended the conditions of admission to UEFA club competitions in order to eliminate conflict of interest situations.

52. The Panel is not persuaded that clubs could be considered «indirect members» of UEFA. Art. 65.1 CC provides that the general assembly of a Swiss association is competent to decide on the admission of its members. If clubs had a right to be considered (indirect) members of UEFA because they are affiliated to their national federation, they evidently would acquire such status through a decision of such national federation, that is a body which surely is not the competent general assembly – the UEFA Congress – and this would be hardly compatible with Article 65.1 CC. Moreover, Article 5.1 of the UEFA Statutes, entitled «Membership», establishes that «membership of UEFA is open only to national football associations situated in the continent of Europe who are responsible for the organization and implementation of football-related matters in their particular territory»; clearly clubs do not meet these requirements. Clubs are not ignored by the Statutes, as they are mentioned in several provisions (Articles 1, 7, 23, 45, 46, 49, 54, 55 and 56) but without any hint of them being considered indirect members. The UEFA Statutes attribute voting rights only to national federations, and Article 75 CC refers to members which have voting rights within the association whose resolution is challenged. Clubs are affiliated to and may have membership and voting rights within their national federations, where they can elect the federation’s board and president, who represents the national federation and thus all the national clubs within UEFA. Within the national federations there are indeed different categories of clubs – e.g. female and male clubs, amateur and professional clubs – but this depends only on provisions included in the statutes of the national federations.
53. In any event, even assuming that the clubs could be regarded as indirect members of UEFA, the Panel does not see in the Contested Rule any creation of different categories of member clubs but rather the establishment of conditions of participation in UEFA competitions. Among such conditions are also, for example, stadium safety requirements (Articles 3 and 8 of the 1998/99 Regulation of the UEFA Cup and the related booklet; see supra, para. 8). Applying the Claimants’ rationale, this would imply the creation of different categories of clubs, those with an adequate stadium and those without. In other words, any condition of admission to a competition could be interpreted as a creation of categories of clubs. The Panel considers that there is a substantial difference between «club categories» and «conditions of participation». On the one hand, the notion of category implies a club’s formal and steady status, which is prerequisite for any kind of competition (national or international) in which that club takes part, and which is modifiable only through given formal procedures (e.g., the transformation of an amateur club into a professional one, or vice versa). On the other hand, the notion of «conditions of participation» implies more volatile requirements which are checked when, and only when, a club enters a given competition, and which are often specific to that competition (e.g., in order to compete in some national championships, clubs must provide financial guarantees which are different in type and amount from country to country; at the same time, in order to compete in, say, the Greek championship it is absolutely irrelevant that the owner of a participating club controls other clubs abroad).

54. Article 46.1 of the UEFA Statutes provides that the «Executive Committee shall draw up regulations governing the conditions of participation in and the staging of UEFA competitions». As the UEFA Statutes confer to the Executive Committee the power to enact rules concerning conditions of participation in a UEFA competition, the Panel holds that in adopting the Contested Rule the UEFA Executive Committee did not act ultra vires, and thus UEFA did not violate its own Statutes.
- b) Right to a legal hearing and to fair procedures
55. The Claimants argue that, under Article 75 CC, members of an association have the right to be heard when resolutions are passed which affect them to a significant extent. Therefore, the Claimants assert that, being indirect members of UEFA, they were entitled to a legal hearing before the adoption of the Contested Rule, and that UEFA therefore infringed the principle audiatur et altera pars. More generally, the Claimants assert that association members have a right to fair procedures, and that inter alia the Respondent adopted the Contested Rule too shortly before the start of the new season. The Respondent replies by insisting that the clubs are not indirect members of UEFA and by asserting that it acted strictly in accordance with its statutory regulations and that AEK had enough time to adjust to the Contested Rule.
56. The Panel notes that the Claimants base this ground, like the previous one, on the assumption that clubs are «indirect» members of UEFA, because they are affiliated to their respective national federations which in turn are members of UEFA. For the reasons already stated, the Panel is not persuaded by this construction. The Panel finds the argument even less persuasive if such characterization of the clubs as indirect members implies, as the Claimants argue, the necessary consequence that every indirect member should be heard by UEFA before passing a resolution which could affect such indirect member. This would mean that, if a resolution affects amateur clubs, UEFA should consult with tens (perhaps even hundreds) of thousands of clubs. As all players, coaches and referees are also affiliated to their national federations – millions of individuals throughout Europe –, they could also claim to be indirect members and every one of them could request that he/she be heard by UEFA. Even if one was to limit the right to be heard only to clubs potentially interested in UEFA competitions – i.e. all clubs competing in the highest championship of every UEFA member federation – there would still be hundreds of clubs to be consulted. For an international federation, this would amount to a procedural nightmare and would paralyze any possibility of enacting regulations. The Panel maintains that the consequence is so absurd that the reasoning is fallacious.
57. In any event, even assuming that for some purposes clubs could be considered as indirect members of UEFA, the Panel is of the opinion that «indirect» members could not be wholly equated with «direct» members. Therefore, clubs could not claim anyway the right to be heard when general resolutions are adopted by UEFA. It is certainly opportune that UEFA consults with at least some of the clubs, or possibly with some of the national leagues, before adopting rules concerning conditions of admission to its competitions, but in the Panel's view this cannot be construed as a legal obligation under Swiss association law.

58. With regard to the right to be heard, the Panel wishes to stress that the CAS has always protected the principle audiatur et altera pars in connection with any proceedings, measures or disciplinary actions taken by an international federation vis-à-vis a national federation, a club or an athlete (see CAS 91/53 G. v. FEI, award of 15 January 1992, in M. REEB [ed.], Digest of CAS Awards 1986-1998, Berne 1998, 87, paras. 11-12; CAS 94/129 USA Shooting & Q. v. UIT, award of 23 May 1995, ibidem, 203, paras. 58-59; CAS OG 96/005, award of 1 August 1996, ibidem, 400, paras. 7-9). However, there is a very important difference between the adoption by a federation of an ad hoc administrative or disciplinary decision directly and individually addressed to designated associations, teams or athletes and the adoption of a general regulation directed at laying down rules of conduct generally applicable to all current or future situations of the kind described in the regulation. It is the same difference that one can find in every legal system between an administrative measure or a penalty decided by an executive or judicial body concerned with a limited and identified number of designees and a general act of a normative character adopted by the parliament or the government for general application to categories of persons envisaged both in the abstract and as a whole. The Panel remarks that there is an evident analogy between sports-governing bodies and governmental bodies with respect to their role and functions as regulatory, administrative and sanctioning entities, and that similar principles should govern their actions. Therefore, the Panel finds that, unless there are specific rules to the contrary, only in the event of administrative measures or penalties adopted by a sports-governing body with regard to a limited and identified number of designees could there be a right to a legal hearing. For a regulator or legislator, it appears to be advisable and good practice to acquire as much information as possible and to hear the views of potentially affected people before issuing general regulations – one can think of, e.g., parliamentary hearings with experts or interest groups – but it is not a legal requirement. As a United States court has stated, requiring an international sports federation «to provide for hearings to any party potentially affected adversely by its rule-making authority could quite conceivably subject the [international federation] to a quagmire of administrative red tape which would effectively preclude it from acting at all to promote the game» (Gunter Harz Sports v. USTA, 1981, 511 F. Supp. 1103, at 1122).
59. Furthermore, in any event, the Panel observes that ENIC – clearly being the most interested party and evidently representing also the Claimants – was in fact heard by UEFA at a meeting held on 24 February 1998 (supra, para 6). In a letter from Mr. Hersov of ENIC (enclosing the proposed Code of Ethics) sent on the following day to Mr. Studer of UEFA, it is possible to read inter alia:

«...We appreciated your and Marcel's open and frank discussion with us, and the mutual recognition of UEFA and ENIC's interests, objectives and concerns. From UEFA's perspective, the sanctity of the game and the various European competitions are paramount. You are also under some pressure to be seen to be responding responsibly to members concerns, and we appreciate and recognize this pressure. ... We feel that the proposed rule change banning teams with common ownership from competing in the same competition would be extremely damaging to ENIC. Its implementation would be very harmful to ENIC and it would materially impact the clubs which we currently own ...» (emphasis added).

Hence, at the meeting of 24 February 1998 UEFA did raise the issue of a rule such as the Contested Rule being contemplated and the Claimants in fact had a possibility, through their common parent company ENIC, of expressing their opinion to UEFA and of making very clear their dissatisfaction with the envisaged new rule on multi-club ownership and the potential damage deriving therefrom. For all the above reasons, the Panel holds that the Respondent did not infringe the principle audiatur et altera pars and did not violate any right to be heard in adopting the Contested Rule.

60. With regard to the more general requirement of respecting fair procedures, however, the Panel considers that this is a principle which must always be followed by a Swiss association even vis-à-vis non-members of the association if such non-members may be affected by the decision adopted. In this respect, the Panel notes that the President of the Ordinary Division of the CAS based its interim order of 16-17 July 1998 on the circumstance that UEFA violated the principle of procedural fairness. The Panel agrees with the President's view that UEFA adopted the Contested Rule too late, when the Cup Regulations for the 1998/99 season, containing no restriction for multiple ownership, had already been issued. In the CAS interim order it was observed inter alia:

«By adopting the Regulation to be effective at the start of the new season, UEFA added an extra requirement for admission to the UEFA Cup after the conditions for participation had been finally settled and communicated to all members. It did so at a time when AEK already knew that it had met the requirements for selection of its national association. Furthermore, it chose a timing that made it materially impossible for the clubs and their owner to adjust to the new admission requirement. ...

The doctrine of venire contra factum proprium ... provides that, where the conduct of one party has led to the legitimate expectations on the part of a second party, the first party is estopped from changing its course of action to the detriment of the second party ...

By referring to this doctrine, CAS is not implying that UEFA is barred from changing its Cup Regulations for the future (provided, of course, the change is lawful on its merits). However, it may not do so without allowing the clubs sufficient time to adapt their operations to the new rules, here specifically to change their control structure accordingly».

61. The Panel essentially agrees with the foregoing remarks by the President of the Ordinary Division of the CAS and with the ensuing conclusion that UEFA violated its duties of procedural fairness with respect to the 1998/99 season. Indeed, a sports-governing organization such as an international federation must comply with certain basic principles of procedural fairness vis-à-vis the clubs or the athletes, even if clubs and athletes are not members of the international federation (see the Swiss Supreme Court decision in the Grossen case, in ATF 121 III 350; see also infra). The Panel does not find a hurried change in participation requirements shortly before the beginning of the new season, after such requirements have been publicly announced and the clubs entitled to compete have already been designated, admissible. Therefore, the Panel approves and ratifies the CAS Procedural Order of 16 July 1998, which has granted interim relief consisting in the suspension of the application of the Contested Rule «for the duration of this arbitration or for the duration of the 1998/99 season of the UEFA Cup, whichever is shorter».

62. The Panel observes that the above conclusion does not require that the Contested Rule be annulled on procedural grounds, given that the lawfulness of the Contested Rule must be evaluated on its merits with respect to all future football seasons. In the Panel's view, if the Contested Rule would be found to violate any of the substantive rules and principles of Swiss and/or EC law invoked by the Claimants, no amount of procedural fairness could save it; conversely, if the Contested Rule would not be found to infringe such rules and principles, a minor lack of procedural protection could not render it unlawful per se. Therefore, while approving the interim stay of the Contested Rule, the Panel holds that UEFA's procedural unfairness concerning the timing of the new rule's entry into force is of a transitory nature and, as a result, it is not such as to render the Contested Rule unlawful on its merits with respect to all future football seasons. The Claimants' request to annul the Contested Rule on this procedural ground is thus rejected. However, as will be seen infra, the said procedural defect will have some consequences with respect to the temporal effects of this award.
- c) Principle of equal treatment
63. The Claimants remind that Article 75 CC also protects members of a Swiss association against resolutions which infringe the principle of equal treatment of the association's members and, therefore, argue that the Contested Rule violates the corresponding rights of the Claimants. In particular, the Claimants assert that UEFA formed different categories of members and violated the principle of relative equality because it established membership distinctions – clubs commonly controlled vis-à-vis the other clubs – in an arbitrary manner. The Claimants argue that there are no substantial objective grounds which UEFA could invoke to justify the unequal treatment provided by the Contested Rule because the Contested Rule is neither necessary, nor appropriate and, in addition, fails the test of proportionality insofar as it is a disproportionate means of achieving the objective of protecting the integrity of UEFA competitions. In reply, the Respondent argues that the principle of equal treatment does not prevent differentiation between objectively different situations, that the common control of clubs is an objectively relevant factor, and that in any event the Contested Rule is a proportionate response to the need to protect the integrity of the game.
64. The Panel notes that this argument is also based on the assumption that clubs are indirect members of UEFA, as under Article 75 CC only association members can judicially challenge a resolution infringing their right to equal treatment. The Panel has already disavowed such construction of the clubs' status within UEFA and here refers to the views previously stated in this respect (see supra, paras. 52 and 56).

65. The Panel has also already expressed the opinion that, even assuming that the clubs could be regarded as indirect members of UEFA, the Contested Rule did not create different categories of clubs but rather established an additional condition of participation in UEFA competitions (see supra, para. 53). The Panel does not find any discrimination or unequal treatment in establishing conditions of participation which are applicable to all clubs. It seems to the Panel that there is no discrimination in denying admission to a club whose owner is objectively in a conflict of interest situation; likewise, e.g., there is no discrimination in denying admission to a club whose stadium is objectively below the required safety standards. In both cases, if the shareholding structure or the safety conditions are modified, the club is admitted to the UEFA competition. Therefore, the Contested Rule does not target or single out specific clubs as such but simply sets forth objective requirements for all clubs willing to participate in UEFA competitions.

66. As a result, the Panel holds that the Contested Rule does not violate the principle of equal treatment. Since the proportionality test is supposed to be applied only in order to verify whether an unequal treatment is justified, it is not necessary to rule on the proportionality issue in connection with this ground. In any event, the Panel observes that the discussion on proportionality developed under Article 81 (ex 85) of the EC Treaty (infra, paras. 131-136) could be applied in its entirety to this ground as well.

d) Personality of the clubs

67. The Claimants argue that the Contested Rule is not compatible with Article 28 CC, which reads as follows:

«1. Celui qui subit une atteinte illicite à sa personnalité peut agir en justice pour sa protection contre toute personne qui y participe. 2. Une atteinte est illicite, à moins qu'elle ne soit justifiée par le consentement de la victime, par un intérêt prépondérant privé ou public, ou par la loi» («1. A person who is unlawfully injured in his personality may bring proceedings for protection against any party to such injury. 2. Such injury is unlawful unless it is justified by consent of the injured person, by an overriding private or public interest, or by the law»).

The Claimants assert that Article 28 CC applies both to individuals and to corporate legal entities, and that the development of both the sporting and economic personality of commonly owned clubs would be impaired as a consequence of the non-admission to a UEFA competition. The Respondent argues that Article 28 CC has no relevance at all because it is applicable to different types of situations, and that in any event UEFA pursued overriding interests in enacting the Contested Rule.

68. The Panel is not persuaded that Article 28 CC could be applied to the case at stake. The notion of «personality» (or of «personhood») is to be characterized by reference to the fundamental attributes which every person, and in some measure every legal entity such as an association or a corporation, has a right to see protected against external intrusion and interference. It is difficult to find definitions in the abstract as there is an indefinite number of liberties, varying from time to time and from country to country, which can be encompassed within the concept of personality rights. Examples are core rights related to privacy, name and personal identity, physical integrity, image, reputation, marriage, family life, sexual life and the like.

69. Swiss case law has sometimes stretched the notion of personality rights in order to protect a wider number of rights, such as the right to be economically active and even the freedom of performing sporting activities. The Claimants argue that the present dispute can be compared to the Gasser case, concerning the two-year exclusion of an athlete from any kind of competition due to a doping offence. In the Gasser case, the judge considered as a personality right the athlete's freedom of action and freedom of physical movement and, therefore, «the freedom of performing sporting activities and of participating in a competition between athletes of the same level» (Office of Judge III, Berne, Decision of 22 December 1987, in SJZ, 1988, 84 at 87). However, the Panel finds the Gasser case quite different from, and thus of no precedential value for, the present dispute. Indeed, the Contested Rule is a general regulation establishing a condition of participation applicable to all clubs (see supra, paras. 53 and 58) and not, as in the Gasser case, a disciplinary measure individually addressed to a designated athlete. Accordingly, the Contested Rule as such cannot be considered an exclusionary sanction within the meaning of the Gasser ruling. Moreover, the Contested Rule sets forth a condition for access to a single competition rather than an absolute exclusion from all sporting activities. The Panel considers that, while an unfairly adopted long doping ban might harm the whole sporting career of an athlete, and thus his/her personality, a club's non-participation in a UEFA competition would involve some loss of income but, since the club would still take part in other important football competitions such as the national championship and the national cup (which are competitions appreciated by fans and economically rewarding, as will be seen infra at para. 131), its «personality» would not be affected. In any event, even a restriction of a personality right could be justified by an «overriding private or public interest» (Article 28.2 CC), and the Panel is of the opinion that the public's perception of a conflict of interest potentially affecting the authenticity of results (see supra, para. 48) would constitute such an «overriding interest».
70. The Claimants have also made reference to Swiss judgements limiting an association's right to exclude a member, pursuant to Article 72.2 CC, in situations where the exclusion would injure the personality of the member concerned. Swiss courts have applied this doctrine to associations which hold monopolistic positions, such as professional associations or sports federations. However, apart from the illustrated difficulty of considering the Claimants as (indirect) members of UEFA (see supra, paras. 52 and 56), the Panel observes that non-admission to a competition cannot be equated to the loss of membership due to expulsion from an association and, therefore, cannot be considered as an injury to personality. In any event, even if one were to admit that the effects of the Contested Rule could be compared to an actual exclusion from membership, according to Swiss case law this could always be justified if there is «good cause» (Swiss Federal Court, Decision of 14 March 1997, in SCP 123 III, 193). The Panel is of the opinion that the public's perception of a conflict of interest potentially affecting the authenticity of results (see supra, para. 48) would constitute «good cause». In conclusion, the Panel holds that the Contested Rule does not violate Article 28 CC.

European Community competition law

a) Introductory remarks

71. Article 81.1 (ex 85.1) of the EC Treaty prohibits «as incompatible with the common market: all agreements between undertakings, decisions by associations of undertakings and concerted practices which may affect trade between Member States and which have as their object or effect the prevention, restriction or distortion of competition within the common market».

Under Article 81.2 (ex 85.2) «any agreements or decisions prohibited pursuant to this Article shall be automatically void».

Under Article 82 (ex 86) of the EC Treaty «any abuse by one or more undertakings of a dominant position within the common market or in a substantial part of it shall be prohibited as incompatible with the common market in so far as it may affect trade between Member States».

72. According to the EC Commission's «Notice on cooperation between national courts and the Commission in applying Articles 85 and 86 of the EC Treaty» (in Official Journal EC, 13 February 1993, C 39/6), before ascertaining whether there is an infringement of the prohibitions laid down in Article 85.1 (now 81.1) or 86 (now 82), national courts (and thus arbitrators) «should ascertain whether the agreement, decision or concerted practice has already been the subject of a decision, opinion or other official statement issued by an administrative authority and in particular by the Commission. Such statements provide national courts with significant information for reaching a judgement, even if they are not formally bound by them» (ibidem, para. 20).

73. The Panel is not aware of any decision, opinion or other official statement issued by the Commission or other administrative authority with regard to the Contested Rule. However, as already mentioned (supra, para. 47), there have been a few replies by the Commission under Article 197 (ex 140) of the EC Treaty to questions specifically devoted to the Contested Rule put to it by some Members of the European Parliament (questions nos. E-3980/97, 0538/98, P-2361/98). The wording of all such replies is similar or identical. In the answer given on 3 September 1998 (Official Journal EC, 1999, C 50/143), the EC Commissioner responsible for competition policy Mr. Van Miert, answering on behalf of the Commission, has stated as follows:

«The Commission is aware that the Union of European football associations (UEFA) has recently adopted rules that regulate the participation in European competitions of clubs belonging to the same owner. It seems at first sight that these rules have a sporting nature and that they aim to preserve uncertainty of results, an objective which the Court of Justice has recognised as legitimate in its judgement of 15 December 1995 in the Bosman case. Clearly, if clubs with the same owner can take part in the same competitions, whether national or international, doubts may arise as to whether the outcome is really undecided in advance. Nevertheless, it is necessary to determine whether these UEFA rules are limited to what is strictly necessary to attain the objective of ensuring the uncertainty as to results or whether there exist less restrictive means to achieve it. Provided that such rules remain in proportion to the sporting objective pursued, they would not be covered by the competition rules laid down in the EC Treaty. At this stage, the Commission does not possess all the necessary information to assess the compatibility of the rules with Articles 85 and 86 of the EC Treaty. Whether UEFA has or not consulted other bodies is not relevant for this assessment».

74. The Respondent has attributed great weight to this statement, while the Claimants have underlined that it has no legal force whatsoever and that anyway it provides no answer to the question of whether the Contested Rule is compatible with the EC Treaty. The Panel is not sure whether an answer given by the Commission in the European Parliament can be regarded as a «decision, opinion or other official statement» within the meaning of the above-mentioned Commission Notice. Probably, the Commission did not have in mind answers to parliamentary questions when it drafted the Notice, and its reference to official statements would imply a less informal statement than a parliamentary one. In any event, since Mr. Van Miert's answer is quite concise and given without the Commission «possess[ing] all the necessary information to assess the compatibility of the rules with Articles 85 and 86 of the EC Treaty», and since any statement issued in the Parliament inevitably has a political rather than a legal nuance, the Panel is of the opinion that it should not base this award on Mr. Van Miert's answer.
75. The Panel also notes that the EC Commission has recently issued a more general statement with regard to the application of competition rules to sport. The Commission has publicly noted as follows: «Sport comprises two levels of activity: on the one hand the sporting activity strictly speaking, which fulfils a social, integrating and cultural role that must be preserved and to which in theory the competition rules of the EC Treaty do not apply. On the other hand a series of economic activities generated by the sporting activity, to which the competition rules of the EC Treaty apply, albeit taking into account the specific requirements of this sector. The interdependence and indeed the overlap between these two levels render the application of competition rules more complex. Sport also has features, in particular the interdependence of competitors and the need to guarantee the uncertainty of results of competitions, which could justify that sporting organizations implement a specific framework, in particular on the markets for the production and the sale of sports events. However, these specific features do not warrant an automatic exemption from the EU competition rules of any economic activities generated by sport, due in particular to the increasing economic weight of such activities» (EC Commission, Press Release no. IP/99/133, 24 February 1999).
76. The Panel shares the EC Commission's position that the application of competition rules to sports regulations is a particularly complex task because of the peculiarities of sport and because of the inescapable link between sporting and economic aspects. Therefore, all the relevant elements of competition law have to be carefully weighed in this award together with the peculiar sporting elements, in order to ascertain whether the Contested Rule violates Articles 81 (ex 85) and 82 (ex 86) of the EC Treaty or not.
- b) Position of the parties
77. With respect to Article 81 (ex 85) of the EC Treaty, the Claimants assert, firstly, that the Contested Rule is a decision by an association of undertakings, and/or an agreement between undertakings, falling within the scope of such provision. Then, they argue that the Contested Rule has the effect of both actually and potentially affecting competition to an appreciable extent in the football market, and in various ancillary football services markets, by preventing or restricting investments by multi-club owners in European clubs, by changing the nature, intensity and patterns of competition between commonly controlled clubs and the others, and by enhancing the economic imbalance between football clubs. They also assert that the Contested Rule affects the pattern of trade between Member States. They also argue that no «sporting exception» could be applied to this issue, that the Contested Rule is unnecessary and disproportionate to the professed objective, and that less restrictive alternatives exist. For these reasons, the Claimants contend that the Contested Rule is incompatible with Article 81.1 and, as no exemption has been given by the EC Commission under Article 81.3, it is automatically void pursuant to Article 81.2. The Respondent counter-argues that the Contested Rule is not caught by Article 81, or by any other provision of the EC Treaty, because it is a rule of sporting interest only, which is proportionate to the legitimate objective of preventing situations of conflict of interest and, thus, of promoting and ensuring genuine competition between the clubs playing in pan-European competitions.

78. With respect to Article 82 (ex 86), the Claimants argue that UEFA is the only body empowered to organize European competitions and, consequently, holds a dominant position in the European professional football market and the ancillary football services markets. Then, they assert that the Contested Rule constitutes an abuse by UEFA of its dominant position contrary to Article 82 because, without any objective justification, it restricts competition, it is unnecessary and disproportionate, and it unfairly discriminates between clubs with different ownership structures. The Respondent replies by denying that it is in a dominant position, and by asserting that the adoption of a rule in order to preserve the integrity of club competitions could not amount to an abuse.

c) The «sporting exception»

79. The Respondent argues that the Contested Rule is not caught at all by EC law, because it is a rule of a merely sporting character purporting to protect the integrity of the game by preventing any conflict of interest within UEFA club competitions. The Respondent refers to what has come to be termed as the «sporting exception», after the EC Court of Justice stated in the Walrave and Donà cases that «the practice of sport is subject to Community law only in so far as it constitutes an economic activity within the meaning of Article 2 of the Treaty» (Judgements of 12 December 1974, case 36/74, Walrave, in E.C.R. 1974, 1405, para. 4; 14 July 1976, case 13/76, Donà, in E.C.R. 1976, 1333, para. 12), that EC law «does not affect the composition of sport teams, in particular national teams, the formation of which is a question of purely sporting interest and as such has nothing to do with economic activity» (Walrave, para. 8), and that EC law does not «prevent the adoption of rules or of a practice excluding foreign players from participation in certain matches for reasons which are not of an economic nature, which relate to the particular nature and context of such matches and are thus of sporting interest only, such as, for example, matches between national teams from different countries» (Donà, para. 14).

In both cases, the Court also added that the «restriction on the scope of the provisions in question must however remain limited to its proper objective» (Walrave, para. 9; Donà, para. 15).

80. In the more recent Bosman case, the Court of Justice referred to the Walrave and Donà precedents in order to reiterate that «sport is subject to Community law only in so far as it constitutes an economic activity within the meaning of Article 2 of the Treaty» (Judgement of 15 December 1995, case C-415/93, Bosman, in E.C.R. 1995, I-4921, para. 73), and that «the provisions of Community law concerning freedom of movement of persons and of provision of services do not preclude rules or practices justified on non-economic grounds which relate to the particular nature and context of certain matches. It stressed, however, that such a restriction on the scope of the provisions in question must remain limited to its proper objective. It cannot, therefore, be relied upon to exclude the whole of the sporting activity from the scope of the Treaty» (ibidem, para. 76).
81. The Claimants acknowledge that some matters concerned with the rules of the game would fall within the so-called sporting exception, mentioning as examples «a ban on drugs, the size of the pitch or the ball, or the methods of selection of national teams». However, the Claimants deny that the Contested Rule might fall within such an exception because it is economic in its language, its subject matter and its effects. In the final oral argument, counsel for the Claimants vividly described the Contested Rule as «impregnated» with economic elements.
82. The Panel observes that it is quite difficult to deduce the extent of the «sporting exception» from the mentioned case law of the Court of Justice. It is clear that a sporting exception of some kind does exist, in the sense that some sporting rules or practices are somewhat capable of, as the Court puts it, «restricting the scope» of EC provisions. In the light of the Court's jurisprudence, it seems that a sporting rule should pass the following tests in order not to be caught by EC law: (a) it must concern a question of sporting interest having nothing to do with economic activity, (b) it must be justified on non-economic grounds, (c) it must be related to the particular nature or context of certain competitions, and (d) it must remain limited to its proper objective.
83. With regard to test (a), the Contested Rule certainly concerns a question of great sporting interest, such as the integrity of the game within the already illustrated meaning of the public perception of the authenticity of sporting results (see supra, para. 24 et seq.). However, the Contested Rule also has a lot to do with economic activity. Indeed, the Contested Rule addresses the question of ownership of clubs taking part in UEFA competitions, that is the economic status of clubs which certainly perform economic activities (see infra, para. 88). Therefore, the requirement of test (a) is not met, and the Panel holds that the Contested Rule is not covered by the «sporting exception». As a consequence, tests (b), (c) and (d) are not relevant in this context, and the Panel need not discuss them.
84. In the light also of the recent opinions of Advocate General Cosmas in the pending Delière case (opinion delivered on 18 May 1999, joint cases C-51/96 and C-191/97) and of Advocate General Alber in the pending Lehtonen case (opinion delivered on 22 June 1999, case C-176/96), the Panel wonders whether, applying the Court of Justice tests, it is really possible to distinguish between sporting questions and economic ones and to find sporting rules clearly falling within the «sporting exception» (besides those expressly indicated by the Court, concerning national teams). For instance, among the examples indicated by the Claimants, the reference to anti-doping rules might be misplaced, because to prevent a professional athlete – i.e. an individual who is a worker or a provider of services – from performing his/her professional activity undoubtedly has a lot to do with the economic aspects of sports. The same applies to the size of sporting balls, which is certainly of great concern to the various firms producing them. In conclusion, the Panel is not convinced that existing EC case law provides a workable «sporting exception» and it must, therefore, proceed with a full analysis of the present dispute under Articles 81 (ex 85) and 82 (ex 86) of the EC Treaty.

d) Undertakings and association of undertakings

85. Article 81.1 (ex 85.1) of the EC Treaty prohibits any cooperation or coordination between independent undertakings which may affect trade between Member States and which has the object or the effect of preventing, restricting or distorting competition. Such forbidden cooperation or coordination between undertakings may be accomplished through agreements, decisions by associations of undertakings or concerted practices. Article 82 (ex 86) of the EC Treaty prohibits any abuse of a dominant position by one or more undertakings which may affect trade between Member States. Both provisions, in order to be applied, require that the Panel ascertain whether the Respondent can be regarded as an undertaking and/or an association of undertakings.
86. The notion of undertaking is not defined in the EC Treaty. The EC Court of Justice has stated that such notion includes «every entity engaged in an economic activity, regardless of the legal status of the entity and the way in which it is financed» (Judgement of 23 April 1991, case C-41/90, Höfnér, in E.C.R. 1991, I-1979, para. 21). The fact that a given entity is a «non-profit» entity is irrelevant, provided that it does perform some economic activity.
87. As illustrated above, UEFA is a private association exerting regulatory authority in European football and organizing pan-European competitions. A good part of UEFA's activities is of a purely sporting nature, particularly when it adopts measures as a mere regulator of sporting matters. However, UEFA also carries out activities of an economic nature, e.g. with regard to advertising contracts and to contracts relating to television broadcasting rights (see EC Commission decision of 27 October 1992, 1990 World Cup, in Official Journal EC, 12 November 1992, L 326/31, para. 47). Therefore, with respect to the economic activities in which it is involved, UEFA can be characterized as an undertaking within the meaning of EC competition law, as construed by the Court of Justice. The fifty-one national federations affiliated to UEFA also carry out economic activities at national level, notably by exploiting their logos, managing their national teams and selling television rights; with respect to those activities, they are also undertakings within the meaning of EC competition law. Therefore, the Panel holds that UEFA, with respect to the economic activities in which it is engaged and in which national federations are engaged, is at the same time an undertaking and an association of undertakings.

88. The Panel wonders whether UEFA should also be regarded, as argued by the Claimants, as an «association of associations of undertakings» – within the meaning of the EC Commission decisions of 15 December 1982, BNIC, and of 7 December 1984, Milchförderungsfonds, in which Article 81.1 (ex 85.1) was applied to resolutions issued by trade associations having as their members other trade associations –, that is whether UEFA should be regarded not only as an association of (so to say) «federation undertakings» but also, through the federations, as an association of «club undertakings». In fact, if UEFA was found not to be an association of «club undertakings», its resolutions concerning the way club competitions are organized could not be considered as instruments of horizontal coordination of the clubs' competitive behaviour and would not be caught by Article 81.1 (ex 85.1) of the EC Treaty. In other words, with respect to UEFA rules which govern club competitions – e.g. establishing conditions of participation, disqualifying clubs or players from the competition, setting forth players' transfer rules, designating referees, fixing schedules, and the like – UEFA could be considered merely as a regulator above the clubs rather than a sort of clubs' trade association; accordingly, the Contested Rule would not be considered as the product of a horizontal collusion between the clubs and would not be caught by Article 81.1 (ex 85.1).
89. In order to ascertain whether UEFA should be regarded as an association of associations of undertakings or not, it is necessary to assess whether national football federations affiliated to UEFA are to be considered as associations of undertakings or not. There is no doubt that professional football clubs engage in economic activities and, consequently, are undertakings. In particular, they engage in economic activities such as the sale of entrance tickets for home matches, the sale of broadcasting rights, the exploitation of logos and the conclusion of sponsorship and advertising contracts. Numerous minor clubs, which are formally non-profit making, also engage in some of those economic activities – although on a much lower scale – and are also to be regarded as undertakings (for example, clubs taking part in championships pertaining to the third or fourth national divisions). In all national federations, there is also a very large number of truly amateur clubs (including youth clubs), which are run by unpaid volunteers, perform purely sporting activities and do not engage in any economic activity (the EC Commission has recently defined such clubs as «grassroots clubs» in the already quoted document The European model of sport, Brussels, 1999). Accordingly, these grassroots clubs should not be regarded as undertakings (see Judgement of 17 December 1993, joined cases C-159/91 and C-160/91, para. 18, where the Court of Justice held that an entity fulfilling a social function and entirely non-profit making does not perform an economic activity and thus is not an undertaking within the meaning of ex Article 85). The line between non-amateur clubs (which are undertakings) and amateur or grassroots clubs (which are not) should obviously be drawn at different levels from country to country, depending on the national economic development of football. What is common within all fifty-one European federations is the circumstance that the number of amateur or grassroots clubs is largely preponderant over that of non-amateur clubs.

90. Advocate General Lenz stated in his Bosman opinion that national football federations «are to be regarded as associations of undertakings within the meaning of Article 85. The fact that in addition to the professional clubs, a large number of amateur clubs also belong to those associations makes no difference» (Opinion delivered on 20 September 1995, case C-415/93, Bosman, in E.C.R. 1995, I-4921, para. 256).

Therefore, according to the argument of Advocate General Lenz, UEFA is an association of associations of undertakings, acting as a instrument of professional clubs' cooperation. Advocate General Lenz did not provide any further discussion on this issue. As is well known, in the Bosman case the Court of Justice declined to rule on competition law issues (Judgement of 15 December 1995, ibidem, para. 138), and the previous sports cases decided by the Court did not involve competition rules either (Judgement of 12 December 1974, case 36/74, Walrave, in E.C.R. 1974, 1405; Judgement of 14 July 1976, case 13/76, Donà, in E.C.R. 1976, 1333; Judgement of 15 October 1987, 222/86, Heylens, in E.C.R. 1987, 4097). Therefore, no specific guidance can be found on this question in the European Court jurisprudence related to sport.

91. The Panel is not entirely persuaded by the assertion of Advocate General Lenz that it «makes no difference» that national federations encompass a large number of amateur or grassroots clubs. In fact, the amateur or grassroots clubs, truly not engaged in economic activities, may condition the will and the acts of national federations more than professional and semi-professional clubs. Due to the democratic voting and electoral systems prevailing within national federations, the majority of votes tend to be controlled by amateur or grassroots clubs, and federations' executive organs – the President and the Board – often tend to be the expression of such majority. In some national federations even athletes and coaches have some electoral standing. This deficit of representativeness vis-à-vis professional clubs is the main reason why such clubs have created national «leagues» as their own truly representative bodies and why there are often conflicts between leagues and federations (see supra, paras. 17-18). Through the leagues, which are their true trade associations, professional clubs tend to manage their championships by themselves, retaining all the related revenues (television rights, advertising, etc.), and in several countries have progressively acquired a noticeable degree of autonomy from federations (e.g. the Premier League in England or the «Lega Nazionale Professionisti» in Italy).
92. In other words, the executives of national federations formally represent all the clubs of their respective countries but their constituency is mostly composed of amateur or grassroots clubs. Also within UEFA, representatives of national federations should be regarded less as delegates of the clubs engaged in economic activities than as delegates of amateur or grassroots clubs. It should also be mentioned that federation posts are honorary, and individuals elected to such posts are not bound by instructions or orders coming from the electors. Obviously, professional clubs have their ways of influencing federations and federation executives much more than their mere electoral weight would suggest, but it would still seem inaccurate sic et simpliciter to regard national federations as associations of undertakings and, automatically, national federations' regulations as decisions by associations of undertakings within the meaning of Article 81.1. It should not be overlooked that decisions by associations of undertakings are caught by Article 81.1 in order to prevent circumvention of the prohibition of restrictive agreements and concerted practices. Decisions by associations of undertakings are typically a medium for the coordination and cooperation of undertakings of a given sector. The Panel observes that national leagues (where they exist) rather than federations currently seem to be the actual medium for the coordination of professional clubs. Therefore, national leagues seem to be the true associations of «club undertakings», league executives seem to be the true delegates of such undertakings, and the acts and conduct of leagues seem to truly reflect the will of such undertakings. National leagues are not direct members of UEFA and, as mentioned (supra, para. 19), the most important of them have recently constituted their own independent association in order to have their interests truly represented at pan-European level.

93. The Panel notes that in the BNIC/Clair case, the Court of Justice held that BNIC – the French cognac industry board – was in fact an association of undertakings because its measures were negotiated and adopted by individuals who were (formally appointed by the competent Minister but in fact) designated by the undertakings or associations of undertakings concerned and had to be considered as their representatives (Judgment of 30 January 1985, case 123/83, BNIC/Clair, in E.C.R. 1985, 391, para. 19). In Reiff, the Court of Justice held that the individuals composing a German tariff commission for road freight, appointed by the Minister upon the proposal of the undertakings or associations of undertakings of the interested sector, could not be deemed as representatives of the industry because they were not bound by instructions or orders coming from those undertakings or associations; therefore, the Court concluded that the tariff commission was not an association of undertakings and that its decisions were not caught by Article 85 (now 81) of the EC Treaty (Judgment of 17 November 1993, case C-185/91, Reiff, in E.C.R. 1993, I-5801, para. 19).

94. In the light of this case law and in the light of the circumstances described above (supra, paras. 91-92), the Panel is quite doubtful as to whether UEFA can be truly characterized as an association of associations of undertakings and as to whether members of the UEFA Executive Committee or of the UEFA Congress can be seen as actually representing the «club undertakings». At the very least, before reaching any such conclusions, it would be necessary to examine in detail the process leading to the appointment or election of individuals to national federation posts and to the various UEFA bodies, to look into the links of those individuals with professional clubs, and to investigate case by case whether a UEFA measure is in fact the expression of an agreement by or with the professional clubs or whether it strengthens already existing agreements between these clubs. Neither the Claimants nor the Respondent have supplied any evidence which could help the Panel in any such analysis. Therefore, the Panel must content itself with the stated conclusion (supra, para. 87) that UEFA, with respect to the economic activities in which it is involved and in which national federations are involved, is surely an undertaking and an association of «federation undertakings», leaving the question open as to whether UEFA is also an association of «club undertakings» through which clubs coordinate their economic behaviour. In any event, despite underlying doubts on this issue, given that UEFA essentially advanced no arguments to counter the Claimants' assertion that UEFA is an association of associations of undertakings, the Panel will assume for the purposes of the ensuing discussion of competition law that UEFA is in fact an association of «club undertakings» whose decisions and rules concerning club competitions constitute a medium of horizontal cooperation between the competing clubs (as asserted by Advocate General Lenz in his Bosman opinion; see supra, para. 90). As a result, in order to proceed with its analysis, the Panel assumes that the Contested Rule is a decision by an association of associations of undertakings and, as such, falls within the scope of Article 81.1 (ex 85.1).

e) Market definition

95. The Panel notes that, in order to examine whether the Contested Rule has the object or the effect of appreciably restricting competition (Article 81) or constitutes an abuse of dominant position (Article 82), it is necessary to identify and define the relevant market in both its product and geographic dimensions.
96. As to product market definition, the Panel observes that, according to EC law and practice, essentially «a relevant product market comprises all those products and/or services which are regarded as interchangeable or substitutable by the consumer, by reason of the products' characteristics, their prices and their intended use» (EC Commission Notice «on the definition of relevant market for the purposes of Community competition law», in Official Journal EC, 9 December 1997, C 372/5, para. 7).
97. The Claimants, referring to the economic report prepared by Mr. Boon upon their request, allege that the relevant product market is a «European football market». According to the Claimants, such market would comprise the supply of all football matches played in Europe and a variety of related «ancillary football services markets», such as the market for capital investment in football clubs, the players market, the media rights market, the sponsorship and advertising market and the merchandising market. In his written report, Mr. Boon includes within the boundaries of this general «European football market» all UEFA «matches played out before a paying public across Europe and in the wider world». At the hearing, the Panel asked Mr. Boon to better identify the product, the demand side (the consumers) and the supply side (the suppliers) in the alleged «European football market». Mr. Boon answered that the product is constituted by all matches played in UEFA club competitions, the consumers are all the football fans and supporters, and the suppliers are the clubs and the players together. The notion that clubs and players supply matches together on the market is clearly unfounded in terms of competition law (and inconsistent with Mr. Boon's several references in his report to a players' market where clubs are on the demand side and players on the supply side), and the Panel can thus discard it immediately without further discussion.
98. The Panel finds that the Claimants' definition of the product market is not a viable one in terms of competition law. The notion of a general European football market is too ample, and the other related markets are too heterogeneous to be included therein. Given that the definition of a market should be determined primarily by interchangeability (or substitutability) from the consumers' viewpoint, it is implausible to regard all European football matches as interchangeable. Certainly, in terms of stadium attendance most of the matches are not interchangeable because of geographic constraints and of consumer preferences, notably constituted by the supporters' allegiance to a given team. Indeed, virtually every club playing in a UEFA competition can be deemed to hold a sort of «captive market» with regard to live attendance of its home matches. Even in terms of television audience, a UEFA Cup or Champions' League match between a Swiss and a German team would hardly be considered by British viewers as a substitute – possibly with the only exception of the final match of the competition or some other unusual circumstances (e.g. the presence of several renowned British players in the match), and even in such cases it would be a poor substitute – for a match involving a British team (see Monopolies and Mergers Commission, British Sky Broadcasting Group plc and Manchester United plc. A report on the proposed merger, London, 12 March 1999, hereinafter «MMC Report», paras. 2.16-2.24). Furthermore, if the products of the European football market are the European matches, most of the various other markets mentioned by the Claimants are certainly related in some way or another to the supply of such football matches, but they cannot be «comprised» within that market. A few examples suffice: the sale of merchandise can and does take place regardless of European matches; contracts for advertising on panels within a given stadium can be concluded regardless of any connection with football matches (e.g. in view of a series of rock concerts or of non-football sporting events) or regardless of any connection with European football matches; some of the mentioned products or services are not offered to the final consumers (in particular sponsorship contracts, free-to-air broadcasting rights and capital investment in clubs not listed on the stock exchange).

99. The Panel observes that in fact there appears to be no single «European football market» comprising various ancillary markets. Rather, there are several «football markets» in which professional football clubs operate, such as those referred to by the Claimants, but they are all separate markets for the purposes of competition law. Support for such proposition can be found in the already quoted recent report by the British Monopolies and Mergers Commission (now transformed into the Competition Commission) concerning the proposed acquisition of the football club Manchester United by the broadcasting company BskyB, where it is evidenced how Manchester United operates in several separate markets such as the supply of football matches, television rights to football matches, advertising and sponsorship, retailing of merchandise, and various services such as catering and hospitality associated with its stadium (MMC Report, para. 2.16).

100. Most of such football markets are clearly segmented in both their product and geographic dimensions. With regard to the television broadcasting market, there appears to be a growing consensus among competition authorities that pay (including pay-per-view) television and free-to-air television are separate product markets (see MMC Report, paras. 2.36 and 2.39; Office of Fair Trading, The Director General's review of BskyB's position in the wholesale pay TV market, London, December 1996, paras. 2.3 and 2.6; «Autorità garante della concorrenza e del mercato», that is the Italian competition authority, Decision no. 6999 of 26 March 1999, Stream/Telepiù, in Bollettino 12/1999, para. 9). Also from the geographic point of view, although sports broadcasting is becoming more and more international and cross-border, competition authorities and courts throughout Europe tend to maintain that broadcasting markets are mostly national, even if some of the broadcasting companies are multi-national and some of the events are covered worldwide (see e.g. the Decision of 11 December 1997 by the «Bundesgerichtshof», that is the highest German court in civil matters, upholding the previous decisions of the German competition authority «Bundeskartellamt» and of the appellate court «Kammergericht» in a case concerning television rights to European matches). As mentioned (supra, para. 98), another example of extreme geographic segmentation is to be found in the market for gate revenues (including both season tickets and match tickets). The sale of a club's merchandise tends also to be geographically very defined, with the only possible exception of a few top European clubs.

101. Having found that separate football markets exist, rather than a single and comprehensive European football market, the Panel must establish the relevant product market within which to assess whether the Contested Rule restricts competition or not. It is undisputed that the Claimants' basic grievance in this case concerns UEFA's interference with their wish to keep owning (and even further acquiring) various football clubs capable of competing in UEFA competitions. Indeed, the Claimants repeatedly stressed in their written and oral submissions that the Contested Rule would restrict investments in European football clubs' stocks. Accordingly, the Panel finds that the market more directly related to, and potentially affected by, the Contested Rule appears to be a market which can be defined as the «market for ownership interests in football clubs capable of taking part in UEFA competitions». A market for ownership interests in professional clubs has been identified as the relevant market in some United States antitrust cases, particularly in cases related to league rules banning cross-ownership of clubs of other professional sports leagues or subjecting to authorization the sale of a club. See e.g. NASL v. NFL, 505 F.Supp. 659 (S.D.N.Y. 1980), reversed 670 F.2d 1249 (2d Cir. 1982); Sullivan v. NFL, 34 F.3d 91 (1st Cir. 1994); Piazza v. MLB, 831 F.Supp. 420 (1993). The Panel finds also, in the light of the content of the Contested Rule and on the basis of the available evidence, that the Contested Rule appears to be only indirectly related, if at all, to the various other markets suggested by the Claimants, such as the market for players, the sponsorship market, the merchandising market, the media rights market and the market for gate revenues. Therefore, the effects on these markets will be considered only on a subsidiary basis to the said principal relevant market, concerning ownership interests in European professional football clubs.

102. The Panel considers that the relevant market, as defined, would include on the supply side – that is, the potential sellers of ownership interests – all the owners of European football clubs which can potentially qualify for a UEFA competition. Mr. Boon has illustrated how an investment in clubs which can qualify for UEFA competitions (referring to the main UEFA competitions, the Champions' League and the UEFA Cup) is much more attractive than an investment in other football clubs because «from a financial perspective, access to European club competition is disproportionately important to club success». Therefore, according to this economic analysis, clubs which cannot hope to qualify for one of the main UEFA competitions should not be viewed as substitutes by investors interested in football clubs. In principle, only clubs competing in the top division of one of the fifty-one European national federations can hope to qualify (the only exception being the rare occurrence of a club from a lower division winning the national cup). According to the Boon report, there are currently 737 clubs playing in the top divisions of the fifty-one UEFA countries. While the number of such clubs is basically the same every year, their identity varies slightly every football season because of the promotion/relegation system which has already been described (see supra, para. 18). Of those 737 clubs, however, probably less than a half – perhaps 350 clubs – have a realistic chance of qualifying for one of the two main UEFA competitions, given that less than 200 slots are available. It should also be considered that the number of clubs having a realistic chance of passing the first rounds is even smaller: as reported by Mr. Boon, over the five year period 1993/94-1997/98 only 66 clubs have achieved a place in the quarter final of one of the three main UEFA competitions.

103. The Panel observes that, because of the peculiarities of the football sector, investment in football clubs does not appear to be interchangeable with investments in other businesses, or even in other leisure businesses. The publicity and notoriety given by the ownership of a football club, besides the inherent excitement and gratification of running such a popular and emotional business, have always rendered such activity particularly attractive in terms of so-called VIP status and of high profile relationships with politicians and local communities. Indeed, ownership of a football club has often proved to be quite helpful, and sometimes expedient, to other business or political activities. Nowadays, because of the enormous increase in the amounts paid to clubs for television broadcasting rights, the profitability of professional clubs is also becoming interesting (see MMC Report, para. 3.79 et seq.). In particular, ownership of European professional football clubs appears to be an attractive strategic fit for media groups, given that football is a key media asset with further growth potential (see MMC Report, paras. 2.136-2.139 and 3.103). In economic terms, the circumstance that club ownership involves significant additional aspects to the mere profitability of a club means that the individual or corporate owner places on its club a significant instrumental and consumption value in addition to its possible investment value. This is not to be found in other business activities, which, therefore, are not interchangeable with the ownership of a football club. Moreover, given the largely leading position of football in European sports, clubs of other sports (e.g. a professional basketball club) can be deemed as potential substitutes only in few and very defined locations where such other sports enjoy popular success. Looking at Europe as a whole, other sports do not appear to offer a suitable alternative to the acquisition and ownership of football clubs.

104. In the light of the above, on the demand side (that is, the potential buyers of ownership interests) the market would include any individual or corporation potentially interested in an investment opportunity in a football club which could qualify for a UEFA competition. In this respect, the Claimants assert that availability of capital for investment in clubs is limited, that multi-club ownership is a rational economic investment strategy and, thus, multi-club owners are a key source of capital for football clubs within UEFA's jurisdiction. The Panel finds this argument unconvincing. As has already been said, ownership of football clubs has always been particularly attractive for reasons that go beyond mere economic considerations. Changes in clubs' ownership are notoriously quite common, and the Claimants have provided no substantial evidence proving that owners willing to sell a club of UEFA level encounter particular problems in finding suitable buyers. In fact, there is even some empirical evidence that in some markets football clubs have been able to attract substantial capital investment from new sources, not from the historic owners of the clubs, despite the presence of a rule somewhat analogous to, or even stricter than, the Contested Rule (see infra, para. 120).

105. The Panel remarks that the possible profitability of a football club and its attractiveness to investors depends much more on its specific characteristics, particularly its location and its «brand», than on the identity of the potential buyers. The Boon report mentions that multi-club owners enjoy economies of scale and synergies such as sharing of information and expertise, single sourcing of supplies and centralized services. However, the extent to which football clubs located in different countries could share resources appears to be quite limited, particularly if clubs must be kept isolated from each other for sporting reasons as ENIC affirms it is doing (see supra, para. 32). Moreover, most of such economies of scale – such as headquarters costs, in-house expertise and common purchase of services of various kinds (e.g. computer consultancy) – would also be available to clubs belonging (as most often is the case) to entrepreneurs or groups involved in other non-football businesses. As to media rights, given the current negative attitude of most competition authorities and judges throughout Europe concerning the collective sale of television broadcasting rights (see e.g. the notorious Decision of 11 December 1997 by the Bundesgerichtshof, supra at para. 100), multi-club owners would conceivably be barred from collectively selling the rights to their clubs' matches and, therefore, no economies of scale could be enjoyed in this area. In any event, given the said separation of national television markets (supra, para. 100), the joint sale of broadcasting rights to matches of clubs located in different countries would appear not to afford a particular negotiating advantage.
106. The Panel observes that several of the benefits mentioned by the Claimants, which clubs allegedly attain when they are controlled by multi-club owners are, in fact, benefits that any clubs would derive from qualified and efficient management, regardless of the ownership structure. In this respect, the Panel is impressed by the improvements allegedly brought by ENIC to the management of its clubs, but it is not prepared to accept the proposition that multi-club owners are better owners than single club owners. In the Panel's view, it is changes in management rather than in ownership that affect the way football clubs are run. Moreover, the Panel remarks that, given the cost structure of football clubs, the savings due to the supposed economies of scale would be negligible compared to the current costs for players' (or even coaches') remuneration (see supra, paras. 32-33). In other terms, economies of scale do not yield what mostly matters in order to keep clubs successful on and off the field: good players and coaches. An instance of this can be given by the sporting results of the Italian club Vicenza; notwithstanding the supposed economies of scale and efficient management related to its being controlled by ENIC, at the end of the 1998/99 season Vicenza has been relegated to the Italian second division. Furthermore, the Panel finds the Claimants' argument (that there is a scarcity of potential buyers of clubs) particularly unconvincing in the light of the circumstance that the price for obtaining control of a club able to qualify for UEFA competitions – although not one of the top European clubs – appears to be affordable by a large number of corporate or individual entrepreneurs. For instance, in order to obtain control of the Claimants – clubs at the top of their countries and able to achieve the quarter final of a UEFA competition – ENIC paid approximately £ 2.5 million for AEK and £ 2.2 million for Slavia, which are prices comparable to those of rather small enterprises in various European business sectors. As a result, the Panel concludes that there are countless potential buyers of ownership interests in football clubs which could qualify for a UEFA competition.

107. As to geographic market definition, the Panel observes that, according to EC law and practice, essentially «a relevant geographic market comprises the area in which the undertakings concerned are involved in the supply and demand of products or services, in which the conditions of competition are sufficiently homogeneous and which can be distinguished from neighbouring areas because the conditions of competition are appreciably different in those areas» (EC Commission Notice «on the definition of relevant market for the purposes of Community competition law», in Official Journal EC, 9 December 1997, C 372/5, para. 8).
108. The evidence provided by the Claimants shows how the geographic dimension of the market for ownership interests in football clubs potentially taking part in UEFA competition is pan-European. There are no impediments for clubs in attracting potential investors from all over Europe and, conversely, almost no obstacles for a potential investor in buying an ownership interest in any given club around Europe. The actual investments by ENIC confirm this pan-European dimension. Therefore, the Panel concludes that the relevant geographic market extends to Europe as a whole, or more precisely to the territories of the fifty-one European federations affiliated to UEFA (which in reality, for historical reasons, encompasses federations that do not correspond to States, such as Scotland or Wales, and goes beyond geographical Europe, insofar as it includes Israel). As mentioned, other football markets tend to be geographically more segmented (see supra, para. 99).
- f) Compatibility with Article 81 (ex 85) of the EC Treaty
109. For an agreement between undertakings or a decision by an association of undertakings to be caught by Article 81.1, it must have the «object or effect» of restricting competition (as is customary in EC case law and practice, reference is here made only to «restriction» of competition as the general term encompassing also prevention and distortion). Since the «object» and the «effect» are not cumulative but alternative requirements, as suggested by the conjunction «or» (see Court of Justice, Judgement of 30 June 1966, case 56/65, Société Technique Minière, in E.C.R. 1966, 235, at 249), the Panel needs first to consider the object of the Contested Rule, i.e. its purpose in the context in which it is to be applied. Then, if the purpose of the Contested Rule does not appear to be anti-competitive, the Panel needs to take into consideration its actual effect on the relevant market. Should the Contested Rule have either the object or the effect of hindering competition, the Panel would then be required by EC case law to assess the Contested Rule in its economic context in order to decide whether it affects competition and trade between Member States to an appreciable extent (see e.g. Court of Justice, Judgement of 9 July 1969, case 5/69, Völk, in E.C.R. 1969, 295, para. 3; Judgement of 8 February 1971, case 22/71, Béguelin, in E.C.R. 1971, 949, para. 16).

110. As to the object of the Contested Rule, the Claimants assert that UEFA's predominant purpose has been to preserve its monopoly control over European football competitions rather than to preserve the integrity of the game. The Claimants' argue that support for this assertion can be found in the UEFA internal memorandum of 25 February 1998, drafted by Mr. Marcel Benz after the meeting with ENIC representatives of the previous day, and in the rules of the UEFA Statutes providing for the monopoly power of UEFA over European competitions. In the UEFA internal memorandum, under the heading «possible problems, questions and risks», it is possible to read inter alia:

«Does the ENIC group form the basis for a European league ... Couldn't a media mogul take advantage of ENIC's groundwork and create a European league with the ENIC clubs? Couldn't other investors (e.g. IMG) pursue the same strategy and buy up clubs on a large scale? ... Isn't it a risk for UEFA in the media sector if TV stations own the rights of clubs in the domestic competition? Won't central marketing by UEFA be infringed upon sooner or later? The search for UEFA Champions League sponsors could also become harder, as sponsors would also get a similar market presence throughout Europe with ENIC».

111. The Respondent replies by asserting that, besides the endeavour to prevent a clear conflict of interest situation and thus to ensure that competition is genuine, there was no ulterior motive for the adoption of the Contested Rule. The Respondent finds support in the same UEFA internal memorandum of 25 February 1999, where questions are raised on «how UEFA could guarantee sporting competition if two clubs of the ENIC group met in the same UEFA competition. Who would win? Would ENIC or its management decide, or would the winners be decided on the pitch, in a purely sporting encounter, as desired by UEFA and its public? ... UEFA must take all legal measures possible to guarantee clean competition. ... The interests of clean competition in sport are at stake».

112. The Panel notes that both the title and the text of the Contested Rule appear prima facie to support the Respondent's assertion that the Contested Rule is only designed to ensure that competition is genuine. The title reads «Integrity of the UEFA Club Competitions: Independence of the Clubs», while Paragraph A declares the object of the Contested Rule as follows:

«It is of fundamental importance that the sporting integrity of the UEFA club competitions be protected. To achieve this aim, UEFA reserves the right to intervene and to take appropriate action in any situation in which it transpires that the same individual or legal entity is in a position to influence the management, administration and/or sporting performance of more than one team participating in the same UEFA club competition».

Moreover, the Panel points out that the Contested Rule is not limited to banning multi-club ownership within the same competition but also forbids any other type of structure or behaviour which could potentially enable a club (or a related person) to influence a competitor in the same competition (see Paragraphs B.1 and B.2 of the Contested Rule).

113. The Panel considers that the Claimants had the burden of rebutting such prima facie evidence by proving that the true object of the Contested Rule was an anti-competitive one. The Panel finds that the Claimants have not satisfied this burden of proof, given that the only plausible evidence relied upon is the UEFA internal memorandum of 25 February 1998, which is at best ambiguous. Apart from the fact that it was drafted by an individual who is not a member of the body which adopted the rule, the memorandum appears to contain meeting notes rather than statements of policy and questions rather than answers. As a matter of fact, the memorandum lends support to contradictory arguments; therefore, it is of little avail for the rebuttal of the said prima facie evidence. As to the provisions of the UEFA Statutes mentioned by the Claimants, they simply confirm the notorious circumstance that UEFA is the institutional and regulatory authority over European football, as normally happens with all international sports federations: in no way do such provisions prove or disprove a particular object of the Contested Rule. The Panel finds, therefore, that in enacting the Contested Rule UEFA did purport to prevent the conflict of interest inherent in commonly owned clubs taking part in the same competition and to ensure a genuine athletic event with truly uncertain results. As a result, the Panel holds that the object of the Contested Rule is not to restrict competition within the meaning of Article 81.1 of the EC Treaty.

114. As to the effect of the Contested Rule, the Claimants assert that it appreciably restricts competition by preventing or restricting investment by multiple owners in European clubs, by changing the nature, intensity and pattern of competition between commonly controlled clubs and those having other ownership structures, and by enhancing the economic imbalance between football clubs leading to an increase in the market dominance of a few clubs over the majority of smaller and medium-sized clubs. On the other hand, the Respondent asserts that the Contested Rule has an overwhelmingly pro-competitive purpose and effect, namely to preserve the integrity of sporting competition between football clubs.
115. According to EC case law, in order to ascertain whether competition is in fact restricted to an appreciable extent, the Panel must essentially look at the competition which would occur on the relevant market in the absence of the Contested Rule (see Court of Justice, Judgement of 30 June 1966, case 56/65, Société Technique Minière, in E.C.R. 1966, 235, at 250; Judgement of 11 July 1985, case 42/84, Remia, in E.C.R. 1985, 2545, para. 18).
116. The Panel observes that the Contested Rule undoubtedly discourages to some extent any current owner of a club potentially capable of qualifying for UEFA competitions from buying ownership interests in another club having the same capability. In the absence of the Contested Rule, not only would there not be such discouragement but, according to the Boon report, multi-club control could be expected to expand. Assuming that Mr. Boon's conjecture is correct, single club owners would probably perceive that multi-club owners retain market advantages from their expanded dimension and might decide that the best way to improve their own position would be also to acquire additional clubs. With an expansion of multi-club ownership throughout Europe the total number of club owners, and thus the total number of undertakings on the market, would evidently decrease, even though the number of clubs realistically aspiring to a slot in a UEFA competition would probably remain the same because the number of talented players cannot be increased at will. As mentioned (supra, para. 102), probably no more than 350 clubs can each year realistically aspire to a UEFA slot, of which substantially less than one hundred could realistically hope to pass the first rounds and achieve a satisfactory number of matches and sufficient television exposure. In economic terms, within the relevant market there would be a reduction of the number of actors on the supply side vis-à-vis an unvarying large number of actors on the demand side (see supra, para 104). In other words, there could be a process of concentration of club ownership into fewer hands, given that there is a sporting barrier to any sudden entry into the market. As is well known, an entry into the market is hindered by the circumstance that in the European sporting system a new club must go through the pyramidal structure of national championships for several years before attaining a top professional level (see supra, paras. 15 and 18). As nobody can suddenly create a new football club and apply to directly enter into a top national championship or a UEFA competition (as happens for instance when United States professional leagues expand and add new franchises), a viable entry into the market is possible only through the purchase of an already existing club playing at good level in one of the fifty-one European top divisions.

117. The Panel observes that, from an economic point of view, the said decrease in the number of club owners could be expected either not to have any effect on prices of ownership interests in clubs – because club owners willing to sell their club would still be quite numerous, and because price is determined not only by supply and demand but also by the mentioned instrumental and consumption value placed by owners on clubs (see supra, para. 103) – or to bring about an increase in prices once the decrease in owners becomes noticeable. If, stretching the argument to extremes, the said concentration trend led to there being only a few owners of clubs capable of qualifying for UEFA competitions, the market for ownership interests in such clubs would be characterized by an oligopoly – presenting inherent incentives for cartel behaviour – with which any interested buyer would have to deal. Even on other football markets mentioned by the Claimants, where clubs are on the supply side – gate revenues, media rights, merchandising –, the reduction of club owners and the potentially resulting oligopoly could eventually bring about increases in prices to the detriment of consumers (e.g. increase in prices of match tickets or of pay television subscriptions). The Panel finds such an oligopoly scenario to be probably too extreme. The fact that when the Contested Rule was enacted the total number of European clubs controlled by multi-club owners was very low – only 12 clubs, according to the Boon report – seems to demonstrate, first, that a rush towards multi-club ownership would be unlikely (at least in the short term) and, second, that the postulated concentration process would in any event need several years to develop. However, even without admitting all the way the oligopoly scenario, it must be acknowledged that in the absence of the Contested Rule the number of undertakings on the market would sooner or later decline while the effects on prices, although scarcely noticeable in the short term, would in due course tend to show an increase.
118. As a result of the foregoing analysis, the Panel finds that, in the absence of the Contested Rule, competition on the relevant market and on other football markets would initially probably remain unaffected and, when affected, it would be restricted. In the light of this a contrario test, the Panel finds that the actual effect of the Contested Rule is to place some limitation on mergers between European high level football clubs, and thus to increase the number of undertakings on the relevant market and on other football markets; accordingly, the Contested Rule preserves or even enhances economic competition between club owners and economic and sporting competition between clubs. The Panel notes that, according to the Court of Justice, clauses restraining competitors' freedom which are indirectly conducive to increasing the number of undertakings on the relevant market must be deemed as pro-competitive (Judgement of 11 July 1985, case 42/84, Remia, in E.C.R. 1985, 2545, last sentence of para. 19).

119. The Panel observes, consequently, that either the Contested Rule does not affect the relevant market at all or, if it does, it exerts a beneficial influence upon competition, insofar as it tends to prevent a potential increase in prices for ownership interests in professional football clubs (and to prevent potential price increases in other football markets as well), and thus it tends to encourage investment in football clubs. As a result, the Panel finds that the Contested Rule, by discouraging merger and acquisition transactions between existing owners of clubs aspiring to participate in UEFA competitions, and conversely by encouraging investments in such football clubs by the many potential newcomers, appears to have the effect of preserving competition between club owners and between football clubs rather than appreciably restricting competition on the relevant market or on other football markets.
120. Empirical support for the proposition that the Contested Rule not only does not prevent or restrict investment in football clubs, but even favors it, can be found in the British market. There the Premier League has a rule not allowing any person or corporate entity, except with the prior written consent of the Board (which thus far has never been granted), to «directly or indirectly hold or acquire any interest in more than 10 per cent of the issued share capital of a Club while he or any associate is a director of, or directly or indirectly holds any interest in the share capital of, any other Club».

Despite a rule substantially stricter than the Contested Rule – 10% rather than a controlling interest – British clubs, as reported by Mr. Boon, have successfully attracted capital investment in recent years and a substantial proportion of such capital investment has been from new corporate investors, not from the historic owners of the clubs.

121. The Claimants also allege that the Contested Rule has the effects of altering the nature, intensity and pattern of competition between commonly controlled clubs and other clubs, and of enhancing the economic imbalance between football clubs, leading to an increase in the market dominance of a few big clubs over the majority of smaller and medium sized clubs. In other words, the Claimants argue that the Contested Rule favours the rich and strong clubs over the weak and poor ones. The Claimants base this argument on the assumption that multi-club owners would tend to own only small and medium clubs and to invest more in countries where football is economically less developed, and thus would mitigate the process of polarization of market power between the bigger clubs in the larger football countries and other clubs. The Claimants' evidence in support of this argument is basically the pattern of ENIC's own investments.

122. The Panel finds that the said assumption is unsupported by meaningful evidence and fails to discern the logic of the argument. Certainly, ENIC has thus far followed the strategy of acquiring medium-sized clubs; however, if such an investment strategy is convenient, nothing will prevent owners of big clubs from acquiring medium-sized clubs as well. As mentioned, it appears to be a reasonable strategy to control clubs of different sporting levels, and some big clubs are indeed doing it: Mr. Boon has mentioned the well known media magnate group controlling AC Milan which also owns Monza (a smaller Italian club not playing in the top Italian division) and Mr. Trijbits has testified with regard to the attitude of top Dutch clubs (see supra, para. 35). Therefore, in the absence of the Contested Rule, not only would the polarization of market power between bigger and smaller clubs continue but, in the light of the previous findings, it would probably even be enhanced. After all, polarization of market power is what usually happens in any business sector when mergers and acquisitions are completely left to market dynamics and dominant companies are free to acquire smaller competitors (which is why regulators enact rules such as the EC Merger Regulation no. 4064/89). Moreover, the problem with this scenario is that, while in other types of business it is economically desirable for consumers that marginal and less efficient undertakings disappear from the market, in the sports business consumer welfare requires that numerous clubs remain on the market and achieve the highest possible economic and sporting balance between them. The Panel is of the view that to provide incentives for actual or potential club owners to invest their resources in only one high level club, as the Contested Rule tends to do, is conducive to an economic and sporting balance, rather than an imbalance, between football clubs. Therefore, from this point of view as well, the Panel finds the Contested Rule to be beneficial to competition in football markets.
123. Furthermore, in terms of consumer welfare, the quality of the entertainment provided to European football fans – with reference to both live attendance and television audience – does not appear to be appreciably affected by the Contested Rule. The only conceivable effect of the Contested Rule is that a club which has qualified for a UEFA competition would be replaced by the club from the same country which, in the previous season's national championship, ranked immediately below the excluded club. Obviously, the replaced club would suffer a harm and its committed supporters would resent the replacement, but at the same time the substitute club and its committed supporters would enjoy a benefit exactly corresponding to the injury of the replaced club. The Panel observes in this respect that in principle competition law protects competition and the market as a whole, not individual competitors. Accordingly, in order to establish an injury to consumer welfare – i.e. that fans with a general interest in football are harmed – evidence should be provided that the substitute team would be less skilled and entertaining than the excluded one. This has not been proven by the Claimants and, in any event, it appears quite hard to prove, given that the quality and talent of the players and coach of two closely ranked teams are essentially analogous, and given that participation in UEFA competitions occurs one season later, when the coach or several players might have moved elsewhere and, in fact, the substitute team might well be more talented and entertaining than the replaced one. Therefore, the Panel finds that the Contested Rule does not appear to appreciably affect the quality of the sporting product offered to consumers.

g) Objective necessity of regulating multi-club ownership and proportionality of the Contested Rule

124. The foregoing findings appear to suffice for rejecting the contention that the Contested Rule appreciably restricts competition, and thus appear to suffice for excluding it from the scope of the prohibition set forth by Article 81 (ex 85) of the EC Treaty. However, in order to further support those findings, the Panel deems it opportune to verify whether the limitation on multi-club ownership can also be regarded as an essential feature in order to ensure the proper functioning of a professional football competition. In this regard, the Panel notes that the EC Court of Justice has held in several judgements that restraints on competitors' conduct do not amount to restrictions on competition within the meaning of Article 81.1 (ex 85.1), provided that such restraints do not exceed what is necessary for the attainment of legitimate aims and remain proportionate to such aims (see e.g. Judgement of 11 July 1985, case 161/84, Remia, in E.C.R. 1985, 2545; Judgement of 28 January 1986, case 161/84, Pronuptia, in E.C.R. 1986, 353; Judgement of 19 April 1988, case 27/87, Erauw, in E.C.R. 1988, 1919; Judgement of 15 December 1994, case C-250/92, DLG, in E.C.R. 1994, I-5641; Judgement of 12 December 1995, case C-399/93, Oude Luttikhuis, in E.C.R. 1995, I-4515).
125. The Claimants assert that the means employed by UEFA are disproportionate to the objective of protecting the integrity of European football competitions and have submitted for consideration a variety of «less restrictive alternatives». In particular, the Claimants argue that criminal penalties provided by the various State laws, in addition to UEFA disciplinary powers, are sufficient to deal severely with match-fixing in any case where such wrongdoing is proved. In addition, according to the Claimants, a more proportionate approach could include the adoption by UEFA and by all clubs participating in UEFA competitions of a code of ethics, and more particularly of a draft document prepared by ENIC and by the Claimants entitled «Proposed measures to guarantee sporting integrity in European football competition organised by UEFA». The Claimants have also suggested that the Contested Rule could include a clause for a case by case examination of multi-club ownership in order to appraise particular circumstances, and have proposed a «fit and proper» test for every club owner as a condition for participation in UEFA competitions or even as a requirement for the purchase of a club. They have also proposed that UEFA enact rules limiting the number of clubs which the same owner can control, or that an independent trust be established to which control of commonly owned clubs could be transferred for the duration of UEFA competitions. Moreover, in order to avoid problems with bonuses and transfers, inevitably connected with multi-club ownership (see supra, paras. 39-40), suggestions were also advanced that UEFA enact schemes, either general or special to commonly owned clubs, limiting bonuses and transfers of players.
126. The Respondent replies by asserting that the Contested Rule corresponds to the minimum degree of regulation necessary to protect the integrity of football competition and is, therefore, fully compatible with the law. The Respondent argues that the Contested Rule does not prohibit multi-club ownership, but simply prevents commonly controlled clubs from participating in the same UEFA club competition, and that any investor may acquire a shareholding of up to 50% in any two or more European football clubs participating in UEFA competitions without ever being affected by the Contested Rule. In this respect, the Respondent mentions the stricter regulations which may be found in the United Kingdom, such as the rules of the Premier League, the Football League and the Scottish Football Association, or in the United States, such as the rules of the NBA, the NFL, the NHL and the MLB. The Respondent also argues that preventive measures are necessary in order to avoid conflicts of interest, and cites in this respect the principles applicable to lawyers and arbitrators. The Respondent also criticizes the draft regulation submitted by the Claimants for proposing rules which already exist (such as the obligations to play always to win and to field the best available team, and the disciplinary proceedings for anyone suspected of match-fixing), or rules which are impractical and unrealistic to enforce (such as the obligation for any multi-club owner to ensure the autonomy of each club's coaching and playing staff and the limitation of contacts between the clubs in the event that they play against each other, or the obligation to include in any club at least one minority shareholder capable of exercising minority shareholder's rights), or measures hard to assess and which would probably be challenged in court (such as the exclusion from competition of clubs whose owner is not a fit and proper person).

127. The Panel has already analyzed the «integrity question» and has found that, when commonly controlled clubs participate in the same competition, the consumers would reasonably perceive this situation as a conflict of interest potentially affecting the authenticity of results (supra, paras. 22-48). Accordingly, the Panel has concluded that multiple ownership of clubs in the context of the same competition is a justified cause for concern by a sports regulator and organizer such as UEFA (supra, para. 48). The Panel has also already found that the intention of the Contested Rule is to prevent the conflict of interest inherent in commonly controlled clubs participating in the same UEFA competition and to preserve the genuineness of results (supra, para. 113). In this respect, the Panel is persuaded that this is a legitimate goal to pursue, and finds evident support for this proposition in the Bosman ruling, where the EC Court stated that the aim «of maintaining a balance between clubs by preserving a certain degree of equality and uncertainty as to results ... must be accepted as legitimate» (Judgement of 15 December 1995, case C-415/93, Bosman, in E.C.R. 1995, I-4921, para. 106).
128. The Panel observes that organizing sports leagues and competitions needs a certain amount of coordination and horizontal restraints between clubs in order to supply the «product» to the consumers. As was remarked by a leading United States antitrust scholar (and later federal judge) «some activities can only be carried out jointly. Perhaps the leading example is league sports» (R.H. BORK, The antitrust paradox. A policy at war with itself, 2nd edition, New York 1993, 278). Indeed, each professional club competing in a league or in a competition has an evident interest in combining sporting and economic rivalry with sporting and economic cooperation. In the words of the Supreme Court of the United States, sport is «an industry in which horizontal restraints on competition are essential if the product is to be available at all. ... What the NCAA and its member institutions market in this case is competition itself – contests between competing institutions. Of course, this would be completely ineffective if there were no rules on which the competitors agreed to create and define the competition to be marketed. A myriad of rules affecting such matters as the side of the field, the number of players on a team, and the extent to which physical violence is to be encouraged or proscribed, all must be agreed upon, and all restrain the manner in which institutions compete. ... And the integrity of the "product" cannot be preserved except by mutual agreement» (Judgement of 27 June 1984, NCAA v. Board of Regents of the University of Oklahoma, in 468 U.S. 85, 101-102).

Advocate General Lenz basically espoused such line of reasoning when he stated that «the field of professional football is substantially different from other markets in that the clubs are mutually dependent on each other» and that «certain restrictions may be necessary to ensure the proper functioning of the sector» (Opinion delivered on 20 September 1995, case C-415/93, Bosman, in E.C.R. 1995, I-4921, para. 270).

129. The Panel is of the opinion that among the «myriad of rules» needed in order to organize a football competition, rules bound to protect public confidence in the authenticity of results appear to be of the utmost importance. The need to preserve the reputation and quality of the football product may bring about restraints on individual club owners' freedom. In this respect, the Panel sees an analogy with restraints which the Court of Justice has regarded as inherent in, and thus necessary for, franchising systems (Judgement of 28 January 1986, case 161/84, Pronuptia, in E.C.R. 1986, 353, para. 15 et seq.).

130. Given that the Panel has found that in multi-club ownership situations a problem of conflict of interest objectively exists (supra, para. 45), and that this has been found to affect the public perception of the authenticity of results (supra, para. 48), the Panel is persuaded that a rule concerning multi-club ownership is objectively necessary in order to provide the consumers with a credible sporting contest. The question is whether the Contested Rule is proportionate to the legitimate objective pursued or whether UEFA should have adopted a less restrictive means to achieve it. With regard to the principle of the «less restrictive alternative», however, the Panel is of the opinion that this does not necessarily mean that it is necessary to test the Contested Rule against any conceivable alternative. Judges should not substitute for legislators, and the former should always allow the latter to retain a certain margin of appreciation. In other words, «the principle of proportionality cannot be applied mechanically» and «the less restrictive alternative test is not an end in itself but simply facilitates the judicial enquiry» (T. TRIDIMAS, The principle of proportionality in Community law: from the rule of law to market integration, in The Irish Jurist 1996, 83, at 93-94). Such position is supported by some significant Court of Justice case law (see e.g. Judgement of 10 May 1995, case C-384/93, Alpine Investment, in E.C.R. 1995, I-1141, paras. 51-54).

131. With regard to proportionality, the Panel observes that the Contested Rule has been narrowly drawn to proscribe only the participation in the same UEFA competition of commonly controlled clubs and does not prohibit multi-club ownership as such. The Contested Rule does not proscribe the participation of commonly controlled clubs in two different UEFA competitions and does not prevent the acquisition of shares – up to 49% of the voting rights – in a large number of clubs participating in the same competition. As the scope of the Contested Rule is strictly limited to participation in the same UEFA competition, a multi-club owner can control clubs in several countries and obtain a good return on the investments even if only one of its clubs is allowed to take part in a given UEFA competition. In this respect, the already quoted MMC Report contains some evidence – referred to the British market, but arguably representative of other national markets – suggesting that the top national championship (in England the Premier League) and the national cup (in England the FA Cup) are the football competitions most preferred by consumers and most economically rewarding, because of their unique combination of volume and popularity of matches (MMC Report, para. 2.22). Indeed, in response to a 1996 British survey, 71% of pay-television subscribers who watched football said that the Premier League was very important to them and 68% said the same of the FA Cup; only 50% said the same of UEFA matches involving British clubs (ibidem). Moreover, the number of UEFA matches played by a club (even achieving the final) is substantially fewer than the number of national championship and national cup matches. Accordingly, European football clubs still derive most of their revenues from national championship and cup matches; for example, about 75% of Manchester United’s profits come from Premier League matches (ibidem, para. 2.125). In the light of the foregoing data and remarks, and of the circumstance that participation in national competitions is not affected at all, the Panel finds that the Contested Rule appears prima facie to be limited to its proper objective and not to be disproportionate or unreasonable. This prima facie conclusion needs now to be examined in the light of the less restrictive alternative test.

132. Before proceeding with the less restrictive alternative test, the Panel remarks that, as a normative technique, rules which are applied a priori differ from rules which are applied a posteriori. Rules that are applied a priori tend to prevent undesirable situations which might prove difficult or useless to deal with afterwards, rather than imposing a penalty on someone guilty of something. On the other hand, rules that are applied a posteriori are bound to react to specific behaviours. For example, under EC law and several national laws, rules on mergers are applied a priori, whereas rules on abuses of dominant position are applied a posteriori. Merger operations are checked before they actually take place, and are blocked if the outcome of the merger would be the establishment of a dominant position because of the possible negative consequences on the market and not because the individuals owning or managing the merging undertakings are particularly untrustworthy and the company after the merger is expected to abuse of its dominant position. Among the myriad of possible examples, another obvious example of rules applied a priori can be found in provisions of company law restraining cross-ownership of shares (see Article 24a of the Second Council Directive of 13 December 1976, no. 77/91/EEC, in Official Journal EC, 31 January 1977, L 26/1, as subsequently amended by Council Directive of 23 November 1992, no. 92/101/EEC, in Official Journal EC, 28 November 1992, L 347/64). One can think also of all the rules providing for incompatibility between a given position and another (say, between membership of a company’s board of directors and membership of the same company’s board of auditors). All such a priori rules are applied on a preventive basis, with no appraisal of any specific wrongdoing and no moral judgement on the individuals or companies concerned. On the other hand, rules setting forth obligations and corresponding penalties or sanctions, such as criminal or disciplinary rules, can be applied only after someone has been found guilty of having violated an obligation. In summary, a priori and a posteriori rules respond to different legal purposes and are legally complementary rather than alternative. Therefore, the Panel finds that the Contested Rule, which is clearly to be applied a priori, can be supplemented but cannot be substituted by any sporting rules establishing disciplinary sanctions or any State laws forbidding match-fixing. Therefore, such disciplinary and criminal rules cannot be «less restrictive alternatives» insofar as they are not truly «alternative» to the Contested Rule.

133. As to the other alternative means proposed by the Claimants, the Panel is not persuaded that they are viable or that they really can be considered as less restrictive. The Claimants have particularly relied on a draft document headed «Proposed measures to guarantee sporting integrity in European football competition organised by UEFA» (hereinafter «the Claimants' Proposal»). According to the Claimants' Proposal, inter alia, UEFA would be required in consultation with the relevant national association to control the ownership structure of every club wishing to participate in a UEFA competition and would be «entitled to take appropriate steps in cases where it considers that a particular individual or legal entity is not a fit and proper person to be or become an owner of a club», and could «after giving that person or legal entity a reasonable opportunity to make representations, decide that the club or clubs owned or to be owned by him or it may, subject to giving one season's notice, become ineligible to participate in European competitions».

At the hearing, the Claimants also proposed to extend this fit and proper test to clubs' directors and executives. Since one season's notice should be granted, the Claimants' Proposal would imply that every summer the UEFA offices should check the ownership structures of all the clubs (established in about fifty different legal systems) which can potentially qualify for the UEFA competitions of the following season – as said, in all the European top national divisions there are 737 clubs, of which perhaps 350 have a realistic chance of qualifying for UEFA competitions (see supra, para. 102) – and, after a legal hearing, pass moral judgements on the owners', directors' and executives' adequacy to run a football club. The Panel finds that, from a substantive point of view, it would be very difficult to come up with some objective requirements in order to fairly carry out a fit and proper test and, from a procedural point of view, the administrative costs involved and the legal risks of being sued for economic and moral damages after publicly declaring in front of the whole of Europe that someone is not a fit and proper person are practically incalculable (in this respect, as UEFA is a private body, no comparison can be made with fit and proper tests carried out by public authorities prior to granting bookmaking licences, because such public authorities are essentially immune from being sued for declaring that someone is not «fit and proper»). The Panel notes that the Court of Justice has stated, with reference to the fashion sector, that if it is too difficult to establish objective quality requirements and it is too expensive to control compliance with such requirements, some preventive restraints are acceptable and do not violate Article 81.1 (ex 85.1) of the EC Treaty (Judgement of 28 January 1986, case 161/84, Pronuptia, in E.C.R. 1986, 353, para. 21). Analogously, the Panel finds that the Claimants' Proposal would be very difficult and way too expensive to administer and cannot be regarded as a viable alternative to the Contested Rule. Moreover, hardly could a UEFA rule requiring an inherently intrusive ethical examination of clubs' owners, directors and executives be characterized as a «less restrictive» alternative.

134. The Claimants have also mentioned approvingly some of the rules adopted by national leagues with reference to multi-club ownership – in the United Kingdom: Section J.4.2 of the FA Premier League Rules, Paragraph 84.1 of the Football League Regulations, and Paragraph 13 of the Articles of Association of the Scottish Football Association; in the United States: Article 3 of the NBA Articles of Association, and Article 3, Section 3.11 of the MLB National League Constitution – because they have provision for derogation and for individual cases to be considered on their own merits. The Panel, however, upon reading such rules finds that they are in principle more restrictive than the Contested Rule, insofar as they forbid a holding of more than 10% of the shares of another club (the Premier League), or a holding of or dealing in any shares or securities of more than one club (Football League, Scottish Football Association), or a holding of any financial interest in more than one club (NBA, MLB National League). Admittedly, most of these rules provide for the possibility of trying to obtain the prior approval of the respective sports governing body. However, apart from the fact that in practice no such approval has ever been granted, it seems to the Panel that such possibility for derogation in individual cases is strictly linked to the extremely rigorous rules in force within those leagues. Support for this interpretation can be found in the NBA rules, which clearly distinguish between the mere holding of financial interests, where application for derogation is possible, and control of more than one club, which is absolutely forbidden with no provision for derogation. The Panel finds that control of more than one club taking part in the same football competition is so inherently conducive to a conflict of interest, and to the related public suspicions, that there is no scope for the examination of individual cases. In addition, any legal regime based on ad hoc authorizations would cause unpredictability and uncertainty, and every denial of authorization would in all likelihood bring about expensive litigation, such as the present one. In this respect, the Panel is of the opinion that, for the good of sports and of consumers, it is advisable that sports leagues and federations try to shape their regulations in such a way that organization and administration of sports are not permanently conditioned by the risk of being sued.
135. The Claimants have then proposed other miscellaneous measures as alternatives to the Contested Rule, but the Panel finds that they are not suitable options. One proposed measure is the enactment of rules limiting the number of clubs that the same owner can control but, as has been seen, even two commonly controlled clubs suffice to give rise to conflict of interest problems. Other proposals try to address the issue by requiring that multi-club owners divest their ownership interests in all but one of the owned clubs solely for the period of the UEFA competition. This would be done through the establishment of an independent trust to which control of commonly owned clubs could be transferred for the duration of UEFA competitions or through the appointment of an independent nominee who would exercise the owner's voting rights in its sole discretion. The Panel finds that this solution would be not only complex to administer but also quite intrusive upon the clubs' structure and management; in any event, the true problem would be that the interim suspension of control or voting rights does not modify the substantial ownership of a club, and thus does not exclude the underlying continuance of a conflict of interest. Lastly, the proposed regulations restricting bonuses and transfers of players in view of a game between two commonly owned clubs would only take care of some aspects of the conflict of interest but, in particular, would not avoid the objective problems related to the allocation of resources by the multi-club owner among its clubs (supra, para. 33 et seq.) and to the interest of third clubs (supra, para. 43).

136. In conclusion, the Panel finds that the Contested Rule is an essential feature for the organization of a professional football competition and is not more extensive than necessary to serve the fundamental goal of preventing conflicts of interest which would be publicly perceived as affecting the authenticity, and thus the uncertainty, of results in UEFA competitions. The Panel finds the Contested Rule to be proportionate to such legitimate objective and finds that no viable and realistic less restrictive alternatives exist. As a result, also in the light of the previous findings that the Contested Rule does not appear to have the object or effect of restricting competition, the Panel holds that the Contested Rule does not violate Article 81 (ex 85) of the EC Treaty.

h) Compatibility with Article 82 (ex 86) of the EC Treaty

137. The Claimants assert that UEFA is the only body empowered to organize European competitions and, consequently, holds a dominant position in the various European football markets. According to the Claimants, UEFA enjoys a position of economic strength which enables it to behave to an appreciable extent independently of the other undertakings which operate in the relevant markets, including the football clubs which participate in European competitions, and ultimately independently of supporters and spectators. The Claimants also assert that UEFA and its member associations, which normally enjoy monopoly power in their respective countries, enjoy joint dominance by virtue of their economic and legal links. The Claimants argue that the adoption of the Contested Rule constitutes an abuse of UEFA's dominant position contrary to Article 82 (ex 86) of the EC Treaty because the Contested Rule restricts competition, is unnecessary and disproportionate, unfairly discriminates between commonly controlled clubs and other clubs, and is not objectively justified. In order to support their contention that UEFA's conduct amounts to an abuse, the Claimants expressly rely on essentially the same arguments already advanced in connection with Article 81 (ex 85) of the EC Treaty.

138. The Respondent replies by denying that UEFA is in a dominant position within the meaning of Article 82 (ex 86), and in particular by denying that UEFA is able to behave independently of the clubs. The Respondent remarks that adopting a rule to preserve the integrity of the UEFA club competitions cannot amount to an abuse of a dominant position. The Respondent also asserts that the allegations concerning proportionality, discrimination and anti-competitive behaviour contain nothing new, and thus relies on the arguments advanced with reference to previous grounds.

139. The Panel notes that currently UEFA is the only pan-European regulator and administrator of football in general. However, it is not enough to state that a federation enjoys a monopolistic role in regulating and administering its sport, because this is inherent in the current European sports structure and «is recognized to be the most efficient way of organising sport» (EC Commission, The European model of sport, Brussels 1999, para. 3.2; see also CAS 96/166 K. v. FEI, preliminary award of 18 November 1997, in Digest of CAS Awards 1986-1998, op. cit., p. 371, para. 38). The Panel observes that in order to establish whether an undertaking has a dominant position, it is necessary to evaluate such dominance not in the abstract but in relation to one or more specific relevant markets. In this respect, UEFA's activities as an undertaking are developed as the sole – thus far – organizer of pan-European football competitions, retaining the related revenues from the sale of television rights for Champions' League matches and for the final match of the UEFA Cup and from the Champions' League group of sponsors. UEFA also cooperates with local undertakings (national federations or other entities) in organizing the final matches of its competitions. Revenues derived from UEFA's organization of pan-European competitions are apportioned among UEFA, including therein member national associations, and the participating clubs. In substance, UEFA can exert a dominant market power in the market for the organization of pan-European football matches and competitions.

140. In order to find an abuse of dominant position, the Panel needs to find that UEFA is seeking to overcome rival competitors through its dominant market power. In this respect, the Panel observes that if UEFA were found to exploit its market power in order, for example, to obstruct the establishment of another entity organizing pan-European football matches, this should certainly be analyzed with particular attention being paid to Article 82 (ex 86) of the EC Treaty. A case of this kind was faced by the Italian competition authority, which held that the Italian sailing federation violated Article 3 of the Italian competition statute – essentially identical to Article 82 of the EC Treaty – insofar as it used its dominant position to obstruct and boycott in various ways an independent organizer of sailing regattas with the purpose of profiting more from the organization of its own regattas (see Autorità garante della concorrenza e del mercato, Decision no. 788 of 18 November 1992, AICI/FIV, in Bollettino 22/1992). However, these theoretical and actual examples appear to bear no analogy to the enactment of the Contested Rule. The Claimants are not trying to organize pan-European competitions, nor are they selling television rights to existing pan-European competitions organized in competition with UEFA (as Media Partners would have done if the planned new pan-European football competitions, the Super League and the Pro Cup, had in fact been created outside of UEFA; see supra, para. 19).
141. The Panel has already identified the relevant product market as the market for ownership interests in football clubs capable of taking part in UEFA competitions (see supra, para. 100). The Panel observes that UEFA does not own any football club, nor can it buy or run one. Accordingly, UEFA is not present at all on this market and cannot be held to enjoy a dominant position. With respect to the relevant market it appears that UEFA may act, and has acted, only as a mere regulator. The Panel also observes that the national federations are not on the relevant market either; therefore, UEFA and its member associations do not enjoy a joint dominant position on such market. The Panel finds that, as a United States court has recognized, «if a regulation is adopted by an independent sanctioning organization with no financial stake in the outcome, a court will have maximum assurance that the regulation is to protect fair competition within the sport», (M&H Tire v. Hoosiers, 733 F.2d 973, 1st Cir. 1984, at 982-983).

142. The Claimants have pointed out that, according to EC case law, in certain circumstances an undertaking dominant on one market can commit an abuse on a neighbouring market (see Court of Justice, Judgement of 6 March 1974, cases 6-7/73, Commercial Solvents, in E.C.R. 1974, 223; AKZO, Judgement of 3 July 1991, case C-62/86, in E.C.R. 1994, I-3439; Court of First Instance, Judgement of 1 April 1993, case T-65/89, British Gypsum, in E.C.R. 1993, II-392; Judgement of 6 October 1994, case T-83/91, Tetra Pak II, in E.C.R. 1994, II-762).
143. The Panel remarks, however, that in all such EC precedents the dominant undertakings were active on both the market of dominance and the neighbouring non-dominated market. Accordingly, in order to find an abuse of dominant position on a market other than the market of dominance it must be proven that, through the abusive conduct, the dominant undertaking – or the group of dominant undertakings in the event of joint dominance – tends to extend its presence also on the other market or tends to strengthen its dominant position on the market of dominance (or at least tends to undermine the competitors’ competitiveness). In the present case, UEFA (or any national federation) is obviously not going to enter, let alone extend its presence, in the market for ownership interests in football clubs. Furthermore, the Claimants have not provided adequate evidence that UEFA, in adopting the Contested Rule, has tried to strengthen its monopolistic position on the market for the organization of pan-European football matches and competitions (nor have Claimants provided any evidence that there is conduct of this kind attributable to the national federations collectively). Besides such lack of evidence, the Panel fails to see any logical link between the rule on multi-club ownership and the alleged attempt or intent to hinder the entry into the market of a new competitor (which could be the group that has planned to establish a «Super League» or some other entity or individual who might try to create a football league in Europe modelled on United States leagues). The opposite would seem more logical, insofar as the Contested Rule tends to alienate multi-club owners and thus might eventually tend to facilitate their secession from UEFA in order to join alternative pan-European competitions or leagues (see also supra, paras. 110-113).
144. In any event, with regard to the various abuses alleged by the Claimants, the Panel observes that it has already dealt with them in connection with other grounds. The Panel has found above that the Contested Rule does not restrict competition (see supra, paras. 114-123), that it is necessary and proportionate to the objective pursued (see supra, paras. 125-136), that it does not unfairly discriminate between commonly controlled clubs and other clubs (see supra, para. 65), and that it is objectively justified (see supra, para. 130).
145. In conclusion, the Panel holds that the adoption by UEFA of the Contested Rule has not constituted an abuse of an individual or a collective dominant position within the meaning of Article 82 (ex 86) of the EC Treaty.

Swiss competition law: articles 5 and 7 of the Federal Act on Cartels

146. Article 5.1 of the «Loi fédérale sur les cartels et autres restrictions à la concurrence» of 6 October 1995 (i.e. the Swiss Federal Act on Cartels and Other Restraints of Competition, hereinafter «Swiss Cartel Act») reads as follows:

«Les accords qui affectent de manière notable la concurrence sur le marché de certains biens ou services et qui ne sont pas justifiés par des motifs d'efficacité économique, ainsi que tous ceux qui conduisent à la suppression d'une concurrence efficace, sont illicites» («All agreements which significantly affect competition in the market for certain goods or services and are not justified on grounds of economic efficiency and all agreements that lead to the suppression of effective competition are unlawful»).

It is a provision which essentially corresponds to Article 81 (ex 85) of the EC Treaty (supra, para. 71).

147. Article 7.1 of the Swiss Cartel Act reads as follows:

«Les pratiques d'entreprises ayant une position dominante sont réputées illicites lorsque celles-ci abusent de leur position et entravent ainsi l'accès d'autres entreprises à la concurrence ou son exercice, ou désavantagent les partenaires commerciaux» («Practices of undertakings having a dominant position are deemed unlawful when such undertakings, through the abuse of their position, prevent other undertakings from entering or competing in the market or when they injure trading partners»).

This provision essentially corresponds to Article 82 (ex 86) of the EC Treaty (supra, para. 71).

148. With respect to the relevance of the Swiss Cartel Act, the Claimants have remarked that the Contested Rule affects trade within Switzerland in that Swiss football clubs are eligible to compete in, and do compete in, UEFA competitions; moreover, the Swiss club FC Basel is currently controlled by ENIC. The Respondent has not objected to the possible relevance of the Swiss Cartel Act in the present dispute. Both the Claimants and the Respondent have essentially relied on the analysis developed with reference to Article 81 (ex 85) and 82 (ex 86) of the EC Treaty. The only alleged difference with EC law is that, according to the Claimants, there is no «sporting exception» in Switzerland but only a very narrow exemption (to be interpreted quite rigorously) for the «rules of the game» vis-à-vis the «rules of law», which cannot be applied in the present case. The Respondent agrees with the Claimants that the Contested Rule cannot be considered as a «rule of the game» under Swiss law, but contends that Swiss competition law is not more restrictive than EC competition law and, therefore, limitations which are introduced with the sole aim of guaranteeing or enhancing sporting quality of competitions can be justified by a sort of sporting exception.
149. With regard to the «sporting exception», the Panel notes that it has already excluded that it can serve the purpose of exempting the Contested Rule from the application of competition rules (supra, para. 83). Consequently, the Panel need not rule on whether such an exception exists under Swiss competition law or not. Furthermore, the Panel observes that, in the light of the textual similarities and the conceptual correspondence of Swiss competition law to EC competition law, the above findings concerning Articles 81 (supra, paras. 109-136) and 82 of the EC Treaty (supra, paras. 137-145) are applicable mutatis mutandis to Articles 5 and 7 of the Swiss Cartel Act. With particular regard to Article 5, the Panel remarks that the envisaged oligopoly scenario (supra, para. 117) is much more likely within a small market such as Switzerland, where there are not many teams aspiring to participate in UEFA competitions; indeed, there are only twelve clubs in the Swiss first division. Therefore, the described pro-competitive effect of the Contested Rule is even amplified within the Swiss market. As a result, the Panel holds that, within the Swiss market, the Contested Rule does not significantly restrict competition within the meaning of Article 5 of the Swiss Cartel Act, nor does it constitute an abuse of dominant position within the meaning of Article 7 of the Swiss Cartel Act.

European community law on the right of establishment and on free movement of capital

150. Article 43 (ex 52) of the EC Treaty prohibits «restrictions on the freedom of establishment of nationals of a member State in the territory of another Member State». Under Article 56 (ex 73 B) all restrictions on movement of capital and on payments within the Community and between the Member States and third countries are prohibited. Both provisions are directly effective and can therefore be applied by national tribunals or arbitration courts.

151. The Claimants assert that the essence of the Contested Rule is to restrict the possibility of multi-club owners setting up subsidiaries in more than one EC Member State, in violation of Article 43 (ex 52) of the EC Treaty. The Claimants also assert that the Contested Rule restricts capital movements within the meaning of Article 56 (ex 73 B) of the EC Treaty. The Respondent replies that the Contested Rule, even if caught by such EC provisions, would not infringe them because it is a proportionate means to achieve a legitimate objective.

152. The Panel observes that the Contested Rule does not entail any discrimination based on a person's (or corporation's) nationality; therefore, under EC law jargon, it can be characterized as an «equally applicable measure». As a result, even assuming that the Contested Rule somewhat restricts the right of establishment or the free movement of capital, EC case law envisages the existence of justifications on grounds of reasonableness and public interest, provided that the requirements of necessity and proportionality are met (see supra, para. 130).

153. As the Panel has already noted, the Court of Justice has stated that «in view of the considerable social importance of sporting activities and in particular football in the Community, the aims of maintaining a balance between clubs by preserving a certain degree of equality and uncertainty as to results ... must be accepted as legitimate» (Judgement of 15 December 1995, case C-415/93, Bosman, in E.C.R. 1995, I-4921, para. 106).

Therefore, the aim of the Contested Rule of preserving the authenticity and uncertainty of results – by preventing the conflict of interest inherent in commonly owned clubs participating in the same football competition – is certainly to be considered in principle as a legitimate justification, as long as the aim is pursued through necessary and proportionate means.

154. The Panel has already found that the Contested Rule meets the requirements of objective necessity and of proportionality (see supra, paras. 125-136). Consequently, the Panel holds that the Contested Rule does not infringe Article 43 (ex 52) and Article 56 (ex 73 B) of the EC Treaty.

General principle of law

155. The Claimants assert that it is a general principle of law that a quasi-public body exercising regulatory powers, such as an international federation, must not abuse its powers. The Claimants argue that in adopting the Contested Rule UEFA has abused its powers because it has tried to protect its monopoly power over the organization of pan-European football competitions. The Respondent rejects this allegation.

156. The Panel is of the opinion that all sporting institutions, and in particular all international federations, must abide by general principles of law. Due to the transnational nature of sporting competitions, the effects of the conduct and deeds of international federations are felt in a sporting community throughout various countries. Therefore, the substantive and procedural rules to be respected by international federations cannot be reduced only to its own statutes and regulations and to the laws of the country where the federation is incorporated or of the country where its headquarters are. Sports law has developed and consolidated along the years, particularly through the arbitral settlement of disputes, a set of unwritten legal principles – a sort of lex mercatoria for sports or, so to speak, a lex ludica – to which national and international sports federations must conform, regardless of the presence of such principles within their own statutes and regulations or within any applicable national law, provided that they do not conflict with any national «public policy» («ordre public») provision applicable to a given case. Certainly, general principles of law drawn from a comparative or common denominator reading of various domestic legal systems and, in particular, the prohibition of arbitrary or unreasonable rules and measures can be deemed to be part of such lex ludica. For example, in the CAS award FIN/FINA the Panel held that it could intervene in the sanction imposed by the international swimming federation (FINA)

«if the rules adopted by the FINA Bureau are contrary to the general principles of law, if their application is arbitrary, or if the sanctions provided by the rules can be deemed excessive or unfair on their face» (CAS 96/157 FIN v. FINA, award of 23 April 1997, in Digest of CAS Awards 1986-1998, op. cit., p. 358, para. 22; see also CAS OG 96/006 M. v. AIBA, award of 1 August 1996, ibidem, p. 415, para. 13).

157. The Panel, on the basis of previous remarks, finds that UEFA did not adopt the Contested Rule with the purpose of protecting its monopoly power over the organization of pan-

European football competitions (see supra, paras. 110-113 and 143), and finds that the Contested Rule is not arbitrary nor unreasonable (see supra, paras. 48 and 125-136). Therefore, with regard to the substantive content of the Contested Rule, the Panel holds that UEFA did not abuse its regulatory power and did not violate any general principle of law.

158. The Panel observes, however, that under CAS jurisprudence the principle of procedural fairness is surely among the unwritten principles of sports law to be complied with by international federations (see CAS OG 96/001 US Swimming v. FINA, award of 22 July 1996, in Digest of CAS Awards 1986-1998, op. cit., p. 381, para. 15; CAS 96/153 Watt v. ACF, award of 22 July 1996, ibidem, p. 341, para. 10). The Panel has already found that UEFA violated its duty of procedural fairness because it adopted the Contested Rule too late, when the Cup Regulations for the 1998/99 season, containing no restriction for multiple ownership, had already been issued and communicated to the interested football clubs (see supra, para. 61). The Panel has also already remarked that such procedural defect by itself does not warrant the permanent annulment of the Contested Rule (see supra, para. 62). Therefore, as is going to be seen (infra, paras. 159-163), the said lack of procedural fairness will have some consequences only in connection with the temporal effects of this award.

Temporal effects of this award

159. The Panel, approving the CAS interim order of 16 July 1998, has held that UEFA violated its duties of procedural fairness with respect to the 1998/99 season, insofar as it modified the participation requirements for the UEFA Cup at an exceedingly late stage, after such requirements had been publicly announced and the clubs entitled to compete had already been designated (see supra, paras. 60-62 and 158). This procedural defect caused the above-mentioned interim suspension of the Contested Rule, freezing the situation as it was before the enactment of the Contested Rule.
160. These proceedings then required more than one whole year to fully develop and come to an end with this award. The interim order appropriately remarked: «At this preliminary stage, CAS is further of the opinion that the outcome of the Claimants' action is uncertain» (CAS Procedural Order of 16-17 July 1998, para. 69). The number and complexity of the issues involved and the wide-ranging nature of the dispute have all along given the proceedings a state of uncertainty as to the outcome of the present case. With the release of the present award the CAS ends such state of uncertainty. However, the 1999/2000 football season has already begun and an immediate application of the Contested Rule for this season might involve for some clubs a sudden loss of their eligibility to participate in UEFA competitions (eligibility obtained on the basis of their results in 1998/99 national championships, at a time when the Contested Rule was not in force because of the interim order and there was uncertainty as to the outcome of this case).
161. Moreover, in their written briefs and oral arguments, the Claimants have drawn the Panel's attention to the harmful consequences which might ensue for them and for ENIC from an award rejecting their petitions. The interim order already stated (see CAS Procedural Order of 16-17 July 1998, para. 54) that an adjustment to the Contested Rule should not be arranged hurriedly, and commonly controlled clubs and their owners should have some time to determine their course of action, also taking into account possible legal questions (e.g. if shares are to be sold, minority shareholders may be entitled to exercise preemptive rights within given deadlines). There is an obvious need for a reasonable period of time before entry into force, or else the implementation of the Contested Rule may turn out to be excessively detrimental to commonly controlled clubs and their owners.

162. The Panel considers that an immediate application of the effects of the award could be unreasonably harmful to commonly owned clubs which during the recently terminated 1998/99 season have qualified for one of the 1999/2000 UEFA competitions. Such clubs, if any, would find themselves in the same situation as they were in when the CAS rightly stayed the implementation of the Contested Rule. If UEFA had announced in the Summer of 1998 that the Contested Rule was going to be implemented at the beginning of the 1999/2000 football season, no club could have later claimed to have legitimate expectations with respect to the treatment of multi-club ownership. In other words, without a ruling on the temporal effects of this award, the Panel would not give sufficient weight to the procedural defect which occurred in the adoption of the Contested Rule.

163. In conclusion, paramount considerations of fairness and legal certainty, needed in any legal system, militate against allowing UEFA to implement immediately the Contested Rule in the 1999/2000 football season which has already begun. Accordingly, the Panel partially upholds the Claimants' petition to extend the stay of the Contested Rule, and deems it appropriate to extend such stay until the end of the current 1999/2000 football season; for the remaining part, the petition for an indefinite extension of the stay is rejected. As a result, the Panel holds that the Contested Rule can be implemented by UEFA starting from the 2000/2001 football season.

The Court of Arbitration for Sport:

1. Rejects the petitions by AEK Athens and Slavia Prague to declare void or to annul the resolution adopted by UEFA on 19 May 1998 on the «Integrity of the UEFA Club Competitions: Independence of the Clubs».

2. Partially upholding the petition by AEK Athens and Slavia Prague to extend indefinitely the interim stay ordered by the CAS on 16 July 1998, orders the extension of the stay until the end of the 1999/2000 football season and, accordingly, orders UEFA not to deny admission to or exclude clubs from the 1999/2000 UEFA club competitions on the ground that they are under common control; consequently, UEFA is permitted to implement its resolution of 19 May 1998 starting from the 2000/2001 football season.

3. Rejects all other petitions lodged by AEK Athens and Slavia Prague.

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-70

International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes

1818 H Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20433, U.S.A.
Telephone: (202) 458-1534 Faxes: (202) 522-2615/2027
Website: www.worldbank.org/icsid

CERTIFICATE

Plama Consortium Limited

v.

Republic of Bulgaria

(ICSID Case No. ARB/03/24)

I hereby certify that the attached is a true copy of the Award of the Arbitral Tribunal, dated August 27, 2008.

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'Nassib G. Ziadé', with a stylized flourish at the end.

Nassib G. Ziadé
Acting Secretary-General

Washington, D.C., August 27, 2008

INTERNATIONAL CENTRE FOR SETTLEMENT OF INVESTMENT DISPUTES
WASHINGTON, D.C.

IN THE PROCEEDINGS BETWEEN

PLAMA CONSORTIUM LIMITED
(CLAIMANT)

and

REPUBLIC of BULGARIA
(RESPONDENT)

(ICSID Case No. ARB/03/24)

---

AWARD

---

Members of the Tribunal
Carl F. Salans, President
Professor Albert Jan van den Berg, Arbitrator
V.V. Veeder, Arbitrator

Administrative Assistant to the Tribunal
Ms. Anne Secomb

Representing Claimant

Mr. Frank H. Penski
Ms. Abigail Reardon
Nixon Peabody LLP
Mr. Ciril Pelovski
Denev & Oysolov Law Office

Representing Respondent

Mr. Ivan Kondov
Head of the Judicial Protection of the Ministry of Finance of the Republic of Bulgaria
Mr. Paul D. Friedland
Ms. Carolyn B. Lamm
Ms. Abby Cohen Smutny
Mr. Jonathan C. Hamilton
Mr. Francis A. Vasquez, Jr.
White & Case LLP
Mr. Lazar Tomov
Tomov & Tomov

Date of dispatch to the Parties: [August 27, 2008]

TABLE OF CONTENTS

I.	INTRODUCTION .....	4
II.	PROCEDURE.....	5
	A. Registration of the Request for Arbitration .....	5
	B. Constitution of the Arbitral Tribunal and Commencement of the Proceedings.....	6
	C. Written and Oral Procedures.....	7
III.	SUMMARY OF THE DISPUTE .....	16
	A. The Refinery’s Acquisition.....	16
	B. The Refinery’s Operation and the Bankruptcy .....	19
	C. The Dispute.....	21
IV.	PRELIMINARY DISCUSSION: CLAIMANT’S ‘OWNERSHIP’ AND ‘CONTROL’ AND THE ALLEGATIONS OF MISREPRESENTATION.....	21
	A. Is Respondent Entitled to Deny the Advantages of Part III of the ECT to Claimant under Article 17(1)?.....	22
	B. Misrepresentation.....	26
	1. Parties’ Positions.....	26
	2. The Requirement of Approval by the Privatization Agency.....	31
	3. The Occurrence of Misrepresentation.....	32
	4. The Consequences of the Misrepresentation .....	36
V.	DISCUSSION OF THE ISSUES – CLAIMANT’S CLAIMS ON THE MERITS.....	43
	A. Summary of the Contentions of the Parties and Relief Sought .....	43
	1. Claimant’s Position.....	43
	2. Respondent’s Position.....	47
	B. The ECT Protections Invoked by Claimant.....	49
	1. Protections provided in Article 10(1).....	51
	1.1 Stable, Equitable, Favorable and Transparent Conditions.....	52
	1.2 Fair and Equitable Treatment.....	53
	1.3 Constant Protection and Security.....	55
	1.4 Unreasonable and Discriminatory Measures .....	56
	1.5 Obligations Undertaken Towards Investors.....	57
	2. Protections Provided in Article 13.....	58
	C. Analysis of the Alleged Violations.....	60
	1. Environmental Damages.....	60

1.1	The Parties' Positions .....	60
1.2	The Tribunal's Analysis.....	66
2.	Actions of the Syndics .....	71
2.1	Irregularities in the Appointment of the Syndics.....	71
2.2	Unlawful Increases in the Salaries of Nova Plama's Workers .....	71
2.3	Overloading of Debt by the Syndics.....	72
2.4	Misappropriation of Nova Plama's Funds .....	72
2.5	Worker Riots.....	73
2.6	Parallel Recovery Plan.....	73
2.7	The Tribunal's Analysis.....	75
3.	Paper Profits.....	78
3.1	The Parties' Positions .....	78
3.2	The Tribunal's Analysis.....	80
4.	Varna Port .....	83
4.1	The Parties' Positions .....	83
4.2	The Tribunal's Analysis.....	84
5.	Biochim Bank .....	87
5.1	The Parties' Positions .....	87
5.2	The Tribunal's Analysis.....	90
6.	Re-opened Bankruptcy Proceedings .....	92
D.	Concluding Observations.....	92
E.	Damages.....	92
F.	Costs.....	93
VI.	DISPOSITIVE .....	97

ANNEX

I. INTRODUCTION

1. The present arbitration arises under the Energy Charter Treaty (“ECT” or the “Treaty”), a multilateral convention whose purpose, according to Article 2 thereof, is to establish a legal framework in order to promote long-term cooperation in the energy sector. In Article 10 of Part III of the ECT, Contracting States undertake the obligation to encourage and create stable, equitable, favorable and transparent conditions for Investments of Investors (as those terms are defined in the ECT -- see Annex) of other Contracting States.
2. The conditions include a commitment to accord at all times to Investments of Investors of other Contracting States “fair and equitable treatment,” “the most constant protection and security” and treatment no less favorable than that required by international law. The Contracting Parties further undertake not to impair in any way by unreasonable or discriminatory measures the management, maintenance, use, enjoyment or disposal of Investments and to observe any obligations they have entered into with an Investor or an Investment of an Investor of another Contracting State. Article 13 prohibits expropriation “or measures having effect equivalent to [...] expropriation,” except in certain circumstances and subject to certain conditions. By Article 17 of the ECT, which is also found in Part III, Contracting States reserve the right to deny the advantages of Part III to a legal entity if citizens or nationals of a third State own or control that entity and if that entity has no substantial business activities in the area of the Contracting Party in which it is organized.<sup>1</sup> Part V of the ECT provides for dispute resolution, and its Article 26 permits, inter alia, Investors to resort to arbitration pursuant to the ICSID Convention concerning alleged breaches by a Contracting State of an obligation under Part III.

---

<sup>1</sup> Bulgaria denied the protections of the ECT to Claimant, prospectively, from 18 February 2003. See paragraph 21 below and the discussion in the Decision on Jurisdiction, pp. 50 et seq.

3. Because they are referred to in the Parties' submissions and in this Award, the texts of the relevant provisions of the ECT are set forth in the Annex to this Award.

II. PROCEDURE

A. Registration of the Request for Arbitration

4. On 6 January 2003, the International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes ("ICSID" or "the Centre") received a request for arbitration dated 24 December 2002 ("Request for Arbitration") from Plama Consortium Limited ("PCL" or "Claimant"), a Cypriot company, with its address at 4 Tenarou Street, Ayios Dometios, Nicosia, Cyprus, against the Republic of Bulgaria ("Bulgaria" or "Respondent"). The two parties together are referred to as "the Parties." The Request for Arbitration invoked the ICSID arbitration provisions of the ECT and the most favored nation ("MFN") provision of a bilateral investment treaty ("BIT") concluded in 1987 between the Government of the Republic of Cyprus and the Government of the People's Republic of Bulgaria ("the BIT"), which allegedly imported into the BIT the ICSID arbitration provisions of other BITs concluded by Bulgaria, in particular the Bulgaria – Finland BIT.
5. The Centre, on 14 January 2003, in accordance with Rule 5 of the ICSID Rules of Procedure for the Institution of Conciliation and Arbitration Proceedings ("ICSID Institution Rules"), acknowledged receipt of the Request for Arbitration and, on the same day, transmitted a copy to Bulgaria and to the Bulgarian Embassy in Washington, D.C., USA.
6. There ensued exchanges of correspondence between the Parties and the Acting Secretary-General of ICSID concerning the jurisdiction of ICSID over the Request for Arbitration and its registerability under Article 36(3) of the Convention on the Settlement of Investment Disputes Between States and Nationals of Other States ("the ICSID Convention") and ICSID Institution Rules 6 and 7.
7. On 17 April 2003, Claimant filed a Supplement to Request for Arbitration dated 6 April 2003. The Centre acknowledged receipt of the Supplement to Request for Arbitration on 17 April 2003 and, on the same day, transmitted a copy to Bulgaria and to the Bulgarian Embassy in Washington, D.C.

8. Upon requests from both Parties, the Centre deferred registration. A further postponement of registration was sought by Respondent on 12 August 2003 but was opposed by Claimant.
9. The Request for Arbitration, as supplemented, was registered by the Centre on 19 August 2003, pursuant to Article 36(3) of the ICSID Convention and, on the same day, the Acting Secretary-General, in accordance with ICSID Institution Rule 7, notified the Parties of the registration and invited them to proceed to constitute an Arbitral Tribunal as soon as possible.
10. By letter of 12 June 2003, Emmanuel Gaillard and John Savage of the law firm Shearman & Sterling LLP<sup>2</sup> informed the Centre that they had been retained to represent Claimant, replacing Christian Nordtømme in these proceedings. Claimant further advised that it was also represented by Ciril Pelovski of the law firm Denev & Oysolov. On 20 August 2003, Respondent informed the Centre that it had retained as Counsel in the proceedings Paul D. Friedland, Carolyn B. Lamm and Abby Cohen Smutny of the law firm White & Case LLP. By a letter of 25 March 2004, Respondent further indicated having retained Lazar Tomov of the law firm Tomov & Tomov.

B. Constitution of the Arbitral Tribunal and Commencement of the Proceedings

11. Following the registration of the Request for Arbitration by the Centre, the Parties agreed on a three-member arbitral tribunal (the “Arbitral Tribunal” or the “Tribunal”). The Parties agreed that each of them would appoint an arbitrator and that the third arbitrator, who would be the President of the Tribunal, would be appointed by agreement of the Parties. The Parties agreed that the Centre would appoint the President of the Arbitral Tribunal should they fail to agree on the presiding arbitrator.

---

<sup>2</sup> Subsequently, Shearman & Sterling was succeeded as Counsel to Claimant by Virginie Colaiuta and, thereafter, by the law firm Nixon Peabody LLP, see infra, paragraphs 38 and 45.

16. At that first session of the Arbitral Tribunal held in Paris on 25 March 2004, the Parties reiterated their agreement on the points communicated to the Tribunal in their joint letter of 19 March 2004, and the remainder of the procedural issues on the agenda for the session were discussed and agreed. All the conclusions were reflected in the written minutes of the session, signed by the President and the Secretary of the Arbitral Tribunal and provided to the Parties, as well as all members of the Tribunal. It was agreed that Respondent's objections to jurisdiction would be treated as a preliminary question. A schedule for the filing of memorials and for the holding of a hearing on jurisdiction in Paris on 20 and 21 September 2004 was agreed.
17. Pursuant to the agreed schedule, Respondent filed a Memorial on Jurisdiction on 26 May 2004. In support of its Memorial, Respondent submitted written statements of MM. Rudolph Dolzer, Charles Kerins, Sean McWeeney, Elias A. Neocleous, Timothy O'Neill, Christo Tepavitcharov and Thomas W. Wälde, accompanied by a further copy of Mr. Jean Christophe Vautrin's first declaration.<sup>4</sup> Claimant submitted a Counter-Memorial on Jurisdiction dated 25 June 2004, supported by Mr. Jean Christophe Vautrin's second declaration and a declaration from Mr. Jacques Python. This was followed, on 26 July 2004, by a Reply on Jurisdiction from Respondent, accompanied by statements from MM. Stanislav Ananiev, Alexander D. Boshkov, Elias A. Neocleous, Plamen Oresharski, Todor Marinov Palazov, Tencho Ivanov Tenev, Nikolay Vassilev and Milen Veltchev. Claimant's Rejoinder on Jurisdiction, dated 26 August 2004, supported by Mr. Jean Christophe Vautrin's third declaration, was received by the Centre on 30 August 2004.
18. On 26 July 2004, Respondent submitted to the Arbitral Tribunal a request for the production of documents by Claimant. By letter dated 6 August 2004, Claimant opposed that request. After considering the views of the Parties, the Arbitral Tribunal, on 11 August 2004, issued Procedural Order No. 1 directing Claimant to produce all documents falling within the categories listed in the

---

<sup>4</sup> Mr. Vautrin's first declaration had been submitted earlier by Claimant's Counsel at the Tribunal's first session of 25 March 2004.

Order, no later than with the filing of its Rejoinder on Jurisdiction. Claimant filed certain documents with its Rejoinder of 26 August 2004. Further to a request for extension made on 17 August 2004, which was accepted by Respondent, Claimant submitted to Respondent, under cover of a letter dated 6 September 2004, other documents pursuant to the Tribunal's Order. Claimant produced an additional set of documents by letter dated 13 September 2004.

19. An oral hearing on the preliminary question of jurisdiction was held in Paris on 20 and 21 September 2004. Counsel for both Parties addressed the Tribunal. One witness, Mr. Jean-Christophe Vautrin, testified orally for Claimant.
20. On 22 October 2004, Respondent filed a Post-Hearing Submission on Jurisdiction, to which Claimant responded by its Post-Hearing Response on Jurisdiction of 19 November 2004. On 3 December 2004, Respondent filed a Post-Hearing Reply on Jurisdiction.
21. On 8 February 2005, the Arbitral Tribunal rendered its Decision on Jurisdiction. In the operative part, it ruled as follows:
  - A. As to the jurisdictional issues with respect to the ECT:
    - (1) Under Article 26 ECT and the ICSID Convention, the Tribunal has jurisdiction to decide on the merits the Claimant's claims against the Respondent for alleged breaches of Part III of the ECT.
    - (2) Article 17(1) ECT has no relevance to the Tribunal's jurisdiction to determine the Claimant's claims against the Respondent under Part III of the ECT.
  - B. As to the merits of the Respondent's case under Article 17(1) ECT:
    - (1) Article 17(1) requires the Contracting State to exercise its right of denial and such exercise operates with prospective effect only, as it did in this case from the Respondent's exercise by letter of 18 February 2003.

- (2) The second limb of Article 17(1) regarding “no substantial business activities” is met to the Tribunal’s satisfaction in favor of the Respondent; and
- (3) The Tribunal declines for the time being to decide the first limb of Article 17(1) regarding the Claimant’s “ownership” and “control.”
- C. The most favored nation provision of the Bulgaria-Cyprus BIT, read with other BITs to which Bulgaria is a Contracting Party (in particular the Bulgaria-Finland BIT), cannot be interpreted as providing the Respondent’s consent to submit the dispute with the Claimant under the Bulgaria-Cyprus BIT to ICSID arbitration or entitling the Claimant to rely in the present case on dispute settlement provisions contained in these other BITs.
- D. The Tribunal rejects the Respondent’s application to suspend the proceedings pending the final outcome of the litigation concerning Dolsamex and Mr. O’Neill.
- E. The arbitration will now move to the second phase, that is, an examination of the parties’ claims on the merits.
- F. A decision on costs is deferred to the second phase of the arbitration on the merits.

This decision is incorporated by reference into the present award (collectively the “Award”).

- 22. The Parties then agreed on a procedural timetable for the merits phase, which was reflected in Procedural Order No. 2 dated 31 March 2005. On the same date, the Centre sent to the Parties new certified copies of the Decision on Jurisdiction correcting a clerical error at paragraph 55 of the Decision.
- 23. On 29 July 2005, Claimant filed a Request for Urgent Provisional Measures in accordance with ICSID Arbitration Rule 39, seeking urgent recommendations of provisional measures pursuant to Article 47 of the ICSID Convention. Claimant sought an order recommending that, inter alia, (1) Respondent immediately discontinue and/or cause to be discontinued all pending proceedings and refrain from bringing or participating in any future proceedings before the Bulgarian courts and Bulgarian authorities relating in any way to this ICSID arbitration; and (2) Respondent take no action that might aggravate or further extend the dispute.

24. On 19 August 2005, Respondent filed its Opposition to Claimant's Request for Urgent Provisional Measures, contending that the relief sought by Claimant was unnecessary because Claimant had failed to demonstrate that its rights in this ICSID arbitration would be irreparably harmed without the measures it sought.
25. This was followed by Claimant's Response to Respondent's Opposition to Claimant's Request for Urgent Provisional Measures dated 25 August 2005, and Respondent's Rejoinder to Claimant's Request for Urgent Provisional Measures dated 31 August 2005. A procedural meeting by telephone conference with the Parties' Counsel followed on 1 September 2005, during which the Arbitral Tribunal put various questions to Counsel and discussed the procedure and timetable for rendering the order on provisional measures.
26. On 6 September 2005, the Arbitral Tribunal issued an Order rejecting Claimant's Request for Urgent Provisional Measures in its entirety and reserving its decision on the costs resulting from the foregoing procedure to a later stage of the arbitration.
27. Following Claimant's request of 30 September 2005, the Arbitral Tribunal granted to Claimant a four-week extension of time to submit its Memorial on the Merits and issued, on 6 October 2005, Procedural Order No. 3, which modified the procedural calendar set forth in Procedural Order No. 2 for the filing of submissions on the merits.
28. Accordingly, Claimant filed its Memorial on the Merits on 28 October 2005, supported by the fourth written declaration of Mr. Jean Christophe Vautrin as well as written declarations by Mr. Vladimir Lazarov and Mr. Dimitar Stefanov and expert reports by MM. Robert Duchesne, Nikolay Todorov Dikov and Lyubomir Denev. On 22 December 2005, Claimant sent English translations of some of the exhibits to its Memorial on the Merits and asked the members of the Arbitral Tribunal to incorporate into their respective copies of the Memorial corrections of some clerical errors therein.

29. On 7 February 2006, Respondent asked Claimant to produce certain documents by 28 February 2006. Although not within the time frame requested by Respondent, Claimant did submit numerous responsive documents but objected to some of Respondent's requests.
30. By e-mail and facsimile of 21 April 2006, Respondent requested an order from the Arbitral Tribunal calling upon Claimant to produce, by 5 May 2006, various documents set forth in its request of 7 February 2006 which Claimant had failed to produce.
31. After further correspondence on this subject between the Parties and considering their respective positions, the Tribunal issued Procedural Order No. 4 on 27 April 2006, directing Claimant to produce to Respondent additional documents.
32. By letter dated 22 May 2006, Respondent requested a modification of the procedural timetable, to which Claimant agreed. On 26 May 2006, the Arbitral Tribunal issued Procedural Order No. 5 to modify, as per the Parties' agreement, certain dates for the filing of submissions in the merits phase set forth in Procedural Order No. 3.
33. Following the execution by the Parties of a confidentiality agreement, Claimant further produced, on 16 June 2006, two confidential documents.
34. On 28 July 2006, Respondent filed its Counter-Memorial on the Merits supported by statements from MM. Kaloyan Vassilev Bonev, Milcho Dimitrov Boyadzhiev, Doncho Brainov, Hristo Dimitrov, Chavdar Georgiev Georgiev, Georgi Ivanov Georgiev, Roumen Georgiev Hristov, Bojko Iliev, Krassimir Vutev Katev, Nikolay Kavardzhikliev, Lyubka Kostova, Nikola Djipov Nikolov, Nikolai Marinov Nikolov, Lyudmil Zhivkov Parvanov, Ognyan Viktorov Petkov, Aksinia Stoyanova Slavcheva, Lilia Nikolova Smokova, Tencho Ivanov Tenev, Tsvetan Tsekov, Maria Lyubenova Tsekova, Nikolay Vassilev and Svetoslav Yordanov and accompanied by legal opinions of Mr. Teodor Antonov Chipev and Professor Metody Markov as well as reports by Gaffney, Cline & Associates, Navigant Consulting, Inc. and Transacta OOD.

35. By letter dated 10 September 2006, Claimant notified the Tribunal and Respondent that Shearman & Sterling was no longer acting as Claimant's legal Counsel in this arbitration and requested an extension of three months for filing its Reply and such further adjustments to the procedural calendar as would consequently be required.
36. In a letter of 14 September 2006, Respondent objected to this request but urged the Arbitral Tribunal, if it should, nevertheless, grant Claimant's request, to do so only on the condition that Claimant post security in the form of a bond in the amount of no less than USD 2,000,000 against an award of costs in Respondent's favor.
37. On 20 September 2006, the Arbitral Tribunal issued Procedural Order No. 6 in which it (1) agreed in principle to grant a maximum three-month extension of time to Claimant for the filing of its Reply from the date of Claimant's request, (2) urged Claimant to act with the utmost diligence in appointing new Counsel, (3) stated that it would decide the consequent modification of the procedural calendar after discussion with the Parties' Counsel, including Claimant's new Counsel, in a conference call during which the Tribunal would also hear the Parties' arguments regarding Respondent's request that Claimant be ordered to post security for costs, and (4) invited Claimant to submit, by 6 October 2006, any comments it wished to make concerning Respondent's request for security for costs.
38. On 18 December 2006, Claimant informed ICSID that it had appointed new Counsel to represent it in the person of Virginie A. Colaiuta, 25 Boulevard de l'Amiral Bruix, 75782 Paris Cedex 16, France.<sup>5</sup>
39. There ensued correspondence between the Parties and the Arbitral Tribunal in which, among other matters, Respondent requested an increase in the amount of the security for costs that Claimant be ordered to post to USD 9,000,000 and, in addition, requested that any further proceedings in this arbitration be limited to the oral hearing, contending that Claimant had foregone its right to file any additional written submissions by failing to file its Reply by the deadline fixed in Procedural Order No. 6.

---

<sup>5</sup> Ms. Colaiuta's address was subsequently changed to 9 rue de Picardie, 75003 Paris, France.

40. It proved difficult to find an early common date for the procedural meeting by conference call envisaged in Procedural Order No. 6. Consequently, the Tribunal organized a meeting in person with the Parties in Paris on 16 February 2007 to discuss Respondent's requests to limit the written phase of these proceedings and to order Claimant to post a bond as security for costs, as well as to fix a time schedule for the future conduct of the arbitration.
41. After hearing presentations by the Parties' Counsel on Respondent's request to limit the proceedings, the Tribunal decided not to grant that request. It communicated that decision to the Parties in writing by Procedural Order No. 8, dated 21 February 2007. The Tribunal next heard the Parties' arguments regarding security for costs. The Parties and the Tribunal then discussed the further steps in these proceedings, the result of which was agreement on a procedural calendar, communicated to the Parties in Procedural Order No. 7 on 21 February 2007. Following the meeting, the Arbitral Tribunal issued Procedural Order No. 9 on 28 February 2007, denying Respondent's request for security for costs. ICSID issued summary minutes of the meeting.
42. Pursuant to Procedural Order No. 7, Claimant made requests to Respondent for the production of documents. With respect to those requests regarding which the Parties could not agree, the Arbitral Tribunal issued Procedural Order No. 10 deciding upon the various document production requests at issue. In an accompanying letter, the Tribunal denied Claimant's request for additional time to file its Reply.
43. By Procedural Order No. 11, the Arbitral Tribunal extended Claimant's time to file its Reply by a few days.
44. Claimant filed its Reply to Respondent's Counter-Memorial on 11 April 2007, together with a second expert report by Mr. Duchesne.
45. In a letter of 25 May 2007, Ms. Colaiuta informed the Arbitral Tribunal that she was withdrawing as Counsel to Claimant. The Tribunal was subsequently advised that the law firm Nixon Peabody LLP, of 437 Madison Avenue, NY, NY, USA had been appointed by Claimant as its new Counsel.

46. Respondent submitted a Rejoinder on the Merits, dated 27 July 2007, accompanied by written statements of MM. Ivan Iskrov, Alexander Rakov, Nikloay Vassilev and Svetoslav Yordanov, as well as a legal opinion of Mr. Teodor Antonov Chipev, an expert report of Ms. Villy Dashinova-Stefanova, a supplemental expert report of Gaffney, Cline & Associates, a supplemental legal opinion of Professor Metody Markov and a second expert report of Navigant Consulting, Inc.
47. A procedural meeting by telephone conference with the Parties and the Arbitral Tribunal took place on 22 October 2007 for the purpose of preparing the hearing scheduled for January – February 2008 and to address certain other procedural matters. Prior to that conference, the Tribunal circulated to the Parties an agenda and requested the Parties to consult each other with a view to agreeing on a common approach to the agenda's items. The Parties submitted a joint letter dated 18 October 2007 responding to the Arbitral Tribunal's request. Following the telephone conference, ICSID issued summary minutes of the discussion, and the Arbitral Tribunal issued Procedural Order N° 12, dated 30 October 2007, containing its decisions and instructions regarding the matters discussed.
48. On 12 November 2007, Respondent addressed a letter to the Arbitral Tribunal objecting to certain decisions in Procedural Order N° 12. Claimant submitted its comments regarding Respondent's objections in a letter dated 13 November 2007. The Tribunal rendered its decision regarding Respondent's objections on 14 November 2007, which was communicated by ICSID to the Parties.
49. On 8 January 2008, Respondent addressed a letter to the Arbitral Tribunal objecting to the use of a specific exhibit by Claimant in the impending oral hearing. Claimant offered its comments to Respondent's objection by letter of 10 January 2008. The Tribunal rendered its decision regarding Respondent's objections on 11 January 2008, which was communicated by ICSID to the Parties.

50. A hearing on the merits was held at the seat of the Centre in Washington D.C. from 28 January 2008 to 1 February 2008. Counsel for both Parties addressed the Arbitral Tribunal. One witness, Mr. Jean-Christophe Vautrin, and one expert, Mr. Robert Duchesne, appeared for Claimant. Five witnesses, Ms. Aksinia Stoyanova Slavcheva, Minister Nikolay Vassilev, Mr. Svetoslav Yordanov, Mr. Ognyan Viktorov Petkov and Mr. Nikola Djipov Nikolov appeared for Respondent, as well as two experts, Ms. Zoë Reeve of Gaffney, Cline & Associates and Mr. Brent Kaczmarek of Navigant Consulting, Inc. All witnesses and experts were cross-examined by opposing Counsel and re-examined by Counsel for the Party presenting them. ICSID issued summary minutes of the hearing on 13 February 2008.
51. On 20 March 2008, both Parties made written Post-Hearing Submissions.
52. Final oral argument was made by Counsel for the two Parties at a hearing in Washington, D.C. at the seat of the Centre on 14 April 2008.
53. Following the hearing for oral argument, both Parties filed their claims for costs in written submissions dated 21 May 2008. Each Party filed written comments regarding the cost submission of the other on 4 June 2008.
54. The Arbitral Tribunal pronounced the proceedings closed on 9 June 2008 according to ICSID Arbitration Rule 38(1).

III. SUMMARY OF THE DISPUTE

55. The following is a summary of the dispute in the present case. Additional facts appear in Chapters IV and V, “Discussion of the Issues,” infra. The facts set forth in this Award are those which the Tribunal determines to be most relevant to its decisions on the Parties’ respective cases.

A. The Refinery’s Acquisition

56. Prior to its privatisation in 1996, Plama AD, which later changed its name to Nova Plama AD (“Nova Plama”), was a Bulgarian 100% State-owned joint stock company which owned an oil refinery (“the Refinery”) in Bulgaria. On 5 September 1996, Bulgaria privatized Nova Plama and sold 75% of its shares to EuroEnergy Holding OOD (“EEH”) (the “1996’ or ‘First’ Privatization Agreement”, Claimant’s Exhibit (“C’s Exh.”) 177). In October 1997, EEH increased Nova Plama’s capital, after which EEH held 96.78% of the company’s outstanding and issued share capital.

57. A year later, Claimant – then known as Trammel Investment Limited – purchased from EEH all of EEH’s 49,837,849 shares of Nova Plama, which represented that 96.78% shareholding. The share purchase agreement, which was subject to the consent of the Bulgarian Privatization Agency, was concluded on 18 September 1998 (C’s Exh. 128). The agreement was amended on 18 December 1998 (C’s Exh. 182).
58. Negotiation for the purchase of Nova Plama shares started at the end of 1997 when Mr. Jean-Christophe Vautrin, who was then working at André & Cie (“André”), a Swiss multinational company involved in trading, project and trade financing, energy and transportation, was contacted by Mr. Boni Bonev of Banque Internationale pour le Commerce et le Developpement (“BICD”). Mr. Bonev mentioned that PriceWaterhouseCoopers (“PWC”) had approached the BICD on behalf of EEH, which was seeking to obtain trade financing facilities for the Refinery (see Claimant’s Counter-Memorial on Jurisdiction, para. 49; Respondent’s Counter-Memorial on the Merits, para. 15).
59. At around the same time, Mr. Vautrin was also approached by the Central Wechsel und Creditbank, which expressed its willingness to facilitate financing for the Refinery, provided, inter alia, that it received a counter-guarantee from various partners, including a lubricant oil specialist. Consequently, Mr. Vautrin contacted Mr. Harald Svindseth from Norwegian Oil Trading AS (“NOT”), a company that specialised in the distribution and fabrication of lubricants in emerging markets (see Claimant’s Counter-Memorial on Jurisdiction, para. 49).
60. While André and NOT were not willing to provide financing to EEH because they doubted its trustworthiness, they expressed an interest in acquiring EEH’s shares in Nova Plama. Although negotiations broke down in February 1998, they resumed later that year (see Claimant’s Counter-Memorial on Jurisdiction, para. 52; Respondent’s Counter-Memorial on the Merits, para. 17). As a result, on 18 August 1998, NOT and André entered into a Memorandum of Agreement with the Privatization Agency (also referred to as the “Memorandum of Understanding”), which was subsequently amended on 21 September 1998 (Respondent’s Exhibits (“R’s Exhs.”) 664, 671), by which the Privatization Agency, in accordance with Article 22 of the First Privatization Agreement, gave consent for the sale and transfer of all shares of Nova Plama to a company presented by NOT and André, provided the satisfaction of a number of conditions stated therein was assured.

61. These conditions, as amended on 21 September 1998, included inter alia, (i) evidence of financial resources to resume the operation of the Refinery; (ii) an agreement with the trade unions of Nova Plama; (iii) an agreement with the main creditors of Nova Plama; and (iv) an agreement with the Privatization Agency to “take over any and all purchaser rights” in accordance with the First Privatization Agreement (R’s Exhs. 664, 671).
62. On 5 October 1998, Claimant submitted a letter from the Central Wechsel und Creditbank stating that a USD 8 million facility “for start up and operation of Plama refinery is being organised with the guarantee of André & Cie S.A and Norwegian Oil Trading a.s.” (R’s Exh. 672). On 11 October 1998, PCL signed an agreement with Nova Plama’s employees (R’s Exh. 673); and, on 26 October 1998, PCL and various creditors of Nova Plama entered into a Debt Settlement Agreement (R’s Exh. 675).
63. Finally, on 17 November 1998, Claimant and the Bulgarian Privatization Agency entered into an agreement (“the Second Privatization Agreement,” R’s Exh. 676) specifying, inter alia, the obligations taken over by Claimant under the First Privatization Agreement and indicating that the date of entry into force would be the date of transfer of Nova Plama shares from EEH to PCL .
64. By letter dated 23 November 1998, the Privatization Agency informed EEH and PCL that the conditions stipulated by the Memorandum of Agreement had been met and that, consequently, the Privatization Agency gave its final consent to the transfer of shares (R’s Exh. 677). Following approval by the Privatization Agency, the transfer of shares took place on 18 December 1998.
65. Following a Bulgarian court decision in 2004 invalidating the 1997 capital increase, Nova Plama’s registered share capital reverted to the original number of shares, so that Claimant then owned 75% of Nova Plama's shares (C's Exh. 183, note 14).

B. The Refinery's Operation and the Bankruptcy

66. The Refinery's key industrial asset was a lubricants manufacturing unit which had processed base-oils produced by the Refinery into a wide range of industrial and consumer lubricants which were used as raw materials for lubricants at the Refinery or by third party blenders. Nova Plama also had its own power plant, with a capacity for sales of excess electric power to the local grid.
67. Nova Plama ceased operations in 1996, while it was still State-owned, due to poor economic conditions and, during EEH's ownership, production was never resumed (Hearing Transcript ("H. Tr."), Day 1, 28 January 2008, p. 28 at lines 20 et seq., p. 85 at lines 14 et seq.). On 10 June 1998, Bulgaria's State Fund for Reconstruction and Development initiated insolvency proceedings against Nova Plama (C's Exh. 167). It was while the insolvency proceedings were underway that EEH agreed, with the consent of the relevant Bulgarian authorities, to sell its shares in Nova Plama to Claimant and that the Second Privatization Agreement was concluded.
68. The Refinery re-commenced operations in January 1999, shortly after its acquisition by Claimant, but shut down again in early April 1999 (Claimant's Memorial on the Merits, paras. 37 and 156; H. Tr., Day 1, 28 January 2008, pp. 50 et seq. and 202 et seq.; R's Exh. 376; Respondent's Counter-Memorial on the Merits, paras. 46 et seq.). Claimant and Nova Plama submitted to the Pleven District Court a Recovery Plan dated 5 May 1999, which had been negotiated with Nova Plama's creditors and other interested parties (including the Bulgarian Government). The Court approved this Recovery Plan and terminated Nova Plama's bankruptcy proceedings by decision of 8 July 1999 (R's Exh. 409). In August 1999, Nova Plama's operations resumed, but only until December 1999, when the Refinery was shut down for good (Claimant's Memorial on the Merits, para. 156; Respondent's Counter-Memorial on the Merits, para. 53; H. Tr., Day 1, 28 January 2008, p. 59, lines 11 et seq., p. 69 lines 3 et seq.). Discussions ensued among the various interested parties to get the Refinery back into operation, all of which failed for reasons which are at the heart of the present dispute between the Parties.

69. It should be noted that, as a provisional measure, during the 1998 insolvency proceedings, the bankruptcy court had appointed two provisional syndics or trustees in bankruptcy on 25 June 1998, Syndic Penev and Syndic Todorova (R's Exh. 898); their appointment was extended by the court's decision to open bankruptcy proceedings on 29 July 1998.
70. By decision of 18 May 1999, the Pleven District Court appointed Mr. Penev as a permanent syndic (R's Exh. 900).
71. In July 2005, creditors of Nova Plama re-opened the bankruptcy proceedings, a decision reversed by order of the Bulgarian Supreme Cassation Court of 27 December 2005 (R's Exh. 572). Upon re-filing by the creditors of their applications, the Pleven District Court re-opened the bankruptcy proceedings on 28 April 2006 (R's Exh. 966). Nova Plama underwent liquidation and, on 18 June 2007, its assets were sold to Highway Logistics Center ECOD for approximately USD 30.6 million (R's Exh. 1036; Second Navigant Report, p. 31; H. Tr., Day 1, 28 January 2008, p. 20, lines 3 et seq. and p. 73, lines 17 et seq.; Respondent's Rejoinder on the Merits, para. 8d).
72. Claimant alleges that the Bulgarian Government, the national legislative and judicial authorities and other public authorities and agencies deliberately created numerous, grave problems for Nova Plama and/or refused or unreasonably delayed the adoption of adequate corrective measures. These actions and omissions, according to Claimant, caused material damage to the operations of the Refinery and have had a direct negative impact on the reputations and market values of the respective Plama Group companies. Bulgaria's actions and/or omissions violate the ECT, to which both Bulgaria and Cyprus are parties.<sup>6</sup>

---

<sup>6</sup> Bulgaria ratified the ECT on 15 November 1996 and Cyprus on 16 January 1998.

C. The Dispute

73. It is Claimant's case that, in violation of its obligations under the ECT, Bulgaria has failed to create stable, equitable, favorable and transparent conditions for Claimant's investment in Nova Plama; failed to provide Claimant's investment fair and equitable treatment; and failed to provide Claimant's investment the most constant protection and security. Bulgaria has subjected Claimant's investment to unreasonable and discriminatory measures, breached its contractual obligations vis-à-vis Claimant, and has subjected Claimant's investment to measures having an effect equivalent to expropriation. Bulgaria's actions have, Claimant contends, deprived PCL of its chance to make its investment in Nova Plama successful and profitable (Claimant's Reply on the Merits, para. 44). In its Request for Arbitration, Claimant also submits that Respondent had breached its obligations under Article 10(12) of the ECT. It claims compensation for all of these breaches.

74. Respondent denies Claimant's allegations.

75. A statement of the Parties' respective positions on the issues is set forth in Chapters IV and V of this Award, in which the Tribunal examines Bulgaria's alleged breach of its obligations under the ECT and the Parties' respective positions. Before that analysis, the Tribunal will address, as a preliminary matter, the issues that were left unresolved in the Decision on Jurisdiction: Claimant's 'ownership' and 'control' and the allegations on misrepresentation by Claimant.

76. While the Tribunal will not elaborate each and every one of the Parties' arguments with respect to each issue, it has submitted all arguments to exhaustive examination. It will confine itself in the following discussion to those issues which it considers most relevant to the decisions it must make.

IV. PRELIMINARY DISCUSSION: CLAIMANT'S 'OWNERSHIP' AND 'CONTROL' AND THE ALLEGATIONS OF MISREPRESENTATION

77. In the operative part of the Decision on Jurisdiction, quoted at paragraph 21 above, two matters were reserved for decision at a later stage: First, the question whether Claimant is a legal entity owned or controlled by citizens or nationals of a State Party to the ECT – this is a question regarding the first limb of Article 17(1) of the ECT (see Decision on Jurisdiction, paras. 170-178 and 240(B)(3)); and second, the question whether Claimant has misrepresented or willfully failed to disclose to Respondent Claimant's true ownership (see Decision on Jurisdiction, paras. 126-131 and 228-230). These two questions will be examined in the present Section.

78. It is important to note that, in its Decision, the Tribunal made clear that none of these issues affected its jurisdiction and that, consequently, it joined them to the consideration of the merits of the case (see Decision on Jurisdiction, paras. 151 and 229-230 and paras. 130-144 infra). A third question deferred in the Decision on Jurisdiction to this second phase of the arbitration, that of costs, is dealt with in Chapter V. F. below.

A. Is Respondent Entitled to Deny the Advantages of Part III of the ECT to Claimant under Article 17(1)?

79. Article 17 of the ECT provides:

Each Contracting Party reserves the right to deny the advantages of this Part [Part III] to:

(1) a legal entity if citizens or nationals of a third state own or control such entity and if that entity has no substantial business activities in the Area of the Contracting Party in which it is organized; . . .

80. Under Article 17(1) of the ECT, Respondent can refuse to afford the protections of Part III of the ECT to Claimant if the latter has no substantial business activities in the State Party to the ECT where it is incorporated and if it is not owned or controlled by nationals of a Contracting Party. Both conditions must be met before a Contracting State may invoke Article 17(1). Both Parties accepted that ownership or control may be direct or indirect.
81. Claimant is incorporated in Cyprus. Cyprus is a party to the ECT. Claimant has acknowledged that it does not have significant business activities in Cyprus (Claimant's Rejoinder on Jurisdiction, footnote 49).

82. The question then arises whether Claimant is owned or controlled by a national or another Contracting Party. The burden of proof on this issue lies with Claimant (C's Exh. 3, p. 18, para. IV section 3).
83. Mr. Vautrin is a French national and, therefore, a national of a Contracting Party (France being a party to the ECT). Mr. Vautrin claims that he indirectly owns and controls 100% of the shares of PCL.
84. As previously stated (para. 57 supra), as a result of the Second Privatization Agreement, PCL became the owner of 96.78% of the shares of Nova Plama. At the time, Plama Holding Limited ("PHL"), another Cyprus company, was the beneficial owner of 100% of the shares of PCL (C's Exhs. 41, 42, 43, 93 and 94). Subsequently, PCL issued additional shares to EMU Investments Limited ("EMU"; C's Exhs. 51, 52 and 95), a company incorporated in the British Virgin Islands (C's Exh. 53). As a consequence, PHL owns 20% of the shares of PCL and EMU, 80%. On 13 September 1998, PHL issued 500 shares to Mediterranean Link (Nominees) Limited and 100 shares to Mediterranean Link (Trustees) Limited, both acting as nominees of EMU. PHL also issued 400 shares to Mediterranean Link (Trustees) as nominee of NOT (C's Exhs. 47, 48 and 49). On 26 October 1998, these 400 shares were transferred from Mediterranean Link (Trustees) Limited, as nominee of NOT, to Mediterranean Link (Trustees) Limited, as nominee of EMU (C's Exh. 50). Thus, since 26 October 1998, EMU owned 100% of the shares of PHL. The capital of EMU is represented by 60 bearer shares (C's Exhs. 54 and 74), 30 of which are said by Claimant to be held in trust for Mr. Vautrin by Mr. Per Christian Nordtømme and 30 of which are said to be held in trust for Mr. Vautrin by Mr. Tom Eivind Haug (see affidavits of MM. Nordtømme and Haug, C's Exhs. 57 and 58, and statements of Mr. Vautrin).
85. Respondent contends that the evidence produced by Claimant is not sufficient to establish Mr. Vautrin's indirect ownership or control of PCL. Among other matters, Respondent has produced documents which indicate that two companies incorporated in the Seychelles, Allspice Trading Inc. ("Allspice") and Panorama Industrial Limited ("Panorama") owned and may still own EMU, and that Panorama agreed to pledge 30 bearer shares in EMU to an undisclosed financial arranger (Respondent's Post-Hearing Submission on Jurisdiction paras. 41 et seq.; Exhs. 57 and 58 to Respondent's Post-Hearing Submission on Jurisdiction). However, Mr. Vautrin claims that the transaction underlying the pledge agreement whereby Panorama and Allspice each expected to obtain ownership of 30 bearer shares was never completed and that the pledge agreement was useless, incorrect and not valid. In any event, Mr. Vautrin testified that Allspice and Panorama were owned indirectly by him (Claimant's Post-Hearing Response on Jurisdiction, para. 20; Exhs. 80 and 81 to Respondent's Post-Hearing Submission on Jurisdiction).

86. The contentions of the Parties regarding the application of Article 17(1) of the ECT were fully developed during the jurisdictional phase of this arbitration and will not all be repeated here. Only those arguments most relevant to the Tribunal's decision are here considered.
87. Respondent's contention, essentially, is that Claimant has failed to prove that it is a legal entity owned or controlled by citizens or nationals of a Contracting Party to the ECT within the meaning of Article 17(1) of the ECT and, therefore, is not entitled to the benefits of Part III of the ECT. The evidence, Respondent says, shows that PCL was and is owned by EMU, which is not a national of an ECT Contracting Party. According to Respondent, Claimant has failed to prove with credible evidence that Mr. Vautrin ultimately owns or controls EMU. Therefore, pursuant to Article 17(1), its claims are inadmissible.
88. Claimant rejects Respondent's argument that it is not entitled to the benefits of Part III because of Article 17(1), stating that Mr. Vautrin is a national of France, a Contracting Party to the ECT, and owns and controls the company, EMU, which in turn controls PHL, which controls Claimant.
89. In its Decision on Jurisdiction, the Arbitral Tribunal decided that Article 17(1) of the ECT has no relevance to the Tribunal's jurisdiction to determine Claimant's claims against Respondent under Part III of the Treaty (para. 21 supra). It confirms this decision. The Tribunal will, therefore, examine Respondent's arguments concerning the ownership and control of PCL in order to determine whether they justify a denial of the benefits of Part III to Claimant. As already indicated, the burden of proof to establish ownership and control is on Claimant.

90. As the Tribunal stated in its Decision on Jurisdiction, “Mr. Vautrin’s evidence as to his ultimate ownership and control of the Claimant is not only largely unsupported by contemporary documentation but . . . is materially inconsistent with parts of that documentation and also contradicted by other statements apparently attributable to Mr. Vautrin...” (para. 177). On the other hand, the Tribunal noted that it did not wish to reject his evidence adduced at the jurisdictional hearing at that stage of the proceedings (para. 178). During the merits phase and at the Final Hearing, the Parties made further submissions on all the evidence submitted, including Mr. Vautrin’s numerous statements and oral testimony. The Tribunal has reached the following conclusions on these disputed matters.
91. As seen above, 20% of PCL’s shares are owned by PHL, another Cyprus-incorporated company (para. 84 supra) and 80% of PCL’s shares are held by EMU. EMU owns 100% of PHL’s shares. Mr. Vautrin’s testimony and the affidavits of MM. Nordtømme and Haug indicate that the latter each hold half of EMU’s shares in trust for Mr. Vautrin. The record also contains documents or affidavits from other persons acting for the companies concerned to the effect that they were always acting pursuant to instructions received from Mr. Vautrin. André and NOT have written that they were not shareholders at the time of the Second Privatization Agreement (Exhs. 20 and 23 to Mr. Vautrin’s Third Declaration). Moreover, when testifying before the Tribunal and in his witness statements, Mr. Vautrin demonstrated an intimate knowledge of the structure and affairs of the companies concerned, which lend credence to Claimant’s contention that he does own or control them.
92. As for the evidence introduced by Respondent that the shares of EMU were transferred to two Seychelles companies, Panorama and Allspice, the Arbitral Tribunal accepts Mr. Vautrin’s testimony that the transactions, which were contemplated, were never in fact consummated and that, in any event, he was and remains the ultimate owner of the shares of those two companies.

93. The Arbitral Tribunal has also considered the fact that there is litigation pending in Switzerland, discussed in the Decision on Jurisdiction, in which a company, Dolsamex S.A., and Mr. Timothy O'Neill claim ownership of PCL. However, until that litigation is completed, those claims remain just that: mere claims with allegations that cannot and do not affect the ownership or control of PCL.
94. The Arbitral Tribunal accepts Mr. Vautrin's testimony. Moreover, without losing sight of the fact that Claimant bears the burden of proof on this issue, the Arbitral Tribunal has not found Respondent's attempt to cast doubt on Mr. Vautrin's ownership and control of PCL convincing. Respondent has not been able to show to the Arbitral Tribunal's satisfaction that the evidence produced by Claimant as to its ownership is wholly unreliable nor has it introduced cogent evidence as to who is (or are) the persons or entities who own or control the company, other than Mr. Vautrin.
95. In these circumstances, the Arbitral Tribunal decides that Mr. Vautrin owns and controls PCL. Since Mr. Vautrin is a French national (Exh. 1 to Mr. Vautrin's First Declaration, 25 March 2004), and France is a Contracting Party to the ECT, Respondent cannot rely on Article 17(1) of the ECT to deny to PCL the benefits of Part III of the Treaty.

B. Misrepresentation

1. Parties' Positions

96. Respondent, at the jurisdictional hearing, in its Counter-Memorial on the Merits, Rejoinder on the Merits and Post-Hearing Submission on the Merits, raises objections to jurisdiction over and admissibility of Claimant's claims. It says that Claimant obtained its investment in Nova Plama via misrepresentations in violation of Bulgarian law, which is, therefore, void ab initio under the Privatisation Act and voidable under the Bulgarian Obligations and Contracts Act. Accordingly, Claimant does not own the investment and did not acquire control of it in accordance with Bulgarian law. As a consequence, there is no "Investment" within the meaning of Article 1(6) of the ECT, and hence the Arbitral Tribunal lacks jurisdiction over Claimant's claims. Even if the Tribunal were to conclude that it did have jurisdiction, however, Claimant having obtained its investment by unlawful means would render its claim inadmissible.

97. In the Decision on Jurisdiction, the Tribunal concluded that Respondent's allegations on misrepresentation did not deprive it of jurisdiction in this case and, in light of the serious charges raised, the Tribunal decided to examine these allegations during the merits phase.
98. In its Counter-Memorial on the Merits, Rejoinder on the Merits and Post-Hearing Submission on the Merits, Respondent insisted that obtaining the investment via misrepresentation in violation of Bulgarian law made Claimant's claims inadmissible and, in any event, such misrepresentations defeated its claims on the merits. Since the protections provided in Articles 10 and 13 of the ECT can only apply to an Investment made in accordance with law, Claimant cannot seek the protections of the ECT for that investment, having obtained it in violation of international and Bulgarian law.
99. In addition, Respondent pointed out that Bulgaria denied Claimant the advantages of the ECT's substantive protections prospectively from 18 February 2003. Consequently, to the extent that Claimant seeks to present claims in these proceedings as to alleged violations by Respondent of ECT obligations after that date (e.g., claims relating to the re-opened bankruptcy proceedings against Nova Plama in 2005 and claims regarding Varna Port based on facts arising after 18 February 2003), those claims are inadmissible.<sup>7</sup>
100. In support of its allegation of misrepresentation, Respondent contends that Mr. Vautrin and others representing Claimant during the negotiations for the acquisition of Nova Plama consistently represented to the Bulgarian Privatization Agency and others that Claimant was a consortium owned by two large commercial entities, André and NOT. According to Respondent, after these entities withdrew their interest in the investment, Mr. Vautrin intentionally concealed that fact and the fact that he was the sole owner of

---

<sup>7</sup> This argument is no longer relevant, since in this Award the Arbitral Tribunal has decided that Bulgaria cannot deny the benefits of Part III to Claimant on the basis of Article 17(1) of the ECT, see paragraph 95 supra.

Claimant. Although Mr. Vautrin contends that he informed someone at some point within the Bulgarian Government of André's and NOT's withdrawal, Respondent asserts that this remains unproven.

101. Respondent says that Claimant was obliged to obtain the consent of the Privatization Agency to its purchase of EEH's shares in Nova Plama. This was a requirement of EEH's 1996 Privatization Agreement and the Bulgarian Privatization Act. Respondent says that Claimant procured the Privatization Agency's consent by means of misrepresentations as to Claimant's actual ownership, in violation of Bulgarian law. The consent thus obtained was null and void under Bulgarian law. According to Respondent, because the consent of the Privatization Agency was a legal prerequisite to Claimant's purchase and also a legal prerequisite to the lawfulness and effectiveness of the Share Purchase Agreement between Claimant and EEH (pursuant to which Claimant acquired the shares in Nova Plama that it claims as its investment), Claimant neither owns nor acquired control of its investment in accordance with Bulgarian law and the ECT.
102. Respondent cites Article 5(1) of the Bulgarian Privatization Act "...[t]ransactions for acquisition under the Act conducted through a fictitious party or by an unidentified proxy shall be deemed null and void" and states that Claimant misrepresented its ownership and misled the Privatization Agency within the meaning of Article 5(1) in order to obtain the latter's consent to PCL's acquisition of Nova Plama, thus rendering that consent null and void ab initio.
103. Respondent contends that the existence of an "Investment" within the meaning of the ECT is a fundamental element necessary for the observance of Article 26 of the ECT. In view of the lack of an Investment within the meaning of Article 1(6) of the ECT, Respondent asserts, this case should be dismissed.
104. Respondent adds that, under international and Bulgarian law, Claimant had an obligation to act honestly and in good faith in its dealings and contract negotiations and that it violated this obligation.
105. Alternatively, Respondent contends that, should the Arbitral Tribunal not find the Second Privatization Agreement null and void under Article 5.1 of the Privatization Law, that agreement would be voidable under Bulgarian law due to Claimant's misrepresentations.

106. Respondent's argument under the ECT is that Claimant's misrepresentation defeats its claim on the merits. The obligations undertaken by Bulgaria under Articles 10 and 13 of the ECT can only apply to an Investment made in accordance with law. Respondent asserts that, having obtained its investment in violation of international and Bulgarian law, Claimant cannot seek the protections of the ECT for that investment.
107. Claimant denies that it made any misrepresentation to the Bulgarian Government concerning its investment in Nova Plama. It says it had no duty to inform Respondent of the identity of the shareholder(s) of PCL. Claimant acknowledges, in its Memorial on the Merits, that André and NOT were originally interested in buying the Refinery and accepts that the Bulgarian Government, through its Privatization Agency, wanted to screen foreign investors in privatized enterprises (see para. 27). Claimant contends that during the period July-September 1998, André decided that it was not interested in purchasing Nova Plama and only wanted to play an advisory role; so Mr. Vautrin personally took up the opportunity, together with NOT, to make the investment (ibid., para. 30, p. 9).<sup>8</sup> Subsequently, NOT, too, withdrew from the project as an investor.
108. Claimant says that it informed the Privatization Agency that the purchase of Nova Plama's shares was to be made by a company "presented by" André and NOT – not that the purchase was to be made by André and NOT themselves – and that this description of the purchaser was included in the Memorandum of Agreement of 18 August 1998 (Article 1.1), agreeing to the share transfer by EEH to PCL, signed on behalf of the Privatization Agency and PCL. According to Claimant, this wording of the Memorandum of Agreement followed an earlier draft of the agreement, which is not in the record, which stipulated that the company purchasing Nova Plama's shares was a company

---

<sup>8</sup> Mr. Vautrin testified at the January-February 2008 hearing (H. Tr., Day 2, 29 January 2008, p. 280) that NOT held 40 percent of the shares of PCL until the end of October 1998.

“formed by” André and NOT (See Mr. Vautrin’s testimony at the January – February 2008 hearing, H. Tr., Day 2, 29 January 2008, pp. 305 et seq.). Therefore, Claimant says, the Privatization Agency knew or should have known that a company different from André or NOT was the purchaser. If the Privatization Agency wanted to receive specific information about the change in the language of the agreement and ownership of the investor to be introduced by André and NOT, it could, contends Claimant, have asked for that information. In fact, Claimant says, the Privatization Agency was not interested in the identity of the investor’s shareholders and never asked; they simply wanted the investor to undertake the obligations in the Second Privatization Agreement, which Claimant did. Mr. Vautrin also testified that he had told relevant members of the Bulgarian Government that André and NOT were not to be the ultimate purchasers of Nova Plama’s shares (H. Tr. in French, Mr. Vautrin, 20 September 2004, p. 19).

109. Claimant further contends that nowhere is it accused of having made a positive misrepresentation, that is, Claimant is not accused of having falsely informed the Privatization Agency about its ownership. Therefore, there is no proof of a “wrong by Claimant” and Respondent’s allegations are only limited to the subjective impressions of various Bulgarian authorities.
110. Moreover, Claimant contends that Article 5(1) of the Privatization Act invoked by Respondent is not applicable to this case since the purchase of Nova Plama shares by PCL from EEH did not correspond to a privatization. According to Claimant, the Refinery had already been privatized after its sale to EEH in 1996. If Respondent retained the right to consent to any further sale, such consent was foreseen only for the sale of a minority of Nova Plama shares.
111. Claimant adds that, even if there were a “passive misrepresentation”, as alleged by Respondent, the consent of the Privatization Agency was necessary, if at all, only for the purchase of a minor portion of the shares of Nova Plama – 4.5 million shares out of 51 million. This is so, Claimant contends, because, after the initial privatization of Nova Plama, EEH had increased the company’s capital. Consequently, it was possible for Claimant to purchase from EEH 90% of the shares, which represented the increased capital not covered by the First Privatization Agreement, without the need for any consent from the Privatization Agency. Moreover, even without the consent of the Privatization Agency, Claimant says, it would have owned and made an Investment within the meaning of Article 1(6) of the ECT, which entitles it to the protection in Part III of the ECT.

2. The Requirement of Approval by the Privatization Agency

112. Contrary to Respondent's argument, the matter of the alleged misrepresentation by Claimant does not pertain to the Tribunal's jurisdiction: that was already decided in the Decision on Jurisdiction (paras. 126-130 and 228-230). Rather, the matter concerns the question as to whether Claimant is entitled to the substantive protections offered by the ECT.
113. The Arbitral Tribunal does not accept Claimant's argument that no approval by the Privatization Agency was necessary for PCL's acquisition of Nova Plama's shares because those shares had already been privatized under the First Privatization Agreement. Claimant itself did not at the time act in a manner consistent with the case it is now advancing; it actively sought and obtained the Privatization Agency's approval to purchase Nova Plama's shares from EEH. The First Privatization Agreement was clear, in its Article 22, that EEH did not have the right to sell or transfer Nova Plama's shares for a period of five years without the prior approval of the Privatization Agency. When EEH did, within that period, sell its shares to PCL, the Privatization Agency's approval was, therefore, required. Claimant's submission that, even without the Privatization Agency's agreement, it would have made an Investment within the meaning of ECT is irrelevant because, in fact, it sought and obtained the Privatization Agency's consent to its purchase of the Refinery.
114. Nor does the Arbitral Tribunal accept Claimant's contention that, if any authorization or approval of the Privatization Agency were required, it only pertained to 10% of Nova Plama's shares. Claimant's case is based on the fact that, after the First Privatization Agreement, Nova Plama's share capital was increased and that Article 22 of the First Privatization Agreement only applied to the shares existing at the time of the first privatization. While the language of Article 22, "[t]he Buyer shall not have the right to sell or transfer the shares acquired under this Contract . . .” (emphasis added), if literally read, could be interpreted in the manner contended by Claimant, the Arbitral Tribunal does not consider that that was what the Parties intended. Again, Claimant did not in 1998, when it sought and obtained the approval of the Privatization Agency for its purchase of Nova Plama’s shares, act in conformity with the case it is now advancing. It sought approval for the purchase of all of Nova Plama’s then-outstanding shares.

115. The Arbitral Tribunal has now to determine whether the alleged misrepresentation did in fact occur as alleged by Respondent, and, if so, what the consequences are for the application of the protections provided under the ECT claimed by Claimant.

3. The Occurrence of Misrepresentation

116. The Tribunal accepts Respondent’s factual allegation as to the occurrence of misrepresentation by Claimant. It is important here to review the most pertinent elements which lead the Tribunal to this conclusion.
117. By Order No. 456 of 7 August 1998, the Executive Director of the Privatization Agency established an inter-institutional working group of experts to prepare the transfer of Nova Plama shares from EEH to the Consortium André and NOT. On the same date, the Privatization Agency wrote a letter to EEH and to the “Coordinator of the Consortium,” Mr. Boni Bonev, announcing that it would give its consent for EEH to transfer its shares in Nova Plama to “the Consortium ‘André & Cie and Norwegian Oil Trading’” in case an agreement were signed with the Consortium for “updating and unconditional fulfilment of the obligations already undertaken with the signed contract” (R’s Exhs. 658, 659).
118. Ernst & Young sent a letter on 11 August 1998 to the Privatization Agency, indicating that the foreign investor André & Cie had assigned to it the conduct of due diligence of Nova Plama in view of signing a contract for the purchase of shares in the company (R’s. Exh. 660).
119. On 14 August 1998, the Privatization Agency sent a letter to Mr. Bonev enclosing a draft agreement between the consortium “André & Cie and Norwegian Oil Trading” and the Privatization Agency (R’s. Exh. 197).

120. Thereafter – and in accordance with the draft agreement – a Memorandum of Agreement was made on 18 August 1998 by NOT and André, represented by Mr. Bonev, and the Privatization Agency for the sale of all shares of Nova Plama to a company presented by NOT and André. The agreement was signed by Mr. Bonev “For company” (R’s Exh. 198). Mr. Bonev provided to the Privatization Agency two powers of attorney to act on behalf of André & Cie and NOT. The first document was dated 17 August 1998 and signed by W. Brocard and J.C. Vautrin in the name of André & Cie, to represent it “in the negotiations to be held with relevant Bulgarian authorities regarding Plama project.” The second document was also dated 17 August 1998 and was signed by Born Kanppskog and Torgeir Lien to “negotiate and sign the Memorandum of Understanding concerning Plama AD on our behalf” (R’s Exhs. 662, 663).
121. On 20 August 1998, the Privatization Agency sent two letters to record that a Memorandum of Agreement had been signed between the Agency, on the one hand, and André and NOT, on the other, authorizing the transfer of Nova Plama shares to a company presented by NOT and André. The first letter was sent to EEH and Mr. Bonev as the “Consortium Coordinator” and the second one, to Mr. Radev, Minister of Finance.
122. While Claimant made much of the argument that the language “a company presented by NOT and André” did not mean a company owned by NOT and André, at the January-February 2008 hearing, Mr. Vautrin testified that, at the time when André and NOT were still contemplating purchasing the Refinery, a July 1998 version of the Memorandum of Understanding (R’s Exh. 657) used similar terminology: “a corporation to be introduced by André and Norwegian Oil Trading.” How Bulgaria was reasonably to understand without an explicit explanation that virtually the same language was to mean different things at different times has not been explained by Claimant (H. Tr., Day 2, 29 January 2008, pp. 265 et seq.). In addition, the evidence, as set out in this section, indicates that the Privatization Agency had strong reasons to believe that NOT and André were part of the consortium.
123. The Business Plan presented by MM. Bonev and Vautrin to the creditors of Nova Plama in September 1998 described the “Consortium” which would “revive” the Refinery as consisting of NOT, André, Ingérop and Ernst & Young. This is one of the puzzling elements of the misrepresentation issue, because it is difficult to believe that anyone could reasonably consider Ernst & Young and Ingérop as investors. The same is not true for NOT and André. Throughout the Business Plan, reference was made to the measures to be undertaken by the Consortium to resume operation of the Refinery. Information detailing the organization and experience of NOT and André was provided as Annexes 1 and 2 to the Business Plan (R’s Exh. 669).

124. On 8 September 1998, the Ministry of Finance sent a letter to Mr. Bonev, as “representative of Norwegian Oil Trading A.S and André & Cie”, inviting him to a meeting on the following day, in view of the intentions expressed by both companies to acquire the shares of Nova Plama (R’s Exh. 667). This and similar statements made in the correspondence exchanged at that time, were never corrected by Mr. Bonev, Mr. Vautrin or anyone else on Claimant’s side.
125. The meeting was held on 9 September 1998 with representatives of the Bulgarian Government, including the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Labour, Mr. Bonev, Mr. Vautrin and Mr. Nordtømme as representatives of the Consortium, as well as the Ambassador of Switzerland, who vouched for the good standing of André (R’s. Exh. 668 and witness statement of Mrs. Slavcheva, 28 July 2006). According to Mr. Vautrin, this meeting occurred after André had decided to withdraw as an investor (H. Tr., Day 2, 29 January 2008, p. 279). There was no apparent Swiss interest other than André.
126. The “Additional Agreement to the Memorandum of Understanding” dated 21 September 1998 named André and NOT as parties and was signed by Mr. Bonev, this time, on behalf of André and NOT (R’s. Exh. 671).
127. Mr. Vautrin has testified on several occasions that he had informed relevant Bulgarian authorities that André and NOT had decided not to be investors (see, e.g., H. Trans., in French, Mr. Vautrin, 20 September 2004, p. 19 and H. Tr., Day 2, 29 January 2008, p. 295). However, these statements contradict declarations made by the authorities concerned, in particular, Mr. Oresharski (who was the Minister of Finance at the time of the Hearing and the former Deputy Minister of Finance at the time of the transaction) and Mr. Palazov

(the Secretary-General of the Agency of State Receivables). They declared that it was their clear understanding, at all relevant times, that André and NOT were to be the ultimate purchasers of Nova Plama (H. Tr. Day 2, 29 January 2008, p. 329, lines 1 et seq.; witness statement of Mr. Oresharki, at paras. 7, 9; and witness statement of Mr. Palazov, at para. 10).<sup>9</sup> Moreover, Mr. Rakov, deputy of the Ministry of Finance, submitted a statement expressly denying Mr. Vautrin's assertions that Mr. Vautrin had informed him that NOT had withdrawn from PCL (witness statement of Mr. Rakov, paras. 5,6; H. Tr., Day 2, 29 January 2008, p. 333, lines 2 et seq.).

128. The conclusion which the Arbitral Tribunal draws from all of these elements is that the Bulgarian Government clearly understood NOT and André to be the investors (see, e.g., R's Exh. 39) and that PCL – the “company presented by” them – was a special purpose vehicle created by them as a consortium for the purpose of the Nova Plama acquisition (see Mr. Vautrin's testimony, H. Tr., Day 2, 29 January 2008, p. 310).
129. It also appears to the Arbitral Tribunal that Mr. Vautrin did nothing to remove this misunderstanding, of which he was undoubtedly aware. In particular, Mr. Vautrin deliberately did not inform the Bulgarian Government that he was the sole, ultimate owner of PCL (Claimant's Rejoinder on Jurisdiction, paras. 124 and 129). Mr. Vautrin testified during the jurisdictional phase of the arbitration that, for reasons of personal security, he did not want the Bulgarian Government to know that he was the investor who owned and controlled PCL (see Mr. Vautrin's Third Witness Declaration, 26 August 2004, at para. 8 et seq. and H. Tr. Jurisdictional Phase, pp. 65-7). However, Mr. Vautrin has insisted throughout the arbitration that he never represented to the Bulgarian Government that André and NOT were the investors. As noted earlier (para.108 supra), Mr. Vautrin testified that he did inform certain Bulgarian officials that André and NOT were not investors. His testimony, also referred to earlier, that a comparison of the language “formed by” in an early draft of the Memorandum of Understanding (which is not in the record) with the final text “presented by” showed clearly that André and NOT were not shareholders cannot be verified (H. Tr., Day 2, 29 January 2008, pp. 295 et seq.) and is contested by Respondent (Respondent’s Post-Hearing Submission on the Merits, para. 15). What is clear is that Mr. Vautrin was determined not to disclose his true role in the privatization and, by doing so, he deliberately misrepresented to the Bulgarian authorities the true identity of the investors in Nova Plama.

---

<sup>9</sup> This understanding was confirmed by other Bulgarian authorities including Ms. Slavcheva (in her witness statement and during her cross-examination at the Final Hearing, H. Tr., Day 2, 29 January 2008, p. 450) and Mr. Tenev.

4. The Consequences of the Misrepresentation

130. It is Respondent’s contention that Claimant’s investment is null and void under Article 5.1 of the Privatization Act (para. 102 supra), when examined in light of the terms of this so-called “straw man” provision. Counsel for Respondent explained in the January-February 2008 hearing that the straw man in the present case was Mr. Vautrin, acting as if he were the representative of André when in fact he was acting for his own account (H. Tr., Day 2, 29 January 2008, pp. 463-4).<sup>10</sup> In the opinion of Respondent’s legal expert, Professor Markov, dated 16 July 2006, an “unidentified proxy” within the meaning of Article 5.1. “acts in his own name but on the ultimate account of and in the ultimate benefit of somebody else” (para. 54). This is not what happened here. The party to the Second Privatization Agreement, i.e., the party making the investment, was PCL, not Mr. Vautrin. PCL was not a “straw man” acting for someone else; it was acting for its own account.
131. Professor Markov cites a Bulgarian Supreme Court decision, in paragraph 55 of his 16 July 2006 opinion, as follows:

What is an interpositioned person? The concept of interpositioned person, known also in legal theory as “straw man” or “wooden head,” requires the existence of an agreement between the real right-holder (real party) under the contract, i.e. the person economically interested in the transaction who actually enters into it, and the interpositioned person. Under this agreement the interpositioned person gives his consent that his name will appear in the real estate contract as though he is the party to the contract, whereas the contract is actually between the economically interested person and a third person, the other party to the contract.

---

<sup>10</sup> In its Post-Hearing Submission on the Merits, Respondent changed its identification of the straw man as being André and NOT whom Mr. Vautrin used as straw men to conclude the transactions (para. 30).

132. In paragraph 56 of his 16 July 2006 opinion, Professor Markov cites the treatise, “Civil Law – General Part” by Professor Pavlova:

§ 5 of the Additional Provisions of TPSOMEA (the Privatization Act) deserves to be noted among the cases of invalidity for prohibition provided for in special legal provisions. Pursuant to this provision the acquisition transactions under this Act shall be invalid where they are executed through an interpositioned person or an undisclosed representative. The law refers to the cases where the transferee under the privatization transaction conceals his name using another person’s name (interpositioned person) or where a person in his own name acquires privatized property acting as a mandatary (a party to a mandate contract) on somebody else’s account and with an obligation to transfer the property acquired to the principal. The severe sanction, envisaged in the provision in question, is designed by the legislator to provide maximum transparency in the acquisitions through privatization transactions. The requirement to reveal the identity of the transferee under the transaction constitutes a guarantee against abuse of official and social position and allows the public to watch closely whether the law is circumvented through follow up actions.

Here, again, we are not dealing with a person who used the name of another person while entering into the Privatization Agreement, nor is the contract signatory acting as a mandatary for somebody else’s account and with an obligation to transfer the investment to the principal. In the present case, PCL was the contracting party, acting for its own account and in its own name.

133. Rather, what happened here was that Mr. Vautrin and his representatives presented PCL as a consortium of major companies having substantial assets, whereas in truth, Mr. Vautrin, who personally did not have significant financial resources, was acting alone as the sole investor in the guise of that “consortium.” The Arbitral Tribunal is persuaded that Bulgaria would not have given its consent to the transfer of Nova Plama’s shares to PCL had it known it was simply a corporate cover for a private individual with limited financial resources. Given the strategic importance of the Refinery and the significant number of employees and creditors, the managerial and financial capacities of the acquirer were a natural concern to the Bulgarian authorities. André, as a world-wide trader and financial institution and NOT as an experienced oil company, appeared to have the required capacities. Mr. Vautrin alone did not.
134. Claimant contends that it acted in good faith, that Respondent never asked who the shareholders of PCL were and that Claimant had no obligation to volunteer this information. The Arbitral Tribunal does not consider that, in the circumstances of the present case, this contention can be accepted. Claimant represented to the Bulgarian Government that the investor was a consortium – which was true during the early stages of negotiations. It then failed, deliberately, to inform Respondent of the change in circumstances, which the Tribunal considers would have been material to Respondent’s decision to accept the investment. On the basis of the evidence in the record, Bulgaria had no reason to suspect that the original composition of the consortium, consisting of two major experienced companies, had changed to an individual investor acting in the guise of that “consortium”, and no duty to ask. It was Claimant, knowing the facts, which had an obligation to inform Respondent.
135. The investment in Nova Plama was, therefore, the result of a deliberate concealment amounting to fraud, calculated to induce the Bulgarian authorities to authorize the transfer of shares to an entity that did not have the financial and managerial capacities required to resume operation of the Refinery. While the Arbitral Tribunal considers that this situation does not involve the “straw-man” provision set out in the Bulgarian Privatization Law, the Tribunal is of the view that this behavior is contrary to other provisions of Bulgarian law and to international law and that it, therefore, precludes the application of the protections of the ECT.

136. As noted by Professor Markov in his expert report, Articles 27 and 29 of the Obligations and Contracts Acts (OCA) state:<sup>11</sup>

Art. 27. Contracts concluded by persons of legal incapacity, or by their agents without observing the requirements established for such agents, as well as contracts concluded under mistake, fraud, duress or extreme necessity shall be subject to invalidation.

Art. 29. Fraud shall constitute grounds for invalidating a contract provided that one of the parties has been misled by the other party into concluding the contract through intentional misrepresentation.

In addition, Article 12 OCA introduces the principle of good faith by stating that “parties must negotiate and enter contracts in good faith.” According to Bulgaria’s expert, this principle covers various obligations of the parties, including the obligation to inform the other party of all facts relevant to making a decision concerning the conclusion of the contract.<sup>12</sup>

137. The negotiation and conclusion of the Second Privatization Agreement were carried out by PCL and its owner, Mr. Vautrin, in flagrant violation of these provisions of Bulgarian law. The misrepresentation made by Claimant renders the Agreement unlawful.
138. Unlike a number of Bilateral Investment Treaties,<sup>13</sup> the ECT does not contain a provision requiring the conformity of the Investment with a particular law.

---

<sup>11</sup> Legal Opinion of Professor Markov, dated 16 July 2006, para. 64.

<sup>12</sup> Ibid, para 71.

<sup>13</sup> For example the Germany-Philippines BIT, Lithuania-Ukraine BIT, and Italy-Morocco BIT.

This does not mean, however, that the protections provided for by the ECT cover all kinds of investments, including those contrary to domestic or international law. As noted by the Chairman's statement at the adoption session of the ECT on 17 December 1994:

[...] the Treaty shall be applied and interpreted in accordance with generally recognized rules and principles of observance, application and interpretation of treaties as reflected in Part III of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties of 25 May 1969. [...] The Treaty shall be interpreted in good faith in accordance with the ordinary meaning to be given to the terms of treaty in their context and in the light of its object and purpose.<sup>14</sup>

139. In accordance with the introductory note to the ECT “[t]he fundamental aim of the Energy Charter Treaty is to strengthen the rule of law on energy issues [...]”.<sup>15</sup> Consequently, the ECT should be interpreted in a manner consistent with the aim of encouraging respect for the rule of law. The Arbitral Tribunal concludes that the substantive protections of the ECT cannot apply to investments that are made contrary to law.
140. The Tribunal finds that the investment in this case violates not only Bulgarian law, as noted above, but also “applicable rules and principles of international law”, in conformity with Article 26(6) of the ECT which states that “[a] tribunal established under paragraph (4) shall decide the issues in dispute in accordance with this Treaty and applicable rules and principles of international law”. In order to identify these applicable rules and principles, the Arbitral Tribunal finds helpful guidance in the decisions made in other investment arbitrations cited by Respondent.

---

<sup>14</sup> Energy Charter Secretariat, The Energy Charter Treaty and Related Documents. A Legal Framework for International Energy Cooperation, Chairman's Statement at Adoption Session on 17 December 1994, p. 158.

<sup>15</sup> Energy Charter Secretariat, The Energy Charter Treaty and Related Documents. A Legal Framework for International Energy Cooperation, An Introduction to the Energy Charter Treaty, p. 14.

141. In Inceysa v. El Salvador,<sup>16</sup> a case in which the investor procured a concession contract for vehicle inspection services in El Salvador through fraud in the public bidding process, the tribunal found that the investment violated the following general principles of law: (i) the principle of good faith defined as the “absence of deceit and artifice during the negotiation and execution of instruments that gave rise to the investment”<sup>17</sup> and (ii) the principle of nemo auditur propriam turpitudinem allegans – that nobody can benefit from his own wrong – understood as the prohibition for an investor to “benefit from an investment effectuated by means of one or several illegal acts”.<sup>18</sup> In addition, the tribunal found that recognizing the existence of rights arising from illegal acts would violate the “respect for the law” which is a principle of international public policy.<sup>19</sup>
142. The notion of international public policy was also invoked by an award in the case of World Duty Free v. Kenya.<sup>20</sup> In this case, the investor had obtained a contract by paying a bribe to the Kenyan President. According to the tribunal, the term “international public policy” was interpreted to signify “an international consensus as to universal standards and accepted norms of conduct that must be applied in all fora.”<sup>21</sup> Accordingly, the tribunal found that “claims based on contracts of corruption or contracts obtained by corruption cannot be upheld by this Arbitral Tribunal.”<sup>22</sup> The tribunal further concluded that “as regards public policy both under English and Kenyan law [...] the Claimant is not legally entitled to maintain any of its pleaded claims in these proceedings on the ground of ex turpi causa non oritur actio.”<sup>23</sup> As

---

<sup>16</sup> Inceysa Vallisoletana S.L. v. Republic of El Salvador, Award of 2 August 2006, ICSID Case No. ARB/03/26 (“Inceysa”).

<sup>17</sup> Ibid., para. 231.

<sup>18</sup> Ibid., paras. 240-242.

<sup>19</sup> Ibid., para. 249.

<sup>20</sup> World Duty Free Company Limited v. The Republic of Kenya, Award of 4 October 2006, ICSID Case No. Arb/00/7.

<sup>21</sup> Ibid., para. 139.

<sup>22</sup> Ibid., para. 157.

<sup>23</sup> Ibid., para. 179.

explained in the award, the ex turpi causa defence “rests on a principle of public policy that the courts will not assist a plaintiff who has been guilty of illegal (or immoral) conduct [...]”<sup>24</sup>

143. Claimant, in the present case, is requesting the Tribunal to grant its investment in Bulgaria the protections provided by the ECT. However, the Tribunal has decided that the investment was obtained by deceitful conduct that is in violation of Bulgarian law. The Tribunal is of the view that granting the ECT’s protections to Claimant’s investment would be contrary to the principle nemo auditur propriam turpitudinem allegans invoked above. It would also be contrary to the basic notion of international public policy – that a contract obtained by wrongful means (fraudulent misrepresentation) should not be enforced by a tribunal.
144. The Tribunal finds that Claimant’s conduct is contrary to the principle of good faith which is part not only of Bulgarian law - as indicated above at paragraphs 135-136 - but also of international law - as noted by the tribunal in the Inceysa case. The principle of good faith encompasses, inter alia, the obligation for the investor to provide the host State with relevant and material information concerning the investor and the investment. This obligation is particularly important when the information is necessary for obtaining the State’s approval of the investment.
145. Claimant contended that it had no obligation to disclose to Respondent who its real shareholders were. This may be acceptable in some cases but not under the present circumstances in which the State’s approval of the investment was required as a matter of law and dependant on the financial and technical qualifications of the investor. If a material change occurred in the investor’s shareholding that could have an effect on the host State’s approval, the investor was, by virtue of the principle of good faith, obliged to inform the host State of such change. Intentional withholding of this information is therefore contrary to the principle of good faith.

---

<sup>24</sup> Ibid., para. 161.

146. In consideration of the above and in light of the ex turpi causa defence, this Tribunal cannot lend its support to Claimant's request and cannot, therefore, grant the substantive protections of the ECT.

V. DISCUSSION OF THE ISSUES – CLAIMANT'S CLAIMS ON THE MERITS

147. The Parties have extensively documented their allegations; numerous exhibits, witness statements and expert reports have been submitted by both Parties. The factual and legal arguments have been discussed in detail during the Final Hearing, in which a number of witnesses and experts were also examined by the Parties and the arbitrators. The Tribunal has therefore decided that, in acknowledgement of the Parties' efforts, it will consider their further allegations on the merits. This consideration will lead to the conclusion that, even if Claimant would have had the benefit of the substantive protections of the ECT, Claimant's claims on the merits would have failed.
148. In its analysis, the Tribunal will follow Claimant's presentation of the allegedly unlawful acts and omissions by Respondent (Section C). Accordingly, the Tribunal will first address the allegations regarding environmental damages (Section C.1 infra), followed by the allegations regarding the action of the syndics (Section C.2 infra), the so-called paper profits (Section C.3 infra), the privatization of the Varna Port (Section C.4 infra) and Biochim Bank's unlawful breaches of its debt settlement agreement with PCL (Section C.5 infra). Before addressing these allegations, the Arbitral Tribunal will consider the ECT protections invoked by Claimant (Section B infra). It will rely on those considerations in its subsequent analysis. The Tribunal will commence by presenting a summary of the Parties' contentions on the merits and the relief sought (Section A infra).

A. Summary of the Contentions of the Parties and Relief Sought

1. Claimant's Position

149. According to Claimant, despite the promises made at the pre-acquisition stage, the Bulgarian Government, its legislative and judicial bodies and other State organs and agencies "dashed" Nova Plama's prospects of success. PCL found itself "a victim of a series of unlawful acts and omissions which individually and cumulatively defeated its efforts to operate the Refinery beyond 1999 and make good its investment." (Claimant's Memorial on the Merits, para. 9).

These unlawful acts and omissions included:

- (i) Environmental damages: Bulgaria's sudden and unfair amendment of its environmental law to exclude the State's liability for past environmental damages at the Refinery site, effectively making Nova Plama and PCL liable instead;
- (ii) Paper Profits: Bulgaria's failure to amend its corporate income tax laws in a timely manner to enable PCL to file Nova Plama's annual accounts;
- (iii) Varna Port: the unlawful de facto privatization of the Varna Port, which Nova Plama relied upon for its crude oil supply;
- (iv) Actions of the Syndics: the unlawful actions of Nova Plama's syndics who, inter alia, instigated a riot at the Refinery which resulted in the first shutdown of the Refinery in April 1999; and
- (v) Biochim Bank: the State-owned Biochim Bank's deliberate breaches of its debt settlement agreement with PCL.

150. Claimant alleges that, as a result of these actions, it was unable to secure any working capital financing for Nova Plama since the financial institutions that were initially involved withdrew from the project, and other financial institutions simply refused to participate. Nova Plama was obliged to close the Refinery indefinitely on 15 December 1999 and was consequently unable to settle its debts under the Recovery Plan. Its creditors re-opened the insolvency proceedings against it; and a Bulgarian court ordered the liquidation of Nova Plama in July 2005. Claimant asserts that it has therefore been deprived of all economic benefit and use of its investment since 15 December 1999.

151. It is Claimant's view that these acts are wholly the responsibility of Bulgaria and constitute a violation of several of the protections owed by Bulgaria under Articles 10(1) and 13 of the ECT. In particular, Claimant alleges that Bulgaria has:

- (a) failed to create a stable, equitable, favorable and transparent conditions for making the investment;
  - (b) failed to provide fair and equitable treatment to Claimant's investment;
  - (c) failed to provide to Claimant's investment the most constant protection and security;
  - (d) subjected Claimant's investment to unreasonable measures;
  - (e) breached contracts with PCL; and
  - (f) subjected Claimant's investment to measures having an effect equivalent to expropriation.
152. Claimant submits that, as a result of the expropriation of its investment, and in accordance with Article 13(1) of the ECT, it is entitled to full compensation in the form of fair market value of the shares of Nova Plama at the time immediately before the expropriation calculated using the Discounted Cash Flow ("DCF") method (Claimant's Memorial on the Merits, para. 341). The same compensation should be granted for the other breaches committed by Bulgaria because the nature of the breaches has caused long-term losses to the Claimant as investor.
153. On the basis of the DCF method, Claimant's expert values PCL's losses in the amount of USD 122,258,000. Accordingly, Claimant's request for relief in its Memorial on the Merits (para. 347) reads:
- (a) an order that Bulgaria pay PCL compensation for losses suffered as a result of the expropriation of its investment in the amount of USD122,258,000;
  - (b) an order that Bulgaria pay PCL compound interest on such compensation at a commercial rate from December 15, 1999 until the date of payment;
  - (c) in the alternative, an order that Bulgaria pay PCL (i) compensation for losses suffered as a result of the Other ECT Breaches, in the amount of USD122,258,000 and compound interest on the compensation awarded at a commercial rate established from December 15, 1999 until the date of payment;

- (d) an order that Bulgaria pay PCL's costs occasioned by this arbitration, including the arbitrators' fees and administrative costs fixed by ICSID, the expenses of the arbitrators, the fees and expenses of its experts, and the legal costs incurred by the parties (including fees of counsel); and*
- (e) any other relief that the Tribunal deems appropriate.*

154. In its Reply, Claimant supplements its initial request and indicates that, if the Tribunal were to find that the principles of compensation provided in Article 13(1) – full market value of the Investment immediately before the measures – are not applicable to Claimant's claims on expropriation and the violation of the other ECT standards, Claimant should be compensated according to established principles of customary international law as restated in the International Law Commission's Articles on State Responsibility (Claimant's Reply on the Merits, paras. 214, 217).

155. Accordingly, Claimant alleges its right to recover damnum emergens and lucrum cessans and reformulates its request for relief from the Arbitral Tribunal in the following terms:

- (a) to confirm that it has jurisdiction to entertain the claim as submitted by PCL and that such claims are admissible;*
- (b) to order the Republic of Bulgaria to indemnify Claimant in the amount of US$ 122,258,000 representing the fair market value of its investment in the Plama Refinery;*
- (c) subsidiarily, to order the Republic of Bulgaria to pay Claimant an amount of US$13,862,152 for its losses, outlays, unpaid loans, financings and expenses relating to its investment in the Plama Refinery, all of which have been lost due to Bulgaria's actions, together with compensation in the amount of US$ 10,000,000* representing its loss of a chance or opportunity of making a commercial success of the project.

- (d) to award compound interest at a commercial rate on all sums awarded pursuant to b) and/or c) above from 15 December 1999 through the date of award and until such award is effectively paid in full;*
- (e) to declare that all costs of this arbitral proceeding, including legal fees, are to be borne by the Republic of Bulgaria; and*
- (f) to grant Claimant such other relief as the Arbitral Tribunal may deem appropriate.*

2. Respondent's Position

156. Respondent denies all of Claimant's claims. It contends that the Refinery's difficulties derived from factors not attributable to the Republic of Bulgaria, in particular, from the combination of Nova Plama's high costs structure and the very difficult market conditions (Respondent's Counter-Memorial on the Merits, paras. 70, 530).
157. It is Respondent's view that it did not engage in unlawful acts and omissions. In particular, Respondent contends:
- (a) Environmental Damages: Claimant mischaracterizes not only the state of Bulgarian environmental law that was applicable when it acquired Nova Plama but also the terms of the First Privatization Agreement and of the 1999 amendment to the environmental law (Respondent's Counter-Memorial on the Merits, para. 72);
  - (b) Actions of the Syndics: the syndic's actions are not legally attributable to the State and, in any event, Claimant has failed to demonstrate in what manner the syndics acted contrary to law or otherwise improperly and in a manner that caused any harm to Claimant (Respondent's Counter-Memorial on the Merits, para. 72);

- (c) Paper Profits: the ECT Contracting States do not accept obligations under Article 10 of the ECT with regard to taxation and, in any event, the Bulgarian tax code and accounting rules were transparent and accessible to Claimant; and it had no basis to expect that it would receive some sort of exemption or special treatment (Respondent's Counter-Memorial on the Merits, paras. 285, 308-309);
- (d) Varna Port: the Varna Port is not "exclusive state property" and Claimant never had any legitimate or reasonable expectation that it would remain in the possession of the State; and its privatization was lawful (Respondent's Counter-Memorial on the Merits, para. 311); and
- (e) Biochim Bank: Biochim Bank acted in a commercially predictable and reasonable manner in all its dealings with Nova Plama and did not breach any contractual obligations (Respondent's Counter-Memorial on the Merits, para. 360).

158. Consequently, Respondent alleges that it has not breached its obligations under the ECT, nor did the alleged breaches of Articles 10(1) and 13 of the ECT cause Claimant to lose the value of its investment in Nova Plama's shares. It is Respondent's contention that Claimant is not entitled to any compensation because (Respondent's Rejoinder on the Merits, para. 320):

(a) Claimant failed to establish a causal connection between Bulgaria's conduct and the failure of its investment; [footnote omitted]

(b) Claimant failed to particularize and quantify its alleged losses; [footnote omitted]

(c) Claimant's use of the DCF method of valuation is inappropriate because Plama has no relevant history of profitability as its cash flows for years were all negative; [footnote omitted]

(d) Even if one were to accept a valuation of Claimant's investment on the basis of the DCF method, Claimant's valuation of Plama is flawed in numerous material respects; [footnote omitted]

(e) Plama was not a money-making enterprise [footnote omitted].

159. Finally, Claimant failed to support its alternative claim for compensation on the basis of Claimant's alleged expenses and expenditures or its claim for compensation in the amount of USD 10,000,000 for its alleged loss of chance to make Nova Plama a profitable enterprise (Respondent's Rejoinder on the Merits, paras. 320-321).
160. Consequently, Respondent requests that the Tribunal dismiss Claimant's claims in their entirety and order Claimant to bear all costs incurred by Bulgaria in connection with this arbitration (Respondent's Counter-Memorial on the Merits, para. 575).

B. The ECT Protections Invoked by Claimant

161. Claimant's allegations refer to violations of the protections provided in Articles 10(1) and 13 of the ECT. Whilst Article 13 contains a standard provision on expropriation – including the condition that the expropriation be lawful and that compensation be prompt, adequate and effective, amounting to the fair market value of the Investment expropriated – Article 10(1) contains a complex provision that refers equally to the obligation to create stable, equitable, favorable and transparent conditions for making the Investment and to the standards of fair and equitable treatment, constant protection and security, the prohibition of unreasonable or discriminatory measures and the observance of obligations entered into with an Investor or an Investment.
162. Professor Schreuer has pointed out the interaction of the standards of protection, in particular under Article 10 of the ECT, and notes that the tribunal in Petrobart v. The Kyrgyz Republic, a case decided under the ECT, opted for subsuming all standards under the purview of fair and equitable treatment.<sup>25</sup>

163. This Tribunal is also of the view that the standards of protection of Article 10(1) are closely interrelated. This interrelation will surface when analyzing the Parties' factual allegations. It does not mean, however, that each standard could not be defined autonomously. As noted by Professor Schreuer:

[...] FET is connected to other standards of protection in a variety of ways. It has points of contact to the standards of 'constant protection and security' and protection against unreasonable or discriminatory measures'. Some tribunals have even found it unnecessary to distinguish these two standards from FET. The better view is that these standards, though related, are separate and autonomous. In fact, some tribunals have given them their own specific meaning.<sup>26</sup>

164. The Arbitral Tribunal will therefore attempt to provide a relevant definition of the standards, taking into account practice under the ECT and the practice of tribunals under other investment treaties. It will also apply the rules of interpretation delineated by the Chairman's statement at the adoption session of the ECT on 17 December 1994, quoted at paragraph 139. The Tribunal will also apply the rules provided in the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties and, in particular, the ECT will be "[...] interpreted in good faith in accordance with the ordinary meaning to be given to the terms of treaty in their context and in the light of its object and purpose."<sup>27</sup>

---

<sup>25</sup> The tribunal noted: "The Arbitral Tribunal does not find it necessary to analyse the Kyrgyz Republic's action in relation to the various specific elements in Article 10(1) of the Treaty but notes that this paragraph in its entirety is intended to ensure a fair and equitable treatment of investments," Petrobart v. The Kyrgyz Republic, Award of 29 March 2005. See also C.H. Schreuer, Fair and Equitable Treatment (FET): Interaction with other Standards, Transnational Dispute Management, Vol. 4, issue 5, September 2007, p. 1.

<sup>26</sup> C.H. Schreuer, op.cit., pp. 25-26.

<sup>27</sup> See Article 31(1) of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties and Energy Charter Secretariat, The Energy Charter Treaty and Related Document. A Legal Framework for International Energy Cooperation, Chairman's Statement at Adoption Session on 17 December 1994, p. 158.

165. As noted by both Parties, Article 2 of the ECT states that the purpose of the Treaty is to establish “a legal framework in order to promote long-term cooperation in the energy field, based on complementarities and mutual benefits, in accordance with the objectives and principles of the Charter.” Claimant alleges that these objectives and principles of the Treaty include the creation of “a climate favourable to the operation of enterprises and to the flow of investments and technologies by implementing market principles in the fields of energy.”<sup>28</sup> Consequently, Claimant concludes that the overall aim of the ECT should be considered as one of favoring the protection of foreign investments.
166. Respondent, for its part, cites the guide to the Energy Charter and the Concluding Document of the Hague Conference on the European Energy Charter to explain that the aim of the ECT is not just the promotion of Investments but also the promotion of the economic development of the Contracting States (Respondent’s Counter-Memorial on the Merits, paras. 430-431).
167. The Arbitral Tribunal is of the view that a balanced interpretation which takes into account the totality of the Treaty’s purpose is appropriate. In the words of the tribunal in El Paso Energy International Co. v. Argentina:

This Tribunal considers that a balanced interpretation is needed, taking into account both State sovereignty and the State’s responsibility to create an adapted and evolutionary framework for the development of economic activities, and the necessity to protect foreign investment and its continuing flow.

1. Protections provided in Article 10(1)

168. The starting point of the Tribunal is therefore the text of Article 10(1) of the ECT:

---

<sup>28</sup> European Energy Charter, Title I – Objectives. Cited by Claimant in its Memorial on the Merits, para. 245.

Each Contracting Party shall, in accordance with the provisions of this Treaty, encourage and create stable, equitable, favourable and transparent conditions for Investors of other Contracting Parties to make Investments in its Area. Such conditions shall include a commitment to accord at all times to Investments of Investors of other Contracting Parties fair and equitable treatment. Such Investments shall also enjoy the most constant protection and security and no Contracting Party shall in any way impair by unreasonable or discriminatory measures their management, maintenance, use, enjoyment or disposal. In no case shall such Investments be accorded treatment less favourable than that required by international law, including treaty obligations. Each Contracting Party shall observe any obligations it has entered into with an Investor or an Investment of an Investor of any other Contracting Party. [Footnotes omitted]

1.1 Stable, Equitable, Favorable and Transparent Conditions

169. Only in its Reply does Claimant introduce the claim that Respondent failed to create stable, equitable, favorable and transparent conditions. Claimant limited its arguments to claiming that it was constantly subjected to “haphazard and opaque” decisions by Respondent and that repeated “interventions” created “unstable, inequitable, unfavorable and non-transparent conditions” for PCL’s investment. Claimant was a victim of “chronic features of unpredictability and inconsistency.”
170. Claimant did not, however, set out the content of this standard or to explain precisely how it has been violated. The only specific reference in this regard is that the amendment of the Environmental Law allegedly created unstable and inequitable conditions (Claimant’s Reply on the Merits, para. 178). As noted by Respondent in its Rejoinder on the Merits, Claimant later used the language of the first part of Article 10(1) with respect to the Paper Profit and Varna Port claims.

171. In addition, Respondent alleges that, since the obligation of the Contracting Parties in the first sentence of Article 10(1) is to create conditions “to make Investments in its Area”, it applies only to pre-Investment matters or, at most, to the circumstances prevailing when the Investor makes its Investment. In any event, contends Respondent, it did not fail to comply with this standard.
172. The Tribunal observes that the second sentence of Article 10(1) indicates that the conditions listed in the first sentence “shall include a commitment to accord at all times to Investments of Investors of other Contracting Parties fair and equitable treatment” and the next sentence links these Investments to the remainder of the protections of this Article. The application of the conditions of the first sentence of Article 10(1) extends in this way to all stages of the Investment and not only to the pre-Investment matters.
173. In addition, the conditions are dependent on their accordance with the other standards. For instance, stable and equitable conditions are clearly part of the fair and equitable treatment standard under the ECT.
174. Consequently, the Tribunal will assess the compliance with these conditions in connection with the other standards analyzed below.

1.2 Fair and Equitable Treatment

175. The Parties appear to agree that, despite the succinct wording of the standard of fair and equitable treatment, arbitral awards published in the past few years have contributed to providing some guidance to ascertain the content of this standard. The Parties agree that the standard includes to a certain extent the protection of the investor’s legitimate expectations and the provision of a stable legal framework (Claimant’s Memorial on the Merits, paras. 251-252; Respondent’s Counter-Memorial on the Merits, para. 436). The Arbitral Tribunal is nonetheless conscious that this may now be a controversial area, particularly with different interpretations being given to the decision of the ad hoc Committee in MTD v Chile.<sup>29</sup> However, in the Tribunal’s view, the present case can be decided on the facts, whatever interpretation is made of the FET standard in the ECT. Accordingly, for the purpose of this Award, the Tribunal has assumed the interpretation most favorable to the Claimant, as follows.

---

<sup>29</sup> MTD Equity Sdn. Bhd. and MTD Chile S. A. v. Republic of Chile, Award of 25 May 2004, ICSID Case No. ARB/01/7 (“MTD”); ad hoc Committee Decision on Annulment of 21 March 2007.

176. With regard to the protection of legitimate expectations, the Tribunal observes that these include the “reasonable and justifiable”<sup>30</sup> expectations that were taken into account by the foreign Investor to make the Investment.<sup>31</sup> These should, therefore, include the conditions that were specifically offered by the State to the Investor when making the Investment and that were relied upon by the Investor to make its Investment.<sup>32</sup> These expectations would equally include “the observation by the host State of such well-established fundamental standards as good faith, due process, and non-discrimination.”<sup>33</sup>
177. The stability of the legal framework has been identified as “an emerging standard of fair and equitable treatment in international law.”<sup>34</sup> However, the State maintains its legitimate right to regulate, and this right should also be considered when assessing the compliance with the standard of fair and equitable treatment. The tribunal in the CMS v. Argentina case explained the situation in the following terms:

It is not a question of whether the legal framework might need to be frozen as it can always evolve and be adapted to changing circumstances, but neither is it a question of whether the

---

<sup>30</sup> Thunderbird v. The United Mexican States, Award of 26 January 2006, UNCITRAL-NAFTA, para. 147 (“Thunderbird”).

<sup>31</sup> Técnicas Medioambientales Tecmed S.A. v. The United Mexican States, Award of 29 May 2003, ICSID Case No. ARB(AF)/00/2, para. 154 (“Tecmed”); MTD, para. 114; Occidental Exploration and Production Company (OPEC) v. The Republic of Ecuador, Final Award of 1 July 2004, LCIA Case No. UN3467, UNCITRAL, para. 185; Eureko B.V. v. Republic of Poland, Partial Award of 19 August 2005, para. 235; LG&E v. Argentine Republic, Decision on Liability of 25 July 2007, ICSID Case No. ARB/02/1, para. 127 (“LG&E”).

<sup>32</sup> CME Czech Republic B. V v. The Czech Republic, Partial Award of 13 September 2001, UNCITRAL, para. 611 (“CME”); Tecmed, para. 154; Thunderbird, para. 147; LG&E, para. 127.

<sup>33</sup> Saluka, para. 303.

<sup>34</sup> LG&E, para. 125.

framework can be dispensed with altogether when specific commitments to the contrary have been made. The law of foreign investment and its protection has been developed with the specific objective of avoiding such adverse legal effects.<sup>35</sup>

178. Finally the Tribunal observes that the condition of transparency, stated in the first sentence of Article 10(1) of the ECT, can be related to the standard of fair and equitable treatment. Transparency appears to be a significant element for the protection of both the legitimate expectations of the Investor and the stability of the legal framework.

1.3 Constant Protection and Security

179. Article 10(1) of the ECT also requires the host State to provide to the Investor's Investment "the most constant protection and security." The Parties are in agreement that this standard imposes an obligation of "due diligence" (Claimant's Memorial on the Merits, paras. 277, 286; Respondent's Counter-Memorial on the Merits, para. 466). As noted by the tribunal in AMT v. Zaire, later quoted by the tribunals in Wena v. Egypt and Saluka v. Czech Republic:

The obligation incumbent on the [host State] is an obligation of vigilance, in the sense that the [host State] shall take all measures necessary to ensure the full enjoyment of protection and security of its investments and should not be permitted to invoke its own legislation to detract from any such obligation.<sup>36</sup>

180. The standard includes, in this manner, an obligation actively to create a framework that grants security. Although the standard has been developed in the context of physical security, some tribunals have also included protection

---

<sup>35</sup> CMS Gas Transmission Company v. The Argentine Republic, Award of 12 May 2005, ICSID Case No. AR/O1/8, para. 277 ("CMS").

<sup>36</sup> American Manufacturing & Trading v. Republic of Zaire, Award of 21 February 1997, ICSID Case No. AR/93/1, para. 28; Wena Hotel Limited v. Arab Republic of Egypt, Award on the Merits of 8 December 2000, ICSID Case No. ARB/98/4, para. 84; Saluka, para. 484.

concerning legal security. In this last respect, the standard becomes closely connected with the notion of fair and equitable treatment.<sup>37</sup>

181. Finally, this Tribunal observes that the standard is not absolute and does not imply strict liability of the host State. As noted by the tribunal in Tecmed and later quoted by the tribunal in Saluka “. . . the guarantee of full protection and security is not absolute and does not impose strict liability upon the State that grants it.”<sup>38</sup>

1.4 Unreasonable and Discriminatory Measures

182. The host State must also, under Article 10(1) of the ECT, refrain from subjecting the Investor’s Investment to “unreasonable or discriminatory measures.” In its Memorial on the Merits, Claimant contends that Respondent’s conduct was “unreasonable” and makes no reference to the existence of discriminatory treatment. However, in its Reply, Claimant introduces the allegation that Respondent has engaged in discriminatory practices in favor of Neftochim, a direct competitor of PCL.
183. The Tribunal observes that, on a number of occasions, tribunals in investment arbitrations have found a strong correlation between this standard and the fair and equitable treatment standard. For instance, the tribunal in Saluka noted that:

The standard of “reasonableness” has no different meaning in this context than in the context of the “fair and equitable treatment” standard with which it is associated; and the same is true with regard to the standard of “non-discrimination”. The standard of “reasonableness” therefore requires, in this context as well, a showing that the State’s conduct bears a reasonable relationship to some rational policy, whereas the standard of “non-discrimination” requires a rational justification of any differential treatment of a foreign investor.<sup>39</sup>

---

<sup>37</sup> Schreuer, op. cit., p. 4.

<sup>38</sup> Tecmed, para. 177; Saluka, para. 484.

184. However, this Tribunal believes that, while the standards can overlap on certain issues, they can also be defined separately. Unreasonable or arbitrary measures – as they are sometimes referred to in other investment instruments – are those which are not founded in reason or fact but on caprice, prejudice or personal preference.<sup>40</sup> With regard to discrimination, it corresponds to the negative formulation of the principle of equality of treatment. It entails like persons being treated in a different manner in similar circumstances without reasonable or justifiable grounds.<sup>41</sup>

1.5 Obligations Undertaken Towards Investors

185. The last sentence of Article 10(1) mandates the host State to observe any obligations it has entered into with the Investor or an Investment of an Investor and is described by Claimant as an “umbrella clause”.
186. The Arbitral Tribunal can limit itself to noting that the wording of this clause in Article 10(1) of the ECT is wide in scope since it refers to “any obligation.” An analysis of the ordinary meaning of the term suggests that it refers to any obligation regardless of its nature, i.e., whether it be contractual or statutory.<sup>42</sup> However, the ad hoc Committee that decided the annulment in the case, CMS v. Argentina, commented that the use of the expression “entered into” should

---

<sup>39</sup> Saluka, para. 460. Other arbitration tribunals have taken a similar position merging this standard and the notion of fair and equitable treatment. As noted by Professor Schreuer, in the context of NAFTA this position could be explained by the fact that there is not a separate provision on the prohibition of arbitrary or discriminatory treatment. Schreuer, op.cit., p. 5. See, e.g., S.D. Myers v. Canada, Award on Liability of 13 Nov. 2000, 8 ICSID Reports 18, para. 263; Waste Management, Inc. v. United Mexican States, Award, 30 April 2004, ICSID Case No. ARB(AF)/00/3, para. 98. Tribunals deciding cases under other investment treaties that have taken a similar position include CMS, para. 290; Impregilo v. Pakistan, Decision on Jurisdiction of 22 April 2005, ICSID Case No. ARB /02/2, paras. 264-270; MTD, para. 196.

<sup>40</sup> See Ronald Lauder v. The Czech Republic, Final Award of 3 September 2001, UNCITRAL, paras. 221, 222, 232; Schreuer, op.cit. pp. 8-9.

<sup>41</sup> See A.F.M. Maniruzzaman, Expropriation of Alien Property and the Principle of Non-Discrimination in International Law of Foreign Investment: An Overview, 8 J. Transnational Law & Policy, Vol. 8:1 (1998).

<sup>42</sup> Enron Corporation Ponderosa Assets L.P. v. Argentine Republic, Award of 22 May 2007, ICSID Case No. ARB/01/3, para. 274.

be interpreted as concerning only consensual obligations.<sup>43</sup> In any case, these obligations must be assumed by the host State with an Investor.<sup>44</sup>

187. Following either the wide interpretation of the clause or the more restricted one proposed by the ad hoc Committee, contractual obligations are covered by the last sentence of Article 10(1) ECT. Since the Parties are exclusively concerned with the application of the last sentence of Article 10(1) ECT to this type of obligation, the Tribunal need not extend its analysis any further.

2. Protections Provided in Article 13

188. The relevant part of Article 13 of the ECT reads as follows:

Investments of Investors of a Contracting Party in the Area of any other Contracting Party shall not be nationalized, expropriated or subjected to a measure or measures having effect equivalent to nationalization or expropriation (hereinafter referred to as "Expropriation") except where such Expropriation is:

- (a) for a purpose which is in the public interest;*
- (b) not discriminatory;*
- (c) carried out under due process of law; and*
- (d) accompanied by the payment of prompt, adequate and effective compensation.*

Such compensation shall amount to the fair market value of the Investment expropriated at the time immediately before the Expropriation or impending Expropriation became known in such a way as to affect the value of the Investment (hereinafter referred to as the "Valuation Date").

189. The Parties are in agreement in identifying the main elements of this provision. In fact, Respondent acknowledged in its Counter-Memorial on the

---

<sup>43</sup> CMS v. Argentina, Annulment Decision of 25 September 2007, para. 95.

<sup>44</sup> Impregilo v. Pakistan, Decision on Jurisdiction of 22 April 2005, paras 214-216.

Merits that it did not dispute that “Article 13(1) of the ECT states an obligation as to expropriation, or the general propositions that expropriation may be indirect; accomplished by omissions as well as by actions; and measured by means of the effect upon the investment [...] that any determination as to whether an expropriation has occurred must be made by reference to the specific facts of an individual case, and [...] the claimed loss of the value of the investment must be due to the actions of the State.” (footnotes omitted) (Respondent’s Counter-Memorial on the Merits, para. 505)

190. Claimant’s claims refer to the existence of indirect expropriation, i.e., its claims do not relate to the physical taking of the property but to the impact that the State’s conduct had on the enjoyment and value of its investment.
191. The Tribunal observes that it is widely acknowledged that expropriation can result from State conduct that does not amount to physical control or loss of title but that adversely affects the economic use, enjoyment and value of the investment. This approach was adopted by the Iran–U.S. Claims Tribunal in the Starret Housing Corp v. Iran case in the following terms:

[I]t is recognized by international law that measures taken by a State can interfere with property rights to such an extent that these rights are rendered so useless that they must be deemed to have been expropriated even though the state does not purport to have expropriated them and the legal title to the property formally remains with the original owner.<sup>45</sup>

192. This position has been reiterated by a number of subsequent arbitral tribunals. In the Tecmed v. Mexico arbitration, the tribunal stated:

. . . it is understood that the measures adopted by a State, whether regulatory or not, are an indirect de facto expropriation if they are irreversible and permanent and if the assets or rights subject to such measure have been affected in such a way that “... any form of exploitation thereof ...” has

---

<sup>45</sup> Starrett Housing Corporation v. Islamic Republic of Iran, Case No. 24, Interlocutory Award No. ITL 32-24-1, 19 December 1983, 4 Iran-US CTR 122, p.154.

disappeared; i.e. the economic value of the use, enjoyment or disposition of the assets or rights affected by the administrative action or decision have been neutralized or destroyed . . . Under international law, the owner is also deprived of property where the use or enjoyment of benefits related thereto is exacted or interfered with to a similar extent, even where legal ownership over the assets in question is not affected, and so long as the deprivation is not temporary. The government's intention is less important than the effects of the measures on the owner of the assets or on the benefits arising from such assets affected by the measures; and the form of the deprivation measure is less important than its actual effects. (Footnotes omitted)<sup>46</sup>

193. The Arbitral Tribunal considers that the decisive elements in the evaluation of Respondent's conduct in this case are therefore the assessment of (i) substantially complete deprivation of the economic use and enjoyment of the rights to the investment, or of identifiable, distinct parts thereof (i.e., approaching total impairment); (ii) the irreversibility and permanence of the contested measures (i.e., not ephemeral or temporary); and (iii) the extent of the loss of economic value experienced by the investor.<sup>47</sup>

C. Analysis of the Alleged Violations

1. Environmental Damages

1.1 The Parties' Positions

194. Claimant contends that, by holding Nova Plama liable for environmental damage caused at the plant site prior to its acquisition by Claimant, Bulgaria breached its obligations under Article 10 of the ECT. It did so by failing to accord to PCL's investment fair and equitable treatment, failing to provide it the most constant protection and security, impairing by unreasonable or discriminatory measures the management, maintenance, use, enjoyment or disposal of PCL's investment and by failing to observe obligations Bulgaria had entered into with PCL. Claimant bases this claim essentially on the alleged breaches by Bulgaria of the provisions of the Second Privatisation Agreement and on the provisions of the Bulgarian environmental law which were amended in 1999, after PCL's acquisition of Nova Plama.

---

<sup>46</sup> Tecmed, para. 116.

<sup>47</sup> See for a summary of the elements of expropriation under Article 1110 of the NAFTA (which resembles Article 13 of the ECT), Fireman's Fund Insurance Company (FFIC) v. United Mexican States, Award of 17 July 2006, ICSID Case No. ARB(AF)/02/01, para. 176.

195. Claimant also alleges that Bulgaria violated Article 13 of the ECT because the unlawful amendment of the environmental law resulted in its inability to secure financing for the Refinery. As a consequence, it was forced to shut the Refinery down in December 1999 and was prevented from enjoying any economic benefit from its investment (Claimant's Memorial on the Merits, paras. 332-334).

196. At the time of the Second Privatization agreement, the Bulgarian law on the environment read, in pertinent part, as follows:

In case of restitution, privatization or investment in new construction facilities by foreign and Bulgarian natural and legal persons, such persons shall not be liable for environmental damages resulting from past actions or omissions.<sup>48</sup>

197. The Second Privatisation Agreement (Article 4) provided that:

Plama Consortium Limited shall ensure the maintenance of the required level of the environmental conditions related to the activities of the company in accordance with the provisions of the Bulgarian law. Plama Consortium shall bear no

---

<sup>48</sup> In its Post-Hearing Submission, Claimant called this provision "poorly drafted" (para. 49) and as not expressly providing that the Bulgarian State would be liable for environmental damage incurred during the period that the Bulgarian State had owned the polluting enterprise (para. 50).

responsibility for any environmental pollution arising prior to the date of signing of this Agreement.” (R’s Exh. 676)

198. Claimant contends that this language – and the existing environmental law – protected it from liability both directly and indirectly (i.e., through Nova Plama’s being held liable for costs which PCL as shareholder would ultimately have to bear) for the estimated 37.4 million BGN pre-acquisition pollution clean-up costs with respect to Nova Plama.

199. In February 1999, shortly after PCL’s acquisition of the Nova Plama shares in November 1998, the Environmental Protection Act was amended<sup>49</sup> so as to provide, in Section 9(1), that:

In the event of privatisation, with the exception of privatisation agreements concluded prior to 1 February 1999, or in case of restitution, or in the event of investment in new construction facilities by foreign and Bulgarian natural and legal persons, the liability for any environmental damages resulting from past actions or omissions shall be borne by the State under such terms and procedures as set forth by the Council of Ministers.

200. PCL claims that it understood the language of Article 5.1 of the Second Privatization Agreement and the Bulgarian environmental law in force at the time to mean that it – and the company whose shares it was acquiring, Nova Plama – would not be responsible to pay for the clean-up of past environmental damage. It believed that the State would assume such liability, especially since the pollution had occurred during the period when Nova Plama was a State-owned enterprise.

201. Claimant refers, in this respect, to the Neftochim Information Memorandum, dated 11 February 1999 (R’s Exh. 811, p. 90), in other words before the above amendment entered into effect, which states that “according to applicable law, the Bulgarian Government is responsible for funding the environmental remediation programme”. It cites this as evidence that the Bulgarian environmental law in force even prior to the 16 February 1999 amendment and, therefore, at the time of Nova Plama's second privatization, placed responsibility for past environmental damage on the State. However, as Respondent explains in its Post-Hearing Submission on the Merits, at paragraph 51, the amendment to the environmental law explicitly placing such responsibility on the State was adopted by the Parliament on 29 January 1999 and, although it only entered into force on 16 February 1999, provided for an effective date of 1 February 1999; thus, the Neftochim Information Memorandum referred to the law as amended, not as it stood in 1998. The Arbitral Tribunal accepts this explanation.

---

<sup>49</sup> The amendment entered into force on 16 February 1999 (Declaration of Denev, para. 58; Claimant’s Post-Hearing Submission, para. 51).

202. PCL's understanding of past environmental damage finds expression in the Recovery Plan which was adopted pursuant to the Privatization Agreement. At the end of the Recovery Plan, in Section 7, after referring to the issue of cleaning up past environmental damage, it is stated that "[t]he Bulgarian Government has taken into consideration this fact and has released the new owners (including Plama AD) of any responsibility for environmental pollution having arisen prior to the date of signing the Privatization Contract, i.e. 17 November 1998." (Underlining added. See R's Exh. 609.)
203. Claimant contends that, by adopting amendments to its environmental law that would hold the State of Bulgaria responsible only for past ecological damage with respect to privatizations occurring after 1 February 1999 – and, therefore, not to the privatization of Nova Plama which occurred in 1998 – Bulgaria changed its law to the detriment of Claimant and Nova Plama and breached the contractual obligations to PCL as set out in the Second Privatisation Agreement. This was, in turn, a clear violation of the final sentence of Article 10(1) of the ECT.
204. Claimant also cites a letter of 14 June 2002 (C's Exh. 383) from the Bulgarian Minister of Finance to Nova Plama, threatening to reopen the insolvency proceedings against Nova Plama unless it, among other things, undertook its obligation to clean up the pollution at the Refinery, thereby illegally attempting to force Nova Plama to assume liabilities of which it had been contractually absolved.

205. It is Claimant's case that, as a consequence of this change in the law, Nova Plama became liable for past environmental damage at the Refinery – evaluated by it at 31.4 million BGN – and that the burden of such a financial liability rendered it incapable of raising the necessary financing to resume production at the Plama Refinery.
206. Claimant further asserts that, by adopting the February 1999 amendment to apply prospectively only, Respondent acted in a discriminatory way vis-à-vis Claimant and Nova Plama by comparison with the treatment accorded to Nova Plama's competitor, Neftochim, another Bulgarian oil Refinery which was privatized in October 1999 and which, by virtue of the 1999 amendment to the environmental law, was exonerated from responsibility for past environmental damage. This discriminatory treatment violated Respondent's obligations under Article 10(1) of the ECT.
207. Respondent contends that, while the language of Article 5.1 of the Privatization Agreement provides to the investor, PCL, immunity from liability for past environmental damage, it does not remove responsibility from the acquired company, Nova Plama. The law in force at the time of the Second Privatization Agreement was no different concerning this issue, as seen from the text quoted above (para. 196 supra). Nothing in the law or in the agreement made the State liable for past pollution.
208. Respondent denies that it committed any breach of its obligations under the ECT to PCL. It contends that Bulgaria's actions vis-à-vis Nova Plama concerning the environment at the Refinery site were not aimed at imposing onerous liability for remediation of past environmental damage but rather at ensuring that Nova Plama would take the necessary measures to operate the Refinery in a manner compliant with existing regulations. It cites a 1998 information letter (R's Exh. 528; C's Exh. 189) addressed by the Bulgarian Regional Inspectorate to the effect that Nova Plama had no outstanding unpaid sanctions or fines and summarizing pending steps to bring the Refinery's operations into compliance with environmental regulations. In fact, Respondent asserts that there is no evidence that Nova Plama was ever subject to any sanction by Bulgaria in connection with alleged past environmental damages (Respondent's Counter-Memorial on the Merits, para. 119).

209. Respondent contests the reliability of an expert report prepared for Nova Plama in 1999 (the so-called “Control P. Report” – R’s Exh. 521) as an assessment of the measure of past environmental damage. It is upon this report that Claimant relies to determine its estimate of the cost of remediation of past environmental damage. Respondent contends that the Control P. Report is not consistent with the established methodology for assessing the existence of damages actually requiring remediation and that it does not properly assess the costs of any such remediation. It contends that the report fails to distinguish between remediation of past environmental damages and measures regarding compliance with current regulations for re-establishing refinery operations and does not set out reliable costs estimates for the measures it advises should be taken (Respondent’s Counter-Memorial on the Merits, paras. 130 et seq.).
210. Respondent also says that Claimant has not proven any detrimental consequences to itself or to Nova Plama due to liability for past environmental damage. It has not been fined, sanctioned or banned. Nor, asserts Respondent, does the evidence submitted by Claimant prove that it was unable to obtain financing or insurance due to outstanding environmental liabilities. Respondent adds that Nova Plama benefitted from the sale of liquid waste, which reduced its environmental remediation costs.
211. As regards the Second Privatization Agreement, Respondent says that it is clear from the language of the Agreement that, while the investor – PCL – would not be held liable for past environmental damage, nothing is said regarding the liability of the target of the investment, Nova Plama. Under the Bulgarian environmental legislation in force at the time of Nova Plama’s privatization (both in 1996 and 1998), Nova Plama remained liable for past environmental damage and, according to Respondent, that fact must have been taken into account in negotiating the terms of Claimant’s purchase of Nova Plama’s shares. Respondent contends that the fact that, prior to Nova Plama’s privatization, the State owned and controlled the Refinery did not, under the law in force during that time, mean that the State was responsible for environmental damage; rather, the liability, under the law, remained with Nova Plama. Respondent denies that the 1999 amendment of the environmental law discriminated against Claimant and asserts that Claimant and the investor in Neftochim were not in similar circumstances.

1.2 The Tribunal's Analysis

212. The Arbitral Tribunal does not find the evidence and arguments very clear-cut. It seems not unreasonable for PCL to have understood from the text of Article 4 of the Second Privatization Agreement that neither it nor the company it was acquiring would be held liable for cleaning up past environmental damage. After all, where would a bankrupt company, which Nova Plama was at the time of its acquisition by PCL, obtain the money to clean up past pollution if not from its shareholders(s)? In that case, the exemption of PCL alone from liability for past pollution was a hollow provision. This view finds support in a letter from the Ministry of Economy to Nova Plama dated 8 July 2002 (R's Exh. 465) in which the Ministry states, ". . . the Ministry of Economy deems valid the text of the agreement signed by Plama Consortium Ltd and the Privatization Agency on 17.11.1998 (the Second Privatization Agreement), i.e., we think that Nova Plama AD should not have to bear material responsibility for cleaning out the past ecological damages."
213. At the same time, Mr. Vautrin, in his Fourth Witness Statement, said that obtaining a specific provision in the privatization agreement by which the State accepted liability for past environmental damage was a fundamental condition for him to purchase Nova Plama's shares (see para. 37). Yet, one searches in vain for such an explicit exemption in the Second Privatization Agreement. Such an exemption might have been obtained in negotiation; but no evidence was given as to whether an effort was actually made to procure it. Respondent has submitted evidence of other privatizations in which investor and privatized company were exempted from liability for past environmental damage and in which State responsibility for pre-privatization environmental damage was explicitly provided for (R's Exhs. 701 and 702). If it is correct, as Claimant's Counsel implied during the hearing in January-February 2008 (H. Tr. Day 1, 28 January 2008, p. 49), that Bulgaria changed its environmental law in 1999 in order to protect Neftochim from liability for past environmental damage as part of that company's privatization, how do we know that the Government would not have done the same for Nova Plama had Claimant bargained for it? Respondent asserts that the price paid for Nova Plama's shares reflected (or should have reflected) all known liabilities, past, present and future and that the state of environmental pollution at Nova Plama was known to all parties. No evidence was given on these aspects of the negotiations.

214. Respondent has contended that, if the assumption of State liability for past environmental damage adopted in February 1999 had been made retroactive beyond 1 February 1999, it would have had to extend such liability to a prohibitive number of other Bulgarian companies (see, e.g., R's Exh. 452). However, when one looks at other evidence in the record, for example the World Bank's Implementation Report (C's Exh. 187), it appears that many of the very companies cited by Respondent as being those to which State aid for past environmental damage would have had to be extended if the February 1999 legislation had been retroactive, were in fact beneficiaries of such aid.
215. Another element which renders the issue of past environmental damage unclear is Section 7 of the Recovery Plan (R's Exh. 609), drafted essentially by Claimant, which states that the Government of Bulgaria excused PCL "(including Plama AD)" from paying for past environmental damage. If PCL really believed what it wrote in the Recovery Plan, why did it have to enter a reserve in Nova Plama's books for such damage? Moreover, there is other evidence indicating that Nova Plama did not have any significant past environmental damage to clean up (R's Exhs. 526 and 727, Appendix 3, page 8).<sup>50</sup>
216. Yet, there are elements in the record which seem to indicate the contrary of what is said in Section 7 of the Recovery Plan. Thus, for example, a note to PCL's 1999 Financial Statements stating that, by virtue of the 1999 amendment of the environmental law, Nova Plama is liable for past ecological damages caused in the period when the State was Nova Plama's sole owner

---

<sup>50</sup> The Arbitral Tribunal is, of course, mindful of the Control P Report which assesses the Refinery's environmental status.

(C's Exh. 203, p. 13, Section 6), as well as a note from Nova Plama's Chief Ecologist to Syndic Todorova also addressing the Refinery's liability for past pollution (C's Exh. 186, p. 2). There exists also a letter from Minister Vassilev to Mr. Vautrin, dated 14 June 2002 (R's Exh. 463), demanding that Nova Plama "shoulder the expenses for cleaning out all environmental pollutions resulting from the Refinery's work."

217. In light of the foregoing, the Arbitral Tribunal comes to the question of whether there is any element in this confusing situation which establishes a violation by Bulgaria of its obligations under the ECT.
218. The Arbitral Tribunal finds no evidence that the modification of Bulgaria's environmental law in 1999 was aimed directly against Claimant and its investment in Nova Plama or in favor of Neftochim. That modification, implemented pursuant to recommendations made by the World Bank, is seen by the Arbitral Tribunal rather as an effort by Bulgaria to meet its obligations under Article 10(1) of the ECT to create favorable conditions for Investors.
219. In his legal opinion of 28 October 2005, Mr. Denev says that the 1999 amendment of the environmental law was discriminatory against prior investors and, therefore, unconstitutional. The Arbitral Tribunal cannot opine on the constitutionality of the 1999 amendment. However, the Tribunal believes that the ECT does not protect investors against any and all changes in the host country's laws. Under the fair and equitable treatment standard the investor is only protected if (at least) reasonable and justifiable expectations were created in that regard. It does not appear that Bulgaria made any promises or other representations to freeze its legislation on environmental law to the Claimant or at all.
220. Moreover, Bulgaria's environmental law, as it existed prior to PCL's acquisition of Nova Plama (quoted earlier), could give no assurance to Claimant that Nova Plama would be exempt from liability for cleaning up past environmental damage. Claimant admits that the Bulgarian law, as it existed at the time of Nova Plama's second privatization, was, at best, unclear as to liability for past environmental damages (H. Tr. Day 1, 28 January 2008, p. 67). Indeed, Mr. Vautrin must have recognized the uncertainty in the law because, as he testified (Fourth Witness Declaration, 28 October 2005, para. 37), State assumption of liability for past environment damage was so essential to him that he insisted on an explicit provision in the privatization agreement, exempting Nova Plama from such liability. This indicates to the Arbitral Tribunal that he was aware that Bulgarian law at the time did not protect Nova Plama against liability for past pollution but failed to negotiate the contractual guarantees he believed were necessary to avoid such risk. While Claimant criticizes Bulgaria for the inadequacy of its environmental law in this regard, Claimant was, of course, aware of, or should have been aware of, the state of Bulgarian law when it invested in Nova Plama.

221. Claimant also complains that, at the same time as the Privatization Agency was negotiating with PCL over the environmental issue in 1998, the proposal to make the State liable for past environmental damages of privatized companies (which became the February 1999 amendment) was being debated in the Bulgarian Parliament without informing PCL of this impending change in the law. But those parliamentary debates were in the public record and should have been known by PCL's Bulgarian advisors.
222. In light of these circumstances, the Arbitral Tribunal cannot uphold Claimant's allegations that Respondent violated the standard of fair and equitable treatment by amending its environmental law. It is also unclear how Respondent's conduct in this context could amount to a violation of the obligation to provide constant protection and security. Even accepting the approach that this standard includes an obligation to provide legal security, the Tribunal has established that Claimant failed fully to appreciate the scope and specificities of Bulgarian legislation. In addition, Claimant failed to identify and the Tribunal was unable to establish a lack of due diligence in Respondent's treatment of Claimant and its investment with regard to the environmental amendments.
223. As to the claim concerning discriminatory treatment, Bulgaria contended that all companies privatized before 1999 were in the same situation as Nova Plama and did not receive aid to clean up past pollution. There is, nevertheless, evidence that, in the implementation of the 1999 amendment, there may have been some companies not covered by the new law which, nevertheless, received State assistance, whereas Nova Plama did not (see para. 206 supra). However, insufficient evidence has been given to permit the Arbitral Tribunal to determine that Bulgaria's treatment of Nova Plama in this respect was discriminatory. Therefore, the Arbitral Tribunal dismisses Claimant's allegations in this regard.

224. With respect to Claimant's allegation as to the violation of the last sentence of Article 10(1) of the ECT, the Tribunal finds no violation by Bulgaria of its contractual undertakings to PCL. The amendment of the Environmental Law did not breach Article 4 of the Second Privatization Agreement since this provision did not shift Nova Plama's liability to the State.
225. In addition, the Arbitral Tribunal has examined the evidence to see what harm or loss to Claimant or its investment resulted from Nova Plama's liability to clean up past pollution, assuming it existed. Claimant's contention that it could not obtain financing for the project given the large liability for past pollution on its books is not supported by sufficient documentary evidence of a contemporary nature. The only document in the record is a letter from a Swiss insurance company, Intersure, (C's Exh. 204) saying that it needed "confirmation that the outstanding ecological issue has been solved." But such a letter from one insurance company hardly proves that financing was impossible to obtain because of any liability for environmental clean-up. As Counsel for Claimant stated at the January-February 2008 hearing (H. Tr. Day 1, 28 January 2008, p. 42), "no company or bank would advance money to [Nova Plama] because Plama itself had bad credit."
226. Bulgaria has insisted in submissions that its governmental authorities never sought to enforce the obligation to clean up past pollution on Nova Plama.<sup>51</sup> While Claimant, in its Post-Hearing Submission on the Merits (para. 91), asserted that the damage to its investment from liability for past environmental damage is readily quantifiable at USD 23 million, nowhere does it show that it had to pay such amount. There is no evidence of what amounts, if any, Nova Plama actually spent to clean up past environmental damage. In fact, Claimant's Post-Hearing Submission on the Merits does not refer to PCL's or Nova Plama's having had to pay for past environmental damage but rather to the prospect of a demand that they pay (see para. 76). Thus the very basis of Claimant's claim, summarized in paragraph 194 above, that Bulgaria is guilty of "holding Nova Plama liable for environmental damage," is not factually established.

---

<sup>51</sup> Indeed, two governmental documents, evaluating Nova Plama's environmental status (R's Exhs. 526 and 528) do not refer to significant past pollution at the Refinery but more to measures which the Refinery would have to take to bring itself into compliance with current standards.

227. Absent any proof of harm or loss to the investment or limitation to Claimant's right to use or enjoy its investment as a result of Respondent's conduct with regard to the environmental amendments, it is impossible to see how a claim concerning the expropriation of Claimant's investment could be successful.
228. Therefore, the Arbitral Tribunal is unable to conclude that Respondent violated its obligations under Articles 10(1) and 13 of the ECT.

2. Actions of the Syndics

229. Claimant essentially complains that the syndics appointed to manage Nova Plama while it was in bankruptcy in 1998-1999 failed to fulfil their obligations and took unlawful actions which harmed Nova Plama. It contends that the Bulgarian Government and Courts failed properly to control them, in violation of Respondent's obligations under Article 10(1) of the ECT to afford fair and equitable treatment, the most constant protection and security and to avoid unreasonable measures. Together with other violations, the syndics' actions amount to an indirect expropriation contrary to Article 13 of the ECT.

2.1 Irregularities in the Appointment of the Syndics

230. Claimant contends that there were irregularities in the appointment of the syndics and in the retention of Syndic Penev as a supervisory syndic after approval of the Recovery Plan.

2.2 Unlawful Increases in the Salaries of Nova Plama's Workers

231. Claimant alleges that, prior to its acquisition of Nova Plama, while Claimant was negotiating an agreement with the workers of Nova Plama regarding payment of back salaries, one of the syndics of Nova Plama, then in insolvency, Syndic Todorova, ex officio, and without consulting PCL or Nova Plama, undertook to index workers' salaries in such a way as to increase the amounts owing to the employees as well as to include in the company's receivables payments for taxes, insurance, etc., which were not foreseen. Claimant considers these acts by the syndics, which increased Nova Plama's financial burden, unlawful, citing a Pleven Regional Prosecution Office's conclusion that the syndics had caused Nova Plama to suffer damages in the amounts of BGN 1,583,738.553 by unlawful salary indexation and BGN 2,025,313.581 by unlawful acceptance of amounts corresponding to workers' income tax, social insurance, etc.

2.3 Overloading of Debt by the Syndics

232. Claimant alleges that the syndics unlawfully accepted as debts of Nova Plama pre-insolvency claims which were either fabricated or inflated, thereby burdening the company's debts by BGN 40 million. The creditors of these debts were Mineralbank, First Private Bank and the Bank for Agricultural Credit (BAC). According to Claimant, the Pleven District Court approved all the syndics' actions on 31 May 1999 (C's Exh. 224).
233. Claimant also complains that the syndics unlawfully accepted claims against Nova Plama by First Private Bank which were not owing by Nova Plama to the bank but which were, nevertheless, approved by the competent court. Claimant alleges that the two syndics were criminally indicted in 2004 for accepting non-existent debts in the amount of BGN 40,886,453.645.
234. Claimant says that because, at the time, management of Nova Plama was in the hands of the syndics, and Nova Plama's management board was not given access to the company's financial accounts, PCL and Nova Plama had no way of ascertaining whether the claimed receivables were legitimate or not.

2.4 Misappropriation of Nova Plama's Funds

235. Claimant further alleges that Syndic Penev misappropriated Nova Plama's funds and carried out other unlawful actions during the period from May 1999 to October 2000. According to Claimant, Syndic Penev was found guilty by the Pleven Regional Court of criminal action in the course of his duties as syndic of Nova Plama.

2.5 Worker Riots

236. Claimant accuses Syndic Todorova of inciting the workers of Nova Plama to strike and riot unlawfully at the Refinery, of herself participating in these actions, and of using violence to evict the Refinery's director from his office (which led to the shutdown of the Refinery on 8 April 1999). In this connection, the police, according to Claimant, failed adequately to protect the Refinery and its management. These unlawful actions allegedly paralyzed the production of the Refinery and blocked all movements of products in and out of the Refinery for two and a half months, escalating into anarchy which lasted for many weeks. Despite reporting these events to the Bulgarian Government, Nova Plama received no police assistance to restore order. Claimant contends that these actions and omissions violate Bulgaria's obligation under Article 10(1) to afford the most constant protection and security to its investment and fall within the scope of Article 12 of the ECT<sup>52</sup>, entitling it to compensation for losses caused by civil disturbances.

2.6 Parallel Recovery Plan

237. In its Reply, Claimant alleges that Syndic Todorova unlawfully submitted a parallel recovery plan to that of Claimant's which delayed the lifting of Nova Plama's insolvency (Claimant's Reply on the Merits, paras. 122-3).
238. Claimant further complains that Syndic Todorova refused to account for products shipped to and from the Refinery and refused PCL's request that its own designated financial and accounting representative be on site (Claimant's Post-Hearing Submission on the Merits, para. 17).
239. Respondent denies that it bears any responsibility for the actions of the syndics complained of by Claimant and contends that, in any event, the syndics' actions were in accordance with Bulgarian law in effect at the time.

---

<sup>52</sup>

See text of Article 12 in the Annex to this Award.

Respondent goes on to rebut Claimant's arguments as to the appointment of the syndics, as to unlawful salary increases having been given to the workers, as to debt overloading by the syndics, as to misappropriation by Syndic Penev, as to the alleged riot and unlawful strike and Syndic Todorova's role therein, as to the failure of the police to provide protection to the Refinery and its management and as to the syndics' submission of a parallel recovery plan. Moreover, the so-called "riot", which occurred on 8 April 1999 could not have caused the Refinery shutdown, which began on 5 April 1999 and, therefore, predated this "riot".

240. Respondent's principal contention is that, under Bulgarian law, a syndic is not an organ of the State and does not perform governmental functions; therefore, his/her actions cannot be imputed to the State. Although a syndic is appointed by a court upon nomination by the creditors, the syndic does not, according to Respondent, perform governmental functions or operate under the direction or control of the State and does not act as an agent of the State or of the court. Therefore, contends Respondent, if Claimant complains about the actions of the syndics, those actions cannot form the basis of claims against Respondent under the ECT.
241. In any event, Respondent says, Claimant has failed to demonstrate that the syndics acted contrary to law or otherwise improperly in a manner which caused any harm to Claimant. Nor has Claimant established that the Bulgarian courts took any action or failed to take any action which was improper.
242. With respect to Claimant's contention that the syndics unlawfully accepted pre-insolvency claims against Nova Plama made by BAC, Mineralbank and First Private Bank, Respondent contends that Claimant ratified, at a creditors' meeting on 22 June 1999, a list of accepted claims containing all claims now challenged by it as well as the Recovery Plan which included such claims. In this connection, Respondent challenges Claimant's assertion that it had no legal standing to contest any measures in the insolvency proceeding.
243. Respondent says that, prior to its acquisition of Nova Plama's shares, Claimant had full knowledge of and unimpeded access to information about the Nova Plama bankruptcy proceedings and all claims admitted therein; that Claimant specifically agreed to the claims it now contests in the Recovery Plan and elsewhere<sup>53</sup>; that Claimant failed to utilize at the time the remedies available to it under Bulgarian law for contesting the claims in question; and that the syndics' acceptance of the claims of Mineralbank, BAC and First Private Bank was not unlawful because the claims were supported by sufficient evidence.

244. Respondent contends that the syndics' acceptance of the claims in question did not increase Nova Plama's debts and had no adverse effect on the Refinery's net economic condition.
245. As to the workers' "riot", Respondent denies that the workers' protests over not being paid their salaries amounted to a "riot" or that Syndic Todorova in any way instigated a "riot" by the workers. Respondent adds that the Bulgarian police were constantly present at the Refinery at the time the alleged "riot" occurred and provided any necessary protection. In no event, says Respondent, did the events or "riot" of 8 April 1999 cause the shutdown of the Refinery. According to Respondent, the shutdown began – on Claimant's own initiative – on 4 or 5 April 1999.<sup>54</sup> Nor, contends Respondent, were the workers' actions responsible for blocking product from coming into or going out of the Refinery.
246. Respondent contests Claimant's argument regarding the parallel recovery plan submitted by Syndic Todorova, saying she had the right under Bulgarian law to submit such a plan.
247. Finally, Respondent states that the Bulgarian courts, on 13 November 2006, properly acquitted the syndics of criminal charges with the exception of one minor one which had been filed against them (C's Exh. 241).

2.7 The Tribunal's Analysis

248. The factual evidence with respect to the actions of the syndics and the alleged riot of the Refinery's workers is in virtually all respects contradictory.

---

<sup>53</sup> See, e.g., R's Exhs. 142 and 598.

<sup>54</sup> Claimant's Counsel appeared to verify Respondent's argument at the January-February 2008 hearing (H. Tr., Day 5, 1 February 2008, p. 983, lines 20-22 and p. 984, line 1).

Eyewitnesses to the same events gave conflicting testimony as to what they saw. Thus witnesses presented by Claimant testified that the workers at the Refinery rioted, used violence to evict the Refinery's director, Mr. Beauduin, from his office, were encouraged and even led in their actions by Syndic Todorova and that the police did nothing to intervene and afford protection to the premises and its management. Respondent's witnesses testified that the workers gathered to demand payment of their overdue wages, that their demonstration was peaceful, that Syndic Todorova was not seen encouraging or leading the demonstration, that there was no violence and that Mr. Beauduin left his office of his own volition, safely escorted by the police.<sup>55</sup>

249. Given this conflicting evidence, the Arbitral Tribunal is unable to form any firm view as to what really transpired. The burden of proof being on Claimant, the Tribunal cannot, therefore, rule in its favor concerning these allegations, including with respect to its claim under Article 12 of the ECT.
250. As to Claimant's arguments that there were irregularities in the appointment of the syndics, that the syndics unlawfully increased the salaries of the workers, that they accepted debts unlawfully and that they improperly submitted a "parallel" recovery plan, the Arbitral Tribunal considers that the evidence shows the contrary (See, e.g., R's Exh. 1030, a decision from the Pleven Municipal Court acquitting the syndics of criminal charges related to the acceptance of claims in the course of the bankruptcy proceedings). The Tribunal is persuaded by Respondent's rebuttal of Claimant's arguments in its Post-Hearing Submission on the Merits (pp. 23 et seq.).
251. However, in order to determine the responsibility of Respondent under the ECT, the crucial questions for the Arbitral Tribunal are whether the State is legally responsible for the actions of syndics, whether syndics are instruments of the State and perform State functions and whether the Bulgarian courts failed to control or supervise the syndics in a way which gives rise to State responsibility. Here again, the Arbitral Tribunal has before it conflicting experts' opinions on the role and authority of syndics and the courts in a bankruptcy situation in Bulgaria such as that of Nova Plama.

---

<sup>55</sup> This version of the facts is supported by Mr. Beauduin's memorandum dated 8 April 1999, recounting the events of that day (R's Exh. 840).

252. Article 8 of the Articles on State Responsibility of the International Law Commission provides:

The conduct of a person or a group of persons shall be considered an act of State under international law if the person or group of persons is in fact acting on the instructions of, or under the direction or control of, that State in carrying out the conduct.

253. Having reviewed the experts' opinions, the evidence presented and the submissions of the Parties on these points, the Arbitral Tribunal has come to the conclusion that syndics in bankruptcy proceedings, such as that involving Nova Plama, are not instruments or organs of the State for whose acts the State is responsible. Although Claimant's legal expert, Mr. Denev, in his opinion of 28 October 2005 annexed to Claimant's Memorial on the Merits, cites a Bulgarian Supreme Court decision to the effect that a syndic is "a court's authority" (see para. 37), the Arbitral Tribunal does not interpret this to mean that a syndic carries out judicial or State functions. Mr. Denev quotes the Commercial Law as defining the syndic as an "organ of the estate of insolvency" (see para. 36). The opinions of Professor Chipev, dated 16 July 2006 and 19 July 2007, presented by Respondent, seem more persuasive to the Tribunal in concluding that a syndic is not a State organ and accord with the experience of the members of the Tribunal in other civil law countries. Thus the Arbitral Tribunal concludes that the acts of the syndics, if they were wrongful – and the Tribunal makes no finding in this respect – are not attributable to Respondent, which cannot, therefore, be said to have violated its obligations towards PCL under the ECT.
254. As for Claimant's allegation that the Bulgarian courts failed adequately to control and supervise the acts of the syndics, the Arbitral Tribunal accepts Mr. Denev's opinion that the Bulgarian courts had a role in supervising the work of the syndics. Obviously the courts of a State are organs of that State, and the State may bear responsibility for the acts or omissions of its courts.

According to the expert opinions of Professor Chipev, presented by Respondent, the powers of supervision and control of the courts over syndics are relatively limited, an opinion which the Arbitral Tribunal accepts. It appears that Claimant and/or Nova Plama had access to the Bulgarian courts to complain of actions of the syndics with which they disagreed. In fact, they did bring certain actions in this respect.<sup>56</sup> The Tribunal can find no evidence that such access to the courts was in any way obstructed or that the courts decided the issues presented to them in anything other than a fair way. The Tribunal finds no evidence which would engage the responsibility of Respondent under the ECT.

255. Consequently, the Arbitral Tribunal rejects Claimant's complaints regarding the syndics.

3. Paper Profits

3.1 The Parties' Positions

256. Claimant contends that, because Bulgaria lacked appropriate accounting rules and tax legislation, the discount or rescheduling of Nova Plama's debts in its Recovery Plan resulted in artificial profit which became taxable and thus created a new debt for the company, requiring an accounting reserve in its books. As a consequence, Nova Plama was not in a position to finalize its 1999, 2000 and 2001 financial statements and missed the deadline for filing its tax return for the 1999 fiscal year and in subsequent years. This, in turn, created a new tax liability. The result was that, being unable to show that taxes due had been paid and therefore to present audited financial statements, it was impossible for Nova Plama to obtain the necessary financing to start up the Refinery.
257. Claimant contends that Bulgaria did not have a proper legal framework for companies which had terminated insolvency proceedings, thereby violating its undertaking in Article 10(1) of the ECT to create stable, equitable and favorable conditions for Investors. From 1999 to 2001, Claimant says that Nova Plama sought the Government's approval for various accounting measures which would avoid its having to declare a "paper profit" but never received a satisfactory response.

---

<sup>56</sup> Claimant made the general allegation that Respondent violated Article 10(12) of the ECT. The Arbitral Tribunal is not persuaded that this is the case.

258. Eventually, says Claimant, Bulgaria acknowledged the gap in its legislation and, at the end of 2001, adopted legislation absolving companies of profit tax on such "paper profits".
259. Claimant concludes that, by refusing to assist Nova Plama in finding a solution to the problem of "paper profits" and by failing to amend its laws in a timely way regarding the taxation of the paper profit which resulted from the discounted liabilities under the Recovery Plan, Bulgaria violated its obligation under Article 10(1) of the ECT to accord fair and equitable treatment and the most constant protection and security to Claimant's investment and to avoid unreasonable measures. It also violated Article 13 of the ECT, because Bulgaria's conduct in this regard contributed to PCL's inability to secure financing for the Refinery and resulted in the deprivation of Claimant's right to the use and enjoyment of the economic benefits of its investment.
260. Respondent replies that ECT Contracting States do not accept an obligation under Article 10(1) of the ECT regarding fair and equitable treatment with respect to tax. It refers to Article 21(1) of the ECT which provides:

Except as otherwise provided in this Article, nothing in this Treaty shall create rights or impose obligations with respect to Taxation Measures of the Contracting Parties. In the event of any inconsistency between this Article and any other provision of the Treaty, this Article shall prevail to the extent of the inconsistency [...]

261. In any event, Respondent contends, Claimant could not have had any legitimate or reasonable expectation that Nova Plama would not be subject to existing tax law, of which it was perfectly well aware when it purchased the company. It was not excused from filing obligatory tax returns or prevented from preparing financial statements; rather than doing so, it chose to lobby for tax relief and for a change in the law. Respondent submits that the various Bulgarian authorities concerned acted reasonably and in good faith to respond to Claimant's inquiries and that Bulgaria's tax laws were reasonable and consistent with international standards.

262. In fact, according to Respondent, Nova Plama had available to it alternative accounting methods for treating the discounted debts to that which it adopted which would have avoided the problems it encountered (see Transacta Report, paras. 38-39).
263. Respondent also points out that, in 2001, it did adopt the change to its tax law which Nova Plama sought.
264. Finally, Respondent says that Claimant has failed to produce evidence that it or Nova Plama made any serious attempts to obtain financing that were rejected because of Nova Plama's alleged inability to prepare its financial statements and file tax returns. Nor has it proven otherwise that the "paper profit" issue caused it any injury.

3.2 The Tribunal's Analysis

265. The problem of which Claimant here complains is that the discounted debt (which it was able to negotiate with Nova Plama's creditors) unfairly gave rise under Bulgarian tax law to a "paper profit" on which it was liable to pay company income tax. It demanded a modification of Bulgaria's tax law to eliminate the tax consequences, which it finally obtained in 2001, but until then it was unable, in light of the enormous potential tax liability, to file certified audited financial statements without paying the tax; and this meant it could not obtain financing for the operation of the Refinery.
266. The Arbitral Tribunal cannot see how this claim gives rise to a violation of Bulgaria's obligations under the ECT. In the first place, Article 21 of the ECT specifically excludes from the scope of the ECT's protections taxation measures of a Contracting State, with certain exceptions, one of which is that, if a tax constitutes or is alleged to constitute an expropriation or is discriminatory, the Investor must refer the issue to the competent tax authority, which Claimant did not do.

267. Even putting aside Article 21 of the ECT, the Tribunal finds no action by Respondent which comes anywhere near to being unfair or inequitable treatment or amounting to expropriation. When Claimant purchased the shares of Nova Plama and negotiated its Debt Settlement Agreement, it was or should have been aware of the taxation treatment that would be accorded to debt reduction by Bulgarian law. It could not have had any legitimate expectation that it would be treated otherwise. It had Ernst & Young, one of the world's leading tax advisory firms, advising it on its acquisition.
268. It has been suggested by Respondent and its experts (see Report of Transacta, 28 July 2006, Respondent's Counter-Memorial on the Merits) that Nova Plama could have adopted a method of accounting for its debt reduction under Bulgarian law which would have avoided the tax consequences it complains of. Claimant says that it was not informed at the time. While the members of the Arbitral Tribunal are not experts in Bulgarian accounting or tax law, it is clear to the Tribunal that Claimant, as the investor, was responsible for doing its due diligence regarding the tax consequences of debt reduction and for taking the necessary measures to deal with them.
269. Respondent produced evidence which shows that the tax laws of many countries around the world treat debt reductions, as were negotiated in this case, as income taxable to the beneficiary (see Report of International Fiscal Association, R's Exh. 1027). It cannot be said that Bulgaria's law in this respect was unfair, inadequate, inequitable or discriminatory. It was part of the generally applicable law of the country like that of many other countries.
270. Here again, as in the case of liability for past environmental damage, discussed earlier in this Award, if Claimant was concerned about the tax consequences of the debt reduction it sought and obtained, it could have attempted to negotiate provisions in the Privatization Agreement protecting Nova Plama against them. There is no evidence that it did so.

271. The evidence also shows that Bulgaria did not in fact seek to collect the taxes which were due from Nova Plama.<sup>57</sup> On the contrary, there is much evidence in the record which demonstrates the Government of Bulgaria's efforts to try to assist Claimant and Nova Plama in this respect (C's Exhs. 273, 275, 282). While in its Post-Hearing Submission, Claimant asserts that its damage from the "hollow" tax is readily quantifiable at USD 23 million (see para. 91), nowhere does it say that it ever had to pay any such tax. And in the end, in 2001, Bulgaria changed its tax laws to exempt Nova Plama from any taxation on these "paper profits". (See Report of Transacta, 28 July 2006, paras. 59 et seq.; Respondent's Counter-Memorial on the Merits, paras. 289-301; Respondent's Rejoinder on the Merits, paras. 123-4). In terms of diligence, Bulgaria's behavior with regard to the above is beyond reproach and the claim concerning the violation of the standard of constant protection and security under the ECT is without merit.
272. Finally, the Arbitral Tribunal is not persuaded by the evidence that it was the "paper profits" issue that made it impossible for Claimant or Nova Plama to obtain financing for the operation of the Refinery. As Counsel for Claimant stated at the January-February 2008 hearing (H. Tr. Day 1, January 28, 2008, p. 42), Nova Plama in 1998 "had bad credit, and no company or bank would advance money to it." It is therefore not apparent how Bulgaria's conduct could have deprived Claimant of the economic benefits of its investment. Claimant's claim concerning expropriation on this account must be dismissed.
273. In conclusion, the Arbitral Tribunal finds no evidence that Bulgaria violated its obligations under the ECT (assuming it applies to this issue) towards Claimant with respect to the paper profits issue and, therefore, rejects Claimant's claims.

---

<sup>57</sup> Claimant's allegation to the contrary at the January-February 2008 hearing (H. Tr., Day 1, 28 January 2008, p. 21 lines 17 et seq.) is unsupported by evidence.

4. Varna Port

4.1 The Parties' Positions

274. Claimant submits that Varna Port is the only Bulgarian port through which crude oil and oil products can be supplied to it by tankers. It contends that, under Bulgarian law, Varna Port is “exclusive state property”, by virtue of the constitution of the Republic of Bulgaria,<sup>58</sup> the Bulgarian Law on Maritime Spaces, Internal Water Roads and Ports, the Law on Concessions and court decisions. It explains that Varna Port was under the control of a State-owned entity, Petrol A.D., which was privatized in 1999. Claimant says that, contrary to Bulgarian law and its constitution, the Bulgarian Government purported to include Varna Port in the assets owned by Petrol A.D. at the time it was privatized. Even if Varna Port could be transferred to private ownership, it was not transferred to the privatized Petrol A.D. in accordance with the methods available for such transfers under Bulgarian law.
275. As a consequence of Varna Port’s unlawful possession by Petrol A.D., Nova Plama (according to Claimant) could not deal with Petrol A.D. since it was not a lawful owner of the port. It could not know with legal certainty with whom it should contract to obtain port services at Varna. Nor did Nova Plama have any guarantee that it would have access to Varna Port as a public service provided by the State in the future. Respondent refused to provide it any assurances that, if it negotiated a contract with Petrol A.D., its contractual rights would be respected. Petrol A.D. was in a position to abuse its dominant position by terminating unreasonably Nova Plama’s access to the port or by imposing on it unreasonable conditions. In fact, Claimant alleges, the newly privatized Petrol A.D., controlled by the Naftex Group, a competitor of Nova Plama (Claimant’s Reply on the Merits, para. 37), threatened Nova Plama and attempted to impose outrageous prices and conditions for the transit of its crude oil through Varna Port.

---

<sup>58</sup> Claimant’s legal expert, Mr. Denev, opined in his statement of 28 October 2005 that under the Bulgarian Constitution ports were “republican roads” which could not be privatized.

276. Claimant also complains that Bulgaria amended its Maritime Law in 2004 to make fundamental changes in the regime governing its ports of public transport. By virtue of this amendment, Varna Port can now be divided into two parts, one remaining public property (wharfs, piers, beach and aquatorium) and the other (a load storage area) as the property of Petrol A.D. Claimant characterizes this amendment as arbitrary and unlawful, causing Nova Plama significant loss, in violation of the ECT.
277. Bulgaria's actions, says Claimant, are a violation of its obligation in Article 10(1) of the ECT to accord PCL fair and equitable treatment, and the most constant protection and security to its investment and have subjected its investment to unreasonable measures. Taken together with the other actions of Bulgaria vis-à-vis Nova Plama, its unlawful privatization of Varna Port amounts to an expropriation in violation of Article 13 of the ECT.
278. Respondent replies, first, that Varna Port is not exclusive State property under the Bulgarian constitution or Maritime Act or under decisions of the competent courts and that, therefore, Claimant had no legitimate expectation that the port would remain owned by the State. Respondent points out that there is a pending dispute between Petrol A.D. and the State as to the legal status of certain parts of Varna Port. Respondent contends that Claimant has failed to show that this ownership dispute has had any adverse impact on Nova Plama. According to Respondent, Nova Plama was not denied access to Varna Port or use of its facilities, and, in any event, Nova Plama had other alternatives to Varna Port available to it. Nor has Claimant substantiated its allegation that Petrol A.D. abused a dominant position in its dealings with Nova Plama; and in any case Claimant's claims of anti-competitive conduct by Petrol A.D. are inadmissible (see Respondent's Counter-Memorial on the Merits, paras. 348-351).

4.2 The Tribunal's Analysis

279. Claimant's contentions that Respondent violated its obligations vis-à-vis PCL under the ECT can be dismissed in a relatively brief manner. This is so because the Arbitral Tribunal finds no evidence that Nova Plama was in any way denied access to Varna Port and to the use of its facilities on commercially reasonable terms. In its submissions to the Tribunal, Claimant complains about the effects of the privatisation of Varna Port on its ability to use the port and its facilities. It alleges that the new owner of the port threatened Nova Plama's representatives and intended to drive the company back into bankruptcy; but the Tribunal has been unable to verify these allegations through any cogent evidence in the record. Otherwise, the concerns expressed by Claimant seem largely theoretical; and there is persuasive evidence that in practice – if Nova Plama had really wanted access to the port and its facilities – it could have obtained it on terms equivalent to other users. The evidence shows that Rexoil, an affiliated company of Nova Plama, imported oil through Varna Port throughout the year 1999. Why Nova Plama could not do the same was never explained to the satisfaction of the Arbitral Tribunal.

280. Claimant's allegations that Varna Port was unconstitutionally privatized do not fall within the competence of the Arbitral Tribunal to determine but rather that of the Bulgarian courts. However, the ordinary meaning of the words "republican roads" in the Bulgarian constitution, relied upon by Claimant to show that Varna Port was exclusive State property, does not seem to include ports.<sup>59</sup> Claimant's concern that the ownership of Varna Port by Petrol A.D., an alleged competitor of Nova Plama, gave it power to strangle Nova Plama by charging it exorbitant rates or denying it access to and use of the port and its facilities could and should have been tested by Nova Plama's entering into negotiations with Petrol A.D. to see whether commercially acceptable terms could be obtained. Even if Claimant believed that Petrol A.D. was not the legal owner of the port facilities, with the backing of the Government, it could, nevertheless, have negotiated with those who were incontestably in control of the port. The Government offered its assistance in this regard (see, for example, R's Exhs. 458, 463, 465 and 481). There was no evidence that any other person or enterprise had any like difficulty in negotiating terms for use of the port or actually using it, including Rexoil, Claimant's affiliate.<sup>60</sup> While the evidence shows that there were some exchanges and meetings between representatives of Nova Plama and Petrol A.D., there was no evidence that Nova Plama or PCL made any serious effort to work out the terms of an agreement with Petrol A.D. for the use of Varna Port, despite Claimant's contention in its Post-Hearing Submission on the Merits (at paragraph 82 and elsewhere) that it "attempted to negotiate a renewal of its contract with Petrol." The Arbitral Tribunal does not consider that Respondent had an obligation to assure Nova Plama that its rights under any contract it negotiated with Petrol A.D. would be respected, as Claimant demanded.

---

<sup>59</sup> See also Article 3(2) of the Bulgarian Roads Act, cited in Professor Chipev's legal opinion of 16 July 2006, para. 163: "[T]he republican roads shall be motorways and first, second and third grade roads ensuring transportation connections of national significance and forming the state road network."

281. Moreover, the acts of Petrol A.D. complained of by Claimant cannot be attributed to Respondent under Bulgarian or international law. There is no evidence that the Government intervened with Petrol A.D. in any way to encourage it to deny Nova Plama's use of Varna Port on reasonable commercial terms. To the contrary, the evidence shows that the Government tried to assist Claimant and the Refinery to make an arrangement that would allow fuel to flow to the Refinery.
282. The fact that the Government privatized Varna Port is not, in and of itself, violative of any obligation it owed to Claimant under the ECT. There is nothing in the ECT which would prevent Bulgaria from privatizing its ports so long as it was done in a way which did not discriminate against Claimant and did not deprive it of a right necessary to the economic operation of the Refinery - a right which it obtained under its agreements with the Government to purchase the shares of Nova Plama. Nothing in the evidential record persuades the Tribunal that the privatization of Varna Port was done otherwise.<sup>61</sup> As for Bulgaria's amendment of its Maritime Law in 2004, the Arbitral Tribunal finds nothing arbitrary or unlawful in this enactment.

---

<sup>60</sup> See R's Exhs. 881, 882, 883, 884, 885, 886, 984, 985, 986, 987 and 988.

<sup>61</sup> During oral argument at the January-February 2008 Hearing concerning Varna Port, Counsel for Claimant alleged that Respondent allowed a Government-owned oil refinery company, Neftochim, to operate in 1999 on discriminatory terms which made competition by Nova Plama nearly impossible (H. Tr., Day 1, January 28, 2008, pp. 23-24). The Arbitral Tribunal is not persuaded by the evidence of these allegations. In any event, allegations of 283. Respondent's final argument that, in any event, this amendment occurred after 18 February 2003, when Bulgaria exercised its right to deny the privileges of the ECT to Claimant, falls away, given that the Tribunal in this Award decides that Mr. Vautrin owned or controlled Claimant (para. 95 supra).

284. Given these elements, the Arbitral Tribunal finds no breach by Respondent of its obligations to Claimant under the ECT with respect to the use of Varna Port.

5. Biochim Bank

5.1 The Parties' Positions

285. Claimant states that through a State-owned bank, the Commercial Bank Biochim ("Biochim Bank"), Nova Plama received credit facilities which resulted in the accrual of significant debts owed by Nova Plama to Biochim Bank. Claimant claims that during the negotiation of Nova Plama's Recovery Plan, Biochim Bank coerced the company to accept burdensome amendments and refused to fulfil its obligations under the Debt Settlement Agreement and the Recovery Plan unless its amendments were accepted. Thus, according to Claimant, Biochim Bank refused to accept that PCL buy Nova Plama's debts to Biochim Bank at a discounted value and imposed the requirement that Nova Plama repay 100% of its debts. Biochim Bank had, in Article 4.4 of the Debt Settlement Agreement, agreed, on condition that PCL invest USD 6 million in Nova Plama within two months of the date of start-up of the Refinery, to release Nova Plama's property pledged and mortgaged to it so that PCL could use the property to attract new investment financing. Nonetheless, Biochim Bank reneged on its undertaking even though PCL fulfilled its investment commitment.
286. In addition, Biochim Bank refused to extend the time limit for repayment by Nova Plama of its debts to Biochim Bank even though such extension was foreseen in the Recovery Plan, threatening to reopen Nova Plama's bankruptcy proceedings.

287. In 2002, Nova Plama contends it tried unsuccessfully to negotiate another debt settlement agreement with Biochim Bank. It then filed a claim against Biochim Bank in the Sofia City Court, which prompted the Bulgarian Ministry of Transport to convoke the company's management to a meeting where, according to Claimant, they were threatened that the State, as a creditor of Nova Plama, would reopen the insolvency proceedings if it did not withdraw the court action. Claimant also alleges that the chairman of Biochim Bank was convoked to a meeting in the Bulgarian Parliament and instructed not to sign a settlement agreement with Nova Plama. In effect, Claimant says, the Government, which was in the process of privatizing Biochim Bank, favored Biochim Bank to the detriment of PCL and Nova Plama, in order to increase the value of Biochim Bank for purposes of its privatization.
288. Biochim Bank was eventually privatized in June 2002 and sold to Bank Austria. According to Claimant, as soon as Biochim Bank was no longer controlled by the Bulgarian State, Nova Plama reached a debt settlement agreement with Bank Austria.
289. Because of the Government's ownership interest in Biochim Bank, Claimant submits that Biochim Bank's actions vis-à-vis Nova Plama violate the last sentence of Article 10(1) of the ECT by breaching contractual obligations entered into with PCL. Bulgaria is also in violation of its obligations under Article 22 of the ECT.<sup>62</sup>
290. Bulgaria's intervention in the relationship of Biochim Bank with Nova Plama is also, contends Claimant, a violation of the fair and equitable treatment standard of Article 10(1) of the ECT, a violation of Bulgaria's obligation to provide PCL's investment the most constant protection and security, a subjection of PCL's investment to unreasonable measures and that it amounts, together with the other acts of Bulgaria complained of by Claimant, to an expropriation in violation of Article 13 of the ECT.

---

62 See Annex for text of Article 22.

291. Respondent's reply is, essentially, that there is no persuasive evidence of State intervention in Biochim Bank's decision-making, that Biochim Bank acted in a commercially predictable and reasonable manner in its dealings with Nova Plama and that Biochim Bank did not breach any contractual obligation. On the contrary, Respondent contends, Claimant and Nova Plama made unrealistic and commercially unreasonable demands of the bank, and even when Biochim Bank agreed to terms with Nova Plama, the latter failed to fulfil its obligations.
292. Respondent says that the Debt Settlement Agreement, which provided for Biochim Bank's release of its mortgage over the Nova Plama plant, never entered into force because it was not signed by all parties, including Biochim Bank, as required by its Article 5.1, and, therefore, Biochim Bank cannot be said to have breached any contractual obligations under it. Moreover, Respondent contends that Claimant has never provided any evidence that it fulfilled its commitment to invest at least USD 6 million within two months of the date of start-up of the Refinery. Finally, Respondent contends, Biochim Bank's General Meeting of Shareholders never approved the release of its mortgage, a requirement of the Debt Settlement Agreement.
293. Respondent denies that Biochim Bank coerced Claimant to accept burdensome amendments to the Recovery Plan. It claims that PCL and Nova Plama themselves submitted an amendment to the Recovery Plan which provided that all creditors of Nova Plama, including Biochim Bank, would retain their pre-existing secured interests (R's Exh. 407). The amended Recovery Plan did not obligate Biochim Bank to release its mortgage over the Refinery. Even if Biochim Bank had released its mortgage, says Respondent, Claimant has failed to prove that it would have been able to secure additional financing for Nova Plama's operations.
294. Respondent also contradicts Claimant's assertion that as soon as Biochim Bank was privatized and no longer under Government control, Nova Plama reached a debt settlement with the bank. Respondent says it took two years of negotiation to reach that settlement which settlement was due essentially to the unlikelihood by that time that Biochim Bank could ever recover any significant amounts from Nova Plama. Respondent says Nova Plama has never paid anything to Biochim Bank.

295. In any event, Respondent contends that the acts of Biochim Bank are not attributable to the State of Bulgaria, which cannot be responsible for them under Article 10(1) of the ECT. Nor is Article 22 of the ECT applicable, since that provision is found in Part IV of the ECT and, therefore, does not fall within the scope of an arbitration under Article 26. Moreover, Biochim Bank is and was even prior to its privatization a commercial bank governed by private law and not a “State enterprise” within the meaning of Article 22 of the ECT.

5.2 The Tribunal’s Analysis

296. As noted above, Claimant contends that Biochim Bank, a State-owned bank, “coerced” Nova Plama into accepting “burdensome amendments” and deliberately refused to fulfill its obligations under the Debt Settlement Agreement and the Recovery Plan, causing Nova Plama great difficulties in obtaining new financing. Moreover, Claimant alleges that the State interfered with Biochim Bank and prevented it from reaching a settlement agreement with Nova Plama prior to Biochim Bank’s privatization. Claimant attributes this unlawful conduct to the State on one of two alternative grounds: (i) because Biochim Bank was a State-owned bank and the State used its ownership interest to direct the bank’s acts; and (ii) because of the application of Article 22 of the ECT to Biochim Bank’s conduct.
297. Article 8 of the ILC Articles on State Responsibility contemplates the possibility that the conduct of companies or enterprises owned or controlled by the State be attributable to that state. In the Commentary to the Articles, the ILC notes that:

Since corporate entities, although owned by and in that sense subject to the control of the State, are considered to be separate, prima facie their conduct in carrying out their activities is not attributable to the State, unless they are exercising elements of governmental authority . . .<sup>63</sup>

298. However, before the question of attribution arises, it is first necessary to determine whether the corporation has in fact engaged in an unlawful act. The ILC notes in this respect that “[i]f such corporations [State-owned and controlled] act inconsistently with the international obligations of the State concerned the question arises whether such conduct is attributable to the State.”<sup>64</sup> The Arbitral Tribunal will therefore proceed to determine whether Biochim Bank acted inconsistently with Respondent’s obligations under the ECT.
299. On the evidence before it, the Arbitral Tribunal is not persuaded that Biochim Bank acted vis-à-vis Claimant and Nova Plama other than reasonably for its own commercial interests. Nor does it accept Claimant’s argument that Biochim Bank’s refusal to give up its mortgage over Nova Plama’s assets amounted to a breach by Respondent of its obligations vis-à-vis Claimant in violation of Article 10(1) of the ECT.
300. Furthermore, while Respondent’s argument that the Debt Settlement Agreement by which Biochim Bank gave up its mortgage over Nova Plama’s assets never entered into force is correct; Biochim Bank’s refusal to give up its mortgage on Nova Plama’s assets was also accepted by Claimant and Nova Plama and confirmed in the Recovery Plan, as amended pursuant to a proposal made by Claimant itself (R. Exh. 407). Undoubtedly, Claimant was under pressure to accept Biochim Bank’s position; but it was free not to accept it and refuse to make further investments on those conditions. It still had considerable negotiating leverage at that time, given Respondent’s strong desire to see Nova Plama continue operations.
301. Nor does the Tribunal find convincing the evidence presented by Claimant that Biochim Bank breached the Recovery Plan or that Respondent exercised undue pressure on Nova Plama to force it into accepting burdensome conditions. In particular, the evidence is not sufficient to substantiate the claim that Bulgaria interfered in any way with Biochim Bank's reasonable commercial decision to decline Nova Plama's settlement offer.

---

<sup>63</sup> Commentary to Article 8 of the ILC Articles, p. 107, para. 6.

<sup>64</sup> Ibid.

302. Under these circumstances, the Tribunal considers that Biochim Bank has not engaged in any unlawful act. There is, therefore, no need to address the question of attribution, nor the issue under Article 22 of the ECT.
303. In conclusion, the Arbitral Tribunal finds that Respondent has not committed any violation of its obligations under the ECT with respect to Biochim Bank.

6. Re-opened Bankruptcy Proceedings

304. Claimant contended that the re-opened bankruptcy proceedings in 2005 were violative of its rights (Claimant's Memorial on the Merits, paras. 229 et seq.). The claim was subject to supplementation, depending on the outcome of local proceedings initiated to contest the decision to re-open the bankruptcy proceedings. Claimant did not submit evidence which persuaded the Tribunal of the merits of this claim.

D. Concluding Observations

305. Based on all that the Arbitral Tribunal has seen and heard in this arbitration, it concludes that what happened with respect to Claimant's investment in Nova Plama is that Mr. Vautrin and PCL undertook a high risk project, without having the financial assets of their own to carry it out. It was based on an ambitious plan to borrow enough money to get the Refinery into operation, hoping thereby to generate sufficient revenues through sales of product to finance the continuing operation of the Refinery, to pay off Nova Plama's creditors over time, to pay wages to the Refinery's workers and to make a profit. Unfortunately, for reasons which, in the Tribunal's opinion, were not attributable to any unlawful actions of Bulgaria, Mr. Vautrin's plan did not work, and Nova Plama fell back into bankruptcy.

E. Damages

306. Since the Arbitral Tribunal has found that Claimant is not entitled to the protections of the ECT and that, in any event, Respondent did not breach its obligations to Claimant under the ECT, the Tribunal need not address Claimant's claims for damages.

F. Costs

307. Claimant requests an award to it of the costs of the arbitration, including legal fees and other costs, as well as such other relief as the Tribunal may deem appropriate.
308. Likewise, Respondent claims all costs of the arbitration, including its legal fees and other costs, and adds that this is so regardless of whether any aspect of Claimant's case is sustained, because of the obstructionist tactics used by Claimant in this arbitration. Respondent did not claim interest on these costs.
309. Each Party has, pursuant to the Arbitral Tribunal's request, subdivided its costs into different categories: costs for the jurisdictional phase of the arbitration, costs for the procedure relating to Claimant's request for provisional measures, costs for the procedure relating Respondent's request for security for costs, and costs for the merits phase of the arbitration.
310. Accordingly, the Parties have submitted the following claims for legal and other costs (excluding advances made to ICSID):

Claimant:	USD
Jurisdictional phase:	1,662,789.49
Provisional remedies	150,211.00
Merits phase:	2,864,521.30
Total:	4,677,521.79
Respondent:
Jurisdictional phase:	3,023,288.00
Request for urgent provisional measures:	584,024.00
Request for security for costs:	381,992.00
Merits phase:	9,254,053.00
Total:	13,243,357.00

311. Claimant has advanced USD 459,985 and Respondent USD 460,000 (totaling USD 919,985) on account of the fees and expenses of the members of the Arbitral Tribunal as well as ICSID's administrative charges. As of 31 July 2008, interest accrued on the advances made amounted to USD 28,076.82. Therefore, the advances plus interest amounted to USD 948,061.82.

312. The fees and expenses of the Tribunal as well as ICSID's administrative charges and expenses are the following (in USD):

Arbitrators' fees and expenses	803,866.04
ICSID's administrative charges and expenses	144,195.78
Total	948,061.82

313. The Arbitrators' fees and expenses as well as ICSID's administrative charges and expenses are paid out of the advances made by the Parties.

314. Article 61 of the ICSID Convention provides, with respect to costs, that :

[...] The Tribunal shall, except as the parties otherwise agree, assess the expenses incurred by the parties in connection with the proceedings and shall decide how and by whom these expenses, the fees and expenses of the members of the Tribunal and the charges for the use of the facilities of the Centre shall be paid. Such decision shall form part of the award.

315. Rule 47(1) of the ICSID Arbitration Rules provides that the Arbitral Tribunal's Award "shall contain [...] (j) any decision [...] regarding the cost of the proceeding."

316. Article 61 of the ICSID Convention gives the Arbitral Tribunal the discretion to allocate all costs of the arbitration, including attorney's fees and other costs, between the Parties as it deems appropriate. In the exercise of this discretion, the Arbitral Tribunal will apply the principle that "costs follow the event," by a weighing of relative success or failure, that is to say, the loser pays costs including reasonable legal and other costs of the prevailing party; or costs are allocated proportionally to the outcome of the case, save for the circumstances described below.

317. In this arbitration, in the jurisdictional phase, in which Respondent sought a decision that the Arbitral Tribunal had no jurisdiction, it was in part the losing party. Respondent contended, however, that whether it won or lost on its jurisdictional pleas, it should be awarded costs for that phase of the arbitration because of the behavior of Claimant (Respondent's Rejoinder on the Merits, paras. 370 et seq.).
318. In its Decision on Jurisdiction (para. 238), the Arbitral Tribunal criticized Claimant for not having earlier disclosed to Respondent the details of the ownership and structure of the PCL-PHL-EMU group. That failure of disclosure certainly added to the costs of Respondent during the jurisdictional phase, which have been taken into account by the Tribunal.
319. Following the Decision on Jurisdiction, Claimant made a request for urgent provisional measures, which the Arbitral Tribunal rejected entirely. The Tribunal reserved a decision on the costs resulting from the proceedings on this request to a later stage.
320. The Arbitral Tribunal convened a meeting in Paris on 16 February 2007 to consider with the Parties Respondent's request to limit the scope of further proceedings and to order Claimant to post security for costs. The Tribunal denied both of Respondent's requests (see paras. 36-42 supra). Mr. Vautrin testified at this meeting that "if the costs are reasonable, Plama Consortium will pay through disposal of other assets" (H. Tr. p. 55).
321. In the merits phase, Respondent is not only the prevailing party, but the Arbitral Tribunal has found that Claimant was guilty of fraudulent misrepresentation in obtaining its investment in Bulgaria and has denied to Claimant the protections of the ECT for that reason.
322. In light of these factors and in particular the circumstance mentioned in the preceding paragraph, the Arbitral Tribunal decides that Claimant shall bear all of the fees and expenses of the Tribunal and ICSID's administrative charges plus the reasonable legal fees and other costs incurred by Respondent.
323. As to the reasonable amount of those legal fees and other costs, taking into account all the circumstances of the present case, the Tribunal determines those fees and other costs of Respondent at USD 7,000,000.

324. Accordingly, the Tribunal determines that Claimant will bear all fees and expenses of the Arbitral Tribunal as well as ICSID's administrative charges and will order Claimant to pay to Respondent USD 460,000 on account of its advance on costs as well as USD 7,000,000 as a reasonable proportion of Respondent's legal fees and other costs.

VI. DISPOSITIVE

325. On the basis of the foregoing, the Arbitral Tribunal makes the following decisions:

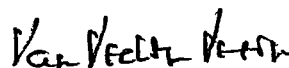

1. Incorporates by reference its Decision on Jurisdiction of 8 February 2005;
2. Respondent cannot rely on Article 17(1) of the Energy Charter Treaty to deny Claimant the benefits of Part III of the Treaty until 17 February 2003;
3. Claimant is not entitled to any of the substantive protections afforded by the ECT;
4. Assuming that Claimant would have been entitled to substantive protections afforded by the ECT:
  - (a) Respondent did not violate its obligations to Claimant under the ECT with respect to issues of past environmental damages;
  - (b) Respondent did not violate its obligations to Claimant under the ECT by virtue of the actions of the syndics;
  - (c) Respondent did not violate its obligations to Claimant under the ECT with respect to the matter of taxation of "paper profits", even assuming that the ECT applies to this issue;
  - (d) Respondent did not breach its obligations to Claimant under the ECT with respect to the use of Varna Port;
  - (e) Respondent did not breach its obligations to Claimant under the ECT with respect to the actions of Biochim Bank;
  - (f) The Arbitral Tribunal finds no other violations by Respondent of its obligations to Claimant under the ECT;
  - (g) The Arbitral Tribunal rejects all Claimant's claims for damages;

5. Claimant bears all fees and expenses of the Arbitral Tribunal as well as ICSID's administrative charges, being USD 919,985, which are paid out of the advances made by the Parties.
6. Claimant is ordered to pay Respondent USD 460,000 on account of Respondent's advance on costs as well as USD 7,000,000 on account of Respondent's legal fees and other costs.
7. All other claims and requests by the Parties are rejected.

Professor Albert Jan van den Berg
Arbitrator

[August 18, 2008]

V.V. Veeder
Arbitrator

[August 13, 2008]

Carl F. Salans
President

[August 8, 2008]

ANNEX

ECT

Article 1 - Definitions

As used in this Treaty:

...

(6) "Investment" means every kind of asset, owned or controlled directly or indirectly by an Investor and includes:

(a) tangible and intangible, and movable and immovable, property, and any property rights such as leases, mortgages, liens, and pledges;

(b) a company or business enterprise, or shares, stock, or other forms of equity participation in a company or business enterprise, and bonds and other debt of a company or business enterprise;

(c) claims to money and claims to performance pursuant to contract having an economic value and associated with an Investment;

(d) Intellectual Property;

(e) Returns;

(f) any right conferred by law or contract or by virtue of any licences and permits granted pursuant to law to undertake any Economic Activity in the Energy Sector.

A change in the form in which assets are invested does not affect their character as investments and the term "Investment" includes all investments, whether existing at or made after the later of the date of entry into force of this Treaty for the Contracting Party of the Investor making the investment and that for the Contracting Party in the Area of which the investment is made (hereinafter referred to as the "Effective Date") provided that the Treaty shall only apply to matters affecting such investments after the Effective Date.

"Investment" refers to any investment associated with an Economic Activity in the Energy Sector and to investments or classes of investments designated by a Contracting Party in its Area as "Charter efficiency projects" and so notified to the Secretariat.

(7) "Investor" means:

(a) with respect to a Contracting Party:

(i) a natural person having the citizenship or nationality of or who is permanently residing in that Contracting Party in accordance with its applicable law;

(ii) a company or other organization organized in accordance with the law applicable in that Contracting Party;

(b) with respect to a "third state", a natural person, company or other organization which fulfils, mutatis mutandis, the conditions specified in subparagraph (a) for a Contracting Party.

...

Article 10 – Promotion, Protection and Treatment of Investments.

(1) Each Contracting Party shall, in accordance with the provisions of this Treaty, encourage and create stable, equitable, favourable and transparent conditions for Investors of other Contracting Parties to make Investments in its Area. Such conditions shall include a commitment to accord at all times to Investments of Investors of other Contracting Parties fair and equitable treatment. Such Investment shall also enjoy the most constant protection and security and no Contracting Party shall in any way impair by unreasonable or discriminatory measures their management, maintenance, use, enjoyment or disposal. In no case shall such Investments be accorded treatment less favourable than that required by international law, including treaty obligations. Each Contracting Party shall observe any obligations it has entered into with an Investor or an Investment of an Investor of any other Contracting Party.

(2) Each Contracting Party shall endeavour to accord to Investors of other Contracting Parties, as regards the Making of Investments in its Area, the Treatment described in paragraph (3).

(3) For the purposes of this Article, "Treatment" means treatment accorded by a Contracting Party which is no less favourable than that which it accords to its own Investors or to Investors of any other Contracting Party or any third state, whichever is the most favourable.

(4) A supplementary treaty shall, subject to conditions to be laid down therein, oblige each party thereto to accord to Investors of other parties, as regards the Making of Investments in its Area, the Treatment described in paragraph (3). That treaty shall be open for signature by the states and Regional Economic Integration Organizations which have signed or acceded to this Treaty. Negotiations towards the supplementary treaty shall commence not later than 1 January 1995, with a view to concluding it by 1 January 1998.

(5) Each Contracting Party shall, as regards the Making of Investments in its Area, endeavour to:

(a) limit to the minimum the exceptions to the Treatment described in paragraph (3);

(b) progressively remove existing restrictions affecting Investors of other Contracting Parties.

(6)(a) A Contracting Party may, as regards the Making of Investments in its Area, at any time declare voluntarily to the Charter Conference, through the Secretariat, its intention not to introduce new exceptions to the Treatment described in paragraph (3).

(b) A Contracting Party may, furthermore, at any time make a voluntary commitment to accord to Investors of other Contracting Parties, as regards the Making of Investments in some or all Economic Activities in the Energy Sector in its Area, the Treatment described in paragraph (3). Such commitments shall be notified to the Secretariat and listed in Annex VC and shall be binding under this Treaty.

(7) Each Contracting Party shall accord to Investments in its Area of Investors of other Contracting Parties, and their related activities including management, maintenance, use, enjoyment or disposal, treatment no less favourable than that which it accords to Investments of its own Investors or of the Investors of any other Contracting Party or any third state and their related activities including management, maintenance, use, enjoyment or disposal, whichever is the most favourable.

(8) The modalities of application of paragraph (7) in relation to programmes under which a Contracting Party provides grants or other financial assistance, or enters into contracts, for energy technology research and development, shall be reserved for the supplementary treaty described in paragraph (4). Each Contracting Party shall through the Secretariat keep the Charter Conference informed of the modalities it applies to the programmes described in this paragraph.

(9) Each state or Regional Economic Integration Organization which signs or accedes to this Treaty shall, on the date it signs the Treaty or deposits its instrument of accession, submit to the Secretariat a report summarizing all laws, regulations or other measures relevant to:

(a) exceptions to paragraph (2); or

(b) the programmes referred to in paragraph (8).

A Contracting Party shall keep its report up to date by promptly submitting amendments to the Secretariat. The Charter Conference shall review these reports periodically.

In respect of subparagraph (a) the report may designate parts of the energy sector in which a Contracting Party accords to Investors of other Contracting Parties the Treatment described in paragraph (3).

In respect of subparagraph (b) the review by the Charter Conference may consider the effects of such programmes on competition and Investments.

(10) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Article, the treatment described in (3) and (7) shall not apply to the protection of Intellectual Property; instead the treatment shall be as specified in the corresponding provisions of the applicable international agreements for the protection of Intellectual Property rights to which the respective Contracting Parties are parties.

(11) For the purposes of Article 26, the application by a Contracting Party of a trade-related investment measure as described in Article 5(1) and (2) to an Investment of an Investor of another Contracting Party existing at the time of such application shall, subject to Article 5(3) and (4), be considered a breach of an obligation of the former Contracting Party under this Part.

(12) Each Contracting Party shall ensure that its domestic law provides effective means for the assertion of claims and the enforcement of rights with respect to Investments, investment agreements, and investment authorizations.

Article 12 – Compensation for Losses

(1) Except where Article 13 applies, an Investor of any Contracting Party which suffers a loss with respect to any Investment in the Area of another Contracting Party owing to war or other armed conflict, state of national emergency, civil disturbance, or other similar event in that Area, shall be accorded by the latter Contracting Party, as regards restitution, indemnification, compensation or other settlement, treatment which is most favourable of that which that Contracting Party accords to any other Investor, whether its own Investor, the Investor of any other Contracting Party, or the Investor of any third state.

...

Article 13 - Expropriation

(1) Investments of Investors of a Contracting Party in the Area of any other Contracting Party shall not be nationalized, expropriated or subjected to a measure or measures having effect equivalent to nationalization or expropriation (hereinafter referred to as "Expropriation") except where such Expropriation is:

- (a) for a purpose which is in the public interest;*
- (b) not discriminatory;*
- (c) carried out under due process of law; and*
- (d) accompanied by the payment of prompt, adequate and effective compensation.*

Such compensation shall amount to the fair market value of the Investment expropriated at the time immediately before the Expropriation or impending Expropriation became known in such a way as to affect the value of the Investment (hereinafter referred to as the "Valuation Date").

Such fair market value shall at the request of the Investor be expressed in a Freely Convertible Currency on the basis, of the market rate of exchange existing for that currency on the Valuation Date. Compensation shall also include interest at a commercial rate established on a market basis from the date of Expropriation until the date of payment.

(2) The Investor affected shall have a right to prompt review, under the law of the Contracting Party making the Expropriation, by a judicial or other competent and independent authority of that Contracting Party, of its case, of the valuation of its Investment, and of the payment of compensation, in accordance with the principles set out in paragraph (1).

(3) For the avoidance of doubt, Expropriation shall include situations where a Contracting Party expropriates the assets of a company or enterprise in its Area in which an Investor of any other Contracting Party has an Investment, including through the ownership of shares.

Article 17 – Non-Application of Part III<sup>65</sup> in Certain Circumstances.

Each Contracting Party reserves the right to deny the advantages of this Part to:

(1) a legal entity if citizens or nationals of a third state own or control such entity and if that entity has no substantial business activities in the Area of the Contracting Party in which it is organized;...

---

<sup>65</sup> Part III of the ECT provides for the treatment to be accorded by the Contracting Parties to investments covered by the Treaty in their territory and includes Articles 10, 13 and 17 quoted in the Annex to this Award.

(2) an Investment, if the denying Contracting Party establishes that such Investment is an Investment of an Investor of a third state with or as to which the denying Contracting Party:

(a) does not maintain a diplomatic relationship; or

(b) adopts or maintains measures that:

(i) prohibit transactions with Investors of that state; or

(ii) would be violated or circumvented if the benefits of this Part were accorded to Investors of that state or to their Investments.

Article 22 - State and Privileged Enterprises

(1) Each Contracting Party shall ensure that any state enterprise which it maintains or establishes shall conduct its activities in relation to the sale or provision of goods and services in its Area in a manner consistent with the Contracting Party's obligations under Part III of this Treaty.

(2) No Contracting Party shall encourage or require such a state enterprise to conduct its activities in its Area in a manner inconsistent with the Contracting Party's obligations under other provisions of this Treaty.

(3) Each Contracting Party shall ensure that if it establishes or maintains an entity and entrusts the entity with regulatory, administrative or other governmental authority, such entity shall exercise that authority in a manner consistent with the Contracting Party's obligations under this Treaty.

(4) No Contracting Party shall encourage or require any entity to which it grants exclusive or special privileges to conduct its activities in its Area in a manner inconsistent with the Contracting Party's obligations under this Treaty.

(5) For the purposes of this Article, "entity" includes any enterprise, agency or other organization or individual.

Article 26 – Settlement of Disputes Between An Investor and a Contracting Party.

(1) Disputes between a Contracting Party and an Investor of another Contracting Party relating to an Investment of the latter in the Area of the former, which concern an alleged breach of an obligation of the former under Part III shall, if possible, be settled amicably.

(2) If such disputes can not be settled according to the provisions of paragraph (1) within a period of three months from the date on which either party to the dispute requested amicable settlement, the Investor party to the dispute may choose to submit it for resolution:

(a) to the courts or administrative tribunals of the Contracting Party to the dispute;

(b) in accordance with any applicable, previously agreed dispute settlement procedure; or

(c) in accordance with the following paragraphs of this Article.

(3) (a) Subject only to subparagraphs (b) and (c), each Contracting Party hereby gives its unconditional consent to the submission of a dispute to international arbitration or conciliation in accordance with the provisions of this Article.

...

(4) In the event that an Investor chooses to submit the dispute for resolution under subparagraph (2)(c), the Investor shall further provide its consent in writing for the dispute to be submitted to:

(a)(i) The International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes, established pursuant to the Convention on the Settlement of Investment Disputes between States and Nationals of other States opened for signature at Washington, 18 March 1965 (hereinafter referred to as the “ICSID Convention”), if the Contracting Party of the Investor and the Contracting Party to the dispute are both parties to the ICSID Convention;

...

(6) A tribunal established under paragraph (4) shall decide the issues in dispute in accordance with this Treaty and applicable rules and principles of international law.

...

(8) The awards of arbitration, which may include an award of interest, shall be final and binding upon the parties to the dispute.

...

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-71

CERTIFICATE

AES Summit Generation Limited and AES-Tisza Erömu Kft.

v.

Republic of Hungary

(ICSID Case No. ARB/07/22)

I hereby certify that the attached is a true copy of the Award of the Arbitral Tribunal dated September 23, 2010.

Meg Kinnear
Secretary-General

Washington, D.C.
September 23, 2010

INTERNATIONAL CENTRE FOR SETTLEMENT OF INVESTMENT DISPUTES

In the matter of the arbitration between

AES SUMMIT GENERATION LIMITED AES-TISZA ERŐMŰ KFT

(Claimants)

- and -

THE REPUBLIC OF HUNGARY

(Respondent)

(ICSID Case No. ARB/07/22)

AWARD

Members of the Tribunal

Mr. Claus Werner von Wobeser, President
Prof. Brigitte Stern, Arbitrator
J. William Rowley QC, Arbitrator

Secretary of the Tribunal

Ms. Frauke Nitschke

Date of Dispatch to the Parties

September 23, 2010

Table of Contents

1.	ABBREVIATIONS AND DEFINED TERMS .....	4
2.	THE PARTIES AND THEIR REPRESENTATIVES.....	8
2.1	Claimants.....	8
2.2	Respondent .....	9
3.	THE TRIBUNAL AND THE PROCEDURE .....	9
4.	FACTUAL BACKGROUND .....	18
5.	THE CLAIMS.....	26
6.	JURISDICTION AND ADMISSIBILITY .....	27
6.1	The Parties ( ratione personae ).....	27
6.2	Legal Dispute Arising Directly out of an Investment ( ratione materiae ) .....	29
6.3	Written Consent ( ratione voluntatis ).....	30
6.4	Condition ratione temporis .....	31
6.5	Procedural requirements pursuant to Article 26 of the ECT. ....	31
7.	APPLICABLE LAW .....	33
7.1	Claimants' Applicable Law Arguments as Presented in the Memorial.....	33
7.2	Respondent's Applicable Law Arguments as presented in the Counter-Memorial.....	33
7.3	Claimants' Applicable Law Arguments as Presented in the Reply .....	34
7.4	Respondent's Applicable Law Arguments as Presented in the Rejoinder .....	37
7.5	Arguments Expressed During the Hearing.....	38
7.6	Findings of the Tribunal .....	40
8.	THE TRIBUNAL'S APPROACH TO THE SUBSTANTIVE CLAIMS .....	43
9.	OBLIGATION TO PROVIDE FAIR AND EQUITABLE TREATMENT .....	44
9.1	Claimants' Position .....	44
9.2	Respondent's Position .....	47
9.3	Findings of the Tribunal .....	54
10.	UNREASONABLE AND DISCRIMINATORY MEASURES .....	70
10.1	Claimants' Position .....	70
10.2	Respondent's Position .....	71
10.3	Findings of the Tribunal .....	73
11.	NATIONAL TREATMENT.....	87
11.1	Claimants' Position .....	87
11.2	Respondent's Position .....	87
11.3	Findings of the Tribunal .....	87

12.	MOST FAVOURED NATION TREATMENT .....	88
	12.1 Claimants' Position .....	88
	12.2 Respondent's Position .....	88
	12.3 Findings of the Tribunal .....	89
13.	CONSTANT PROTECTION AND SECURITY .....	89
	13.1 Claimants' Position .....	89
	13.2 Respondent's Position .....	90
	13.3 Findings of the Tribunal .....	91
14.	EXPROPRIATION .....	93
	14.1 Claimants' Position .....	93
	14.2 Respondent's Position .....	94
	14.3 Findings of the Tribunal .....	94
15.	COSTS .....	95
	15.1 Claimants' Position .....	95
	15.2 Respondent's Position .....	96
	15.3 Findings of the Tribunal .....	96
16.	OPERATIVE PART .....	97

1. ABBREVIATIONS AND DEFINED TERMS

- 1.1 1994 Electricity Act - Act XLVIII of 1994 on the Generation, Supply and Provision of Electricity.
- 1.2 1995 Framework Decree - GKM Decree 63/1995 (XI.24.) on the regulation of prices of electricity and hot water and steam sold by public utility electricity units and their heat generating installations.
- 1.3 2000 Framework Decree - GM Decree 45/2000 (XII. 24.) on the regulation of prices of electricity and hot water and steam sold by public utility electricity units and their heat generating installations.
- 1.4 2000 PSA Claim - The arbitration commenced by the AES Corporation (the ultimate parent company of the Claimants) and AES Summit against APV and MVM in October 2000 for breach of the PSA.
- 1.5 2000 Treaty Claim - The arbitration commenced by AES Summit against Hungary in November 2000 under the ECT and also under the Agreement Between the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Government of the People's Republic of Hungary for the Promotion and Reciprocal Protection of Investments.
- 1.6 2001 Amendment Agreement - The agreement dated 19 December 2001 made between AES Tisza and MVM which amended and extended the original PPA as required by the 2001 Settlement Agreement.
- 1.7 2001 Electricity Act - Act CX of 2001 on Electricity.
- 1.8 2001 PPA - The Original PPA as amended by the 2001 Amendment Agreement.
- 1.9 2001 Settlement Agreement - The agreement settling, amongst other things, the 2000 PSA Claim and the 2000 Treaty Claim, dated 19 December 2001.

- 1.10 2006 Electricity Act Amendment - The amendment to the 2001 Electricity made by the Hungarian parliament on 6 February 2006, coming into force on 3 March 2006.
- 1.11 2006 Price Decree - Decree GKM No. 80/2006 (XI.24.) issued by GKM on 24 November 2006.
- 1.12 2007 Price Decree - Decree GKM No. 14/2007 (I.26.) issued by GKM on 26 January 2007.
- 1.13 2007 Electricity Act - Act LXXXVI of 2007 on Electricity.
- 1.14 AES Corp - AES Corporation, the ultimate parent company of the company of the Claimants.
- 1.15 AES Summit - AES Summit Generation Limited, the First Claimant.
- 1.16 AES Tisza - AES – Tisza Erömu Kft, the Second Claimant.
- 1.17 Amendment Agreement - The agreement between MVM and all generators and electricity suppliers, amending the terms of the Original PPA, dated 18 December 1995, during the privatization process.
- 1.18 ÁPV - Állami Privatizációs és Vagyonkezelő Részvénytársaság (since 8 February 2006 Állami Privatizációs es Vagyonkezelő Zártkörűen Működő Részvénytársaság).
- 1.19 Availability Fee (Sometimes, Capacity Fee) - As defined in the 2001 PPA.
- 1.20 Borsod Project - The construction of a new power plant at Borsod.
- 1.21 Centre - The International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes.
- 1.22 Claimants - AES Summit and AES Tisza.
- 1.23 Commission - The Commission of the European Communities.

- 1.24 Community competition law - The body of laws of the European Community regarding competition.
- 1.25 Community law - The law of the European Community.
- 1.26 Community State Aid Rules - The body of rules of the European Community regarding state aid.
- 1.27 Convention - The Convention on the Settlement of Investment Disputes between States and Nationals of Other States.
- 1.28 Development Projects - The Borsod Project and the Tisza II Retrofit.
- 1.29 DG Comp. - The Competition Directorate General of the European Commission.
- 1.30 ECT - The Energy Charter Treaty.
- 1.31 EC - The European Community.
- 1.32 Eeckhout Report - The Expert Report dated 30 October 2008 of Professor Piet Eeckhout.
- 1.33 Energy Fee - As defined in the 2001 PPA.
- 1.34 Facilities Agreement - The €98 million project finance loan facilities agreement dated 20 December 2002.
- 1.35 Fazekas Report - The Expert Report dated 7 July 2008 of Dr. Mariana Fazekas.
- 1.36 FIDESZ - The Conservative Party in Hungary.
- 1.37 First Horrocks Statement - The First Witness Statement dated 6 March 2008 of Andrew Joseph Horrocks.
- 1.38 GKM - The Hungarian Ministry of Economy and Transport.
- 1.39 HEO - The Hungarian Energy Office.

- 1.40 Hungary - The Republic of Hungary.
- 1.41 ICSID - The International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes.
- 1.42 Lithgow Statement - The Witness Statement dated 7 March 2008 of Peter Lithgow.
- 1.43 MVM - Magyar Villamos Művek Részvénytársaság (since 21 October 2005 Magyar Villamos Művek Zártkörűen Működő Részvénytársaság) and its wholly owned subsidiaries, including MVM Trader.
- 1.44 Navigant Report - The Expert Report dated 11 July 2008 of Mr. Brent C. Kaczmarek, CFA of Navigant Consulting, Inc.
- 1.45 Original Tisza II PPA - The Tisza II power purchase agreement dated 10 October 1995.
- 1.46 Petersen Report - The Expert Report dated 30 October 2008 of Mr. Asger Petersen.
- 1.47 Price Act - LXXXVII of 1990 on the determination of prices.
- 1.48 Price Decrees - The 2006 Price Decree and the 2007 Price Decree.
- 1.49 PSA - Purchase and Sale Agreement between MVM, ÁPV, AES Summit and the AES Corporation as guarantor, dated 4 July 1996.
- 1.50 Request - The Request for Arbitration dated 6 July 2007.
- 1.51 Respondent - The Republic of Hungary.
- 1.52 Salzburg Report - Expert Opinions of Professor Thomas Eilmansberger, Thomas Jaeger Mag., LL.M, and Peter Thyri Mag., LL.M on the Compatibility of Hungarian System of Long-term Capacity and Power Purchase Agreement with EU Energy and Competition Law dated 23 November 2004.
- 1.53 SAMO - State Aid Monitoring Office of the Ministry of Finance.

- 1.54 Second Horrocks' Statement - The Second Witness Statement dated 31 October 2008 of Andrew Joseph Horrocks.
- 1.55 Second LECG Report - The Second Expert Report dated 31 October 2008 of Dr. Manuel A. Abdala and Professor Pablo T. Spiller of LECG LLC.
- 1.56 Slot Report - The Expert Report dated 4 July 2008 of Professor Piet Jan Slot.
- 1.57 State Aid Decision - The Commission's decision on the state aid awarded by Hungary through Power Purchase Agreements adopted 4 June 2008.
- 1.58 Stranded Costs Decree - GKM Decree 183/2002 implementing the two solutions mandated by the 2001 Electricity Act, allowing consumers above a certain consumption threshold to choose their suppliers freely and go out to the liberalized part of the market.
- 1.59 Tisza II Retrofit - Part of the "Development Project," a defined term in the PSA: Describes a major retrofit of all four units at the Tisza II power station.
- 1.60 Varga Report - The Expert Report of Dr. István Varga dated 30 October 2008.
- 1.61 Vienna Convention - The Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties of 1969.
- 1.62 WACC - The Weighted Average Cost of Capital.

2. THE PARTIES AND THEIR REPRESENTATIVES

2.1 Claimants

2.1.1 The Claimants in this arbitration are AES Summit Generation Limited ("AES Summit") and AES-Tisza Erömu Kft. ("AES Tisza").

2.1.2 AES Summit, the first Claimant, is a company incorporated under the laws of the United Kingdom ("UK"). AES Tisza, the second Claimant, is a company incorporated under the laws of the Republic of Hungary. AES Summit owns 99% of, and exercises ownership and control over, AES Tisza.

2.1.3 AES Summit and AES Tisza (the “Claimants”) are represented in this proceeding by Stephen Jagusch, Richard Farnhill, Jeffrey Sullivan, Sophie Minoprio, Orsolya Toth and Alex Hiendl of Allen & Overy, London, and Dr. Csaba Polgár of Polgár & Bebók Law Office, Budapest.

2.2 Respondent

2.2.1 The Respondent in this arbitration is the Republic of Hungary (“Hungary” or “the Respondent”). Hungary is an Eastern European country, which entered into the European Union in the year 2004.

2.2.2 Hungary is represented in this arbitration by Jean Kalicki, Luc Gyselen, Dmitri Evseev, Alessando Maggi, Suzana Medeiros Blades, and Clara Vondrich of Arnold & Porter, Washington and Brussels offices, and Dr. János Katona of the Law Office of Dr. János Katona, Budapest.

3. THE TRIBUNAL AND THE PROCEDURE

3.1 On 9 July 2007, the International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes (“ICSID” or the “Centre”) received a Request for Arbitration (“Request for Arbitration” or the “Request”) of the same date from AES Summit Generation Limited, a company incorporated under the laws of the United Kingdom, and AES-Tisza Erömö Kft., a company incorporated under the laws of the Republic of Hungary, against the Republic of Hungary.

3.2 In the Request, the Claimants invoke the ICSID arbitration provision contained in Article 26 of the 1994 Energy Charter Treaty (the “ECT” or the “Treaty”).

3.3 In accordance with Rule 5 of the ICSID Rules of Procedure for the Institution of Conciliation and Arbitration Proceedings (the “ICSID Institution Rules”), the Centre acknowledged receipt of the Request on 9 July 2007, and on the same day transmitted a copy of the Request to the Respondent and counsel for the Respondent.

3.4 The Request for Arbitration was registered by the ICSID Secretary-General on 13 August 2007, pursuant to Article 36(3) of the Convention on the Settlement of Investment Disputes between States and Nationals of Other States (the “ICSID Convention” or “Washington Convention”) and, on the same day, the Secretary-General, in accordance with ICSID Institution Rule 7, notified the parties of the registration and invited them to proceed to the constitution of an Arbitral Tribunal as soon as possible.

3.5 On 12 September 2007, the parties agreed in accordance with Rule 2 of the ICSID Rules of Procedure for Arbitration Proceedings (the “ICSID Arbitration Rules”) on the method of constitution of the Arbitral Tribunal, providing for an Arbitral Tribunal consisting of three arbitrators, one arbitrator appointed by each party (by 12 September 2007, and 12 October 2007, respectively), and the third, presiding, arbitrator to be appointed by the party-appointed arbitrators by 12 November 2007. In the event that the two party-appointed arbitrators were unable to reach agreement within the agreed time period, the presiding arbitrator was to be appointed by the ICSID Secretary-General.

3.6 By letter of the same date, i.e., 12 September 2007, the Claimants appointed J. William Rowley QC, a national of Canada, as arbitrator. Mr. Rowley accepted his appointment on 14 September 2007.

3.7 By letter of 12 October 2007, the Respondent appointed Professor Brigitte Stern, a French national, as arbitrator. Professor Stern accepted her appointment on 16 October 2007.

3.8 In accordance with the parties' agreement, the two party-appointed arbitrators appointed, on 5 November 2007, Claus von Wobeser, a national of Mexico, as the President of the Tribunal. By letter of 14 November 2007, Mr. Wobeser accepted his appointment.

3.9 By letter of 21 November 2007, the ICSID Acting Secretary-General informed the parties that all arbitrators had accepted their appointments and that the Tribunal was deemed to have been constituted and the proceeding to have begun on that date, pursuant to Rule 6(1) of the ICSID Arbitration Rules. On the same day, Mr. Ucheora Onwuamaegbu was appointed Secretary of the Tribunal. Later, on 26 January 2010, Mr. Ucheora Onwuamaegbu was replaced as Secretary of the Tribunal by Ms. Frauke Nitschke.

3.10 By letters of 29 November 2007 and 3 December 2007, the Centre requested each party to make an initial advance payment to defray the cost of the proceeding in its first three to six months. The Claimants' share was received on 12 December 2007, and the Respondent's payment was received on 28 December 2007. An additional advance payment was requested from the parties by letter of 14 January 2009. Payment from the Respondent was received on 11 February 2009 and the Claimants' share was received on 13 February 2009. A further advance payment was requested from the parties by letter of 12 February 2010. The Claimants' share was received on 23 February 2010. Payment from the Respondent was received on 5 April 2010. A final advance payment was requested from the parties on 3 June 2010. Payment from the Claimants was received on 28 June 2010, and the Respondent's share was received on 31 August 2010.

3.11 Following an agreement between the parties and the Tribunal to hold the first session in this proceeding on 9 January 2008, the parties submitted, under cover of a letter of 19 December 2007, a joint statement concerning the items of the draft agenda for the first session, which was earlier circulated by the Secretary of the Tribunal.

3.12 By agreement of the parties, the first session was held on 9 January 2008, in London. Present at the session were: Mr. Claus von Wobeser, President of the Tribunal, Mr. J. William Rowley QC, Arbitrator, and Professor Brigitte Stern, Arbitrator. Attending on behalf of the Claimants: Mr. Stephen Jagusch, Mr. Jeffrey Sullivan, and Ms. Caroline Bordas of Allen & Overy, and Mr. Benedek Sipocz of AES-Tisza Erőmű Kft. Attending on behalf of the Respondent: Ms. Jean E. Kalicki and Mr. Dmitri Evseev of Arnold & Porter, Dr. János Katona of the Law Offices of János Katona, Budapest, and Mr. Peter Gordos, Head of the Energy Department at the Ministry of Economy, Republic of Hungary. The Secretary of the Tribunal, Mr. Ucheora Onwuamaegbu, attended by video-conference from Washington, D.C.

3.13 At the first session, the parties' agreement regarding the procedural calendar was noted. Pursuant to this agreement, the following calendar was established for the further written and oral procedure:

- (a) Claimants' Memorial (together with supporting documents, witness statements and expert reports) by 7 March 2008;

- (b) Respondent's Counter-Memorial (together with supporting documents, witness statements and expert reports) by 11 July 2008;
- (c) Claimants' Reply to Respondent's Counter-Memorial, (together with reply witness statements and supplementary expert reports) by 10 October 2008;
- (d) Respondent's Rejoinder to Claimants' Reply, (together with reply witness statements and supplementary expert reports) by 9 January 2009; and
- (e) Hearing on the merits to be held from 9 to 13 March 2009.

3.14 In accordance with the procedural calendar agreed at the first session, the Claimants' Memorial on the merits was filed on 7 March 2008.

3.15 By letter of 17 April 2008, the Respondent filed a request for production of documents before the Tribunal, to which the Claimants objected by letter of 18 April 2008. By letter of 21 April 2008, the Respondent filed observations on the Claimants' objection of 18 April 2008. On 6 May 2008, the Tribunal issued Procedural Order No. 1, on the Respondent's request for production of documents.

3.16 By letter of 19 May 2008, the Respondent filed a further request for production of documents. The Claimants filed observations on this request by letter of 21 May 2008. By letter of 22 May 2008, the Respondent filed a response to the Claimants' observations. On 9 June 2008, the Tribunal issued Procedural Order No. 2, on the Respondent's further request for production of documents.

3.17 On 11 July 2008, the Respondent filed its Counter-Memorial on the merits, which was supplemented by a letter of 23 July 2008.

3.18 Under cover of a letter of 3 September 2008, the office of the Acting Director-General, Legal Service, of the European Commission, filed an application under ICSID Arbitration Rule 37 as a non-disputing party. By letter of 18 September 2008, the Tribunal requested the European Commission to clarify certain aspects of its application. On 3 October 2008, the European Commission filed a response to the Tribunal's request, which was transmitted to the parties the same day, with an invitation from the Tribunal to comment on the European Commission's application by 24 October 2008.

3.19 By letter of 18 September 2008, the parties agreed to amend the procedural calendar for the written procedure, providing for the Claimants to file their Reply on the merits by 31 October 2008, and the Respondent its Rejoinder by 13 February 2009.

3.20 By respective letters of 22 October 2009, each side filed observations on the European Commission's application of 3 September 2008, as supplemented by its letter of 3 October 2008.

3.21 In accordance with the amended procedural calendar, the Claimants filed the Reply on the merits on 31 October 2008. This was followed on 25 November 2008, by a correction to the Reply.

3.22 On 26 November 2008, the Tribunal issued Procedural Order No. 3 concerning the European Commission's application to file a written submission pursuant to ICSID Arbitration Rule 37(2). In its Order, the Tribunal allowed the European Commission to file a submission pursuant to ICSID Arbitration Rule 37, within certain prescribed limits, by 15 January 2009. The Tribunal further denied the European Commission's request for copies of the parties' written submissions in light of the fact that the parties had not reached an agreement on this issue.

3.23 By letter of 1 August 2008, the Claimants filed a request for production of documents, and also filed a renewed request for production of documents on 6 October 2008. Following several rounds of observations by both parties on the Claimants' requests, the Tribunal issued, on 22 December 2008, and 5 January 2009, Procedural Order Nos. 4 and 5 concerning production of documents.

3.24 By letter of 7 January 2009, the Claimants filed a further request for production of documents. Having considered several written observations on this request from both parties, the Tribunal issued, on 13 January 2009, Procedural Order No. 6 concerning the Claimants' requests for production of documents.

3.25 Under cover of a letter of 15 January 2009, the European Commission filed a written submission pursuant to ICSID Arbitration Rule 37, in accordance with the Tribunal's Procedural Order No. 3.

3.26 By letter of 26 January 2009, the Claimants filed a further request for production of documents. Following several rounds of communication by the parties on this request, the Tribunal issued, on 4 February 2009, Procedural Order No. 7 concerning the Claimants' request for production of documents.

3.27 On 13 February 2009, each party filed observations on the written submission by the European Commission of 15 January 2009. On the same day, the Respondent filed its Rejoinder on the merits.

3.28 In accordance with the procedural calendar agreed at the first session, the hearing on the merits was held from 9 to 13 March 2009 in Washington, D.C. At the hearing, both sides presented oral arguments on the merits of the dispute, and provided witness and expert testimony.

3.29 Following an application by the Claimants, the Tribunal ordered the Respondent during the hearing, on 11 March 2009, to produce certain documents. The Tribunal further specified that certain portions of these documents could be redacted by the Respondent. However, it was agreed by the parties and the Tribunal that any disagreement between the parties on any redactions proposed by the Respondent would be submitted to the Secretary of the Tribunal for decision, without recourse to the Tribunal. Following a number of written exchanges between the parties regarding proposed redactions by the Respondent, the parties invited the Secretary's decision.

3.30 On 27 March 2009, pursuant to the Tribunal's document request during the hearing, the parties jointly filed post-hearing bundles. The parties also exchanged correspondence on the suspense file produced at the hearing. Consequently, further documents were introduced into the suspense file following the hearing.

3.31 On 3 April 2009, the Secretary of the Tribunal issued his decision on the Respondent's proposed redactions to certain documents.

3.32 On 20 April 2009, the Respondent filed a request for the admissibility of new evidence. Following several communications by the parties, the Tribunal issued, on 13 May 2009, Procedural Order No. 8 concerning the admissibility of new evidence and the further procedural calendar.

3.33 On 29 May 2009, the parties filed post-hearing briefs, in accordance with the procedural calendar set forth by the Tribunal in its Procedural Order No. 8.

3.34 Under cover of a letter of 4 June 2009, the Claimants requested to file a further post-hearing submission. The Respondent filed observations on this request by letter of 5 June 2009, which Claimants replied to by letter of 9 June 2009. The Tribunal, having considered the parties' submissions, denied the Claimants' request on 3 September 2009.

3.35 On 24 December 2009, the Claimants filed a request for the admissibility of new evidence. Following several rounds of communications by the parties on this request, the Tribunal issued, on 4 February 2010, Procedural Order No. 9 concerning the admissibility of new evidence.

3.36 On 4 June 2010, the Tribunal declared the proceeding closed pursuant to ICSID Arbitration Rule 38(1).

3.37 By letter of 25 June 2010, the Respondent filed its final Statement of Costs incurred in the proceeding, which amounted to a total cost of US$ 5,522,883.

3.38 On 8 July 2010, the Claimants filed their final Statement of Costs, which amounted to a total cost of US$ 8,787,993.70

3.39 The Members of the Tribunal deliberated by various means of communication, including meetings in Washington, D.C. on 13 March 2009 and in New York on 1 September 2009.

4. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

4.1 This arbitration arises from an alleged violation by Respondent of Articles 10(1), 10(7) and 13 of the 1994 Energy Charter Treaty (the “ECT” or the “Treaty”).<sup>1</sup> Claimants argue that an act of the Republic of Hungary, which was the reintroduction in 2006 and 2007 of administrative

---

<sup>1</sup> Article 10(1) and 10(7), and Article 13 of the ECT read as follows:

Article 10(1) Each Contracting Party shall, in accordance with the provisions of this Treaty, encourage and create stable, equitable, favourable and transparent conditions for Investors of other Contracting Parties to make Investments in its Area. Such conditions shall include a commitment to accord at all times to Investments of Investors of other Contracting Parties fair and equitable treatment. Such Investments shall also enjoy the most constant protection and security and no Contracting Party shall in any way impair by unreasonable or discriminatory measures their management, maintenance, use, enjoyment or disposal. In no case shall such Investments be accorded treatment less favourable than that required by international law, including treaty obligations. Each Contracting Party shall observe any obligations it has entered into with an Investor or an Investment of an Investor of any other Contracting Party.

Article 10(7) Each Contracting Party shall accord to Investments in its Area of Investors of other Contracting Parties, and their related activities including management, maintenance, use, enjoyment or disposal, treatment no less favourable than that which it accords to Investments of its own Investors or of the Investors of any other Contracting Party or any third state and their related activities including management, maintenance, use, enjoyment or disposal, whichever is the most favourable.

Article 13(1) Investments of Investors of a Contracting Party in the Area of any other Contracting Party shall not be nationalized, expropriated or subjected to a measure or measures having effect equivalent to nationalization or expropriation (hereinafter referred to as “Expropriation”) except where such Expropriation is:

- (a) for a purpose which is in the public interest;
- (b) not discriminatory;
- (c) carried out under due process of law; and
- (d) accompanied by the payment of prompt, adequate and effective compensation.

Such compensation shall amount to the fair market value of the Investment expropriated at the time immediately before the Expropriation or impending Expropriation became known in such a way as to affect the value of the Investment (hereinafter referred to as the “Valuation Date”).

Such fair market value shall at the request of the Investor be expressed in a Freely Convertible Currency on the basis of the market rate of exchange existing for that currency on the Valuation Date. Compensation shall also include interest at a commercial rate established on a market basis from the date of Expropriation until the date of payment.

Article 13(2) The Investor affected shall have a right to prompt review, under the law of the Contracting Party making the Expropriation, by a judicial or other competent and independent authority of that Contracting Party, of its case, of the valuation of its Investment, and of the payment of compensation, in accordance with the principles set out in paragraph (1).

Article 13(3) For the avoidance of doubt, Expropriation shall include situations where a Contracting Party expropriates the assets of a company or enterprise in its Area in which an Investor of any other Contracting Party has an Investment, including through the ownership of shares.

pricing pursuant to two Price Decrees, after administrative prices had been abolished as of 1 January 2004, violated their rights under the ECT.

4.2 In 1995, Hungary announced an energy sector privatization as part of a modernization strategy, which included the privatization of certain state-owned power stations.

4.3 On 4 July 1996, a Purchase and Sale Agreement (“PSA”)<sup>2</sup> was signed between, on the one hand, two Hungarian state-owned entities, ÁPV and MVM, and on the other hand, AES Summit, pursuant to which AES Summit purchased a majority shareholding in the company Tiszai Erőmű Részvénytársaság (now called AES Tisza – the second Claimant in this arbitration). The assets of AES Tisza included a power station known as Tisza II as well as two older coal-fired power stations, known as the Borsod power station and the Tiszapalkonya power station. The investment made by AES Summit was approximately US$ 130 million.

4.4 As a result of the PSA, Hungary was obliged to amend and extend the term of the existing power purchase agreement with Tisza II – which had been signed on 10 October 1995 (“Original Tisza II PPA”)<sup>3</sup> – and to enter into a new long-term power purchase agreement for the Borsod power station (“Borsod PPA”). For its part, AES Summit agreed to pursue and complete a retrofit of all four units at the Tisza II power station and the construction of a new power plant at Borsod.

---

<sup>2</sup> Exhibit C-4.

<sup>3</sup> The Original PPA required MVM to pay several different types of fees to AES Tisza, of which there were two major components: (a) the Availability Fee (payment for capacity to be in place in case it is needed); and (b) the Energy Fee (payment for the cost of the power it actually requires to have generated).

4.5 In October 2000, AES Corporation (the ultimate parent company of the Claimants) and AES Summit commenced an arbitration against ÁPV and MVM regarding an alleged failure of Hungary, ÁPV and MVM to grant the promised amendment and extension of the Original Tisza II PPA and the Borsod PPA (the “2000 PSA Claim”).<sup>4</sup>

4.6 A month later, in November 2000, AES Summit commenced another arbitration against Hungary under the ECT and the Agreement Between the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Government of the People’s Republic of Hungary for the Promotion and Reciprocal Protection of Investments (the “2000 Treaty Claim”).<sup>5</sup>

4.7 Both arbitrations were settled by a Settlement Agreement dated 19 December 2001<sup>6</sup> (the “2001 Settlement Agreement”), by which the Claimants granted a release by way of a full and final settlement of all claims made in the arbitration proceeding. Hungary was a party to the 2001 Settlement Agreement. The 2001 Settlement Agreement superseded all prior agreements, understandings, negotiations and discussions of the parties. Some other terms of the 2001 Settlement Agreement that concern this arbitration are the following:

- (a) the 2001 Settlement Agreement contained “amendments to the 1995 Tisza PPA [Original Tisza II PPA] to be entered into pursuant to this Agreement, in the form contained in schedule 1 [of the Settlement Agreement];”<sup>7</sup>

---

<sup>4</sup> Memorial, ¶ 79.

<sup>5</sup> Memorial, ¶ 79.

<sup>6</sup> Exhibit C-7.

<sup>7</sup> Exhibit C-7, p. 4.

- (b) AES Summit and AES Corporation were released “from any and all obligations and/or liabilities arising under the PSA to pursue the implementation of the Development Projects.”

4.8 The 2001 Settlement Agreement also contained a waiver of sovereign immunity clause, which reads as follows:

“WAIVER OF SOVEREIGN IMMUNITY

Each of APV and MVM (as to (a) through (d)) and the Republic (as to (a) only) unconditionally and irrevocably:

- (a) agrees that the execution and performance by it of this Agreement constitute private and commercial acts rather than public, administrative or governmental acts;
- (b) agrees that should any proceedings arising out of this Agreement be brought against it or its assets, no immunity from such proceedings shall be claimed by or on behalf of itself or with respect to its assets;
- (c) waives any right of immunity which it or any of its assets now has or may acquire in the future in any jurisdiction in connection with proceedings arising out of this Agreement; and
- (d) consents to the enforcement of any arbitration award against it in proceedings brought in accordance with Clause 11 in any jurisdiction (including without limitation the making, enforcement or execution against or in respect of any property whatsoever, irrespective of its use or intended use).”

4.9 The inclusion of the sovereign immunity clause indicates that the parties agreed that the execution and performance of the 2001 Settlement Agreement and its Annexes constituted private and commercial acts, which means that Hungary was acting in its private character rather than in a public or governmental character.

4.10 Also on 19 December 2001, as required by clause 4.1 of the 2001 Settlement Agreement, the Original Tisza II PPA was amended by agreement between MVM and AES Tisza (the “2001 Amendment Agreement”). The Original Tisza II PPA, as amended by the Amendment Agreement, will be referred hereinafter as the “2001 PPA.” The Amendment Agreement was to be governed by Hungarian Law and read and construed as one document with the Original Tisza II PPA.<sup>8</sup> In pertinent part, the Amendment Agreement provided that:

- (a) the term of the Original Tisza II PPA was to be extended to 31 December 2016;
- (b) AES Tisza would make a four-phased series of improvements (“Retrofit”) to the power stations and, in order to finance the proposed retrofit, it could assign, and/or create security interests in the Amendment Agreement; and
- (c) a new clause was to be inserted into the Original Tisza II PPA, Clause 3.7, regarding a possible change in the law. That clause provides:

“3.7 Change in Law

(a) Illegality

If, during the term of this Agreement, a Change in Law occurs as a result of which either party’s obligations under this Agreement become illegal, unenforceable or impossible to perform, the Parties must give each other notice of the relevant Change in Law and its effect on this Agreement and the Parties shall be obliged for the Negotiating Period following such notice to conduct good faith negotiations and use all reasonable efforts to agree to changes (if any) that can be made to this Agreement in order to reflect the intent of the Parties at the date of the Amendment Agreement and the nature of the circumstances in question. If, despite their reasonable efforts, the Parties are unable to agree upon such changes by the expiration of such Negotiating Period, either Party shall have the right to terminate this Agreement by written notice to the other Party. Upon such termination:

---

<sup>8</sup> Exhibit C-9, p. 2.

- (i) if the Law affected by the relevant Change in Law is of the type specified in point (i) of the definition of “Laws”, the following shall apply:
  - (A) if the relevant Change in Law occurs on or prior to January 1, 2007 or the date of the accession of the Republic of Hungary to the European Union, if later then Section 3.3 (c) shall apply and on the first day of effectiveness of the Utilization Agreement of New PPA, the Transmission Company shall pay to Generator an amount equal to the Recognized Debt, outstanding at the date of the termination notice (and, without prejudice to the terms of the Settlement Agreement, no other termination charge or other compensation, liquidated damages or any indemnification shall be payable by either Party to the other Party relating to a condition or circumstance occurring because of such Change in Law or such termination); and
  - (B) if the relevant Change of Law occurs after January 1, 2007 or the date of the accession of the Republic of Hungary to the European Union, if later, then, without prejudice to the terms of the Settlement Agreement, neither Party shall be obliged to pay a termination charge or other compensation, liquidated damages or any indemnification to the other Party Relating to a condition or circumstance occurring because of such Change in Law or such termination.
- (ii) if the Law affected by the relevant Change in Law is not of the type specified in point (i) of the definition of “Laws”, then Section 3.3 (c) shall apply and on the first day of effectiveness of the Utilization Agreement or New PPA, Transmission Company shall pay compensation to Generator in the amount of the Recognized Debt outstanding at the time of the termination notice.”

4.11 Pursuant to the Amendment Agreement, the existing pricing schedule in the Original Tisza II PPA (Schedule 6) was replaced by a new pricing schedule which provided, inter alia, that “... as long as the public utility generator prices are subject to administrative pricing, the prices published by Decree No. 55/1996 (20 December) of the Ministry of Economy (GM) (and any amendments thereof, including currently published GM Decree No. 46/2000 (21 December)) and determined on the basis of the cost review and price review of [the Hungarian Energy Office (“HEO”)] pursuant to the rules and prescriptions set forth in GM Decree No. 45/2000 (21 December) shall be acknowledged and applied.”<sup>9</sup> The new pricing schedule also went on to set out detailed pricing formula which were to be applied “following the termination of price administration of public utility generator prices.”<sup>10</sup>

4.12 In 2004, Hungary acceded to the European Union.

4.13 As of 1 January 2004, the administrative pricing regime for generators was terminated as had been foreshadowed by the 2001 Electricity Act. Thereafter, at least for a time, the specific formula established in the new pricing schedule in the 2001 PPA was used to calculate the prices paid to AES Tisza II.

4.14 By December 2004, AES Tisza had completed three of the four phases of the Tisza II Retrofit at a cost of €98 million.<sup>11</sup>

4.15 In 2005, a political debate arose in Hungary regarding what were thought by some to be the high profits of the energy generators.

4.16 The debate included argumentations in parliamentary sessions and publication of articles in the media, which discussed the existence of alleged excessive profits being earned by the

---

<sup>9</sup> Exhibit C-9, p. 24 of the 2001 Amendment Agreement.

<sup>10</sup> This latter provision is to be understood against Act CX of 2001 on Electricity (“2001 Electricity Act”) which provided for termination of Hungary’s existing administrative pricing regime for generators from 1 January 2004.

<sup>11</sup> Claimants’ Request for Arbitration, p. 8. This is not contested by the Respondent.

generators.<sup>12</sup> Amongst other things, MVM was said to be charging less to the consumers than the price it was paying to the generators for such electricity.<sup>13</sup>

4.17 On 23 March 2005, during a debate before the Economic Committee of Parliament, Ferenc Horváth, president of the Hungarian Energy Office, argued that if the HEO was to meet the deadline for market pricing in 2007, a financially feasible solution for the problems of MVM's stranded costs<sup>14</sup> had to be found. He stated that a "reasonable" profit rate for the generators of below 10% could be acceptable.

4.18 On 10 November 2005, HEO sent a letter to AES Tisza in which it claimed that the profits of the company were "unjustifiable high" and suggested that the profits should be capped at a maximum of 7.1%.

4.19 On 28 November 2005, a first meeting took place between representatives of HEO, MVM and the Claimants. At least four more meetings took place without reaching an agreement between the parties.

4.20 On 3 March 2006, the Hungarian parliament amended the 2001 Electricity Act (the "2006 Electricity Act") by reintroducing a regime of administrative prices for electricity sold by generators to MVM.

4.21 On 6 November 2006, the GKM Decree No. 80/2006 was issued, which became effective on 9 December 2006 ("2006 Price Decree").

4.22 On 26 January 2007, the GMK issued Decree No. 14/2007, which was to remain effective until December 2007 ("2007 Price Decree").

---

<sup>12</sup> As the debate developed, references in the press and elsewhere were made to generators profits as "extra," "too high," "huge" and "luxury." The Hungarian public was described as "defenceless" against rising prices and it was said that such "luxury profits" must be "knocked down."

<sup>13</sup> Memorial, ¶ 110.

<sup>14</sup> The difference between what MVM paid for electricity and what it could recover.

4.23 Both Decrees provided a fixed price for each generator. Consequently, the formula established in Schedule 6 of the 2001 PPA was no longer applicable.

4.24 The Claimants allege that due to the issue of both Price Decrees, they have suffered a price cut of approximately 43% (under the 2006 Price Decree) and 35% (under the 2007 Price Decree) of the Availability Fee that MVM was obligated to pay pursuant to the 2001 Tisza II PPA.

4.25 The Claimants contend that the Price Decrees were reintroduced for political reasons and that, in addition to the direct loss of revenue for AES Tisza, their lenders have declared it in default under the loan documentation in respect to the €98 million project finance loan facilities made to the company to finance the Tisza II Retrofit.

4.26 The Claimants filed a Request for Arbitration on 6 July 2007.

5. THE CLAIMS

5.1 The Claimants submit that Hungary violated its obligations under the ECT by reintroducing administrative pricing through the issuance of the Price Decrees. Specifically the alleged violations are the following:

- (a) breach of its obligation to provide fair and equitable treatment;
- (b) impairment of AES' investment by unreasonable and discriminatory measures;
- (c) breach of its obligation to provide national treatment;
- (d) breach of its obligation to provide most favoured nation treatment;
- (e) breach of its obligation to provide constant protection and security; and
- (f) expropriation.

5.2 The Respondent did not question the Claimants' right to bring its claims to ICSID arbitration. Nevertheless, there are some conditions which define the jurisdiction of an ICSID tribunal. In order for the Centre to have jurisdiction over a dispute, three – well-known – conditions must be met, according to Article 25 of the ICSID Convention, to which one must add a condition resulting from the general principle of non-retroactivity:

- (a) a condition ratione personae: the dispute must oppose a contracting state and a national of another contracting state;
- (b) a condition ratione materiae: the dispute must be a legal dispute arising directly out of an investment;
- (c) a condition ratione voluntatis, i.e., the contracting state and the investor must consent in writing that the dispute be settled through ICSID arbitration;
- (d) a condition ratione temporis: the ICSID Convention must have been applicable at the relevant time.

5.3 Pursuant to Article 41 of the ICSID Convention, the Tribunal is the judge of its own competence and therefore compliance with certain preconditions must be analyzed.

6. JURISDICTION AND ADMISSIBILITY

6.1 The Parties (ratione personae)

6.1.1 The conditions for the existence of ICSID jurisdiction are stated in the Washington Convention and the Energy Charter Treaty.

Claimants

6.1.2 The UK signed the ICSID Convention on 26 May 1965 and deposited instruments of ratification on 19 December 1966. The ICSID Convention entered into force for the UK on 18 January 1967.

6.1.3 The UK ratified the ECT on 16 December 1997 and the Treaty entered into force on 16 April 1998.

6.1.4 AES Summit Generation Limited (“AES Summit”) is a company incorporated under the laws of the United Kingdom on 7 December 1995 and has its principal place of business at 37-39 Kew Foot Road, Richmond, Surrey, TW9 2SS. As a national of the United Kingdom, AES Summit is a national of a “contracting state” for purposes of Article 25(1) of the Convention.

6.1.5 AES-Tisza Eromu Kft (“AES Tisza”) is a company incorporated under the laws of the Republic of Hungary and has its principal place of business at H-3581 Tiszaújváros, Pf: 53, Hungary.

6.1.6 AES Summit owns 99% of, and exercises ownership and control over, AES Tisza. Therefore, pursuant to Article 26(7)<sup>15</sup> of the ECT, AES Tisza shall be treated as a national of “another contracting state” for purposes of Article 25(2)(b) of the Convention.

Respondent

6.1.7 Hungary signed the ICSID Convention on 1 October 1986 and deposited instruments of ratification on 4 February 1987. The ICSID Convention entered into force for Hungary on 6 March 1987.

---

<sup>15</sup> Article 26(7) ECT reads:

(7) An Investor other than a natural person which has the nationality of a Contracting Party party to the dispute on the date of the consent in writing referred to in paragraph (4) and which, before a dispute between it and that Contracting Party arises, is controlled by Investors of another Contracting Party, shall for the purpose of article 25(2)(b) of the ICSID Convention be treated as a “national of another Contracting State” and shall for the purpose of article 1(6) of the Additional Facility Rules be treated as a “national of another State.”

6.1.8 Respondent signed the ECT on 27 February 1995, ratified the Treaty on 8 April 1998, and the Treaty entered into force on 16 April 1998.

6.2 Legal Dispute Arising Directly out of an Investment (ratione materiae)

6.2.1 Claimants allege violations of their rights under the ECT. There are disagreements on different points of law and fact, which creates a conflict of legal views and interests between the parties, and the present dispute hence qualifies as a legal dispute under Article 25(1) of the ICSID Convention.

6.2.2 Claimants claim to have invested approximately US$ 130 million and €98 million into the Hungarian electricity sector.

6.2.3 First, in 1996, AES Summit entered into a Purchase and Sale Agreement of approximately US$ 130 million with the Hungarian state privatization and electricity transmission companies, ÁPV and MVM respectively, for a majority shareholding in a Hungarian electricity generation company which, after its purchase, became known as AES Tisza.

6.2.4 Later in 2001, AES Tisza invested approximately €98 million to retrofit the power station.

6.2.5 Both actions (purchasing the company and carrying out the Retrofit of the power station) qualify as investments in accordance with Article 1(6) of the ECT and Article 25 of the ICSID Convention.<sup>16</sup>

6.3 Written Consent (ratione voluntatis)

6.3.1 In the Request for Arbitration, Claimants provide their written consent to submit the dispute to the jurisdiction of the Centre.

6.3.2 In addition, in their Request for Arbitration and in their Memorial, Claimants maintain that Hungary gave its consent to the submission of the dispute to the jurisdiction of the Centre pursuant to Articles 26(3) and 26(5)(a) of the ECT.

6.3.3 This statement was not disputed by Hungary in its Counter-Memorial, nor was it contested in the Respondent's Rejoinder. Hence, the parties have consented in writing to ICSID jurisdiction in accordance with Article 25 of the ICSID Convention.

---

<sup>16</sup> Article 1(6) of the ECT reads:

(6) "Investment" means every kind of asset, owned or controlled directly or indirectly by an Investor and includes: tangible and intangible, and movable and immovable, property, and any property rights such as leases, mortgages, liens, and pledges; (b) a company or business enterprise, or shares, stock, or other forms of equity participation in a company or business enterprise, and bonds and other debt of a company or business enterprise; (c) claims to money and claims to performance pursuant to contract having an economic value and associated with an Investment; (d) Intellectual Property; (e) Returns; (f) any right conferred by law or contract or by virtue of any licences and permits granted pursuant to law to undertake any Economic Activity in the Energy Sector. A change in the form in which assets are invested does not affect their character as investments and the term "Investment" includes all investments, whether existing at or made after the later of the date of entry into force of this Treaty for the Contracting Party of the Investor making the investment and that for the Contracting Party in the Area of which the investment is made (hereinafter referred to as the "Effective Date") provided that the Treaty shall only apply to matters affecting such investments after the Effective Date. "Investment" refers to any investment associated with an Economic Activity in the Energy Sector and to investments or classes of investments designated by a Contracting Party in its Area as "Charter efficiency projects" and so notified to the Secretariat.

6.4 Condition *ratione temporis

6.4.1 Hungary signed the Treaty on 27 February 1995 and expressly declared that it did not accept the provisional application of the ECT (see Article 45(2)(a) of the ECT). Nevertheless, in accordance with Article 1(6), the investments protected by the ECT include those made before the entry into force of this Treaty, provided that it shall only apply to matters affecting such investments after the Effective Date.

6.4.2 Consequently this Tribunal can analyze the alleged breaches of the ECT given that they are said to have occurred after the entry into force of the Treaty, and after the entry into force of the ICSID Convention.

6.5 Procedural requirements pursuant to Article 26 of the ECT.

6.5.1 Regarding Article 26(1) and (2) of the ECT,<sup>17</sup> the Tribunal observes that communications between the Claimants and the Respondent regarding negotiations of the dispute began in January 2007. Furthermore, in April 2007, the parties conducted in person negotiations without reaching a resolution of the dispute.

---

<sup>17</sup> Article 26(1) and (2) of the ECT read:

(1) Disputes between a Contracting Party and an Investor of another Contracting Party relating to an Investment of the latter in the Area of the former, which concern an alleged breach of an obligation of the former under Part III shall, if possible, be settled amicably.

(2) If such disputes can not be settled according to the provisions of paragraph (1) within a period of three months from the date on which either party to the dispute requested amicable settlement, the Investor party to the dispute may choose to submit it for resolution...

6.5.2 Therefore, the Tribunal considers that the three month “cooling-off period” was respected and that the Claimants had the right to submit the dispute to resolution according to Article 26(2) of the Convention.

6.5.3 Based on the evidence provided in the proceeding, there is no record that Claimants chose to submit their dispute before Hungary’s courts or administrative tribunals. Therefore, it is clear to this Tribunal that the dispute does not fall within the scope of Article 26(2)(a) of the ECT.

6.5.4 Similarly, there is no evidence that either party used any applicable or previously agreed dispute settlement procedure in order to settle the dispute.<sup>18</sup>

6.5.5 Consequently, the Tribunal concludes that Article 26(3)<sup>19</sup> of the ECT applies to this case.

---

<sup>18</sup> Even though there was a procedure started by the European Commission to investigate the alleged state aid awarded by Hungary through Power Purchase Agreements, it is to be noted that such procedure was not between the parties to this dispute but between the European Commission and Hungary. In addition, the subject matter in such investigation was to determine whether the Power Purchase Agreements contained state Aid, under European Law (Final Decision C(2008)2223 of June 04, 2008), which is a different dispute than the one subject to this arbitration. The subject matter of that proceeding being different from the subject matter of this dispute, allows the Tribunal to sustain that the claim should not be barred by res judicata.

<sup>19</sup> Article 26(3) of the ECT reads:

(3)(a) Subject only to subparagraphs (b) and (c), each Contracting Party hereby gives its unconditional consent to the submission of a dispute to international arbitration or conciliation in accordance with the provisions of this Article.

(b)(i) The Contracting Parties listed in Annex ID do not give such unconditional consent where the Investor has previously submitted the dispute under subparagraph (2)(a) or (b)

(ii) For the sake of transparency, each Contracting Party that is listed in Annex ID shall provide a written statement of its policies, practices and conditions in this regard to the Secretariat no later than the date of the deposit of its instrument of ratification, acceptance or approval in accordance with Article 39 or the deposit of its instrument of accession in accordance with Article 41.

7. APPLICABLE LAW

7.1 Claimants' Applicable Law Arguments as Presented in the Memorial

7.1.1 On 7 March 2008, Claimants filed their Memorial, asserting that the law applicable to the dispute was found in Article 26(6) of the ECT, which provides that “[a] tribunal established under paragraph (4) [referring to ICSID arbitration] shall decide the issues in dispute in accordance with this Treaty and applicable rules and principles of international law.” This was not further developed.

7.2 Respondent's Applicable Law Arguments as presented in the Counter-Memorial

7.2.1 In its Counter-Memorial, Respondent highlighted the inconveniences and the negative consequences of a ruling under the ECT, which, in its opinion, requires Hungary to act inconsistently with mandatory laws of the EU.

7.2.2 It is Hungary's contention that the ECT must be read in light of one of its own objectives, which is to promote the European Union's key energy objectives, market liberalization and free competition, and not as if it was entirely independent of critical EU laws and developments.

7.2.3 Consequently, Hungary states that “it defies logic to suggest, as Claimants do, that the ECT can be read as entirely divorced from EC competition law.” It argues that when a state has obligations under two different treaties involving overlapping subject matter, those obligations should – to the extent possible – be read in harmony and be interpreted to minimize conflict.

7.2.4 In addition, Respondent says that the fact that Claimants' 2001 PPA was governed by the law of Hungary, now an EU member state, further underscores the need to take European Community (“EC”) competition law into account in determining whether any modification of the 2001 PPA transgressed the limits set forth in the ECT. Hungary relies on part of a text that Bernard Hanotiau wrote in 1995 which states that: “if the applicable law ... is the law of a state of the European Union, such law includes the rules of Community law, and these rules should therefore be applied ...”

7.2.5 Finally, Hungary alleges that there is no true conflict between the provisions of the ECT and the mandatory public policy reflected in the EC competition law (incorporated in Hungarian law governing the 2001 PPA), because:

“Accepting the notion that “legitimate expectations” is the bedrock on which many of the ECT’s investor-protection provisions rest, this notion fully supports a finding that Hungary honored its commitments. As set forth below, Claimants could have had no “legitimate” expectation that Hungary would blithely ignore EC demands to minimize or eliminate prohibited State aid. Nor could they legitimately expect that Hungary would never consider, as a rational vehicle for addressing these concerns, the temporary reintroduction of administrative price controls, predicated on the very notions of “reasonable return” upon which Claimants originally invested.”

7.3 Claimants’ Applicable Law Arguments as Presented in the Reply

7.3.1 On 31 October 2008, the Claimants filed their Reply. There, they stated that the parties to this arbitration made a clear choice as to the applicable law and that choice does not include Community competition law or Hungarian law. They argue that the applicable law will only be the ECT and applicable rules and principles of international law under article 26(6) of the ECT. The law applicable to the merits of this ICSID proceeding is governed by Article 42(1) of the ICSID Convention and, thus, by Article 26(6) of the ECT.

7.3.2 The Claimants say that Community law is irrelevant to the interpretation of the ECT, and that assertions to the contrary ignore the basic principles of treaty interpretation.

7.3.3 According to the Claimants, this is so because the ECT is to be interpreted in accordance with customary international law as codified in the Vienna Convention, Articles 31 and 32. They maintain that the principles set out in the Vienna Convention require that the ECT “be interpreted in accordance with the Law of Nations, and not any municipal code.”

7.3.4 This is also said to be so given that Community law, including Community competition law, is considered the equivalent of internal or municipal law for the purposes of this proceeding. Community law is thus merely a fact to be considered by the Tribunal when determining the applicable law.

7.3.5 Claimants state that Respondent argues that, under Article 32 of the Vienna Convention, there is some unidentified provision of the ECT which is either ambiguous or absurd, and therefore recourse should be had to supplementary means of interpretation, including the preparatory work or the circumstances surrounding the conclusion of the ECT. Nevertheless, in their opinion, Hungary fails to point to any specific provision of the ECT which it believes to be ambiguous or absurd.

7.3.6 In addition, Claimants argue that the ECT was not solely a European initiative, because Russia, Canada, USA, Japan, and other countries were each heavily involved in its inception.

7.3.7 Claimants also mention that their “legitimate expectations” are irrelevant to the interpretation of the ECT and they underscore that Hungary did not identify any provision of either the Vienna Convention or customary international law which suggests that this Tribunal should interpret the ECT by reference to the expectations of an investor.

7.3.8 Claimants further claim that Community law is not a defence to Hungary's breaches of the ECT, because Article 27 of the Vienna Convention provides that a "Party may not invoke the provisions of its internal law as justifications for its failure to perform a treaty."

7.3.9 Regarding Respondent's alleged "conflict" between Community Law and the ECT, Claimants posit that the EC is a signatory to the ECT and is thus bound by its provisions, including those as to the choice of law. Claimants conclude that it is clear that the "EC institutions are bound by the provisions of an international treaty concluded by the EC, and that all acts of those institutions should comply with such treaties."

7.3.10 Claimants point out that despite not articulating any legal basis for its Community competition law defence, and despite the established legal principle that a state cannot invoke its own internal law as a defence to its violations of international law, Hungary suggests that any finding by this Tribunal that Hungary should be held accountable for its violations of international law would "seriously undermine the integrity of EC State aid law."

7.3.11 In answer to this point, Claimants assert that Respondent's argument ignores the parties' express choice of law in Article 26(6) and the provisions of the ECT on investor protection that flow, automatically, from that choice.

7.3.12 Furthermore, Claimants say that the ECT has addressed this issue and determined that, while the notion of state aid covers all aid granted by a member state to undertakings which might have the effect of distorting trade, it is fundamentally different in its legal nature from the damages which Hungary may have to pay as a result of this arbitration.

7.3.13 In their view, all Community institutions, including the Commission, must, as a matter of Community law, respect any award issued by this Tribunal.

7.3.14 Claimants' conclusion is that Hungary's alleged "circularity" problem does not exist as a matter of fact or as a matter of Community law, and that the alleged "circularity" problem has been invented by Hungary in an effort to avoid responsibility for its internationally wrongful acts. The Eeckhout Report confirms that this is the case.

7.4 Respondent's Applicable Law Arguments as Presented in the Rejoinder

7.4.1 On 13 February 2009, Hungary filed its Rejoinder and clarified that it never contended, as Claimants asserted, that EC law rather than the ECT governs this arbitration. Hungary insists that it has always acknowledged that the ECT supplies the decisional standards that this Tribunal must apply. But it argues that in applying these standards, the EC law framework as well as the illegality of the 2001 PPA under Hungarian law have to be considered as facts.

7.4.2 The Respondent notes that Claimants themselves admitted that issues of national law are frequently factual predicates for the application of ECT decisional standards.

7.4.3 Consequently, the Respondent concludes that there is thus no real dispute between the parties on this issue.

7.5 Arguments Expressed During the Hearing

7.5.1 During the hearing, Claimants argued (on 9 March 2009) that Hungary had retreated from its previous position as set out in the Counter-Memorial, and thus that this Tribunal no longer had to determine the conflict regarding the applicable law (Transcript, p. 170:5-8). Claimants further asserted that there is “no dispute between the parties that the ECT is the applicable law” (Transcript, page 346:8).

7.5.2 During the hearing (on 13 March 2009), both parties and experts agreed that:

- (a) the ECT was the applicable law;
- (b) the EC law is relevant as a fact (Transcript, Slot: p. 1469: 8-11), (Transcript, Eeckhout: p. 1415: 6-9).

7.5.3 Even though there was a consensus between the parties that the ECT is the applicable law to this dispute, and that the EC law is to be taken into account as a relevant fact, the parties maintained different interpretations regarding the following issues:

- (a) should the ECT be interpreted due to ambiguous provisions? And, in such case, should the interpretation method be a historical interpretation of the formation of the ECT, or the Vienna Convention?
- (b) does Article 16 of the ECT apply to this dispute?
- (c) should Article 307 of the EC Treaty be applied to this dispute?

Interpretation of the ECT

7.5.4 The Respondent alleged that the ECT should be interpreted using a historical method that takes into account the formation of the ECT, and therefore the EC law principles. Claimants disagreed, stating that any interpretation of the ECT had to be made in accordance with the Vienna Convention.

Application of Article 16 of the ECT

7.5.5 Claimants also noted that the Respondent failed to make reference to Article 16 of the ECT, which states that if there is a conflict between the ECT and any other treaty which deals with the subject matter of ECT Part III or Part V, then according to the law expressly chosen by the parties, the provisions which are more favourable to the investor or the investment prevail. The Respondent denied that Article 16 of the ECT was applicable to the dispute.<sup>20</sup>

Application of Article 307 of the EC Treaty

7.5.6 During the hearing, Claimants' expert Professor Eeckhout stated that, in his opinion, Article 307 of the EC Treaty is a "crucial provision which enables member states to honor international obligations under an agreement they signed and concluded before joining the European community, and that insofar as there are those obligations, Article 307 of the EC Treaty authorized Hungary to ignore the Commission's order for the benefit of a EU member state company."<sup>21</sup>

7.5.7 For its part, Respondent argued that as the admitted purpose of Article 307 was to protect non-member states, Article 307 of the EC Treaty should be read as authorizing Hungary to ignore the Commission's binding order for the benefit of an EU member state company "even though AES's home state (from which its ECT rights derive) by no means could be deemed a beneficiary of Article 307."<sup>22</sup>

---

<sup>20</sup> Respondent's post-hearing submission, ¶ 95.

<sup>21</sup> Transcript, p. 1422: 1-6

<sup>22</sup> Respondent's post-hearing submission, ¶ 96.

7.6 Findings of the Tribunal

7.6.1 Article 41(2) of the ICSID Convention provides that this Tribunal shall decide the dispute “in accordance with such rules of law as may be agreed by the parties.”

7.6.2 Article 26(6) of the ECT provides that “a tribunal established under paragraph (4) shall decide the issue in dispute in accordance with this Treaty [ECT] and applicable rules and principles of international law.”

7.6.3 Given that this Tribunal is established under paragraph (4) of Article 26 of the ECT, it is Article 26(6) of the ECT which contains the rules of law agreed by the parties and the ones that this Tribunal will use to decide the dispute.

7.6.4 We therefore conclude that the applicable law to this proceeding is the ECT, together with the applicable rules and principles of international law.

Interpretation of the ECT

7.6.5 If interpretation of the ECT is required, the general rules of interpretation of the Vienna Convention, established in its Articles 31 and 32 should be applied. Although Article 32 provides for the use of historical interpretation, the Tribunal notes that such use is only as a complementary method of interpretation.

7.6.6 Regarding the Community competition law regime, it has a dual nature: on the one hand, it is an international law regime, on the other hand, once introduced in the national legal orders, it is part of these legal orders. It is common ground that in an international arbitration, national laws are to be considered as facts. Both parties having pleading that the Community competition law regime should be considered as a fact, it will be considered by this Tribunal as a fact, always taking into account that a state may not invoke its domestic law as an excuse for alleged breaches of its international obligations.

Application of Article 16 of the ECT

7.6.7 The Tribunal observes that the application of Article 16 of the ECT only requires to be analyzed in the event the ECT contains a provision that conflicts with EC law. In the case of any conflict that is said to exist between the ECT and Community law, the relevant provision is Article 16 of the ECT:

“Where two or more Contracting Parties have entered into a prior international agreement, or enter into a subsequent international agreement, whose terms in either case concern the subject matter of Part III or V of this Treaty,

(1) nothing in Part III or V of this Treaty shall be construed to derogate from any provision of such terms of the other agreement or from any right to dispute resolution with respect thereto under that agreement; and

(2) nothing in such terms of the other agreement shall be construed to derogate from any provision of Part III or V of this Treaty or from any right to dispute resolution with respect thereto under this Treaty, where any such provision is more favourable to the Investor or Investment.”

7.6.8 However, the Tribunal concludes that, properly understood, the dispute under analysis in the present arbitration is not about a conflict between the EC Treaty or Community competition law and the ECT.

7.6.9 Rather, the dispute is about the conformity or non-conformity of Hungary’s acts and measures with the ECT. Therefore, it is the behaviour of the state (the introduction by Hungary of the Price Decrees) which must be analyzed in light of the ECT, to determine whether the measures, or the manner in which they were introduced, violated the Treaty. The question of whether Hungary was, may have been, or may have felt obliged under EC law to act as it did, is only an element to be considered by this Tribunal when determining the “rationality,” “reasonableness,” “arbitrariness” and “transparency” of the reintroduction of administrative pricing and the Price Decrees.

Application of Article 307 of the EC Treaty

7.6.10 Finally, the Tribunal concludes that Article 307 of the ECT is not applicable, as such, in this arbitration. Article 307 (ex Article 234) states:

“The rights and obligations arising from agreements concluded before 1 January 1958 or, for acceding States, before the date of their accession, between one or more Member States on the one hand, and one or more third countries on the other, shall not be affected by the provisions of this Treaty.

To the extent that such agreements are not compatible with this Treaty, the Member State or States concerned shall take all appropriate steps to eliminate the incompatibilities established. Member States shall, where necessary, assist each other to this end and shall, where appropriate, adopt a common attitude.

In applying the agreements referred to in the first paragraph, Member States shall take into account the fact that the advantages accorded under this Treaty by each Member State form an integral part of the establishment of the Community and are thereby inseparably linked with the creation of common institutions, the conferring of powers upon them and the granting of the same advantages by all the other Member States.”

7.6.11 Article 307 only applies to agreements between member states and non-member states, and Hungary and the United Kingdom are both member states. Moreover, the Claimants are not states, and even if sometimes individuals are granted rights under international law, Article 307 of the EC Treaty specifies that it only applies to states.

7.6.12 In summary, the Tribunal determines that the Respondent's acts/measures are to be assessed under the ECT as the applicable law but that the EC law is to be considered and taken into account as a relevant fact.

8. THE TRIBUNAL'S APPROACH TO THE SUBSTANTIVE CLAIMS

8.1 The Tribunal starts its analysis of the substantive issues before it by dealing first, in Section 9 below, with Hungary's obligation to provide fair and equitable treatment to Claimants and their investment(s). This is followed, successively, by the Tribunal's analysis of Claimants' claim regarding unreasonable and discriminatory measures (Section 10), national treatment (Section 11), most favoured nation treatment (Section 12), constant protection and security (Section 13), and, finally expropriation (Section 14).

8.2 In addressing each claim, the Tribunal summarizes briefly the scope of Claimants' and Respondent's positions as advanced in their initial pleadings, written memorials, during the course of oral argument and in their written post-hearing submissions. The Tribunal also acknowledges the efforts made by the European Commission to explain its own position to the Tribunal and has duly considered the points developed in its amicus curiae brief in its deliberations. After having thus thoroughly examined the whole file, the Tribunal presents its analyses and conclusions.

9. OBLIGATION TO PROVIDE FAIR AND EQUITABLE TREATMENT

9.1 Claimants' Position

9.1.1 Regarding the obligation of Hungary to provide fair and equitable treatment, the Claimants advance four main arguments which are summarized under the relevant descriptive headings below.

Contractual Obligations

9.1.2 The Claimants state that the obligation of Hungary to provide fair and equitable treatment includes the obligation of honouring contractual obligations, upon which the investor reasonably relied.<sup>23</sup> These are said to include promises by Hungary “not to interfere with Claimants’ PPA,” “not to frustrate ...[the 2001 Settlement Agreement’s] purposes and intent” and to require another overall price and cost review prior to the introduction of any new pricing mechanism.<sup>24</sup>

9.1.3 Specifically, Claimants allege that with the March 2006 amendment of the 2001 Electricity Act and the introduction of the 2006 and 2007 Price Decrees, Hungary caused and encouraged MVM to refuse to fulfill its contractual commitments to AES Tisza under the 2001

---

<sup>23</sup> In order to support this claim, Claimants mention that: a) in CME v. Czech Republic, the Tribunal found that the breach of legal security of contract rights underpinned the Claimants’ investment; b) Schreuer has maintained that “a willful refusal by a government authority to abide by its contractual obligations, abuse of government authority to evade agreements with foreign investors and action in bad faith in the course of contractual performance may well lead to a finding that the Standard of fair and equitable treatment has been breached”; and c) in the CMS v. Argentina case, the Tribunal considered that the fair and equitable treatment standard was violated when the state put a freeze on contractually agreed tariff adjustments intended to increase gas prices. Claimants’ Memorial, ¶¶ 200-204.

<sup>24</sup> Claimants’ post-hearing submission, ¶¶ 101-103.

PPA, and refused to fulfill its own contractual obligations to the Claimants as set out in the 2001 Settlement Agreement.<sup>25</sup>

Breach of the Obligation to Act in Good Faith and to Respect Legitimate Expectations

9.1.4 Claimants argue that, by amending the 2001 Electricity Act in 2006 and by introducing the Price Decrees, Hungary failed to act in good faith and in accordance with the basic and legitimate expectations (described above) upon which the Claimants relied when making their investments in Hungary in 1996 and following the 2001 Settlement Agreement and the execution of the 2001 PPA.

Stability and Predictability of Business

9.1.5 Claimants say that Hungary agreed to provide a certain level of financial and legal stability to the Claimants' investment by way of the 2001 PPA. The ECT also expressly requires Hungary to provide "stable, equitable, favourable and transparent conditions" for Claimants' investment.<sup>26</sup> But Claimants argue that the promised stability was short-lived, as the organs of the state began accusing AES of earning luxury profits and tried to force a re-negotiation of the PPA, and the Hungarian parliament finally amended the 2001 Electricity Act which would re-introduce administrative pricing. This action eviscerated the legal framework upon which the Claimants had legitimately relied.<sup>27</sup>

---

<sup>25</sup> Memorial, ¶ 215.

<sup>26</sup> Exhibit C-1, Article 10(1).

<sup>27</sup> Claimants note that in Metalcald and in Tecmed, the Tribunals found that stability and predictability of business framework was an accepted element of the fair and equitable standard. Memorial, ¶ 202.

The Reintroduction of the Price Decrees was Arbitrary, Non-Transparent and Lacking in Due Process

9.1.6 Claimants also contend that Hungary’s conduct was non-transparent, arbitrary, lacking in due process, and discriminatory.<sup>28</sup>

9.1.7 In support of this claim, they argue that the 2006 Electricity Act Amendment was adopted for purely political reasons (arising out of the political debate about the generators’ “excessive” and “intolerable” profits), and was aimed specifically at reducing the profits being earned by generators such as AES Tisza. Claimants note that even minister Kokka acknowledged that it was a measure that would “effect centralization or take over by the state.”

9.1.8 In addition, Claimants allege that the manner in which the Price Decrees were issued demonstrates a lack of transparency, lack of due process and inherent arbitrariness in Hungary’s actions.

9.1.9 Claimants point out that the maximum profit figure of 7.1% set forth by the HEO was based on the profit figure used for distribution companies, which bears no rational relationship to generation companies.

---

<sup>28</sup> In order to support this claim, Claimants mention that: a) the Tecmed Tribunal resolved that “the foreign investor expects the host state to act in a consistent manner, free from ambiguity and totally transparently in its relations with the foreign investor”; b) in Maffezini v. Spain, the Tribunal said that “the lack of transparency with which this loan transaction was conducted is incompatible with Spain’s commitment to ensure the investor a fair and equitable treatment in accordance with Article 4(1) of the same treaty. Accordingly, the Tribunal finds that, with regard to this contention, the claimant has substantiated his claim and is entitled to compensation...”; and c) the Tribunal in Waste Management determined that the lack of due process may be a “manifest failure of natural justice in judicial proceedings or a complete lack of transparency and candor in an administrative process.” Memorial, ¶¶ 205-208.

9.1.10 Moreover, the HEO gave no explanation as to how it actually arrived at the prices set out in the Price Decrees. Unlike previous administrative prices, AES Tisza was given no opportunity to comment on the prices before the Price Decrees were issued. Hungary is also said to have demanded that Claimants comment on the draft language of the draft Price Decrees within four business days, and on the language of the Price Decrees themselves within one business day.<sup>29</sup> And Hungary failed to perform a costs and assets' review prior to issuing the Price Decrees.

9.2 Respondent's Position

9.2.1 Hungary's defence may be summarized as follows:

- (a) Claimants can have had no legitimate expectations that administered prices would not be reintroduced;
- (b) Hungary's decision to do so was neither arbitrary, nor an abuse of state power;
- (c) Hungary's dealing with Claimants prior to the decision to reintroduce administered pricing were both reasonable and in good faith having regard to the concerns being expressed in various quarters about the generators' PPAs;
- (d) there were no due process failings (i.e., there was nothing arbitrary or unfair in HEO's methodology or its procedures) which led to the adoption of the Price Decrees themselves.

---

<sup>29</sup> Claimants' post-hearing submission, ¶¶ 84-86.

Legitimate Expectations

9.2.2 Hungary says that Claimants invested originally in the full expectation of administrative price regulation. Even though Claimants rely on the 2001 expectations, the expectations that should count are the ones that Claimants had at the moment of deciding to make the investment, which was in 1996.

9.2.3 Hungary accepts that there were limitations on the future regulation, i.e., (a) prices would be set at levels sufficient to provide a “reasonable return” on investment; and (b) returns of 8% on equity had been targeted, but it was understood that this figure might change.

9.2.4 For these reasons, Hungary contends that no legitimate expectations were created that administrative prices would never be reintroduced. Hungary points out that, in their submission to the EC, Claimants themselves stated that the price controls were simply “suspended for a brief interlude” commencing 1 January 2004.

9.2.5 In order for legitimate expectations to exist, Hungary says that two elements are necessary:

- (a) the existence of government representations and assurances. In this regard, Hungary maintains that the 2001 Settlement Agreement mentioned nothing in connection with prices and that although the 2001 PPA contained a pricing schedule for when the regulatory prices regime ended, it contained no representations by MVM or anyone else that the pricing regime would never change again in the future; and
- (b) the reliance of the investor on such assurances to make its investment. Hungary claims that the fact that clause 3.7 of the 2001 PPA referred to a change in the law shows that the investor knew that there could be changes as regards regulatory pricing, amongst other changes in the law.

9.2.6 Hungary accepts that “[a]s of 2001, based on the new 2001 Electricity Act, it did appear that administrative price caps would be phased out beginning 2004.”<sup>30</sup> However, it says that this did not create legitimate expectations because those were created in 1996 and not in 2001.

9.2.7 But even if expectations could have been created by the 2001 PPA, in the absence of stability agreement or the like (e.g., an undertaking that the government would never again regulate prices), Claimants could have had no such legitimate expectation in 2001.

9.2.8 Hungary argues that even if new “expectations” were created, this did not create objective rights because the expectations were not “legitimate.” In order for the expectations to be legitimate, they have to be based on affirmative government representations or assurances and these were not made. Some tribunals say that the investor’s expectations are legitimate if the investor received an explicit promise or guaranty from the host state.<sup>31</sup>

No Abusive or Arbitrary Behaviour

9.2.9 Hungary says that, in the absence of legitimate expectations, only “manifestly arbitrary conduct” or the “abuse of state power” can provoke a violation of the fair and equitable treatment obligation.

---

<sup>30</sup> Counter-Memorial, ¶ 125.

<sup>31</sup> Hungary refers to the Saluka case and says “that the tribunal found that regulatory changes, if not discriminatorily applied, would not amount to a fair and equitable treatment violation.” Counter-Memorial, ¶ 326.

9.2.10 Hungary contends that its decision temporarily to restore administrative pricing was neither arbitrary nor an abuse of state power. It places special emphasis on the fact that countries which are in the process of becoming members of the European Community are likely to have legislative changes.

9.2.11 Hungary further says that Claimants did not show that the temporary reintroduction of administrative price caps was either an abuse of state power or manifestly arbitrary.

9.2.12 Hungary points out that Claimants submitted no expert opinion on Hungarian law regarding the power of the state to regulate maximum prices.

9.2.13 Regarding Claimants assertion that the Price Decrees were enacted for “purely political reasons” and without any “rational public policy” objective of the state, Hungary notes that the generators’ PPAs had been a concern to Hungary since 2002 and that “it was under serious pressure from the EC to take action at least to minimize the effects of what the EC considered to be unlawful state aid, if not to terminate the PPAs outright. In these circumstances, it tried to increase the pressure on the generators (including AES Tisza) to renegotiate the PPAs. Hungary insists on the fact that AES Tisza refused any renegotiation of the PPA which created great difficulties for Hungary in its endeavour to develop a free market, in line with the European Community standards. When the authorities were unable to renegotiate the PPAs, they took the next step, which was the least drastic of the alternatives available. They temporarily restored the system of administrative price caps, based on notions of reasonable return that had long been used in Hungary.

9.2.14 Hungary responds to Claimants' argument, that the expiration of the 2007 Price Decrees demonstrates that it "could not have been related to any rational policy goal," by stating that, to the contrary, there were rational and legal reasons why administrative price regulation could not be continued in 2008, because it was contrary to the notion of full liberalization which had been introduced by the 2001 Electricity Act and which entered into effect on 1 January 2008. Hungary had also become legitimately concerned about the profit levels generators enjoyed under non-competitive PPAs, at the expense of consumers, as well as by the failure of generators to agree to any reductions in contracted PPA capacity, to free up electricity for direct sale to the parallel free market. These were thus transitional measures, put in place while Hungary sought to negotiate with the generators to find alternative commercial arrangements that would meet the EC's competition law concerns and address its own political issues.

Dealings were Reasonable and in Good Faith

9.2.15 As regards Claimants allegation that Hungary threatened AES Tisza to terminate the PPA, Hungary contends that Hungarian officials were simply acknowledging what the EC had indicated, that there was a possibility that the PPAs would have to be terminated.

9.2.16 Hungary did not violate fair and equitable treatment in its consultations with Claimants. Hungary says that Claimants equate a notion of a failure to act in good faith with Hungary's unwillingness to capitulate to Claimants' unilateral demands that they receive the full value of PPA pricing, notwithstanding the EC's condemnation of that pricing as illegal state aid. In fact, Hungary argues, it was Claimants who acted unreasonably in the negotiations which preceded the reintroduction of administered pricing, by refusing even to acknowledge the new realities imposed by the EC's position and by market liberalization.

Due Process Observed in Implementing Price Regulation

9.2.17 Hungary asserts that neither HEO's methodology and procedures for implementing maximum prices, nor the resulting prices were arbitrary or irrational.

9.2.18 According to Hungary, no "due process" or transparency rights were violated because, even though Claimants allege that there was no explanation as to how the HEO actually arrived at the prices set out in the Price Decrees, AES Tisza was well aware that the HEO was planning to use the 7.1% profit level as the target for determining appropriate prices, and knew that the HEO had drawn that figure from the level used to set maximum prices for distribution companies.

9.2.19 Hungary argues that the 7.1% rate of return on assets is comparable to the 8% return on equity target in place at the time of privatization, particularly given the fact that return on assets is a more favorable measure than return on equity. It also contends that there was nothing wrong in applying the same Weighted Average Cost of Capital ("WACC") calculation to different players in the regulated electricity market. Hungary says that, according to Navigant's report, AES Tisza could have paid all its debt prior to 2007.

9.2.20 As to Claimants' allegation that, unlike in previous administrative price cycles, AES Tisza was given no opportunity to comment on the prices set out in the Price Decrees before they were issued, Hungary responds that Claimants were invited to comment on the appropriateness of this approach, and did so, in November 2005 and in May 2006.

9.2.21 In addition, Hungary says that, as Dr. Fazekas discusses in her expert report, the obligation of the state to address petitions for review of individual price levels arises only after their publication and not prior to it and that AES Tisza did not submit any request for price review during 2006 and 2007. In addition, Hungary recalls that Dr. Fazekas also said that the AAP (administrative proceeding) rules do not apply because it is a lawmaking function and not an administrative case or proceeding.

9.2.22 Hungary argues that even if the Tribunal finds that there were imperfections in the execution of the state's obligation of transparency, this is not enough to determine that a violation of fair and equitable treatment occurred.<sup>32</sup>

9.2.23 In connection with a state's obligation to act in a transparent manner, Claimants maintain that the ECT imposes its own transparency obligations, separate and apart from the requirements of national law. In this regard, Hungary says that Article 10(1) does not impose a particularly high threshold for transparency.<sup>33</sup>

9.2.24 Hungary also says that the general investment treaty jurisprudence does not require states to comply with ideal notions of transparency, in which every single consideration in policy making is first publicly announced.

---

<sup>32</sup> Hungary notes that in the Eastern Sugar case, the Tribunal stated that an investment treaty may not be invoked "each time the law is flawed or not fully and properly implemented by a State," otherwise "every aspect of any legislation or its implementations could be brought before an international arbitral tribunal under the guise of a violation of a BIT." Counter-Memorial, ¶ 359.

<sup>33</sup> Hungary indicates that "As Thomas Wälde has explained, "[t]he general investment standards under Article 10(1) ... need to be specified and applied in light of Article 20(2)," which is the ECT's specific provision on transparency. This imposes a "relatively toothless obligation," requiring only that States promptly publish laws and regulations affecting investments." Counter-Memorial, ¶ 360.

9.3 Findings of the Tribunal

Findings Concerning Contractual Obligations

9.3.1 The Tribunal makes it clear at the outset that it only has jurisdiction over Treaty claims. In connection with the alleged breach of contractual rights and consequently the violation of fair and equitable treatment obligation, the Tribunal considers that it cannot hear this claim as such.

9.3.2 It is true that Article 26 of the ECT contains an umbrella clause which allows the submission to international arbitration of disputes concerning an alleged breach of an obligation under Part III of the Treaty. Specifically the last sentence of Article 10(1) – which is contained in Part III of the ECT – establishes that “[e]ach Contracting Party shall observe any obligations it has entered into with an Investor or an Investment of an Investor of any other Contracting Party.”

9.3.3 However, Annex IA of the ECT contains a List of Contracting Parties, which includes Hungary, which do not allow an Investor or Contracting Party to submit a dispute concerning the last sentence of Article 10(1) to international arbitration.<sup>34</sup>

9.3.4 Therefore, this Tribunal cannot rule on the scope of contract obligations and consequently cannot determine if the Claimants’ contract rights under the 2001 Settlement Agreement – and the 2001 PPA – were eviscerated because it has no jurisdiction to do so.

9.3.5 Nonetheless, the Tribunal considers that it has the right and duty to determine whether Hungary’s conduct – which include acts that could have breached contractual obligations – violated a specific Treaty obligation. In making this assessment, the Tribunal should not be considered to be analyzing the performance of contractual obligations as such.

---

<sup>34</sup> Counter-Memorial, footnote 561; Memorial, footnote 222.

Findings Concerning Legitimate Expectations

9.3.6 In connection with the reintroduction of administrative prices in 2006 and 2007, and the context in which such reintroduction took place, Claimants allege a breach of the basic and legitimate expectations upon which they relied when making their investment and consequently a violation of the fair and equitable treatment standard.

9.3.7 As stated above, the Respondent argues that no new expectations could be created in 2001 due to the fact that the original investment was made in 1996, and that legitimate expectations can only be created at the moment of the investment, which, in its eyes, was 1996.

9.3.8 This rule that legitimate expectations can only be created at the moment of the investment, has been supported by several ICSID tribunals (for example: Duke Energy Electroquil Partners and Electroquil S.A. v. Republic of Ecuador (ICSID Case No. ARB/04/19), Award, Aug. 18, 2008, ¶ 340; Técnicas Medioambientales Tecmed, S.A. v. United Mexican States (ICSID Case No. ARB(AF)/00/2), Award, May 29, 2003, ¶ 154 and LG&E Energy Corp., LG&E Capital Corp. and LG&E International Inc. v. Argentine Republic (ICSID Case No. ARB/02/1), Decision on Liability, Oct. 6, 2006).

9.3.9 In Duke Energy, the Tribunal stated that “[t]o be protected, the investor’s expectations must be legitimate and reasonable at the time when the investor makes the investment.”

9.3.10 The above interpretation was confirmed by the Tecmed Tribunal, which concluded that “this provision of the Agreement, in light of the good faith principle established by international law, requires the Contracting Parties to provide to international investments treatment that does not affect the basic expectations that were taken into account by the foreign investor to make the investment.”

9.3.11 The LG&E Tribunal determined that “[i]n addition to the state’s obligation to provide a stable legal and business environment, the fair and equitable treatment analysis involves consideration of the investor’s expectations when making its investment in reliance on the protections to be granted by the host state.”

9.3.12 Indeed, several other tribunals have established, as quoted above, that the expectations can only be created at the time of the investment. Nevertheless, the interpretation of “time of the investment” has been quite broad. For example, in CMS Gas Transmission Company v. Argentine Republic (ICSID Case No. ARB/01/8), the Tribunal held that it is the time when “the investment was decided and made.” (Award, May 12, 2005, ¶ 275).

9.3.13 As an initial question, this Tribunal therefore has to determine whether Claimants’ investment(s) was/were decided and made in 1996, at the time AES Summit purchased the outstanding shares of Tiszai Erömu Részvénytársaság (now AES Tisza), and/or in 2001, at the time AES Tisza actually began to invest in (spend money on) the Retrofit of the Tisza II plant.

9.3.14 Dealing first with the 1996 PPA, there is no question that AES Summit made an investment in Hungary at that time. Accordingly, it is proper to consider whether it had legitimate expectations at that time, with which Hungary has wrongfully interfered.

9.3.15 As to that question, the Tribunal concludes that AES Summit can have had no legitimate expectation at that time regarding the conduct of Hungary about which it now complains (i.e., the fact of, motivation for and methodology relating to the reintroduction of administrative pricing in 2006/2007). Both the privatization materials and the relevant investment agreements (the Original Tisza II PPA and the 1996 PSA) were explicit that Hungary would continue to set maximum administrative prices for electricity sales indefinitely into the future. This was subject only to the principle that such pricing would provide a “reasonable return” on investment, which would “target” returns in the general range of 8% on equity for the first regulatory period beginning in 1997.

9.3.16 Turning to the year 2001, there can also be no question that AES Tisza then and thereafter made an investment in Hungary as the term “investment” is defined in the Treaty. It is not contested that, between 2001 and 2005, AES Tisza spent approximately € 98 million to complete three of the four phases of the Tisza II Retrofit. It is also clear that the decision to make the investment was re-confirmed at the time of the 2001 Settlement Agreement. This fact is self-evident from the terms of the relevant agreements that were then executed.

9.3.17 The enquiry therefore turns to whether: (a) there were government representations and assurances made or given to Claimants at that time, and upon which they relied, of the sort alleged; and (b) Hungary acted in a manner contrary to such representations and assurances.

9.3.18 And as to this, the Tribunal concludes that Hungary made no representations/gave no assurances of a nature that go to the heart of Claimants’ complaint – i.e., that following the termination of price administration on 31 December 2003, regulated pricing would not again be introduced.

9.3.19 As regards Claimants' reliance on statements found in the 1996 Industry Information Memorandum relating to "an 8% return on shareholder funds"<sup>35</sup> and the requirement for "another overall price and cost review" prior to the introduction of "any new pricing mechanism,"<sup>36</sup> the first was simply a target rate for a "reasonable return" for the first regulatory period and the second was made in the context of the HEO not expecting radical changes in Hungary's administrative pricing system. It is of course true that Hungary moved away from administrative pricing at the end of 2003 (and that this future course was known in 2001 at the time of the 2001 Settlement), but the 1996 statement simply does not relate in a sufficiently material way to Claimants' central complaint (the reintroduction of administrative pricing in 2006/2007) for the Tribunal to find that Hungary's conduct in 2006/2007 was contrary to representations and assurances said to have been made to AES Summit in 1996.

9.3.20 As regards Hungary's letter of 21 October 1999 from Mr. Pal Ligati (Head of Department, Ministry of Economic Affaires), which Claimants classify as an "express promise not to interfere with Claimants' PPA," as well as a promise that "the contractual pricing formula set out in the PPA would not be altered by political considerations,"<sup>37</sup> all that sensibly can be said is that, whatever the context of the letter (it was produced only during the hearing and never explained), it does not say what Claimants' say it does. Moreover, it predated the 2001 Tisza II PPA by approximately two years and no evidence was led to suggest that such a new PPA was then contemplated. Indeed, the letter was written immediately before Claimants commenced the

---

<sup>35</sup> Exhibit C-111, pp. 102 et seq. and F(i).

<sup>36</sup> Claimants' post-hearing submission, ¶ 101.

<sup>37</sup> Claimants' post-hearing submission, ¶ 102.

PSA and Treaty arbitrations in 2000. Accordingly, the Tribunal does not consider it plausible that Claimants can be said to have relied on this assurance when, two years later, they entered into the 2001 Settlement Agreement and the 2001 Amendment Agreement.

9.3.21 This then leaves for consideration Claimants' contention that, as a party to the 2001 Settlement Agreement, Hungary, by reason of clause 21, "expressly promised ... not to frustrate the purposes and intent" of the agreement, which promise it breached through the reintroduction of regulated pricing which was said to be directly contrary to the object and intent of that agreement.

9.3.22 Again, the Tribunal concludes that Claimants' reliance on frustrated legitimate expectations based on clause 21 is unavailing.

9.3.23 Clause 21 of the 2001 Settlement Agreement provides as follows:

"Each of the Parties agrees to execute and deliver all such further instruments and documents and to do and perform all such acts and things as may be necessary and any Party may reasonably request to enable it to carry out the provisions of this Agreement and/or to effect the purposes and intent of this agreement" (Emphasis added).

9.3.24 Such "further acts" clauses are commonplace in commercial agreements, including settlements. Properly construed, the plainly worded provisions of clause 21 do no more than obligate a party to the 2001 Settlement Agreement, if requested reasonably by another party, to execute and deliver specific instruments/documents or to take specific steps as may be necessary, to enable the requesting party to carry out or effect the purposes and intent of the 2001 Settlement Agreement. This does not, as alleged, constitute a specific promise by Hungary not to frustrate the purposes and intent of the 2001 Settlement Agreement by the reintroduction of administrative pricing.

9.3.25 It is also common ground that the 2001 Settlement Agreement does not contain a so-called “stabilization clause” – i.e., a covenant not to change the relevant law, usually for a certain period. To the contrary, the 2001 Settlement Agreement introduced a “Change in Law” provision (clause 3.7) into the Original Tisza II PPA (or the 2001 PPA), which dealt carefully with the PPA parties’ rights (including financial) should a change of law occur during the now extended term of the PPA. And “Law,” as defined, included all acts of the Hungarian parliament, as well as other governmental or ministerial decrees as might be issued from time to time. In the case under consideration, in 2001, there was a great probability that there would be no administrative pricing after 2004, but this does not equate to absolute certainty, giving rise to internationally protected legitimate expectations.

9.3.26 In these circumstances, the Tribunal concludes that Claimants cannot legitimately have been led by Hungary to expect that a regime of administrative pricing would not be reintroduced under any circumstances during the term of the 2001 Tisza II PPA.

Findings Concerning Stable Legal and Business Framework

9.3.27 The analysis of the duty to provide a stable legal and business framework has to be made in light of the ECT and the applicable rules and principles of international law.<sup>38</sup>

---

<sup>38</sup> Article 26(6) ECT.

9.3.28 Specifically, article 10(1) of the ECT provides that “each contracting Party shall, in accordance with the provisions of this Treaty, encourage and create stable ... conditions for investors of other Contracting Parties ....”

9.3.29 The stable conditions that the ECT mentions relate to the framework within which the investment takes place. Nevertheless, it is not a stability clause. A legal framework is by definition subject to change as it adapts to new circumstances day by day and a state has the sovereign right to exercise its powers which include legislative acts.

9.3.30 Therefore, to determine the scope of the stable conditions that a state has to encourage and create is a complex task given that it will always depend on the specific circumstances that surrounds the investor’s decision to invest and the measures taken by the state in the public interest.

9.3.31 In this case, however, the Tribunal observes that no specific commitments were made by Hungary that could limit its sovereign right to change its law (such as a stability clause) or that could legitimately have made the investor believe that no change in the law would occur.<sup>39</sup>

9.3.32 Moreover, it is clear from clause 3.7 of the 2001 PPA that the parties to the agreement were aware that a change in the law could occur that could make the obligations under the agreement become illegal, unenforceable or impossible to perform.

---

<sup>39</sup> Specifically, the 2001 Settlement Agreement and the 2001 PPA did not contemplated that after 2004 no reintroduction of regulated pricing could take place.

9.3.33 Mechanisms were established in clause 3.7 of the 2001 PPA, which dealt with the possible actions that could be taken by the parties in the event that a change of law, as defined, occurred. Consequently, the Tribunal concludes that the investment(s) by the Claimants in 2001 and thereafter were made in the knowledge that a change in law could occur that could make the obligations of the 2001 PPA illegal, unenforceable or impossible to perform.

9.3.34 In these circumstances, absent a specific commitment from Hungary that it would not reintroduce administrative pricing during the term of the 2001 PPA, Claimants cannot properly rely on an alleged breach of Hungary's Treaty obligation to provide a stable legal environment based on the passage of Act XXXV and the Price Decrees. This is because any reasonably informed business person or investor knows that laws can evolve in accordance with the perceived political or policy dictates of the times.

9.3.35 The Tribunal therefore concludes that no breach of the fair and equitable treatment standard took place based on Hungary's alleged failure to provide a stable legal and business framework.

Findings Concerning Due Process / Arbitrariness / Transparency

9.3.36 In their unfair and inequitable treatment case, Claimants rely both on the irrational and unreasonable character of Hungary's decision to reintroduce administrative pricing, as well as the arbitrary and unfair manner (failures in due process) in which the Price Decrees were issued.

9.3.37 For reasons which are set out in Section 10 below (dealing with Unreasonable and Discriminatory Measures), the Tribunal has concluded that there was nothing so irrational or otherwise unreasonable in Hungary's policy decision to reintroduce administrative prices in 2006 as would constitute a breach of its Treaty obligation to ensure that Claimants were treated fairly and equitably and that their investments were not impaired by unreasonable or discriminatory measures.

9.3.38 For this reason, the Tribunal limits its analysis here to the manner or methodology in or by which the Price Decrees were brought into force, with a view to assessing whether “process” failures existed which were such as would constitute a failure to provide Claimants with fair and equitable treatment.

9.3.39 To the Tribunal, this ultimately became the heart of the case, and this is why it asked the parties to address this question in detail in their post-hearing submissions.

9.3.40 The Tribunal has approached this question on the basis that it is not every process failing or imperfection that will amount to a failure to provide fair and equitable treatment. The standard is not one of perfection. It is only when a state’s acts or procedural omissions are, on the facts and in the context before the adjudicator, manifestly unfair or unreasonable (such as would shock, or at least surprise a sense of juridical propriety) – to use the words of the Tecmed Tribunal<sup>40</sup> – that the standard can be said to have been infringed.

9.3.41 And for the reasons noted below, the Tribunal does not believe the process of implementing the Price Decrees was so flawed as to amount to a breach of the fair and equitable standard of the ECT.

---

<sup>40</sup> Award, May 29, 2003, ¶ 154, quoting the International Court of Justice, Case: Elletronica Sicula S.p.A. (ELSI) (United States of America v. Italy), 128, p. 65, July 20, 1989, ICJ, General List No. 76.

9.3.42 In reaching this conclusion, the Tribunal was greatly assisted by the testimony offered by György Békés, the head of the Electricity Office Preparation Department of the HEO at the time. To our minds, his evidence describes a not culpably unreasonable implementation process in relation to the Price Decrees.

9.3.43 It is also to be noted that Mr. Békés was not cross-examined. This was, of course, Claimants' right. Mr. Jagusch made the point during the hearing that, in international arbitration, it is not necessary for a party to cross-examine a witness with whose testimony that party may disagree. While this may be so, Mr. Békés was not confronted by Claimants on his evidence and his relevant testimony on process also stands un-contradicted by other testimony or contrary documentation.

9.3.44 Turning to the implementation process itself, Respondent's post-hearing brief provides a useful comparison of Hungary's three administrative pricing cycles for the public utility sector that bears on the issue before the Tribunal.<sup>41</sup> Because Claimants do not fault the first two cycles, it is relevant to their allegation of procedural failings that each and every of the three cycles were somewhat similar.

9.3.45 Mr. Békés recalled that, following the Hungarian parliament's authorization of a return to administrative pricing for generators in early March 2006, the Ministry expected a proposal for an implementing decree from HEO by the end of May, which it intended would go into effect by July 2006.

---

<sup>41</sup> First Cycle, 1992-2000; Second Cycle, 2001-2004 (generators exempted for 2004); Third Cycle, 2005-2008 (applied to generators from December 2006-2007).

9.3.46 Mr. Békés explained that for HEO to have done a bottom up cost study in the spring of 2006, in the time frame the Ministry had in mind to issue a decree, was impractical.

9.3.47 However, at this time, the HEO had in hand a study for 2005-2009, that indicated a 7.1% WACC for the electricity sector as a whole.<sup>42</sup> The generators had also previously been informed, on 10 November 2005, in Mr. Horvath's (the HEO president) letter, that a 7.1% return on assets was the target.

9.3.48 Capping profits was the objective at this time. Thus, on 14 March 2006, HEO asked AES and other generators for their financial figures for the 2003-2005 calendar years, i.e., their books. AES supplied its figures by letter, dated 30 March 2006. HEO had previously identified four generators whose returns exceeded 7.1%. It thus determined (based on the generators' own figures) by how much each generator exceeded the 7.1% return concept, and proceeded on the basis that each generator's fees would be reduced accordingly. The same methodology was then applied to all generators. Mr. Békés also made the point that the value of AES's post-retrofit assets were taken into account in determining the price that AES would be able to charge.

9.3.49 On 11 May 2006, the HEO sent each generator the text of the draft 2006 Price Decree, and solicited comments by 18 May 2006 on its proposed approach. (Although no specific prices were provided – this was the same approach HEO had applied in the previous two cycles).

---

<sup>42</sup> This study had been done earlier by HEO economists to determine the appropriate figure for return on assets for the initial price calculation for the 2005-2009 pricing cycle for electricity supply and distribution companies which had remained under an administrative pricing regime for that period.

9.3.50 AES commented on 18 May 2006 in accordance with HEO's, admittedly short, deadline. It then amended its comments, four days later, on 22 May 2006. These amended comments were substantive, detailed and led to changes to the draft 2006 Price Decree.

9.3.51 HEO next met AES, on 31 May 2006, to discuss possible changes to the draft 2006 Price Decree.

9.3.52 On 2 June 2006, HEO presented the draft 2006 Price Decree to the Ministry. All of the principal comments that had been received from the generators, along with HEO's preliminary views regarding these comments, were summarized in a table that HEO presented to the Ministry.

9.3.53 Subsequent to HEO's initial proposal to the Ministry, several changes were made to the draft 2006 Price Decree, although the capacity fee proposed for AES Tisza II remained unchanged.

9.3.54 Nevertheless, one important change that was made was the elimination of the original post-hoc profit sharing provision that would have required generators to make payments to MVM, if their profits exceeded the 7.1% target.

9.3.55 This change, which was made by the Ministry in response to the objections in May 2006 from a number of the generators, including AES Tisza, provides at least a partial answer to Claimants' allegations of arbitrary behaviour by Hungary at this time. It also moved the proposed Price Decree to a price capping, not a profit capping model.

9.3.56 Thus, each of Hungary's three relevant pricing cycles used price caps (not a profit cap in the third cycle, as alleged by Claimants). Moreover, the prices established in the last two cycles were both based on returns on assets.

9.3.57 The so-called "reasonable" rate of return (of 7.1% return on assets) was also based on a WACC calculated for the electricity sector as a whole. It can therefore not be said that it bore no rational relationship to the generation companies. Generators also had the ability to exceed the target 7.1% rate of return and AES subsequently did so.

9.3.58 On 17 November 2006, AES wrote to Mr. Horvath complaining about there having been no comprehensive cost review and asserting a right to participate in a price determination process.

9.3.59 The final text of the draft Decree was adopted by the Ministry on 24 November 2006 for the 2006 year.

9.3.60 HEO replied to AES's cost review complaint on 30 November 2006, expressing its position that such a cost review was not required.

9.3.61 With the 2006 Price Decree about to take effect, on 5 December 2006, HEO wrote to AES and the other generators to propose that the prices fixed for each generator for 2006 would be adjusted upward (to the same extent the relevant generator's 2007 PPA price was predicted to exceed the relevant generator's 2006 PPA price) for use in 2007. A two-day comment period was given. AES did not comment.

9.3.62 The 2006 Price Decree went into effect on 9 December 2006.

9.3.63 The 2007 Price Decree was adopted on 26 January 2007, and came into force on 1 February 2007.

9.3.64 The March 2006 amendments to the 2001 Electricity Act (that provided for the reintroduction of administrative prices) did not affect its existing provisions which allow generators to petition for individual price review. Mr. Békés testified that AES Tisza did not submit a request for price review during the relevant review period applicable to the Price Decrees.

9.3.65 AES also had the opportunity to seek to review the process under which the Price Decrees were introduced by proceedings in the Hungarian courts, but did not do so.

9.3.66 Having regard to this uncontested procedural history, the Tribunal does not feel that the several procedural shortcomings in Hungary's implementation of the price decrees (the most obvious being the short-fused periods given by HEO on 11 May and 5 December 2006 to AES to comment on the text of the draft Price Decrees) are sufficient to constitute unfair and inequitable treatment.

9.3.67 The Tribunal was comforted in this view because HEO made it clear to the generators, not later than November 2005, that it considered a 7.1% return on assets to be an appropriate rate of return.

9.3.68 Thus, pre-warned as it had been, AES found it possible to respond to HEO's 11 May 2006 letter requesting comment on the draft 2006 Price Decree within the very short (in the Tribunal's view, over-short) time specified. AES did not apparently consider it necessary to seek an extension of the deadline. Moreover, it supplemented and amended its comments four days later.

9.3.69 AES's 'late' amendments were not only accepted by HEO as being timely; HEO also acted on some of them. This is not conduct that can substantiate in this case allegations of such a degree of arbitrariness, a lack of transparency, or a lack of due process that amounts to unfair or inequitable treatment.

9.3.70 And, as already indicated, the fact that HEO, following criticism from the generators, eliminated its proposed post-hoc profit sharing provision, shows that it was not behaving in an arbitrary manner. In short, while HEO's consultations with Claimants on the Prices Decrees may not have been optimal, they do not amount to a culpable "failure to consult properly" as alleged.

9.3.71 As regards HEO's failure to perform a costs and assets review, it is true that this was done in the case of the two previous prices cycles. Nevertheless, the Tribunal has concluded that HEO's decision not to follow this practise at this time was not unfair to AES.

9.3.72 This is because HEO accepted AES's costs as reflected in AES's 2004 and 2005 own financial statements as supplied to HEO and its return-on-assets calculations were based on the book value of assets, also as reported in AES's financial statements, precisely as it had done for the second price cycle with which Claimants have no complaint.

9.3.73 In summary, Respondent's process of introducing the Price Decrees, while sub-optimal, did not fall outside the acceptable range of legislative and regulatory behaviour. That being the case, it cannot be defined as unfair and inequitable.

10. UNREASONABLE AND DISCRIMINATORY MEASURES

10.1 Claimants' Position

10.1.1 As regards the Treaty's prohibition of the impairment of investments by unreasonable or discriminatory measures, Claimants say that Hungary's actions must be judged against a standard that its conduct bears a reasonable relationship to some rational policy – rationality to be assessed objectively by the Tribunal.

10.1.2 To support these claims, Claimants say that a return to regulated pricing was irrational, if it was aimed at state aid concerns, because:

- (a) Hungary did not believe, at the time, that there was a state aid problem;
- (b) there is no obligation under Community law to introduce profit caps – profitability having no direct relationship to state aid;
- (c) Hungary had promised to respect civil law contracts; and
- (d) Hungary never consulted the State Aid Monitoring Office of the Ministry of Finance (“SAMO”), which was the state agency responsible for dealing with state aid issues.

10.1.3 On discrimination, Claimants point to the fact that HEO's letter of 10 November 2005 was sent to just four generators, indicating that they should voluntarily give up their contractual rights and reduce their PPA prices. And when the 2006 Price Decree was issued on 24 November 2006, it affected only these four generators. Discrimination is thus evident having regard to the fact that the Commission was concerned that all generator PPAs contained state aid.

10.2 Respondent's Position

10.2.1 Hungary contends it is well settled that states may implement regulatory change as long as they do so for rational, non-arbitrary reasons, and that such regulatory changes do not discriminate unlawfully against a foreign investor that is protected by an applicable investment treaty.

10.2.2 The standard for examining a state's reasons for acting is not a testing one. States have a broad discretion in deciding whether and how to regulate and the burden is on the challenger to demonstrate irrationality, arbitrariness, or a lack of a reasonable relationship to some rational policy.

10.2.3 As regards Claimants' allegations that Hungary's decision to re-regulate prices was a "money grab" to help MVM, based on nothing more than domestic policy grandstanding about "luxury profits," Hungary says that there were legitimate and inter-related reasons for temporarily reintroducing price regulation in 2006:

- (a) Hungary was legitimately concerned about the failure of generators to agree to negotiate any reductions in contracted PPA capacity, to free up electricity for sale to the free market;
- (b) Hungarian policymakers were well aware of the Commission's state aid investigations and of the Commission's concern that generator PPAs contained state aid and prevented new market entrants; and
- (c) the Hungarian authorities were legitimately concerned about the profit levels that some generators were enjoying under non-competitive PPAs.

10.2.4 Thus, Hungary says that there were rational reasons that led it to reintroduce the price regulation for a transitional period, pending full market liberalization and while awaiting the EC's Final Decision on the legality of the PPAs'.

10.2.5 Hungary also argues that there was nothing irrational about the government's use of its right to exercise supervisory authority over generator prices by setting certain maximum levels, for generators that were not under market conditions. Moreover, the fact that the methodologies for implementing the policy evolved over the intervening decade does not suggest that the underlying policy itself was no longer rational.

10.2.6 As to Claimants' discrimination case, Hungary says that Claimants must show there was: (a) differential treatment between parties similarly situated; and (b) no justification for such differentiation.

10.2.7 In this regard, Hungary argues that Claimants cannot succeed because there was no differential treatment at all. This is because prices (and especially capacity fees) were never uniform across generators in Hungary – they were always set in relation to each power plant's underlying costs, and the generators' cost structures varied substantially. Also, Tisza II's capacity fee had always been lower than that of other generators, whether under administrative or PPA pricing, because of its lower fixed costs.

10.2.8 In addition, Hungary maintains that price caps were set by a uniform methodology which was applied to all generators and was based on a uniform measure of reasonable return

(i.e., a 7.1% return on assets). It was simply the fact that each plant had a different starting point of prior returns that made the resulting price outcomes different.<sup>43</sup>

10.2.9 In response to Claimants' allegation that only four generators were targeted and affected by the Price Decrees, Hungary relies on Mr. Békés's uncontradicted explanation that the HEO reviewed financial performance data for all generators and determined that only four had exceeded the identified target return of 7.1%. The fact that only those generators whose returns exceed a maximum permitted level would be affected by a price cap does not constitute unlawful discriminatory targeting.

10.3 Findings of the Tribunal

10.3.1 Article 10(1) of the ECT provides that "no Contracting Party shall in any way impair by unreasonable or discriminatory measure their [investment's] management, maintenance, use, enjoyment or disposal."

10.3.2 Hungary was thus obliged to avoid any impairment of Claimants' investment as a consequence of either: (a) unreasonable or (b) discriminatory measures.

10.3.3 An analysis of the nature of a state's measures, in order to determine if they are unreasonable or discriminatory, is only necessary when an impairment of the investment took place.

---

<sup>43</sup> Counter-Memorial, ¶ 376.

10.3.4 It is undisputed that, as a result of the reintroduction of the Price Decrees, Claimants received lower prices than they had been receiving pursuant to the formula set out in the 2001 PPA.

10.3.5 It follows that AES's receipt of a lower payment from MVM, whilst burdened by unchanged costs, had a detrimental impact on Claimants' investment, as it altered – in a negative way – AES Tisza's regular income.

10.3.6 However, for such impairment to amount to a breach of the ECT, it must be the result of an unreasonable or discriminatory measure.

10.3.7 There are two elements that require to be analyzed to determine whether a state's act was unreasonable: the existence of a rational policy; and the reasonableness of the act of the state in relation to the policy.

10.3.8 A rational policy is taken by a state following a logical (good sense) explanation and with the aim of addressing a public interest matter.

10.3.9 Nevertheless, a rational policy is not enough to justify all the measures taken by a state in its name. A challenged measure must also be reasonable. That is, there needs to be an appropriate correlation between the state's public policy objective and the measure adopted to achieve it. This has to do with the nature of the measure and the way it is implemented.

10.3.10 Hungary has argued that it had three main reasons for introducing the Price Decrees.<sup>44</sup>

---

<sup>44</sup> Respondent's post-hearing submission, ¶ 65.

10.3.11 First, Hungary was concerned about the failure of generators to agree over several years to any reductions in contracted PPA capacity, to free up electricity for direct sale to the parallel free market, that had to be developed during the period of transition from the centralized economy to a liberal market.<sup>45</sup>

10.3.12 As to this point, the Tribunal finds that it cannot be considered a reasonable measure for a state to use its governmental powers to force a private party to change or give up its contractual rights. If the state has the conviction that its contractual obligations to its investors should no longer be observed (even if it is a commercial contract, which is the case), the state would have to end such contracts and assume the contractual consequences of such early termination.

10.3.13 This does not mean that the state cannot exercise its governmental powers, including its legislative function, with the consequence that private interests – such as the investor’s contractual rights – are affected. But that effect would have to be a consequence of a measure based on public policy that was not aimed only at those contractual rights. Were it to be otherwise, a state could justify the breach of commercial commitments by relying on arguments that such breach was occasioned by an act of the state performed in its public character.

10.3.14 Therefore, the Tribunal cannot consider it to have been reasonable for Hungary to have issued the Price Decrees because of Claimants’ failure to agree to, or even to negotiate for, a reduction in the capacity to which it was contractually entitled under the 2001 PPA.

---

<sup>45</sup> Respondent’s post-hearing submission, ¶ 67.

10.3.15 Hungary's second stated reason for the introduction of the Price Decrees was the pressure of the EC Commission's investigations and the foreseeable obligation to correct (recover) state aid that the Commission's decision would impose.

10.3.16 Had Hungary been motivated to reintroduce price regulation with a view to addressing the EC's state aid concerns, there is no doubt that this would have constituted a rational public policy measure. However, the Tribunal notes that as long as the Commission's state aid decision was not issued, Hungary had no legal obligation to act in accordance with what it believed could be the result of the decision and to start a limitation of potential state aid.

10.3.17 During the hearing, it became clear to the Tribunal that SAMO, the Hungarian agency in charge of dealing with state aid issues, had not even been consulted when the government reintroduced regulated pricing in March 2006. Another important fact is that the use of the 7.1% cap on profits had no direct relation with state aid, because state aid occurs when the entity is receiving above-market prices. The elimination of above-market prices is not achieved by a cap on profits. To address such price concerns requires a general market price analysis.

10.3.18 Consequently, the majority concludes that Hungary's decision to reintroduce administrative pricing was not motivated by pressure from the EC Commission.

10.3.19 Arbitrator Stern considers that it was not exclusively so motivated, but that the enquiry and subsequent pressures from the Commission certainly was in the Hungarian authorities' mind when they decided to reintroduce price regulation. In her view, it appears from the record that the high prices were also a serious problem for the Commission and it is quite evident that even before Hungary was under a legal obligation to follow the Commission's decision, it had been made abundantly clear to Hungary that the PPAs raised considerable concerns at the European level, as being in contradiction with the European free market policies. For example, in a meeting with the Commission in Brussels on 15 July 2004, concerns were expressed by the Commission that the stranded costs mechanism of Decree 183/ 2002 constitutes state aid to the generators, stating that “it must be ensured that none of the power plants reaches extra profits under the PPAs.” In other words, the EC position on the PPAs cannot be separated from the motivation that was behind the Price Decrees. It is noticeable that it is on 10 November 2005, one day after a European Commission’s decision strongly critical of the PPAs, that HEO sent the letter to AES Tisza in which it claimed that the profits of the company were “unjustifiable high” and suggested that the profits should be capped at a maximum of 7.1%. Several factors – the state aid investigation, the obstacles to liberalization and the generators’ excessive returns – were clearly interrelated, in the minds of the Hungarian government and regulators, when faced with the high profits of the generators. To arbitrator Stern, the evidence is overwhelming that the decision to reintroduce maximum administrative prices was a rational, non-arbitrary response to a complex set of legitimate policy concerns.

10.3.20 Hungary’s third reason for acting had to do with the allegations that the profits enjoyed under the PPAs, in the absence of either competition or regulation, exceeded reasonable rates of return for public utility sales. Hungary does not deny that one of its reasons for acting had to do with these concerns.

10.3.21 In 2005, HEO made calculations that showed that several generators were earning returns in excess of the WACC level for the regulated electricity sector as a whole. After a series of unsuccessful attempts at PPA renegotiations, HEO presented the data regarding the generator's returns to the parliament's Energy Subcommittee.<sup>46</sup>

10.3.22 In the meantime, the level of the generators' returns became a public issue and something of a political lightning rod in the face of upcoming elections.

10.3.23 However, the fact that an issue becomes a political matter, such as the excessive profits of the generators and the reintroduction of the Price Decrees, does not mean that the existence of a rational policy is erased.

10.3.24 In fact, it is normal and common that a public policy matter becomes a political issue; that is the arena where such matters are discussed and made public.

10.3.25 Eventually, an amendment to the 2001 Electricity Act and the Price Act, to enable the reintroduction of regulatory pricing, was proposed to parliament by Mr. Podolák on 5 December 2005. The objective of the amendment was that "the transmission and distribution of electricity, the controlling of the system, the selling of electricity contracted for public utility purposes by generators, trading between the public utility wholesaler and the public utility service provider and the electricity sold to consumers in the public utility sector are subject to the regulatory pricing stipulated under the act on the determination of prices."<sup>47</sup>

10.3.26 This amendment proposal contained a general explanation in the following terms:

---

<sup>46</sup> Exhibit R-196.

<sup>47</sup> Exhibit C-82.

“This act shall be enacted by the Parliament to include the generators’ price of electricity contracted for public utility purposes in the scope of regulatory pricing.

During the privatization of power stations in 1995-96, long-term power purchase agreements were concluded between power stations and MVM Rt. State revenue resulting from the conclusion of long-term power purchase agreements represented revenue from privatization. By way of the agreements stable and foreseeable returns are ensured to those investors who secure the availability of electricity generation capacities necessary to meet domestic demand through the modernization of existing power stations (or the construction of new ones).

Price formulas had been identified in the agreements but the application of these formulas was abrogated by regulatory pricing.

In the Government Decree 1074/1995 (4th August) on the regulation of electricity prices and price correction to be in effect until 1st January 1997 the Horn Cabinet guaranteed an 8% return on capital by way of regulatory pricing during the conclusion of privatization agreements. Pursuant to the above decree an administrative price regulation scheme came into effect for a period of 4 years (JKM Decree No. 63/1995 (24th November) Annex 1).

In 1997 the generators’ average profit was 8.23%, a percentage that steadily increased until 2000 as a result of the efficiency improvement of power stations. By 2000 the average profit of generators was 15.71%.

In 2000 PriceWaterhouseCoopers International consulting company, upon engagement by the Orbán Cabinet, indicated in its report titled “Energy Market Opening Program” that the long-term agreements are impeding the liberalization of the energy market as the agreements contract nearly all domestic power station capacities until 2010-2015 and as such there is no free marketable electricity remaining in the market. Due to the above the international consultant proposed to the Orbán Cabinet to reduce regulatory prices during the new price regulatory period using this as an additional measure to encourage generators to renegotiate the agreements.

Had the Orbán Cabinet given consideration to the proposal presented by the international consultant engaged by it, then the Hungarian Energy Office (lead by Director General Péter Kaderják, appointed by György Matolcsi Minister of Economy) would have been required to propose an administrative price determination that would have repeatedly reduced the generators’ profit to 8% in relation to the on-coming 4-year price regulation period to be determined in 2000. On the contrary the administrative price decree (No. 45/2000 (21st December) issued by the Ministry of Economy) abrogated the regulation concerning the 8% profit margin and introduced new price formulas.

As a result of the decision made by the Minister of Economy on the Orbán Cabinet, the 2001 profit of power stations was 22.83% as opposed to the expected 8%. This price regulation was in effect until the end of 2003 ensuring a steadily high profit level to power station investors. Act 110 (in its final clauses, Section 117 paragraph (2)) on electricity presented by the Orbán Cabinet and approved by the Fidesz-FKGP MPs on 18th December 2001 terminated administrative price regulation for generators as of 1st January 2004. Therefore the previously unapplied price formulas that are based on administrative pricing and are stipulated in the agreements came into effect.

The margins generated by power stations between 1997 and 2004 were as follows:

1997	1998	1999	2000	2001	2002	2003	2004
8.23%	12.73%	12.70%	15.71%	22.83%	21.62%	14.49%	22.36%

This draft legislation includes a proposal for correcting the regulatory error by the Orbán Cabinet and allows for the Government to exercise the measure of administrative pricing in the absence of agreement between the parties, which measure also affects the sale prices stipulated in long-term power purchase agreements providing high profit levels.”

10.3.27 For its part, the FIDESZ presented an independent representative proposal,<sup>48</sup> which did not propose the reintroduction of the Price Decrees but requested the government, among other things, to review the PPAs, to create the conditions of fair competition in the national electric energy market and to ensure affordable prices.

---

<sup>48</sup> Exhibit C-83.

10.3.28 The reasoning behind the FIDESZ proposal was similar to Mr. Podolák’s proposal, as it indicated that:

“the prices of electric power are unfairly high compared to the price level of countries around us. For the security of the people and in order to lighten the financial burden of families and to increase the competitiveness of enterprises and with the intention to perceivably reduce the price of electric energy and to create honest competition in the market, the National Assembly passes the following resolution ...

REASONING

Of all new EU members states, it is we, Hungarians, that pay the most for electric energy. A Hungarian household and family pays twice as much for electricity as the Baltic States, 40% more than the Polish and the Czech and 20% more than Slovaks. The price of electric energy turned out like this despite of the fact that there is official price setting giving the State the opportunity to set a more favorable price ...”<sup>49</sup>

10.3.29 On 3 March 2006, the Electricity Act was amended by the Hungarian parliament, reflecting the amendment proposed by Mr. Podolák on 5 December, 2005.<sup>50</sup> The FIDESZ abstained from voting on the proposal.

10.3.30 Based on the debates in parliament and outside parliament, the majority of the Tribunal has concluded that Hungary’s decision to reintroduce administrative pricing was not based on the

---

<sup>49</sup> Exhibit C-83.

<sup>50</sup> Exhibit C-82.

EC Commission's investigation. Nor, however, was it made with the intention of affecting Claimants' contractual rights

10.3.31 Rather, against this factual background, the majority has concluded that Hungary's reintroduction of administrative pricing in 2006 was motivated principally by widespread concerns relating to (and it was aimed directly at reducing) excessive profits earned by generators and the burden on consumers.<sup>51</sup>

10.3.32 This is because virtually all of the debate in parliament at the relevant time was about "profits." Indeed, government minister Mr. Tibor Kovács specifically asked the opposition parties if they were prepared to support the proposal, which he said "gives tools for the government to limit the alleged and so-called luxury profits."<sup>52</sup>

10.3.33 There is also no reference to be found to EC state aid or negotiations with EC in the official reasons for Act XXXV.

10.3.34 Having concluded that Hungary was principally motivated by the politics surrounding so-called luxury profits, the Tribunal nevertheless is of the view that it is a perfectly valid and rational policy objective for a government to address luxury profits. And while such price regimes may not be seen as desirable in certain quarters, this does not mean that such a policy is irrational. One need only recall recent wide-spread concerns about the profitability level of banks to understand that so-called excessive profits may well give rise to legitimate reasons for governments to regulate or re-regulate.

---

<sup>51</sup> Transcript, pp. 844:2-845:2; Exhibit R-172, ¶ 229.

<sup>52</sup> Exhibit SF 19, p. 9.

10.3.35 As to the need for a reasonable correlation between the state's policy objective and the measures adopted to achieve it, the Tribunal notes that before the amendment of the 2001 Electricity Act, Hungary had approached the generators to renegotiate the PPAs. Given that no agreement was reached, and in the absence of a specific commitment to the Claimants that administrative pricing was never going to be reintroduced, the Hungarian parliament voted for the reintroduction of administrative pricing, which parliament considered to be the best option at the moment.

10.3.36 The Tribunal finds that both the 2006 Electricity Act and the implementing Price Decrees were reasonable, proportionate and consistent with the public policy expressed by the parliament.

10.3.37 Having determined that the decision to introduce the Price Decrees was not an arbitrary or unreasonable measure, it is also necessary to determine if, as stated by Hungary, the generators were still going to receive a reasonable return.

10.3.38 The regulatory regime in place at the time of the privatization was provided by the 1994 Electricity Act. Under the 1994 Act, the HEO would issue detailed rules on pricing, based on which the minister would determine prices to be announced in the form of a decree.<sup>53</sup> The 1994 Electricity Act also provided, in Article 55(3), that the HEO should review the price levels and actual prices on the basis of the initiative of any interested party, and shall make the results of the process public. This provision is understood by the Tribunal as providing the right to any interested party (obviously including generators) to request a costs review of the prices, but only after they have been issued by the minister.

---

<sup>53</sup> Exhibit C-58, Article 55 of the 1994 Electricity Act.

10.3.39 In addition, the Original PPA provided that payment was to be made by reference mainly to both the Availability Fee which is “paying the need for capacity to be in place in case it is needed” and the Electricity Fee which is “the cost of the power it actually requires to have generated.”<sup>54</sup> Both fees’ values to be specified in the Annual Commercial Agreement should be considered based upon the order of the Ministry of Industry and Trade.

10.3.40 The HEO issued a detailed framework pertaining to the pricing every four years, beginning in 1997. Under the 1994 Electricity Act, there were two pricing frameworks:

- (a) the 1995 Framework Decree. Both parties agree that with this decree, the profit was supposed to be an 8% return on equity, approximately;<sup>55</sup>
- (b) the 2000 Framework Decree. The starting point of the price regulation mechanism was provided by the base prices on 1 January 2001 and the preceding assets and cost reviews carried out by HEO. A mechanism of yearly price correction was established, and inflation was also taken into account.

10.3.41 The 2000 Framework Decree was valid until 1 January 2004, which was the date established in the 2001 Electricity Act for the abolishment of regulated prices.

10.3.42 Therefore, starting on 1 January 2004, the formula established in Schedule 6 of the 2001 PPA was applied to AES Tisza’s payments.

---

<sup>54</sup> Memorial, ¶ 65.

<sup>55</sup> On the one hand, Claimants stated that the 8% return on equity was a starting price, on the other hand, Respondent stated that the 8% return on equity was a maximum cap.

10.3.43 The Price Decrees provided a 7.1% pre-tax return on assets.

10.3.44 Against the factual background which preceded the March 2006 price re-regulation, the Tribunal considers that the 7.1% rate of return on assets, which it prescribed, to be comparable to the 8% return on equity target that was in place at the time of the privatization.<sup>56</sup> Consequently, in the Tribunal's view, the prices fixed for AES Tisza pursuant to the Price Decrees were reasonable, taking into account their consistency with the original returns it earned at the time of the Claimants' original investment.

10.3.45 Turning finally to Claimants' case based on discrimination, the Tribunal observes that the Price Decrees, which were applicable to all the generators, established a specific price per KHUF/MW/YR to be paid for the Availability Fee (Capacity Fee) depending on the generator.

10.3.46 Claimants contend that this constitutes discrimination, given that the price fixed for AES Tisza was the lowest of all the generators (including foreign and local).

10.3.47 However, the Tribunal finds that the price established for each of the generators was reached using the same methodology. The fact that the price for each generator was different was simply the result of the use of a different starting point of prior returns which was fed into the methodology.<sup>57</sup>

10.3.48 Moreover, to suggest that AES's low capacity fee ranking (in comparison to other generators) is indicative of discrimination is misleading. AES's capacity fees were always at the bottom of the scale (see Appendix C, Respondent’s post-hearing brief) in each of the three relevant price cycles. But, as Mr. Békés explained, that was because capacity fees were based on cost structure, and the Tisza II plant had relatively low fixed costs per unit of capacity.

---

<sup>56</sup> Kovacs Statement, ¶ 39.

<sup>57</sup> Békés First Statement, p. 36 and p. 38.

10.3.49 By contrast, energy fees (Electricity Fees) were based on variable operating costs, which were relatively high at Tisza II. This resulted in AES Tisza always receiving amongst the highest energy fee of any of the generators.

10.3.50 The Tribunal thus concludes that neither its low capacity fees, nor its high energy fees suggest discrimination. Both were the logical result of a uniform methodology that was applied equally to all generators, based on their differing assets and operating cost structures.

10.3.51 The same can be said for Claimants’ assertions of discrimination based on the fact that only four generators were affected (“targeted”) by the reintroduction of price regulation. This is because the notion of a cap on prices based on a starting target of “reasonable returns” means that generators that are already earning below that return will not be affected by the regulation.

10.3.52 And having regard to the objective of 2006/2007 price cap regulation, of protecting consumers from having to fund so-called “excessive profits” of generators, it is perfectly logical that generators whose returns were not “excessive” at the time of re-regulation would not be affected by the cap.

10.3.53 Discrimination necessarily implies that the state benefited or harmed someone more in comparison with the generality. In this case, on the uncontradicted facts, the Tribunal finds that there has been no different treatment of AES Tisza in comparison with the other generators and, thus, that it was not the subject of discriminatory treatment.

11. NATIONAL TREATMENT

11.1 Claimants' Position

11.1.1 Claimants argue in support of their national treatment case that the treatment received by the Paks power station, a domestically owned electricity generator, and wholly-owned subsidiary of MVM, was more favorable than the treatment received by all the other generators, because Paks actually received a price increase under the Price Decreases in comparison with the one agreed in its PPA.<sup>58</sup>

11.2 Respondent's Position

11.2.1 The Respondent denies a breach of the ECT's national treatment obligation and asserts that the Price Decreases "only overrode contractual pricing when it exceeded the "maximum" level set by the uniform 7.1% return-on-assets methodology" and that such situation did not happen in the case of Paks because, based on contractual formula in its PPA, its actual return was significantly lower than the target level.<sup>59</sup>

11.3 Findings of the Tribunal

11.3.1 Article 10(7) of the ECT obliges each signatory party to accord "treatment no less favorable than that which it accords to Investments of its own Investors or for the Investors of any other Contracting Party or any third state and their related activities."

---

<sup>58</sup> Memorial, ¶ 239.

<sup>59</sup> Counter-Memorial, ¶ 383.

11.3.2 The alleged breach of the obligation to provide national treatment is based on the same facts that Claimants alleged amounted to a discriminatory measure,<sup>60</sup> where the Tribunal found that no discriminatory measure was taken by the government. Indeed, Claimants’ admitted that the generator with the highest capacity fee was, like itself, foreign.

11.3.3 Therefore, as was concluded in Section 10 above, the Tribunal finds that Hungary did not breach its ECT obligation to provide national treatment to AES Tisza.

12. MOST FAVOURED NATION TREATMENT

12.1 Claimants’ Position

12.1.1 The Claimants allege that the facts relied on in relation to discriminatory measures also establish a violation of the most favoured nation treatment obligation.

12.2 Respondent’s Position

12.2.1 The Respondent claims that “the application of a uniform methodology to all power plants with PPAs, based on the objective of capping returns at prescribed rates of reasonableness, is not rendered discriminatory simply because some plants had previously exceeded the “reasonable” level by more than others.”

---

<sup>60</sup> With the difference that Claimants specify that the national generator that received a better treatment is Paks. Memorial, ¶ 239.

12.3 Findings of the Tribunal

12.3.1 Article 10(7) of the ECT obliges each signatory party to accord “treatment no less favorable than that which it accords to Investments of its own Investors or for the Investors of any other Contracting Party or any third state and their related activities.”

12.3.2 The alleged breach of the most favoured nation treatment obligation is based on the same facts that Claimants alleged amounted to a discriminatory measure,<sup>61</sup> where the Tribunal found that no discriminatory measure was taken by the government – i.e., that each generator’s price was determined based on the application of a uniform methodology. This being the case, there can be no suggestion that AES was treated “less favourably” than any other similarly positioned investor.

12.3.3 Therefore, as was concluded in Section 10, the Tribunal finds that Hungary did not breach its ECT obligation to provide most favoured nation treatment to AES Tisza.

13. CONSTANT PROTECTION AND SECURITY

13.1 Claimants’ Position

13.1.1 Claimants maintain that the state’s obligation to provide constant protection and security covers not only the physical security of the investment but also the legal security and protection.

---

<sup>61</sup> With the difference that Claimants specify that the other generators that received a better treatment are Budapesti, Pannon, Mátra and Csepeli. Memorial, ¶ 245.

13.1.2 In their opinion, Hungary breached the standard when it failed to ensure the legal security of the investments through the 2006 Electricity Act Amendment and the ensuing implementation of the Price Decrees, given that such acts have substantially devalued their investment.

13.1.3 Relying on the duty identified by the Tribunal in CME, Claimants say that the 2006 Electricity Amendment Act and the Price Decrees eviscerated their rights under the 2001 Settlement Agreement and the 2001 PPA. Hungary thus made it “impossible to preserve and continue contractual arrangements underpinning the investment” and has therefore breached the most constant protection and security provisions of Article 10(1).<sup>62</sup>

13.1.4 The requirement to provide constant protection and security is a duty:

“to use the powers of government to ensure the foreign investment can function properly on a level playing field, unhindered and not harassed by the political and economic domestic powers that be.”<sup>63</sup>

13.1.5 And the level playing field here, which Hungary itself destroyed, was the pre-existing, freely negotiated contractual relationship that the generators enjoyed with MVM.

13.2 Respondent’s Position

13.2.1 To the contrary, Hungary argues that the obligation to provide constant protection and security cannot be understood as a treaty-based stabilization clause, tantamount to a guarantee of a “legal security” under which a state will take no action that interferes with the “contractual arrangements underpinning [an] investment.” Respondent says that the standard imposes a duty of “due diligence” that requires the state to afford reasonable protection to investors against foreseeable harm from third parties. It adds that there can be no credible suggestion that the Price Decrees were designed to destroy a “level playing field on which Claimants could properly function unhindered and not harassed by the political and economic powers that be” when their very purpose was to ensure a reasonable return for all generators with PPAs.

---

<sup>62</sup> Memorial, ¶ 254.

<sup>63</sup> Exhibit CA-80, T.M. Wälde, Energy Charter Treaty-based Arbitration, Transactional Dispute Management, Vol. 1, Issue 3, p.30.

13.2.2 Respondent admits that some tribunals have recently expanded the scope of protection beyond the two traditional areas (i.e., physical protection and the provision of reasonable legal avenues to enforce investors’ rights) to include general references to legal security. But even under such an expansive reading, the protection is not absolute, and applies only in exceptional circumstances.

13.3 Findings of the Tribunal

13.3.1 In addition to the fair and equitable standard, Article 10(1) of the ECT establishes that the “investments shall also enjoy the most constant protection and security and no Contracting Party shall in any way impair by unreasonable or discriminatory measures their management, maintenance, use, enjoyment or disposal.”

13.3.2 In the Tribunal’s view, the duty to provide most constant protection and security to investments is a state’s obligation to take reasonable steps to protect its investors (or to enable its investors to protect themselves) against harassment by third parties and/or state actors. But the standard is certainly not one of strict liability. And while it can, in appropriate circumstances, extend beyond a protection of physical security,<sup>64</sup> it certainly does not protect against a state's right (as was the case here) to legislate or regulate in a manner which may negatively affect a claimant's investment, provided that the state acts reasonably in the circumstances and with a view to achieving objectively rational public policy goals.

13.3.3 In the words of Brownlie, the duty is no more than to provide "a reasonable measure of prevention which a well-administered government could be expected to exercise under similar circumstances."<sup>65</sup>

13.3.4 Claimants' argument, that the "level playing field," defined as "the pre-existing, freely negotiated contractual relationship that the generators enjoyed with MVM" had somehow to be protected by Hungary is seriously overreaching, given that neither the 2001 Settlement Agreement, nor the 2001 PPA, contemplated that pricing regulation could not be reintroduced. The PPA only stipulated that if the administrative pricing disappeared specific formulas would be applied.

13.3.5 To conclude that the right to constant protection and security implies that no change in law that affects the investor's rights could take place, would be practically the same as to recognizing the existence of a non-existent stability agreement as a consequence of the full protection and security standard.

---

<sup>64</sup> Compañía de Aguas del Aconquija, S.A. and Vivendi Universal S.A. v. Argentine Republic, Award, 20 August 2007, ¶ 7.4.16

<sup>65</sup> Brownlie, Ian, System of the Law of Nations: State Responsibility (1986), p. 162.

13.3.6 The Tribunal finds that there can have been no breach of the obligation to provide constant protection and security as a result of Hungary’s reintroduction of regulated pricing in 2006-2007, such reintroduction being based on rational public policy grounds.

14. EXPROPRIATION

14.1 Claimants’ Position

14.1.1 Claimants’ argue that Hungary “summarily and arbitrarily expropriated substantial revenues which AES Tisza had been contractually entitled to receive under the 2001 PPA”<sup>66</sup> by amending the 2001 Electricity Act and issuing of the Price Decrees. This act is considered by Claimants as a conduct “equivalent to nationalization or expropriation.”<sup>67</sup>

14.1.2 In this regard, Claimants state that, as it has been decided by numerous arbitral tribunals, an act tantamount to expropriation occurs when the state deprives an investor of its contractual rights even when the act does not involve a taking of physical property.<sup>68</sup>

14.1.3 In addition, Claimants maintain that the expropriation may be indirect when there is an interference with the use of property, even if is incidental and even if the state does not benefit from such interference.<sup>69</sup>

14.1.4 Moreover, Claimants contend that a state’s measures can amount to expropriation even when they are in force for only a limited period. Reliance is placed on Wena Hotels v. Arab

---

<sup>66</sup> Memorial, ¶ 255.

<sup>67</sup> Memorial, ¶ 255.

<sup>68</sup> Memorial, ¶¶ 256 et seq.

<sup>69</sup> Memorial, ¶ 258.

Republic of Egypt (ICSID Case No. ARB/98/4), in which the Tribunal determined that an expropriation can take place even when the interference was executed only during a limited period of time.<sup>70</sup>

14.2 Respondent's Position

14.2.1 Respondent contends, in brief, that Claimants have no legal basis to claim an expropriation (direct or indirect) given that Hungary's acts did not deprive the Claimants from the use and control of their investment and the investment was not deprived of all meaningful value.<sup>71</sup> Respondent says that such requirements are preconditions to a finding of an expropriation by the Tribunal. Furthermore, the Respondent argues that Claimants do not contend that AES suffered harm remotely equivalent to a traditional expropriation and that they cannot expand the doctrine of indirect expropriation to cover acts which may lead to the temporary diminution of their profits. According to the Respondent, Claimants themselves acknowledged to the EC that regulating prices was more the rule than the exception in Hungary: in a letter dated 13 February 2006, Claimants described price controls as having been simply “suspended for a brief interlude commencing 1st January 2004.”<sup>72</sup>

14.3 Findings of the Tribunal

14.3.1 It is evident that many state's acts or measures can affect investments and a modification to an existing law or regulation is probably one of the most common of such acts or

---

<sup>70</sup> Memorial, ¶ 263.

<sup>71</sup> Counter-Memorial, ¶ 406.

<sup>72</sup> AES's memorandum to the EC, R-93, 13 February 2006.

measures. Nevertheless, a state's act that has a negative effect on an investment cannot automatically be considered an expropriation. For an expropriation to occur, it is necessary for the investor to be deprived, in whole or significant part, of the property in or effective control of its investment: or for its investment to be deprived, in whole or significant part, of its value.

14.3.2 But, in this case, the amendment of the 2001 Electricity Act and the issuance of the Price Decrees did not interfere with the ownership or use of Claimants' property. Claimants retained at all times the control of the AES Tisza II plant, thus there was no deprivation of Claimants' ownership or control of their investment.

14.3.3 Moreover, Claimants continued to receive substantial revenues from their investments during 2006 and 2007, which proves that the value of their investment was not substantially diminished and that they were not deprived of the whole or a significant part of the value of their investments.

14.3.4 In these circumstances, the Tribunal concludes that the effects of the reintroduction of the Price Decrees do not amount to an expropriation of Claimants' investment(s).

15. COSTS

15.1 Claimants' Position

15.1.1 On 8 July 2010, the Claimants filed their final Statement of Costs which amounted to a total cost of US$ 8,787,993.70 and included legal fees and expenses. To date, Claimants have paid an advance on costs to ICSID and the Tribunal in the amount of US$ 459,945.00.

15.2 Respondent's Position

15.2.1 For its part, on 25 June 2010, Respondent filed its final Statement of Costs which amounted to a total cost of US$ 5,522,883.00 which included legal fees and expenses. To date, Respondent has paid an advance on costs to ICSID and the Tribunal in the amount of US$ 460,000.00.

15.3 Findings of the Tribunal

15.3.1 The cost of the arbitration, which includes, inter alia, the arbitrators' fees, the expenses of the Tribunal, the Secretariat's administrative fee and the charges for the use of the facilities of the Centre, at the time of the award, amounts to US$ 887,839.04.<sup>73</sup>

15.3.2 Pursuant to Article 61(2) of the ICSID Convention, as well as Rule 28 of the ICSID Arbitration Rules, the Tribunal has the discretion in the absence of a prior agreement between the parties to decide the allocation of the costs and the legal fees and expenses between the parties.

15.3.3 It is the view of the Tribunal that no frivolous claim was filed in the proceeding and that no bad faith was observed from the parties. In fact, the Tribunal notes that the submissions and the argumentations of both parties were presented in a professional manner. Consequently, the Tribunal concludes that each party shall bear its own costs and expenses and share equally in the costs and charges of the Tribunal and the ICSID Secretariat.

---

<sup>73</sup> The total cost of the arbitration proceeding (US$ 887,839.04) includes an estimate of the courier expenses for the dispatch of the award and may thus be subject to slight change. A final financial statement will be issued by the Centre upon the closure of the trust fund account established for this case.

16. OPERATIVE PART

16.1 On the basis of the foregoing reasons, this Tribunal ORDERS AND AWARDS as follows:

- (a) The Tribunal has jurisdiction over all the ECT claims presented in this arbitration;
- (b) The Respondent did not breach Articles 10(1), 10(7) and 13 of the ECT;
- (c) The parties shall bear the costs of the arbitration in equal shares;
- (d) The parties shall bear their own costs and legal fees;
- (e) All other claims are dismissed.

Claus Werner von Wobeser
(President)

Date: September 17, 2010

J. William Rowley QC
(Arbitrator)

Date: 26 August 2010

Prof. Brigitte Stern
(Arbitrator)

Date: 30 August 2010

LEGAL AUTHORITY CA-72

F I N A L

A W A R D

FINAL

AWARD

IN THE MATTER OF AN UNCITRAL ARBITRATION

between

Ronald S. Lauder

757 Fifth Avenue

Suite 4200

New York, New York 10153

United States of America

The Claimant

and

The Czech Republic

Letenská 15

118 10 Prague 1

The Czech Republic

The Respondent

represented by:

John S. Kierman, W. Friedman

and M. Ostrove

Debevoise & Plimpton

875 Third Avenue

New York, New York 10022

United States of America

represented by :

Vladimir Petrus and

Miroslav Dubovsky

Clifford Chance Pünder

Charles Bridge Centre

Krizovnicke Nam. 2

110 00 Prague 1

Czech Republic

and

Mr. Jeremy Carver CBE

Mr. Audley Sheppard

Clifford Chance

200 Aldersgate Street

GB-London EC1A 4JJ

1. Introduction

1. In 1989, the Czech and Slovak people overthrew the communist regime and adopted a democratic governance system embracing market economy. New laws had to be adopted, foreign investment was encouraged.
2. Various Bilateral Investment Treaties were concluded to create the necessary legal protection for new investments, among them the Treaty between the United States of America and the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic Concerning the Reciprocal Encouragement and Protection of Investment, entered into on 22 October 1991 (the Treaty).
3. On 30 October 1991, a new Act on Operating Radio and Television Broadcasting (the Media Law) was adopted. It provided for the creation of the Council of the Czech Republic for Radio and Television Broadcasting (the Media Council) to ensure the observance of the Media Law, the development of plurality in broadcasting, and the development of domestic and European audio-visual work. The Media Council was also competent to grant operating licences.
4. In 1992, the Media Council commenced the necessary licensing procedures for nationwide private television broadcasting, and, on 9 February 1993, it granted License No 001/1993 to Central European Television 21, CET 21 spol. s r.o. (hereafter „CET 21“), a company founded by a small number of Czech citizens.
5. During the license application proceedings, CET 21 had worked closely with a foreign group, Central European Development Corporation GmbH (hereafter “CEDC”), in which Mr. Ronald S. Lauder (hereafter the “Claimant” or “Mr. Lauder”), an American citizen, had an important interest. At that time and since then, Mr. Lauder has among other activities been an important player in the audio-visual media in the former communist States of Central and Eastern Europe.
6. The formula which was finally adopted envisaged the formation of a new joint company, Česká nezávislá televizní společnost, spol. s r.o. (hereafter “CNTS”), with the participation of CET 21, a Czech bank and, as a majority shareholder, a company representing the foreign investors.

7. The key person was Dr. Vladimír Železný, a Czech citizen with a long experience in the media field, also a scriptwriter, etc. Mr. Železný became at the same time what amounted to the Chief Operating Officer of both CET 21 and CNTS. The new television station, TV Nova, immediately became very popular and very profitable.
8. The successful venture came to an end in 1999 when CNTS, on April 19, fired Mr. Železný from his functions with CNTS and when CET 21, on 5 August 1999, terminated its contractual relations with CNTS, after CNTS, on 4 August 4 1999, had not submitted the so-called Daily Log regarding the broadcasting for the following day.
9. During all this period the Media Council of the Czech Republic played an important role, especially during three periods. First, at the end of 1992 and the beginning of 1993, when it granted the License. Then, at the end of 1995 and in 1996, when a new Media Law became effective and the Media Council commenced administrative proceedings against CNTS, whereupon the agreements between CNTS and CET 21 were modified. Finally, during the Spring and Summer of 1999, when the final breach between CET 21 and CNTS occurred.
10. On 19 August 1999, Mr. Lauder commenced arbitration proceedings against the Czech Republic (hereafter the “Defendant”) under the Treaty, claiming that the Czech Republic, through its Media Council, had violated the Treaty. This Award examines the claims brought forward by Mr. Lauder.

2. Procedural History

11. On 19 August 1999, Ronald S. Lauder initiated these arbitration proceedings by giving Notice of Arbitration to the Czech Republic. The Notice submitted that the dispute is subject to arbitration pursuant to Articles VI(2) and (3) of the Treaty and should be heard by a panel of three arbitrators pursuant to Article 5 of the UNCITRAL Rules. The Notice of Arbitration also stated that the Czech Republic had consented to submit the dispute to arbitration pursuant to Article VI(3)(b) of the Treaty. The Claimant sought the following relief:

“[An] order [to] the Czech Republic to take such actions as are necessary to restore the contractual and legal rights associated with the claimant’s investments. Among other things, the Czech Republic should:

- a) be ordered to impose conditions on the License that adequately reflect and secure CNTS’s exclusive right to provide broadcast services and its right to obtain all corresponding income in connection with the operation of TV Nova;*
- b) be required to enforce such conditions, including by revoking the License and reissuing it to CNTS or to such other entity and under such other circumstances as would restore the initial economic underpinnings of Mr. Lauder’s investment; and*
- c) be held liable for the damages Mr. Lauder has incurred to date, in an amount to be determined by the Tribunal, taking into account, among other factors, the fair market value of Mr. Lauder’s investment prior to the breaches of the Treaty”.*

12. The Claimant appointed Mr. Lloyd N. Cutler as co-arbitrator. The Respondent appointed Mr. Bohuslav Klein as co-arbitrator. Both co-arbitrators chose Mr. Robert Briner as Chairman of the Arbitral Tribunal.
13. On 5 November 1999, the Arbitral Tribunal issued Procedural Order No 1 provisionally fixing Geneva, Switzerland, as the place of arbitration, and determining English as the language of arbitration.
14. On 13 December 1999, the Arbitral Tribunal issued Procedural Order No 2 taking note of the agreement of the Parties proposing London as the place of arbitration.
15. On 31 January 2000, the Czech Republic submitted a Statement of Defence in which it requested that reference to arbitration by Mr. Lauder be dismissed on the grounds that the Arbitral Tribunal has no jurisdiction over the claim; and/or no investment dispute contemplated by the Treaty exists; and/or Mr. Lauder’s Notice of Arbitration was premature or otherwise formally defective.

16. On 17 March 2000, a Procedural Hearing was held in London. The Arbitral Tribunal (i) decided that the issue of jurisdiction would be joined to the merits and that no separate decision on jurisdiction would be taken unless the Arbitral Tribunal would hold that a separate determination would shorten the proceedings; (ii) took note of the agreement of the Parties that they would make good faith efforts to agree by 30 April 2000 on a solution to the issue of the scope and timing of the production of documents required from the Respondent; (iii) took note of the agreement of the Parties that in general the IBA Rules on the Taking of Evidence in International Commercial Arbitration would be used; (iv) took note of the agreement of the Parties on the schedule for the submission of further briefs; (v) considered that a bifurcation of liability and remedy would not be helpful; (vi) took note of the agreement of the Parties with respect to the issues of confidentiality of the proceedings; (vii) took note of the absence of an agreement between the Parties to consolidate or coordinate the parallel UNCITRAL arbitration between CME and the Czech Republic; and (viii) addressed some other minor issues.
17. On 10 May 2000, the Claimant sent a letter to the Arbitral Tribunal regarding the production of further documents. The 14 March 2000 Declaration of Mr. Richard Baček was attached to this letter.
18. On 17 May 2000, the Arbitral Tribunal issued Procedural Order No 3 pursuant to which the Respondent was given a time limit until 23 May 2000 to answer the Claimant's request for production of further documents.
19. On 31 May 2000, after receipt of the Claimant's letter of 10 May 2000 requesting the production of further files, documents, minutes and other records in the possession of the Media Council, and of the Respondent's letter of 23 May 2000 requesting that the application be rejected, the Arbitral Tribunal issued Procedural Order No 4 rejecting the Claimant's request for production of further documents on the ground that it first needed to receive the Claimant's Memorial and the Respondent's Response.
20. On 30 June 2000, the Claimant filed his Memorial of Claimant. The following Witness Declarations were made in support of the Memorial:

- 29 June 2000 Declaration of Michel Delloye
  - 29 June 2000 Declaration of Fred T. Klinkhammer
  - 30 June 2000 Supplemental Declaration of Richard Baček
  - 30 June 2000 Declaration of Laura DeBruce
  - 30 June 2000 Declaration of Martin Radvan
  - 30 June 2000 Declaration of Jan Vávra
21. On 16 October 2000, the Respondent filed its Response. The following Witness Declarations were made in support of the Response:
- 13 October 2000 Statement of Doc. Ing. Pavel Mertlík CSc
  - 16 October 2000 Statement of Josef Josefík
  - 16 October 2000 Statement of RNDR. Josef Musil
  - 16 October 2000 Statement of PhDr. Helena Havíková
22. On 6 November 2000, the Arbitral Tribunal issued Procedural Order No 5 inviting the Respondent to respond by 10 November 2000 to the renewed request of the Claimant that the Respondent be ordered to produce documents and material identified in the Supplemental Statement in Support of the Claimant's Request for Documents of 30 June 2000.
23. On 13 November 2000, the Arbitral Tribunal issued Procedural Order No 6 inviting the Claimant to respond by 16 November 2000 to the letter of the Respondent of 10 November 2000.
24. On 17 November 2000, the Arbitral Tribunal issued Procedural Order No 7 pursuant to which it decided that the Claimant's request for production of general categories of documents was inappropriate, but that the Respondent was ordered to submit to the Claimant and to the Arbitral Tribunal copies of those documents which the Claimant had previously been able to inspect but had not been allowed to copy.
25. On 8 December 2000, the Claimant filed his Reply Memorial. The following Witness Declarations were made in support of this Reply Memorial:
- 14 November 2000 Declaration of Jacob Z. Schuster

- 5 December 2000 Supplemental Declaration of Jan Vávra
  - 5 December 2000 Statement of Ing. Jiří Brož
  - 5 December 2000 Declaration of OhDr Marína Landová
  - 7 December 2000 Declaration of Leonard M. Fertig
  - 7 December 2000 Declaration of Nicholas G. Trollope
  - 8 December 2000 Supplemental Declaration of Laura DeBruce
  - 8 December 2000 Supplemental Declaration of Fred T. Klinkhammer
  - 8 December Supplemental Declaration of Martin Radvan
  - 21 December 2000 Declaration of Ing. Miroslav Pýcha
26. On 31 January 2001, the Respondent filed its Sur-Reply. The following Witness Declarations were made in support of this Reply Memorial:
- 19 February 2001 Second Statement of Josef Josefík
  - 20 February 2001 Statement of Mgr. Milan Jakobec
27. On 19 February 2001, the Arbitral Tribunal issued Procedural Order No 8 in which the Respondent's Requests No 1 for an order for the Claimant to provide certain documents was denied; the Respondent's Request No 2, repeating the Request No 1 and asking in addition that Mr. Morgan-Jones be subpoenaed was denied; the Claimant's request that the Respondent be directed to cease its review of certain stolen and confidential documentation was denied; and the Respondent's Request No3 to submit pleadings, submission and evidence which had been submitted in other proceedings between other parties was denied.
28. On 20 February 2001, the Claimant filed the following additional Witness Declarations:
- 20 February 2001 Second Supplemental Declaration by Laura DeBruce
  - 20 February 2001 Supplemental Declaration of Jacob Z. Schuster
  - 20 February 2001 Declaration of Ira T. Wender
29. From 5 March to 13 March 2001, the Arbitral Tribunal held hearings in London. The Claimant presented the following witnesses:
- Mrs. Marina Landová

- Mr. Jan Vávra
- Mr. Martin Radvan
- Mrs. Laura DeBruce
- Mr. Leonard M. Fertig
- Mr. Fred T. Klinkhammer
- Mr. Michael Delloye

The Respondent presented the following witnesses:

- Mr. Josef Josefík
- Mr. Milan Jakobec
- Mrs. Helena Havlíková
- Mr. Josef Musil

Two witnesses, Mr. Jiří Brož and Mr. Josef Musil, did not attend the hearings. It was agreed by the Parties on 13 March 2001 that the Arbitral Tribunal would give these witnesses' recorded statements the weight the Tribunal believes to be appropriate (Transcript of 13 March 2001, p. 225-226).

On 13 March 2001, the Chairman declared that the proceedings were closed subject to the Parties' filing of their Written Closing Submissions by 30 March 2001 and their Replies by 6 April 2001, as well as the Parties' filing of their Statement of Costs and Expenses as agreed between the Parties (Transcript of 13 March 2001, p, 230-232).

30. On 30 March 2001, the Claimant filed a Summary of Summation, and the Respondent filed a Written Closing Submissions.
31. On 6 April 2001, the Claimant filed a Rebuttal to the Respondent's Written Closing Submission and the Respondent a Reply Written Closing Submissions.
32. On 17 April 2001, the Claimant filed a Statement of Costs, and the Respondent a Summary of the Costs.

33. On 19 April 2001 the Respondent filed an Amended Summary of Costs to include costs incurred between 1 April and 6 April 2001 and the advance on costs paid to the Tribunal. In this exchange, the Respondent also provided Comments on Costs of the Claimant.
34. On 18 June 2001, the Respondent, referring to an agreement of the Parties, asked for permission to submit pages from the transcript of the hearing held in Stockholm in the arbitration between CME and the Czech Republic (the Stockholm Hearing).
35. On 21 June 2001, the Claimant confirmed his agreement with respect to the submission of excerpts from the transcript of the Stockholm Hearing.
36. On 25 June 2001, the Arbitral Tribunal agreed that each Party may submit (i) by 3 July 2001 a maximum of 25 pages of excerpts from the Stockholm Hearing, together with a short brief not exceeding 10 pages, and (ii) by 10 July 2001 rebuttals not exceeding 5 pages.
37. On 3 July 2001, the Claimant filed Comments on Selected Excerpts from Testimony in Stockholm Proceedings and the Respondent a letter concerning submission of parts of the record from the Stockholm Hearing.
38. On 10 July 2001, both Parties filed their Replies to Submission of the other Party of 3 July 2001.
39. On 12 July 2001, the Respondent filed a larger excerpt of Mr. Klinkhammer's statements at the Stockholm hearing.
40. On 19 July 2001 the Claimant submitted, as proposed by the Respondent, a further excerpt from Mr. Klinkhammer's testimony.
41. The sole remaining dispute regarding discovery was with respect to specific communications (e-mails) from the Media Council, which the Respondent wanted the Claimant to provide along with the name of the person who had provided said communications to the Claimant (see Respondent's Request No 1 of 30 January 2001), which request the Arbitral Tribunal had denied in Procedural Order No 8. On 1 March 2001, the Respondent declared that it accepted to participate in the arbitration under protest and reserved all its rights with respect to the denial of its request. At the 13 March 2001 hearing, the Chairman stated that the Respondent had not pointed out during the hearing that there was anything which would have impeded presentation of its defence but that due note was taken of the Respondent's reservation thereon (Transcript of hearing of 13 March 2001, p 232-233).

42. In the course of the proceedings, the Claimant withdrew his two first reliefs (see 1.1(a) and 1.1 (b) above), and maintained the relief for damages (see 1.1 (c)) above; Transcript of 5 March 2001, p. 57-58). The final relief sought by the Claimant is an award:

(1) Declaring that Respondent has violated the following provisions of the Treaty:

- a. The obligation of fair and equitable treatment of investments (Article II(2)(a));*
- b. The obligation to provide full protection and security to investments (Article II(2)(a));*
- c. The obligation to treat investments at least in conformity with principles of international law (Article II(2)(a));*
- d. The obligation not to impair investments by arbitrary and discriminatory measures (Article II(2)(b)); and*
- e. The obligation not to expropriate investments directly or indirectly through measures tantamount to expropriation (Article III);*

(2) Declaring that Claimant is entitled to damages for the injury that he has suffered as a result of Respondent's violations of the Treaty, in an amount to be determined at a second phase of this arbitration; and

(3) Directing Respondent to pay the costs Claimant has incurred in these proceedings to date, including the costs for legal representation and assistance (Relief Sought By Claimant of 10 March 2001).

43. The final relief sought by the Respondent is an award that:

- (1) Mr. Lauder's claim be dismissed on grounds of lack of jurisdiction, namely (i) no "investment dispute" as contemplated by the Treaty exists; and/or (ii) Mr. Lauder's Notice was premature or otherwise formally defective.
- (2) And/or Mr. Lauder's claim be dismissed on grounds of lack of admissibility, namely it is an abuse of process
- (3) And/or Mr. Lauder's claim be dismissed on grounds that the Czech Republic did not violate the following provisions of the Treaty as alleged (or at all):-
  - (a) The obligation of fair and equitable treatment of investments (Article II(2)(a)).
  - (b) The obligation to provide full protection and security to investments (Article II(2)(a)).
  - (c) The obligation to treat investments at least in conformity with principles of international law (Article II(2) (a)).
  - (d) The obligation not to impair investments by arbitrary and discriminatory measures (Article II(2)(b)).
  - (e) The obligation not to impair investments directly or indirectly through measures tantamount to expropriation (Article III).
- (4) And/or Mr. Lauder's claim be dismissed and/or Mr. Lauder is not entitled to damages, on ground that the alleged injury to Mr. Lauder's investment was not the direct and foreseeable result of any violation of the Treaty.
- (5) And Mr. Lauder pay the costs of the proceedings and reimburse the reasonable legal and other cost of the Czech Republic (Relief Sought by the Czech Republic of 13 March 2001).

3. Facts

3.1 The 1992-1993 events

43. On 30 October 1991, the Czech and Slovak Federal Republic adopted the Act on Operating Radio and Television Broadcasting (hereinafter: the “Media Law”). The Media Law empowered the Federal Council for Radio and Television Broadcasting (hereinafter: “the Media Council”) to grant a license to broadcast radio and television programs (Exhibit R2).
44. Pursuant to the Act on the Czech Republic Council for Radio and Television Broadcasting of 21 February 1992, one of the duties of the Media Council is to supervise the observance of legal regulations governing radio and television broadcasting (Exhibit R6).
45. In 1992, the Media Council invited interested candidates to apply for a license for a new radio and television broadcasting on the third channel (hereinafter: “the License”) (Exhibit R53).
46. On 27 August 1992, CET 21, a Czech company originally owned by some individuals (hereinafter: “the Founders”), and whose General Director was Mr. Železný, a Czech citizen, filed an application for the License (Exhibit C63).
47. Prior to the filing of the application, CET 21 had held discussions with the CEDC, a German company over which Mr. Ronald S. Lauder (hereinafter: “Mr. Lauder” or “the Claimant”), an American citizen, had indirect voting control.
48. The original idea was that CEDC would participate in the broadcasting operation by acquiring stock of CET 21 (Exhibit C134). Such a participation would comply with the requirements of the Media Law, which expressly envisaged in Article 10.6 the applications for license “from companies with foreign equity participation” (Exhibit R2).

